Where the truth is a gainer, the Lord (which is truth) cannot bee a loſer. Neither is the thankes of ancient fauours loſt amongſt them, which ſtill preſſe on towards new mercies : Vnthankfull are they vnto the bleſſed Maieſtie of God, and vnfaithfull alſo, which knowing the will of their Maſter doe it not, but goe on preſumptuouſly in diſobedience to many the holy ordinances of the Lord and of his Chriſt, which they know, and in word alſo acknowledge, he hath giuen to his Church to be obſerued, and not for idle ſpeculation, and diſputation without obedience.

It is not by our ſequeſtration, but by our confuſion, that Rome and Hell gaines. Your odious commixture of all ſorts of people in the body of your Church, in whoſe lap the vileſt miſcreants are dandled, ſucking her breſts as her naturall children, and are be-bleſt by her (as hauing right thereunto) with all her holy things, as Prayer, Sacraments, and other Ceremonies, is that which aduantageth hell, in the finall obduration and perdition of the wicked, whom by theſe meanes you flatter and deceiue.

The Romiſh Prelacie and Prieſthood amongſt you, with the appurtenances for their maintenance and miniſtrations, are Romes aduantage. Which therfore ſhe challengeth as her owne, and by which ſhe alſo ſtill holds poſſeſſion amongſt you; vnder the hope of regaining her full inheritance at once time or other. And if the Papiſts take aduantage at our condemnation of you, and ſeparation from you : it concernes you, well to ſee where the blame is, and there to lay it ; leſt through light and inconſiderate iudgement, you iuſtifie the wicked, and condemne the righteous.

SECTION LVII.

ALL the ſequell of my Anſwerer is meerely ſententious: it is fitter for vs to learne than replie: Where the truth gaines (ſay you) God loſeth not; I tell you againe, where God loſeth, the truth gaineth not, and where the Church loſeth, God (which indowed her) cannot but loſe: Alas, what can the truth either get or ſaue by ſuch vnkinde quarrels? Surely ſuſpition on ſome hands, on others rejection: for (as Optatus of his Donatiſts) betwixt our Licet, and your Non licet, many poore ſoules wauer and doubt: neither will ſettle, becauſe we agree not: Thanks are not loſt, where new fauours are called for, but where old are denied. While your Poeſie is: Such as the mother, ſuch is the daughter; where are our old, our any mercies? They are vnthankfull, which know what God hath done, and confeſſe it not: They are vnthankfull to God and his Deputy, which knowing themſelues made to obey, preſume to ouer-rule, and vpon their priuate authoritie, obtrude to the Church thoſe ordinances to be obſerued, which neuer had being but in their owne idle ſpeculation.

The iſſue of Separation.

Inter licet veſtrum, & non licet noſtrum, nutant ac remigant animæ Chriſtianorum. Optat. contr. Parm.

Your Sequeſtration and our confuſion, are both of them beneficiall, where they ſhould not: and as you pretend our confuſion for the cauſe of your Separation; So is your Separation the true cauſe of too much trouble, and confuſion in the Church: Your odious tale of commixture hath cloyed and ſurfeted your Reader already, and receiued anſwer to ſatiety: this one diſh ſo oft brought forth, argues your pouertie: The viſible Church is Gods Drag-net, and Field, and Floore, and Arke; here will be euer at her beſt, Sedge, Tares, Chaffe, vncleane Creatures: yet is this no pretence for her neglect: the notoriouſly euill ſhee caſts from her breſt, and knee, denying them the vſe of her Prayers, and (which your Leaders miſlike) of her Sacrament. If diuers through corruption of vnfaithfull Officers, eſcape cenſure; yet let not the tranſgreſſions of ſome, redound to the condemnation of the whole Church. In Gods iudgement it ſhall not; we care little, if in yours. Wee tell wicked men, they may goe to hell with the water of Baptiſme in their faces, with the Church in their mouthes, we denounce Gods iudgements vnpartially againſt their ſinnes, and them: Thus wee flatter, thus we deceiue. If yet they will needs runne to perdition; Perditio tua ex te Iſrael.

Non enim propter malos boni deſerendi, ſed propter bonos mali tolerandi ſunt, &c. Sicut tolerauerunt Prophetæ, &c. Aug. Ep. 48. Barr. againſt Gyff.

Our Clergie is ſo Romiſh as our Baptiſme: If therefore Romiſh becauſe they came thence, we haue diſproued it: If therefore Romiſh, becauſe they haue beene vſed there, wee grant and iuſtifie it; That ancient confeſſion of their faith which was famous through the world, we receiue with them: If they hold one God, one Baptiſme, one Heauen, one CHRIST, ſhall we renounce it? Why ſhould we not caſt off our Chriſtendome and humanity, becauſe the Romans had both? How much Rome can either challenge, or hope to gaine in our Clergie and Miniſtration, is well witneſſed by the bloud of thoſe Martyrs, eminent in the Prelacie, which in the freſh memories of many, was ſhed for God, againſt that Harlot: and by the excellent labours of others, both Biſhops and Doctors: whoſe learned pens haue pulled downe more of the walls of Rome, than all the corner-creeping Browniſts in the world ſhall euer be able to doe, while Amſterdam ſtandeth. It is you that furniſh theſe Aduerſaries with aduantages, through your wilfull diuiſions: Take Scilurus his arrowes, ſingle out of the ſheafe, the leaſt finger breakes them, while the whole bundle feares no ſtreſſe: wee know well where the blame is, our deſeruings can be no protection to you: you went from vs, not we from you. Pleade not our conſtraint, you ſhould not haue been compelled to forſake vs, while CHRIST is with vs: But who compels you not to call vs brethren? to deny vs Chriſtians? your zeale is ſo far from iuſtifying the wicked, that it condemnes the righteous.

And for the ſuſpition of the rude multitude, you neede not much feare it. They will ſuſpect nothing that comes vnder the Kings broad ſeale: they are ignorant of this fault. Though it were the Maſſe that came with authoritie of the magiſtrate, they (for the moſt part) would be without ſuſpition of it: ſo ignorant and profane are they in the moſt places, 1 Sam. 10. 10. It is the wiſe-hearted amongſt you that ſuſpect your dealings, who will alſo ſuſpect you yet more, as your vnſound dealing ſhall be further diſcouered.

Section LVIII.

The Browniſts ſcornfull opinion of our people.

HOw ſcornfully doe you turne ouer our poore rude multitude, as if they were beaſts, not men; or if men, not rude but ſauage! This contempt needed not: Theſe ſonnes of the earth may goe before you to Heauen: Indeed it was of old ſaid, that all Ægyptians were Phyſitians: So may it now of you; All Browniſts are Diuines, no Separatiſt cannot propheſie: No ſooner can they looke at the skirts of this hill, but they are rapt from the ordinarie pitch of men: Either this change is perhaps by ſome ſtrange illumination, or elſe your learned paucitie got their skill amongſt our profane and rude multitude: we haue ſtill many in our rude multitude, whom wee dare compare with your Teachers: neither is there any ſo lewd and profane, that cannot pretend a ſcandall from your ſeparation: Euen theſe ſoules muſt bee regarded (tho not by you.) Such were ſome of you, but yee are waſhed, &c.

The wiſe-hearted amongſt vs doe more than ſuſpect, finde out our weakneſſes, and bewaile them; yet doe they not more diſcouer our imperfections than acknowledge our truth: If they be truly wiſe, wee cannot ſuſpect them, they cannot forſake vs: Their charitie will couer more, than their wiſdome can diſcouer.

Sep.

Laſtly, the terrible threat you vtter againſt vs, that euen whoredomes and murders ſhall abide an eaſier anſwer than ſeparation, would certainly fall heauy vpon vs, if this anſwer were to be made in your Conſiſtorie Courts, or before any of your Eccleſiaſticall Iudges; but becauſe we know, that not Antichriſt, but Chriſt ſhall be our Iudge, we are bold vpon the warrant of his Word and Teſtament, (which being ſealed with his bloud may not be altred) to proclaime to all the world Separation from whatſoeuer riſeth vp rebelliouſly againſt the Scepter of his Kingdome, as we are vndoubtedly perſwaded, the Communion, Gouernment, Miniſterie, and worſhip of the Church of England doe.

Section LIX.

The Concluſion from the fearefull anſw. of Separation. Troub. and excom. at Amſt. G. Ionſ. profeſſes he found better dealing in the Biſhops Conſiſtories; & might haue found better in the Inquiſition.

MY laſt threat, of the eaſier anſwers of whordomes, aud adulteries, than Separation, you thinke to ſcoffe out of countenance. I feare, your conſcience will not alwayes allow this mirth; Our Conſiſtories haue ſpared you enough: let thoſe which haue tryed, ſay, whether your corrupt Elderſhip be more ſafe Iudges: If ours impriſon iuſtly, yours excommunicate vniuſtly; To be in cuſtodie is leſſe grieuous, than out of the Church: at leaſt if your cenſures were worth any thing, but contempt: As Ierome ſaid of the like; it is well that malice hath not ſo great power as will: you ſhall one day (I feare) finde the Conſiſtorie of Heauen more rigorous, if you waſh not this wrong with your teares; That tribunall ſhall finde your confidence, preſumption; your zeale, furie. You are bold (ſurely more than wiſe) to proclaime: wee haue no need of ſuch cryes: doubtleſſe your head hath made Proclamations long, now your hand begins. What proclaime you? Separation from the Communion, Gouernment, Miniſtery, and worſhip of the Church of England: what need it? Your act might haue ſaued your voice: what ſhould our eyes and eares be troubled with one bad obiect?

But why ſeparate you from theſe? Becauſe they riſe vp rebelliouſly againſt the Scepter of Chriſt: The Scepter of Chriſt is his Word: he holds it out, we touch and kiſſe it: What one ſentence of it doe wee wilfully oppoſe? Away with theſe fooliſh impieties; you thruſt a Reed into your Sauiours hand, and ſay, Haile, King of the Iewes, and will needs perſwade vs, none but this is his rod of iron. Laſtly, vpon what warrant? Of his will and Teſtament. You may wrong vs; But how dare you faſten your lies vpon your Redeemer and Iudge? What clauſe of his hath bid you ſeparate? We haue the true Copies: As we hope or deſire to be ſaued, we can finde no ſentence that ſoundeth toward the fauour of this your act: Muſt God be accuſed of your wilfulneſſe? Before that God and his bleſſed Angels and Saints, we feare not to proteſt that we are vndoubtedly perſwaded that whoſoeuer wilfully forſakes the Communion, Gouernment, Miniſtery, or worſhip of the Church of England, are enemies to the Scepter of Chriſt, and Rebels againſt his Church and Anointed: neither doubt we to ſay, that the Maſterſhip of the Hoſpitall at Norwich, or a leaſe from that Citie (ſued for with repulſe) might haue procured that this ſeparation from the Communion, Gouernment, and worſhip of the Church of England, ſhould not haue beene made

A SERIOVS DISSWVASIVE FROM POPERIE.

To W. D. Revolted, &c.

YOV challenged me for my bold aſſertion of your manifold diuiſions: I doe here make it good with vſurie. Thoſe mouths that ſay they teach you the truth, ſay alſo (and you haue beleeued them) that they all teach the ſame. As you finde them true in this, ſo truſt them in the other: For me, I cannot without indignation ſee, that in this light of the Goſpell, God and his truth ſhould thus bee loſers by you; and that a miſerable ſoule ſhould ſuffer it ſelfe thus groſſely cozened of it ſelfe, and glory: Many can write to you with more profoundneſſe, none with more ſincere feruencie, and deſire to ſaue you.

I call heauen and earth to record againſt you this day, that if you relent or anſwer not, your periſhing is wilfull. Wee may pittie your weakneſſe, but God ſhall plague your Apoſtaſie; if you had been bred in blindneſſe, your ignorance had been but lamentable, now your choice and loue of darknes is fearfull and deſperate. Alas! you cannot be condemned without our ſorrow and ſhame. What ſhould we doe? We can but intreat, perſwade, proteſt, mourne, and gage our ſoules for yours; if theſe auaile not, who can remedie that which will periſh? Heare this yet (you weake Revolter) if there be any care left in you of that ſoule which you haue thus proſtituted to error; if you haue any regard to that God, whoſe ſimple truth you haue contemned and forſaken: what is this that hath driuen you from vs, allured you to them? For Gods ſake, let me but expoſtulate a little ere my ſilence: Either be conuicted or inexcuſable. Our bad liues haue ſet you off; Woe is me that they are no holier; I bewaile our wickednes, I defend it not; Onely aske how they liue in Italie; if they be not (for the more part) filths to the worſt of ours, goe with them and proſper. Let all indifferent tongues ſay, whether that very See whereon your faith depends, euen within the ſmoke of his Holineſſe, be not (for viciouſneſſe) the ſinke of the world; we may condemne our ſelues, their liues ſhal iuſtifie vs; But you liſt not to looke ſo farre; you ſee their liues at home, you ſee ours: The compariſon is not equall; They take this for the time of their perſecution; we of our proſperitie. The ſtubborneſt Iſraelite, and the moſt godleſſe Mariner, could call vpon God in his trouble: we are all worſe with liberty: Looke backe and ſee how they liued in former times while they proſpered; No Turkes (ſaith Erasmvs) more abominably: though now at the worſt, how many holy profeſſors might you finde, which would ſcorne that the moſt ſtrict Hermit, or auſtere Cappucine, ſhould goe before them in a gratious life, and in true mortification? euen amongſt twelue, there will be one Deuill: I wiſh they were ſo good that wee might emulate them: but for my part, I neuer yet could know that Papiſt, which made conſcience of all Gods ten morall lawes: Shortly, whatſoeuer is vpbraided to vs; the truth is pure, though men be vnholy; and God is where he was, whatſoeuer becomes of men: For you, if you had not fallen to coole affections, and a looſe life, you had beene ſtill ours: It is iuſt with God to puniſh your ſecure negligence with error and deluſion; and to ſuffer you thus to loſe the truth, who had loſt your care of obedience and firſt loue. And now you doe well to ſhift off this blame to others ſins, which haue moſt cauſe to accuſe your owne.

From manners to looke towards our doctrine; the noueltie of our Religion (you ſay) hath diſcouraged you: theirs hath drawne you with reuerence of her age. It is a free challenge betwixt vs, let the elder haue vs both: if there be any point of our Religion yonger than the Patriarchs, and Prophets, Christ and his Apoſtles, the Fathers and Doctors of the Primitiue Church, let it be accurſed, and condemned for an vpſtart: ſhew vs euidence of more credit and age, and carrie it. The Church of Rome hath beene ancient, not the errors; neither doe we in ought differ from it, wherein it is not departed from it ſelfe. I did not more feare your wearineſſe than my owne; forgetting the meaſure of a Preface, I would paſſe through euery point of difference betwixt vs; and let you ſee in all particulars, which is the old way; and make you know, that your Popiſh Religion doth but put on a borrowed viſour of grauitie vpon this Stage, to out-face true antiquitie. Yet leſt you ſhould complaine of words, let mee without your tedious neſſe haue leaue but to inſtance in the firſt of all Controuerſies betwixt vs; offering the ſame proofe in all, which you ſhall ſee performed in one, I compare the iudgement of the ancient Church with yours, ſee therefore and bee aſhamed of your noueltie.

Eſpecially, Toby, Iudeth, Wiſd. of Salomon, Eccleſiaſticus, Maccabees. Euſeb.l.4.c.25. Expoſit. Symboli veteris inſtrumenti, primi omnium Moſis quinque libri, &c. Hæc ſunt quæ patres intra Cánonem concluſerunt, ex quibus fidei noſtræ aſſertiones, &c. Alij libri ſunt qui non Canonici, &c.

First, our queſtion is, Whether all thoſe bookes which in our Bibles are ſtiled Apocryphall, and are put after the reſt by themſelues, are to be receiued as the true Scriptures of God? Heare firſt the voice of the old Church: to let paſſe that cleare and pregnant teſtimonie of Melito Sardensis in his Epiſtle to Onesimvs, cited by Evsebivs. Let Cyprian or Rvffinvs rather ſpeake in the name of all: Of the old Teſtament (ſaith he) firſt were written the fiue bookes of Moses, Geneſis, Exodus, Leuiticus, Numbers, Deuteronomie; after theſe the booke of Ioshvah the Son of Nvn, and that of the Iudges, together of Rvth; after which were the foure bookes of the Kings, which the Hebrewes reckon but two: of the Chronicles which is called the booke of Dayes; and of Ezra, are two bookes, which of them are accounted but ſingle, and the booke of Ester. Of the Prophets there is Esay, Hieremie, Ezekiel, and Daniel, and beſides, one booke which containes the twelue ſmaller Prophets. Alſo Iob, and the Pſalmes of David are ſingle books: of Salomon there are three books deliuered to the Church, the Prouerbs, Eccleſiaſtes, Song of Songs. In theſe they haue ſhut vp the number of the books of the old Teſtament. Of the new, there are foure Goſpels, of Matthevv, Marke, Lvke, and Iohn; the Acts of the Apoſtles, written by Lvke; of Pavl the Apoſtle fourteene Epiſtles; of the Apoſtle Peter two Epiſtles, of Iames the Lords brother and Apoſtle, one; of Ivde one; of Iohn three; Laſtly, the Reuelation of Iohn. Theſe are they which the Fathers haue accounted within the Canon, by which they would haue the aſſertions of our faith made good. But we muſt know there are other bookes, which are called of the Ancients not Canonicall but Eccleſiaſticall, as the Wiſdome of Salomon, & another booke of Wiſdome, which is called of Iesvs the ſonne of Sirach; which booke of the Latines, is termed by a general name Eccleſiaſticus: of the ſame ranke is the booke of Toby and Ivdeth, and the bookes of the Maccabees: Thus farre that Father; ſo Hierome after that he hath reckoned vp the ſame number of bookes with vs in their order, hath theſe words:

This Prologue of mine (ſaith hee) may ſerue as a well defenced entrance to all the bookes which I haue turned out of Hebrew into Latine ; that we may know that whatſoeuer is beſides theſe, is Apocryphall : therefore that booke which is intituled Salomons wiſdome, and the Booke of Ieſus the ſonne of Sirach, and Iudeth, and Tobias, and Paſtor, are not Canonicall : the firſt booke of the Maccabees I haue found in Hebrew, the ſecond in Greeke : which booke (ſaith he) indeede the Church readeth, but receiueth not as Canonicall. The ſame reckoning is made by Origen in Euſebius, word for word. The ſame by Epiphanius, by Cyril, by Athanaſius, Gregorie Nazianzen, Damaſcen : yea by Lyranus, both Hugoes, Caietan, Carthuſian, and Montanus himſelfe, &c.

All of them with full conſent reiecting theſe ſame Apocryphal bookes with vs. Now heare the preſent Church of Rome in her owne words, thus : The holy Synode of Trent hath thought good to ſet downe with this Decree a iuſt Catalogue of bookes of holy Scripture, leſt any man ſhould make doubt which they bee which are receiued by the Synode ; And they are theſe vnder-written, Of the Old Teſtament ; fiue bookes o MOSES, then IOSHVAH, the Iudges, RVTH, foure bookes of the Kings, two of the Chronicles, two of ESDRAS, the firſt and the ſecond, which is called NEHEMIAS, TOBIAS, IVDETH, ESTER, IOB, the Pſalter of DAVID, containing one hundred and fifty Pſalmes, The Prouerbs of SALOMON, Eccleſiaſtes, the Song of Songs, the book of Wiſdome, Eccleſiaſticus, ESAY, HIEREMIE, &c. two bookes of the Maccabees, the firſt and the ſecond.

And if any man ſhall not receiue theſe whole books with all the parts of them, as they are wont to be read in the Catholike Church, and as they are had in the old vulgar Latine Edition, for holy and Canonicall, let him be accurſed. Thus ſhe: Iudge you now of our age ; and ſay, whether the opinion of the ancient Church (that is ours) be not a direct enemie to Popery, and flatly accurſed by the Romiſh.

Paſſe on yet a little further. Our queſtion is whether the Hebrew and Greeke Originals be corrupted ; and whether thoſe firſt Copies of Scriptures be not to be followed aboue all Tranſlations. Heare firſt the ancient Church with vs : But (ſaith Saint AVGVSTINE) howſoeuer it be taken, whether it be beleeued to be ſo done, or not beleeued, or laſtly whether it were ſo or not ſo ; I hold it a right courſe, that when any thing is found different in either bookes (the Hebrew and Septuagint) ſince for the certaintie of things done, there can be but one truth ; that tongue ſhould rather be beleeued from whence the tranſlation was made into another language. Vpon which words LVDOVICVS VIVES (yet a Papiſt) ſaith thus : The ſame (ſaith he) doth HIEROM proclaime euery where, and reaſon it ſelfe teacheth it, and there is none of ſound iudgement that will gainſay it; but in vaine doth the conſent of all good wits teach this, for the ſtubborne blockiſhneſſe of men oppoſeth againſt it. Let HIEROM himſelfe then, a greater Linguiſt be heard ſpeake : And if there bee any man (ſaith he) that will ſay the Hebrew bookes were afterwards corrupted by the Iewes ; let him heare ORIGEN, what he anſwers in the eight volume of his explanations of ESAY to this queſtion ; that the Lord and his Apoſtles which reproue other faults in the Scribes and Phariſes, would neuer haue beene ſilent in this, which were the greateſt crime that could be. But if they ſay that the Hebrewes falſified them after the comming of Chriſt and preaching of the Apoſtles, I cannot hold from laughter, that our Sauiour and the Euangeliſts and Apoſtles ſhould ſo cite teſtimonies of Scripture, as the Iewes would afterwards depraue them : Thus IEROME. And the Canon law it ſelfe hath this determination, that the truth and credit of the bookes of the old Teſtament ſhould bee examined by the Hebrew Volumes ; of the new, by the Greeke. And Pope INNOCENTIVS as he is cited by GRATIAN, could ſay, Haue recourſe to the diuine Scriptures in their Original Greeke.

Bellar. l. de verb. Dei 2. cap. 11. § 3.

The ſame laſtly by BELLARMINES owne confeſſion, the Fathers teach euery where: As IEROME in his booke againſt HELVIDIVS, and in his Epiſtle to MARCELLA, that the Latine Edition of the Goſpell is to be called backe to the Greeke fountaines; and the Latine Edition of the old Teſtament, is to be amended by the Hebrew; in his Comment vpon ZACHARY, 8. The very ſame hath AVSTEN in his ſecond booke of Chriſtian doctrine, Chap. 11. 12. 15. and Epiſt. 19. and elſewhere. This was the old Religion and ours; now heare the new. The preſent Church of Rome hath thus: The holy Synod decreeth that the old vulgar Latine Edition in all Lectures, Diſputations, Sermons, Expoſitions, be held for Authenticall, ſaith the Councell of Trent: And her Champion BELLARMINE hath theſe words; That the fountaine of the Originals in many places runne muddy and impure wee haue formerly ſhewed, and indeed it can ſcarce be doubted, but that as the Latine Church hath beene more conſtant in keeping the faith than the Greeke, ſo it hath beene more vigilant in defending her bookes from corruption. Yea, ſome of the Popiſh Doctors maintaine, that the Iewes in hatred of the Chriſtian faith, did on purpoſe corrupt many places of Scripture: ſo holds GREGORY de VALENCIA, IACOBVS CHRISTOPOLITANVS in his Preface to the Pſalmes, CANVS in the ſecond booke of his common places. But in ſtead of all, BELLARMINE ſhall ſhut vp all with theſe words; The Hereticks of this time, in hatred of the vulgar Edition, giue too much to the Hebrew Edition, as CALVIN, CHEMNITIVS, GEORGIVS MAIOR: All which would haue euery thing examined and amended by the Hebrew text, which they commonly call a moſt pure fountaine. See now whether that which BELLARMINE confeſſes to haue bin the Iudgement of HIEROME, AVSTEN, and all the ancient Fathers, be not here condemned by him, as the opinion of the Heretikes: Ours was theirs; and theirs is condemned vnder our names: Iudge whether in this alſo Popery be not an vpſtart.

Yet one ſtep more: Our queſtion is whether the Scripture be eaſie or moſt obſcure; and whether in all eſſentiall points it doe not interpret it ſelfe; ſo as what is hard in one place, is openly laid forth in another: Heare the iudgment of the old Church and ours: All things are cleare and plaine, and nothing contrary in the Scriptures, ſaith EPIPHANIVS. Thoſe things which ſeeme doubtfully and obſcurely ſpoken in ſome places of Scripture, are expounded by them, which in other places are open and plaine, ſaith BASIL: What could CALVIN and LVTHER ſay more?

There is no ſo great hardneſſe in the Scriptures to come to thoſe things which are neceſſary to ſaluation, ſaith AVSTEN: In thoſe things which are openly laid downe in Scripture, are found all thoſe things which containe our faith and rules of our life, ſaith the ſame Father; who yet againe alſo ſaith thus: The Spirit of God hath Royally and wholeſomely tempered the holy Scriptures ſo, as both by the plaine places he might preuent our hunger, and by the obſcure he might auoid our nice ſlothfulneſſe; for there is ſcarce any thing that can be fetcht out of thoſe obſcurities, which is not found moſt plainely ſpoken elſe-where.

And becauſe Bellarmine takes exception at this (Ferè, Scarce) compare this place with the former; and with that which he hath in his third Epiſtle, thus: The manner of ſpeech in which the Scripture is contriued, is eaſie to be come to of all; although it be throughly attained by few: Thoſe things which it containeth plaine and eaſie, it ſpeakes like a familiar friend, without guile, to the heart of the learned and vnlearned, &c.

But it inuites all men with an humble manner of ſpeech, whom it doth not onely feed with manifeſt truth, but exerciſe with ſecret, hauing the ſame in readineſſe which it hath in ſecrecie: Thus AVSTEN. To omit IRENEVS and ORIGEN: CHRYSOSTOME (whom BELLARMINE ſaith we allege alone for vs) beſides many other plaine places, writeth thus:

Who is there to whom all is not manifeſt, which is written in the Goſpell? who that ſhall heare, Bleſſed are the meeke, Bleſſed are the mercifull, Bleſſed are the pure in heart, and the reſt, would deſire a teacher to learne any of theſe things which are here ſpoken? As alſo the ſignes, miracles, hiſtories, are not they knowne and manifeſt to euery man? This pretence and excuſe is but the cloake of our ſlothfulneſſe: thou vnderſtandeſt not thoſe things which are written; how ſhouldeſt thou vnderſtand them, which wilt not ſo much as ſlightly looke into them? Take the booke into thy hand, read all the hiſtory, and what thou knoweſt, remember, and what is obſcure, run often ouer it. So CHRYSOSTOME: yea, he makes this difference betwixt the Philoſophers and Apoſtles: the Philoſophers ſpeake obſcurely, but the Apoſtles and Prophets (ſaith hee) contrarily make all things deliuered by them, cleare and manifeſt; & as the common teachers of the world haue ſo expounded all things, that euery man may of himſelfe by bare reading, learne thoſe things which are ſpoken: yea, laſtly, ſo farre hee goes in this point, as that he asketh, Wherefore needs a Preacher? all things are cleare and plaine in the Diuine Scriptures; but becauſe ye are delicate hearers and ſeeke delight in hearing, therefore ye ſeeke for Preachers. You haue heard the old Religion, now heare the new: BELLARMINE hath theſe words: It muſt needs be confeſſed that the Scriptures are moſt obſcure; Here therefore (ſaith he) LVTHER hath deuiſed two euaſions; One, that the ſcripture, though it be obſcure in one place, yet that it doth clearely propound the ſame thing in another. The ſecond is, that though the Scripture be cleare of it ſelfe, yet to the proud and vnbeleeuers it is hard by reaſon of their blindneſſe and euill affections: ſo the Lutherans (ſaith Ecchius) contend that the Scriptures are cleare and plaine: ſo Duraus againſt Whitakers: ſo the Rhemiſts in their annotations; and generally all Papiſts. Iudge now if all theſe forenamed Fathers, and ſo the ancient Church, were not Lutherans in this point; or rather we theirs; and yeeld that this their old opinion by the new Church of Rome is condemned for hereticall: and in all theſe ſay vpon your ſoule, whether is the elder?

Let me draw you on yet a little further: Our queſtion is, whether it be neceſſary or fit that all men (euen of the Laitie) ſhould haue libertie to heare and reade the Scriptures, in a language which they vnderſtand? Heare firſt the voice of the old Religion; To omit the direct charges of GREGORY NISSEN and AMBROSE; thus hath IEROME vpon the Pſalms, The Lord will declare; and how will he declare? Not by word, but by writing; In whoſe writing? In the writing of his people, &c. Our Lord and Sauiour therefore tells vs, and ſpeaketh in the Scriptures of his Princes: Our Lord will declare it to vs in the Scriptures of his People, in the holy Scriptures: which Scripture is read to all the people; that is, ſo read as that all may vnderſtand; not that a few may vnderſtand, but all.

What faithfull man, ſaith AVGVSTINE (though he be but a Nouice, before he be baptized and haue receiued the Holy Ghoſt) doth not with an equall minde read and heare all things, which after the Aſcenſion of our Lord are written in Canonicall truth, and authority, although as yet he vnderſtands them not as he ought?

But of all other, Saint CHRYSOSTOME is euery where moſt vehement and direct in this point: Amongſt infinite places, heare what he ſaith in one of his Homilies of LAZARVS.

I doe alwaves exhort, and will neuer ceaſe to exhort you (ſaith hee) that you will not heere only attend to thoſe things which are ſpoken, but when you are at home, you continually buſie your ſelues in reading of the holy Scriptures; which practiſe alſo I haue not ceaſed to driue into them which come priuately to mee: for let no man ſay, Tuſh, they are but idle words, and many of them ſuch as ſhould be contemned: Alas I am taken vp with law cauſes, I am imployed in publike affaires, I follow my trade,

I maintaine a wife and children, and haue a great charge to looke to: It is not for me to read the Scriptures, but for them which haue caſt off the world, which haue taken vp the ſolitarie tops of Mountaines for their dwellings, which liue this contemplatiue kinde of life continually.

What ſaieſt thou, O man? Is it not for thee to turne ouer the Scriptures, becauſe thou art diſtracted with infinite cares? Nay, then it is for thee more than for them; for they doe not ſo much need the helpe of the Scriptures, as you that are toſt in the midſt of the waues of worldly buſineſſe.

And ſoone after: Neither can it be poſſible that any man ſhould without great fruit be perpetually conuerſant in this ſpirituall exerciſe of reading: and ſtraight; Let vs not neglect to buy our ſelues Bookes, leſt we receiue a wound in our vitall parts; and after he hath compared the Bookes of Scripture to Gold, he addeth, But what, ſay they, if we vnderſtand not thoſe things which are contained in thoſe Books? What gaine we then? Yes ſurely, though thou doſt not vnderſtand thoſe things which are there laid vp, yet by the very reading much holineſſe is got: Although it cannot be, that thou ſhouldeſt be alike ignorant of all thou readeſt; for therefore hath the Spirit of God ſo diſpenſed this Word, that Publicanes, Fiſhers, Tent-makers, Shepheards and Goatheards, plaine vnlettered men may be ſaued by theſe Bookes; leſt any of the ſimpler ſort ſhould pretend this excuſe, That all things which are ſaid ſhould be eaſie to diſcerne; and that the workman, the ſeruant, the poore widow, and the moſt vnlearned of all other, by hearing of the word read, might get ſome gaine and profit.

And the ſame Father elſewhere, I beſeech you (ſaith he) that you come ſpeedily hither, and hearken diligently to the reading of the Holy Scriptures; and not only when you come hither, but alſo at home take the Bible into your hands, and by your diligent care reape the profit contained in it. Laſtly, in his Homilies vpon the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, hee cries out, Heare, I beſeech you, O all you ſecular men, prouide you Bibles which are the medicines for the ſoule; At leaſt get the New Teſtament. Now on the contrary, let the new religion of Rome ſpeake; firſt by her Rhemiſh Ieſuites, thus: Wee may not think that the tranſlated Bibles into vulgar tongues, were in the hands of euery husbandman, artificer, prentice, boyes, girles, Miſtreſſe, Maid, Man; that they were ſung, played, alledged of euery Tinker, Tauerner, Rimer, Minſtrell. The like words of ſcorne and diſgrace are vſed by HOSIVS, and by ECKIVS, and by BELLAR. de verb. l.2.c.15.

The wiſe will not heere regard (ſay our Rhemiſts) what ſome wilfull people doe mutter, that the Scriptures are made for all men, &c. And ſoone after, they compare the Scriptures to Fire, Water, Candles, Kniues, Swords, which are indeed needfull, &c. but would marre all, if they were at the guiding of other, than wiſe men. All the Heretikes of this time, ſaith BELLARMINE, agree that the Scriptures ſhould be permitted to all, and deliuered in their owne Mother tongue; but the Catholike Church forbids the reading of the Scriptures by all, without choice: or the publike reading or ſinging of them in vulgar tongues, as it is decreed in the Councell of Trent, Seſſ.22.c.8. & Can. 9. If you thinke (ſaith DVRÆVS) that Chriſt bade all Chriſtians to ſearch the Scriptures, you are in a groſſe error; For how ſhall rude and ignorant men ſearch the Scriptures? &c. And ſo he concludes, that the Scriptures were not giuen to the common multitude of Beleeuers.

Iudge now what either we ſay, or theſe Papiſts condemne, beſides the ancient iudgement of the Fathers: and if euer either CALVIN or LVTHER haue beene more peremptory in this matter, than S. CHRYSOST. I vow to be a Papiſt. If ours be not in this the old religion, be not you ours.

Yet this one paſſage further, and then no more, leſt I weary you: Our queſtion is; whether the Scriptures depend vpon the authority of the Church; or rather vpon the authoritie of Scriptures?

Heare firſt the ancient Church, with and for vs: The queſtion is (ſaith S. AVSTEN) betwixt vs and the Donatiſts, where the Church is. What ſhall we do then? ſhall we ſeeke her in her owne words, or in the words of her Head the Lord Ieſus Chriſt? I ſuppoſe we ought to ſeeke her rather in his words, which is the Truth; and knowes beſt his own body, for the Lord knowes who are his; wee will not haue the Church ſought in our words. And in the ſame Booke, Whether the Donatiſts hold the Church (ſaith the ſame Father) let them not ſhew, but by the Canonicall Bookes of Diuine Scriptures; for neither do we therfore ſay they ſhould beleeue vs, that we are in the Church of Chriſt, becauſe OPTATVS or AMBROSE hath commended this Church vnto vs which we now hold; or becauſe it is acknowledged by the Councels of our fellow Teachers, or becauſe ſo great miracles are done in it: it is not therefore manifeſted to bee true and Catholike; But the Lord Ieſus himſelfe iudged, that his Diſciples ſhould rather be confirmed by the teſtimonies of the Law and the Prophets: Theſe are the rules of our cauſe, theſe are the foundations, theſe are the confirmations.

And vpon the Pſalmes, Leſt thou ſhouldeſt erre (ſaith the ſame AVGVSTINE) in thy iudgement of the Church: leſt any man ſhould ſay to thee, This is Chriſt, which is not Chriſt, or this is the Church, which is not the Church; for many, &c. Heare the voyce of the Shepheard himſelfe which is clothed in fleſh, &c. He ſhewes himſelfe to thee; handle him, and ſee. He ſhewes his Church, leſt any man ſhould deceiue thee vnder the name of the Church, &c. yet CHRYSOSTOME more directly thus: He that would know which is the true Church of Chriſt, whence may he know it in the ſimilitude of ſo great confuſion, but onely by the Scriptures? Now the working of miracles is altogether ceaſed; yea, they are rather found to be fainedly wrought of them, which are but falſe Chriſtians; Whence then ſhall he know it, but onely by the Scriptures? The Lord Ieſus therefore knowing what great confuſion of things would be in the laſt daies, therefore commands that thoſe which are Chriſtians, and would receiue confirmation of their true faith, ſhould flye to nothing but to the Scriptures; Otherwiſe if they flye to any other helpe, they ſhall be offended and periſh, not vnderſtanding which is the true Church: This is the old faith; Now heare the new, contradicting it & vs. The Scripture (ſaith ECKIVS a Popiſh Doctor) is not authenticall without the authority of the Church; for the Canonicall Writers are members of the Church; Whereupon let it be obiected to an Heretike, that will ſtriue againſt the decrees of the Church, by what weapons he will fight againſt the Church, hee will ſay, By the Canonicall Scriptures of the foure Goſpels, and Pauls Epiſtles. Let it be ſtraight obiected to him, how he knowes theſe to be Canonicall, but by the Church. And a while after, the Scripture (ſaith he) defined in a Councell, it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to vs, that you abſtaine from things offered to Idols, and bloud, and ſtrangled: the Church by her authority altered a thing ſo clearely defined and expreſſed: for it vſeth both ſtrangled and bloud; Behold, the power of the Church is aboue the Scripture: thus ECKIVS. And beſides CVSANVS, BELLARMINE ſaith thus: If we take away the authority of the preſent Church, and of the preſent Councell (of Trent) all the Decrees of all other Councels and the whole Chriſtian faith may be called into doubt. And in the ſame place a little after; The ſtrength of all ancient Councels, and the certaintie of all opinions, depends on the authority of the preſent Church. You haue heard both ſpeake: ſay now, with whom is true antiquity; and on Gods name deteſt the newer of both. It were as eaſie to bring the ſame, if not greater euidence for the perfection, and all-ſufficiency of Scripture; and ſo to deliuer all the body of our religion, by the tongues and pens of the Fathers, that either you muſt be forced to hold them Noueliſts with vs, or your ſelues ſuch againſt them. How honeſt and ingenuous is that confeſſion of your ERASMVS? who in his Epiſtle to the Biſhop and Cardinall of Mentz, could ſay, It is plainly found, that many things in LVTHERS Books are condemned for Hereticall, which in the Bookes of BERNARD and AVSTEN, are read for Holy and Orthodox.

This is too much for a taſte: If your appetite ſtand to it, I dare promiſe you full diſhes: Let me therefore appeale to you, if light and darkneſſe be more contrary than theſe points of your Religion, to true Antiquitie: No, no; Let your Authors gloſe as they liſt; Popery is but a yong faction, corruptly rayſed out of ancient grounds. And if it haue (as wee grant) ſome ancient errours, falſhood cannot bee bettered with Age; there is no preſcription againſt God and Truth: What we can proue to be erroneous, we need not proue new: ſome hundreths of yeares is an idle Plea againſt the Ancient of dayes.

What can you plead yet more for your change? Their numbers perhaps, and our handfuls? You heard all the World was theirs, ſcarce any corner ours: How could you but ſuſpect a few? Theſe are but idle brags; we dare and can ſhare equally with them in Chriſtendome: And if we could not; this rule will teach you to aduance Turciſme aboue Chriſtianity, and Paganiſme aboue that: the world aboue the Church, Hell aboue Heauen: If any proofe can be drawne from numbers, He that knowes all, ſayes the beſt are feweſt.

The Peace of Rome left out, becauſe it was but a Tranſlation in this Editiō, &c.

What then could ſtirre you? Our diuiſions and their vnity. If this my following labour doe not make it good to all the World, that their peace is leſſe than ours, their diſſenſion more, by the confeſſion of their owne mouths, be you theirs ſtill, and let me follow you. I ſtand not vpon the ſcoldings of Prieſts and Ieſuits, nor the late Venetian iarres, nor the pragmaticall differences now on foot, in the view of all Chriſtendome, betwixt their owne Cardinalls in their Sacred conclaue, and all their Clergie, concerning the Popes temporall power: Neither doe I call any friend to bee our Aduocate; none but Bellarmine and Nauarrus ſhall be my Orators; and if theſe plead not this cauſe enough, let it fall: See here dangerous rifts and flawes, not in the outward barke onely, but in the very heart and pith of your Religion; and if ſo many be confeſſed by one or two, what might be gathered out of all? and if ſo many bee acknowledged; thinke how many there are that lurke in ſecret, and will not be confeſſed? How loth would we be (after all exclamations) that your buſie Ieſuites could take out ſo many confeſſed quarrels out of all our Authors, as I haue here found in two of yours? We want onely their cunning ſecrecy in the carriage of our quarrels: Our few (and ſlight) differences are blazoned abroad with infamy and offence, their hundreds are craftily ſmothered in ſilence.

Let your owne eyes ſatisfie you in this, not my pen: ſee now what you would neuer beleeue.

What is it then that could thus bewitch you to forſake the comely and heauenly Truth of God, and to dote vpon this beaſtly Strumpet? to change your Religion, for a ridiculous, ſenſuall, cruell, irreligious faction? A Religion (if we muſt call it ſo) that made ſport to our plaine forefathers, with the remembrance of her graueſt deuotions: How oft haue you ſeene them laugh at themſelues, whiles they haue told of their creeping-crouch, kiſſing the Pax, offering their Candels, ſigning with Aſhes, partiall Shrifts, merry Pilgrimages, ridiculous Miracles, and a thouſand ſuch May-games, which now you begin (after this long hiſſing at) to looke vpon ſoberly, and with admiration!

A Religion, whoſe fooleries very Boyes may ſhout and laugh at, if for no more but this, that it teaches men to put confidence in Beads, Medals, Roſes, hallowed Swords, Spels of the Goſpell, Agnos Dei, and ſuch like idle bables, aſcribing vnto them Diuine vertue: yea, ſo much as is due to the Sonne of God himſelfe, and his precious bloud. I ſpeake not of ſome rude ignorants; your very Booke of holy-ceremonies ſhall teach you what your holy-fathers doe, and haue done. That tels you firſt with great allowance and applauſe, that Pope VRBAN the fift ſent three Agnos Dei, to the Greeke Emperor, with theſe verſes:

Balſam, pure wax, and Chriſmes-liquor cleere,
Make vp this precious Lambe, I ſend thee heere;
All lightning it diſpels, and each ill ſpright,
Remedies ſinne, and makes the heart contrite,
Euen as the bloud that Chriſt for vs did ſhed.
It helps the child-beds paine; and giues good ſpeed
Vnto the birth; Great gifts it ſtill doth win
To all that weare it, and that worthy bin:
It quels the rage of fire; and cleanely bore
It brings from ſhipwracke ſafely to the ſhore.

Balſamus & munda cera cum Chriſmatis vnda conficiunt Agnū, quod munus do tibi magnū, &c. Fulgura de cœlo, &c. Peccatum frangit vt Chriſti ſanguis & angit, &c. Sacr. Cerem. lib. 1.

And leſt you ſhould plead this to be the conceit of ſome one Phantaſticall Pope, heare (and be aſhamed) out of the ſame Booke, what by preſcription, euery Pope vſeth to pray in the bleſſing of the water, which ſerues for that Agnus Dei: If you know not, thus he prayeth: That it would pleaſe thee, O God, to bleſſe thoſe things which we purpoſe to powre into this Veſſell of water prepared to the glory of thy Name, ſo as by the worſhip and honour of them, we thy ſeruants may haue our heynous offences done away, the blemiſhes of our ſinnes wip't off, and thereby we may obtaine pardon, and receiue grace from thee; ſo that at the laſt with thy Saints and Elect Children we may merit to obtaine euerlaſting life, Amen. How could you chooſe, but be in loue with this Superſtition, Magicke, Blaſphemie practiſed, and maintained by the heads of your Church?

Vt ea quæ in hoc aquarum vaſculo, præparato ad nominis tui gloriā, infundere decreuimus, benedicas: quatenus ipſorū veneratione & honore nobis famulis tuis crimina diluantur, abſtergantur maculæ peccatorum, impetrentur veniæ, gratiæ conferantur, vt tandem vna cum ſanctis & electis tuis vitam percipere mercamur æternam.

A Religion, that allowes iuggling Equiuocations, and reſerued ſenſes euen in very oathes. Beſides all that hath bin ſhameleſly written by our Ieſuites to this purpoſe; Heare what Franciſcus Victoria, an ingenuous Papiſt, and a learned Reader of Diuinitie in Salmantica, writes in the name of all.

But what ſhall a Confeſſor doe (ſaith he) if he be askt of a ſin that he hath heard in Confeſſion? May he ſay that he knowes not of it? I anſwer, according to all our Doctors, that he may. But what if hee be compelled to ſweare? I ſay, that he may and ought to ſweare that he knowes it not; for that it is vnderſtood that he knowes it not beſides confeſſion, and ſo he ſweares true. But ſay, that the Iudge or Prelate ſhall maliciouſly require of him vpon his oath, whether he know it in confeſſion or no; I anſwer that a man thus vrged may ſweare that he knowes it not in confeſſion; for that it is vnderſtood, he knowes it not to reueale it, or ſo as he may tell: Who teach and doe thus in anothers caſe, iudge what they would doe in their owne. O wiſe, cunning and holy periuries, vnknowne to our fore-fathers!

Fran. à Victoria Ordin. Prædicatorum Sum. Sacram. art. 184. p. 104. Sed quid faciet Confeſſor cum interrogatur de peccato? &c. Reſpondeo ſecundum omnes, quod ſic. Sed fac quod Iudex aut prælatus ex malitia exigat à me iuramentū, an ſciam in Confeſſione? Reſpondeo: quod coactus iuret ſe neſcire in confeſſione, quia intelligitur ſe neſcire ad reuelandum, aut taliter quod poſſit dicere.

A Religion, that allowes the buying and ſelling of ſins, of Pardons, of ſoules: ſo as now Purgatory can haue no rich men in it, but fooles and friendleſſe: Deuils are Tormentors there (as themſelues hold from many Reuelations of Bede, Bernard, Carthuſian) yet Men can command Deuils, and mony can command men.

A Religion, that relies wholly vpon the infallibilitie of thoſe, whom yet they grant haue bin, and may be monſtrous in their liues and diſpoſitions. How many of thoſe heires of PETER (by confeſſion of their owne Records) by Bribes, by Whores, by Deuils, haue climed vp into that chaire! Yet, to ſay that thoſe men which are confeſſed to haue giuen their ſoules to the Deuill, that they might be Popes, can erre, while they are Popes, is Hereſie worthy of a ſtake, and of Hell.

A Religion, that hood-winks the poore Laitie in forced ignorance, leſt they ſhould know Gods will, or any way to Heauen but theirs; ſo as millions of ſoules liue no leſſe without Scripture, than as if there were none: that forbids ſpirituall food as poyſon; and fetches Gods Booke into the Inquiſition.

A Religion, that teaches men to worſhip ſtocks and ſtones, with the ſame honour that is due to their Creator; which practiſe leſt it ſhould appeare to her ſimple Clyents, how palpably oppoſite it is to the ſecond Commandement; they haue diſcreetly left out thoſe words of Gods Law, as a needleſſe illuſtration, in their Catechiſmes and Prayer Bookes of the vulgar.

A Religion, that vtterly ouerthrowes the true humanitie of Chriſt, while they giue vnto it tenne thouſand places at once, and yet no place: fleſh and no fleſh, ſeuerall members without diſtinction: a ſubſtance without quantity, and other accidents; or ſubſtance and accidents that cannot bee ſeene, felt, perceiued. So they make either a Monſter of their Sauiour, or nothing.

A Religion, that vtterly ouerthrowes the perfection of Chriſts ſatisfaction: If all be not paid, how hath he ſatisfied? If temporall puniſhments in Purgatory be yet due, how is all paid? and if theſe muſt be paid by vs, how are they ſatisfied by him?

A Religion, that makes more Scriptures than euer God and his ancient Church; and thoſe which it doth make, ſo imperiouſly obtrudes vpon the world, as if God himſelfe ſhould ſpeak from heauen: and while it thunders out curſes againſt all that will not adde theſe Bookes to Gods, regards not Gods Curſe, If any man ſhall adde vnto theſe things, God ſhall adde vnto him the plagues that are written in this Booke.

A Religion, whoſe Patrons diſgrace the true Scriptures of God with reproachfull termes, odious compariſons, imputations of corruption and imperfection; and in fine, pin their whole authority vpon the ſleeues of men.

A Religion, that erects a throne in the Conſcience to a meere man, and giues him abſolute power to make a ſinne, to diſpenſe with it, to create new Articles of Faith, and to impoſe them vpon neceſſitie of Saluation.

A Religion, that baffoules all Temporall Princes, making them ſtand bare-foot at their great Biſhops gate, lye at his foot, hold his ſtirrup, yea, their owne Crownes at his Courteſie, exempting all their Eccleſiaſticall Subiects from their iuriſdiction, and (when they liſt) all the reſt from their Allegiance.

A Religion, that hath made wicked men Saints, and Saints Gods. Euen by the confeſſion of Papiſts, lewd and vndeſeruing men haue leapt into their Calendar: Whence it is, that the Pope before his Canonization of any Saint, makes ſolemne proteſtation, that he intends not in that buſineſſe to doe ought preiudiciall to the glory of God or to the Catholike Faith and Church: And once Sainted, they haue the honour of Altars, Temples, Inuocations; and ſome of them in a ſtile fit only for their Maker. I know not whether that bleſſed Virgin receiue more indignitie from her enemies that denie her, or theſe her flatterers that deifie her.

Papa facit proteſtationem ante Canonizationem, ſe nihil intendere facere, quod ſit contra fidem aut Eccleſiam Catholicam. Aliqui tamen clariſſimi viri dicunt, &c. Quia Papa quodammodo cogebatur ad Canonizandum quendam contra ſuam voluntatem, lib. Sacr. Ceremon.

A Religion, that robs the Chriſtian heart of all ſound comfort, whiles it teacheth vs, that we neither can nor ought to be aſſured of the remiſſion of our ſinnes, and of preſent grace, and future ſaluation; That we can neuer know whether we haue receiued the true Sacraments of God, becauſe we cannot know the intention of the miniſter, without which they are no Sacraments.

A Religion that rackes the conſcience with the needleſſe torture of a neceſſary ſhrift; wherein the vertue of abſolution depends on the fulneſſe of confeſſion: and that, vpon examination and the ſufficiencie of examination, is ſo full of ſcruples (beſides thoſe infinite caſes of vnreſolued doubts in this fained penance) that the poore ſoule neuer knowes when it is cleare.

A Religion, that profeſſes to be a Bawd of ſinne; whiles both (in practiſe) it tolerates open ſtewes, and preferres fornication in ſome caſes to honourable Matrimonie, and gently blanches ouer the breaches of Gods Law, with the name of Venialls and fauourable titles of Diminution; daring to affirme that Veniall ſinnes are no hinderance to a mans cleanneſſe and perfection.

A Cruell Religion, that ſends poore infants remedileſly vnto the eternall paines of Hell, for want of that which they could not liue to deſire: and frights ſimple ſoules with expectation of fained torments in Purgatory; not inferiour (for the time) to the flames of the damned. How wretchedly and fearefully muſt their poore Layicks needs die: for firſt, they are not ſure they ſhall not goe to Hell; and ſecondly, they are ſure to be ſcorched, if they ſhall goe to Heauen.

A Religion, that makes nature vainely proud in being ioyned by her, as copartner with God, in our Iuſtification, in our Saluation ;and idlely puffed vp in a conceit of her perfection, and abilitie to keepe more Lawes than God hath made.

A Religion, that requires no other faith to iuſtification in Chriſtians, than may be found in the Deuils themſelues : who beſides a confuſed apprehenſion, can aſſent vnto the Truth of Gods reuealed will : Poperie requires no more.

A Religion, that in ſtead of the pure milke of the Goſpell hath long fed her ſtarued ſoules with ſuch idle Legends, as the Reporter can hardly deliuer without laughter, and their Abettors not heare without ſhame and diſclamation : the wiſer ſort of the World read thoſe Stories on winter Euenings for ſport, which the poore credulous multitude heares in their Churches, with a deuout aſtoniſhment.

A Religion which (leſt ought ſhould be here wanting to the doctrine of Deuils) makes Religious Prohibitions of meat, and difference of dyet ; ſuperſtitiouſly preferring Gods workmanſhip to it ſelfe, and willingly polluting what he hath ſanctified.

A Religion, that requires nothing but meere formalitie in our deuotions ; the worke wrought ſuffices alone in Sacraments, in Prayers: So the number be found in the Chappelet, there is no care of the affection ; as if God regarded not the heart, but the tongue and hands, and while he vnderſtands vs, cared little whether we vnderſtand our ſelues.

A Religion, that preſumptuouſly dares to alter and mangle Chriſts laſt Inſtitution; and ſacrilegiouſly rob Gods people of one halfe of that heauenly prouiſion, which our Sauiour left for his laſt and deareſt Legacie to his Church for euer ; as if Chriſts Ordinance were ſuperfluous, or any Shaueling could be wiſer than his Redeemer.

A Religion, that depends wholly vpon nice and poore vncertainties, and vnproueable ſuppoſals : that Peter was Biſhop of Rome ; that hee left any heires of his graces and ſpirit ; or if any, but one in a perpetuall and vnfaileable ſucceſſion at Rome ; That hee ſo bequeathed his infallibilitie to his chaire, as that whoſoeuer ſits in it, cannot but ſpeake true ; that all which ſit where he ſate, muſt by ſome ſecret inſtinct ſay as hee taught ; That what Chriſt ſaid to him abſolutely, ere euer Rome was thought of, muſt be referred, yea, tyed to that place alone, and fulfilled in it : That Linus, or Clemens, or Cletus, the Schollers and ſuppoſed Succeſſors of Peter, muſt bee preferred (in the Headſhip of the Church) to Iohn the beloued Apoſtle then liuing : That hee whoſe life, whoſe pen, whoſe iudgment, whoſe keyes may erre, yet in his Pontificall chaire cannot erre : That the Golden Line of this Apoſtolicall Succeſſion, in the confuſion of ſo many, long, deſperate Schiſmes, ſhamefully corrupt Vſurpations, and Intruſions, yeelded Hereſies, neither was, nor can be broken. Denie any of theſe, and Poperie is no Religion. Oh the lamentable hazard of ſo many Millions of poore ſoules that ſtand vpon theſe ſlipperie termes, whereof if any be probable, ſome are impoſſible ! Oh miſerable grounds of Popiſh faith, whereof the beſt can haue but this praiſe, that perhaps it may be true !

A Religion, that hath bin oft dyed in the bloud of Princes : that in ſome caſes, teaches and allowes Rebellion againſt Gods Anointed ; and both ſuborneth Treaſons, and excuſes, pities, honors, rewards the actors.

A Religion, that ouer-loades mens conſciences with heauy burdens of infinite vnneceſſary Traditions ; far more than euer Moſes commented vpon by all the Iewiſh Maſters ; impoſing them with no leſſe authoritie, and exacting them with more rigor, than any of the royall lawes of their Maker.

A Religion that coozens the vulgar with nothing but ſhadowes of Holineſſe, in Pilgrimages, Proceſſions, Offerings, Holy-water, Latine Seruices, Images, Tapers, rich Veſtures, gariſh Altars, Croſſes, Cenſings, and a thouſand ſuch like(fit for Children and Fooles) robbing them in the meane time of the ſound and plaine helps of true pietie and ſaluation.

A Religion, that cares not by what wilfull falſhoods it maintaines a part : as Wickliffes blaſphemie, Luthers aduice from the Deuill, Tindals communitie, Caluins fained Miracle, and blaſphemous death, Bucers necke broken, Bezaes revolt, the blaſting of Huguenots, Englands want of Churches and Chriſtendome ; Queene ELIZABETHS vnwomanlineſſe, her Epiſcopall Iuriſdiction, her ſecret fruitfulneſſe; Engliſh Catholikes caſt in Beares skins to Doggs, Pleſſes ſhamefull ouerthrow ; Garnets Straw, the Lutherans obſcene night-revels ; Scories drunken ordination in a Tauerne ; the Edict of our Gratious King IAMES (Anno 87.) for the eſtabliſhment of Poperie, our caſting the Cruſts of our Sacrament to Doggs, and ten thouſand of this nature, maliciouſly raiſed and defended againſt knowledge and conſcience, for the diſgrace of thoſe whom they would haue hated, ere knowne.

A Religion, that in the conſcience of her owne vntruth, goes about to falſifie and depraue all Authors that might giue euidence againſt her, to out-face all ancient truths; to foiſt in Gibeonitiſh witneſſes of their owne forging : and leaues nothing vnattempted againſt Heauen or Earth, that might aduantage her faction, and diſable her innocent Aduerſarie : Loe, this is your choice. If the zeale of your loſſe haue made me ſharpe, yet not malicious, not falſe ; God is my Record, I haue not (to knowledge) charged you with the leaſt vntruth : and if I haue wronged, accuſe mee : and if I cleare not my ſelfe, and my challenge, let me be branded for a Slanderer. In the meane time, what ſpirituall phrenſie hath ouertaken you, that you can finde no beautie, but in this Monſter of Errors? It is to you, and your fellowes, that God ſpeaks by his Prophet : O yee Heauens be aſtonied at this, be afraid and vtterly confounded, ſaith the Lord ; for my people hath committed two euils, they haue forſaken me, the Fountaine of liuing Waters, to digge them pits, euen broken pits, that can hold no water : what ſhall bee the iſſue ? Et tu Domine, deduces eos in puteum interitus : Thou, O God, ſhalt bring them downe into the pit of deſtruction. If you will thus wilfully leaue God, there I muſt leaue you : But (if you had not rather dye) returne, and ſaue one ; returne to God, returne to his Truth, returne to his Church : your bloud be vpon my head, if you periſh.

NO PEACE WITH ROME.

WHEREIN IS PROVED, THAT (AS TERMES NOW Stand) there can be no Reconciliation of the REFORMED RELIGION, with the ROMISH: And that the Romaniſts are in all the fault.

ANCHORA FIDEI

Imprinted at LONDON, 1627.

TO THE TRVE,
SOVND, AND HOLY CHVRCH OF GOD,
whereſoeuer warfaring vpon Earth.

I Preſent vnto thee (deare, and holy Mother) this poore vnworthy token of my loue and loyaltie; the not ſo pleaſing, as true report of thy future broiles. How much gladder ſhould I haue beene (if thy Spouſe had ſo thought good) to haue beene the meſſenger of thy Peace and ſecuritie! But ſince the great, and wiſe Moderator of all things, hath thought a Palme fitter for thee, than an Oliue; it is for thee to thinke of victory, not of reſt: Thou ſhalt once triumph in heauen, and reſt for all; but in the meane time, here is nothing to bee lookt for, but ambuſhes, skirmiſhes, tumults: And how cheerefully muſt thou needs both beare and ouercome all oppoſitions, that art not more ſure of the neceſsitie of thy warfare, than of the happineſſe of thy ſucceſſe whileſt thou ſeeſt thy glorious Husband, not only the leader of this field, but a moſt iuſt, and mercifull Crowner of thy Conqueſt. Certainly, it is as vnpoſsible for thee to miſcarry, as to ſit ſtill, and not fight: Behold, all the forces of heauen and earth conſpire, and reioyce to come voluntaries vnto this holy war of thine, and promiſe thee a moſt happie iſſue: addreſſe thy ſelfe therefore (as thou art wont) couragiouſly to this worke of God: But remember, firſt, to inquire (as thou doſt) of ABEL: Spare no teares to thy deſperate Siſter, (now thine enemie) and calling heauen and earth to witneſſe, vpon thy knees beſeech and intreat her, by her owne ſoule, and by the deare bowels of CHRIST, by thoſe precious drops of his bloudy ſweat, by that common price of our eternall redemption, that ſhee would at the laſt returne to her ſelfe, and that good diſpoſition, which ſhee hath now too long abandoned; that ſhe would forbeare, any more, (as I feare ſhee hath hitherto wilfully done) to fight againſt God: but if ſhee ſhall ſtill perſiſt to ſtop her eares againſt thee, and to harden her ſelfe in rebellion againſt her God; forget (if thou canſt) who ſhe once was; and flie mercileſly vpon this daughter of Belial, that vaunts her ſelfe proudly in the glory of her munition; Goe, ſmite, deſtroy, conquer, and reigne, as the worthy partner of thine husbands Throne: For me, I ſhall in the meane time be as one of thy rude Trumpets, whoſe noiſe ſhall both awaken thy courage vnto this ſpirituall battell, and whoſe ioyfull gratulations ſhall, after thy rich ſpoiles, applaud thine happie returne in the day of thy victory.

OF George Caſſander,
A LEARNED PAPIST, AND GRAVE DIVINE;

That by two ſeuerall Emperors, FERDINAND, and MAXIMILIAN, was ſet on worke to compoſe theſe quarrels of the CHVRCH.

In his conſultation, pag. 56. & 57.

YEt I cannot denie, but that in the beginning, many out of a godly zeale and care, were driuen to a ſharpe and ſeuere reproofe of certaine manifeſt abuſes; and that the principall cauſe of this calamity, and diſtraction of the Church, is to bee laid vpon thoſe, which being puffed vp with a vaine inſolent conceit of their Eccleſiaſticall power, proudly and ſcornfully contemned and reiected them, which did rightly and modeſtly, admoniſh their reformation: wherefore my opinion is, that the Church can neuer hope for any firme Peace, vnleſſe they make the beginning, which haue giuen the cauſe of the diſtraction:

that is, vnleſſe thoſe which are in place of Eccleſiaſticall Gouernment, will be content to remit ſomething of their too much rigor, and yeeld ſomewhat to the Peace of the Church; and hearkening vnto the earneſt Prayers and Admonitions of many godly men, will ſet themſelues to correct manifeſt abuſes, according to the rule of Diuine Scriptures, and of the ancient Church from which they haue ſwerued.

NO PEACE WITH ROME.

SECT. I.

The ſtate of the now-Roman Church.

THERE is no one queſtion doth ſo racke the minds of men, at this day, as this of the Church: The infancie of the Church was ſore and long vexed with hereſies of an higher nature concerning God, concerning Chriſt, which ſtill ſtrooke at the head; but her vigorous and hoary age is exerciſed with a ſlighter quarel, concerning our ſelues; which yet raiſeth vp the greater broiles euery where, by how much euery man naturally loues himſelfe, more than God. Not to meddle with any forren queſtions of this nature: Too many ſeeme vnto mee to miſ-conceiue the ſtate of our Church, and the Romiſh, as if they had beene alwayes two; as if from their firſt foundations, they had beene ſenſibly ſeuered in time, and place, like to Babylon and Hieruſalem, or thoſe two famous Cities, oppoſed in S. Auſtens learned diſcourſe. Hence are thoſe idle demands of ſome ſmattering Queſtioniſts; Where our Church hath thus long hid it ſelfe? What yeere and day it came to light? In which age that other Church loſt it ſelfe? Why we haue withdrawne our ſelues no further from them? What is become of our forefathers? Which was the religion of the former world? From hence haue thoſe ſharpe and rigorous cenſures paſſed on both ſides; whether of noueltie, or of the deſperate condition of thoſe ſoules, which haue departed out of our owne way. Alas! what monſters both of opinions and queſtions haue riſen hence; and haue vexed not their owne Authors only (for the Delphick Oracle ſaid well, It is fit a man ſhould haue, as he doth:) but together with them, the whole Church of God? How many ſilly ſoules haue ſplitted vpon this rocke, which had neuer needed any votiue monument of their wracke, if they had but learned to hold no other difference betwixt vs and Rome, than muſt needs be granted betwixt a Church miſerably corrupted, and happily purged; betwixt a ſickly, languiſhed, and dying Church, and one that is healthfull, ſtrong, and flouriſhing. Neither therefore did that Valdus of France, nor Wickliffe of England, nor Hierom of Prague, nor Luther of Germany, euer goe about to frame a new Church to themſelues, which was not; but only endeuoured (not without happy ſucceſſe) to cleanſe, ſcoure, reſtore, reforme that Church which was, from that filthy ſoile, both of diſorder, and errours, wherewith it was ſhamefully blemiſhed. All theſe rather deſired to be accounted Phyſitians to heale, than parents to beget a Church: And the ſame haue we carefully done, euer ſince, and doe ſeriouſly, and ingenuouſly profeſſe of our ſelues this day; Rome is alike to vs (as it was of old to Hierome) with Eugubium, Rhegium, Alexandria; ſaue that this Citie is both more famous, & more neere vs: Places do not vary either faith, or title: What Church ſoeuer God ſhall call daughter, we will call ſiſter; & ſo we ſafely may. How many honeſt, & chaſte matrons haue we known, that haue bin aſhamed of a lewd ſiſter, and haue abhorred filthineſſe in one of their owne bloud! So it fareth now with vs: Rome is ouergone with Hereſie, with Idolatry; Let her practiſe her whoredome at home, by her ſelfe; It was not for vs with the ſafegard of our honeſty, to dwell with ſuch a partner. Not only her wickedneſſe hath thruſt vs out, but her violence: Wee yeeld therefore, and ſorrowfully complaine with the Prophet, How is the faithfull Citie become an Harlot! It was full of iudgement; and iuſtice lodged therein; but now it is full of murderers: Thy ſiluer is become droſſe, and thy wine is brewed with water. Away with the imperious name of a mother: We are all the ſame Church (by the vertue of our outward vocation) whoſoeuer all the world ouer worſhip Ieſus Chriſt, the onely Sonne of God, and Sauiour of the world, and profeſſe the ſame common Creed: ſome of vs doe this more purely, others more corruptly; In the meane time we are all Chriſtians, but ſound Chriſtians we are not: But how harſhly doth this ſound to a weake Reader, and more than ſeemes to need reconciliation with it ſelfe; that the Church ſhould be one, and yet cannot be reconciled? certainly yet ſo it is: The dignitie of the outward forme (which comprehends this vnity in it ſelfe) auailes nothing to grace, nothing to ſaluation, nothing to the ſoundneſſe of doctrine: The net doth not ſtraight make all to be fiſh, that it hath dragged together; yee ſhall finde in it vile weeds, and whatſoeuer elſe that deuouring Element hath diſgorged.

Hierom. Epiſt. ad Euagr.

Iren. l. 1. c. 23.

The Church is at once one in reſpect of the common principles of faith; and yet in reſpect of conſequences, and that rabble of Opinions which they haue raked together, ſo oppoſed, that it cannot by any glew of concord (as Cyprian ſpeaketh) nor bond of vnity, be conioyned: That which Rome holds with vs, makes it a Church; That which it obtrudes vpon vs, makes it hereticall; The truth of principles makes it one, the errour and impiety of additions makes it irreconcileable. Neither doth this late and ſpurious brood of traditions more oppoſe vs, than it doth thoſe very Principles of Religion, which the authors themſelues deſire to eſtabliſh: Looke on the face therefore of the Roman Church, ſhe is ours, and Gods; Looke on her backe, ſhee is quite contrary, Antichriſtian: More plainly; for it is no diſputing in Metaphors, as Clemens ſaid well: Rome doth both hold the foundation, and deſtroy it; ſhee holds it directly, deſtroyes it by conſequent: In that ſhe holds it, ſhee is a true Church, howſoeuer impured; In that ſhee deſtroyes it (what-euer ſemblance ſhee makes of pietie, and holineſſe) ſhee is a Church of malignants: If ſhe did altogether hold it, ſhe ſhould be ſound and Orthodox; If altogether ſhe deſtroyed it, ſhe ſhould be either no Church, or deuilliſh: but now that ſhee profeſſes to hold thoſe things directly, which by inference of her conſequences, ſhee cloſely ouerthrowes, ſhee is a truly viſible Church, but an vnſound. In what ſhe holds the principles, we embrace her; in what ſhee deſtroyes them, we pitie her errour, and hate her obſtinacie.

Cypr. l. 3. ep. 13. Nullo concordiæ glutine aut vnitatis vinculo copulari poſſunt.

Pſal. 26.5. ἐκκλησια πονηρευομένων.

The common bond of Chriſtianitie neuer ties vs to fauour groſſe errors, ſo much as with ſilence; there is no ſuch ſlauery in the deare name of a ſiſter, that it ſhould binde vs to giue either aid, or countenance to lewdneſſe; Haue no ſuch fellowſhip (ſaith Saint Paul) but rather reproue: So we haue done, both modeſtly, and earneſtly; The ſame is befalne vs, which befell the bleſſed Apoſtle; we are become their enemies, for telling the truth.

Epheſ. 5.11.

Behold now we are thruſt out of doore, ſpet vpon, railed at, and when opportunity ſerues, perſecuted with moſt curious torments; And (leſt any miſchiefe ſhould be wanting) obſtinacie is now at laſt added vnto error; and a cruell rage ariſing from impatience; and now their wickedneſſe began to pleaſe them the more, becauſe it diſpleaſed vs. And what ſhould we now doe, in ſuch a caſe; we, the deſpiſed, and reiected Patrons of this ſpirituall chaſtity? To let fall ſo iuſt a cauſe, wee might not; vnleſſe wee would caſt off that God, who challenges this plea for only his. To yeeld, and giue in, were no other, than to betray the truth of God, and damne our owne ſoules; No courſe remaines but this one, (and here is our onely ſafety) with all our courage, and skill, to oppoſe the wicked Paradoxes, and Idolatrous practiſes of the Romiſh Church, till either ſhe be aſhamed of her ſelfe, or repent that euer ſhe was.

Sect. II.

The Commodities and Conditions of peace.

BEAVTIFVLL is the name of Peace (as Hilary ſpeaketh) and truly ſacred; and ſuch as ſcarce ſauoureth of the earth : Neither did the Hebrewes by any other terme chooſe rather to expreſſe all happineſſe, and perfection of liuing : Neither is there any thing, which the Angels did more gladly congratulate vnto men, or which Chriſt did more carefully bequeath, or the Apoſtles more earneſtly enioyne ; How oft, and how vehemently doth the Spirit intreat and command vs to haue peace ? But this (thou ſaieſt) is euery mans wiſh, to haue peace; but, what if peace will not be had? Loe then, Saint Iames charges vs to make peace, by our endeuours, by our patience. Once made, and had, what if it will not ſtay with vs ? Then Saint Paul bids to follow thoſe things which concerne peace : What if it will needs away and hide it ſelfe ? yet then Saint Peter commands to follow, and inquire after it. What if once found, it refuſe to come, as Abrahams ſeruant preſuppoſed of Rebecca? Euen then ſtudy to be quiet, ſaith Saint Paul; or as the word implies, Be ambitious of Peace: So let the Author of Peace loue vs, as we loue Peace. Who is there that would not rather wiſh with Conſtantine quiet daies, and nights free from care and vexation ? It was a ſpeech worthy of an Emperour, and a Chriſtian, that fell from Iouianus about that querelous libell of the Macedonians, I hate contention ; and thoſe that are inclined to concord, I loue, and reuerence.

Our aduerſaries would make vs beleeue they profeſſe and deſire no leſſe, with an equall zeale of charitie, and agreement. God bee Iudge betwixt vs both ; and whetherſoeuer perſiſts to hate peace, let him periſh from the face of God, and his holy Angels: Yea (that this imprecation may be needleſſe) he is already periſhed; For (as Cyprian according to his wont, grauely) they cannot come to the reward of Peace, which haue broken the Peace of God, with the fury of diſcord. And ſurely what but the flames of hell can determine the ambition of theſe fiery and boyling ſpirits ? Baſil obſerues well that Gods fire gaue light, and burned not ; contrarily, the fire of hell burneth, without light ; and therefore is well worthy of thoſe, who deſpiſing the light of truth, delight themſelues in the flames of contentions. Thoſe are the true haters of Peace, which doe wilfully patronize errors contrary to the Chriſtian faith. So long as wee muſt dwell by theſe tents of Kedar, wee ſhall too iuſtly complaine with the Pſalmiſt, I loue peace, but in the meane while they are bent to Warre. And as for vs, which profeſſe our ſelues the ingenuous clients of Peace, ſince wee muſt needs fight, it is not for vs to doe nothing ; For that bleſſed Quire of Angels, before their Peace vpon earth, well ſung, Glory to God in the higheſt Heauens ; and Saint Iames deſcribes the wiſdome of God to be firſt pure, then peaceable. And that choſen veſſell implies no leſſe, when to his charge of Peace, hee addes, If it bee poſſible. That is as impoſſible to euery good man, which ought not to be done, as that which cannot bee done, neither indeed (as the rule of Lawyers runnes) can we be ſaid to be able to doe that, which we cannot honeſtly doe. God (ſaith S. Paul) is not the Author of confuſion, but of Peace. It is a wicked peace, it is no peace, that neceſſarily breeds confuſion. That Peace is worthy of a defiance, which proclaimes warre with God ; And I would to God, that that peace which Rome either can performe or dare promiſe, were of any better, of any other nature.

Well then ; Let it be our preſent taske, carefully to diſcuſſe Saint Pauls condition of Poſſibility ; and teach how vaine it is, to hope that a true, holy, and ſafe peace can be either had, or maintained with our preſent Romaniſts ; whether we regard the auerſe and ſtubborne diſpoſition of the one ſide, or the nature of the matters controuerted, or laſtly, the impoſſibilitie of thoſe meanes, whereby any reconciliation may bee wrought : Theſe three ſhall be the limits, wherein this our, not vnprofitable, nor yet vnſeaſonable worke, ſhall ſuffer it ſelfe to be bounded.

SECT. III.

The obſtinate and aduerſe diſpoſition of the Romaniſts.

AND as for the firſt, I ſuppoſe we need not labour much. Indeed, God can eaſily make the Wolfe to dwell with the Lambe, and the Leopard to lodge with the Kid. How eaſie is it for him, ſo to ſoften the adamantine hearts of men, by bathing them in the bloud of that immaculate Lambe, that they ſhould melt into pure loue! but, as the times now are, it would be no leſſe miraculous, to finde a Popiſh heart truly charitable to vs, than to ſee the Lions fawning vpon Daniel. Euen where there is ſtrife about indifferent things, there is neceſſarily required a conſpiring of the minds of them, which would be reconciled : neither is it enough, that one ſide is content, together with armes, to lay downe hatred ; and how will our Romaniſts endure this? Surely that hatred of Eteocles to his brother, or that of Vatinius, is but meere loue to this of Papiſts. Alas! when, and where, are we not ſpet vpon, as the moſt deſperately hereticall enemies of the Church? Rome admits Iewes into her boſome, from whoſe hands their Popes holineſſe diſdains not to receiue the booke of the Law of God ; but Proteſtants ſhe may not endure : That which Socrates complaines as iniuriouſly done by Theodoſius a Grecian Biſhop againſt the very Macedonian Heretickes, is daily done by them againſt vs ; No Arrians, no Circumcellion hereticks were euer more cruell : and theſe idle Fablers in the meane time ſlander vs to the world, as guiltie of the ſame outragious proceedings againſt them. What hereſie is there in all times, which that Romulean Wolfe, and her bawling Clients are not wont to caſt vpon vs? One while wee are the Schollers of Simon Magus, becauſe we doe but once mention Grace and Saluation ; for what haue wee elſe to doe with that wicked Sorcerer? Another while we are fetcht from the curſed ſchoole of Eunomius, for that we attribute too much to Faith ; and yet no more than that holy Hereticke Saint Paul. One while we are Pepuzians that aſcribe too much to women ; then wee are Origeniſts for holding the Image of God to be defaced in man : then contrarily Proclians for holding the ſinne of concupiſcence not enough defaced : One while we are the followers of Sabellius, becauſe I thinke we liued in the ſame age with Seruetus ; another while of Eutiches, becauſe wee liued in the time of Swinckfeldius ; for what buſineſſe haue wee euer had elſe with thoſe branded Hereticks? Wee are Pelagians one while, for holding the wages of ſinne to bee death ; then wee are Donatiſts for admitting none but the iuſt into the Church of the elect : ſometimes wee are Manichees for denying Free-will ; ſtraight, we are Arrians for refuſing traditions ; then Nouatians for taking away penance ; another while we are Ærians for reiecting oblations for the dead, and faſtings: then Iouinianiſts, for not allowing a ſlippery and vaniſhing Faith ; the followers of Vigilantius, for diſclaiming the adoration of reliques ; of Neſtorius, for diſliking the aſſeueration of the Sacramentall bread : now we are Xenaites, for demoliſhing of Images, then we are Lampetians petians, for diſallowing the ſeruitude of idle vowes. It matters not whether the foule mouth of that hired ſtrumpet accuſe Timotheus the Presbyter, or Athanaſius the Biſhop, ſo that ſome body be ſmitten; It matters not what be ſpoken, ſo it be malicious: That is fully reſolued of, which Nazianzen hath; No man ſhall hold in the reines of a riotous and lawleſſe tongue: for (as Hierom ſaith well) it is the paſtime of the wicked to ſlander the good: That therefore, which was the ſolemne faſhion of the Lindians, neuer to do ſeruice to their Hercules, without railing, the ſame is too ordinary with theſe publike Heralds of our patience: Our daily fornace (as Auſten ſpeakes wittily) is our aduerſaries tongue: How eaſily might I here vnlode whole carts of reproches, that haue bin heaped together by the ſcurrilous paraſites of Rome? What riuers of bloud, what bonfires of worthy Saints might I here ſhew my Reader? All theſe the world knowes, and feeles too much: And as for thoſe honeſt and good-natured men, which would needs vndertake to be the ſticklers of theſe ſtrifes, as Caſſander, Fricius, the Interimiſts, and that nameleſſe Apologiſt of the French, how ill haue they ſped on both parts? With whom it hath no otherwiſe fared, me thinkes, than with ſome ſound ſhepheard, that thruſts himſelfe betwixt two furious Rammes running together in their full ſtrength, and abides the ſhocke of both; Neither may it euer ſuccede better to theſe kinde Philiſtims, which will be bringing this Arke of God into the houſe of Dagon. And for vs, ſince we muſt needs be put to it, we ſhall not here (as it often falls out in other quarrels) ſtriue to our loſſe. Abraham fared well by the diſſenſions of Lot; all the milke and hony, of whole Paleſtine hereupon befell to him; whereof hee ſhould elſe haue ſhared but the halfe: Doubtleſſe theſe contentions (through the goodneſſe of God) ſhall enrich vs, with a great increaſe both of Truth and Glory.

SECTION IV.

That the Confeßion of the ſame Creed is not with them ſufficient for Peace.

IT is not Caſſanders ſpeech onely, but euery wiſe and honeſt mans, that the Creed is the common cognizance of our faith; and wee all doe with one voyce willingly profeſſe it. Surely Theodoret, when he would by a fauourable report allay the bitter contentions of thoſe ancient Chriſtians of Antioch, writes thus: Both parts (ſaith he) made one and the ſame confeſſion of their faith; for both maintained the Creed of the Nicen Councell; And yet this poſition is ſpightfully handled by Cardinall Bellarmine, and can ſcarce draw breath ſince his laſt ſtripes: What care we (ſaith he) for the ſame Creed? Faith is not in words, but in the ſenſe: And indeed, I remember, what Ruffinus reports done by Arrius. That worthy Conſtantine had charged him to write what faith he held; he deliuered him a Creed, in words, ours; in ſenſe, his owne; and how right his wicked brood tooke after their father, in the inſuing times of the Church, let Hiſtories witneſſe: ſure I am, whoſoeuer ſhall read the Creeds of their ſeuerall Sects, ſhall hardly fetch out any thing, which an Orthodox Cenſurer would thinke worthy of reproofe: How oft doe they yeeld Chriſt to be God, yea, God of God; and yet perfidiouſly reſerue to themſelues, in the meane time, that abſurd conceit; That he was created, ex non entibus! As therefore Seuerianus the Syrian in Theodoret, ſpake Greeke as a Grecian, but pronounced it like a Syrian: ſo there may be many, which may ſpeake truths, but pronounce them heretically: For all Hereſies (ſaith Irenæus) talke of one God, but marre him with their miſconceits; yea, for the moſt part all Hereſies (ſaith Chryſologus) ſet a face of the Trinitie; To little purpoſe; It was not ill ſayd of Gratian, that no man is to care for words, ſince that not the meaning ſhould ſerue the words, but the words rather the meaning; Let vs grant all this, and more; Let it be ſaid of the Creed, as Ierome ſaid of the Booke of Iob, that euery word abounds with ſenſes: There is no Diuine Word (as Tertullian ſpeaketh wiſely) ſo diſſolute and deſuſed, that onely the words may be defended, and not the true meaning of the words ſet downe. To put the Cardinall out of this needleſſe feare; The proper and natiue ſenſe of the Creed may be fetcht out; and I adde yet more (except but that one Article of Chriſts Deſcenſion into Hell, which Ruffinus confeſſes he could not find, either in the Roman, or Eaſterne Creedes) is openly confeſſed on both parts: And yet for all this, we are neuer the neerer to peace: For from theſe common Principles of Faith, the ſubtle deuice of Hereticall prauity hath fetcht ſtrange and erroneous conſequences, which by their ſophiſticall and obſtinate handling, are now improued into Hereſies, and dare now threaten not onely oppoſition, but death vnto thoſe very principles, from which they are rayſed: Of this kind are the moſt of thoſe Romiſh opinions, which we vndertake to cenſure in this Diſcourſe.

But, if by the vniuerſall conſent of all, it ſhould appeare that both word and ſenſe are intire; that both the principles, and neceſſarie concluſions thence deduced, are vndeniably ſound: yet (ſaith Bellarmine) there can bee no peace with Lutherans. Let all the World know this, & wonder, Our King, (be it ſpoken to the enuie of thoſe which cannot emulate him, an incomparable Diuine for a Prince, yea, a Prince of Diuines, a King of men, and a wonder of Kings, mighty both with his ſcepter, and his pen) going about in that learned and ponderous Diſcourſe to cleere himſelfe from the aſperſion of Hereſie, which that foule hand had vnworthily caſt vpon him, profeſſes ſolemnly and holily, that whatſoeuer is contained eyther in the Sacred Scriptures, or the three famous Creeds, or the four firſt generall Councels, that he embraces with both armes, that He proclaimes for His Faith, that He will defend with his Tongue, with his Pen, with His Sword, in that he will both liue and die.

Yea, but this is not enough, ſaith that Great Antagoniſt of Princes, For there are other points of faith wherewith religion is now of late times inlarged, as Tranſubſtantiation, Purgatory, the Popes Primacie (a whole doozen of theſe goodly Articles hath the Tridentine Councell created, in this decayed age of the World, leſt the Fathers of Italy ſhould ſeeme to come ſhort of the Apoſtles, and the Pope of Chriſt) any parcell whereof, whoſoeuer ſhall preſume to call into queſtion, is an Heretike preſently, and ſmels of the Faggot: and how ordinarily is that layd in euery diſh? that he cannot bee a member of the Church, which withdrawes his obedience from their Pope, the Head of the Church. Neyther is that any whit milder, which Gratian cites from Pope Nicholas the Second; Whoſoeuer goes about to infringe the priuiledge of the Roman Church, or derogates from her Authoritie, is an Heretike.

But that is yet well worſe, which the allowed Table of the Decree hath peremptorily broched, Whoſoeuer obeies not the Popes Commandement, incurres the ſin of Idolatry; or (as Gregory the Seuenth, from whom Gratian would ſeeme to borrow this, which yet is not to be found in his Epiſtles) of Paganiſme. Whatſoeuer therefore Chriſt Ieſus, whatſoeuer the Apoſtles, whatſoeuer the counſels, & Fathers of the Primitiue Church haue commended to vs, to be beleeued, ſhall auaile vs little, neither can euer make vs friends, vnleſſe we will bee content to beſlaue our faith vnto their Popeling: And can they thinke wee will looke at peace vpon ſuch a condition? That hope were bold and fooliſh that could expect this. Neither doe they more ſcornfully caſt vs out of the boſome of their Church, for ſpetting at theſe Articles of Straw, which their vanitie hath deuiſed, than wee can confidently condemne, and execrate their preſumption, which haue ſo imperiouſly obtruded ſuch traſh as this vpon the Church of God.

SECTION V.

The impuration or corruption of the Roman Church; and their impoſſibilitie of Reconciliation, ariſing from that wilfull Fable of the Popes infallibilitie.

BVt, to leaue this firſt head of our Aduerſaries indiſpoſition to peace: Say that the Papiſts could be content to harken to an agreement (which I can neuer hope to ſee, whiles Rome is it ſelfe) ſay they ſhould ſeeke it, yet (as things now ſtand) whiles they will not, & we may not ſtirre one inch from our ſtation of iudgement, God forbids, the Truth debarres our Reconciliation: wee dare not (whatſoeuer ſome kind-hearted Mediators may perſwade vs) eyther diuide Chriſt, or betray him with a kiſſe. The Truth is on high: they may well aſcend to vs, as Leo ſaid of old; but for vs, to deſcend to them, is neither ſafe, nor honeſt: Firſt of all, how too plaine is it, that the Romane Church is palpably declined from that ancient puritie of Religion, which ſhe once profeſſed: It is not more certaine, and ſenſible, that the Citie of Rome is deſcended from her ſeuen Hils, to the Martian Plaines, that lye below them; or, that the ſpightfull Heathens of old (as Euſebius reports) turned the Sacred Monument of the Tombe of Chriſt, into the Temple of their Venus: What a cloud of witneſſes haue we of this noted decay of that Church? yea, witneſſes of their owne. To beginne with the other Sex. Hildegardis a Nunne, and a famous Propheteſſe of her time, accuſes the Apoſtolicall Order, of the vtter extinguiſhing of Religion, amongſt them. Matilda, or Maud, who liued in the ſame Age, cenſures them for common Apoſtaſie from the Chriſtian faith; and both of them, by ſome extraordinary Reuelation, cleerely and directly propheſied of this Religious and Holy reſtauration of the Church, which our dayes ſee accompliſhed.

Saint Brigit, the Foundreſſe of the Order of Saint Sauiour, which was * canonized by Pope Vrban, ſticks not to teach openly in her writings, that the Pope doth torment, yea, crucifie the ſoules of the Elect; and boldly foretels, that all his Followers, and Abettors, and whole Clergie ſhall be cut off, and that his Sea ſhall ſinke downe into the bottome of Hell; and this ſhee doth ſo tartly and vehemently, that the Romaniſts of thoſe times threatned, and indeuoured to burne her aliue: Robert (our Biſhop of Lincolne, to whom the greatneſſe of his Head gaue an homely, but famous name, whom Illyricus miſ-nameth Rupertus) a worthy and peereleſſe man in his age, durſt, before the Popes owne face, openly accuſe the Paſtors of his time to be the Spoylers of the Earth, the Diſperſers and Deuourers of Gods flocke, the vtter waſters of the Holy Vineyard of God. That Carthuſian of Coleyne, which is ſaid to haue gathered that Booke of the Bundle of times, complaines that Truth was then periſhed from the ſonnes of men. Petrus de Aliaco, a Cardinall, confeſſes that the ancient Diuines built vp the Church, but the then preſent Seducers deſtroyed it; And vnto theſe agree Iohn de Rupeſciſſa, a Monke; Picus Earle of Mirandula, Trithemius the Abbot, Laurence Valla; And thoſe worthie Lights of the Councell of Baſil, the Cardinall of Arles, and Thomas de Corſellis: But Nicholas Clemangis the Archdeacon of Bayeux ſpeakes nothing but ſtones and bullets; who in a whole Volume, hath freely painted out the corrupt eſtate of the Church, neither did Dominicus Biſhop of Brixia ſpeake any whit more ſparingly, who euen in thoſe times durſt ſet before his Booke, this Title, The Reformation of Rome; To ſay nothing of Ioachim, of Peter of Ferrara the Lawyer, of the three Theodericks, of Lyra, Petrarch, Gerſon, Euerard, the Biſhop of Salisburg, Eraſmus, Caſſander, Eſpencæus, the Iury of Euen Pope Adrian himſelfe, the Sixt of that Name, whiles he inſtructs his Legate in his meſſage, cenſures the Church, and ingenuouſly complaines, that all was gone to wracke, and ruine: What ſhall we then ſay to this? Can any man be ſo partiall, as to thinke, that ſo many Saints of both Sexes, Prophets, Propheteſſes, Monkes, Doctors, Cardinals, Popes, ſhould (as Ierome ſpeakes of the Luciferian Heretikes) meerely deuiſe theſe ſlanders, to the diſgrace of their holy mother? Certainely, therefore, ſo ſhamefull and generall a deformitie could not but bee diſcerned, by our latter Papiſts; and (to auoyd all ſhifts) wee haue gently and louingly laid our finger vpon theſe ſpots: But, in the meane time, how haynouſly haue they taken it? and (as Ruffinus ſpeakes of Apollinaris the Heretike) whiles they are tranſported with the vicious humor of contention, and will bee croſſing euery thing, that is ſpoken, out of the vaine oſtentation of a ſtrong wit, they haue improoued their idle brabbles to Hereſies. Hierome ſayd wittily, They vſe to winke, and deny, which beleeue not that to bee done, which they would not haue done.

Ruff. l. 1. c 20. Dum contentionis vitio nimis aguntur, &c. Hier. aduerſ. Luciferianos.

It is therefore a moſt lamentable and fearefull caſe; that a Church which of her owne fauourites is iuſtly accuſed of many and dangerous errors, ſhould blocke vp againſt her ſelfe, the way whereby ſhee ſhould returne into the Truth; and (as Francis à Victoria honeſtly complaines) ſhould neyther indure her owne euils, nor their remedies. For whiles ſhee ſtands vpon it, that ſhee cannot erre, and ſtubbornely challenges vnto her Chaire a certaine Impeccancie of Iudgement (that wee may borrow a word from Tertullian) what hope can now remaine of recouering the Truth? How are we now, too ſawcie, that dare mutter ought againſt her? The firſt hope of health muſt needs bee fetcht from the ſenſe, and acknowledgement of the diſeaſe: That of the Epicure is common and true, The beginning of recouery, is the knowledge of the fault; Thou muſt find thy ſelfe amiſſe, ſaith Seneca, ere thou canſt amend thy ſelfe. Rome brags that ſhee cannot be ſicke: What doe we now talke of medicines for her? Theſe Doctrinall Principles (as our Stapleton cals them) are they, from which a certaine fatall neceſſity of erring muſt needs follow.

For to what purpoſe is all this we doe? If vpon the ſentence of this Romiſh Oracle (for in the cloſet, or the Priſon rather, of his Breſt (as Ierome obiected to Iohn of Ieruſalem) the Church is included) all things do ſo depend, that whatſoeuer he ſhall determine, muſt be receiued, without all contradiction, and his decree can by no inferiour meanes be repealed, in vaine doe we wrangle for truth; in vain haue all thoſe former Synods both met, and defined; in vaine doe we either teach, or learne ought of any other Maſter: Is it poſſible, ſhe ſhould euer be drawne to remorſe for her error, which eagerly defends that ſhee cann to erre? Either therefore let our Papiſts ſuffer this vaine opinion of Infallibilitie, to bee puld vp by the very roots, out of their breſts; or elſe there can be no hope, ſo much as of a conſultation of Peace; And doe wee thinke that our Maſters beyond the Alpes will euer abide themſelues ſtripped of this darling, which they haue made ſo daintie of, all this while? Why doe wee not aſwell demand Saint Peters Throne, and his Reuenues, and together with his Patrimony, all the bodie of Religion? For, what one Title is there of the now Roman faith, that hangs not on this ſtring? Let them giue vs this, and Rome falls alone, and lyes ſhamefully in the duſt; Let them denie it vs, and ſhee ſhall be ſtill that great Harlot, ſtill an enemie to Peace, ſtill hatefull to Heauen: But ſo farre are their moderne Doctors from an ingenuous reiection of Infallibility, that no Age euer knew ſo well how to flatter a Pope: For not onely haue ſome yeelded this vnto him, without a Councell, as Alber, Pighius, Gretſer, Bellarmine, and all Ieſuites whereſoeuer; but ſome others, (as Gregory of Valentia) haue faſtned this vpon him, without any care or ſtudy required on his part. Oh happy Chaire of Peter, firme, eternall, full of prodigious vertue! which if we might imagine a woodden one, I ſhould ſure thinke were made of Iriſh Oake; there is no Spider of errour can touch it, but preſently dyes: Behold, the Tables written with Gods owne hand, were ſoone broken and gone; but the barres of thy frame can feele no Age, cannot incurre the danger of any miſcarriage.

Sure (I thinke) Vibius Rufus is aliue againe, which becauſe hee ſate in the ſame ſeat wherein Iulius Cæſar had ſate, and maried Ciceroes wife, had wont to vaunt of both, as if he ſhould ſure be Cæſar, for his ſeat; or for his wife, Cicero. Belike, all the vertue of it is from Peter: it is well that his other Succeſſors conferred nothing towards it, leſt perhaps Alexander the Sixt ſhould haue turned the ſucceeding Popes into Letchours, Clement into ſacrilegious Church-robbers, Iulius into Swaggerers, Benedict, Gregory, Silueſter, into Symoniſts; Paſcalis into Periurers; Pope Ioane of Mentz into women, Martin and that other Silueſter into Magicians, the two Iohns into Deuils incarnate.

Now on the other part, can any man bee ſo fooliſh to hope that our Church will euer be ſo mad, as thus baſely to bolſter vp the great Bridge-maker of Tybur? As though wee could bee ignorant how Chriſt neuer either performed, or promiſed them any ſuch priuiledge? For, where is it written (as Luther ieſted well) vnleſſe perhaps at Rome, in Saint Peters vpon ſome Chimnie with a Cole? Chriſt ſaid indeed, Thou art Peter: but, Thou art Paul the Fiſt, he neuer ſaid: Hee ſaid, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not: ſo he ſaid too, Goe behinde me, Satan, thou ſauoureſt not the things of God. Now let this Oracle of the Chaire, teach vs how he can at once make himſelfe full heyre of the promiſe, and yet ſhift off the cenſure at pleaſure: Yet, (to tread in the ſteps of the Times) as though wee could not know that the following Ages knew not of this; not Policrates and Irenæus, which reſiſted Victor the Pope; not Cyprian, which oppoſed Stephen, not the Fathers of Calcedon, which would not yeeld to Leo, not the Eaſterne Biſhops, which would not yeeld to Iulius, nor the Fathers of Conſtantinople, which refuſed to yeeld to Vigilius and Honorius: yea, of the latter Diuines, thoſe which haue had either ſenſe or ſhame, as Iohn Gerſon, Chancellor of Paris, Turrecremata, Almain, Alphonſus de Caſtro, Pope Adrian the Sixt, Archbiſhop Catharinus, Cardinall Caietan, Frnciſcus à Victoria, and who not of the beſt ranke of their Doctors haue not feared openly to deny, and diſclaime this fancie; and Alphonſus ſhall giue a reaſon thereof for all. There are many vnlearned Popes (ſaith hee) that know not ſo much as the rules of Grammar, how then ſhould they bee able to interpret the holy Scriptures? As though wee knew not which of their Popes fauored Arrius, which, Montanus, which, Neſtorius, which, Atacius, which the Monothelites, which, the Sadduces, and which were in league with Deuils; which of them haue defined contrary to their fellowes, and which contrary to God; and (that I may vſe Ierome's words) how ſilly a Pilot hath ofttimes ſteered the leaking Veſſell of the Church! As though euery Tapſter and Tinker, now a dayes, could not point their finger to the long Beadroule of Popes, and ſay, Such and ſuch were the Monſters of men, ſuch (as Platina, Lyra, Genebrard confeſſe) were Apotacticall, and Apoſtaticall miſcreants; ywis, their life hath beene long the Table-talke of the World, as Bernard ſpeakes: There can therefore bee no peace poſſibly, vnleſſe they will bee content to bee head-leſſe, or we can bee content to bee the ſlaues of Rome: Imagine, they could bee ſo ingenuous, as to confeſſe that the ſame Serpent which inſinuated himſelfe of old into Paradiſe, might perhaps creepe cloſely into Peters Chaire; yet there would bee no leſſe Controuerſie, de facto, than of the poſſibility of errour.

Beſides,there are other Popiſh opinions of the ſame ſtampe,but more pragmaticall, which are not more pernicious to the Church,than to common-weales: as thoſe of the power of both Swords, of the depoſition of Princes, diſpoſing of Kingdomes, abſoluing of Subiects, fruſtration of Oathes (ſufficiently canuaſed of late, both by the Venetian Diuines, and French, and ours,) which are ſo palpably oppoſite to the libertie of Chriſtian Gouernment,that thoſe Princes,and People,which can ſtoope to ſuch a yoke, are well worthy of their ſeruitude: and can they hope that the great Commanders of the World will come to this bent? (we all,as the Comick Poet ſaid truly,had rather be free, than ſerue; but much more Princes) or, on the contrary, can wee hope, that the Tyrants of the Church will be content to leaue this hold? What a fopperie were this? For, both thoſe Princes are growne more wiſe, and theſe Tyrants more arrogant; and (as Ruffinus ſpeakes of George, the Arrian Gallant) they inſolently gouerne an vſurped Biſhopricke,as if they thought they had the managing of a proud Empire, and not of a Religious Prieſthood.

BVt let vs bee ſo liberall, as to grant this to our ſelues, which certainely they will neuer grant vs; for, this olde Grandame of Cities thinkes her ſelfe borne to command, and will either fall, or rule: Neyther doth that Mitred Moderator of the World affect any other Embleme than that,which Iulian ieſtingly aſcribes to Iulius Cæſar (τὸ πρωτεύειν) To rule all; or to Alexander the Great (πάντα νικᾶν) to conquer all; It was a degenerating ſpirit of Adrian the Sixt, which cauſed to bee written vpon his Tombe, in the Church of Saint Peter; That nothing in all his life fell out ſo vnhappily to him, as that he gouerned: Let this, I ſay, be granted vs; There want not (I know) ſome milder ſpirits (Theodoſians, that can play with both hands) which thinke, if theſe buſie points were by the moderation of both parts quietly compoſed, it might be ſafe for any man (ſo it be without noyſe) to thinke what hee liſt, concerning the other differences of Religion: Theſe are the Ghoſts of that Heretike Appelles, whoſe ſpeech it was, That it is ſufficient to beleeue in Chriſt crucified, and that there ſhould bee no diſcuſſing of the particular warrants and reaſon of our faith: Or the brood of Leonas, one of the courtiers of Conſtantius, and his Deputie in the Seleucian Councell, which when the Fathers hotely contended, as there was good cauſe, for the Conſubſtantialitie of the Sonne: Get you home, ſaid hee, and trouble not the Church ſtill with theſe trifles. Saint Baſil was of another minde, from theſe men, who (as Theodoret reports) when the Lieutenant of Valens the Emperor perſwaded him to remit but one letter, for peace ſake, anſwered, Thoſe that are nurſed with the ſincere Milke of Gods Word, may not abide one ſyllable of his ſacred truth to be corrupted; but rather than they wil endure it, are ready to receiue any kinde of torment, or death. Eleuſius and Syluanus, which were Orthodox Biſhops, and thoſe other worthy Guardians, and (as Athanaſius his title was) Champions of the truth, were of another minde from theſe coole and indifferent Mediators. So farre as the ſacred truth will allow vs, wee will accompany them gladly: but if they vrge vs further, wee ſtand ſtill, or ſtart backe; and thoſe two courſes which Epiphanius aduiſed, as the remedies of Hereſie (Heed and Auoydance) both thoſe doe we carefully vſe, and performe. Great is the offence of diſcord, and vnexpiable; and ſuch in the graue iudgement of Cyprian, as is not purged with the bloud of our paſſion; and iuſtly doe we thinke that Fiend of Homer, worthy of no place but Hell. But yet, wee cannot thinke concord a meete price of truth; which it is lawfull for vs to buy at any rate, but to ſell vpon any termes, it no leſſe then piacular.

Let vs therefore a little diſcuſſe the ſeuerall differences, and (as it vſes to bee done, when the houſe is too little for the ſtuffe) Let vs pile vp all cloſe together. It ſhall be enough in this large Harueſt of matter, to gather ſome few Eares out of euery Shocke, and to make a compendious diſpatch of ſo long a taske: The groſſeſt of the Popiſh Hereſies, and (as Hierome obiects to Origen) the moſt venomous opinions of Rome, which haue bred ſo much trouble and danger at this day, to the Church of God, are either ſuch as doe concerne our ſelues, not without ſome reſpect to God; or ſuch as concerne God, not without ſome reſpect to vs: Of the former ſort are thoſe, which in a certaine order (ſuch as it is) of diſcourſe, are conuerſant about Iuſtification, Free-will, the merit of our workes, humane ſatisfaction, Indulgences, Purgatory, and the differences of mortall and Veniall ſinnes: Theſe therefore firſt offer themſelues to our examination.

SECTION VII.

The Romiſh Hereſie concerning Iuſtification.

THat point of Iuſtification (of all other) is exceeding important; inſomuch as Caluin was faine to perſwade, that if this one head might bee yeelded ſafe and intire, it would not quite the coſt, to make any great quarrell for the reſt. Would to GOD that word of Caſſander might bee made good, which doubted not to ſay, That which is affirmed, that men cannot bee iuſtified before God by their owne ſtrength, merits, or workes, but that they are freely iuſtified by faith, was alwaies allowed and receiued in the Church of God, and is at this day approued by all Eccleſiaſticall Writers: Yea, I would they would be ruled by their Thomas Aquinas in this, who attributes Iuſtification to workes, not as Iuſtification is taken for an infuſion of grace, but as it is taken for an exerciſe, or manifeſtation, or conſummation of Iuſtice: If this were all, in this point all would be peace: But whilſt the Tridentine Fathers take vpon them to forge the formall cauſe of our Iuſtification, to be our owne inherent Iuſtice, and thruſt Faith out of Office, what good man can chooſe but preſently addreſſe himſelfe to an oppoſition? Who would not rather dye then ſuffer the ancient Faith of the Church to be depraued with theſe Idle Dreames? Go now ye great Trent Diuines, and bragge of your ſelues (as Aetius did of old by Theodorets report) that GOD hath now at laſt reuealed to you thoſe things, which he would haue hitherto concealed from all the world: In the meane time wee cannot but ſcorne to ſee the ſoules of men ſo ſhamefully deluded; whiles we heare the Spirit of God ſo oft redoubling, Without workes, Not by workes, but by faith: By their workes no fleſh ſhall be iuſtified: Being iuſtified freely by his grace: By the power whereof, Arrius Montanus, an ingenuous Author (and as Hierome ſaid of Appollinarius, a man of approued labour, though in many things (as the times then were) faultie in opinion) being vtterly conuinced: It followes (ſaith hee) that Faith is reputed for righteouſneſſe to him that workes not in the Law, and that according to the purpoſe of the grace of God.

ſaith Auguſtine, and with theſe conſort the reſt, Epiphanius, Chryſoſtome, Athanaſius, Primaſius, and that whole ſacred Quire of Antiquitie: But to what purpoſe doe I inſtance in theſe, when as the Expurgatory Index of Spaine, hath purpoſely wip't both out of the Tables and Text of Chryſoſtome, Ierome, Cyrill, moſt cleare Teſtimonies for the ſole Iuſtification by Faith? The Booke is euery where abroad, it is needleſſe to recite the ſeueralls: See now the Inquiſitors guilty to themſelues both of errour, and fraud; To whom I muſt ſing the ſame note, that Ambroſe did of old, to the Arrians: Yee may blot out the Letters, but the Faith you can neuer aboliſh: Thoſe blurres bewray you more; thoſe blots condemne you more then the Writing.

But ſome perhaps may thinke this a meere ſtrife of words, and not hard to bee reconciled: For, that which to the Papiſts is inherent iuſtice, is no other to the Proteſtants, then Sanctification; both ſides hold this equally neceſſary, both call for it equally: True; but doe both require it in the ſame manner? doe both to the ſame end? I thinke not; yea, what can be more contrary then theſe opinions, to each other? The Papiſts make this inherent righteouſneſſe the cauſe of our iuſtification; the Proteſtants, the effect whereof: The Proteſtants require it as the companion or Page, the Papiſts as the Vſher, yea, rather as the Parent of Iuſtification. But what matters it (ſay they) ſo both aſcribe this whole worke to God? As though it comes not all to one, to pay a ſumme for mee, and to giue it me to pay for my ſelfe. I know not how theſe things ſeeme ſo little diſſonant to theſe mens eares, which the Spirit of God hath made vtterly incompatible: To him that worketh, the wages is not imputed of grace, but of debt; If by grace, now not of workes, or elſe grace ſhould be no more grace; for neither is it grace any way, if it be not free euery way, ſaith Auguſtine: But theſe men ſay, Therefore of grace, becauſe of workes. Not of workes, leſt any man ſhould boaſt, (ſaith the Spirit:) But of workes, and yet a man ſhall boaſt in the Lord, ſaith BELLARMINE. And wherefore ſhall he boaſt? becauſe he is iuſt, becauſe voyde of ſinne; perhaps ſome Iſiodore may ſay thus of himſelfe, which voluntarily proteſted that for forty yeares ſpace he found not in himſelfe any ſinne, not ſo much as in his thought, not ſo much as any conſent to anger or inordinate deſire: Or perhaps ſome Baronius or Bellarmine may report this of their late Saint, GonZaga; or the offall of the Schooles may ſay ſo of Bonauenture; in whom, (if we beleeue them) Adam ſinned not, or Manicheus may ſay it of his elect Maſters; or perhaps Priſcilian, Euagrius, Iouinian, the Meſſalians, may bragge thus of themſelues: But farre otherwiſe is that ſpeech of Ambroſe, I will not boaſt becauſe I am iuſt, but becauſe I am redeemed: I will boaſt, not becauſe I am voyd of ſinne, but becauſe my ſinnes are forgiuen me: Otherwiſe, we ſhall come to that point which Innocentius condemned in the Pelagians, What need haue we now of God? But thou ſayeſt GOD hath giuen mee this whereby I am iuſt: Indeed this ſeemes at the firſt a great and glorious praiſe of the grace of God: and at the firſt hearing ſounds well to an ignorant eare; and yet, (when it is better conſidered) vnder a pretence of piety ſpoyles Chriſt of his glory: Why doeſt thou not as well ſay, He hath giuen mee wherewith I may redeeme my ſelfe? for by the ſame wherewith wee are iuſtified, we are redeemed, (Being iuſtified by his blood:) Behold the blood of him that is God and man, iuſtifies vs, and the ſame redeemes vs: But goe on a little: GOD hath giuen thee this: But hath he giuen it thee without thy ſelfe? Is this done without the interuention, without the operation of our Free-will? Let the Monkes of Burdeaux ſpeake, in their Abiurations: let ANDRADIVS, let Bellarmine (the flower of the Popiſh Schoole) let any Papiſt deny this, if he dare: It is onely Chriſts therefore which is imputed: that which is inherent is ours; for all (ſaith Auſten) which are iuſtified by Chriſt, are iuſt not in themſelues, but in him: That which is Chriſts because it is his, is moſt perfect: that which is ours, becauſe ours is weake and imperfect. GOD hath made vs men, not GODS: Our perfection is ſeaſonable in Heauen: Iuſtly doth HIEROME deride CTESIPHON; wee the Papiſts: O bleſſed, O happy men, if that Iuſtice which is not thought to bee any where but in Heauen, may bee found with you onely vpon earth: In the meane time, it is ſufficient for vs to mourne for our wants, to hate iniuſtice: It is the very ſpeech of Donatiſts, I haue nothing for thee to pardon. To be imputed therefore, and to be inherent, differ no leſſe then God and man, Trent and Heauen: Wherefore let our Romaniſts confeſſe that, which both Scriptures, and Fathers, and all their modeſter Doctors haue both thought and reported to bee the common voyce of the former Church in all times; and we are agreed: Otherwiſe, What fellowſhip hath God with Belial, light with darkneſſe?

Section VIII.

Concerning Free-will.

BOrdering vpon this is the point of Free-will. To let paſſe all lighter quarrels of the nature of our will; let vs enquire of the power of it; and that not in naturall, humane, or morall things, (Heere is all peace, and ſilence, ſaue that the words iangle with themſelues: and when the matter is agreed vpon, who would not contemne words, as Auguſtine ſaith well?) but in ſpirituall and diuine matters, we do wil indeed; wee will freely, neither can wee otherwiſe will any thing: who denies it? Here is no Phyſicall determination, no violence; but to will that which is good, or to will well, we cannot. Wee doe freely beleeue; (for faith is an act of the will) yea, and wee doe co-operate with grace; neither are we herein like to ſenſeleſſe ſtones, as Auſten truely ſpeakes: But whence is all this? Is it of our ſelues, or of God? Is it of grace, or (which the Councell of Aranſica condemned) by the power of nature? This muſt bee our queſtion. Both ſides like well that ſpeech of Saint Auguſtine: To will freely, is the worke of natur; to will well, of grace; to will ill of corruption: but when we come to the poynt, the Doctors of Trent are not more ſubtile, then the Ieſuites inconſtant: It is yet good and ſafe which Bellarmine cites from his Ruardus; A good worke, as it is a worke, is from Free-will: as it is good, from grace; as both a worke and good, both from Free-will and grace: But that is exceeding ingenuous and truely Euangelicall, which the ſame Bellarmine affirmes againſt ſome Semipelagian Catholickes. In thoſe things which pertain to piety and ſaluation, that mans will can do nothing, without the help of Gods grace: It is the voyce of Iacob, if the Cardinall would hold him there, curſed be he that ſhould oppoſe him. I goe on to hope and read; and ſee what ſtuffe I meete with, ſoone after in the ſame Booke: That our conuerſion is in the power of Free-will, becauſe it may be alwayes conuerted, when it will, and yet further: That before all grace wee haue Free-will euen in the workes of pietie, and ſupernaturall things. Before all grace? what before the grace of preuention? It were well the Cardinall would ſet forth ſome better recognitions. Now, then God doth not preuent vs, (as Auſten ſaid of old) that wee might will; but wee preuent God, becauſe we will: But leſt this ſhould ſeeme too groſſe, this liberty is tyed vp; and is altogether in the ſame ſtate as the faculty of ſeeing, when a ſenſible ſpecies is abſent; we can freely ſee, while the obiect is abſent: wee can freely will, in the abſence of grace. Let Bellarmine now tell me: are we any whit more free to euill than he faines vs to good? Did euer Pelagius dote thus much? Wee can will euill: but yet vnleſſe it is determined (vnder ſome falſe ſemblance) by the verdict of our practiall iudgement, wee will it not: But if wee ſhould yeeld him thus much: What helpe is this that God giues vs? To preuent, inſpire, excite, and helpe, is of God: to incline the will, is of our ſelues: How are we not now more beholden to our

ſelues, then to God? What is this but that Pelagian conceit, ſo oft condemned by Auguſtine, ſo to ſeparate Free-will from grace, as if without it we could doe, or thinke any thing anſwerable to the will of God? That we are able by the power of our will to auoid ſins; that we can ouercome the ſleighter motions of temptation, as Bellarm. ſpeaks; that wee can keepe Gods Commandements, as Scotus and Durandus; that wee can reiect or receiue the inſpiration of the Spirit, as the Tridentine Fathers; that wee can diſpoſe our ſelues to the receiuing of grace, as Thomas and Suarez; that we doe naturally co-operate with grace, and make our conuerſion effectuall, as Tapperus; what is it elſe, but to ſteale glory from God, that we may pranke vp this carion nature of ours? Yet it was modeſtly done of Tyberius, who of thoſe many buildings which hee repayred and perfected, challenged not one to himſelfe, but gaue them ſtill the names of thoſe men, by whom they were begun to be built: But theſe men challenge the whole houſe, when as they haue not laid, ſo much as one Tyle vpon the roofe. Farre be this ſhamefull ſacriledge from vs, when that truely iealous God challenges to himſelfe, to worke in vs both the will and the deed; yea, that we can will to beleeue is his worke, as Auſten rightly ſpeakes: See then, he doth not excite but worke in vs; (ἐνεργεῖ) Hee workes in vs, both that which is firſt, to will; and that which is laſt, to worke. Hierome ſayes worthily, To will and to runne is mine: but without Gods continuall helpe, it will not bee mine: Without me you can doe nothing, ſaith Chriſt; no, not thinke any thing, ſaith Paul: Alas, what can we doe, who are not lame, but dead in ſinnes? By the influence of Gods Spirit therefore a new life muſt be created in vs, that was not; and not the former life excited which was, according to that of the Pſalmiſt, Create in me a clean heart, and not ſtirre vp that cleane one I haue: Neither indeed is there as yet any place for this: The firſt heart muſt be taken out, another muſt bee put in. I will take away their ſtony heart, and giue them a heart of fleſh, ſaith God by the mouth of Ezekiel: He will giue it, but (thou ſayeſt perhaps) into their breſts, which haue prediſpoſed and prepared themſelues for the gift. Yea contrarily, to thoſe that doe not a little reſiſt him; The wiſedome of the fleſh is enmity. But there are ſome enmities more ſecret; and which doe not outwardly bewray themſelues: but behold, here is publike reſiſtance, (οὐχ ὑποτάσσεται) It is not ſubiect: But perhaps it will once yeeld of it ſelfe (οὐ δύναται) It cannot, ſaith the Spirit of God. See in how rebellious an eſtate we are to God: What proneneſſe is here to will good, what abilitie to performe it? Let the Papiſts, (if they will) ſacrifice to themſelues, as Seianus had wont of old; or to their nets, as the Prophet ſpeaketh: As for vs, come what can come vpon our oppoſition, wee neither can nor dare arrogate vnto our ſelues thoſe things, which by an holy reſeruation & incommunicableneſſe, are proper onely vnto the Higheſt. It is ſafe indeed for the Papiſts when they will to come vp to vs: but we cannot goe downe to them without a fearefull precipitation of our ſoules: Let Caſſander witneſſe this for vs: Let Bonauenture himſelfe witneſſe it for him; This is the property of holy minds, to attribute nothing to themſelues, but all to the grace of God: So that how much ſoeuer a man aſcribe to the grace of God, he ſwarueth not from true pietie, though by giuing much to grace, hee withdraw ſomething from the power of nature, or Free-will: but when any thing is withdrawne from the grace of God, and ought attributed to nature, which is due to grace, there may be great danger to the ſoule: Thus farre thoſe two ingenuous Papiſts: But (to inferre) wee giue all to grace, the Papiſts ſomething to nature; and what they giue to nature, we giue to God: Therefore we doe and ſay that which is fit for holy minds; they (if Bonauenture may be witneſſe) that which ſwerues from piety, and is ioyned with much danger of their ſoule.

Concerning Merits.

THE foundation of Popiſh Iuſtification is the freedome of our will; and vpon the walls of Iuſtification is merit raiſed; wee will haue no quarrell about the word. The holy Fathers of old (as we all grant) tooke the word in a good ſenſe, which the latter Diuines haue miſerably corrupted: About the thing it ſelfe, we muſt ſtriue eternally; we promiſe a reward to good workes, yea an euerlaſting one: It is a true word of the Iewes, He that labours in the Euen, ſhall eat on the Sabbath: for God hath promiſed it, and will performe; who yet crowneth vs in mercy and compaſſion, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, not (as the Papiſts) in the rigour of iuſtice, not (as Andradius) according to the due deſert of our worke: By the free gift of God, and not our merits, as Caietan wiſely and worthily: Or (if any man like that word better) God doth it in Iuſtice, but in reſpect of his own promiſe; not the very dignity of our works. That a iuſt mans worke in the truth of the thing it ſelfe, is of a value worthy of the reward of heauen (which induſtrious and learned Morton cites out of the Engliſh Profeſſor of Doway) and hath a meet proportion both of equality, and dignity, to the recompence of eternall life, as Pererius, and that in it ſelfe without any reſpect of the merits, and death of Chriſt, which Suarez, and Bayus, ſhamed not to write, ſeemes iuſtly to vs little leſſe then blaſphemy.

But (ſay our moderate Papiſts) Chriſt hath merited this merit of ours; neither can any other workes challenge this to themſelues, but thoſe, which are done in God, as Andradius ſpeakes, but thoſe which are dipped and dyed in the blood of Chriſt, as our latter Papiſts elegantly and emphatically ſpeake. But what is this but to coozen the world, and to caſt a miſt before the eyes of the vnskilfull? Our ſinnes are dyed in the Blood of CHRIST, not our merits: Or, if they alſo; Hath Chriſt then deſerued that our workes ſhould bee perfect? How comes it about that the workes of the beſt men are ſo lame, and defectiue? Hath he deſerued that though they be imperfect, yet they might merit? What iniury is this to God, what contradiction of termes? Behold now, ſo many Sauiours, as good men: what I doe, is mine, what I merit, is mine, whoſoeuer giues me either to do or to merit: Whoſoeuer rides on a lame horſe, cannot but moue vn-euenly, vneaſily, vncertainly: What inſolent ouer-weeners of their owne workes are theſe Papiſts, which proclaime the actions which proceed from themſelues, worthy of no leſſe then heauen? To whom we may iuſtly ſay, as Conſtantine ſaid to Aceſius, the Nouatian, Set vp ladders, O yee Papiſts, and clime vp to heauen alone. Who can abide that noted ſpeech of Bellarmine, A iuſt man hath by a double title, right to the ſame glory; one, by the merits of Christ imparted to him by grace, another by his owne merits; contrary to that of the Spirit of God; The wages of ſinne is death, but, The gift of God is eternall life: vpon which words another Cardinall, Caietan, ſpeakes in a holier faſhion, thus; He doth not ſay that the wages of our righteouſneſſe is eternall life: but, The gift of God is eternall life, that wee may vnderſtand, and learne, that we attaine eternall life, not by our owne merits, but by the free gift of God; for which cauſe alſo he addes, By Ieſus Chriſt our Lord: Behold the merit, behold the righteouſneſſe, whoſe wages is eternall life; but to vs in reſpect of Iesus Christ, it is a free gift: Thus Caietan: What could either Luther or Caluin, or any Proteſtant ſay more plainly? How imperfect doth the Scripture euery-where proclaime both Gods graces in vs, and our workes to him? and though the graces of God were abſolutely perfect, yet they are not ours; if our workes were ſo, yet they are formerly due: And if they they be due to God, what recompence of tranſcendent glory is due to vs? Behold, we are both ſeruants and vnprofitable: Not worthy ſaith God; worthy and more, ſay the Papiſts: By grace ye are ſaued through faith; and not of your ſelues, ſaith God: By grace indeed, but yet of our ſelues, ſay the Papiſts: What inſolencie is this? Let our Monkes now goe, and profeſſe wilful pouerty, whiles Ezekiah did neuer ſo boaſt of his heaps of treaſure, as theſe of their ſpirituall wealth.

Hierome ſaid truely; It was more hard to be ſtripped of our pride, then of our Gold and Iewels; for euen when thoſe outward ornaments are gone, many times theſe inward rags ſwell vp the ſoule. Gregorie Ariminenſis, their old Schoole-man was aſhamed of this wicked arrogance, and ſo was Durandus and Pighius, and other their Diuines of a more modeſt tempter. I would the Ieſuites could haue had the grace to haue beene no leſſe aſhamed, and the Tridentine Doctors; together with their executioners, the Inquiſitors: But, what other men haue holily, and truely ſpoken, that they haue perfidiouſly wip't out: witneſſe their Index of Madrill, in theſe words: Out of the booke which is intituled, The Order of Baptizing, together with the manner of viſiting the ſicke, Printed at Venice, in the yeere 1575. Let theſe words bee blotted out; Doeſt thou beleeue that not by thine owne merits, but by the vertue and merit of the paſſion of our Lord Iesvs Christ, thou ſhalt come to glory? And ſoone after, Doeſt thou beleeue that our Lord Iesvs Christ died for our ſaluation, and that no man can be ſaued by his owne merits, or any other meanes, but only by the merit of his paſſion? Ywis, theſe are the Scorpions and Snakes of the ancient Diuines (as Hierome termed the errors of Origen) amongſt which the Reader muſt needs haue walked, had not the graue Senate of the Inquiſition wiſely prouided for our ſafety. What hope is there now of peace? vnleſſe they could be content (which Bellarmine grants to bee the ſafeſt way) renouncing the merits of their works, not ſo much for their vncertaintie, as the imperfection of their Iuſtice, and danger of vaine-glory, both to reſolue and teach men to repoſe their whole confidence in the mercy, and bounty of God: which we can at once both wiſh, and not hope for.

Section X.

Concerning Satisfaction.

SATISFACTION hath neere affinitie with merit; and indeed, is but as another twig ariſing from the ſame root: Then which, no opinion could bee deuiſed more iniurious, and reproachfull to the merits of Christ. The word was not diſpleaſing to the ancient Fathers, nor in their ſenſe, to vs: Onely this let mee touch in paſſing by; that the heedleſſe abuſes of words, to the great wrong of the Church, hath bred confuſion of things; as contrarily that of Tertullian is appoued, The aſſured ſenſe of words is the ſafety of proprieties: Wee haue nothing to doe here with ciuill Satisfaction, nothing with Eccleſiaſticall; whereof Luther not vnfitly ſaid, (euen in Caſſanders owne iudgement) Our mother the Church out of her good affection deſiring to preuent the hand of God, chaſtiſes her children with certaine Satisfactions, leſt they ſhould fall vnder the ſcourges of GOD. This Canonicall Satisfaction, as many call it, hath bin too long out of vſe, on both ſides: Yea, more then this, in all our Sermons to our people, we beat impotunatly vpon the neceſſitie of penitence, & all the wholeſome exerciſes therof, as fruits worthy of repentance. Not (as Caſſander wel interprets it) as if we deſir'd they ſhould offer vnto God a ranſom worthy, & ſufficiẽt for the clearing of the ſcore of their ſins; but that we teach thẽ, thoſe offices muſt be performed by them, which God requires of thoſe ſinners, on whom he will beſtow the ſatisfaction of his Sonne: Let them call theſe ſatisfactions, if they will, we giue them leaue: But that after the moſt abſolute paſſion of Chriſt, there ſhould be yet behinde, certaine remainders of puniſhment to be diſcharged by vs, either here, or in Purgatory, with a purpoſe thereby to ſatisfie the diuine Iuſtice, whether they be impoſed by God or by the Prieſt, or by our ſelues (as the Tridentine diſtinction runnes) we neither may, nor can indure.

Tert. de præſcrip. Fides nominum ſalus proprietatum. Conſult. c. de ſatisfact.

Satisfactio penitentialis nihil aliud eſt quàm conatus infectum reddendi quod factum eſt: Alphonſ. Virueſius aduerſ. Luth.

For (how nicely ſoeuer theſe men diſtinguiſh) it cannot be, but this ſacrilegious opinion muſt needes accuſe the truly propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, of ſome imperfection. I know, they ſay, that both ſatisfactions may well ſtand together; that, of the Mediator; and this, of man: whereof Bonauenture cals the one Perfect, the other Semiperfect. But theſe are words. Let the Sophiſters tell me, Doth not the full veſſell containe in it ſelfe the halfe? or what need the one halfe apart, when we haue the whole? And laſtly, can any thing be added to that which is perfect? But ſome of their heed-fuller Diuines wil neither haue theſe two oppoſite, nor ſubordinate to each other. For it is a ſhame to ſpeake, what Suarez, what Durand, and other groſſer Papiſts haue diſcourſed of this point: Let them rather if they will, hold (which opinion yet hath been controlled, not by the Cardinall onely, but by three Popes before him) that mens ſatisfactions ſerue onely to apply vnto vs, that which the ſatisfactions of Chriſt haue promerited for vs. Yet, euen this ſhift will not ſerue: For Chriſts ſatisfaction (as they teach) reſpects eternall puniſhment, and not temporall; How then can it once be imagined, that we by our ſatisfaction ſhould procure that his ſuffering, which was deſtinated to the expiation of an eternall puniſhment, ſhould ſerue to the diſcharge of a temporall? And why ſhould we doe this, rather than Chriſt himſelfe? Beſides, how abſurdly doth this ſound, That he whoſe bounty hath paid our pounds for vs, hath yet left vs, out of our poore ſtocke, to pay ſome few farthings for our ſelues? Let me demand then; whether could not Chriſt vndertake theſe temporall puniſhments for vs, or would he not? That he could not, is impious; that he would not, is bold to ſay, and illiberall to doe: For where is there any reſtraint? or what are the limits of his mercy? The fault is remitted (ſaith the conuenticle of Trent) the puniſhment is not pardoned: The Eaſterne Church would neuer haue ſaid ſo, which alwayes ſtoutly oppoſed her ſelfe to this error: And indeed, what a ſhamefull reproach is this to the infinite mercy of the forgiuer? what a wrong to his iuſtice? whereto is the puniſhment due but to the fault? Did euer God inflict puniſhments that were not due? Many a time hath he forgiuen to ſinners thoſe plagues which both they had deſerued, and he threatned; but neuer did hee call backe for thoſe arerages which hee had forgiuen: God puniſhes vs indeed, (or chaſtens vs rather) and that ſometimes well and ſharply after the remiſſion of our offence. Not that hee may giue himſelfe ſatisfaction of vs (for how can it be ſo pleaſing to him that it ſhould bee ill with vs?) but that he may confirme vs to himſelfe, that he may amend vs: Hee layes no ſtroke vpon vs with a reuenging hand, but with a fatherly. Wee ſuffer therefore now, but wee ſatisfie not; This is proper onely to that eternall Prieſt, and to his eternall Prieſthood, and is no more communicable to Saints and Angels, than his owne perſon; And certainely that which was his part, hee hath performed; hee hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the Law; and part of the Legall puniſhment, is this temporall reuenge: For vs therefore, to giue hands to them in this, it were no better than perfidious and ſhamefully traiterous. And if it be more than manifeſt, that this cannot be done, either by our owne torments inflicted, or good workes performed (how penall ſoeuer) how much leſſe ſhall it be effected by others? There is none of the Saints which will not iuſtly take vp that anſwere of the wiſer Virgins, There will not be enough for you, and for vs. But as Hierome ſaid well; There is no need of any great conuiction, where the opinion carries blaſphemy in the face.

SECTION XI.

Concerning Purgatory.

VPon this conceit of Satisfactions, depend thoſe other fables of Purgatory, and Indulgences; pleaſant ones both, and not vnworthy of a Satyre: whereof, ſo oft as I thinke, I cannot but remember the ſcornefull frumpe of Luther, alluding to that of the Prophet, Domine non poſſum veſci ſtercore humano: yet if they had onely doubtfully and problematically commended their Purgatory to the Church, we might eaſily haue fauoured them with a conniuence, although you cannot ſay, whether it would haue beene more worthy to ſet the ſpleene on worke for laughter, or the bowels for commiſeration: But now when Bellarmine teaches vs, that it pertaines to the Catholike faith, and our Fiſher of Rocheſter will haue it altogether neceſſary to bee knowne and beleeued; we cannot entertaine his perſumptuous folly, without indignation. How miſerably the Scriptures are wreſted to this purpoſe if any Schoole boy could not eaſily ſee, he were worthy of whipping. As Hierome ſaid of the Heretikes of his time, They frame ſome vnfitting teſtimonies to their owne ſenſe; as if it were a worthy, and not rather an abhominable kinde of teaching, to depraue ſentences, and to dragge the Scriptures perforce, to their owne bent: Neither are the ancient Fathers better vſed in their citation; of which, Origen, Ambroſe, Hilary, Lactantius, Niſſen, Ierome, gaue intimation of a quite other Purgatory, from the Romiſh. Auguſtine ſpeakes of it, at peraduenture, waueringly, vncertainly; The reſt neuer dreamed of any at all: But yet, I miſtake it; Now I remember S. Plato is cited by Auſten and Euſebius, for the Patron of this opinion: and who knowes not, that S. Homer and S. Virgil are flat for it: yet this fire neuer began to burne out, but in Gregories time; and ſince that, the authority of the Alcoran hath not a little mended it: this is it that their Rocheſter ingenuouſly confeſſed of old, that this Purgatory flame came but lately to the knowledge of the Church: but for vs, that of S. Paul ſhall neuer be wrung from our hands: (ἐὰν ἡ ἐπίγειος) If, or when this earthly houſe ſhall be diſſolued, we haue a building, not made with hands, eternall, in the heauens: And when is this Saint Pauls (ἐὰν)? Saint Iohn ſhall interpret it; (ἀποθνήσκοντες ἀπάρτι) Thoſe that dye A modò, from henceforth: and when is this A modò? To day thou ſhalt be with me ſaith Chriſt; euen inſtantly vpon the egreſſe of the ſoule. Let them commend their ſoules to God, ſaith S. Peter: But what of that? that which doth vtterly quench out this fabulous fire, the counterfeit Salomon, (though true to the Papiſts) addes, The ſoules of the righteous are in the hand of God, and no torment ſhall touch them: Behold then, either the ſoules without a Purgatory; or, a Purgatory without paine: But what ſticke we at this? Let the Popiſh Doctors together agree among themſelues, of the fire of their Purgatory, of the torments of the Subiect, of the duration, of the executioners, of the condition of the ſoules there detained; and then afterwards let them looke for our aſſent: In the meane time, why is it not as free for vs as for Suarez, not to beleeue the walking Ghoſts of the dead, but metaphorically? or why may not we as well deny the ordinary common Purgatory, as Bellarmine may deuiſe a new one, more noble and eaſe-full than the firſt.

Concerning Indulgences or Pardons.

PVRGATORY is guilty of Indulgences, as their ROCHESTER confeſſes: Both of them were bred by ſuperſtition, and nurſed by couetouſneſſe; I touch theſe with a light hand onely; It is long ſince all ingenious Clients of Rome were aſhamed of this holy fraud; I cannot but commend Caſſander, which writes thus modeſtly and truly: The abatement or relaxation of Canonicall puniſhments, was of old called Indulgence; which at this day is drawne to all priuate ſatisfactions, and the full right of beſtowing them withdrawne from all other Biſhops, to the Biſhop of Rome alone. About the vſe and practiſe whereof, all good men haue deſired a correction and moderation; as of things, which being hitherto ill handled, haue giuen the chiefe occaſion of this breach in the Church: Here therefore it were to be wiſhed, that the Popes would yeeld ſomething to the Publike peace. Thus farre Caſſander: With whom agrees Polydore Virgil; both of them more worthy of a blacke cole, than their honeſt Rocheſter, whom Gregory of Valence hath ſo foulely branded. Neither hath there wanted ſome of their own (as Bellarmine witneſſeth) which haue called both the treaſure of the Church, and Pardons into queſtion; neither haue there wanted thoſe which haue boldly and flatly denied them either to bee of vſe, or to bee at all: And indeed who, that is not too much intoxecate with the potions of that Harlot, can endure, that whilſt the imputation of Chriſt merits to the iuſtifying of a ſinner, applyed by God to vs, is euery where a common ſcoffing-ſtocke to theſe men, yet that the merits and ſufferings of holy men, out of a certaine common treaſure, ſhould by a man bee imputed to men, for the deliuerance of their ſoules from torment? Who can abide that any mortall man ſhould ouer-ſatisfie God for his ſinnes? Who can abide the prodigall grants, and ſhamefull Marts of their Pardons? Who can endure to heare, that to the careleſſe mumbling ouer of ſome ſhort prayers (for if we beleeue their Caſuiſts, there is no great need of any intention of minde, of any ſpeciall deuotion) there ſhould bee granted by Iohn 22. a Pardon for no leſſe than a million of yeeres? Who can endure (ſince by their owne confeſſion, this fire muſt laſt but till the conflagration of the World) that yet in one little Booke there ſhould be tendred vnto credulous poore ſoules, Pardons of but eleuen thouſand thouſands of yeeres? What ſhould we make many words of this? There is now lying by me a worme-eaten Manu-ſcript, with faire Rubrickes, in which, beſides other abſurd and blaſphemous promiſes, there is power giuen to one little prayer to change the paines of hell (due perhaps to him that ſayes it) into Purgatory; and after that againe, the paines of Purgatory into the ioyes of Heauen: Bellarmine had wiſely reſpected his owne reputation, if hee had giuen his voice according to that which he confeſſeth to haue beene the iudgement of ſome others; That theſe like Buls were not giuen by the Popes, but lewdly deuiſed by ſome of his baſe Queſtuaries for an aduantage: But that which he ſhould excuſe, hee defends. What ingenuity or ſhame is to be expected of Ieſuites? and how cleane hath an old Parrot (as he ſaid of old) forgotten the wand? Who may abide this vniuſt and inhumane acceptation of perſons? that the wealthier ſort, may by their purſes redeeme this holy treaſure of the Church, and by money deliuer the ſoules of themſelues and their friends from this horrible Priſon, while the needy Soule muſt be ſtill frying in that flame, without all hope of pardon, or mature relaxation, vntill the very laſt Iudgement day? Laſtly, who can endure, that whiles it is in the power of Chriſts Vicar to call miſerable ſoules out of this tormenting fire (which hell it ſelfe is ſaid to exceed onely in the continuance) yet that he ſhould ſuffer them to lie howling there, and moſt cruelly broyling ſtill, and not mercifully beſtow on them all the heapes of his treaſure, as the ſpirituall ranſome of ſo many diſtreſſed ſpirits? A wretched man is he (as Ambroſe ſaid of the rich man) which hath the power to deliuer ſo many ſoules from death, and wants the will: Why hath God giuen him this faculty of Indulgences, if hee would not haue it beneficiall to Mankinde? and where the Owner of the houſe will bee bountifull, it is not for the Steward to bee niggardly; Let that Circe of Rome keepe theſe huskes for her hogges.

SECTION XIII.

Concerning the diſtinction of Veniall and Mortall ſinnes.

PArdons doe both imply and perſuppoſe that knowne diſtinction of Mortall and Veniall ſinne, which neither hath God euer allowed, neither (whiles hee gaineſayes it) will euer the Proteſtants: That there are certaine degrees of euill wee both acknowledge and teach; ſo as we may here iuſtly tax the diſhoneſty and ſhameleſneſſe of Campion, Dureus, Coccius, and the Monkes of Burdeaux, who haue vpbraided vs with the opinion of a certaine Stoicall and Iouinianiſh parity of ſinnes; yea Bellarmine himſelfe hath already done this kinde office for vs. Some offences are more hainous than other; yet all in the malignitie of their nature, deadly: As of poyſons, ſome kill more gently, and lingringly, others more violently and ſpeedily, yet both kill. Moreouer, if wee haue reſpect vnto the infinite mercy of God, and to the obiect of this mercy, the penitent and faithfull heart, there is no ſinne, which (to borrow the word of Prudentius) is not veniall; but in reſpect of the Anomy or diſorder, there is no ſinne which is not worthy of eternall death. Euery ſinne is a Viper; there is no Viper (if we regard the nature of the beſt) but kils whom ſhe bites; but if one of them ſhall haply light vpon the hand of Paul, ſhe is ſhaked into the fire, without harme done: Let no man feare that harmfull creature euer the leſſe, becauſe he ſees the Apoſtle ſafe from that poyſon. So is ſinne to a faithfull man; Saint Iohns word is, All ſinne is (ἀνομία) Tranſgreſſion of the Law; Saint Pauls word is, The wages of ſinne is death; Put theſe two together, and this conceit of the naturall pardonableneſſe of ſin, vaniſhes alone.

1 Ioh. 3. 4. Rom. 6.

Our Rhemiſts (ſubtill men) can no more abide this propoſition conuerted, than themſelues: All ſinne indeed (ſay they) is anomia, a trangreſſion of the Law; but euery tranſgreſſion of the Law is not ſinne: The Apoſtle therefore himſelfe turnes it for vs: All vnrighteouſneſſe (ſaith he) is ſinne: But euery (ἀνομία) is vnrighteouſneſſe, ſaith Auſten vpon the place, for the Law is the rule of righteouſneſſe, therefore the preuarication of the Law is vnrighteouſneſſe: Yea, their very owne word ſhall ſtop their owne mouth; for how is ſinne vniuocally diſtinguiſhed into Veniall and Mortall, if the Veniall be no ſinne? and the wages of euery ſinne is death. That therefore which the Papiſts preſume to ſay, that this kinde of ſinne deſerues pardon, in it ſelfe (vnleſſe they will take the word merit, catachreſtically, with Stapleton:) And that which Bellarmine and Nauarus adde, that Veniall ſinnes are not againſt, but beſide the Law: and laſtly, That which Franciſcus à Victoria writes, that a Biſhops bleſſing, or a Lords Prayer, or a knocke on the breſt, or a little holy water, or any ſuch like ſlight receipt, without any other good motion of the heart, is ſufficient to remit Veniall ſinne, is ſo ſhamefully abhorring from all piety, and iuſtice, that theſe open bands, both of nature and ſinne, muſt be eternally defied of vs. It is an old, and as true a rule, Eaſineſſe of pardon giues incouragement to ſinne : And beſide, what manner of ſinnes doe they put in the ranke of Venials? Drunkenneſſe, adultery, angry curſes, or blaſphemies; couetouſneſſe: yea, ſtealing, lying, curſing of parents, (horrible offences) ſhroud themſelues (with them) vnder this plauſible title of veniall; He muſt needs be ſhameleſly wicked that abhorres not this licentiouſneſſe. Surely Socrates the Hiſtorian prophecied (I thinke) of theſe men: There are ſome (ſaith he) that let goe whoredome as an indifferent matter, which yet ſtriue for an holy-day, as for their life. The ordinarie, and not ſlight Controuerſie (as Caſſander thinketh) of the name, nature, condition, puniſhment of the firſt ſin, as Chryſoſtome calls it, I willingly omit; Neither doe I meddle with their Euangelicall perfection of vowes, nor the dangerous ſeruitude of their raſh and impotent Votaries, nor the inconueniences of their Monkerie: which yet are ſo great and many, that the elect Cardinals of Paul the third, doubted not with ioynt conſent to affirme, All the Orders of Couents we thinke fit to be aboliſhed; but, for the condition of that ſingle and ſolitary life, let that be done, which Caſſander, and Clingius the Franciſcan aduiſe, in this caſe; that is, Let all falſe conceit, and prepoſterous confidence bee remoued from it, that the truſt, which ſhould onely be put in the merit of Chriſt, bee not placed vpon theſe courſes: and let no man thinke, that hereby he deſerues righteouſneſſe, remiſſion, grace; and laſtly, (which I adde) remoue but idleneſſe, ſuperſtition, neceſſitie, from this kinde of life, and we doe not, we will not diſallow it: Neither doe we take our Colledges for any other than certaine ſacred (ἀσκητήρια) monaſticall Academies, wherein according to the precept of Pelagius the Pope, we may be maturely fitted for theſe holy ſeruices of God, and his Church: ſuch were the Monaſteries of the Ancient; inſomuch as Poßidonius can witneſſe, that Saint Auſten, out of one little houſe, ſent forth ten labourers into the harueſt of the Church.

Section XIIII.

Concerning to Canon of the Scripture.

NOw, (leſt I be too tedious) it is time for mee, from theſe points, which doe directly concerne our ſelues, to haſten vnto thoſe, which do more cloſely touch the Maieſtie of God, and doe, as it were, ſend plaine challenges into heauen. And thoſe do, either reſpect the Scripture which is his expreſſed word, or Chriſt which is his naturall and ſubſtantiall Word, or laſtly, the worſhip due vnto his Name.

And firſt, the Scripture complaines iuſtly of three maine wrongs offered to it: The firſt, of addition to the Canon; The ſecond, of detraction from the ſufficiencie of it; The third, of hanging all the authoritie thereof vpon the ſleeue of the Church; For of that corrupt Tranſlation of Scripture, which the Trent-Diuines haue made onely, and fully authenticall, I forbeare purpoſely to ſpeake; although it were eaſie to ſhew (that which Reuchline, following the ſteps of Hierome, hath auerred) That the Hebrewes drinke of the Well-head, the Greekes of the ſtreame, and the Latines of the puddle: neither will I ſo much as touch the iniurious inhibition of thoſe holy bookes, to the Laity. Who can endure a piece of new cloth to bee patched vnto an old garment? Or what can follow hence, but that the rent ſhould bee worſe? Who can abide, that againſt the faithfull information of the Hebrewes, againſt the cleere Teſtimonies of Melito, Cyril, Athanaſius, Origen, Hilary, Hierom, Ruffinus, Nazianzen, againſt their owne Doctors both of the middle, and lateſt age, ſix whole bookes ſhould, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be vnder pain of a curſe, imperiouſly obtruded vpon God & his Church? glings, others bloudy ſelfe-murders, other lying fables, and others heatheniſh rites, hot without a publike applauſe in the relation: Theſe indeed, Caietan, ingenuouſly, as his faſhion is, (according to that he had learned of Hierome, would perſwade vs to haue beene admitted onely by the Ancients, into the Canon of Manners, not of Faith. And ſurely there be many precepts in Syracides, the counterfeit Salomon, and Eſdras, which ſauour of excellent wiſedome; but I wonder what kinde of good manners can be learned from ſuch like hiſtories, euen by thoſe Nouices, to whom Athanaſius bequeaths theſe bookes! Well may I ſay of theſe, as that Chian ſeruant of his Maſter, (which ſold his wine, and dranke his lees) while they haue good, they ſeeke for naught: But let theſe bookes (how queſtionable ſoeuer to Epiphanius) be all ſacred, let them be (according to the meaning of the councell of Carthage, and of Auſten ſo oft cited, to this purpoſe) after Canonicall; yet what man or Angel dare preſume to vndertake to make them diuine? Wee know full well, how great impietie it is to a father vpon the God of heauen the weake conceptions of an humane wit; neither can we be any whit moued with the idle cracke of the Tridentine curſe, whiles we heare God thundring in our eares, If any man adde vnto theſe words, God ſhall adde vnto him the plagues written in this book.

Of the Inſufficiencie of Scripture.

NEither know I, whether it be more wickedly audacious, to faſten on God thoſe things which he neuer wrote, or to weaken the authority, and denie the ſufficiencie of what he hath written: The Papiſts doe both. We affirme (ſaith Bellarmine) that there is not expreſſely contained in Scriptures, all neceſſary doctrine, either concerning faith, or manners: And the Tridentine Fathers gaue charge, that Traditions be receiued with no leſſe Pietie and Veneration, than the Bookes of Scripture.

Vnwritten Truths (ſaith our wittie Chancellour, More) are equiualent to the Word of God: What place is there for peace? There are, we confeſſe, certaine things of a middle nature, indifferent rites, wherein much muſt be yeelded to the Church, much to Traditions: but that thoſe things which are ſimply neceſſary to ſaluation (whether to be knowne, or to be done) ſhould not be found in the holy Scriptures, either in their words, or in their ſenſe, as Aquinas diſtinguiſhes, we iuſtly hold abſurd, and with Eraſmus, contrary to all true diuinitie: Some Conſtitutions for publike order, are from the Church; but all neceſſary determinations of faith, are to be fetcht from the voyce of God; This is as Niſſen truely commends it, the right and euen rule of life: The law of God is perfect, ſaith Dauid; yea, and makes perfect, ſaith Paul: And what can be added to that which is already perfect? or what perfection can there be, where ſome neceſſary points are wanting; yea, (if we may beleeue Hoſius) the greateſt part?

Or, is that perhaps more vncertaine, which is faithfully committed to writing, than that which is carried about by the flying rumors of men, and by this ayrie conueiance deriued vnto Poſteritie? What a thing is it (as Irenæus wiſely ſayd) that we ſhould leaue the voyce of the Lord, and his Apoſtles, and attend to theſe tatlers, that talke neuer a true word? Or if this be fitting, how vainly haue you ſpent your labors, O all yee Regiſters of God, Prophets, Apoſtles, Euangeliſts? and as he ſaid of the ointment, To what purpoſe was all this waſte? Theſe Paradoxes are pernicious to the Church, and ſhamefully dirogatory from the glory, both of the wiſedome, and goodneſſe of God: Hold theſe, who dare. Surely, we can neuer abide that thoſe two markes of Heretikes which Irenæus long ſince ſet downe (namely, not to reſt in the bare authority of Scripture, and to vaunt of other Traditions) ſhould both of them be iuſtly branded on our ſides.

Of the authority of Scripture.

BVt this is yet moſt ſhamefully iniurious, to denie vnto the Word of God, credit of it ſelfe; and ſo to hang the Scriptures vpon the Church, that they muſt needs begge all their authority from the voices of men. Honeſt Eckius in his reuiſed, and corrected Enchiridion: The Scripture (ſaith he) is not authenticall without the authoritie of the Church: To which as ſome golden and oracular ſentence, there is added in the margin, a glorious and inſulting applauſe, An Achilles for the Catholiks. I let paſſe the blaſphemies of Hermannus, and Hoſius, perhaps (as Iunius conſtrues it) in the name of Swinkfeldius: I paſſe ouer the horrible impiety of that ſhameleſſe gloſſe, which teaches that Salomons Text borrowes his credit from the Popes canonization: Bellarmine alone ſhall ſpeake for all; who going about to ſupport the number of ſeuen Sacraments by the authority of the Tridentine Counſell (for this is euer their laſt hold:) The ſtrength (ſaith he) of all the Ancient Counſels and of all opinions, depends vpon the authority of the preſent Church; And a little before; If we take away the authoritie of the preſent Church, and of the preſent Counſell (of Trent,) the decrees of all other Counſels, and the whole Christian faith may bee called into doubt, and queſtion. O miſerable, and miſerably ſtaggering ſoules of the Papiſts! How many not perſons only, but whole kingdomes, and thoſe (as the Romaniſts themſelues confeſſe, and bewaile) mighty and flouriſhing, amongſt themſelues, doe yet ſtill reſolutely reiect all the authority of that Tridentine Counſell? The whole Chriſtian faith? All doctrines & opinions? What, euen thoſe which are written by the finger of God? thoſe that are indited by the holy Ghoſt? What is this elſe, but to make God a ſlaue to men; and to arraigne the Maker of heauen and earth, at the barre of humane iudgment? God will be God; the Scripture of God will be it ſelfe, in ſpight of Rome, Trent, Hell: And vnleſſe we hold this, we can haue no peace with God; vnleſſe we denie it, no peace with the Romaniſts.

THeſe errors concerne the Scriptures; thoſe which follow, concerne either Chriſts perſon, or his offices: I let paſſe that Idle brabble, (as Bellarmine himſelfe iudges it) which the Popiſh Cenſors haue vniuſtly rayſed about the Sons Godhead of himſelfe; and inſiſt vpon waightier quarrels; I would that exploded opinion of Tranſubſtantiation, and (which is the root of it) the Multi-preſence of Chriſts body, did not vtterly ouerthrow the truth of his Humanity. Good God! Is it poſſible (as Auerroes ieſted of old) that Chriſtians ſhould make themſelues a God of bread? That any reaſonable man can beleeue, that Chriſt carried his owne body in one of his hands, that he raught it forth to bee eaten by thoſe holy gheſts of his, which ſaw him preſent with them, and heard him ſpeaking to them, both whiles they were eating him, and when they had eaten the ſacred morſell? That the ſelfe ſame Sonne of man ſhould at once both deuoure his whole ſelfe, and yet ſhould ſit whole and entire at the Table with them? That the glorious body of Chriſt ſhould be carried through the vncleane paſſages of our mawes; and either be there turned into the ſubſtance of our body; or (cōtrary to that the Spirit ſaid of old, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thine holy One to ſee corruptiō) ſhould bee ſubiect to putrifaction, or vaniſh to nothing, or returne into that heauen, wherein it was, ere it returned, while it returned: or laſtly ſhould be eaten with Mice (deuout and holy Vermine) or perhaps mixed with poiſon, to the Receiuer? What Monſters of follies are theſe? How mad, yea, how impious is this obſtinacie of fooliſh men, that they will ouer-turn the very principles of nature, the order of things, the Humanity of their Sauiour, the truth of the Sacrament, the conſtant iudgement of Scripture, and laſtly, the very foundations of all Diuinity; and confuſedly iumbell heauen & Earth together, rather then they will (where neceſſitie requires it) admit but of a tropicall kind of ſpeach, in our Sauiours conſecration; whiles in the meane time the whole Reuerend Senate of the Fathers cries out, & redoubles the names of Symboles, Types, Signes, Repreſentation, Similitude, Figures, & what-euer word may import a borrowed ſenſe; notwithſtanding all the indignation of Heauen, all the ſcorne of Pagans, all the Reluctation of the Church? This Letter killeth, as Origen truly ſpeakes: Now what likelihood is there, here of agreement? That the true body of Chriſt is truely offered, and truly receiued in the Sacrament, which of vs hath not euer conſtantly taught, and defended? But how is this? not by any bodily touch, as Cyrill and Ambroſe ſay well, but by our faith. That it ſhould be Corporally, Carnally, Orally preſent, and torne in pieces with our teeth (as good Pope Nicholas cauſed Berengarius to ſay, and our Allen hath followed him vnbidden) hath euer ſeemed impious to vs, and (as Auſten iudges it) no leſſe then flagitious.

Concerning the Multi-preſence of Chriſts body.

BVt this ſleeueleſſe tale of Tranſubſtantiation, was ſurely brought both into the world, and vpon the Stage, by that other Fable of the Multi-preſence of Chriſts body: neither know I, whether I ſhould preferre for madneſſe, and ſophiſticall coozenage. That the ſame body of Chriſt ſhould bee in a thouſand places at once of this ſublunary World, whiles yet it is in the meane time intire in Heauen: That the whole body of Chriſt ſhould lie hid in a little thinne Wafer, yet ſo, that the parts and members thereof ſhould not one run into another, but continue diſtinct, and ſeuerally diſpoſed amongſt themſelues, and haue a ſhape and order agreeable to a mans body (which are Bellarmines owne words) it doth not onely exceed reaſon, but faith: Neither doe they ſay now (as of old) Behold here is Chriſt, or there; but (which is much worſe) Behold Chriſt is both here, and there: That receiued Axiom of the Schoole is of an eternall Truth: The numericall vnity of a finite thing cannot ſtand without continuity. Who can chooſe but be aſhamed of the Ieſuites here? The very places in which Chriſts body is, (ſaith Bellarmine) are diſcontinued; yea, and the body of Chriſt it ſelfe is diuided from it ſelfe, in reſpect of place, but not in reſpect of his proper ſubſtance, or quantity; As if there could be any diuiſion of a materiall ſubſtance, but by bounds of place? As if quantity were not both bounded, and meaſured by place alone? As if there were not an vndoubted relation of the place to the thing placed: But now, this doth not belong to Chriſt onely. S. Xauier, in our Age (one of Loyalaes brood) was ſeene at once, both in the Ship, and in the Boat; Turſellian reports it; vnto this fabulous Saint, and his Fellow-fabuler, the Reporter, I cannot deuiſe to ſet a better match, then that Plautine Amphitrio: Dareſt thou ſay thou fond Slaue, that which neuer man yet ſaw (nor indeed can be done) that one man ſhould at the ſame time, be in two places at once?

See now either Xauier is euery where, or elſe the carkaſſe of a Frier is more ſubtle then the nature of an Angell. To conclude, either Aquinas is falſe, or the Papiſts Vbiquitaries. How ouer-bold are the Ieſuites, the Patrones of this Multipreſence? Bellarmine, ſcorning the modeſty of Thomas, Egidius, Carthuſian, Capreolus; Becauſe (ſaith he) we thinke that the body of Chriſt may be in many places at once, locally, and viſibly, therefore we ſay, and hold, that the ſame body may be circumſcriptiuely and definitiuely in more places at once: For, that a body may bee circumſcriptiuely in any place, nothing is required, but that it be fitly meeſured vnto that place: So as the bounds of the place and the thing placed, be both together; but, it is not required, that it ſhould not be elſe-where, as in another place: Thus he. What an abſurd oppoſition is this? To be circumſcribed in one place, and yet to be other-where; That the bounds of the place, and the thing placed ſhould be but one, and the places a thouſand; that a thing ſhould be fitly commeaſured by one place, and yet be in almoſt infinite: That another remote place ſhould leſſe hinder circumſcription, then a part of the next place: What is to be mad, if this be to be wiſe? who cannot but laugh at the wiſe folly of theſe men, as Irænæus ſaid of the Valentinians?

But I willingly heare that of Chryſoſtome; To conceiue of diuine things by Philoſophy, is no other, then to take out a red-hot Iron with our fingers, and not with tongs. And, that of Auguſtine, Yeeld GOD able to doe ſomething, which thou art not able to vnderſtand: It is reported that Ariſtotle miſ-led Ætius the Heretike, into that filthy error of Arrius; and Tertullian hath taught vs, that all Hereſies are ſuborned by Philoſophy. What hath Athens to doe with Hieruſalem: the Academy with the Church? Away with Arguments where faith is in queſtion, as Thomas ingenuouſly ſayes out of Ambroſe: But what is all this to vs? It is well yet, and I doe heartily congratulate it to our men, that the idle Tale of Surius concerning Melancton, & Caroloſtadius and other Proteſtants, abandoning of all philoſophy (wherewith yet Binius pleaſed himſelfe of late) is thus hiſſed out of countenance, and vaniſhed; Belike now, the reformed Doctors are Philoſophers, but too much: For vs, wee doe eaſily grant that many things are done, which we cannot vnderſtand; but theſe things we grant not, becauſe wee vnderſtand they cannot be done: God hath abſolute power (as Thomas ſpeakes truly) ouer the whole nature of the creature; but not ſo, as that hee ſhould cauſe it to be, and not to be, at once: This (as Sadeel ſayes wittily) Deus potenter non poteſt: The obiect of Gods power (as the Ieſuites Schoole willingly confeſſes) is whatſoeuer implies not a contradiction in it ſelfe; Now, that the ſelfe ſame body ſhould ſit downe and not ſit downe; ſhould be viſible and inuiſible; diuiſible and continued, and yet diſcontinued and indiuiſible: To be all here, to be all elſewhere; to be here greater, there leſſe: To be one, and many: the ſame, and diuers; to depart, and not to depart; to bee contained in Heauen, and not to be contained: to be a quantity without ſpace, to be meaſured by, and fitted to a place, and not to take vp any place: To be accidents, and yet not to be inherent: To be formerly, yet to be made: To be made, and not to be made, To be otherwiſe in places, then in a place: To be a true body, and yet to be ſpiritually: That Boy were well worthy of whipping that cannot diſcerne and confeſſe manifeſt contradictions. But what doe I ſpend time in this thorny Diſcourſe: This one word ſhall ſhut, and ſumme vp all: That this wicked paire of opinions offers plaine violence to the true humanitie of Chriſt; neither can euer, Saluâ fide, be reconciled with the Euangelicall Truth.

SECTION XIX.

Concerning the Sacrifice of the Maſſe.

THe Prieſtly Office of Chriſt is not a little impeached by the dayly Oblation of the Miſſall Sacrifice, and the number of Mediators. For the firſt: That in this Sacred Supper there is a Sacrifice (in that ſenſe wherein the Fathers ſpoke) none of vs euer doubted: but that is then, either Latreuticall (as Bellarmine diſtinguiſhes it not ill) or Euchariſticall: That is here (as Chryſoſtome ſpeakes) a remembrance of a Sacrifice, that is, as Auguſtine interprets it, a memoriall of Chriſts Paſſion, celebrated in the Church, and from this ſweet commemoration of our Redemption, there ariſes another Sacrifice, the Sacrifice of praiſe: and from thence a true Peace-offering of the Chriſtian ſoule: Theſe three Sacrifices offer themſelues to vs here: but for any propitiatory Sacrifice, vnleſſe it be (as the Gloſſe interprets it) repreſentatiuely, I finde none, none Eſſentiall: none (as the Tridentines labour to perſwade) true and proper; neither indeed can there be. For, what? Doth the Prieſt offer the ſame that Chriſt hath offered, or another? If another; then not propitiatory; for onely Chriſt is our Propitiation: If the ſame, then not an vnbloody Sacrifice: for Chriſts Sacrifice was a bloody one: Then, the naturall Being of Chriſt ſhould againe bee deſtroyed: Then, the blood of the Mediator (which I abhorre to imagine) muſt be of a finite value and power: yea, Chriſt himſelfe did not ſacrifice on the Table, but on the Croſſe: For if the Sacrifice, which he offered in his Supper, were perfect, and fully propitiatory, what needed ἀνάμνησις τῆς θυσίας.

Trid.Cõ.Seſſ.22.

needed he to die afterward? wherefore was his blood ſhed vpon the Croſſe, which by his Tranſubſtantiated blood (not yet ſhed) had formerly redeemed the World? But if it be vnbloody, then it is not propitiatorie: for without ſhedding of blood (ſaith the Apoſtle) is no remiſſion. Or what oppoſition is there betwixt the order of Melchiſedec, and Aaron, betwixt Chriſt and the Prieſts of the old Law; if this Office doe equally paſſe, and deſcend in a long Pedigree of mortall Succeſſors? Or why were the legall Sacrifices of the Iewiſh Synagogue ſo oft repeated, but becauſe they were not perfect? and how can, or why ſhould that which is moſt abſolutely perfect, be reiterated?

Heb.9.22.

To conclude, what can either be ſpoken or conceiued more plaine, then thoſe words of God, Once offered, One Sacrifice, One Oblation? And yet theſe Popiſh Shauelings (Deuout men) take vpon them to crucifie, and ſacrifice Chriſt againe; and whiles they ſolemnely offer the Sonne of God vp vnto his Father, they humbly beſeech him, (in a religious blaſphemie) that he would be pleaſed to bleſſe, and accept that Oblation. It is not for vs, I cõfeſſe, to be ſo deuout: We will remember this holy Sacrifice of Chriſt (as Caſſander well aduiſes) and celebrate it with a thankfull heart, we wil not repeat it; we will gladly receiue our Sauiour, offered by himſelfe, to his Father, and offered to vs by his Father, we will not offer him to his Father: which one point whiles we ſticke at (as we needs muſt) we are ſtraight ſtricken with the Thunderbolt of the Anathema of Trent: Here can be therefore no poſſibilitie of peace.

SECTION XX.

Of the Number of Mediators, and the Inuocation of Saints.

IT doth not more belong to the Prieſthood of Chriſt, that hee offered himſelfe once for vs (a ſpotleſſe Sacrifice) vpon the Altar of his Croſſe, then that he daily offers to his Father, the incenſe of our Praiers, on the Altar of Heauen. As therefore many Sacrifices, ſo many Mediators, plainly ſeeme to put Chriſt out of Office. Neither indeed hath the number of Interceſſors more increaſed in this old Age of the World, then the impiety of imploring them: For the modeſter iudgement of the former Schooles, ſo framed to it ſelfe a diſtinction of Meditaion, that it challenged one kinde thereof as proper onely to Chriſt, thinking the other might be imparted vnto Saints: but our late Doctors (wilfully breaking the barres both of Logicke and Diuinitie) haue raſhly incroached vpon all the Offices of a Mediator; and whatſoeuer might by any right belong to an Agent for peace, all that (if not more) haue they attributed to the Saints. Hereupon one ſayes to the bleſſed Virgin, O Sauioreſſe, ſaue me: Another, Obtaine thou pardon, apply grace, prepare glory for me. Others (if we may beleeue Caſſander) famous Diuines haue ſaid, That God hath tranſlated one halfe of his Kingdome, which conſiſts of Mercy, to the bleſſed Virgine Marie; reſeruing the other halfe of Iuſtice, to himſelfe: Others, that we may appeale from the Barre of Gods Iuſtice, to Maries Court of Mercy: Others haue ſo compared their Francis with Chriſt, that (I tremble to ſpeake it) whether of theſe was the typicall Ieſus, might ſeeme queſtionable to the Reader: Here the holy Muſe of Turſelline.

Lib. de Beatit. Sanct.c.15.Caſſ. in Conſ.Ca de. inuocat.Sanct. The ſame is confeſſed by Luth.Oecol. Melanct. Brent. ſee Mort. Appeal. l.2.13,ſ.1.

If all theſe were not openly approoued by the holy Cenſors of the Romane Church (ſeuere Controulers of manners) yea, by the voices of their owne Popes: If at this day (witneſſe the Muſes of Bentius, and Bonarcius) the Ieſuites did not both ſpeake, and write thus : But let vs leaue theſe bold impieties (if you will) to their Bernardines, Antonines, Bartlemewes of Piſa, Turcellines; bring vs foorth their more ſober Diuines, Polydores, Caſſanders, Viues : Euen their opinions will not downe with vs, which teach that the Saints are in any wiſe to bee prayed vnto. Indeede, the Proteſtants ſay (as Bellarmine grants) that the Saints pray for vs; but, onely in a generality : Bucer ſaid truly, that the Saints haue great loue to their militant brethren; great deſire of their ſaluation; and ſo doubtleſſe haue the Angels : But muſt we therefore ſingle out any one of thoſe bleſſed Spirits to ayde vs, to ſue for vs in the Court of Heauen ? GOD forbid : for vpon what faith muſt theſe prayers of ours bee grounded ? vnleſſe perhaps (as Hoſius ſaith) wee muſt beleeue in the Saints alſo ? yea, how ſure are we, that none of the Saints can either ſearch the heart, the fountaine of our Prayers, or at once heare tenne thouſand of their Suppliants, diſtant in place from each other; yea further, if (as there ſhould bee no limits ſet to Religion) all the world ouer, deuout Clients ſhould at once iointly commend, and proſtrate themſelues humbly to ſome one Saint; it is not a ſwiftneſſe of nature (as Hierom contends) that would ſerue the turne; a true vbiquity (as Bellarmine confeſſes) muſt be required to the hearing of all thoſe prayers : What hinders now but that they, which of ſinfull men haue made Saints, ſhould of their Saints make Gods alſo? Beſides, which of the Prophets, which of the Apoſtles euer commanded this ? which of the Saints of the former world hath euer done it ? Or what other (if credit may bee giuen to Theodoret) did Saint Paul forbid, vnder the worſhip of Angels to his Coloſſians ? Or what was the Hereſie of the Collyridians, if this muſt goe for piety ? That rule of Epiphanius ſhall be euer a ſafe courſe for vs : Let Mary be honoured; but the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt worſhipped : Here is no feare of danger, but that wee may goe ſafely that GOD, which cals vs to him; and proſtrate our ſelues to his Chriſt, our Gracious Sauiour : None of the Saints can enuy God this Honour : none of them euer did either arrogate it to himſelfe, or ſuffer it to be giuen him : Neither is there any of them whom God euer allowed either to take it to himſelfe, or to impart it to others, or to accept it quietly, being imparted to him by others. The Papiſts therefore may come to vs, when they will, with ſafety and aduantage; wee may not yeeld to them, without manifeſt danger of Idolatrous dotage.

Sect. XXI.

Of the Superſtitious, Heatheniſh, and ridiculous worſhip of the Papiſts.

BVt if any good natured Reconciler ſhall bee ſo indifferent, as to thinke theſe weightie points of difference not to be ſo hainous, but that euery one might ſecretly maintaine what opinion hee liſt, yet ſo, that (as Conſtantine ſaid to Alexander and Arrius) whiles the minds differ, the outward peace may be preſerued; Let him further vnderſtand, that the continuall practiſe of the religious worſhip, and ſeruice of God, will euer both raiſe and proclaime no leſſe hoſtilitie, than matter of iudgement: In our deuotions and publike exerciſes of Pietie, and places conſecrated to this vſe, there is nothing that can offend either the eye, or the minde of a Papiſt; except the bareneſſe of our walls, and the Apoſtolicall ſimplicity of Ceremonies: An eaſie fault; and ſuch, as it is no praiſe of their ingenuitie to winke at; For, long ſince haue thoſe clauſes of our publike Liturgie beene purpoſely blotted out, which in our Grand-fathers dayes did but lightly touch this galled ſore of Poperie. Socrat.l.1.cap.4.

But contrariwiſe, in the Popiſh Churches, there is ſcarce any thing either ſaid, or done, whereof we can with a cleere and vnwounded conſcience, be either partakers or witneſſes: Their very wals kill vs dead; but their ridiculous or demonical ſeruice, who can endure? We honour (as we ought) the deare and happy memory of the Saints; and chiefly, the Leader of that heauenly Quire, the bleſſed Virgin, the Mother of God; and whatſoeuer ſhe can thinke, not to diſhonourable to her ſelfe, and her Lord, and Sauiour, we will moſt gladly giue it her to the full: Neither will we only glorifie God in his Saints (as Auguſtine hath taught Durand to ſpeake) but wee will magnifie the Saints (as opportunity ſerues) for their excellent graces, and worthy acts both in God and in themſelues; wee will admire, extoll, and (what wee may) imitate their ſingular conſtancie, faith, ſanctitie; as Sidonius ſaid of his Claudian;

No Tombe can either Soule or glory ſhroud. Sidon.in Epita. Claud. Mamert.

But, to digge vp their holy bones (that I may borrow Luthers word) out of their quiet graues, and to fall downe before theſe wormeaten Monuments of the Saints; to expect from them a diuine power, whether of cure, or of ſanctification; equally to reſpect Francis his Coule, Annaes Combe, Ioſephs Breeches, Thomaſes Shoee (as Eraſmus complaines) with the Sonne of God himſelfe, can ſeeme no better to vs, than an horrible impiety: Neither can we abide, either to deifie men, or to canonize beaſts; It ſeemes, that Cardinall could abide it well, in whoſe Garden is yet to be ſeene this Epitaph, which he wrote vpon his too-dearly-beloued Bitch:

This Tombe for thee (deare Bitch) I builded haue,
That worthier wert of Heauen, than a Graue. Poem.Illuſtr. Poet. Italorum.

Wee (prophane Huguenots) cannot skill of worſhipping Martins Boots, or Georges Scabbard, or Criſpins Paring-knife; or (which they ſay is kept in a certaine Towne of Liguria) the Tayle of that aſſe, which Chriſt rode vpon: or Rochs Mores in Scot. Orig.Pap.

Hall, J.

Dogge, or Antonies Swine; and ſurely, he had need of a very thicke Hide, that can doe this.

But, in earneſt, ſay wee ſhould yeeld theſe adorations to bee lawfull, and godly: What Macarius (amongſt ſo many woods of counterfeit trees) can ſhew vs the true Croſſe? or what Helena amongſt ſuch heaps, yea, Hils of Iron, can ſhew vs the true nayles? Aſſuredly, both theſe Iugglers ſmile one vpon another, while they ſhew theſe Relikes to their people; and now, euen the ſilly vulgar begins (not without indignation) to deſcrie this coozenage. To omit therefore theſe ridiculous tricks, and knauiſh conueyances of their ſhauelings; let vs in this caſe, appeale euen to Caſſanders owne moderation; who (hauing firſt honeſtly acknowledged the ancient complaints of Baſil, Ambroſe, Auguſtine, about the buſineſſe of theſe abuſes) goes on thus: It appeares (ſaith he) that in the latter times there hath beene too much giuen to the Relikes and Monuments of the Saints. So as euen good men, and thoſe which were zealouſly deuout, were growne to that paſſe, that they placed the ſumme of all Religion, in gathering together the Relikes of the Saints, & in garniſhing them richly with Gold and Pearles, and building ſumptuous Chappels and Temples to them: And againe, thoſe that were lewd and godleſſe, put all their confidence (though vaine and falſe) in the fooliſh and ſuperfluous worſhip of Relikes: wherefore in the Councell of Cabilon, thoſe are reprooued, who in a pretence of deuotion, goe on Pilgrimage to Rome, or Turon, or any other like places, as if they thought, that the frequenting of theſe holy Shrines, could both purge them from ſinne, and licence them to ſinne with impunitie. And vnto this, yet another miſchiefe hath beene added, that for couetouſneſſe ſake to intice the ſimple people, falſe Relikes haue beene deuiſed, and fained Miracles reported, and by thoſe Miracles, the Superſtition of the multitude was ſo fed, that they were rather taken vp with an admiration of the Wonders, then drawne to an holy imitation of the Saints: and many times by the ſubtletie, and illuſion of the Deuill, (abuſing the ſuperſtition of men) new Relikes were, by Dreames and Viſions, reuealed to the World, and by the operation of the ſame Deuill, Miracles ſeemed to be wrought, for the confirmation thereof: Thus ſaith Caſſander, like a true German, ſhall I ſay? or like a true Iſraelite? But wee, that haue beene better taught, dare freely, and confidently ſay of our ſelues, as Hierom profeſſed of old, in the name of all Chriſtians: So farre are wee from adoring the Relikes of Martyrs, that we worſhip neither Sunne, nor Moone, nor Angels, nor Archangels, nor Cherubin, nor Seraphin nor any name that is named either in the preſent World, or the future; leſt we ſhould ſerue the creature, rather than the Creator which is bleſſed for euer.

Caſſ. Conſult. de Reliq. Sanct.

Hier. ad Riparium aduerſ. Vigil.

Then, that from Relikes wee may deſcend to Images: Is it poſſible that we ſhould not be euer diſpleaſed with that franticke ſuperſtition of the Romiſh Church? That againſt the Tables of Gods Law, againſt the Inſtitutions of the Apoſtles, againſt the practiſe of the ancient Church, againſt the manifeſt Decrees of Councels, againſt the cleere Teſtimonies of Fathers, in defiance of God, and men, the Churches of Chriſtians ſhould bee no leſſe peſtered with Idols, than the Temples of the Heathen? That (as Ierome complained of old) the natiue beautie of the Church ſhould bee polluted with the filth of Paganiſme? That (which Euſebius iuſtly taxeth of madneſſe) there ſhould bee a viſible and bodily Image or repreſentation made of the Inuiſible and Spirituall God? That wee ſhould put our confidence in Agnus Dei, Graines, Tapers, Roſes, Swords, Enſignes, Bels, ridiculouſly (after their manner) inchanted? That by certaine Magicall Exorciſmes, the Deuill ſhould bee driuen out of thoſe Creatures, wherein he neuer was? Nay: let vs euen enter into league with Satan himſelfe, if wee ſhall giue either allowance, or conniuence to ſuch Diabolicall practiſes of will-worſhip.

Hier. Magno Oratori. Rom.

Lib. Sacr. Cerem.

I doe purpoſely forbeare to ſpeake of that prophane paradox of the ſufficiencie of the outward worke done, without good inward diſpoſitions; the idle mumbling vp of Prayers, in a forraine tongue; the number and vertue of Sacraments, the Sacrilegious mutilation of the Euchariſt, and a thouſand other Monſters both of Opinions, nions, and ceremonies : Theſe that I haue reckoned, are errors more than enow : And I would to God, thoſe which we haue here particularized, were not ſuch, that there is no remedy, but that we muſt needs eternally fall out either with God, or with Rome. Since therefore neither Truth can euer yeeld, nor Obſtinacy will yeeld ; let vs ſerue cheerfully vnder the colours of our Heauenly Leader, and both proclaime and maintaine an vnreconcilable warre with theſe Romiſh Hereſies.

SECT. XXII.

Of the Impoſsibility of the Meanes of Reconciliation.

AND now, ſince no wiſe man can ſuſpect of vs, that wee will euer grow to that height of madneſſe, as to runne perfidiouſly from the Standard of God, to the Tents of that Roman Antichriſt; Is there any hope, that the Papiſts will euer be drawne backe to the ſound and pure iudgement of the Primitiue Antiquity ? Oh, that God would vouchſafe this grace to the Chriſtian World, that wee could but comfort our ſelues with the hope of ſo great happineſſe !

What a ſight were this, how pleaſant, how worthy of God and his Angels, that (as it is ſaid of the Nouatian Faction, and the Orthodoxe of old) men, women, children of both parts, without all guile, and cloſe harbours of diſcontentment, ſhould mutually bring ſtones and matter to the building vp of this Temple of another (yet true) Reſurrection ! We will gladly ſpeake vnto them, and (if need be) vpon our knees in Cyprians words ; Sithence we may not come forth of the ſound and true Church of God, and come vnto you ; Let vs beſeech and intreat you, by whatſoeuer ſhould bee moſt deare vnto you, that you would returne to our fraternity, and into the boſome of that Mother Church, whence ye are reuolted ; and as he ſaid in Theocritus, yet at laſt bee perſwaded : we are both brothers of one blood ; why will you needs fight more againſt your ſelues, than your brethren ?

But alas, ſooner may God create a new Rome, than reforme the old : Yea needes muſt that Church put off it ſelfe, and ceaſe to be what it is, ere it can begin to be once againe what it was : for (as the Comicke Poet ſaid in the like) both ſubſtance, credit, fame, vertue, honour, haue at once forſaken her; and by long diſ-uſe haue left her worſe than naught : neither doe I ſee how theſe houſes can be repaired, but they muſt be pulled downe to the very foundations, and then built from the ground.

But if there be any likelihood of remedie, yet to be hoped for ; ſurely, it muſt needs come either from her ſelfe, or from others. Can it be firſt from her ſelfe, which obſtinately defends her errors, not onely with tongue and pen, but with fire and ſword too? which will not yeeld ſo much as that ſhe can erre ? which refuſed to amend thoſe notorious abuſes, which by the moderate verdict of her elect Cardinals, were condemned? and laſtly, which by the palpable flatteries of her laſt and worſt Paraſites the Ieſuites, is growne not ſecure onely, but prouder than euer ſhe was ? Can it be then from others ? How oft hath this beene indeuoured in vaine ? Rome may be ſacked and battered (as it hath often beene) by militarie forces ; but purged by admonitions, conuictions, cenſures, it will neuer be. I remember on this occaſion, what Siſinnius the Lector aduiſed Biſhop Nectarius in the like caſe : That he had euer found diſputations ſo farre from reconciling of Schiſmes, that they are ſtill wont to inflame the minds of heretikes to ſuffer contention. What then ? Can it be from her ſelfe and others ? Alas, how ſhould it ? vnleſſe either others had power, or her ſelfe had will to bee redreſſed. For certainly if there be any one ſparke of good hope yet aliue, it muſt be in the ayd and determination of a generall Councell ; and ſuch a Synod is no leſſe impoſſible, than reconciliation it ſelfe. For who ſhall call it ? who ſhall ſit Preſident in it ? who ſhall bee preſent, and giue their voices ? What ſhall be the rule of the deciſions ? what the order of execution ? Let them bring forth (if they will) the ſiſter, or the daughter of that their Tridentine aſſembly, who can hold from ſmiles and ſcorne ? Forſooth they would deale with vs (as Luther wittily ieſted of the ſummoning of this Councell by Paul the third) much like vnto them that mocke an hungry dogge with a cruſt and a knife ; who in ſtead of giuing him the bread, let him feele the haft: well may we reſolue with Nazianzen, to auoid al ſuch meetings of Biſhops, for that no ſuch Synod euer did good, but tended rather to the decay than aduantage of the Church : I remember Iſidore deriues the Latine word Concilium, à cilijs oculorum : for that all direct the ſight of their mindes into one center. There can therefore bee no Councell held by thoſe which profeſſe a generall and publike diſagreement of iudgement : In vaine ſhould we indeuour any ſuch courſe, vnleſſe euery one of them would reſolue to thinke of peace at home, and would perſwade his heart, laying aſide all preiudice, and wilful reſpects of faction, ingenuouſly to ſubmit himſelfe to the truth when it once appeares, and more to regard their ſoules, than their eſtates : For can wee thinke it equall (as things now ſtand) that the ſame parties ſhould be allowed, witneſſes, plaintiffes, defendants, Iudges in their owne cauſe ? Or ſhall we perhaps hope, that thoſe priuiledges which haue hitherto been trecherouſly and tyrannically vſurped by Papiſts, will now, vpon better aduiſement, be ingenuouſly giuen vp by them, and renounced ? or that they will, now at laſt, thunder and lighten Anathemaes againſt their owne heads ? Some fooles may hope for this, which are vnacquainted with that old verſe ſo common in the mouth and pen of Lipſius,

But for vs (vnleſſe Hee that doth wonders alone, by his ſtretched-out arme from heauen, ſhould mightily beyond all hope, effect this) we know too well that it cannot be done : Onely this one thing (which God hath promiſed) we doe verily expect, to ſee the day when the Lord Ieſus ſhall with the breath of his mouth deſtroy this lawleſs man, long ſince reuealed to his Church, and by the brightneſs of his glorious comming, fully diſcouer, and diſpatch him. Not onely in the meanes, and way, but in the end alſo, is Rome oppoſite to heauen : The heauen ſhall paſs away, by a change of quality, not an vtter deſtruction of ſubſtance : Rome, by deſtruction, not by change : Of vs therefore and them ſhall that old Bucolicke Verſe be verified :

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE MY SINGVLAR GOOD LORD,

EDVVARD Lord DENNY, Baron of Waltham.

Right Honourable:

If euer any man had reaſon to be in loue with the face of a forraine entertainement, thoſe are they, which were admitted to the attendance of the truly Generous and Honorable, Lord HAY, your moſt noble Sonne, in his late Embaſſage to France; in which number my vnworthineſſe was allowed to make one; who can therefore well witneſſe, that no man could either receiue more honour from a ſtrange Countrey, or doe more honour to his owne. What wanted there that might make men confeſſe themſelues more welcome than ſtrangers? Neither doubt I, but that after many ages, France it ſelfe will wonder at the bountifull expreſſions of her owne fauours. But whiles others were inioying the noble courteſies of the time, my thoughts entertained themſelues with ſearching into the proofe of that ordinarie Trauell, wherewith I ſaw men commonly affected; which I muſt needs confeſſe, the more I ſaw, the leſſe I liked. Neither is it in the power of any forraine munificence, to make me thinke ours any where ſo well as at home. Earthly commodities are no part of my thought: I looked (as I ought) at the ſoule; which I well ſaw, vſes not onely to gather no moſſe in this rolling, but ſuffers the beſt graces it hath to moulder away inſenſibly in ſuch vnneceſſary agitation. I haue now beene twiſe abroad: both times (as thinking my ſelfe worthy of nothing but neglect) I bent my eyes vpon others, to ſee what they did, what they got: my inquirie found our ſpirituall loſſe ſo palpable, that now at laſt my heart could not chuſe but breake forth at my hand, and tell my Countrymen of the dangerous iſſue of their curioſitie. I meddle not with the common iourneys to the minerall waters of the Spa; to which many ſicke ſoules are beholden for a good excuſe: who whiles they pretend the medicinall vſe of that ſpring, can freely quaffe of the puddle of popiſh ſuperſtition; poyſoning the better part, in ſtead of helping the worſe. Theſe I leaue to the beſt Phyſitian, Authoritie; which, if it may pleaſe to vndertake the cure, may perhaps ſaue as many Engliſh ſoules from infection, as that water cures bodies of diſeaſes. I deale onely with thoſe, that profeſſe to ſeeke the glory of a perfect breeding, and the perfection of that, which we call Ciuilitie, in Trauell: of which ſort I haue (not without indignation) ſeene too many loſe their hopes, and themſelues in the way; returning as empty of grace, and other vertues, as full of words, vanitie, miſ-diſpoſitions. I dedicate this poore diſcourſe to your Lo: as (beſides my daily renued obligations) congratulating to you the ſweet libertie and happy vſe of your home; who like a fixed ſtarre may well ouer-looke theſe planets, and by your conſtant ſetledneſſe, giue that aime to inferiour eyes, which ſhall bee in vaine expected from a wandring light. The God of heauen, to whoſe glory I haue entended this weake labour, giue it fauour in the ſight of his Church, and returne it backe, but with this good newes, that any one of the ſonnes of Iaphet is hereby perſwaded to dwell euer in the tents of Sem. Vnto that diuine protection, I humbly betake your Lo: iuſtly vowing my ſelfe

Your Lo: humbly deuoted in all faithfull and Chriſtian obedience,

QVO VADIS?

Sect. I.

IT is an ouer-rigorous conſtruction of the workes of God, that in moting our Iland with the Ocean he meant to ſhut vs vp from other Regions; For God himſelfe that made the Sea, was the Author of Nauigation, and hath therein taught vs to ſet vp a wooden bridge, that may reach to the very Antipodes themſelues: This were to ſeeke diſcontentment in the bounty of God, who hath placed vs apart, for the ſingularity of our happineſſe, not for reſtraint.

There are two occaſions wherein Trauell may paſſe, Matter of traffique, and Matter of State. Some commodities God hath confined to ſome Countries, vpon others he hath with a full hand powred thoſe benefits, which hee hath but ſprinkled vpon ſome. His wiſe prouidence hath made one Country the Granary, another the Celler, another the Orchard, another the Arſenall of their neighbours, yea of the remoteſt parts. The earth is the Lords, which he meant not to keep in his hands, but to giue; and he which hath giuen no man his faculties and graces for himſelfe, nor put light into the Sunne, Moone, Stars, for their owne vſe, hath ſtored no parcell of earth with a purpoſe of priuate reſeruation. Salomon would neuer haue ſent his Nauie for Apes and Peacocks, but yet held gold and timber for the building of Gods houſe, and his owne, worthy of a whole three yeares voyage: The Sea and Earth are the great Cofers of God; the diſcoueries of Nauigation are the keies, which whoſoeuer hath receiued, may know that he is freely allowed to vnlocke theſe cheſts of Nature without any need to picke the wards. Wiſe Salomons compariſon is reciprocall: A ſhip of Merchants that fetches her wares from farre is the good Huſwife of the Common-wealth; and if ſhee were ſo in thoſe blind Voyages of antiquity, which neuer ſaw Needle nor Card, how much more thrifty muſt ſhe needs be in ſo many helpes both of Nature and Art? Either Indies may be ſearched for thoſe treaſures, which God hath laid vp in them for their farre-diſtant owners; Onely let our Merchants take heed, leſt they goe ſo far, that they leaue God behind them; that whiles they buy all other things good cheape, they make not an ill match for their ſoules, leſt they end their proſperous aduentures in the ſhipwracke of a good conſcience.

Sect.

SECT. II.

AND for matter of policy, nothing can be more plaine than that our correſpondence with other Nations cannot poſſibly be held vp, without intelligence of their eſtate, of their proceedings; The neglect whereof were no other than to proſtrate our ſelues to the mercy of an hollow friendſhip, and to ſtand ſtill, & willingly lye open whiles we are plaid vpon by the wit of vntruſty neighbourhood. Theſe eyes and eares of State are neceſſary to the well-being of the head; In which number I doe not include thoſe priuate Inter-lopers intelligence, that lye abroad onely to feed ſome vaine Cameleons at home with the ayre of Newes, for no other purpoſe ſaue idle diſcourſe; but onely thoſe profitable Agents, whoſe induſtry either fitteth them abroad for publike imployment, or imployeth them after due maturity, in the fit ſeruices of the Common-wealth: neither my cenſure nor my direction reaches to either of theſe occaſions. It is the trauell of curioſity wherewith my quarrell ſhall be maintained: the inconueniences whereof my owne Senſes haue ſo ſufficiently witneſſed, that if the wiſe Parents of our Gentry could haue borrowed mine eyes for the time, they would euer learne to keepe their ſonnes at home, and not wilfully beat themſelues with the ſtaffe of their age: vpon them let my pen turne a little, as thoſe that are more than acceſſaries to this both priuate and publike miſchiefe.

SECT. III.

IT is the affectation of too early ripenes that makes them prodigall of their childrens ſafety and hopes: for, that they may be wiſe betimes, they ſend them forth to the world in the minority both of age and iudgement: like as fond mothers vſe to ſend forth their daughters on froſting, early in cold mornings (though into the midſt of a vaporous and foggy ayre) and whiles they ſtriue for a colour, loſe their health. If they were not blinded with ouer-weening and deſire, they could not but ſee that their vnſetlednes carries in it a manifeſt perill of miſcarriage: grant that no danger were threatned by the place, experience giues vs, that a weake limbde childe, if he be ſuffered to vſe his legges too ſoone, too much, lames himſelfe for euer: but if he walke in vneuen ground, he is no leſſe ſubiect to maimes than crookedneſſe. Doe they not ſee how eaſily a young twig is bowed any way? Doe they not ſee that the Midwife and Nurſe are wont to frame the griſtly head of the Infant to any faſhion? May not any thing be written vpon a blanke? And if they make choice of this age, becauſe it is moſt docible, and for that they would take the day before them, why do they not conſider, that it is therfore more docible of euill, ſince wickedneſſe is both more inſinuatiue and more plauſible than vertue, eſpecially when it meets with an vntutored Iudge; and ſeeing there is ſo much inequality of the number of both, that it is not more hard to find vertue, than to miſſe vice: Heare this then, ye careleſs Oſtriches, that leaue your eggs in the open ſand for the Sun to hatch, without the feare of any hoofe that may cruſh them in peeces, haue your ſtomacks reſolued to digeſt the hard newes of the ruine of your children? Do yee profeſſe enmity to your owne loynes? then turne them (as you doe) looſe to theſe dangers, ere they can reſiſt, ere they can diſcerne; but if yee had rather they ſhould liue and grow, beſtow vpon them the kindly heat of your beſt plumes, and ſhelter them with your own breſt and wings, till nature haue opened a ſeaſonable way to their owne abilities.

SECT. IIII.

YEA, let it be my iuſt complaint in this place, that in the very tranſplantation of our ſonnes to the ſafer ſoyle of our owne Vniuerſities, and Innes of Court, nothing is more preiudiciall than ſpeed. Perfection is the childe of Time; neither was there euer any thing excellent, that required not meet leiſure: but beſides, how commonly it is ſeene; that thoſe which had wont to ſwimme onely with bladders, ſinke when they come firſt to truſt to their own armes? Theſe Lap-wings that go from vnder the wing of their damme with the ſhell on their heads, runne wilde. If Tutors be neuer ſo carefull of their early charge, much muſt bee left to their owne diſpoſition; which if it leade them not to good, not onely the hopes of their youth, but the proofe of their age lies bleeding. It is true, that as the French Lawyers ſay merrily of the Normans, which by a ſpeciall priuiledge are reputed of full age at 21. yeares, whereas the other French ſtay for their fiue and twentieth, that Malitia ſupplet ætatem; ſo may I ſay of the yonglings of our time, that Precocity of vnderſtanding ſupplieth age & ſtature: but as it is commonly ſeene, that thoſe bloſſomes which ouer-runne the ſpring, and will be looking forth vpon a February-Sun, are nipped ſoone after with an Aprill-froſt when they ſhould come to the knitting: ſo is it no leſſe ordinary that theſe rathe-ripe wits preuent their owne perfection, and after a vaine wonder of their haſte, end either in ſhame, or obſcuritie. And as it thus fals out euen in our Vniuerſities (the moſt abſolute & famous Seminaries of the world) where the Tutors eye ſupplies the Parents; ſo muſt it needs much more, in thoſe free and honourable Innes (as they are called, for their libertie, Colledges for their vſe) of our Engliſh Gentry, wherin each one is his owne maſter in reſpect of his priuate ſtudy and gouernment. Where there are many pots boyling, there cannot but be much ſcumme, the concourſe of a populous city affords many brokers of villanie, which liue vpon the ſpoyles of young hopes, whoſe very acquaintance is deſtruction. How can theſe nouices that are turned looſe into the maine, ere they know either coaſt, or compaſſe, auoid theſe rockes and ſhelues, vpon which both their eſtates and ſoules are miſerably wracked? How commonly doe they learne to roare in ſtead of pleading; and in ſtead of knowing the lawes, learne how to contemne them? Wee ſee and rue this miſchiefe, and yet I know not how careleſſe we are in preuenting it. How much more deſperate muſt it then needs be to ſend forth our children into thoſe places which are profeſſedly infectious, whoſe very goodneſſe is either impiety, or ſuperſtitiō? If we deſired to haue ſons poyſoned with misbeleefe, what could we doe otherwiſe? Or what elſe doe thoſe Parents, which haue bequeathed their children to Antichriſtianiſme? Our late iourney into Fracne informed me of ſome ordinary factors of Rome, whoſe trade is the tranſporting and placing of our popiſh nouices beyond the ſeas; one whereof (whoſe name I noted) hath bin obſerued to carry ouer ſix ſeuerall charges in one yeare. Are we ſo fooliſh to go their way, whiles we intēd a contrary period? Doe we ſend our ſons to learne to be chaſte in the midſt of Sodome? The world is wide & open; but our ordinary trauell is ſouthward, into the iawes of danger: for ſo far hath Satans policy preuailed, that thoſe parts which are only thought worth our viewing, are moſt contagious; and wil not part with either pleaſure, or information, without ſome tang of wickednes. What can we plead for our confidence, but that there is an houſhold of righteous Lot in the midſt of that impure City; that there are houſes in this Iericho, which haue ſcarlet threds ſhining in their windowes, that in the moſt corrupted ayre of Popery, ſome well reformed Chriſtians draw their breath, & ſweeten it with their reſpiration? Bleſſed be God, that hath reared vp the towers of his Sion in the midſt of Babylon. We muſt acknowedge, not without much gratulation to the Goſpell of Chriſt, that in the very hotteſt climates of oppoſition, it findes many clients, but more friends; and in thoſe places, where authority hath pleaſed to giue more ayre to the truth, would haue had many more, if the Reformed part had happily continued that correſpondence in ſome circumſtances with the Roman Church, which the Church of England hath hitherto maintained. God is my record how free my heart is both frō partiality and preiudice. Mine eies and eares can witneſſe with what approofe and applauſe diuers of the Catholiques Royall (as they are tearmed) entertained the new-tranſlated Liturgy of our Church, as maruelling to ſee ſuch order and regular deuotion, in them, whom they were taught to condemne for hereticall. Whoſe allowances I wel ſaw, might with a little helpe haue been raiſed higher, from the practiſe of our Church to ſome points of our iudgement. But if true religion were in thoſe parts yet better

better attended, and our young Traueller could find more abetters, & examples, of pietie, on whom we might relie, yet how ſafe can it bee to truſt young eies with the view and cenſure of truth or falſhood in religion ? eſpecially when truth brings nothing to this barre, but extreame ſimplicity; and contrarily, falſhood, a gawdy magnificence, and proud maieſty of pompous ceremonies, wherewith the hearts of children and fooles are eaſily taken. That Curtizan of Rome (according to the manner of that profeſſion) ſets out her ſelfe to ſale in the moſt tempting faſhion; here want no colours, no perfumes, no wanton dreſſes; whereas the poore Spouſe of Chriſt can only ſay of her ſelfe I am blacke, but comely. When on the one ſide they ſhall ſee ſuch rich ſhrines, gariſh Altars, ſtately Proceſſions, when they ſhall ſee a Pope adored of Emperors, Cardinals preferd to Kings, Confeſſors made Saints. little children made Angels, in a word nothing not outwardly glorious: on the other ſide, a ſeruice without welt or gard, whoſe maieſtie is all in the heart, none in the face, how eaſily may they incline to the conceit of that Pariſian dame, who ſeeing the proceſſion of S. Genoueifue goe by the ſtreets, could ſay, (O que belle, &c.) How fine a religion is ours in compariſon of the Huguenots? Whereto muſt be added, that (ſuppoſing they doe not carry with them, but rather go to fetch the language of the place) ſome long time needs be ſpent, ere they can receiue any help to their deuotion; whiles in the meane ſeaſon, their vnthriuing intermiſſion is aſſayled with a thouſand ſuggeſtions: And who ſees not that this lucrum ceſſans (as the Ciuilians terme it) offers an open aduantage to a buſie aduerſarie?

Sect. VI.

IN a word, it hath beene the old prayſe of early riſing, that it makes a man healthfull, holy, and rich; whereof the firſt reſpects the body, the ſecond the ſoule, the third the eſtate: all fals out contrary in an early trauell. For health: The wiſe prouidence of God hath ſo contriued his earth, and vs, that he hath fitted our bodies to our clime, and the natiue ſuſtenance of the place vnto our bodies. The apparent difference of dyet (and of drinkes eſpecially) falling into ſo tender age, muſt needs cauſe a iarre in the conſtitution; which cannot in all likelihood but ſend forth diſtemper into the whole courſe of the enſuing life. The ſtreame runnes like the fountaine, and ſpeeds well, if at laſt, by many changes of ſoile it can leaue an ill quality behinde it: beſides that the miſ-gouernance of diet, whereto their liberty laies them open in the weakneſſe of their pupillage, cannot but be extremely preiudiciall. In this point let experience be conſulted with; her vnpartiall ſentence ſhall eaſily tell vs, how few young trauellers haue brought home, ſound and ſtrong, and (in a word) Engliſh bodies. As for holineſſe, we loſe our labour, if this diſcourſe proue not that it hath none ſo great enemy as timely trauell; at once doe we hazard to abandon God & our home: ſet an empty pitcher to the fire, it cracks preſently, whereas the full will abide boyling. It was the younger ſonne in the Goſpell, who therefore turnes vnthrift, becauſe he got his portion too ſoone into his hands, and wandred into a far countrey. The eye of the Parent, and the ferule of the maſter, is all too little to bring our ſonnes to good. Where then there is neither reſtraint of euill, nor helpes to grace, how ſhould their condition be other then hopeles? The ſoile doth much in many plants: the Perſian Hyoſcyamus if it be tranſlated to Egypt, proues deadly; if to Ieruſalem, ſafe and wholeſome: neither is it otherwiſe with ſome diſpoſitions, which may iuſtly curſe the place, as acceſſorie in their vndoing. Laſtly, for riches, not of the purſe, (which is not here thought of) but of the minde, what can be expected from that age, which is not capable of obſeruation, careleſſe of repoſition? whereof the one gets, the other keepes the treaſure of our vnderſtanding. What is this age fit to looke after but Butterflies? or birds neſts, or perhaps the gay coat of a Courtier? And if remarkable conſiderations be put into it by others, they are as ſome looſe pearles, which for want of filing vpon a ſtring, ſhake out of our pockets; ſo as all the wealth of a young

Traueller is onely in his tongue, wherein he exceeds his mothers Parrat at home, both for that he can ſpeake more, and knowes that he ſpeaketh.

Sect. VII.

And in truth, it is not onely in Trauell, wherein we may iuſtly complaine of the inconueniency of haſte, but (that wee may looke a little aſide) in all the important buſineſſes of our life, eſpecially in mariages and profeſſions: The ordinary haſte in the one (before the face can deſcry the ſex) fils the world full of beggery and impotence; and no leſſe haſte in the other, fils it as full of ignorance and imperfection. For on the one ſide, where the vigour of nature wants, what can be propagated but infirmitie? or how can hee skill to liue that wants experience? On the other, what plenty of water can there bee, where the lead of the ciſterne is put all into the pipes? where thoſe that ſhould be gathering knowledge for themſelues, ſpend it (like vnthrifty heires) vpon others, as faſt as they get it. I am deceiued, if I haue not touched one of the maine grounds of that vniuerſall decay of Arts and Men, wherewith the world is commonly checked: They muſt be mightier and wiſer, that know how to redreſſe it.

Sect. VIII.

But let vs giue our Traueller (that which parents ſeldome care to giue) maturitie of age; let him be as ripe as time can make him; What is the beſt aduantage which his abſence can promiſe vs? Let vs lay the benefits of Trauell in the one ſcale, the inconueniences in the other; whetherſoeuer ouer-weighs ſhall ſway downe the beame of our iudgement. The priuate contentment of a mans owne hart in the view of forraine things, is but a better name of an humorous curioſity. If a man yeeld to run after his appetite and his eye, he ſhall neuer know where to reſt, and after many idle excurſions, ſhould lie downe, weary, but vnſatisfied. For, giue me a man that hath ſeen Iudaſſes Lanthorne at S. Denniſes, the Epheſian Diana in the Lovure, the great veſſell at Heydelberg, the Amphitheater at Niſmes, the ruines, & halfe-lettered monuments of the ſeuen hils, and a thouſand ſuch rarities; what peace hath his heart, aboue thoſe that ſit at home, and contemne theſe toies? And what if that mans fancy ſhall call him to the ſtables of the great Mogol, or to the ſolemnities of Mecha, or to the Library of the Mountaine of the Moone, will he be ſo far the drudge or Lacquay of his owne imagination, as to vndertake this pilgrimage? Or where will he ſtay at laſt, vpon his returne? If he haue ſmelt the ill ſented cities of France, or haue ſeene faire Florence, rich Venice, proud Geneua, Luca the induſtrious: if then his thoughts ſhall tempt him to ſee the rich Gluttons houſe in Ieruſalem, or inuite him to Aſmere, or Bengala, muſt he goe? And if he can deny and chide his owne vnprofitable deſires, at the laſt, why began he no ſooner? That could not be forborne too early, which at laſt wee repent to haue done: he therfore that trauels onely to pleaſe his fantaſie, is like ſome woman with childe, that longs for that peece which ſhee ſees vpon anothers trencher, and ſwounds if ſhee miſſe it; or ſome Squire of Dames that doats vpon euery beauty, and is euery day loue-ſicke anew: Theſe humors are fitter for controlment than obſeruation.

Sect. IX.

IT is an higher faculty that Trauell profeſſeth to aduance, the ſupreme power of our vnderſtanding, which if from hence it may be manifeſtly improued, he ſhould not be worthy to tread vpon the earth that would not emulate Drake and Candiſh, in compaſſing it: but ſet aſide the ſtudy of ciuill Law, (which indeed finds better helps abroad) all Sciences (the word may ſeeme proud, but it is true) may be more both fitly wooed, & more ſurely won, within our foure ſeas: for what learning is that, which the ſeas, or Alpes, or Pyrenees haue ingroſſed from vs? what profeſſion either liberall, or manuary, wherein the greateſt maſters haue not beene at leaſt equalled by our home-bred Ilanders? What hath this or the former age knowne, more eminent for learning, than ſome of ours, which haue neuer trod on any but their owne earth? And (as good market-men by one handfull iudge of all the whole ſacke) why may we not finde cauſe to thinke ſo of the reſt, if they would not bee wanting to themſelues? I am ſure the Vniuerſities of our Iland know no matches in all the world; vnto whoſe perfection (that as they exceed others, ſo they may no leſſe exceed themſelues) nothing wanteth, but ſeuere execution of the wiſe and carefull lawes of our Anceſtors, and reſtraint of that libertie, which is the common diſeaſe of the time. And why ſhould not the childe thriue as well with the mothers milke, as with a ſtrangers? Whether it be the enuie, or the puſillanimity of vs Engliſh, we are ſtill ready to vnder-value our owne, and admire forrainers; whiles other Nations haue applauded no profeſſors more than thoſe which they haue borrowed from vs; neither haue we beene ſo vnwiſe, as to lend forth our beſt: our neighbours (which ſhould bee our corriuals in this praiſe) ſhall bee our Iudges; if thoſe few of our Writers, which could bee drawne forth into the publike light, haue not ſet copies to the reſt of the world, not without iuſt admiration. And how many ſtarres haue wee of no leſſe magnitude, that will not be ſeene? Bleſſed bee God (who hath made this Word as true, as it is great) no Nation vnder heauen ſo aboundeth with all variety of learning, as this Iland. From the head of Gods annointed doth this ſweet perfume diſtill to the vtmoſt skirts of this our region. Knowledge did neuer ſit crowned in the Throne of Maieſtie, and wanted either reſpect, or attendance. The double praiſe which was of old giuen to two great Nations, That Italie could not bee put downe for armes, nor Greece for learning, is happily met in one Iland. Thoſe therefore that croſſe the Seas to fill their braine, doe but trauell Northward for heat, and ſeeke that candle which they carry in their hand.

Sect. X.

YEA ſo farre is our ordinary Trauell from perfecting the intellectiue powers of our Gentrie, that it rather robs them of the very deſire of perfection. For what diſcouragements ſhall they finde from the loue of ſtudies, in thoſe parts which are moſt ſought to for ciuility? Who knowes not that they are growne that to height of debauchment, as to hold learning a ſhame to Nobility; eſteeming it as a fit guard for the long robe only, too baſe for their Tiſſues? An opinion ſo ſauouring of proud ignorance, and ignorant looſeneſſe; that I cannot honour it with a confutation. Who would thinke that the reaſonable ſoule of men, not profeſſedly barbarous, ſhould bee capable of ſuch a monſter? What is learning, but reaſon improued? And can reaſon ſo farre degenerate, as to hate and contemne it ſelfe? Were theſe men made only for a ſword, or a dogge, or an horſe? Onely for ſport or execution? I know not wherein Lewis the Eleuenth ſhewed himſelfe vnwitty, but in the charge which hee gaue to his Sonne, to learne no more Latine, but, Qui neſcit diſsimulare, neſcit viuere: and would this alone teach him to rule well? Doth the Art of Arts (ſuch is the gouernment of men) require no grounds but diſſimulation, or ignorance? Euen to the feeding of hogges, or ſheepe, there is more or better skill neceſſarie. How vnlike is this to a ſucceſſor of Charles the great, whoſe word it had wont to bee, that hee had rather abound in knowledge, than wealth? In the Court of our King Henry the Eight, a certaine great Peere (of this diet) could ſay, it was enough for Noblemens ſonnes to winde their horne, and carry their Hawke faire; that ſtudie was for the children of a meaner ranke: To whom Pace iuſtly replied, that then Noblemen muſt be content that their children may winde their hornes, and carry their Hawkes, while meaner mens ſonnes do weild the affaires of State. Certainly, it is a blinde and lame gouernment that lackes learning, whoſe ſubiects, what are they elſe, but as lims of a body whoſe head wanteth ſenſes, which muſt needs therefore faile of either motion, or ſafety? From hence it is, that ſo few of the forraine Nobles are ſtudious, in compariſons of ours; (in which regard I am not aſhamed to recant that which my vn-experience hath (out of hearſay) written in praiſe of the French education) and thoſe few that haue ſtolne the turning ouer of bookes, hide their skill, leſt they ſhould be made to bluſh at their vertue. What braue Trophees and rich monuments hath the pen of our gracious Soueraigne raiſed of himſelfe vnto al poſterities? When ignorance and malice haue ſhot their bolt, the glory of his great wiſdome, and knowledge, ſhall more fill the mouthes and affect the hearts of all ſucceeding ages, than of his greatneſſe. Paul the fift, and his greateſt Chaplaines, Bellarmine and Perron, haue felt the weight of his hand; whereas the great King that ſtiles himſelfe Catholike, when hee comes to paſſe his cenſorious edict vpon Cardinall Baronius (who in the eleuenth Tome of his Hiſtorie ſeemed too buſie in faſtening the Title of the Kingdome of Sicilie vpon the Pope) profeſſeth to ground his intelligence of his wrong onely vpon others eyes; as if a booke (though of a Cardinall) were too meane an obiect for the view of Maieſtie. And as all ſubordinate greatneſſe flowes from the head, ſo doe commonly alſo the diſpoſitions: Neither haue the Doctors of the Romiſh Church (vpon whom the implicite faith of the Laitie is ſuſpended) found it any ill policie, to cheriſh this diſlike of bookiſhneſſe in the great: for whiles the candle is out, it is ſafe for them to play their tricks in the darke, and if the Aſſyrians be once blinded, how eaſily may they bee lead into the midſt of any Samaria? If the light of knowledge might freely ſhine to the world, Popery would ſoone be aſhamed of it ſelfe, and vaniſh amongſt the workes of darkneſſe: Now how well theſe examples, and this conuerſation, ſhall whet the appetite vnto good ſtudies, it cannot be hard to iudge.

Edicto del Rey Don Phelippi d' Eſpana contra e Tractado della Monarchia de Sicilia enxerido por Ceſar Baronio Cardinal en el Tomo vndecimo de ſus Annales Eccleſiaſticos.

Sect. XI.

BVT perhaps it is not the learning of the Schoole, but of the State, wherein our Traueller hopes for perfection: The ſite and forme of Cities, the faſhion of gouernment, the manners of people, the raiſing and rate of forraine reuennues, the deportment of Courts, the menaging both of war and peace, is that wherein his owne eye ſhall be his beſt intelligencer; the knowledge whereof ſhall well requite his labour, whether for diſcourſe or for vſe. What if I ſay, that (ſaue the ſoothing vp of our fancie in all this) theſe leſſons may be as well taken out at home? I haue knowne ſome that haue trauelled no further than their owne cloſet, which could both teach and correct the greateſt Traueller, after all his tedious and coſtly pererrations: what doe wee but loſe the benefit of ſo many iournals, maps, hiſtoricall deſcriptions, relations, if we cannot with theſe helpes, trauell by our owne fire-ſide? He that trauels into forraine Countries, talks perhaps with a Peaſant, or a Pilgrim, or a Citizen, or a Courtier; and muſt needs take ſuch information as partiall rumour, or weake coniecture can giue him, but he that trauels into learned and credible Authors, talks with them who haue ſpent themſelues in bolting out the truth of all paſſages; and who hauing made their labours publike, would haue beene like to heare of it, if they had miſ-reported. The ordinary traueller propounds ſome prime Cities to himſelfe, and thither he walkes right forward; if he meet with ought that is memorable in the way, he takes it vp; but how many thouſand matters of note fall beſide him, on either hand; of the knowledge whereof he is not guilty: Whereas ſome graue and painfull Author hath collected into one view, whatſoeuer his Countrey affoords worthy of marke; hauing meaſured many a foule ſtep for that, which wee may ſee dry-ſhod; and worne out many yeeres in the ſearch of that, which one houre ſhall make no leſſe ours, than it was his owne. To which muſt be added, that our vnperfect acquaintance may not hope to finde ſo perfect information on the ſudden, as a naturall inhabitant may get, by the diſquiſition of his whole life. Let an Italian or French paſſenger walke thorow this our Iland, what can his Table-bookes carry home, in compariſon of the learned Britaine of our Camden, or the accurate Tables of Speed? Or if one of ours ſhould (as too many do) paſſe the Alpes, what pettances can his wild iourny obſerue, in compariſon of the Itinerarie of Fr. Schottus, and Capugnanus? Or he that would diſcourſe of the Royalties of the French Lillies, how can he be ſo furniſhed by flying report, as by the elaborate gatherings of Caſſaneus or of Degraſſalius? What ſhould I bee infinite? This age is ſo full of light, that there is no one countrey of the habitable world, whoſe beames are not croſſed and interchanged with other; Knowledge of all affaires, is like muſicke in the ſtreets, whereof thoſe may partake, which pay nothing. Wee doe not lie more open to one common ſinne, than to the eies and pens of our neighbours; Euen China it ſelfe, and Iaponia, and thoſe other remoteſt Iſles, and Continents (which haue taken the ſtricteſt order for cloſeneſſe) haue receiued ſuch diſcoueries, as would rather ſatisfie a Reader, than prouoke him to amend them. A good booke is at once the beſt companion, and guide, and way, and end of our iourney. Neceſſity droue our forefathers out of doores, which elſe in thoſe miſty times had ſeene no light: wee may with more eaſe, and no leſſe profit, ſit ſtill, and inherit, and enioy the labours of them, and our elder brethren, who haue purchaſed our knowledge with much hazard, time, toyle, expence, and haue beene liberall of their bloud (ſome of them) to leave vs rich.

SECT. XII.

As for that verball diſcourſe, wherein I ſee ſome place the felicity of their Trauell (thinking it the only grace, to tell wonders to a ring of admiring ignorants) it is eaſie to anſwer; that table-talke is the leaſt care of a wiſe man; who like a deepe ſtreame deſires rather to runne ſilent; and as himſelfe is ſeldome tranſported with wonder, ſo doth he not affect it in others; reducing all to vſe, rather than admiration, and more deſiring to benefit, than aſtoniſh the hearer; withall, that the ſame meanes which enable vs to know, doe at once furniſh vs with matter of diſcourſe, and for the forme of our expreſſion, if it proceed not from that naturall dexteritie which we carry with vs, in vaine ſhall we hope to bring it home; the change of language is rather an hinderance to our former readineſſe: and if ſome haue fetcht new noſes, and lips, and eares from Italy (by the helpe of Tagliacotius, and his ſchollers) neuer any brought a new tongue from thence. To conclude, if a man would giue himſelfe leaue to be thus vaine and free, like a mill without a ſcluſe, let him but trauell through the world of bookes, and he ſhall eaſily be able to out-talke that tongue, whoſe feet haue walkt the furtheſt: what hath any eye ſeene, or imagination deuiſed, which the pen hath not dared to write? Out of our bookes we can tell the ſtories of the Monocelli, who lying vpon their backs, ſhelter themſelues from the Sunne with the ſhadow of their one only foot. We can tell of thoſe cheape-dieted men, that liue about the head of Ganges, without meat, without mouthes, feeding only vpon aire at their noſthrils: Or thoſe headleſſe Eaſterne people, that haue their eyes in their breaſts (a miſ-conceit ariſing from their faſhion of attire, which I haue ſometimes ſeene): Or of thoſe Coromandæ, of whom Pliny ſpeakes, that couer their whole body with their eares: Or of the perſecutors of S. Thomas of Canterbury, whoſe proſteritie (if we beleeue the confident writings of Degraſſalius) are borne with long and hairie tailes, ſouping after them; which (I imagine) gue occaſion to that prouerbiall ieſt, wherewith our mirth vſes to vpbraid the Kentiſh: Or of Amazons, or Pigmies, or Satyres, or the Scythian Lambe, which growing out of the earth by the nauell, grazeth ſo farre as that naturall tether will reach: Or of the Bird Ruc, or ten thouſand ſuch miracles whether of nature, or euent. Little need wee to ſtirre our feet to learne to tell either loud lies, or large truths. We haue heard a bird in a cage ſing more change of notes, than others haue done in the wilde liberty of the wood. And as for the preſent occurrences of the time, the world about vs is ſo full of Preſſes, that it may, and is growne ſo good a fellow, that it will impart what it knowes to all the neighbours; whoſe relations, if ſometimes they ſwarue from truth, we may well conſider, what variety of report euery accident will yeeld, and that therefore our eares abroad are no whit more credible, than our eyes at home. Yea rather, as Tully could ſay, that at Antium he could heare the newes of Rome, better than at Rome, ſo may we oft-times better heare and ſift the newes of France, or Spaine, vpon our Exchange, than in their Paris, or Madrill: Since (what liberty ſoeuer tongues may take to themſelues) a diſcreet man will be aſhamed to ſubſcribe his name to that, whereof hee may be afterwards conuinced.

Sect. XIII.

Since therefore Trauell cannot out-bid vs in theſe higheſt commodities, which concerne the wealth of the minde; all the aduantage it can afford vs, muſt bee in thoſe mixt abilities, wherein our bodies are the greateſt partners, as dancing, fencing, muſicke, vaulting, horſemanſhip, the onely profeſſions of the miſ-named Academies of other Nations. Who can denie that ſuch like exerciſes are fit for young Gentlemen, not onely for their preſent recreation, but much more for the preparing of them to more ſerious action? Yet muſt theſe learne to know their places: what are they elſe but the varniſh of that picture of Gentry, whoſe ſubſtance conſiſts in the lines and colours of true vertue? but the lace or facing of a rich garment? but the hang-bies of that royall court which the ſoule keeps in a generous heart? He that holds Gentilitie accompliſhed with theſe (though laudible) qualities, partakes more of his horſe, than his horſe can poſſibly of him. This skill then is worthy of our purchaſe, yet may not be bought too deare; & perhaps need not to be fetcht ſo far. Neither my profeſſion, nor my experience will allow me to hold compariſons in this kind; but I haue bin heartned by no meane maſters of theſe Arts, to ſay that our Nation haue yeelded ſome in all theſe faculties, which need not ſtoope vnto the proudeſt forrainer: ours haue no fault but one, that they are our owne; and what hath their Countrey offended, if their Art offend not? It is an humorous giddineſſe to meaſure the goodnes of any thing by the diſtance of miles, and where there is equality of worth, to neglect the neereſt. I ſlander our Nation if it be not ſicke of this diſeaſe, in the courſe of all Sciences, And if neereneſſe and preſence be the cauſe of our diſlike, why doe we not hate our ſelues, which are euer in our owne boſome? Why doe we not hate this faſtidious curioſity, which is too cloſe to vs? perhaps perfection in theſe qualities is thinner ſowne amongſt vs, than ſome other-where; ſo as our Iland for want of worke, and incouragement, affoords no ſuch multitude of maſters: but how can we complaine of rareneſſe, ſince if our age yeeld vs but one excellent in each kinde, it is more than we are willing to vſe; and if the fault were not in our ſelues, one candle might light a thouſand: To inſtance in the beſt: The Horſe is a noble creature, which as it is the ſtrength and pride of France, ſo winnes the hearts and heeles of that Nation. The generality of their skill is nothing to a ſtranger; each priuate mans cunning reſts in himſelfe; it is onely the Teacher, whoſe ability may concerne vs. And whereas there is a double kinde of menage (as I haue heard) one for ſeruice, the other for pleaſure; in the firſt, our Maſters thinke they cannot yeeld vnto the beſt; in the latter, if they grant themſelues exceeded, how many men haue taug their dogge the ſame tricks, with no leſſe contentment? In both, we haue the writt directions of their greateſt Artiſts, who (for the perpetuity of their owne honour) fa led not to ſay their beſt. And if theſe dead Maſters ſuffice not, we haue had, we may hau the beſt of their liuing: The conſcience of a mans excellency will abide no limits, bu ſpurs him forth to winne admiration abroad, and if therewithall hee can finde ad uancement of profit, how willingly doth he change his home? We haue had experienc of this in higher profeſſions, much more of theſe vnder foot. One obſcure towne o Holland in our memory, had by this meanes drawne together at once the greateſt ligh of Europe, and made it ſelfe then no leſſe renowned for Profeſſors, than it is now infamous for Schiſme. Feare of enuy forbids me to name thoſe amongſt vs, which haue honoured this Iland in the choice of their abode. Where Art is encouraged, it will ſoone riſe high, and goe farre, & not ſuffer a channell of the Sea to ſtay it from the preſence of a more bountifull patronage.

Sect. XIV.

BVT let vs grant theſe faculties ſo fixed vpon any Nation, that all our water muſt neceſſarily bee fetcht at their Well; and adde vnto theſe a few waſte complements, and mimicall courteſies, which muſt needs bee put into the match of our ordinarie trauell: and now let vs ſet downe, and ſee what we paid for this ſtock, & count our winnings: What muſt our compleat Traueller ſtake downe for this goodly furniture of his Gentrie? If not loſſe, danger; danger of the beſt part, if not all: a double danger; of corruption of religion, and deprauation of manners; both capitall: And can we thinke theſe endowments ſo pretious, that they ſhould be worth fetching vpon ſuch an hazard? Will any man (not deſperate) run into an infected houſe, to riſle for a rich ſuit? Will any man put his finger into a fiery crucible, to pull out gold? It is wittily taken of Chryſoſtome, when our Sauiour ſaid, Ne exeatis in eremum; that hee ſaies not, Go forth into the deſart, and ſee, but beleeue not; but giues an abſolute prohibition of going forth at all, that they might be out of danger of misbeleefe. Tuſh, idle and melancholicke feares, ſay ſome of our Gallants: Wherefore ſerues diſcretion, but to ſeuer good from ill? How eaſily may a wiſe man pull a Roſe, and not pricke his hand? How freely may he dip in this ſtreame, and not be drowned? Little doe theſe peremptory reſoluers know, eyther the inſinuatiue power of euill, or the treachery of their own heart in receiuing it, or the importunitie of deceiuers in obtruding it. They are the worſe for their trauell, and perceiue it not. An egge couered with ſalt, as our Philoſophers teach vs, hath the meat of it conſumed, whiles the ſhell is whole: many a one receiues poyſon, and knowes not when he tooke it. No man proues extreamly euill on the ſudden. Through many inſenſible declinations doe we fall from vertue; and at the firſt are ſo gently ſeazed by vice, that we cannot beleeue our accuſers. It is miſchiefe enough, if they can bee drawne to a leſſe diſlike of ill; which now by long acquaintance is growne ſo familiar to their eyes, that they cannot thinke it ſo loathſome, as at the firſt view. The ſocietie of wilfull Idolaters will now downe with them, not without eaſe; and good meanings begin to be allowed for the clokes of groſſe ſuperſtition. From thence they grow to a fauourable conſtruction of the miſ-opinions of the aduerſe part, and can complaine of the wrongfull aggrauations of ſome contentious ſpirits: and from thence (yet lower) to an indifferent conceit of ſome more politike poſitions, and practiſes of the Romaniſts. Neither is there their reſt. Hereupon enſues an allowance of ſome of their doctrines, that are more plauſible, and leſſe improtant, and withall a cenſure of vs that are gone too far from Rome. Now the mariage of Eccleſiaſticall perſons begins to miſlike them: the daily and frequent conſignation with the croſſe is not to no purpoſe: The retired life of the religious (abandoning the world forſooth) ſauours of much mortification; and Confeſſion giues no ſmall eaſe and contentment to the ſoule. And now by degrees, Popery begins to be no ill religion: If there cannot be a falſe fire of mis-deuotion kindled in them, it is enough, if they can be cooled in their loue of truth; which how commonly it fals out amongſt vs, I had rather experience ſhould ſpeake, than my ſelfe. Some there are that by a ſpirituall Antiperiſtaſis haue growne hotter in their zeale, by being encompaſſed with the outward cold of irreligion and error, who as they owe not this grace to themſelues, ſo are they more for wonder than imitation. If Daniel found a guard in the Lions den, ſhall another put himſelfe thither for ſhelter? And if Peter walk't vpon the pauement of the water, did the reſt of the Diſciples ſtep forth and follow him? That valiant Champion of Chriſt (ſince we are fallen vpon his name) who durſt draw his ſword vpon a whole troupe, after all his proteſtations of his inſeparableneſſe from his Maſter, was yet infected with the ayre of the High Priſts Hall: and whiles he but warmed himſelfe at that fire, cooled in his reſpect to his Sauiour. Although perhaps this cogitation working (as it commonly doth) remiſſely, cauſeth not any ſudden alteration in our Traueller, but (as we ſay of Comets and Eclipſes) hath his effect when the cauſe is forgotten. Neither is there any one more apparent ground of that luke-warme indifferency, which is fallen vpon our times, than the ill vſe of our wandrings: for our Trauellers being the middle ranke of men, and therefore either followers of the great, or commanders of the meaner ſort, cannot want conuenience of diffuſing this temper of eaſe, vnto both.

Sect. XV.

ALl this miſchiefe is yet hid with a formall profeſſion, ſo as euery eye cannot finde it: in others it dares boldly breake forth to an open reuolt. How many in our memory, whiles with Dinah they haue gone forth to gaze, haue loſt their ſpirituall chaſtity, and therewith both the Church and themſelues? How many (like vnto the brooke Cedron) run from Hieruſalem thorow the vale of Ichoſaphat, and end their courſe in the dead ſea? A popiſh writer of our Nation (as himſelfe thought) not vnlearned, complaining of the obſtinacy of vs hereticks, deſpaires of preuailing, becauſe he findes it to be long ago fore-prophecied of vs in the Booke of the Chronicles, At illi Proteſtantes audire noluerunt. It is well that Proteſtants were yet heard of in the old Teſtament, as well as Ieſuites; whoſe name, one of their owne by good hap hath found, Num.26.24. Like as Eraſmus found Friers in S. Pauls time, inter falſos Fratres. But it were better, if this mans word were as true as it is idle. Some of ours haue heard to their coſt, whoſe loſſe ioyned with the griefe of the Church, and diſhonour of the Goſpel, we haue ſufficiently lamented. How many haue wee knowne ſtroken with theſe Aſpes, which haue died ſleeping? And in truth, whoſoeuer ſhall conſider this open freedome of the meanes of ſeducement, muſt needs wonder that we haue loſt no more; eſpecially, if he be acquainted with thoſe two maine helps of our Aduerſaries, importunity and plauſibility. Neuer any Phariſee was ſo eager to make a Proſelyte, as our late factors of Rome: and if they be ſo hot ſet vpon this ſeruice, as to compaſſe ſea and land to winne one of vs, ſhall we be ſo mad as to paſſe both their ſea and land, to caſt our ſelues into the mouth of danger? No man ſetteth foot vpon their coaſt, which may not preſently ſing with the Pſalmiſt, They come about mee like Bees. It fares with them as with thoſe which are infected with the peſtilence, who (they ſay) are carried with an itching deſire of tainting others. When they haue all done, this they haue gained, that if Satan were not more buſie and vehement than they; they could gaine nothing. But in the meane time, there is nothing wherein I wiſh we would emulate them, but in this heat of diligence and violent ambition of winning. Pyrrhus did not more enuy the valour of thoſe old Romane ſouldiers, which he read of in their wounds, and dead faces, than we do the buſie audacitie of theſe new. The world could not ſtand before vs, if our truth might be but as hotly ſollowed as their falſhood. Oh that our God, whoſe cauſe we maintaine, would enkindle our hearts with the fire of holy zeale, but ſo much as Satan hath inflamed theirs with the fire of fury and faction. Oh that he would ſhake vs out of this dull eaſe and quicken our ſlacke ſpirits vnto his own worke! Ariſe, O North, and come, O South, and blow vpon our garden, that the ſpices thereof may flow forth. Theſe ſiters will take no deniall, but are ready (as the faſhion was to doe with rich matches) to carry away mens ſoules whether they will or no. Wee ſee the proofe of their importunity at home: No bulwarke of lawes, nor barres of iuſtice (though made of three trees) can keepe our rebaniſhed fugitiues from returning, from intermedling. How haue their actions ſaid in the hearing of the world, that ſince heauen will not heare them, they will try what hell can doe? And if they dare bee ſo buſie in our owne homes, where they would ſeeme ſomwhat awed with the danger of iuſtice; what (thinke wee) will they not dare to doe in their owne territories, where they haue not free ſcope only, but aſſiſtance, but incouragement? Neuer generation was ſo forward as the Ieſuiticall, for captation of wils amongſt their owne, or of ſoules amongſt ſtrangers. What ſtate is not haunted with theſe ill ſpirits? yea what houſe? yea what ſoule? Not a Princes Councell-Table, not a Ladies Chamber can be free from their ſhameleſſe inſinuations. It was not for nothing, that their great Patron Philip the ſecond King of Spaine, called them Clericos negotiadores; and that Marcus Antonius Columna, Generall of the Nauy to Pius Quintus in the battell of Lepanto, and Viceroy of Sicile could ſay to Father Don Alonſo, a famous Ieſuite, affecting to be of the counſell of his conſcience, Voi altri padri di Ieſu hauete la mente al cielo, le mani ol mondo, l' anima al diauolo.

SECT. XVI.

YEt were there the leſſe perill of their vehemence, if it were onely rude and boyſterous (as in ſome other ſects) that ſo (as it is in Canon ſhot) it might be more eaſily ſhund, then reſiſted: but here, the skill of doing miſchiefe contends with the power; their miſ-zealous paſſions hide themſelues in a pleaſing ſweetneſſe; and they are more beholden to policy, then ſtrength. What Gentleman of any note can croſſe our Seas, whoſe name is not lāded in their books before hand, in preuention of his perſon, whom now arriued, if they finde vntractable through too much preiudice, they labour firſt to temper with the plauſible conuerſation of ſome ſmooth Catholike of his owne Nation: the name of his Countrey is warrant enough for his inſinuation. Not a word yet may be ſpoken of Religion; as if that were no part of the errand. So haue we ſeene an Hawke caſt off at an Hernſhaw, to looke and flie a quite other way, & after many careleſſe, and ouerly fetches, to towre vp vnto the prey intended. There is nothing wherein this faire companion ſhal not apply himſelfe to his welcome Countryman. At laſt, when he hath poſſeſt himſelfe of the heart of his new Acquaintance, & got himſelfe the reputation of a ſweet ingenuity, and delightfull ſociableneſſe; he findes opportunities to beſtow ſome witty ſcoffes vpon thoſe parts of our religion, which lie moſt open to aduantage. And now it is time to inuite him (after their rarities) to ſee the Monaſtery of our Engliſh Benedictines, or (if elſewhere) thoſe Engliſh Colledges, which the deuout beneficence of our well-meaning neighbours (with no other intention then ſome couetous Farmers lay ſaltcats in their doue-coats) haue bountifully erected. There, it is a wonder if our Traueller meet not with ſome one, that ſhall claime kinred or Country of him in a more intire faſhion. The Society welcomes him with more then ordinary curteſie: neither can he refuſe (except he will be vnciuill) to be their gueſt. He cannot miſlike the loue of his Country men, he cannot fault their carriage. And now that they haue mollified the ſtiffeneſſe of his preiudice, and with much tempring fitted him for their mold, he is a task meet for one of their beſt workmen; who willingly vndertaking it, hath learned to handle him ſo ſweetly, as if he would haue him thinke it a pleaſure to be ſeduced. Do we thinke his Doctor will begin firſt with the infallibility of their great Maſter, and perſwade him that a Necromancer, an Heretike, an Atheiſt, cannot erre in Peters Chayre? or tell him, that he may buy off his ſinnes as familiarly as hee may buy wares in the market? or teach him that a man may and muſt both make and eat his God to his breakfaſt? This hard meat is for ſtronger mawes. Hee knowes how firſt to begin with the ſpoone, and to offer nothing to a weake ſtomacke, but diſcourſe of eaſie digeſtion: As firſt, that a Catholike ſo liuing and dying (by our confeſſion) may be ſaued: That there is but one Church, as but one Chriſt; and that out of this Arke, there is no way but drowning: That this one Church is more likely to be found in all the world, then in a corner; in all ages, then in the laſt Century of yeares; in vnity, then in diuiſion. And now comes in the glorious brag of the Roman Vniuerſality, their inuiolate Antiquity, their recorded ſucceſſions, their harmonious vnity, their confeſſed magnificence: That there is the mother Church, as to the reſt of Chriſtendome, ſo eſpecially to the Engliſh: How well a Monarchy (the beſt forme of gouernment) beſeemes the Church: How vnlikely it is that Chriſt would leaue his Spouſe in the cõfuſion of many heads, or of none. And now that we are but a rag torne from their coat; and where was our religion before Luther lay with Bora? And what miſerable ſubdiuiſions are there in our Proteſtancie? & what a gleaning are we to the harueſt of Chriſtendome? with infinite ſuggeſtions of this nature; able (as they are plauſibly vrged) to ſhake an vngrounded iudgement: which if they haue ſo farre preuailed, as that the hearer will abide himſelfe hood-winkt with this vaile of the Church, how eaſily ſhall time leade him into thoſe hatefuller abſurdities.

Sect. XVII.

IN all which proceeding, theſe impoſtors haue a double aduantage: Firſt, that they deliuer the opinion of their Church with ſuch mitigation and fauour, as thoſe that care to pleaſe, not to informe: forming the voice of the Church to the liking of the hearer, not the iudgement of the hearer to the voice of the Church: wherein it is not hard to obſerue that Popery ſpoken and written are two things; in diſcourſe, nothing is more ordinary then to diſclaime ſome of their receiued poſitions, & to blanch others. It is the malice of an aduerſarie that miſ-reports them; they doe not hold that Images ſhould be adored; that the wood of the Croſſe ſhould be worſhipped with the very ſame deuotion that is due to Chriſt himſelfe; that the Church is the Iudge of Gods writings; that Paul the fift cannot erre; that a man may merit of his maker, much leſſe ſupererogate; that a mouſe can run away with that which either is, or was God Almighty; that it is lawfull to kill an hereticall King, and all other thoſe monſters of opinion, which their moſt claſſicke Authors haue both hatcht and ſhameleſly thruſt into the light of the world. They defie thoſe ridiculous Legends, which we father vpon their Church; & how much do they ſcorn S. Francis his Bird, or his Wolfe, or his wounds, or his Apoſtles of Aſſiſe. Pope Ioane was but a fancy: Neuer Pope was an hereticke. If now we cry out of impudence, and call their allowed Writers to witnes; Loe, euen they alſo are forged by vs, and are taught to play booty on our ſide. Thus reſolued to outface all euidence, they make faire weather of their fouleſt opinions, & enueigh againſt nothing ſo much as the ſpightfulneſſe of our ſlanders. It is not poſſible that any wiſe ſtranger ſhould be in loue with the face of their Church, if he might ſee her in her own likenes, and therefore they haue cunningly masked one part of it, and painted another, ſo as thoſe features of hers, which are vgly & offenſiue, ſhall not appeare to any but her own eyes. And becauſe bookes are dangerous blabs, and will be telling the generations to come, how ſtrangely that face is altered with Age and Art, therefore their tongues are clipped alſo, and made to ſpeake none but her owne words. Out of this licence, and hope to winne, they can fit their diſhes to euery palate, and are ſo ſawcy, as to make the Church belie it ſelfe. Hence it was that a Spaniſh Father could teach, that it is not of the neceſſity of faith, to beleeue that the preſent Pope is the Vicar of Chriſt, and the ſucceſſor of Peter. That Hoſtius the Ieſuite could ſay, that the Pope abuſed his keyes, and the authority of the Church, in receiuing Henry the fourth. That another of his fellowes in a diſcourſe with a French Biſhop, could diſparage a diciſion of his Holineſſe in compariſon of a Generall Councell. That Menas the Reader of Diuinity at Valedolid, following Salas the Ieſuite, could affirme the lawfulneſſe of the mariage of religious perſons vpon a doubtfull reuelation. That more then one of that Order, haue dared to broach Confeſſion by letters, againſt the Bull of Clement the 8. And if theſe men be not ſparing of their contradictions to that Vice-God of theirs, whoſe vaſſals they are by peculiar profeſſion, how much more boldly will they ſwimme againſt the ſtreame of any common opinion, that may concerne the bodie of that head?

SECT. XVIII.

THeir ſecond aduantage is, that they regard not with what vntruths they make good their own aſſertions: It is all one with what morter or rubbiſh they build vp a ſide. From hence flow the confident reports, both of their miracles to conuince vs, and their ſlanders to diſgrace vs. Father Hayndius, a Ieſuite of 33. yeares ſtanding, amongſt 52. complaints, which (out of an honeſt remorſe) he put vp againſt his owne Societie, to their Generall Aquauiua, finds this not the leaſt, that his fellowes ſhamed not to ſeeke the honour of their Order, by cogging of miracles. What packets flie about daily of their Indian wonders? Euen Cardinall Bellarmine can abide to come in as an auoucher of theſe coozenages; who dares auerre that his fellow Xauier had not only healed the deafe, dumbe, and blinde, but raiſed the dead, whiles his brother Acoſta, after many yeares ſpent in thoſe parts, can pull him by the ſleeue, & tell him in his eare, ſo loud that all the world may heare him, Prodigia nulla producimus, neq; vero eſt opus. Of the ſame ſtampe are the daily-renewed miracles, reuelations, viſions, wherewith any mans eares muſt needs be beaten amongſt them. Africke was at the beſt but barren of nouelties, in compariſon of Rome; and yet the world is incredulous, if it will not ſuffer it ſelfe gulled with theſe holy frauds. And no fewer are thoſe lewd calumniations (the ſtuffe of all their inuectiues) whereby they labour to make vs loathſome to the world: our perſons, our doctrines are loaded with reproaches; neither matters it how iuſt they are, but how ſpightfull. What other meaſure can bee expected of vs, when their beſt friends haue thus (vpon ſome priuate diſlikes) ſmarted from them? Their owne holy Fathers, Clement the eighth, and Sixtus Quintus, & with them (the honour of the Ieſuiticall Order) Cardinall Tollet, can all ſhew bloody wales in their backes, from their laſhes. Their late Patron of famous memory, whoſe heart they well merited, and keepe it (as their deare relique) enſhrined in their La-Fleſche, was after his death in their Pulpits proclaimed Tyran and worſe: no maruell then if after the virulent declamations of our Gifford (their Gabriel) and the malicious ſuggeſtions of others of that viperous brood, wee haue much adoe to perſwade our neighbours, that we haue any Churches, Baptiſme, Liturgie, Religion. I appeale then to all eyes and eares, how eaſie it is for a man that will take leaue to himſelfe, of making what truths he liſts, and defending them by what vntruths he pleaſeth, to leade a credulous heart whither he pleaſeth.

Lib.4.de ſalut. Ind.c.12, &c.

SECT. XIX.

BVt if the power of faſified reaſon preuaile not, theſe deſperate factors of Rome (as I haue beene informed) haue learned out of their acquaintance in the Court of the Prince of darkneſſe, to imploy ſtronger aid. On ſome of their hands, I feare, Magicall deluſions, and deuilliſh incantations ſhall not want, rather than they will want a client. Neither can this ſeeme ſtrange to any that knowes how familiarly the Roman Church profeſſes the ſolemne practiſe of coniuration; in ſuch a faſhion, as it doth more than trouble the beſt Caſuiſts, to ſet down a perfect difference betwixt their ſacred Magick, & the Diabolicall. From hence perhaps haue proceeded thoſe miraculous apparitions (if at leaſt they were any other but fancy, or fraud) wherewith ſome of our deathſick Gentlemen amongſt them haue bin frighted into Catholickes. A famous Diuine of France, ſecond to none for learning, or fidelitie, told me this one amongſt other inſtances, of his owne experience, which he yet liues to iuſtifie: A Gentleman of the Religion, whoſe wife was popiſhly deuoted, lying vpon the bed of his ſickneſſe, in expectation of death, ſends for this Diuine, his Paſtor; the ſicke mans wife ſends for a Ieſuite; both meet at the beds ſide; each perſwades him to his owne part; both plead for their religion at this barre, before theſe Iudges: after two houres diſputation, not onely the Gentleman was cheerefully confirmed in that iudgement, which he had embraced, but his wife alſo, out of the euidence of truth, began to incline to him, & it. The Ieſuite departed diſcontent; yet within ſome few houres after, returning (when the coaſt was cleerer) intreats ſome priuate conference with the Gentlewoman; with whom walking in her garden, he did vehemently expoſtulate, mixing therewithall his ſtrongeſt perſwaſions; at laſt, to ſhut vp his diſcourſe, he importun'd her with many obſecrations, that ſhe would vouchſafe to receiue from his hands a little box which he there offered her, and for his ſake weare about her continually: ſhe condeſcended. No ſooner had ſhee taken it, then ſhe fell to ſo a great deteſtation of her husband, that ſhee could by no meanes bee drawne into his preſence, and within two dayes after in this eſtate ſhee died. An act more worthy the ſword of iuſtice, then the pen of an Aduerſarie. Theſe courſes are as ſecret as wicked. Not daring therefore peremptorily to accuſe, I had rather leaue theſe practiſes to further inquiry. Sure I am, that by their tongues, Satan labours to inchant the world, and hath ſtrongly deluded too many ſoules. And are we weary of ours, that we dare tempt God, and offer our ſelues as challengers to this ſpirituall danger? The Ieſuites, amongſt much change of houſes, haue two famous for the accordance of their names; one called The Bow, at Nola; the other, The Arrow, (La Fleſche) in France: though this latter were more worthy of the name of a whole Quiuer, containing not fewer then eight hundred ſhafts of all ſizes. Their Apoſtate Fryer (if I ſhall not honour him too much) plaid vpon them in his Diſtich:

Arcum Nola dedit, dedit illis alma Sagittam
Gallia; quis funem, quem meruere, dabit?
Nola the bow, and France the ſhaft did bring:
But who ſhall helpe them to an hempen ſtring?

This prouiſion is for the care of Chriſtian Princes: but in the meane time, what madneſſe is it in vs, not onely to giue aime to theſe rouing Flights, but to offer our ſelues to bee their ſtanding Butt, that they may take their full aime and hit vs leuell at pleaſure? Doe wee not heare ſome of their owne fellow Catholikes in the middeſt of their awfulleſt Senate, the Parliament of Paris, pleading vehemently againſt thoſe factious ſpirits, and crying out paſſionately of that danger (which will follow vpon their admiſſion) both of lewd manners, and falſe doctrine; and doe wee in greater oppoſition feare neither? and eſpecially from Engliſh Ieſuites? Some Countries yeeld more venomous vipers then others; ours the worſt. I would it were not too eaſie to obſerue, that as our Engliſh Papiſts are commonly moſt Ieſuitiſh, ſo our Engliſh Ieſuites are more furious then their fellowes. Euen thoſe of the hotteſt Climates cannot match them in fiery diſpoſitions. And doe we put our ſelues out of our comfortable Sunneſhine, into the midſt of the flame of theſe noted Incendiaries? Doe we take pleaſure to make them rich with the ſpoile of our ſoules? and becauſe they will not come faſt enough to fetch theſe booties, doe we goe to carry them vnto their pillage?

SECT.

Sect. XX.

THe danger is in the men more then in their cauſe; and if this great Curtizan of the world had not ſo cunning Panders, I ſhould wonder how ſhee ſhould get any but fooliſh cuſtomers. The Seacher of all hearts (before whoſe Tribunall I ſhal once come to giue an account of this Cenſure) knows that I ſpeak it not maliciouſly; Him I call to witneſſe, that I could not find any true life of Religion amongſt thoſe that would be Catholikes: I meddle not with the errors of Speculations, or Schoolepoints; wherein their iudgement palpably offendeth: I ſpeake of the liuely practice of Piety. What haue they amongſt them but a very outſide of Chriſtianity, a meere formality of deuotion? Looke into their Churches, there their poore ignorant Laity hope to preſent their beſt ſeruices to God; and yet alas, they ſay they know not what, they heare they know not what, they doe they know not what; returning empty of all hearty edification, and onely full of confuſed intentions; and are taught to thinke this ſacrifice of fooles meritorious. Look their Chemarims vpō the ſacred actors in this religious Scene; what ſhall you ſee but idle Apiſhneſſe in their ſolemneſt worke, and either mockery or ſlumbering? Looke into their religious houſes; what ſhall you ſee but a trade of careleſſe & lazy holines? houres obſerued, becauſe they muſt, not becauſe they would. What doe they but lull piety a ſleepe with their heartleſſe and ſleepy Veſpers? Looke into the priuate cloſets of their deuout Ignorants; what difference ſhall you ſee betwixt the Image and the Suppliant? If they can heare their beads knacke vpon each other, they are not bid to care for hearing their praiers reflect vpon heauen. Shortly, in all that belongs to God, the worke done ſufficeth, yea meriteth; and what need the heart be wrought vpon for a taske of the hand? Looke into the melancholike Cels of ſome auſtere Recluſes; there you may finde perhaps an haire-cloth, or a whip, or an heardle; but ſhew mee true mortification, the power of ſpirituall renouation of the ſoule. How ſhould that bee found there, when as that ſauing faith (which is the onely purger of the heart) is barred out as preſumptuous? and no gueſt of that kinde allowed, but the ſame which is common to Deuils? what Papiſt in all Chriſtendome hath euer beene heard to pray daily with his family; or to ſing but a Pſalme at home? Looke into the vniuerſall courſe of the Catholike life; there ſhall you finde the Dicalogue profeſſedly broken, beſides the ordinary practiſe of Idolatry, and frequence of oathes. Who euer ſaw Gods day duly kept in any city, village, houſhold vnder the iuriſdiction of Rome? Euery obſcure holy-day takes the wall of it, and thruſts it into the channell. Who ſees not obedience to authority ſo ſlighted, that it ſtands only to the mercy of humane diſpenſation? and in the reſt of Gods Lawes, who ſees not how foule ſinnes paſſe for veniall? and how eaſily veniall ſinnes paſſe their ſatisfaction: for which a croſſe, or a drop of holy-water is ſufficient amends? Who ſees not how no place can bee left for truth, where there is full roome giuen to equiuocation? All this, though it be harſh to the conſcionable man, yet is no leſſe pleaſing to the carnall. The way of outward faſhionableneſſe in religion, and inward liberty of heart, cannot but ſeeme faire to nature; and eſpecially when it hath ſo powerfull angariation. It is a wonder if but one halfe of Chriſtendome be thus wonne to walke in it. Thoſe which are either vngrounded in the principles of religion, or the vnconſcionable in the practiſe, are fit to trauell into theſe miſerable errors: But though Iſrael play the harlot, yet let not Iudah ſinne. Come ye not to Gigal; neither goe ye vp to Bethauen.

Sect. XXI.

From the danger of corruption in iudgement, let vs turne our eyes to the deprauation of manners; which not ſeldome goes before: Apples therefore fall from the tree, becauſe they be worme-eaten; they are not worm-eaten becauſe they fall: and, as vſually followes, Satan like the Rauen, firſt ſeazes vpon the eye of vnderſtanding, and then preyes freely vpon the other carkaſſe. We may be bad enough at home, certainly we are the worſe for our neighbours. Old Rome was not more Iealous of the Grecian and African manners, then wee haue reaſon to be of the Romane. It were well if wee knew our owne faſhions, better if we could keepe them.

What miſchiefe haue we amongſt vs that we haue not borrowed? To begin at our skin: who knowes not whence we had the varietie of our vaine diſguiſes? As if wee had not wit enough to be fooliſh, vnleſſe we were taught it. Theſe dreſſes being conſtant in their mutabilitie, ſhew vs our maſters. What is it that wee haue not learned of our neighbours, ſaue onely to be proud good cheape? Whom would it not vex to ſee how that other ſexe hath learned to make Antiks and monſters of themſelues? Whence came their hips to the ſhoulders, and their breſts to the nauill; but the one from ſome ill-ſhap't Dames of France, and the other from the worſe-minded Curtizans of Italy? Whence elſe learned they to dawbe theſe mud-walls with Apothecaries morter; and thoſe high waſhes, which are ſo cunningly lickt on, that the wet napkin of Phryne ſhould be deceiued? Whence the friſled and poudred buſhes of their borrowed excrement? as if they were aſhamed of the head of Gods making, and proud of the Tire-womans? Where learned we that deuiliſh Art and practice of Duell, wherein men ſeek honour in blood, and are taught the ambition of being glorious butchers of men? Where had we that luxurious delicacie in our feaſts, in which the noſe is no leſſe pleaſed, then the palate; and the eye no leſſe then either? wherein the piles of diſhes make barricadoes againſt the appetite, and with a pleaſing encombrance trouble an hungry gheſt? Where thoſe formes of ceremonious quaffing, in which men haue learned to make Gods of others, and beaſts of themſelues? and loſe their reaſon, whiles they pretend to do reaſon? where the lawleſneſſe (miſ-called freedome) of a wilde tongue, that runnes with reynes in the necke, thorow the bed chamber of Princes, their Cloſets, their Counſell-Tables, and ſpares not the very Cabinet of their breſts, much leſſe can be barr'd out of the moſt retired ſecrecie of inferiour greatneſſe? Where the change of noble attendance, and hoſpitalitie, into foure wheeles, and ſome few butterflies? Where the Art of diſhoneſtie in practicall Machiaueliſme, in falſe equiuocations? Where the ſlight account of that filthineſſe, which is but condemned as veniall, and tolerated as not vnneceſſarie? Where the skill of ciuill and honourable hypocriſie, in thoſe formall complements, which doe neither expect beleefe from others, nor carie any from our ſelues? where that vnnaturall villany, which though it were burnt with fire and brimſtone from heauen, and the aſhes of it drowned in the dead ſea, yet hath made ſhift to reuiue, and cals for new vengeance vpon the actors? Where that cloſe Atheiſme, which ſecretly laughs God in the face, and thinkes it weakeneſſe to beleeue, wiſdome to profeſſe any religion? Where the bloody and tragicall ſcience of King-killing; the new diuinity of diſobedience and rebellion; with too many other euils, wherewith foraine conuerſation hath indangered the infection of our peace? Lo here, deare Country-men, the fruit of your idle gaddings: Better perhaps might be had; but he was neuer acquainted at home: that knowes not our nature to be like vnto fire, which if there be any infection in the roome, drawes it ſtraight to it ſelfe: Or like vnto iet, which omitting all precious obiects, gathers vp ſtrawes and duſt. Ilanders haue beene euer in an ill name, Wherefore? ſaue onely for the confluence of forainers, which neuer come without the fraight of their nationall wickedneſſe. The experience whereof hath moued ſome witty Nations, both ancient and preſent, to ſhut themſelues vp within their owne bounds, and to barre the intercourſe of ſtrangers, as thoſe that thought beſt to content themſelues with their owne faults.

A corrupt diſpoſition, out of a naturall fertilitie, can both beget and conceiue euill alone; but if it be ſeconded by examples, by precepts, by incouragements, the Ocean it ſelfe hath not ſo much ſpawne, as it: in all which regards, hee hath eſcaped well, that returnes but what he caried; but hee is worthy of memory, that returnes either more good, or leſſe euill. Some haue come home perhaps more ſparing, others more ſuttle, others more outwardly courteous; others more capricious, ſome more tongue-free, few euer better. And if themſelues be not ſenſible of their alterations, yet their Countrey and the Church of God feeles and rues them.

SECT. XXII.

LEt me therefore haue leaue to ſhut vp this diſcourſe with a double ſute, one to our Gentry, the other to ſupreme authoritie; both which ſhal come from the bottome of an heart vnfainedly ſacrificed to the common good: neither ſpeake I words, but my very ſoule vnto both. To the former my ſute is, that they would bee happy at home: God hath giuen vs a world of our owne, wherein there is nothing wanting to earthly contentment. Whither goe ye then, worthy Country-men, or what ſeeke yee? Here growes that wealth, which yee goe but to ſpend abroad: Here is that ſweet peace which the reſt of the world admires and enuies: Here is that gratious and well-tempered gouernment, which no Nation vnder heauen may dare once offer to parallel: Here all liberall Arts raigne and triumph: And for pleaſure, either our earth, or our ſea yeelds vs all thoſe dainties, which their natiue Regions enioy but ſingle. Laſtly, here Heauen ſtands open, which to many other parts is barred on the out-ſide with ignorance or misbeleefe. And ſhall our wantonneſſe contemne all this bounty of God, and carry vs to ſeeke that, which wee ſhall finde no where but behinde vs, but within vs? Shall the affectation of ſome friuolous toyes draw vs away from the fruition of thoſe ſolid comforts, which are offered vs within our owne doores? How many of ours, whom their iuſt offence hath caſt out of the boſome of their Country, compare their exile with death, and can ſcarce abide to bid that breath welcome, which they are forced to draw in a foraine aire; and though freedome of conſcience entertaine them neuer ſo liberally abroad, yet reſolue either to liue or die at home; and doe wee ſuffer our folly to baniſh vs from thoſe contentments, which they are glad to redeeme with the hazard of their blood? are wee ſo little in our owne bookes, that wee can be content to purchaſe outlandiſh ſuperfluities, with the miſ-cariage of our ſoules, with the danger of miſ-cariage, with the likelihood of danger? Are we ſo fooliſh, that whiles we may ſweetly enioy the ſetled eſtate of our Primogeniture, wee will needs bing vpon our ſelues the curſe of Ruben, to runne abroad like water; whoſe qualitie it is, not eaſily to be kept within the proper bounds; yea the curſe of Cain, to put our ſelues from the ſide of Eden, into the land of Nod, that is, of demigration? None of the leaſt impercations, which Dauid makes againſt Gods enemies, is, Make them like vnto a wheele, O Lord. Motion is euer accompanied with vnquietneſſe, and both argues, and cauſes imperfection, whereas the happy eſtate of heauen is deſcribed by reſt; whoſe glorious ſpheres in the meane time, doe ſo perpetually moue, that they are neuer remoued from their places. It is not the leaſt part either of wiſdome, or happineſſe, to know when wee are well. Shall we not be ſhameleſſely vnthankfull, if we cannot ſing the note of that great Choriſter of God, My lot is falne to mee in a good ground? Hath not the munificence of God made this Iland as it were an abridgement of this whole earth, in which he hath contriued (though in a leſſe letter) all the maine and materiall commodities of the greater world; and doe we make a priſon where God meant a Paradiſe? Enioy therefore (happy Country-men) enioy freely God and your ſelues; enrich your ſelues with your owne mines, improue thoſe bleſſed opportunities which God hath giuen you, to your mutuall aduantage; and care not to be like any but your ſelues.

Sect. XXIII.

AND if at any time theſe vnworthy papers may fall betwixt the hands of my Soueraigne Maſter, or any of his graue and honourable Miniſters of State, let the meanneſſe of ſo weake and obſcure ſolicitors preſume to commend this matter to their deepeſt conſideration; and out of an honeſt zeale of the common ſafetie, ſue to them for a more ſtrict reſtraint of that dangerous libertie, whereof too many are bold to carue themſelues. Who can be ignorant of thoſe wiſe and wholeſome lawes, which are enacted already to this purpoſe? or of thoſe carefull and iuſt cautions, wherewith the licences of Trauell are euer limited? But what are we the better for Gods owne lawes, without execution? Or what are limits vnto the lawleſſe? Good lawes are the hedges of the Common-wealth: iuſt diſpenſations are as gates, or ſtiles in the hedge. If euery ſtraggler may at pleaſure caſt open a gap in this fence of the State, what are we the better for this quick-ſet, then if we lay open to the common? Who ſees not how familiarly our yong Recuſants immediatly vpon their diſcloſing, are ſent ouer for their full hatching & making? Italy, Spaine, Artois, and now of late France it ſelfe prouides neſts, and perches, and mewes for theſe birds, with the ſame confidence, wherewith we breed our owne at home; which when they are once well acquainted with the Romane lure, are ſent backe againe fit for the prey. And as for thoſe of our owne feather: whereas the libertie of their trauell is bounded chiefly with this double charge; one, that they haue no conuerſation or conference with Ieſuits, or other dangerous perſons; the other, that they paſſe not into the dominions of the Kings enemies; both theſe are ſo commonly neglected, as if they were intended onely for a verball formalitie, yea, as if the Prohibition meant to teach men what they ſhould doe. Euery of our Nouices hath learned to make no difference of men; and dare breathe in the poiſonous ayre of Italy it ſelfe, and touch the very pommell of the chaire of peſtilence. It is this licentious freedome (which we miſ-call Open-hearted ingenuity) that vndoes vs. Doe we not ſee the wary cloſeneſſe of our Aduerſaries, which will not ſo much as abide one of our bookes (a mute ſollicitor) to harbour in any of their coaſts? How many of the Italian or Spaniſh Nobleſſe haue wee knowne allowed to venture their education in our Courts or Vniuerſities? Doe they lie thus at the locke, and doe we open our breſt, and diſplay our armes, and bid an enemie ſtrike where he liſt? Since then we haue no more wit, or care, then to be willingly guilty of our owne ſhame; oh that the hands of ſupreme authoritie would bee pleaſed to locke vs within our owne doores, and to keepe the keyes at their owne girdle! And (to ſpeake truth) to what purpoſe are thoſe ſtrait and capitall inhibitions of the returne of our factious fugitiues into this Kingdom, if whiles the wieket is ſhut vpon them, that they ſhould not come to vs, the Poſterne be open to vs, that we may goe to them? As all intercourſe is perilous, ſo that is moſt, which is by our owne prouocation. Here yet they dare but lurke in ſecret, and take only ſome ſudden ſnatches at a weake prey, like vnto euening-wolues, that neuer walke forth but vnder the cloak of the night; but in their owne territories, they can ſhew the Sunne their ſpoiles, and thinke this act worthy of garlands and trophees. Here wee haue maſtiues to ſecure our flockes: there the prey goes ſtrangling alone to the mouth of their dennes, without protection, without aſſiſtance, and offers to be deuoured. Yee whom the choice of God hath made the great Shepheards of his people, whoſe charge it is to feed them by gouernment, ſuffer not their ſimplicitie to betray their liues vnto the fangs of theſe cruell beaſts; but chaſe them home rather, from the wilfull ſearch of their owne perdition, and ſhut them vp together in your ſtrong and ſpacious folds, that they may be at once ſafe, and yee glorious.

Sect. XXIV.

LAſtly, for thoſe, whom neceſſary occaſions draw forth of their owne coaſts (that we may haue done with thoſe, which like fooliſh Papiſts goe on pilgrimage to ſee another blocke better dreſſed then at home) let me ſay to them, as Simeon that propheticall Monke ſaid to the pillars which he whipped before the earth-quake, Stand faſt, for ye ſhall be ſhaken. And therefore, as the Crane, when ſhee is to fly againſt an high wind, doth ballace her ſelfe with ſtones in her bill, that ſhe may cut the ayre with more ſteddineſſe; ſo let them carefully fore-inſtruct, and poize themſelues with the ſound knowledge of the Principles of Religion, that they may not be caried about with euery wind of doctrine: Whereto if they adde but thoſe leſſons, which they are taught by the State, in their letters of paſſage, there may bee hope, they ſhall bring backe the ſame ſoules they caried. It was at leaſt an inclination to a fall, that Eue tooke boldneſſe to hold chat with the Serpent. And as ſubtill Lawyers deſire no more aduantage in the quarrell which they would picke at conueyances, then many words: ſo neither do our Aduerſaries. Whiles our eares are open, and our tongues free, they will hope well of our very denials. Error is crafty, and out of the power of his Rhetoricall inſinuations, oft-times caries away probabilitie from truth. I remember in that famous Embaſſie of three Philoſophers, which Athens ſent to Rome, Critolaus, Diogenes, and Carneades, there falling out many occaſions of diſcourſe, wiſe Cato perſwaded the Senate to a ſpeedie diſmiſſion of thoſe (otherwiſe welcome) gheſts, Becauſe (ſaid he) whiles Carneades diſputes, ſcarce any man can diſcerne which is the truth. There is more danger of theſe ſpirituall Sophiſters, by how much the buſineſſe is more important, and their ſubtilty greater. Let our paſſenger therefore (as that wiſe Grecian ſerued his fellowes) ſtop vp his eares with waxe againſt theſe Syrens. Our Sauiour would not giue Satan audience euen whiles he ſpake true; becauſe he knew that truth was but to countenance error. There is euer true corne ſtrowed vnder a pitfall: thoſe eares are full and weightie, which we dreſſe with Lime to deceiue the poore birds in a ſnow. No fiſher lets downe an empty hooke, but cloathed with a proper and pleaſing bait. Theſe Impoſtors haue no other errand, but deceit. If he loue himſelfe, let him be afraid of their fauours, and thinke their frownes ſafer then their ſmiles. And if at any time (as no fly is more importunante) they thruſt themſelues into his conuerſation, let him (as thoſe which muſt neceſſarily paſſe by a carrion in the way) hold his breath, and haſten to be out of their aire. And if they yet follow him in his flight, let him turne backe to them which the Angels farewell, Increpet te Dominus.

TO MY MVCH HONOR'D FRIEND
Sir HENRY BAKER Knight and Baronet.

SIR,

AMongſt many, to whom my poore labours owe much for their acceptation, I know none that can challenge ſo deepe a debt as your ſelfe. If others haue taſted of my well-meant papers, you haue fed heartily on them; and ſo made them your owne, that your memory may compare with others eyes, and your practiſe with the ſpeculation of others: Neither haue your hand or tongue beene niggardly diſſemblers of your ſpirituall gaine. Vnto you therefore (to whoſe name I had long ſince in my deſires deuoted my next) doe I ſend this meane preſent: A Sermon importunately deſired of many: That which the preſent Auditors found vſefull, the Preſſe ſhall communicate to poſteritie; The gaine of eyther, or both, is no leſſe mine: I doubt not but you haue already ſo acted that part of this diſcourſe which concerneth you, that the direction I giue to others, is but an hiſtory of what you haue done. And goe on happily (worthy Sir) in thoſe your holy courſes which ſhall leade you to immortalitie; and ſo vſe your riches, that they may be made vp into a Crowne for your head in a better world: My hearty well-wiſhes ſhall not be wanting to you and your vertuous Lady, as whom you haue obliged to be iuſtly

Worceſter, April 14.

Yours,

THE RIGHTEOVS MAMMON.

1. Tim. 6. 17.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt in vncertaine riches, but in the liuing God, who giueth vs richly all things to enioy, &c.

THoſe things which are excellent, & beneficiall in their vſe, are dangerous in their miſcariage: It were loſt labour for me to perſwade you how good riches are; your pains and your cares are ſufficient proofes of your eſtimation; and how deadly the abuſe of them is, many a ſoule feeles that cannot returne to complaine; There is nothing more neceſſary therefore for a Chriſtian heart, then to bee rectified in the menaging of a proſperous eſtate; and to learne ſo to be happy here, that it may be more happie hereafter; a taske which this Text of ours vndertakes, and (if ye be not wanting to it and your ſelues) will be ſure to performe: What ſhould I need to entreat your attention (Right Honourable, right Worſhipfull, and beloued) to a buſineſſe ſo neere concerning you? The errand is Gods; the vſe of it yours.

I neuer held it ſafe to pull Scripture in peeces: theſe words fall alone into their parts. Timothy is ſet vpon the ſpirituall Bench, and muſt giue the charge. A charge, to whom? Of what? To whom? To the rich. Of what? what they muſt auoid, what they muſt indeuour. What muſt they auoid? High-mindedneſſe and truſt in wealth: what are the duties they muſt labour vnto? Confidence in God; Beneficence to men: And euery one of theſe is backed with a reaſon to inforce it: Why ſhould they not be high-minded? Their wealth is but in this world; Why ſhould they not truſt in riches? They are vncertaine. Why ſhould they truſt in God? He is a liuing God, and a liberall God: why ſhould they extend their Beneficence to men? By this they lay vp to themſelues a ſure foundation: Here is worke enough, you ſee, for my diſcourſe, and your practice: The God of Heauen bleſſe it in both our hands.

Charge hath (Ianus-like) a double aſpect; one that lookes vp to S. Paul, the other that lookes downe to Timothy, and from him to the rich: In the firſt there is Apoſtolicall ſuperioritie, for (παράγγελλε) Charge thou, referres to παραγγέλλω σοι verſe 13. I Charge thee; ſo Paul charges Timothy to charge the rich; He that giues the Charge, if hee bee not the chiefe of the Bench, yet hee is greater then the Iurie. The firſt foundation of the Church is laid in an inequalitie, and hath euer ſince ſo continued; There can bee no harmony, where all the ſtrings or voices are of one tenour; In the latter, as it lookes on Timothy, it caries in it Epiſcopall power, Euangelicall ſufficiency. Epiſcopall power; for this Charge is by the vulgar turned, and the Tranſlation of the Syriac, Pracipe, command; and ſo doe we tranſlate it in the firſt of this Epiſtle, and the third verſe; Timothy was left at Epheſus (ἵνα παραγγείλῃς) to command.

Charge.

The rich are commonly great; Nobility in the account of God is ioyned with wealth;

hall, J.

wealth; Curſe not the King in thy thought, nor the rich in thy Bed-chamber, ſaith Salomon; ſo Diues at whoſe gates Lazarus lay, is by ſome no meane ones gheſſed to be Herod, or ſome other King; and ſo are Iobs friends termed by the ſeuenty: Yea, the rich is not onely a little King among his neighbours, but Diues, quaſi diuus; as a pretty god to his vnderlings: and yet euen the rich man that (as Salomon notes) ſpeakes with command vnto others, he muſt be ſpoken to with command. Command the rich. That fooliſh ſhaueling ſoared too high a pitch, when in his imperious Bull he commands the Angels; Francis of Aſſiſe and he were both of a Diet; But we may ſafely ſay, that all powers below the Angels, are lyable to our ſpirituall Charge; and this Command implyes obedience; Elſe to what purpoſe doe we command and goe without? Chriſt gaue vs the keyes; (for that which the Romaniſts would plead out of Origen, of Claues cœli, The keyes of heauen to the reſt, and Claues cœlorum, The keyes of the heauens to Peter, is a diſtinction without a difference;) What becomes of them? That I may not ſay, on ſome of our hands they are ſuffered to ruſt for want of vſe; on others (as the Pontificians) the wards are altered, ſo as they can neither open not ſhut: ſure I am; that (if they be not loſt on their behalfe, whether in diſ-vſe, or abuſe) the power of them is loſt in the hearts of many: They haue ſecret pick-locks of their owne making, Preſumption and Security, whereby they can open heauen-gates, though double-locked by our cenſures, and ſhut the gates of hell at pleaſure, which their owne ſinnes haue opened wide to receiue them. What vſe is there of vs, but in our chaire? and there, but to be heard, and ſeene? Euen in this ſenſe ſpectaculo facti ſumus; we are to gaze on, not to imploy. Now ye are full, now ye are rich, ye raigne as Kings without vs; we are weake, ye are ſtrong; ye are Honorable, but we are deſpiſed. It was well noted by one, that the good father of the prodigall, though he might himſelfe haue brought forth the prime robe, or haue led his ſonne into his wardrobe to take it, yet hee commands his ſeruants to bring it forth (Proferte ſtolam) becauſe he would bring meanes into credit; becauſe he would haue his ſonne beholden to his ſeruants for their glory. It is a bold word, but a true one, Yee ſhall neuer weare the long white robe, vnleſſe his ſeruants your Miniſters bring it, and put it on. He that can ſaue you without vs, will not ſaue you, but by vs: He hath not tyed himſelfe to meanes, man he hath; He could create you immediately to himſelfe: but he will haue you begotten by the immortall ſeed of your ſpirituall Fathers. Woe be to you therefore, if our word haue loſt the power of it in you: you haue loſt your right in heauen: Let vs neuer come there, if you can come thither ordinarily without vs. The words of the wiſe (ſaith Salomon) are like goades, like nayles; But if theſe goads light vpon the ſkin of a Leuiathan, who eſteemes yron as ſtraw, and braſſe as rotten wood; If theſe nayles meet with yron, or marble in their driuing, that they turne againe: What ſhall we ſay, but our Goſpell is hid to them that periſh; and woe vnto your ſoules, for ye haue rewarded euill to your ſelues.

Maldonat could incline to that: in locum.

Hitherto the power implied in this charge; the ſufficiencie followeth: This Euangelicus muſt be parangelicus; like as the fore-runner of Chriſt had a charge for all ſorts, ſo muſt his followers; So hath Timothy in this Epiſtle, A charge for wiues, for Biſhops, for Deacons, for widowes, for ſeruants, and here for the rich. He muſt charge; and how ſhall he charge, if he haue neither ſhot nor powder. It is no bragge to ſay that no Nation vnder Heauen ſince the Goſpell lookt forth into the world, euer had ſo many, ſo learned Teachers as this Iland hath at this day. Hierome ſaid of old to his Paulinus, De Hieroſolymis & de Brittannia, æqualiter patet aula cœleſtis: Heauen is open in Britaine as in Hieruſalem. It holds well, if you take it for a propheticall compariſon betwixt Ieruſalem as it had beene, and Britaine as it ſhould bee. Ieruſalem the type of Gods Church vpon earth in the glory of all her legall magnificence, was neuer more bleſſed then this Church of ours: For the Northerne part of it beyond the Twede, we ſaw not, wee heard not of a Congregation (whereof indeed there is not ſo great frequence) without a preaching Miniſter; and though their maintenance hath beene generally but ſmall, yet their paines haue beene great, and their ſucceſſe ſutable: And now lately, his Sacred Maieſtie in his laſt yeares iourney (as if the Sunne did out of com-compaſſion goe beyond his Tropick Line, to giue heat vnto the Northerne Climate) hath ſo ordered it, that their meanes ſhall bee anſwerable to their labours; ſo as both Paſtors and People profeſſe themſelues mutually bleſſed in each other; and bleſſe God and their King for this bleſſedneſſe.

Somewhat aboue eight hundred.

As for the learning and ſufficiency of thoſe Teachers (whether Prelates or Presbyters) our eares were for ſome of them ſufficient witneſſes; and wee are not worthy of our eares, if our tongues doe not thankfully proclaime it to the world. As for this Southerne part, when I conſider the face of our Church in an vniuerſality, me thinkes I ſee the firmament in a cleare night, beſpangled with goodly ſtarres of all magnitudes, that yeeld a pleaſing diuerſitie of light vnto the earth; But withall through the incomparable multitude of Cures and the incompetent prouiſion of ſome, we cannot but ſee ſome of our people (eſpecially in the vtmoſt skirts) like to thoſe that liue vnder the Southerne Pole, where the ſtarres are thinner ſet; and ſome ſtarres there are in our Hemiſphere, like thoſe little ſparkles in the Galaxy, or Milkie circle, wherein yee can ſcarce diſcerne any light: The deſire of our hearts muſt bee, that euery Congregation, euery ſoule might haue a Timothy to deliuer the charge of God powerfully vnto it, euen with Saint Pauls change of note: That euery one which hath a charge, were (διδακτικὸς) able to giue the charge; and euery hearer (θεοδίδακτος) ready to take it: Wherein I cannot but thankefully congratulate the happineſſe of this famous City, which if in other riches it equalize the beſt, I am ſure in this it exceeds all. There is not a Citie vnder the cope of heauen ſo wealthy in the ſpirituall prouiſion; yea, there are whole countries in Chriſtendome, that haue not ſo many learned Preachers, as are within theſe wals and liberties. Here this ye Citizens, and be not proud, but thankefull; Others may exceede you in the glory of outward ſtructure, in the largeneſſe of extent, in the vniforme proportion of ſtreets, or ornaments of Temples, but your pulpits doe ſurpaſſe theirs; and if preaching can lift vp Cities vnto heauen, ye are not vpon earth; Happie is it for you, if ye be well fed and taught; and woe bee vnto you, if you doe not thinke your ſelues happy.

The rich.

Charge them, but whom? The rich. Man that came naked out of the wombe of the earth, was euen then ſo rich, that all things were his; Heauen was his roofe or Canopie, earth his floore, the ſea his pond, the Sunne and Moone his Torches, all creatures his vaſſals: And if he loſt the fulneſſe of this Lordſhip, by being a ſlaue to ſinne, yet we haue ſtill Dominium gratificum, as Gerſon tearmes it: euery ſonne of Abraham is heire of the world. But to make vp the true reputation of wealth (for thus we may bee as hauing all things, and poſſeſſing nothing) another right is required beſides ſpirituall, which is a ciuill and humane right; wherein I doubt not but our learned Wicklef, and & the famous Archbiſhop of Armach, and the more famous Chancellor of Paris (three renowmed Diuines of England, France, and Ireland) haue had much wrong, whiles they are accuſed to teach, that men in theſe earthly things haue no tenure but grace, no tittle but Charitie: which queſtionleſſe they intended in foro interiori, in the Conſiſtorie of God, not in the Common pleas of men; in the Courts, not of Law, but of Conſcience, in which onely it may fall out, that the Ciuill owner may bee a ſpirituall vſurper, and the ſpirituall owner may be a ciuill beggar. God frames his language to ours, and ſpeaking according to that Ius Gentium, whereon the diuiſion of theſe earthly poſſeſſions are grounded, he cals ſome rich, others poore. Thoſe heretikes which called themſelues Apoſtolique (as ſome-body doth now at Rome) before the time of Epiphanius and Auguſtine, which taught the vnlawfulneſſe of all earthly proprieties, ſeconded in Auſtins time, by our countreyman Pelagius, and in our times by ſome of the illuminate Elders of Munſter, are not worth confutation; or if they were, our Apoſtle hath done it to our hands, in this one word, Rich; for there can be neither rich nor poore in a communitie; Neither doth he ſay, Charge men that they be not rich, but, Charge the rich that they be not high-minded.

Rom.4.31.

Titulum charitatis Dom. à Soto de Iuſtitia & Iure.

With theſe let vs couple our ignorant Votaries, that place holineſſe in want; with whom, their very croſſes cannot deliuer their coyne from ſinne; which, to make good

the

the old rule, that it is better to giue then to receiue, giue all they haue away at once, for but a licence to begge for euer. Did theſe men euer heare that the bleſſing of God maketh rich? That the wings of riches carie them vp to heauen? That the crowne of the wiſe is their wealth? Do they not know, that if Lazarus were poore, yet Abraham was rich, and Pium pauperem ſuſcepit ſinus diuitis; It was the happineſſe of poore Lazarus, that he was lodged in the boſome of rich Abraham. I am no whit afraid, (O ye rich Citizens) leſt this paradoxe of our holy Mendicants ſhall make you out of loue with your wealth; I feare, ſome of you would be rich, though yee might not; Now we tell you from him, whoſe title is Rich in mercy, that ye may be at once rich and holy; In diuitiis cupiditatem reprehendit, non facultatem, ſaith Auſtine: It is a true word of the ſonne of Sirach, which I would haue you carie home with you, and write it as a fit Motto, in your Counting-houſe; Bona eſt ſubſtantia, ſi non ſit peccatum in conſcientia: Subſtance doth well in the hand, if there be not euill in the heart, Eccleſiaſticus 13. 25.

Charge the rich. Who are they? There is nothing wherein is greater miſpriſion. One man in a Laodician conceitednes thinks himſelfe rich, when he hath nothing; Another in a couetous humor thinks he hath nothing, when he is rich; & how eaſie is it for another man to miſtake vs, if we may thus eaſily miſtake our ſelues? I feare, ſome of you are like the Pageants of your great ſolemnities, wherein there is the ſhew of a ſolid body, whether of a Lyon, or Elephant, or Vnicorn: but if they be curiouſly look't into, there is nothing but cloth, and ſticks, & ayre. Others of you contrarily, are like a diſſembling Couent, that profeſſes pouerty, and purchaſes Lordſhips. The very ſame did Salomon obſerue in his time, in the great Burgomaſters of Ieruſalem, Pro. 13. 7. For the auoiding of both extremes, let vs inquire who is rich. And though greatneſſe and riches be in the ranke of thoſe things which are held to haue no abſolute determination, but conſiſt rather in reſpect and compariſon: (for a rich Farmer is yet poore to a rich Merchant, and a rich Merchant is but poore to a Prince, and he to ſome great Emperor: That great Mammoniſt would ſay, he is rich, that can maintaine an Armie: A poore man would ſay, according to that Italian inſcription, Hee is rich that wants not bread;) Yet certainly there are certaine generall ſtakes and bounds, which diuide betwixt pouertie and competence, betwixt competency and wealth; As there were variety of ſhekels among the Iewes, yet there was one ſhekel of the Sanctuary that varied not; Who then is rich? I muſt giue you a double anſwer, one will not ſerue. The one, according to true moralitie; the other, according to vulgar vſe: In the firſt he is rich that hath enough, whether the world thinke ſo or not; Euen Eſau, tho he were poore in grace, yet in eſtate he was rich: I haue enough my brother. And he that ſaid, Soule, thou haſt goods enow for many yeares, was almoſt ſo; It was not his fault that he thought he had enough, but that he meant to lye downe, and wallow in it. A mans wealth or pouerty is moſt-what in himſelfe, And though nature haue profeſſed to read vnto heathen men this leſſon of wiſe moderation, yet it hath beene ſeldome ſeen, that any thing but true piety, hath taught them to take it out; Godlineſſe is great gaine with contentment: Victus & veſtitus diuitiæ Chriſtianorum, ſaith Hierom: Food and raiment are the Chriſtians wealth; Thoſe men therefore, which are ſtill in the horſe-leeches note, ſucking and crauing; which, like Pharaohs leane kine, are euer feeding, and neuer the fatter, are as farre from true wealth, as they would be from pouertie; and further I am ſure they cannot be, and not further from wealth then godlineſſe. Hauing, is the meaſure of outward wealth: but it is thinking that muſt meaſure the inward thoughts, I ſay of contentment, cheerefulneſſe, and thankfulneſſe, which if ye want, it is not either or both the Indies that can make you rich.

In the latter, he is rich, that hath more then enough, whether he thinke ſo or no: He that hath the poſſeſſion (whether ciuill or naturall) of more then neceſſarie. Now if neceſſarie and ſuperfluous ſeeme as hard to define as rich; know, there are iuſt limits for both theſe: Superfluous is defined by neceſſary; for what is aboue neceſſary, is ſuperfluous; There is then a double neceſſarie; One, of nature, the other, of eſtate: That is neceſſary to nature, without which we cannot liue; that to eſtate, without which wee cannot liue well : That is neceſſary to eſtate, which were ſuperfluous to nature; and that which were ſuperfluous to nature, is not ſo much as neceſſary to eſtate; Nature goes ſingle, and beares little breadth; Eſtate goes euer with a traine; The neceſſity of nature admits little difference, eſpecially for quantities, the neceſſitie of eſtate requires as many diuerſities, as there are ſeuerall degrees of humane conditions, and ſeuerall circumſtances in thoſe degrees. Iuſtly therefore doe the Schoolemen and Caſuiſts teach, that this neceſſity to the decencie of eſtate, doth not conſiſt in puncto indiuiduo, but hath much latitude; That is neceſſary to ſcarlet, which to ruſſet were ſuperfluous; that is but neceſſary to a Nobleman, which to an Eſquire were ſuperfluous; That were ſuperfluous to a Peere, which to a Prince is but neceſſary : That is neceſſary to the father of a family, which to a ſingle man were ſuperfluous : Neither doth this neceſſity looke onely to the preſent, but to the future; not to what may be (which were an endleſſe proſpect) but to what muſt bee, the mariage of a daughter, the education of a ſonne, the honeſt prouiſion for poſteritie : He that in a iuſt eſtimate can goe beyond the bounds of this neceſſary, enters into the ſuperfluous eſtate, and may well paſſe with the world for rich.

Such a one is rich; let him looke how he became ſo : That God which can allow you to be rich, will not allow you alwaies to your wealth : He hath ſet vp a golden Goale, to which he allowes you all to run, but yee muſt keepe the beaten rode of honeſty, iuſtice, charity, and truth; if ye will leaue this path, and will be croſſing ouer a ſhorter cut thorow by-wayes of your owne, yee may be rich with a vengeance. The heathen Poet (one of them whom S. Paul cited) could obſerue ([illegible]) which Salomon tranſlates to vs, He that makes haſte to bee rich, ſhall not bee innocent. If you haue filled your bags with fraud, vſury, extortion, this gaine may be hony in your mouth, but it will be grauell in your throat, and poyſon in your ſoule. There are ſome meanes of wealth in an ill name, as thoſe two truſty ſeruants of Mammon, Vſe and Brocage; there are others as bad as they, little ſaid to. Since I ſpeake to Citizens, let me be bold to ſay, There is not ſo arrant vſury in letting of money, as in ſale of wares. This oppreſſion is both more, and more vniuerſall. There are two maximes that doe vſually miſ-lead men of Traffique, all the world ouer: The one is, Res valet quanti vendi poteſt, A thing is worth what it may be ſold for; The other, Caueat emptor, At the buyers perill : The one is in regard of the price, the other, in regard of the quality of the wares. In the firſt, whereas our Caſuiſts haue ſet three prices, low, meane, rigorous, they ſuper-adde a fourth, exceſſiue, and thinke they may lawfully get what they can : Whereas they ſhall once finde, that as the rigorous price is a ſtraine of charity, ſo the exceſſiue is a violation of iuſtice; neither doth this gaine differ ought from theft, but that it is honeſted by a fair coozenage. In the ſecond, It matters not how defectiue the meaſure be, how vicious the ſubſtance, how falſe the kind, let this be the buyers care; No man is bound to buy, no man can doe wrong to himſelfe; Such wares muſt be put off, (perhaps not to cuſtomers) with concealment of faults, if not with proteſtations of faultleſſeneſſe. In Salomons time, It is naught, it is naught, ſaid the buyer, and when he was gone apart, hee boaſted; But now, It is good, it is good, ſaith the ſeller, and when the buyer is gone, he boaſteth of his deceit. Let me appeale to your boſomes, if theſe two, Exceſſe of price, and deficiency of worth haue not been the moſt ſeruiceable factors to bring in ſome of your wealth; And let me tell you, if theſe be guilty of your gaines, you may miſname your trades, Myſteries : but ſure theſe trickes are myſteries of iniquitie. It were enuious and infinite to arraigne the ſeuerall ſciences of their adulteration and fraud; let me rather ſhut them all vp together in that fearfull ſentence of wiſe Salomon, The gathering of treaſures by a deceitfull tongue, is a vanity toſſed too and fro of them that ſeeke death: and (if you pleaſe) read on the next verſe, The robbery of the wicked ſhall deſtroy them; Search your cheſts, ſearch your hearts (O all ye that heare me this day) and if any of you finde any of this adulterine gold amongſt your heapes, away with it, as you loue your ſelues, away with it : Elſe know, (that as Chryſoſtome wittily) ye haue lockt vp a theefe in your Counting-houſe, which will cary away all, and if ye looke not to it the ſooner, your ſoules with it.

In this world.

Rich in this world, not Of it. As S. Iohn diſtinguiſheth of being in the Church, and being of it, ſo doth S. Paul of the world; Thoſe are the rich of the world, which are worldlings in heart, as well as in eſtate; Thoſe are rich in the world, whoſe eſtate is below, whoſe hearts are aboue: The rich of the world are in it, but the rich in the world are not of it: Maruell not there ſhould be ſo much difference in little particles; The time was when this very difference of ἐν, and ἐκ, ſet the world together by the eares in the controuerſie of Eutyches, and Dioſcorus; and here, you ſee there is no leſſe diſtance betweene them, then betwixt heauen and earth: If Timothy or S. Paul either ſhould haue charged the rich of the world, he had charmed a deafe Adder; yea perhaps euen with this charge (like a ruſty or ill wrought Peece) they had recoyled in his face with thoſe Athenians, What will this babbler ſay? The Prophet is a foole, the ſpirituall man is mad, as they ſay in the Prophet: There is no good to be done on a worldly heart, it is both hard and cold; Let the Smith ſtrike a barre new-come out of the fire (though it be iron) it bowes; let him ſtrike on his anvile neuer ſo long, there is no impreſſion, but rather a rebound of the ſtroke. The Maker of all hearts tels vs, that the vnregenerate man hath Cor lapideum, an heart of ſtone: and to what purpoſe doe wee with our venerable Country man preach to an heape of ſtones; Will ye haue the reaſon why we preach our ſelues hoarſe and dead, and preuaile not? The world is in mens eares, the world is in their hearts; and they are not in the world, but of it; and there can be nothing in them that are of the world, but that which is enmity to God, and that which repayes with enmity; ſo as there is no way for them but periſhing with the world: It is for thoſe onely whoſe hearts are not in their bags, to receiue the charge from God for their wealth, and to returne glory to him by it: To theſe (whereof I hope here are many before me) muſt Timothies charge, and my ſpeech be directed: Let theſe heare their condition firſt, and then their duty: Their condition, They are rich, but In this world; For diſtinction, for limitation; one implyes the eſtate of their riches, the other the time.

Their eſtate, as learned Beza, that they are but wordly riches. The very word imports that there are other riches, not of the world; as Auſten diſtinguiſhes of Pauper in animo, and in ſaeculo; poore in minde, and in purſe; ſo may we of the rich: There is a ſpirituall wealth, as well as a ſecular; and ſo true and pretious is the ſpirituall, that the ſecular wealth is but ſtarke beggery to it: This outward wealth is in acres of earth, in the bowels of the earth, the fruits of the earth, beaſts of the earth; and all of it is valued be pieces of earth, and one mouthfull of earth makes an end of all. Who knowes not that earth is the baſeſt piece of the world, and yet earth is at the end of all theſe riches, and all of them end in the earth? See what it is that the world dotes and dreames of; (for theſe earthly hopes, as the diuine Philoſopher ſaid, are but dreames of the waking) euen NebuchadneZZars image, a compoſition of metals, and the foot of all is clay. Earthly men tread vpon their felicity, and yet haue not the wit to contemne it, and to ſeeke a better, which is the ſpirituall wealth; the cabinet whereof is the ſoule, and the treaſure in it, God himſelfe. O happy reſolution of that bleſſed Father, Omnis mihi copia, quæ Deus meus non eſt, egeſtas eſt: All wealth beſides my God, is penury. Ambiant terrena, ſaith another: Let the Gentiles ſeeke after earthly things, which haue not right to heauenly; let them deſire the preſent, which beleeue not the future; The Chriſtians wealth is his Sauiour: and how can he complaine of meaſure, that hath the author of all? What ſhould I need to ſay more of the Chriſtian heart? Hee is rich in God: and therefore well may he ſing that contented ditty of the Pſalmiſt, Funes ceciderunt mihi in præclaris: My lot is falne in a good grounnd, and I haue a goodly heritage. Oh that it could be our ambition, that Nazianzen reports of his Philagrius, lutum contemnere, to ſcorne this baſe and (pardon an homely word) dirty god of the world, and to aſpire vnto the true riches! And when Satan ſhall offer to greaze vs in the fiſt, to remit but a little of the rigor of a good conſcience, wee could caſt it in his face with S. Peters indignation, Thy gold and thy ſiluer periſh with thee!

Auſten.

The eſtate of wealth is not more deſcribed by this world, then the time; For ([a] αἰὼν) when it is abſolutely ſpoken, be, as the Philoſopher ([b] ἀειὼν,) when it is reſtrained with a([c] νῦν) it is ſcarce a time; and at the moſt, is turned iuſtly ſeculum à ſequendo, as Iſidore. Like as the ſame word in the Hebrew, that ſignifies eternity, at other times ſignifies but fifty yeares, the compaſſe of a Iubilee; So as (νῦν αἰὼν) is but the ſpace of humane life, which how ſhort ſoeuer, is the vtmoſt extent of the vſe of worldly riches. Wealth is like vnto words, by impoſition, not naturall; for commodities are as they are commonly valued; we know, bracelets of glaſſe, and copper chaines, and little bels, and ſuch like trifles, are good merchandiſe ſome-where, though contemptible with vs; and thoſe things which the Indians regard not, Europe holds precious. What are coynes where their vſe and valuation ceaſes? The Patars, and Souſes, and Deniers, and Quart-d'eſcus, that are currant beyond the water, ſerue but for counters to vs: Thus it is with all our wealth: Conſider, I beſeech you, that all our Crownes, and Soueraynes, and Pieces, and halfe-pieces, and Duckets, and double Duckets, are currant but to the brim of the graue, there they ceaſe; and we iuſtly laugh at the folly of thoſe Eaſterne Pagans, which put coyne into the dead mans hand for his prouiſion in another world: What ſhould we doe therefore, if we will be prouident Trauellers, but make ouer our money here, to receiue it by exchange in the world to come? It is our Sauiours counſell, Make you friends of the vnrighteous Mammon, that they may receiue you into euerlaſting habitations. And as a father ſayes ſweetly, If yee will bee wiſe Merchants, thrifty and happy vſurers, part with that which you cannot keepe, that you may gaine that which you cannot loſe: Which that ye may doe, both in preparation of mind, and (when need is) in a charitable abdication, hearken to the Duties which God layes vpon you. The remoueall of euill muſt make roome for good: Firſt therefore our Apoſtle would haue our hearts cleared of euill diſpoſitions, then ſetled in good: The euill diſpoſitions that doe commonly attend wealth, are Pride and Miſconfidence: Againſt theſe our Apoſtle bendeth his charge, That they be not hye-minded; that they truſt not in vncertaine riches.

That they be not hye minded.

For the firſt; It is ſtrange to ſee how this earthly droſſe, which is of it ſelfe heauy, and therefore naturally ſinkes downward, ſhould raiſe vp the heart of man; and yet it commonly caries a man vp, euen to a double pitch of pride, one aboue others, the other aboue himſelfe: Aboue others in contempt, aboue himſelfe in ouer-weening: The poore and proud is the Wiſemans monſter, but the proud and rich are no newes: It is againſt all reaſon, that metals ſhould make difference of reaſonable men, of Chriſtians; for as that wiſe Law-giuer ſaid, A free man can be valued at no price: Yet Salomon noted in his time, The rich rules the poore; not the wiſe: and Siracides in his, The rich ſpeakes proudly, and what fellow is this? and Saint Iames in his, The man with the gold ring lookes to ſit higheſt. And not to caſt backe our eyes, doe ye not ſee it thus in our times? If a man be but worth a foot-cloth, how big hee lookes on the inferiour paſſengers? and if he haue purchaſed a little more land, or title then his neighbours, you ſhall ſee it in his garbe; if he command, it is imperiouſly, with ſirrah, and fellow; If he ſalute, it is ouerly, with a ſurly and ſilent nod; if he ſpeake, it is oracles; if hee walke, it is with a grace; if he controll, it is in the killing accent; if he entertaine, it is with inſolence; and whatſoeuer he doth, he is not as he was, not (as the Phariſe ſayes) like other men. He lookes vpon vulgar men, as if they were made to ſerue him, and ſhould thinke themſelues happy to be commanded: and if he bee croſſed a little, hee ſwels like the ſea in a ſtorme: Let it be by his equall, he cares more for an affront, then for death, or hell; Let it be by his inferiour, (although in a iuſt cauſe) that man ſhall be ſure to be cruſht to death for his preſumption: And alas, when all is done, after theſe hye tearmes, all this is but a man, and (God knowes) a fooliſh one too, whom a little earthly traſh can affect ſo deeply.

Neither doth this pride raiſe a man more aboue others, then aboue himſelfe: And what wonder is it if hee will not know his poore neighbours, which hath forgotten himſelfe? As Saul was changed to another man preſently vpon his anointing, ſo are men vpon their aduancement; and according to our ordinary Prouerb, Their good and their blood riſes together; Now it may not be taken as it hath beene; Other cariage, other faſhions are fit for them; their attire, fare, retinue, houſes, furniture diſpleaſe them, new muſt be had; together with coaches, and lacquies, and all the equipage of greatneſſe: Theſe things (that no man miſtake me) I miſlike not: they are fit for thoſe that are fit for them. Charity is not ſtrait-laced, but yeelds much latitude to the lawfull vſe of indifferent things; (although it is one of Salomons vanities, that ſeruants ſhould ride on horſe-backe; and hee tels vs it becomes not a ſwine to bee ring'd with gold) but it is the heart that maketh all theſe euill: when that is puft vp with theſe windy vanities, & hath learned to borrow that part of the deuils ſpeech, All theſe things are mine; and can ſay with him that was turned into a beaſt, Is not this great Babel that I haue built? or with that other patterne of pride, I ſit as a Queene, I am, and there is none beſides me. Now all theſe turne into ſinne.

The buſh that hangs out, ſhewes what wee may looke for within; Whither doth the conceit of a little inheritance tranſport the Gallants of our time? O God, what a world of vanity haſt thou reſeru'd vs to? I am aſham'd to thinke that the Goſpell of Chriſt ſhould be diſgraced with ſuch diſguiſed clients. Are they Chriſtians, or Antickes in ſome Carneuale, or childrens puppets that are thus dreſſed? Pardon, I beſeech you, men, brethren, and fathers, this my iuſt and holy impatience, that could neuer expreſſe it ſelfe in a more ſolemne aſſembly (although I perceiue, thoſe whom it moſt concernes, are not ſo deuout as to be preſent.) Who can without indignation looke vpon the prodigies which this miſ-imagination produces in that other ſex, to the ſhame of their husbands, the ſcorne of Religion, the damnation of their owne ſoules? Imagine one of our fore-fathers were aliue againe, and ſhould ſee one of theſe his gay daughters walke in Cheape-ſide before him; what doe you thinke he would thinke it were? Here is nothing to be ſeene but a verdingale, a yellow ruffe, and a periwig, with perhaps ſome fethers wauing in the top; three things for which he could not tell how to find a name: Sure, he could not but ſtand amazed, to thinke what new creature the times had yeelded ſince he was a mã: & if then he ſhould run before her, to ſee if by the fore-ſide he might gheſſe what it were, when his eyes ſhould meet with a poudred frizle, a painted hide ſhadowed with a fan not more painted, breſts diſplayd, and a looſe locke erring wantonly ouer her ſhoulders, betwixt a painted cloth and skinne; how would he yet more bleſſe himſelfe to thinke, what mixture in nature could bee guilty of ſuch a monſter? Is this (thinkes he) the fleſh and blood? is this the hayre? is this the ſhape of a woman? or hath nature repented of her worke ſince my dayes, and begunne a new frame? It is no maruell if their forefathers could not know them; God himſelfe that made them, will neuer acknowledge that face he neuer made, the hayre that he neuer made theirs, the body that is aſham'd of the Maker, the ſoule that thus diſguiſes the body,

Let me therfore ſay to theſe dames, as Benet ſaid to Totilaes ſeruant, Depone, filia, quod portas, quia non eſt tuum; Lay downe that ye weare, it is none of your owne. Let me perſwade them (for that can worke moſt) that they doe all this in their owne wrong. All the world knowes that no man will rough-caſte a marble wall, but mud, or vnpoliſht ragge: that beauty is like truth, neuer ſo glorious as when it goes plaineſt; that falſe art, in ſtead of mending nature, marres it. But if none of our perſwaſions can preuaile. Heare this, ye gariſh Popingayes of our time, if you will not be aſhamed to cloath your ſelues in this ſhameleſſe faſhion, God ſhall cloath you with ſhame and confuſion: heare this yee plaiſter-faced Iezabels, if you will not leaue your dawbing, and your high waſhes, GOD will one day waſh them off with fire and brimſtone.

I grant, it is not wealth alone that is acceſſary to this pride; there are ſome that (with the Cynicke, or that worſe dogge, the patcht Ciſtertian) are proud of rags; there are others, that are rich of nothing but cloathes, ſome what like to Nazianzens country of Ozizala, that abounded in flowers, but was barren of corne; their cloathes are more worth then all the reſt; as wee vſe to ſay of the Elder, that the flower of it is more worth then all the tree beſides; but if there be any other cauſes of our hye-mindedneſſe, wealth is one, which doth ordinarily lift vp our heads aboue our ſelues, aboue others; and if there be here any of theſe empty bladders, that are puſt vp with the wind of conceit, giue me leaue to pricke them a little; and firſt, let mee tell them they may haue much, & be neuer the better: The chimny ouer-lookes all the reſt of the houſe, is it not (for all that) the very baſeſt piece of the building? The very heathen man could obſerue (πολλοῖς ὁ δαίμων, &c.) That God giues many a man wealth for their greater miſchiefe: As the Iſraelites were rich in Quailes, but their ſawce was ſuch, that famine had beene better; little cauſe had they to be proud that they were fed with meat of Princes, with the bread of Angels, whiles that which they put into their mouthes, God fetcht out of their noſtrils. Haman was proud that he alone was called to the honour of Eſters feaſt: this aduancement raiſed him fifty cubits higher, to a ſtately gibbet. If your wealth be to any of you an occaſion of falling, if your gold be turned into fetters, it had beene better for you to haue liued beggers. Let me tell them next, of the folly of this pride; They are proud of that which is none of theirs, That which law and caſe-diuinity ſpeakes of life, that man is not dominus vitæ ſuæ, ſed cuſtos, is as true of wealth: Nature can tell him in the Philoſopher, that he is not Dominus, but Colonus, not the Lord, but the Farmer. It is a iuſt obſeruation of Philo, that God onely by a propriety is ſtyled the Poſſeſſor of heauen and earth, by Melchiſedec, in his ſpeech to Abraham, we are onely the tenants, and that at the will of the Lord; At the moſt (if we will as Diuines) we haue jus ad rem, not dominium in rem, right to theſe earthly things, not Lordſhip ouer them; but right of fauour from their proprietary, and Lord in heauen, and that liable to an account. Doe we not laugh at the groome that is proud of his maſters horſe, or ſome vaine whiffler, that is proud of a borrowed chaine? So ridiculous are we to be puſt vp with that, whereof we muſt needs ſay, with the poore man, of the hatchet, Alas, maſter, it is but borrowed; and whereof our account ſhall be ſo much more great, and difficult, as our receit it more. Hath God therefore laded you with theſe earthly riches? be ye like vnto the full eare of corne, hang downe your heads in true humility towards that earth from which you came: And if your ſtalke be ſo ſtiffe, that it beares vp aboue the reſt of your ridge, looke vp to heauen, not in the thoughts of pride, but in the humble vowes of thankfulneſſe and be not hie-minded, but feare.

And that they truſt not.

Hitherto of the hye-mindedneſſe that followes wealth; Now where our pride is, there will be our confidence: As the wealthy therfore may not be proud of their riches, ſo they may not truſt in them: What is this truſt, but the ſetting of our hearts vpon them, the placing of our ioy and contentment in them; in a word, the making of them our beſt friend, our patron, our idoll, our god? This the true and ielous God cannot abide, and yet nothing is more ordinary; The rich mans wealth is his ſtrong City, ſaith Salomon: & where ſhould a man thinke himſelfe ſafe, but in his fort? He ſees Mammon can doe ſo much, and heares him talke of doing ſo much more, it is no maruell if hee yeeld to truſt him: Mammon is ſo proud a boaſter, that his clients which beleeue in him cannot chuſe but be confident of him; For what doth he not brag to doe? Siluer anſwers to all, ſaith Salomon. That we grant; although we would be loath it could anſwer to truth, to iuſtice, to iudgement: But yet more, he vaunts to procure all, to pacifie all, to conquer all; He ſaies, he can procure all ſecular offices, titles, dignities; yea (I would I might not lay in ſome ſacrilegious and periured wretches) the ſacred promotions of the Church: and ye know that old ſong of the Pope, and his Romane trafficke, Claues, Altaria, Chriſtum: Yea, fooliſh Magus makes full account, the Holy Ghoſt himſelfe may be had for mony: He ſayes he can pacifie all; A gift in the boſome appeaſes wrath; yea, he ſayes (looke to it ye that ſit in the ſeats of iudicature) hee can ſometimes bribe off ſinnes, and peruert iudgement: He ſayes hee can ouercome all, according to the old Greeke verſe, Fight with ſiluer launces, and you cannot faile of victory; yea, he would make vs beleeue he thought this a bait to catch the Sonne of God himſelfe withall (All theſe will I giue thee.) Briefly hee ſayes according to the French Prouerbe, Siluer does all. And let me tell you indeed, what Mammon can doe; Hee can barre the gates of hell to the vnconſcionable ſoule, and helpe his followers to damnation: This he can doe; but for other things, howſoeuer with vs men, the fooliſh Siluer-ſmiths may ſhout out, Great is Mammon of the worldings: yet if we weigh his power aright, we ſhall conclude of Mammon (as Paracelſus doth of the Diuell) that he is a baſe and beggerly ſpirit: For what, I beſeech you can he doe? Can he make a man honeſt? can he make him wiſe? can he make him healthfull? Can he giue a man to liue more merily, to feed more heartily, to ſleepe more quietly? Can we buy off the gout, cares, death, much leſſe the paines of another world? nay, doth he not bring all theſe? Goe to then, thou rich man; God is offended with thee, and meanes to plague thee with diſeaſe & death; Now try what thy bagges can doe; Begin firſt with God, and ſee whether thou canſt bribe him with thy gifts, and buy off his diſpleaſure; Wherewith ſhalt thou come before the Lord, and bow thy ſelfe before the high God? Will the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of Rams, or with ten thouſand riuers of oyle? The ſiluer is mine, and the gold is mine, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Haggai 2. If that ſpeed not, goe to the ſergeant of God, death; ſee if thou canſt fee him, not to arreſt thee; He lookes thee ſternely in the face, and tels thee with Ehud, he hath a meſſage to thee from God; and bids thee with the Prophet, Set thine houſe in order, for thou muſt dye; Yet, if he heare thee not, goe to the vnder-bayliffe of Death, diſeaſe, ſee if he can be wrought to forbeare thee; hee anſwers thee with Laban, This thing is proceeded of the Lord, I cannot therefore ſay to thee euill or good. In ſumme, Diſeaſe will ſummon thee vnto death; death will arreſt thee to the Iudgement ſeat of God, God will paſſe his doome vpon thee; and in all theſe, Riches auaile not in the day of wrath: And who would be ſo mad as to truſt a friend that hee knowes will be ſure neuer to faile him, but when he hath moſt need? Take heed therefore, as ye loue your ſoules, how ye beſtow your Truſt vpon riches; Ye may vſe them, and ſerue your ſelues of them; yea, yee may enioy them in a Chriſtian moderation; God will allow it you: That praiſe which the Ieſuites Colledge at Granado giues of their Sanchez, that (though he liued where they had a very ſweet garden) yet he was neuer ſeene to touch a flower, and that he would rather dye then eate Salt, or Pepper, or ought that might giue relliſh to his meat; like as that of ſome other Monkes, that they would not ſee the Sunne, nor ſhift their cloathes, nor cleanſe their teeth, caries in it more ſuperſtition and auſteritie and ſlouenry, then wit or grace: Wherefore hath God made his creatures but for vſe? This niggardlineſſe is iniurious to the bounty of their Maker; we may vſe them, we may not truſt to them; we may ſerue our ſelues of them, we may not ſerue them; we may inioy them, we may not ouer-ioy in them; ſo muſt wee be affected to our goods, as Theoderic the good King of Aquitaine was with his play, In bonis iactibus tacet, in malis ridet, in neutris iraſcitur, in vtriſque Philoſophatur, In good caſts hee was ſilent; in ill, merry; in neither angry, a Philoſopher in both. But if we will be making our wealth a riuall vnto God, now the iealouſie of God ſhall burne like fire: this is the way to bring a curſe vpon our riches, and vs; if we leane vpon this reed, it ſhall breake, and runne into our hand; and he that truſteth in riches, ſhall fall, Prou. 11.28.

Now as the diſdainfull riuall will bee ſure to caſt reproaches vpon his baſe competitor; ſo doth God, that wee may ſee how vnworthy riches are of our truſt, hee tels vs, they are vncertaine, yea vncertaintie it ſelfe. Were our wealth tyed to our life, it were vncertaine enough; what is that but a flower, a vapour, a tale, a dreame, a ſhadow, a dreame of a ſhadow, a thought, as nothing? What are great men but like Haileſtones, that leape vp on the Tiles, and ſtraight fall downe againe, and lye ſtill, and melt away? But now, as wee are certaine that our riches determine with our vncertaine life (for goods and life are both in a bottome, both are caſt away at once,) ſo wee cannot bee certaine they will hold ſo long: Our life flyes haſtily away, but many times our riches haue longer wings, and out-fly it. It was a witty obſeruation of Baſil, that wealth roles along by a man, like as an heady ſtreame glides by the bankes: Time will molder away the very banke it waſheth, but the current ſtayes not for that, but ſpeeds forward from one elbow of earth vnto another: ſo doth our wealth, euen while wee ſtay,

ἐν ἀδηλότητι τοῦ πλούτου.

ῥύσιν ἡ φύσις τοῦ πλούτου, χειμάῤῥου ὀξύτερον τοὺς το ἔχοντας παρατρέχει, &c. Baſil in Pſal. 61.

ſtay, it is gone. In our penall lawes, there are more wayes to forfeit our goods, then our liues; On our high wayes, how many fauourable theeues take the purſe, and ſaue life? And generally, our life is the tree, our wealth is the leaues, or fruit; the tree ſtands ſtill, when the leaues are falne, the fruit beaten downe: Yea many a one is like the Pine-tree, which (they ſay) if his barke be pulled off, laſts long, elſe it rots: ſo doth many a man liue the longer for his loſſes: if therefore life and wealth ſtriue whether is more vncertaine, wealth will ſure carie it away. Iob was yeſterday the richeſt man in the Eaſt; to day he is ſo needy, that he is gone into a prouerbe, As poore as Iob: Beliſarius the great and famous Commander, to whom Rome owed her life twice at leaſt, came to Date obolum Beliſario; one halfe-peny to Beliſarius. What do I inſtance? This is a point, wherein many of you Citizens that are my Auditors this day, might rather reade a lecture vnto me; You could tell me how many you haue knowne, reputed in your phraſe, good men, which all on the ſudden haue ſhut vp the ſhop windows, and broken for thouſands: You could reckon vp to me a Catalogue of them, whom either caſualitie of fire, or inundation of waters, or Robberie of theeues, or negligence of ſeruants, or ſuretiſhip for friends, or ouerſight of reckonings, or truſting of cuſtomers, or vnfaithfulneſſe of Factors, or inexpected falls of markets, or Pyracie by Sea, or vnskilfulneſſe of a Pilot, or violence of tempeſts haue brought to an haſty pouertie; and could tell me that it is in the power of one gale of winde, to make many of you either rich Merchants or beggers. Oh miſerable vncertainety of this earthly pelfe, that ſtands vpon ſo many hazards, yea that falls vnder them! who would truſt it? who can dote vpon it? what madneſſe is it in thoſe men, which (as Menot ſayes) like vnto hunters, that kill an horſe of price, in the purſuit of an Hare worth nothing; endanger, yea caſt away their ſoules vpon this worthleſſe and fickle traſh? Glaſſes are pleaſing veſſels, yet becauſe of their brittleneſſe, who eſteemes them precious? All Salomons ſtate was not comparable to one Tulip: his royall Crowne was not like the Crowne Imperiall of our Gardens; and yet becauſe theſe are but flowers, whoſe deſtiny is fading and burning, wee regard them thereafter; No wiſe man beſtowes much coſt in painting mud-wals, What meane we (my beloued) to ſpend our liues and hearts vpon theſe periſhing treaſures? It was a wiſe meditation of Nazianzen to his Aſterius; that good is to no purpoſe, if it continue not; yea there is no pleaſant thing in the world, ſaith he, that hath ſo much ioy in the welcome, as it hath ſorrow in the farewell: Looke therefore vpon theſe heapes, O ye wiſe-hearted Citizens, with careleſſe eyes, as thoſe things whoſe parting is certaine, whoſe ſtay is vncertaine, and ſay with that worthy Father; By all my wealth, and glory, and greatneſſe, this alone haue I gained, that I had ſome thing to which I might preferre my Sauiour. And know, that as Abraham whiles he was in his owne Countrey (it is Cyrils note) had neuer God appearing to him, ſaue onely to bid him goe forth: but after, when hee was gone forth, had frequent viſions of his Maker: So whiles in our affections we remaine here below in our Cofers, wee cannot haue the comfortable aſſurances of the preſence of God; but if wee can abandon the loue and truſt of theſe earthly things, in the conſcience of our obedience, now God ſhall appeare to vs, and ſpeake peace to our ſoules, and neuer ſhall we finde cauſe to repent vs of the change. Let mee therefore conclude this point with that diuine charge of our Sauiour, Lay not vp for your ſelues treaſures on earth, where moth and ruſt doe corrupt, and theeues breake thorow and ſteale, but lay vp for your ſelues treaſure in heauen.

Thus much of the Negatiue part of our charge: wherein wee haue dwelt ſo long, that we may ſcarce ſoiourne in the other. Truſt not, but Truſt: The heart of man is ſo conſcious of his owne weakneſſe, that it will not goe without a prop; and better a weake ſtay then none at all: Like as in matter of policy, the very ſtate of Tyrannie is preferred to the want of a King; the ſame breath therefore that withdraws one refuge from vs, ſubſtitutes a better; and in ſtead of Riches, which is the falſe god of the world, commends to vs the true and liuing God of heauen and earth: Euen as ſome good Carpenter raiſes vp the ſtuds, and in ſtead of a rotten groundſell, layes a ſound; The ſame truſt then muſt we giue to God, which wee may not giue to riches: The obiect onely is changed, the act is not changed. Him muſt wee eſteeme aboue all things, to him muſt we looke vp in all, on him muſt we depend, for all both protection, and prouiſion; from his goodneſſe and mercy muſt we acknowledge all, and in him muſt wee delight with contempt of all; and this is to Truſt in God. It was a ſweet ditty of the Pſalmiſt, which we muſt all learne to ſing, Bonum eſt confidere in Domino, It is good to truſt in the Lord: Good, in reſpect of him, and good for vs. For him, it is one of the beſt pieces of glory to be truſted-to: as, with vs, Ioſeph holds, Potiphar cannot doe him a greater honour, then in truſting him with all; And his glory is ſo precious, that he cannot part with that to any creature; all other things hee imparts willingly, and reſerues nothing to himſelfe but this: Being, life, knowledge, happineſſe, are ſuch bleſſings, as are eminently, originally, eſſentially in God, & yet, Being he giues to al things, Life to many, Knowledge to ſome kindes of creatures, happineſſe to ſome of theſe kinds: as for Riches, he ſo giues them to his creature, that he keepes them not at all to himſelfe; but as for his Glory (whereof our truſt is a part) hee will not endure it communicated to Angell, or man; not to the beſt gheſt in heauen, much leſſe to the droſſe of earth: Whence is that curſe not without an indignation, Curſed bee the man that truſts in man; that maketh fleſh his arme, yea or ſpirit either, beſides the God of Spirits, Whom haue I in heauen but thee? Herein therefore doe wee iuſtice to God, when we giue him his owne, that is, his glory, our confidence.

But the greateſt good is our own; and God ſhewes much more mercy to vs in allowing and inabling vs to truſt him, then we can doe iuſtice in truſting him: For alas, hee could in his iuſt iudgement glorifie himſelfe in our not truſting him, in taking vengeance or vs for not glorifying him: Our goodneſſe reaches not to him; but his goodneſſe reaches downe to vs, in that our hearts are raiſed vp to confidence in him. For, what ſafety, what vnſpeakable comfort is there in truſting to God? When our Sauiour, in the laſt words of his Diuine Farewell-Sermon to his Diſciples, would perſwade them to confidence, he ſayes θαρσοῦτε: and ſo doth the Angell to Paul, in priſon; a word that ſignifies boldneſſe: implying that our confidence in God, cauſeth boldnes and courage, and what is there in all the world that can worke the heart to ſo comfortable and vnconquerable reſolution, as our repoſall vpon God? The Lord is my truſt, whom then can I feare? In the Lord put I my truſt, how ſay ye then to my ſoule, Flee hence as a bird to the hils? Yea how oft doth Dauid inferre vpon this truſt a non confundar, I ſhall not be aſhamed? And this caſe is generall, That they that put their truſt in the Lord, are as mount Sion that cannot be moued. Faith can remoue mountaines, but the mountaines that are raiſed on faith, are vnremoueable. Here is a ſtay for you (O ye wealthy & great) worthy of your truſt: If ye were Monarchs or earth, or Angels in heauen, ye could be no way ſafe but in this truſt. How eaſie is it for him to inrich, or impoueriſh you, to hoyſe you vp to the ſeats of honor, or to ſpurn you down? What mynes, what Princes can raiſe you vp to wealth, againſt him, without him? Hee can bid the winds and Seas fauour your veſſels, he can bid them ſinke in a calm. The rich and the poore meet together, God is the maker of both. Ye may trade, and toyle, and carke, and ſpare, and put vp, and caſt about, and at laſt ſit you downe, with a ſigh of late repentance, and ſay, Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vaine that build it: It is in vaine to riſe early, and lye downe late, and eate the bread ſorrow. Vnto how many of you may I ſay with the Prophet Haggai, Ye haue ſowne much, and bring in little; ye eat, and haue not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled: ye cloath you, but ye be not warme, and he that earneth much, puts his gaynes in a broken bag? And whence is all this? Yee looked for much, and loe, it came to little: when yee brought it home, I did blow vpon it, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. Behold how eaſie a thing it is for the God of heauen to blaſt all your ſubſtance; yea not onely to diminiſh, but to curſe it vnto you, and to make you weary of it and of your ſelues. Oh caſt your ſelues therefore into thoſe Almighty hands: Seeke him in whom onely you ſhall finde true reſt and happineſſe: Honour him with your ſubſtance, that hath honored you with it: Truſt not in riches, but truſt in God.

Pro. 22.

It is motiue enough to your truſt, that he is a God; all arguments are infolded in that one; yet this Text giues you certaine explicit inforcements of this confidence; Euery one of theſe reaſons (implying a ſecret kinde of diſdainfull compariſon betwixt the true God and the falſe) perſwade you to truſt in God: Riches are but for this world, the true God is Lord of the other; and beginnes his glory, where the glory of the world ends: therefore truſt in him. Riches are vncertaine, the true God is Amen, the firſt and the laſt, euer like himſelfe; therefore truſt in him. Riches are but a liueleſſe and ſenſeleſſe metall, the true God is a liuing God, therefore truſt in him. Riches are but paſſiues in gift, they cannot beſtow ſo much as themſelues, much leſſe ought beſides themſelues: the true God giues you all things to enioy, therefore Truſt in him: the two latter, becauſe they are more directly ſtood vpon, and now fall into our way, require a further diſcourſe.

The liuing.

(El chai) the liuing God, is an ancient and vſuall title to the Almighty; eſpecially when he would diſgrace an vnworthy riuall: As S. Paul in his ſpeech to the Lyſtrians, oppoſes to their vaine Idols, the liuing God. Viuo ego, As I liue, is the oath of God for this purpoſe, as Hierom noteth, neither doe I remember any thing beſides his holineſſe, and his life that he ſweares by. When Moſes askt Gods name, he deſcribed himſelfe by I AM. He is, hee liues: and nothing is, nothing liues abſolutely, but hee; all other things by participation from him. In all other things, their life and they are two; but God is his owne life, and the life of God is no other then the liuing God: and becauſe he is his owne life, he is eternall; for (as Thomas argues truely againſt the Gentiles) Nothing ceaſes to bee, but by a ſeparation of life; and nothing can bee ſeparated from it ſelfe; for euery ſeparation is a diuiſion of one thing from another: Moſt iuſtly therefore is he which is abſolute, ſimple, eternall in his being, called the liuing God: Although not onely the life that he hath in himſelfe, but the life that he giues to his creatures, challengeth a part in this title: A glimpſe whereof perhaps the Heathen ſaw, when they called him Iupiter, (ζῆνα) from (ζῆν) which ſignifies to liue, In him wee liue, (ſaith S. Paul to his Athenians.) As light is from the Sunne, ſo is life from God, (which is the true ſoule of the world, & more; for without him it could not be ſo much as a carkaſe;) and ſpreads it ſelfe into all the animate creatures. Life (we ſay) is ſweet; and ſo it is indeed; the moſt excellent and precious thing that is deriued from the common influence of God. There is nothing before life, but Being; and Being makes no diſtinction of things; for that can be nothing that hath no Being: Life makes the firſt and greateſt diuiſion: Thoſe creatures therefore which haue life, we eſteeme far beyond thoſe that haue it not, how noble ſoeuer otherwiſe: Thoſe things therefore which haue the perfitteſt life, muſt needs be the beſt: Needs then muſt it follow, that he which is life it ſelfe, who is abſolute, ſimple, eternall, the fountaine of all that life which is in the world, is moſt worthy of all the adoration, ioy, loue, and confidence of our hearts, and of the beſt improuement of that life which he hath giuen vs. Truſt therefore in the liuing God. Couetouſneſſe (the Spirit of God tels vs) it Idolatry, or (as our old Tranſlation turnes it) worſhipping of Images. Euery ſtampe or impreſſion in his coyne, is to the couetous man a very Idoll: And what madneſſe is there in this Idolatry, to dote vpon a baſe creature, and to beſtow that life which wee haue from GOD, vpon a creature that hath no life in it ſelfe, and no price but from men? Let me then perſwade euery ſoule that heares me this day, as Iacob did his houſhold, Put away the ſtrange gods that are among you and be cleane; and as S. Paul did his Lyſtrians: Oh turne away from theſe vanities vnto the liuing God.

Gen. 35.2.

Who giues vs richly all things to enioy.

The laſt attractiue of our truſt to God, is his mercy, and liberality: Who giues vs richly all things to enioy. A theme, wherein ye will grant it eaſie to leeſe our ſelues. Firſt, God not onely hath all in himſelfe, but he giues to vs. He giues, not ſomewhat (though a cruſt is more then we are worthy of) but all things. And not a little of all, but richly; and all this, not to looke on, but to enioy. Euery word would require not a ſeuerall houre, but a life to meditate of it; and the tongue not of men, but of Angels to expreſſe it. It is here with vs, as in a throng, we can get neither in nor out:

But as we vſe to ſay of Cares, ſo it ſhall be with our diſcourſe, that the greatneſſe of it ſhall procure ſilence; and the more we may ſay of this head, the leſſe wee will ſay: It ſhall content vs onely to top theſe ſheaues, ſince we cannot ſtand to threſh them out.

Whither can ye turne your to eyes looke beſide the bounty of God? If yee looke vpward; His mercy reacheth to the heauens. If downeward: The earth is full of his goodneſſe, and ſo is the broad ſea. If ye looke about you; What is it that hee hath not giuen vs? Ayre to breathe in, fire to warme vs, water to coole vs, clothes to couer vs, food to nouriſh vs, fruites to refreſh vs, yea delicates to pleaſe vs; beaſts to ſerue vs, Angels to attend vs, heauen to receiue vs, and which is aboue all, his owne Sonne to redeeme vs. Laſtly, if ye looke into your ſelues: Hath hee not giuen vs a ſoule to informe vs, ſenſes to informe our ſoule, faculties to furniſh that ſoule? Vnderſtanding, the great ſurueyor of the ſecrets of Nature, and Grace: Fantaſie and Inuention, the maſter of the workes: Memory the great keeper or Maſter of the rolles of the ſoule; a power that can make amends for the ſpeed of Time, in cauſing him to leaue behinde him thoſe things, which elſe he would ſo cary away, as if they had not beene: Will, which is the Lord Paramount in the ſtate of the ſoule, the commander of our actions, the elector of our reſolutions: Iudgement, which is the great Counſellor of the will: Affections, which are the ſeruants of them both: a bodie fit to execute the charge of the ſoule, ſo wondrouſly diſpoſed, as that euery part hath beſt opportunitie to his owne functions; ſo qualified with health ariſing from proportion of humours, that like a watch kept in good tune, it goes right, and is fit to ſerue the ſoule, and maintaine it ſelfe: an eſtate that yeelds all due conueniences for both ſoule, and body; ſeaſonable times, raine, and ſunſhine; peace in our borders; competency, if not plenty of all commodities, good lawes, religious, wiſe, iuſt Gouernours, happy and flouriſhing dayes: and aboue all, the liberty of the Goſpell. Caſt vp your bookes, O yee Citizens, and ſumme vp your receits, I am deceiued, if he that hath leaſt, ſhall not confeſſe his obligations infinit. There are three things eſpecially wherein yee are beyond others, and muſt acknowledge your ſelues deeper in the Books of God, then the reſt of the world: Let the firſt be the cleare deliuerance from that wofull iudgement of the peſtilence. Oh remember thoſe ſorowfull times, when euery moneth ſwept away thouſands from among you: When a man could not ſet forth his foot but into the iawes of death; when piles of carcaſſes were caried to their pits, as dung to the fields: when it was cruelty in the ſicke to admit viſitation, and loue was little better then murderous: And by how much more ſad and horrible the face of thoſe euill times looked, ſo much greater proclaime you the mercy of God, in this happy freedome which you now enioy: that you now throng together into Gods Houſe without feare, & breathe into one anothers face without danger. The ſecond is, the wonderfull plenty of all prouiſions both ſpirituall and bodily: You are the Sea, all the Riuers of the land runne into you: Of the land? Yea of the whole world: Sea and land conſpire to inrich you. The third is, the priuiledge of carefull gouernment: Your Charters as they are large and ſtrong, wherein the fauour of Princes hath made exceptions from the generall rules of their municipall lawes; ſo your forme of adminiſtration is excellent, and the execution of Iuſtice exemplary, and ſuch as might become the mother City of the whole earth. For all theſe you haue reaſon to aske, Quid retribuam, with Dauid: What ſhall I render to the Lord for all his benefits? and to excite one another vnto thankefulneſſe, with that ſweet Singer of Iſrael, O that men would therefore praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe! And (as beneficence is a binder) theſe fauours of God call for your confidence: What ſhould you doe but euer truſt that God, whom you haue found ſo gracious? Let him bee your God, be ye his people for euer; and let him make this free and open challenge to you all: If there be any power in heauen, or in earth, that can doe more for you then he hath done, let him haue you hearts and your ſelues.

About 30000. in one yeare.

And thus from that duty we owe to God in our confidence, and his beneficence to vs, we deſcend to that beneficence which we owe to men, expreſſed in the variety of foure Epithets, Doing good, being rich in good workes, ready to diſtribute, willing to communicate;

That they doe good, & be rich in good workes.

municate; all to one ſenſe; all is but beneficence. The Scriptures of God (leſt any Atheiſt ſhould quarrell at this waſte) haue not one word ſuperfluous: Here is a redoubling of the ſame words without fault of Tautology; a redoubling of the ſame ſenſe in diuers words, without Idleneſſe. There is feruour in theſe repetitions, not looſeneſſe; as it was wont for this cauſe to be obſerued both in Councels, and acclamations to Princes, how oft the ſame word is reiterated, that by the frequence they might iudge of the vehemence of affection. It were eaſie to inſtance in many of this kind, as eſpecially Exodus 25.35. Pſalme 89.30. Iohn 1.20. and ſo many more, as that their mention could not be voide of that ſuperfluitie which wee diſclaime. This heape of words therefore ſhewes the vehement intention of his deſire of good workes, and the important neceſſity of their performance; and the manner of this expreſſion inforces no leſſe, Charge the rich, that they doe good, and be rich in doing good. Harken then, yee rich men of the world; it is not left arbitrary to you, that you may doe good if you will, but it is layd vpon you as your charge and duty: You muſt doe good workes, and woe bee to you if you doe not. This is not a counſell, but a precept; Although I might ſay of God, as we vſe to ſay of Princes, his will is his command: The ſame neceſſity that there is of Truſting in God, the ſame is in Doing good to men. Let mee fling this ſtone into the brazen foreheads of our aduerſaries, which in their ſhameleſſe challenges of our Religion dare tell the world we are all for faith, nothing for workes, and that we hold workes to ſaluation, as a Parentheſis to a clauſe, that it may be perfit without them: Heauen and earth ſhall witneſſe the iniuſtice of this calumniation; and your conſciences ſhall bee our compurgators this day, which ſhall teſtifie to you, both now, and on your death-beds, that we haue taught you, there is no leſſe neceſſitie of good workes, then if you ſhould be ſaued by them; and that though you cannot be ſaued by them, as the meritorious cauſes of your glory, yet that you cannot be ſaued without them, as the neceſſarie effects of that grace which brings glory.

It is an hard ſentence of ſome Caſuiſts (concerning their fellowes) that but a few rich mens Confeſſors ſhall be ſaued; I imagine, for that they dawbe vp their conſciences with vntempered morter, and ſooth them vp in their ſins. Let this be the care of them whom it concerneth: For vs, wee deſire to bee faithfull to God and you; and tell you roundly what you muſt truſt to: Doe good therefore, yee rich, if euer yee looke to receiue good; if euer yee looke to bee rich in heauen, bee rich in good works vpon earth: It is a ſhame to heare of a rich man that dyes, and makes his will of thouſands, and bequeathes nothing to pious and charitable vſes: God and the poore are no part of his heyre; We doe not houer ouer your expiring ſoules on your death-beds as Rauens ouer a carkaſſe; wee doe not begge for a Couent, nor fright you with Purgatory, nor chaffer with you, for that inuiſible treaſure of the Church, whereof there is but one Key-keeper at Rome; but wee tell you, that the making of friends with this Mammon of vnrighteouſneſſe, is the way to eternall habitations. They ſay of Cyrus, that he was wont to ſay he laid vp treaſures for himſelfe, whiles he made his friends rich: but we ſay to you, that you lay vp treaſures for your ſelues in heauen, whiles you make the poore your friends vpon earth: We tell you there muſt be a Date, ere there can be a Dabitur; that he which giues to the poore lends vpon vſe to the Lord; which paies large increaſe for all he borrowes; and how ſhal he giue you the Intereſt of glory, where he hath not receiued the Principall of beneficence? How can that man euer looke to be Gods heyre, in the Kingdome of heauen, that giues all away to his earthly heyres, and lends nothing to the God of heauen? As that witty Grecian ſaid of extreame tall men, that they were Cypreſſe-trees καλοὶ ϗ ὑψηλοὶ &c. faire and tall, but fruitleſſe: ſo may I ſay of a ſtrait-handed rich man; And theſe Cypreſſes are not for the Garden of Paradiſe; none ſhall euer be planted there but the fruitfull: And if the firſt Paradiſe had any trees in it onely for pleaſure, I am ſure the ſecond, which is in the midſt of the new Ieruſalem, ſhall haue no tree that beares not twelue fruits, yea whoſe very leaues are not beneficiall. Doe good therefore, O ye rich, and ſhew your wealth to bee, not in hauing, but in doing good. And if God haue put this holy reſolution into any of your hearts, take this with you alſo, from him, Doe not talke, and purpoſe, and proiect, but execute; Doe not ſo doe good, that wee may thanke your death-bed for it, and not you: Late beneficence is better then none, but ſo much as early beneficence is better then late: Hee that giues not till hee dyes, ſhewes that hee would not giue, if hee could keepe it: And God loues a cheerefull giuer: That which you giue thus, you giue it by your Teſtament, I can ſcarce ſay you giue it by your will; The good mans praiſe is Diſperſit, dedit: he diſperſes his goods, not, he left them behind him, and his diſtribution is ſeconded with the retribution of GOD, His righteouſneſſe endureth for euer, Pſalme 112. 9. Our Sauiour tells vs that our good workes are our light, Let your light ſo ſhine, that men may ſee your good workes; which of you lets his light goe behinde him, and hath it not rather caried before him, that hee may ſee which way it goes, and which way himſelfe goes by it? Do good therefore in your life, that you may haue comfort in your death, and a Crowne of life after death.

Now all this haue I ſpoken, not for that I haue ought (as S. Paul ſayes) whereof to accuſe my Nation: Bleſſed be God, as good workes haue abounded in this age, ſo this place hath ſuperabounded in good workes. Bee it ſpoken to the glory of that GOD, whoſe all our good workes are, to the honour of the Goſpell, to the conuiction of that lewd ſlander of Solifidianiſme; London ſhall vye good workes with any City vpon earth: This day and your eares are abundant witneſſes; As thoſe therefore that by an handfull gheſſe at the whole ſacke, it may pleaſe you by this yeares Briefe to iudge of the reſt: Wherein I doe not feare leſt Enuie it ſelfe ſhall accuſe vs of a vaine-glorious oſtentation; Thoſe obſtreperous benefactors, that (like to Hens which cannot lay an egge, but they muſt cackle ſtraight) giue no almes but with trumpets, loſe their thanks with God; Almes ſhould be like oyle, which though it ſwimme aloft when it is falne, yet makes no noiſe in the falling; not like water, that ſtill ſounds where it lights: But howſoeuer priuate beneficence ſhould not bee acquainted with both the hands of the giuer, but ſilently expect the reward of him that ſeeth in ſecret, yet God ſhould bee a great loſer, if the publike fruits of charity ſhould bee ſmothered in a modeſt ſecrecy: To the praiſe therefore of that good God, which giues vs to giue, and rewards vs for giuing, to the example of poſterity, the honour of our Profeſſion, to the encouragement of the wel-deſeruing, and to the ſhame of our malicious aduerſaries, heare what this yeare hath brought forth.

Here followeth a briefe memoriall of the charitable acts of the City this yeare laſt paſt, &c.

And if the ſeaſon had not hindred, your eyes ſhould haue ſeconded your eares in the comfortable teſtimonie of this beneficence, Euge, &c. Well done, good and faithfull ſeruants; Thus ſhould your Profeſſion bee graced; thus ſhould the incenſe of your almes aſcend in Pillars of holy ſmoake into the noſtrils of God; thus ſhould your talents be turned into Cities: This colour is no other then celeſtiall, and ſo ſhall your reward be: Thus ſhould the foundation be laid of that building, whoſe wals reach vp vnto heauen, whoſe roofe is finiſhed and laid on, in the heauen of heauens, in that immortality of glory, which the God of all glory, peace, and comfort hath prouided for all that loue him; Vnto the participation whereof, the ſame God of ours mercifully bring vs through the Sonne of his loue, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous: to whom, with the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt, one infinite and incomprehenſible God, be giuen all praiſe, honour and glory, now and for euer. Amen.

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD, AND MY MOST HONORED Lord, GEORGE, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Metropolitane, one of his Maieſties moſt Honourable Priuy Counſell.

MORT REVEREND FATHER and no leſſe honored Lord,

IT was my deſire and hope, to ſpend the reſidue of my Time and thoughts in ſweet and ſacred Contemplation. Satan enuying me this happineſſe, interrupts me by the malice of an importunate Aduerſarie. Twelue yeares agoe I wrote a little Apologeticall Letter for the Mariage of perſons Eccleſiaſticall; and now thus late, when I had almoſt forgot that I had written it, a moody Maſſe-prieſt drops out a tedious & virulent Refutation, thorow my ſides ſtriking at the moſt Honourable, and flouriſhing Clergie of the whole Chriſtian world, labouring not ſo much for my diſgrace (what would that auaile him?) as the diſhonour and ſcorne of our holy Profeſsion, in the eyes of our people I could contemne it in ſilence, if the Quarrell were onely mine; Now my wrong cannot be diſtinguiſhed from thouſands: God and his Church are ingaged in this cauſe, which in my foile could not but ſuſtaine loſſe; neither may I be now ſilent with ſafetie, without miſ-conſtruction. Let this hand and Tongue bee no longer mine, then they may ſerue my Maſter in Heauen, and his Spouſe on Earth. That which I wrote in ſome three houres, he hath anſwered in three quaternions of yeares; and what I wrote in three leaues, hee hath aſwered in no fewer Pages then 380. Should I follow him in this proportion, hee might after ſome Centuries of yeares expect an anſwer in Toſtatus-hydes; whoſe firſt word ſhould be, Quis legit hæc? Or if my patience would delay my Reply to the iuſt paces of his Anſwer, this Volume of his vvould perhaps bee vaniſhed into Grocers ſhops for waſte Paper in thuris piperiſue cucullos; and vvould no more neede anſwer thẽ now it deſerueth one. But hearing of the inſultation of ſome Popiſhly affected, who gloried and triumphed in this ACHILLES pro Chatholicis, I addreſſed my ſelfe to the VVorke, with no little indignation, and no leſſe ſpeed: That my ſelfe-conceited Aduerſarie, and his ſeduced abettors, may ſee how little a well-ordered Mariage is guiltie of deadding our ſpirits, or ſlacking our hands. At the beginning of this Summers Progreſſe, when it pleaſed his ſacred Maieſtie to take notice of this ſorſe Libell, and to queſtion with me concerning it, I had not ſo much as read it ouer, ſo newly was it come to my hands; ere his happy returne, (be it ſpoken to the onely glory of him that enabled me) I had not only finiſhed this Anſwer, but twice written it ouer with mine own hand; and yet made this but the recreation of the weightier buſineſs of my Calling, which now did more then ordinarily vrge me.

It was my purpoſe to haue anſwered (as beſeemeth the perſon a quo, not ad quem) mildely according to my knowne diſpoſition: but vpon better deliberation, I found the inſolency of my Refuter ſuch, that I could not fauour him, and not bee cruell to my cauſe. If therefore for many (it is his own art and word) reilatiue Pages, he receiue from my vnwilling and enforced Pen now and then, though not a Relatiue to ſuch an Antecedent, yet perhaps ſome drop of ſharper Vineger, then my Inke vſeth to be tempered withall, he may forgiue me, and muſt thanke himſelfe: VVhat needed this cauſe ſo furious an Inuectiue? As if the Kingdom of Heauen, and all Religion conſiſted in nothing but Maiden-head, or Mariage? Cardinal Bellarmine, when he ſpeaks of the Greeke Church, wherein a maried Clergie is both allowed and required, ſhuts vp moderately; That if this were all the difference betwixt them, and the Romane Church, they ſhould ſoone be at peace. If my Refuter had ſo thought, this had not beene his firſt Controuerſie: Both eſtates meete in Heauen. Iohn the Virgin reſts in the boſome of maried Abraham; This inordinate heate therefore of proſecution riſes from faction, not from holy Zeale: Hence it was that my Aduerſarie cunningly ſingled out this point from many others, ranged in my poore Diſcourſes, as that wherein (Biſhop Iewels confeſsion) he might promiſe to himſelfe the likelieſt aduantage of Antiquity; and how glorioully doth he vaunt himſelfe in the oſtentation of Fathers & Counſels! VVhich vaine flouriſh how little it auailes him, the proceſſe ſhal ſhew; where it ſhall appeare vpon what grounds no ſmall piece of Antiquitie was partiall to Virginity, and ouer-harſh to Mariage, as Beatus Rhenanus, a learned and ingenuous Papiſt confeſſeth. But this we may boldly ſay, that if thoſe holy men had out-liued the bloody times, and ſeene the fearfull inconueniences which would (after a ſetled peace) enſue vpon the ambition, or conſtraint of a denyed Continencie, they had doubtleſſe changed their note; and with the moderate and wiſeſt ſpirits of the latter times, pleaded for that liberty which the reformed Church now enioyeth. The vniuerſall conceſsion whereof (after the priuate Suffrages of worthy Authors) came to a publike treaty in the Romane Church, amidſt the throng of their late Tridentine Counſell, and it is worth the while to obſerue on what grounds it receiued a repulſe. If Prieſts ſhould be allowed Mariage (ſay thoſe wily Italians) it would follow that they would caſt their affections on their Wiues and Children; and conſequently on their Families, and Countries, whereupon would ceaſe that ſtrait dependance which the Clergie hath vpon the See Apoſtolike; In ſo much as to grant their Mariages, were as much as to deſtroy the Hierarchie of the Church, and to reduce the Pope within the meere bounds of the Romane Biſhopricke. This was the plea of the Clergie; their thrifty Laitie, (together with them) enemies to the bleſsing (or, as they conſtrue it, the curſe) of fruitfulneſſe, are wont to plead, Troppo teſte: our Gregory Martin of old computes the preiudiciall increaſe that might ariſe from theſe Mariages to the Common-wealth. It is not Religion, but wit that now lies in our way. Fond men that dare offer thus to controll the wiſedome of their Maker, and will be tying the God of Heauen to their rules of ſtate. As it is, no Church in the whole World (except the Romane) ſtands vpon this reſtraint whereof the conſequences haue been ſo notoriouſly ſhamefull, that wee might well hope, experience would haue wrought, if not redreſſe of their courſes, yet ſilence of ours; And ſurely, if this man had not preſumed that (by reaſon of the long diſcontinuance of Popery) time had worne out of mens minds the memory of their odious filthineſſe, he durſt not thus boldly haue pleaded for their abominable Celebate; The queſtion whereof, after all buſie diſcuſsions, and pretences of age, muſt be reſolued into no other then this; How farre the Tradition of a particular Church is worthy to preuaile againſt Scripture: yea, and againſt other Churches. A point, which a very weake iudgement will bee able to determine.

In this returne of my Defence, I doe neither anſwer euery idle clauſe, nor omit any eſſentiall: this length of mine is no leſſe forced then mine Aduerſaries Continencie: wherein yet my Reader ſhall not ſigh vnder an irkeſome loquacitie. I preſume to dedicate this vnworthy labour to your Grace, whom this famous Church dayly bleſſed, as her wiſe, faithfull, and vigilant Ouerſeer, as a renowned Patterne of holy Virginity and Patron of holy Mariage. The God of Heauen (whoſe watch you carefully keep) preſerue you long to his Church; and make vs long happy in your Grace, and you euer happy in his plentifull bleſsings. THE ANSWER TO THE ADEVERTISEMENT.

THE man begins with a threat, I may not but tremble? Hee frights me with an vniuerſall Detection of my errors. It is almoſt as eaſie to finde faults, as to make them. Perhaps the Time had beene as well ſpent in toſsing of his Beads: How happie a man am I that ſhall ſee all my ouer-ſights? My comfort is, that if my Tree were fruitleſſe, there would bee no ſtone throwne at it. In the meane while, how well doth the title of a Detector become him that hides himſelfe? If hee be not afraid or aſhamed of his cauſe, let his name be knowne, that his victories may be recorded. It is an iniurious and baſe aduantage to ſtrike and hide; and after a pitcht Duell to gall a fixed Aduerſarie out of loope-holes. If his perſon be vpon ſome treaſonable act abnoxious, it is hard if ſome of his names be not free: But if I muſt needs be matcht with the ſhadow of a Libeller, I will ſo take him, as he deciphers himſelfe: C.E. Cauillator Egregious; and vnder this true ſtile of his, am ready to encounter him, and doe here bid Defiance to an inſolent, and vniuſt aduerſarie: And firſt, let me tell my Cauiller, this order is prepoſterous. If all my errors be at the mouth of the Preſſe, how is it that two or three of them are thus ſuffered to outrunne their fellowes? Was his malice ſo bigge with theſe, that it could not ſtay the time of the common deliuerie? Needs muſt they be notorious falſhoods, that are thus ſingled out from the reſt. Let them appeare in their owne ſhapes, vgly, (doubtleſſe) and prodigious. The firſt is, That moſt ſhameleſſe aſſertion that Bellarmine vnder his owne hand acknowledges, 237. Contrarieties of Doctrine amongſt his Catholikes. Could the man but haue patience, he ſhould finde aboue three hundred: What ſayes my Detector to this? He hath not ſeene the ſeuerals, yet (like a braue man at Armes) he profeſſes to kill his enemie ere he can appeare; and tels vs thoſe 237 Contrarieties, are nothing but 237 lyes in one aſſertion, that there are in them ſo many vntruths I eaſily grant; for in contradictions one part muſt needs be falſe; And Truth is but ſingle: They are vntruths then, (lyes are too broad a word) but their owne. My aſſertion ſhall onely iuſtifie that they are told; let him take care for the reſt: But they are not in points belonging to Faith and Religion, only in matters vndecided, and diſputable: The ſequell ſhall try that ſhift; Why doe wee foreſtall our Reader? Who knowes not that there cannot be ſo many points fundamentall? Let him take them as they are, I aggrauate nothing; It is but onely in ſuch light chaffe as this; In the number and extent of Bookes Canonicall, wherein Driedo, Eraſmus, Genebrard, Caietan, Sixtus Senenſis, are acknowledged to oppoſe the reſt; In the Popes infallibilitie of iudgement, wherein Gerſon, Almayne, Pope Adrian, Eckius, Hoſius, Pichius, Waldenſis, are at quarrell; In the reach and originall of ſpirituall iuriſdiction, wherein Abulenſis, Turrecremata, Fran. à Victoria, Alphonſus de Caſtro, &c. proclaime to differ: what ſhould I inſtance in more? It is but in the Popes power in Temporalities, in the inerrableneſſe of Councels, whether particular, confirmed by the Pope, or Generall; in the authoritie of Councels aboue Popes, in the force of Vowes, in the worſhip due to Images, and the like.

Theſe and ſuch other are the ſleight Trifles (ſince all cannot be weightie) impertinent to faith wherein the Romiſh Doctors varie.

Neither doth my aſſertion of their diſcord gall him more, then of our Vnity: O the forehead of Heretikes! I ſaid that we in our Church differ onely in Ceremonies, they in ſubſtance. Let him giue leaue to the contra-diuiſion of theſe two, and I will take leaue to maintaine the indiuiſion of the Church of England, in the dogmaticall points of Faith.

This boldneſſe, together with my eminent ignorance, makes him admire the ſcarcitie of learned men in our Countrey, that could finde no better Doctors to ſend to Dort-Conference then Maſter HALL. To Your griefe, Sir, it was a Synode, and that noble and celebrious; Neither was it out of want that your ſilly Aduerſarie was ſent thither. This happy Iland (which hath no blemiſh but that it yeelds ſuch Vipers as your ſelfe) abounds (as you too well know) with ſtore of incomparable Diuines; ſuch as may ſet your Rome to ſchoole. So as the Meſſenger of Pyrrhus long ſince called your Italy, a Countrey of Kings, and Egypt was wont to be called the Countrey of Phyſicians: ſo may this bleſſed Iland of ours iuſtly merit the title of The Region of DIVINES. For me, I can bee content to bee baſe enough in mine owne eyes, but if my diſparagement ſhall redound to my betters, I dare tell him it is my comfort, that I was ſent thither by a iudgement no leſſe infallible, then of Paul the Fift. Let himſelfe or any of his Eaues-dropping companions (to whom that place ſtood open) ſay wherein I ſhamed thoſe that ſent me. It was my iuſt griefe that the neceſſitie of my health, yea of my life called me off immaturely: but ſince either death or departure muſt be yeelded to, others ſhall iudge whether I went away more laden with infirmitie, then (how-euer vnworthy) with approbation.

Neceſſitate propellente, proditio eſt ea tacere quæ quis ſtudioſè perfecerit. Chryſoſt. in illa: vtinam tolera ſſetis, &c.

But that ſecond lye of mine is ſo loud, that all my Brethren of Dort muſt heare it, and they which were lately the Witneſſes of my ſinceritie (gracing mee with the deare Teſtimonie of their approofe) are now made the Iudges of my impudencie. What monſter of falſhood will come forth? In my cenſure of Trauell, glancing at the Ieſuiticall bragge of their Indian Miracles (whereat their very friends make ſport) I charge Cardinall Bellarmine for an auoucher of theſe Cozenages, who dares auerre that his fellow Xauier, not onely healed the Deafe, Dumbe, and Blinde, but raiſed the Dead, to which I adde (whiles his Brother Acoſta, after many yeares ſpent in thoſe parts, can pull him by the ſleeue, and tell him in his eare, ſo loud that all the World may heare. Prodigia nulla producimus.) This is my Indictment; Let me come to my Tryall: Caſt me, if ye can, ye reuerend heads; I craue no fauour. Where lyes this ſo lewd lye, and malicious abuſe? That Bellarmine ſayes thus of the Ieſuite Xauier, is not denyed; That Acoſta ſayes thus of himſelfe, and his fellow Ieſuites, is granted; The firſt lye yet is, Acoſta was neuer in the Eaſt-Indies at all, nor Xauier in the Weſt; and how then could Acoſta ſpend many yeares in thoſe parts? A perilous Plea! Who euer, I beſeech you, mentioned either Eaſt or Weſt? I ſpeake of the Indies in common; ſo did his Bellarmine from whom I cited this, Claruit etiam in Indiis omni genere miraculorum, &c. Here is not one of the Indies mentioned, but both or either; If both liued in the Indies, though not in one Towne, in one Country; in one Indie; wherein haue I offended; whiles ſpeaking of the Indies in generall, I ſaid that Xauier and Acoſta liued there? Yet this is one lye (he ſaith) and that ſo long a one, as that it reacheth as farre as it is from the Eaſt to the Weſt, from the Artick to the Antartick Pole; wherein I doubt not but your reuerences wil eaſily marke the skill of this learned Coſmographer. Some parts of thoſe inſtanced Indies differ not ſo farre; not to ſpeake of the ſmall ſtrait of Anian; the mentioned Region of Mexico is not aboue fourſcore degrees from Iapan: Either your conſtruction muſt fauour him, or elſe this muſt goe into the Booke of ouer-ſights.

Bell. de notis Eccleſ. l. 4. c. 14.

The ſecond lye is, that Acoſta pulled Bellarmine by the ſleeue in this aſſertion, as if hee denyed thoſe Eaſterne Miracles, which he elſewhere confeſſeth, Indeed, this ſawcineſſe were dangerous: The red Hat (you ſay) is fellow to a Crowne. But ſhall I confeſſe where I erred? My dull head could not conceiue that God ſhould be the God of the Mountains, and not of the Valleys; Of the Eaſt Indies, not of the Weſt; and yet be the Ieſuites God in both: Eſpecailly, ſince the reaſon that Ioſeph Acoſta fetches from the perſons (which ſhould be the ſubiect of thoſe Wonders) holds as equally for both Indies, as and Almanack made for the Meridian of one Citie, ſerueth the Neighbours.

Hitherto then the prologue of my infamous falſhoods, ſuch, as if all my Writings, could haue afforded any equally hainous, theſe had neuer beene choſen out to grace the front of his Detection; There muſt needs be much terrour in the ſequel.

The reſt of this ſtorme fals vpon our learned Profeſſor, D. Collins; one of the prime ornaments of our Cambridge; the parnerſhip of whoſe vniuſt diſgrace doth not a little hearten my vnworthineſſe. The world knowes the eminency of that mans Learning, Wit, Iudgement, Eloquence: His workes praiſe him enough in the Gate: Yet this Malepert Corner-creeper doth ſo baſely vilifie him, for ignorance, ſillineſſe, pratling, ruſticitie, lying, as if in theſe onely he were matchleſſe. Indeed whom doth the aſperſion of that foule hand forbeare? Vilium eſt hominum alios viles facere: I appeale to all the Tribunals of Learning thorow the World, whether all Doway haue yeelded ought comparable to that mans Pen: whether he haue not ſo coniured down his* Caco-Dæmon Iohannes, that he neuer dares to look backe into the light againe: whether his Ephatha be not ſo powerfull, that if his Aduerſarie were any otherwiſe deafe then the blocke which he worſhips, it might open his eare to the Truth. It angers C.E. to heare that Kings ſhould not dye, or perhaps, that they whoſe heads are anointed, ſhould dye by any other then anointed fingers; The ſentence of his Cardinall and Ieſuites both de facto and de jure, of depoſing and murdering Kings, is now beſide our way; Onely we may reade a farre off in capitall Letters, Ariſe, Peter, kill and eate: Hee knowes the word with ſhame enough. I will not ſo much wrong that worthy Prouoſt, as to anticipate his quarrell; rather I leaue the ſuperfluitie of this malice to the ſcourge of that abler hand; from whom I doubt not but C.E ſhall ſmart and bleed ſo well, that he may ſpare the labour of making himſelfe his owne whipping ſtocke on Good Friday.

Sect. I.

Neither my Charitie, nor my Leiſure, nor my Readers Patience, will allow me to follow my Detector, in all his Extrauagancies, nor to change idle words of Contumely with a Babbler. His twelue firſt Pages, are but the light froth of an impotent Anger; wherein he accuſeth my bitterneſſe, and profeſſeth his owne. For me I appeale vnto all eies; if my Pen haue been ſometimes zealous, it was neuer intemperate: Neither can he make me beleeue, that my Paſſions need to appeare to my ſhame, in calling Rome Proſtitute, or himſelfe ſhameleſſe; or in citing from the Quodlibet of his owne Catholike Prieſts, the Art of his Ieſuites, in [a] Drurying of young Heires. There is neither Slander, nor Shame in Truth. For, himſelfe, he confeſſeth to haue ſharpened his Pen, and to haue dipt it (perhaps too deepe) in Gall: But where his Inke is too thicke, hee ſhall giue me leaue to put a little Vineger to it, that it may flow the better. In the meane time hee ſhall goe away with this glory; That a fouler Mouth hath ſeldome euer wiped it ſelfe vpon cleane Paper.

Declamationes ambitioſorum opera, otioſorum cibi ſunt. Scal. Exer.

Proſtituta illa Ciuitas.

[a] The particulars of this Hiſtorie he ſhall receiue in due place.

After thoſe waſte flouriſhes, his thirteenth Page begins to ſtrike; wherein he chargeth me with odious baſeneſſe, and inſufficiencie, in borrowing all my proofes from Bellarmines Obiections, diſſembling their Solutions. The Man were hard driuen, that would go to borrow of an Enemy. If all my proofes be fore-alledged & fore-anſwered by his Bellarmine; to what purpoſe hath this Trifler blurred ſo much Paper? There (hee ſaith) ſhall the Reader ſee all my Scriptures anſwered, the Doctrine of Deuils explicated; there, that other, Let him bee the Husband of one Wife; and Mariage is honorable: Anſwered indeed; but as he ſaid (δόντα ἀνέκδοτα) anſwerleſly. Such cleare Beames of Truth ſhine in the face of thoſe Scriptures, that all the Cob-web Vayles of a Ieſuites ſubtiltie cannot obſcure them.

Refut. p. 13.

Their very Citation confutes their Anſwer. And where had we this Law; That if a Ieſuite haue once medled with a Scripture, all Pens, all Tongues are barred from euer alledging it? If Satan haue miſ-cited the Pſalme (Hee ſhall giue his Angels charge ouer thee) for Temptation, may not we make vſe of it, for the comfort of Protection? Briefely, let my Cauiller know, that it is not the friuolous illuſion of any ſhuffling Ieſuite, that can driue vs from the firme Bulwarke of the holy Scriptures. In this, they are clearely ours, after all pretences of Solution (as hee ſhall well feele in the Sequel) and ſhall ſecure vs againſt all humane Oppoſition. Before the diſquiſition whereof, ſomewhat muſt of force be premiſed, concerning the ſtate of our Queſtion.

Sect. II.

VVHere, that all Readers may ſee, how learnedly my wiſe Aduerſarie hath miſtaken me, and himſelfe; I muſt tell my Detector, That all his tedious diſcourſe ſits beſide the Cuſhion: For thus he writes of my Epiſtle (ſo as his whole Scope is to diſproue the ſingle life of Catholike Prieſts, and thereby to oppugne our Doctrine in that behalfe) vpon which conceit, he runnes into a large proofe of the ſtrong Obligation of Vowes, the neceſſitie of their Obſeruation, the penaltie and danger of their Violation, the prayſe of Virginitie, the poſſibilitie of keeping it; and vpon this very ground builds he the tottering wall of his whole enſuing Confutation: inſomuch, as (pag. 130.) he ſayes, That Mariage all times, without contrary Iniunction, was lawfull, is not denyed; nor will it be proued in haſte, That Prieſts, or ſuch as had vowed the contrary, might vſe that libertie: and we ſay not, that Virginity is violently to bee impoſed on any, for it commeth by free election; but where the Vow is free, the Tranſgreſſion is damnable. Thus he.

Refut.p.12.

Now let all indifferent eyes ſee, whether the onely drift of mine Epiſtle bee not to iuſtifie our Mariages, not to improue their Singleneſſe; to defend the lawfulneſſe of the Mariage of our Clergie, not to iuſtifie the Mariages of the Romiſh; to plead for the mariage of our Eccleſiaſtiques, not of Popiſh Votaries.

In expreſſe tearmes, I diſ-auowed it. The interuention of a Vow make a new ſtate, Let Baal plead for himſelfe. What is it to me, if the Romiſh Clergie may not bee Husbands? or if, according to the French Prouerbe, they haue a Law not to marry, and a Cuſtome not to liue chaſte? Let it be their care whom it concernes; onely I will haue leaue to ſpeake for our owne. Neither did I euer derogate ought from ſacred Virginitie, or lay it leuell (whether abſolutely, or in all circumſtances) with holy Matrimonie; neither did I euer conceiue of an impoſſibilitie of Continence in ſome perſons: Take away theſe three Grounds, (which I vtterly diſclaime before God and Men) together with his petulant Railings, and idle Excurſions; & what is become of the Volume of my great Aduerſarie? Thoſe three vaſt Paragraphes are ſhrunke into ſo few ſheets of Paper, that a Mouſe may as ſoone runne away with his book as with his god.

My Maſters of Doway, If ye bee the Superiors, vnder whoſe permiſſion this worthy Worke ſees the light; for ſhame keepe vp your lauiſh Vnthrifts of good time, and ſend vs ſuch Antagoniſts, as may not faine Occaſions to empty their Note-Bookes. One daſh of a Penne might thus iuſtly anſwer the moſt part of his bloughtie Volume; wherein, like a drunken Man, he makes a fray with his owne ſhadow, and like an idle Whelpe, runnes about after his owne Sterne. But, that he may not complaine to bee caſt off too contemptuouſly, he ſhall receiue a faire account of Particulars.

Sect. III.

THe Theme of my Epiſtle is plainely no other, then our Mariage cenſured, hee anſwers, of Theirs. I would there were ſuch cauſe of familiaritie and entireneſſe, that what is ſaid of one, might agree to both: But the world knowes we are two. If I ſay our Clergie is heartily loyall to their King; will he ſtraight take it of theirs? If, that our Clergy is willingly ſubiect to more then the directiue Power of their Soueraigne, will he challenge this to theirs? The very Point which I purpoſely declined, hee followes in hot chaſe. Euen moderate Papiſts (they are the words of my Epiſtle) will grant vs free, becauſe not bound by Vow not ſo farre as thoſe old Germanes pro poſſe & neſſe: And yet all my Detectors refutation ſtill driues at the ſuppoſition of a Vow. What haue we to doe with Votaries? Our Clergie is free, whether as Clergie, or as ours: Firſt, as perſons Eccleſiaſticall (quà tales) For holy Orders, whether as orders, or as holy, are no hindrances of Matrimonie, as Cardinall Cajetan truly, and with him, the whole Schoole. That which may bee pretended for Impediment, is either a Vow annexed, or an Eccleſiaſticall Statute.

As

[b] As for the Vow, it is ſo farre from being eſſentiall to holy Orders, as that it is made by [c] ſome learned Papiſts a difference betwixt the Obligation of their Religious, and their Prieſts. That their Religious are bound by a ſolemne Vow to ſingle life in the very intrinſecall nature of their Profeſſion; their Prieſts onely by a Church Conſtitution, without Vow. And thoſe that goe further with their famous Cardinal, and teach, That it is expreſly forbidden to Biſhops, to ordaine any, without the promiſe of ſingle life, ground this but vpon an Epiſtle of Pope Gregory [d], a late and weake foundation; and beſides hold, that their Vow is but ſemi-ſolemne, and accidentally incident into this Profeſſion: for ſo much as here is neither a direct Exhibition of the Body to this purpoſe in the Offerer, nor a direct Conſecration to this end in the Admitter, both which make vp the ſolemnity of the vow: vpon which reaſon, according to them, a Religious Order, becauſe it yeelds ouer the Body vnto an eſtate repugnant to Matrimony, doth of it ſelfe in it owne nature, both hinder Mariage, and nullifie it; not ſo the Eccleſiaſticall. To which wee may adde, That according to their owne [e] Doctors, Solemnitie and Simplicitie make no difference of the Vow before God, though before the Church. A diſtinction too ſleight, too newly vpſtart, to ouerturne an ancient and well grounded Inſtitution. Neither need wee any better, or other proofe of the inconnexion of this Vow with holy Orders, then that of their owne Dominicus à Soto, [f] Non eſt de eſſentia Sacerdotis, &c. It is not of the eſſence of a Prieſt (ſaith he) to keepe ſingle; for that the Grecian Clergie are permitted euen by the Roman Church to continue in the eſtate of Mariage. What can be more cleare? If there were a neceſſary and inſeparable connexion of a vowed Continency, with holy Orders, then would not, neither could the Roman Church acknowledge a true Prieſthood, where it finds coniugall Society. Their act of allowance to the Greeke Church, implyes a faire independency of theſe two, which ſome of their clamorous Clients plead to haue indiuiſibly coupled. So as now all the ſtrength of this neceſſary Celibate is reſolued into the power of a Church ſtatute; and of what Church, but the Roman? All other Churches in the World, as of Armenia, Grecia, Syria, Ethiopia, Ruſsia, the Georgians, &c. allow the coniunction of Miniſterie, and Mariage; and are ſo farre from requiring a Vow of neceſſary Continencie, that they rather erroniouſly prerequire a neceſſity of Mariage in the perſons to be ordained.

It is onely the Church of [g] Rome, the great and imperious Miſtreſſe of the World, that impoſes the yoke of this vow vpon her Vaſſalls. Impoſes it, but ad libitum; ſo as her great Paramour (in whoſe vaſt Boſome that whole Church lyes) may diſpenſe with it as he liſts. Here that irrefutable diſcourſe of Cardinall Caietan: His words beare weight, and are not vnworthy the eyes of my Reader. Therefore (ſaith he) ſince the Pope may at his pleaſure looſe the Bond of that Statute, it followes neceſſarily, that if a Prieſt of the Weſterne Church ſhall marry by the Popes leaue, without any reaſonable cauſe, that ſuch Mariage of his is a true Mariage, and the parties maried are true Husband and Wife, and their Iſſue truely legitimate; although in ſo marying, both the parties ſhould ſinne mortally, in doing this act againſt the Vow of Chaſtity, without a reaſonable, or at leaſt a probable cauſe of their ſo licenſing; and conſequently, neither ſhould the Pope himſelfe be excuſed from mortall ſin: But if there be any reaſonable caſe of diſpenſing with this vow of Chaſtity; then the party thus marying, and diſpenſed with, may both ſafely marry, and liue in Mariage. And hereupon it appeares, That ſince a reaſonable cauſe of diſpenſing with this Vow of Chaſtity, may bee not onely the publike Vtility, whether Ciuill or Eccleſiaſticall, but any other greater good then the obſerning of that Chaſtity; it iuſtly followes, that the Pope not only may, but with a ſafe Conſcience may diſpence with a Prieſt of the Weſterne (or Roman) Church, that he may marry; euen beſides the cauſe of a publike benefit. And therefore the determination of ſome hath beene too preſumptuous in affirming, That abſolutely and without ſuch cauſe the Pope cannot diſpence: whereas (as we haue ſhewed) the Pope may doe it without any cauſe, though in ſo doing he ſhould ſinne; and with any reaſonable cauſe, without ſinne: and in both, the Matrimony ſtands firme. Thus he.

Dubia cauſa.

Words that neede neither Paraphraſe, nor Inforcement. And how [h] vſuall the practice of this Diſpenſation hath beene (that we may not reſt onely in Speculation) appeares enough by the ingenuous complaint of their [i] ſelected Cardinalls, to Paul the third. Who cry downe the abuſe of thoſe ouer-frequent Grants, which they ſhould not haue yeelded, but vpon publike and weighty cauſes; eſpecially (ſay they) in theſe times, wherein the Lutherans vrge this matter with ſo much vehemence. Neither is it long ſince our kind Apoſtate M. Carier gaue vs here in England, (from bigger men then himſelfe) an ouerture of the likelihood of this liberall Diſpenſation, from his holy Father of Rome, vpon the conditions of our re-ſubiection. Would we therefore but ſtoope to kiſſe the Carbuncle of that ſacred Toe, our Clergie might as well conſiſt with holy Wedlocke, as the Grecian. Oh, the groſſe mockery of Soules, not more ignorant, then credulous! Will his Holineſſe diſpenſe with vs for our ſinne? We can be diſpenſed with at home for his diſpenſation. It is their Sorrow, that the World is growne wiſer, and findes Heauen no leſſe neere to Douer-Cliffe, then to the Seuen-hills.

And ere we leaue this point, it is very conſiderable, what may bee a reaſonable cauſe of this Diſpenſation: For thoſe very [k] Ieſuites, which hold the power of this Vow ſuch, That the vehementeſt tentations and foiles of the fleſh may not be relieued with an arbitrary Matrimonie, ſince the matter of this Vow is ſo important, and caries ſo much danger in the violation, as that it is not to bee left to the power of a priuate Iudgement (though morally certaine) whether Matrimonie (all things conſidered) be in this paticular expedient (for that may bee fit for a man as a ſingular perſon, which is not fit for him as part of the communitie) yet they grant, that this extreame perplexedneſſe and violence of carnall motions, is a iuſt cauſe of diſpenſation. What need we more? Though ſome [l] Caſuiſts be more fauourable, and grant that in ſuch caſes we may not onely allow, but perſwade Matrimonie to the perplexed Votary: As Cardinall [m] Æneas Syluius (who was neuer leſſe Pius, then when hee was Pius) giues this hearty aduiſe to his friend Iohn Freünd, a Roman Prieſt, that he ſhould (notwithſtanding his Orders) helpe himſelfe by Mariage; yet the former will ſerue our turne. If therefore thoſe ſuperiours, which haue all lawfull and ſpirituall authority ouer vs, ſhall haue thought good, vpon this reaſonable cauſe, to giue a generalitie of diſpenſation to all ſuch of our Clergie, as ſhall not, after all carefull and ſerious indeuours, find themſelues able to containe; allowing them by theſe lawfull remedies to quench thoſe impure flames: What can any Ieſuit or Deuill except againſt this? This is ſimply the cleare caſe of them whoſe cauſe I maintaine.

And yet further. Put the caſe this had not been; if without the thought of any Romiſh Diſpenſation, the [n] Eaſterne Church neuer held it needfull to require the Vow of ſingle life in the Miniſters of the Altar, (they know the words of their own Gloſſe) why ſhould not our Church challenge the ſame immunity; for (that from the general conſideration of Eccleſiaſtiques, as ſuch, we may turne our eies to our Eccleſiaſtiques in ſpeciall) no Church vnder heauen kept it ſelfe more free from the bondage of thoſe tyrannous Impoſitions?

The [o] Clergie of this Iland, from the beginning, neuer offered any ſuch Vow, the Biſhops neuer required it, for more (if any credit be due to Hiſtories) then a thouſand yeeres after Chriſt. The great Champion of Rome, Maſter Harding, was driuen to ſay, They did it by a becke, if not by a Dieu-gard, but could neuer proue it done by either. Neither is it more worth my Readers note, then my Aduerſaries indignation that the wiſe Prouidence of God ſo pleaſed to contriue it of old, as that from the beginning of the firſt conuerſion of this happy Iſland, it rather conſpired with the Greeke Church, then with the Roman: After the Grecian account wee kept our Eaſter, inſomuch, as Beda tels vs, that Pope Iohn the fourth (about the yeere 637.) was faine to require of the Engliſh, that they would keepe their Paſch after the Romane faſhion; a difference (as it was then taken) of no ſmall importance. The ſtory of S. Aidanus and Colmannus, may be herein an abundant witneſſe: And for the Britans, Beda left them in the Cloze, both of his Life and Hiſtory; faſt to Greece, looſe from Rome.

After the Grecian forme we celebrated the Sacrament of Baptiſme. After the Grecian Liberty wee continued the Mariages of perſons Eccleſiaſticall (through ſo many Centuries of yeeres) without the ſcandall, without the contradiction of the Chriſtian World; ſo as now we are but repoſſeſſed of the ancient right of our Forefathers, which the interpoſition of the Romiſh tyranny, for a while, iniuriouſly debarred. Our Aduerſaries haue wont to brand vs for the vncharitable cenſures of our Forefathers, and can they thinke the ſucceſſions of many Generations ſo faithleſſe, that they made ſolemne Vowes, for no other purpoſe, but onely to breake them? It was the queſtion of the rich and precious Iewell of England, to which his Hardie Aduerſary had neuer the face to reply. My Refuters forehead is ſtronger, with a weaker wit; Let him try here the power of his audacitie. And if the Church of this Iland, in the daies of her forced ſeruitude to the Roman See, maintained this liberty (as wee proue in the ſequell) and deriued it to poſterity, how much more free ſhall it be for vs to renue and inioy it, after the iuſt excuſſion of that ſeruile yoke?

Let now C. E. goe waſt good houres, and marre cleane Paper in diſprouing the Mariage of Romiſh Votaries; and in the meane time come as neere my Queſtion, as Thames is to Tiber: What is this but to mocke the Reader, and abuſe himſelfe? How much wiſer is he growne in the proceſſe of his diſcourſe, where hee grants our Mariage, and denies our Clergie? from which weake and witleſſe Hold, if we beat him not in the due place, we ſuffer not enough from that rude Hand.

Sect. IIII.

Refut.p.17.

Hauing then hitherto detected no error, no ignorance but his owne; he now deſcends to vntruths, and finds here ſo many miſtakings, lyes, falſifications, that a Reader would wonder by what Art I could couch ſo many of them in ſo ſmal a roome; and might verily thinke that I could out-ly the Legends, and out-iuggle a Ieſuit. But ere I haue done, theſe ſhall appeare to be but the fictions of a paſſionate fugitiue, the Man ſhall be cooler, I ſhall be innocent, and my Reader ſhall ſay, that if that forehead had not beene ſo oft croſſed, it could not haue had ſo little ſhame.

My firſt vntruth is, that I auouch Saint Paul to call the ſingle life of Prieſts, A Doctrine of Deuills. Reader, Is my Detector awake? I ſaid, That to maintaine the vnlawfulneſſe of the Mariage of the Miniſter of God, is, according to Saint Paul, A Doctrine of Deuills. and now he would preſwade the World, I ſaid thus of the ſingle life of his Prieſts. What can wee make of this? That ſingle life is a Doctrine? If not truth, yet let him learne to ſpeake ſenſe. But that hee may not alwayes refute what I neuer affirmed; I muſt gheſſe at what he meant: He would elude this charge, with that ſtale ſhift, worne out with the Pens of his Predeceſſors, that Saint Paul is to bee vnderſtood according to Theodoret, of thoſe which call Mariage execrable: according to Saint Auſtin, that ſay, Mariage is euill, and of the Deuils making: according to Clemens Alexandrinus, Of thoſe that abhorre Mariage: Of Manichees, and other Heretikes, as Ambroſe and Epiphanius, from which Catholikes are ſo farre that they approue it for a Sacrament.

Nuptias execrabiles.

Firſt, the words of Saint Paul, are (κωλυόντων γαμεῖν) forbidding to marry, not condemning Mariage. Then, we know well, what the Tacians, Ebionites, Encratites, Montaniſts, Marcionites, Manichees, Adamites, and Apoſtoliques held of Matrimonie. The Apoſtle brands them here: But what? Them only? Whiles he condemnes them, doth he free thoſe that partake with them? The Act is one, Forbiddance of Mariage; whether to ſome, or to more, or to al, S. Paul expreſſes not: The number doth not varie the quality. And if one be a part of all, then to condemne Mariage in ſome one kind of Men, can it be other then the partaking of an vniuerſall condemnation of it? This then only he hath gained, that ſome others haue beene deeper in this euill then themſelues.

But our Apoſtle ſpeakes of them which condemne Mariage as euill in it ſelfe.

We take what he giues: No mans mouth ſhall condemne my Refuter, but his owne. What was he that accuſed Mariage of Vnholineſſe, out of Sancti eſtote; of vncleanneſſe, out of Omnia munda mundis; of Contamination with carnall concupiſcence? Was it not his owne Pope [p] Innocentius? Who was hee that interpreteth of Mariage, the Text Rom. 8.8. Thoſe that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God, that called the maried Man, no leſſe then the Whoremonger, Sectatorem libidinum, Praceptorem vitiorum; A follower of Luſt, a teacher of Vice; that ſaid Mariage was a looſing the reynes to Luxury, an inhiatian after obſcene luſts? was it not his Pope [q] Siricius, the firſt Founder (if we may beleeue their owne-defaced Gloſſe) of forced Continency?

Who was it that called Mariage a defiling with vncleane ſociety, and execrable contagion? Was it not his Councell of [r] Toledo? Who was it that called Mariage (Spurcitias immundas) filthy beaſtlineſſe? Was it not his [ſ] Saint Dunſtan and Oſwald? Let him conſtrue this, and then tell me, what it is (if this be not) to condemne Mariage as [t] euill. Yet more, his owne example ſhall conuince him: He pleads out of Saint Auſtin, that this text, amongſt others, intends to ſtrike at the Manichees; now, the Manichees allowed Mariage to their Auditors, that is (Analogically) their Laity; forbad it to their Electi, that is, their Clergy; So farre approuing it in their layick-Clients, that no modeſt Penne may write [u] whence they fetched their Sacramentall Bread: Either then the Manichees muſt bee excluded, or Papiſts muſt be taken in for company into this doctrine of Deuils. It is true, they miſcall Mariage a Sacrament; So as wee may well wonder at theſe two extreames in one doctrine: and ſtudy in vaine how the ſame thing ſhould be Sacred in a Ceremonious inchoation, and in the reall conſummation morally impure; how a Sacrament ſhould bee incompatible with a ſacred Perſon: Theſe Sphyngian Riddles are for better Heads: With what Brow then can my Detector adde, [*] That with Saint Chryſoſtome and Saint Auſtin, they do but compare mariage, they doe not condemne it; Onely teaching Mariage to be good, Virginity better; with Fulgentius not ſo comparing Virginity to Corne, that they count Mariage Cockle? In this where ſhould they find and aduerſary? But if Luxury, Filthineſſe, Vncleanneſſe, Contagion, Beaſtlineſſe, Vice, Obſcenity, be the ſtiles of good, we can well allow them to the honour of C.E's. Virginity, and are content our Mariages ſhould paſſe for euill.

Sect. V.

MY ſecond vntruth (he ſaith) is, That I make the ſingle Life of Prieſt the brand of Antichriſtianiſme. Shameleſſe mouth! Where did I euer ſay ſo? My words are; Were it not for this opinion, the Church of Rome would want one euident brand of her Antichriſtianiſme. The life is one thing, the opinion another. Single life is good; the opinion of the neceſſity of ſingle life, and the vnlawfulneſſe of the Maried, is Antichriſtian. What can be more plaine? yet this wilſull ſlanderer tels the World, that I make the profeſſion of Continence, Antichriſtian: Whereas we doe willingly profeſſe, that true profeſſion of true Continency is truly laudable; that the forceable impoſition of it, as neceſſary to ſome ſtate of men, ſauours ſtrongly of that Man of ſin: Now, let my Reader iudge, whoſe vntruths my Aduerſary hath hitherto detected.

Refut. p. 19, 20.

Neither can I eat that word of mine, vnleſſe I would renounce the Apoſtle; who ſeemes purpoſely to decipher our Romaniſts by theſe lines: For, hauing immediately before deſcribed the condition of Biſhops, and Deacons, with their Wiues and Children (allowing them indifferently with others a maried eſtate) hee preſently (as foreſeeing that Point which would bee moſt ſubiect to contradiction) foretels, that the ſeducing ſpirits of Antichriſtianiſme would forbid mariage; and this hee foreprophesies propheſies ſhall bee done in the latter, or (as their Vulgar and Rhemiſts turne it) in the laſt Times; and that by them, which ſhall ſpeake lyes in hypocriſie. Neither of which can ſo exactly agree to thoſe firſt Heretikes; who, as they were early in time, ſo alſo groſſe in their Doctrine; wherin there was more open impiety, then ſecret diſſimulation.

And if ὕστεροι καιροὶ may agree to all the ages of the Church after Christ, yet moſt to the laſt, and that other addition ſeemes to ſtrengthen this ſenſe.

Sect. VI.

IN vaine therefore doth my Refuter bring in S. Paul, as an abetter of his forced Continencie; whiles he ſaith of yonger Widowes, that When they haue begun to wax wanton againſt Chriſt, they will marry, hauing damnation, becauſe they haue forſaken their firſt faith. In which place (boulted before to the Bran by many Controuerſers) mine Aduerſarie hath learned of his Bellarmine, to triumph aboue meaſure. This firſt faith (ſaith he) all the Fathers without exception, vnderſtand to be a Vow, or Promiſe, made to God of Continence, in the ſtate of Widowhood. It is a wide word (All the Fathers) I had thought I had read in holy [x] Athanaſius, Væ vobis qui primam fidem baptiſmi cælitus inſtitutam irritam facitis; Woe to you that make void the firſt faith of Baptiſme ordained from heauen. I had thought [y] Hierome had ſomewhere ſaid, They are not worthy of beliefe, which haue voided their firſt beliefe, Marcion I meane and Baſilides; whom yet I neuer found condemned for the breach of any Vow of Continence. I had thought, the Author of the Interlineary Gloſſe, would not haue croſſed all the Fathers, in expounding it, Fidem baptiſmi; The faith of Baptiſme, which is indeed the firſt Faith, and the Apoſtle ſaith (the firſt) not (the former;) as for that other, which hee imagines, a Vow of continued Viduitie, it was neither Faith nor Firſt; let him inſtance (if hee can) where our Apoſtle takes Faith for a Vow. Rather, as if he meant to expound his owne word in this very Scripture, and this occaſion, he cleeres his doubt, whiles he ſpeakes of the wilfully improuident Man, that he hath denyed the Faith, and is worſe then an infidel; and now in the ſame Context, he ſpeakes of theſe peruerted Widdowes that they haue forſaken the Faith.

Refut.p. 21.

[y] Non ſunt digni fide, qui primam fidem Baptiſmi irritam fecerunt: Marcionem loquor & Baſilidem. Hier. Proœm. in Epiſt. ad Tit.

Much leſſe is it the Firſt, whether in Time, or Dignitie: For, they could not haue beene Church-Widowes, if not Chriſtians; and they could not be Chriſtians, if they ſhould haue valued the Vow of their widowhood aboue the vow of their Chriſtendome; yea, ſo farre was this from the firſt Vow (if it had beene one) as that it was the laſt of all; for according to them, their firſt Faith muſt be to their Husband, their ſecond to Chriſt, in their initiation to Religion; their laſt in the Vow of Widowhood; So here is a fained vow made Faith, and laſt made firſt; and all to vphold a crazy conceit of our Romaniſts, which hath no other ground but this one ambiguity. Chryſoſtome indeed calls it (συνθήκην) ad pactum; a couenant; but what couenant, or with whom, he expreſſes not; whether of Chriſtianity, or of Widowhood, or of Miniſtration; Some of the others that followed him, ſpake according to the Gloſſe which the corrupt conceit of the Times had ſet vpon him.

Refut. p. 20.

But what need my Refuter ſtand vpon particular Authors (he ſayes) when hee may bring 214 Biſhops, all ſitting in Counſell at Carthage, all agreeing in this expoſition, poynting vs to the fourth Counſell of Charthage? (Canone vlt.) His Gracian, had wont to tell vs, (for the more Grace) that it was in the third Councell of Carthage, Can 4. Now he is taught to change this note; So doth C.E. with his Binius, tell vs it was the 4. Councell and the laſt Canon. We haue reaſon to ſuſpect it was in neither; The very ſtile and manner of diſcourſe ſo different from the reſt of thoſe briefe Canons, and the faſhion of thoſe Times, cary in it open likelihood of Baſtardie: It was an eaſie fraud to patch it to the end of thoſe Canons; neither (which learned Iunius taught me firſt to obſerue) is it found among the Greeke; then which there cannot be a worſe ſigne.

Refut. p.21.

But that I may at once anſwer his vaunt of Antiquitie, and ſtop the mouth of this Cauiller: Let me aske him whether thoſe Fathers, whom hee cites for this ſenſe, doe not take thoſe yong Widowes for Votaries? If they doe (as hee cannot denie) how can theſe two ſtand together; That they ſhould haue damnation, becauſe againſt their vow, they would marry; and yet that the Apoſtle ſhould wiſh them to marry? Can he imagine that Saint Paul would aduiſe them to incurre wilfull damnation?

And if in this I ſhould haue diſſented from the interpretation of much Antiquitie, I ſhould but take to my ſelfe the libertie of his Maſters the Ieſuites, with whom this is no noualty; for inſtance, his not vnlearned, and bold [z] Maldonate: (as we ſhall ſee afterwards) vpon a Text of this very queſtion, confeſſing the current of the ſtreame of Antiquity, can come in, at laſt, with a Doctorly wipe of Adduci non poſſum vt ſequar; I cannot goe with them: This priuiledge is for none but the Fathers of the Society, to controll the Fathers of the Church.

[z] *Maledonat. in Math.*19.11.

The ſtate then of theſe Widowes was ſhortly this: They being for their pouerty ſuſtained by Church-almes vpon * condition of attendance on the Saints, whether ſicke or trauelling, were to dedicate themſelues to this ſeruice; but, ſome of the yonger ſort being inueigled by Infidell-Louers, were drawne to leaue, not their Station onely of their miniſtration, but their profeſſion of Chriſtianity: Theſe had damnation moſt iuſtly, for caſting off their firſt Faith. Their mariage was accidentally faulty, becauſe it forced them from their holy imployment; Their Apoſtaſie was abſolutely and damnably ſinfull, in that they left Chriſt, and followed after Satan.

* De his agit quæ ad Eccleſiæ ſtipem, vel miniſterium recipiebantur eius ſumptibus alendæ. Eſpenc. de Cont. l.4.c.1.

The inextricable Dilemma then in my detector is eaſily anſwered; (I demand now of Maſter Hall, whether theſe young Widowes, in breaking their Vowes, did ſinne, or not? If they did not; why ſhall they haue damnation? If they did ſinne (as indeed they did) then how is the Vow vnlawfull? how the brand of Antichriſtianiſme?) Nothing can be more baſe then to beg the Queſtion; What doe wee diſpute, but whether any Vow were made? and if any, whether of Continence, or of Seruice? But why then ſhall they haue damnation? For waxing wanton againſt Chriſt; not meerly for marying. If to marry, were to waxe wanton againſt Chriſt, why ſhould the Apoſtle haue aduiſed it them? In a word, for abandoning both their Office and Religion.

Refut. p.21. 22.

Laſtly, who can but wonder at the face of our Aduerſaries, that dare bring forth ſo plaine a witneſſe againſt themſelues. For, if the Vow of Continence bee the firſt faith here ſpoken of, then may not any woman by the Apoſtles charge make this Vow, till ſhee bee threeſcore yeeres old; which, how is it at this day practized in the Romiſh Church? ſince, and as the Cæſar-Auguſtaine Counſell, and the Agathenſe abated it to forty yeeres, and the third Counſell of Carthage yet lower, to fiue and twentie; ſo Pope Gregorie fell yet lower to eighteene; and ſome other Counſells, yet lower to twelue; Although the Trent-Conference very liberally riſe vp to whole ſixteene: Either therefore let them grant that our Apoſtle ſpeakes not of Votaries, or elſe let them follow his rule of the age of Votaries, that the World may thinke they haue honeſt Nunneries; and let them confeſſe their change preſumptuous. Thus, I hope, This Gordian knot, that requires more ſtrength then Maſter Halls learning, and a ſharper edge then Alexanders ſword to diſſolue, or cut, is proued more eaſie then the knot of a Friers girdle, which a very dull Whittle may cut aſunder; and *C. angry that I medled with his crowne; but if his haire had not beene longer then his wit, this deepe offence had neuer beene; For, if hee had taken my words, Cum grano ſalis, in the ſenſe which they will only well beare: (Let ſuch of their ſhauelings, as vpon whom an vnlawfull Vow hath forced an impoſſibile neceſſity, ſpeake for themſelues) (none other need ſpeaking for) he had found the ſentence ſo particular, that it might haue ſpared him both much ſpleene and worke; ſince, neither was it in my heart euer to affirme the obſeruation of this Vow impoſſible to any man, neither will he (I hope) hold that it is kept by all: It is not in the power of the Razor, together with the haires, to cut off inordinate affections; ſome vow, which cannot containe: Vpon this ſuppoſition onely, I called this neceſſitie impoſſible, and this Vow vnlawfull; I cannot therefore but pity my paſſionate Detector, that hee hath ſet himſelfe all on a froth, in running this Wild-Gooſe chaſe alone, following nothing but his owne fancy, whiles hee purſues a certaine Chimericall Monſter, that holds Continence vtterly and vniuerſally impoſſible. And that he may the better repent him of this witleſſe waſte and preuent the ſpoile of good Paper hereafter, let him know at once (which perhaps hath not hitherto beene allowed him) what we hold concerning this Point. We doe therefore from our hearts honour true Virginity, as the moſt excellent eſtate of life, which is incident to fraile Humanity; Gerſon hath taught us not to call it a Vertue, but it is Couſin German to a Vertue; Neither doe we thinke that the Earth affords any thing more glorious, then Eunuchiſme for the Kingdome of Heauen; which is therefore commended by our Sauiour, not as a thing meerely arbitrarie, by way of aduice, but of charge to the able. Qui poteſt capere, capiat; In this we can gladly ſubſcribe to Saint CHRYSOSTOME, Bonum eſt Virginitas, &c, Virginity is good, I yeeld it; and better then Mariage, I confeſſe it. Secondly, euery man therefore (not Eccleſiaſtiques onely) ſhould labour, and ſtriue to aſpire vnto this eſtate, as the better, vſing all holy meanes both to attaine, and to continue it: Neither doe we thinke it any other then blameable, that yong Perſons (not ſo much as aduiſing with their owne abilities) without all indeuour and ambition of ſo worthy a condition, leape raſhly into the bands of Wedlocke. Thirdly, though euery man muſt reach for it, yet euery man cannot catch it; ſince it hath pleaſed God to reſerue this as a peculiar gift for ſome perſons, not intending it as a common fauour to all Suiters. Fourthly, thoſe then, which are vpon good triall conſcious to themſelues of Gods call to this eſtate, and his gift inabling them vnto it, may lawfully make profeſſion thereof to the glory of the Giuer, and (if need be) may vow (God continuing the ſame grace vnto them) an holy perpetuation therof to their end; the obſeruation whereof, if they through their owne neglect ſhall let fall, they cannot be excuſed from [b] ſinne, or freed from cenſure: But thoſe, which after all ſerious indeuours, find nothing but weakneſſe and vncertainties in this behalfe, ſhall ſin, if they abſolutely vow; ſhall not ſinne, if they marry, in what condition of life ſoeuer; nor ſinne in marying, howeuer their mariage may haue faulty circumſtances.

Now my Detector by this time in our aſſertions ſees his owne folly; if againſt this he can except ought, he knowes where to find an aduerſary: In the meane time, hee needed not to take it ſo highly, that in the Romiſh vſe of vowes, I made mention of vnlawfulneſſe, of impoſſibility; vnlawfulneſſe in the making, impoſſibilitie in keeping; I am ready to maintaine both, in reſpect of the indiſpoſition, yea incapacitie of the Votaries.

SECT. VIII.

BVt in ſpeaking of the impoſſibilitie of ſome mens continencie, it was not poſſible for my Refuter to containe himſelfe from a ſcurill inuectiue againſt Luther, Pellican, Bucer; and it becomes him well. His Fathers, like Sepulchrall dogges, tore vp the graues of Gods Saints, and gnawed vpon their dead bones; and now this whelpe of theirs commingit cineros, Bedribbles their aſhes.

Solutio voti mala, Coniugium tamen bonum.

The heroicall Spirit of Luther (for I cannot be flouted out of that word) hated the brothelry of their Cloyſters; and choſe rather (which gals them to the heart) to be an honeſt Husband, then a fornicating Frier.

What did he other in this, then the holy Fathers haue aduiſed him, yea, then hee learned in their owne Schoole? for caſting, perhaps, his eye vpon the Index of their Aquinas, he found there, Votum Vergens, &c. A Vow tending to the danger of the perſon, may be ſecurely broken, if a diſpenſation cannot be had: What other then all their more ingenuous Caſuiſts would thinke fit to giue way vnto? If Luther would haue ſtill kept on his Cowle, and but haue paid the fees of a Concubine, he had liued and dyed an holy Auguſtinian: but now all his crimes ſinke downe out of ſight, vna vxor ſupernatat, (as that Father ſaid) his wife onely floteth: and poore honeſt Katherine Bora hath made more noyſe in their Papers, then ten thouſand of their Curtizans. Neither needs this man any other inſcription on his graue to make him odious, then this, Here lyes the man that held mariage better then fornication. If now Doctor Luther in a vehement deteſtation of the impurity of their holy Stewes, after the homely plainneſſe of a blunt German liberty, vſed ſome ouer-broad ſpeeches to expreſſe his owne freedome, and their abhominations; what is this to vs? If we honour the man, muſt we hold his pen impeccable? This is enough to maintaine in their Vicegod of the ſeuen hills. For vs, we haue ſworne vnto the words of no Maſter, but that One in Heauen, the eternall Word of his Father. But this we dare ſay, that this Aduerſaries Truth is no more in fathering all theſe reports vpon Luther, then in fathering Luther vpon an Incubus.

Tom. 2. Lat. Colloq. Tit. de morbis Lutheri.

As for thoſe exceſsiue ſpeeches of compariſon, whereby Luther points forth the neceſſity of carnall actions, they are ſpoken onely of ſuch perſons, as haue not the gift of continency; whom naturall inclination (by which they are led) caries (without an higher reſtraint) importunately vnto theſe deſires: wherein hee ſaies not much other then their owne Saint AQVINAS, *Omnibus animalibus, &c. But when Luther ſpeakes of men bleſſed from aboue with this gift, C. E. might haue heard him in another ſtraine; pleading both the poſſibility and worthineſſe of this condition. As in his Commentarie vpon the [h] Pſalme 128. verſe 3. (to giue one for all) thus he ſaith, For one and the ſame ſpirit hath diſtributed his gifts to ſome after one manner, and to ſome after another, &c. Let them therefore, to whom it is giuen to receiue this, abide in their ſingle life, and let them glory in the Lord: On the other ſide, let them that are not ſo ſtrong, but know and feele their infirmity, that they cannot liue both chaſte, and out of Matrimony: Let theſe, I ſay, conſider more their owne infirmity, then the diſcommodities and troubles that belong vnto matrimony. Thus he grauely and holily.

Sect. IX.

NOw to follow my Aduerſary in particulars: Whereas all the world ſees, that the vnlawfulneſs of their vow depends vpon the inabilitie of performance, he, like a true Artiſt, begins firſt with the vnlawfulneſs. It is well, that all theſe ſheets of Paper which he hath ſpent in this point, may ſerue for ſome neceſſarie vſe; this which he hath put them to, is fooliſhly ſuperfluous.

If the vow of Chaſtity be vnlawfull (he ſaith) it muſt bee either in reſpect of the vow, or the matter vowed; Not the firſt, becauſe vowes in generall are lawfull; which he will proue out of Scriptures and Fathers. Idle head! Who euer denied it, but the exploded Lampetians? His owne Cardinall could haue taught him, that Luther and Caluin approue the vowing of things commanded, firſt; and then of things not commanded too, to the auoyding of Sinne, or other good purpoſes. Not the Second, which he will proue by many arguments; ſome of them from the Fathers, extolling virginitie, and comparing it with the ſtate of Angels, and preferring it before mariage. And who euer thought otherwiſe, except Iouinian? and perhaps not he. And at laſt, after ſome ſeuere examples of penance inioyned to fornicating vow-breakers, by Chryſoſtome and Baſil; to incontinency and rape, by the ciuill Lawes (as if theſe concerned vs ſo much as themſelues) hee deſcends to this challenge; Let Mʳ Hall (if he bee able) produce vs ſome proofe, although but one claſsicall authority of any one ancient writer, where he hath euer perſwaded ſuch as haue ſolemnely vowed Chaſtity, to vſe Mariage as a meanes to ouercome temptations, and he ſhall haue ſome excuſe for calling it a filthy vow; and his heroycall Luther for terming it a diabolicall thing: So he. I take him at his word; onely let him not fly forth vpon the ſhift of Solemnity, which their Scholler lately hatched; That were to ſeeke gray hayres in infancy; Firſt, I bring forth that famous place of Saint Cyprian, in his Epiſtle written both in his owne name, and his fellow-Biſhops, to Pomponius, concerning ſome vowed Virgins which were found in bed with men, whereof one was a Deacon; of which Virgins he with his Brethren paſſe this ſentence, [k] Quod ſi ſe ex fide Chriſto dicauerunt, &c. If they (ſaith he) haue faithfully dedicated themſelues vnto Chriſt, let them without all deceit perſeuere in the courſe of chaſtitie, and ſo couragiouſly and conſtantly expect the reward of their Virginitie; Si autem perſeuerare nolunt, vel non poſſunt, &c. But if either they will not, or cannot perſeuer, it is better that they marry, then by their wantonneſſe fall into the fire; Let them giue no ſcandall to their Brethren and Siſters. What could Luther and Caluin write more directly? So that Eraſmus notes in the Margine, Etiam virginibus ſacris permittit nubere: Here Cyprian permits euen holy Virgins to marry. [l] Bellarmines ſhift hereof is ridiculous, That Cyprian by ocaſion of ſome virgins, which after their vow behaued themſelues diſhoneſtly, aduiſed others, that if they had not a firme purpoſe of perſeuering, they ſhould not vow but marry; whom wee remit to the checke of his owne Pamelius, yea, of his conſcience; Indeed, what is this but to mocke both the Author, and the Reader? For doth Cyprian at all vary the perſons of whom hee ſpeakes? Doth he not ſpeake plainly of Virgins deuoted to Chriſt? And what perſeuering could there be, but in that which they had vndertaken? And what had they vndertaken, but a dedication of themſelues to Chriſt? What is this, Reader, but willingly to try his Oares againſt the ſtreame of truth?

To the ſame purpoſe is that noted ſentence of Hierome, [m] though otherwiſe none of

of the beſt friends to mariage) who ſpeaking of Virgins, aſcribed by their vow into the celeſtiall Family, addes, Quibus apertè dicendum, &c. Whom wee muſt openly charge that either they would marry, if they cannot containe, or, that they would containe, if they will not mary. We know the eluſion of this place alſo; That Hierome ſpeakes of virgins in purpoſe, not in vow; But whoſe name, I beſeech you, was defamed by their lewdneſs? or, what was the heauenly and Angelicall Family, whoſe glory was blemiſhed herewith? Was it of any other then profeſſed Virgins? Or could the act of a purpoſed Virgin onely, ſhame Virgins profeſſed? To the ſame purpoſe is the aduice of [n] Baſil, and [o] Epiphanius.

Adde to theſe an elder then they all, Tertullian, and with him all thoſe Fathers, which interpret Saint Pauls [volo iuniores nubere] of vowed widowes; All which muſt needs hold, that our Apoſtle allowes mariage for the lawfull remedy of vnable Votaries.

Let not this malicious Maſſe-Prieſt then turne vs ouer to his Tyberianus or Iouinian, for the firſt founders of our opinion, and practiſe, which wee receiued from no other then that diuine Arch-heretike, that ſate at the feet of Gamaliel; from no other, then the holily-hereticall Fathers & Martyrs of the Church: As for thoſe two miſ-alledged Authors, to whom he aſcribes vs, his skill doth palpably faile him in both: For Tyberianus, he being ſuſpected of Priſcillianiſme, wrote affectly againſt that hereſie, at laſt foulely fell to that, which he diſclaimed; whereon it was that Hierome ſayes, Canis ad vomitum, not vpon the mariage of his daughter. And for that particular fact, it is no leſſe miſtaken. Hierome ſayes onely, Filiám virginem Chriſto deuotam, matrimonio copulauit; but Sophronius (who it ſeems well knew the ſtory) turnes it ([p] γαμηθῆναι κατηνάγκασεν;) compeld his daughter (a conſecrated Virgin) to mary. A foule fact, which wee deteſt no leſſe then the contrary practice of thoſe Romaniſts, who compell their daughters (which would marry) to be conſecrated Virgins. It is then no leſſe falſe that Tyberian gaue beginning to vs, then it is true that Tiburne hath giuen a iuſt end to ſome of them. For Iouinian, what is he to vs? when neither our practice was his, nor his opinion ours. Not our practice; for he liued and dyed a ſingle Monke. Not his opinion; How can we be ſayd to admit mariage to an equall ſhare of merit with Virginity, when we deny merit in either? Againe that Eunuchiſme (not in it ſelfe, but) for the Kingdome of Heauen, is better then it we doubt not; But when [q] theſe two are reduced to their ſubiects, their value is according to their vſe. Chryſoſtome could ſay [r] μετὰ συμμετρίας, &c. Vſe marriage with meete moderation, and thou ſhalt bee the firſt in the Kingdome; And Gregory Nazianzen (beſides that he ſaith of his Siſter Gorgonia) when hee commends the children of Baſil the elder, [s] tels vs, ſome of them ſo vſed their mariage, that it was no hinderance to them, quo minus ad pacem virtutis gloriam aſpirarent; that they might not aſpire to an equall glory of vertue with the Virgins; and made theſe two rather different kinds of life, then manners of liuing. Saint Chryſoſtome then, and Nazianzen, ſhall vſher vs into the Schoole of Iouinian. And if Iouinian were Formoſus Monachus, craſſus, nitidus, &c. A faire, fat, ſpruce Monke (as he ſaith;) Me thinks he ſhould rather haue hoped to match him in their Sybariticall Cloyſters, where they abound with meate, and drinke, and eaſe, then in our laborious Clergy. It is happy for vs, and for that reuerend Archbiſhop Marcus Ant. de Dominis, that this rayler can obiect nothing to him but an harmeleſs loade of corpulencie. It moues their ſpleene enough, that this learned Prelate hath honoured our Iland with a Dalmatian Pall: Their cauſe feeles that he can (notwithſtanding) paſſe into the Pulpit: What ſpeake they of this? when to their ſorrow, they ſee he could paſſe ouer the Alpes to leaue Rome. This Beagle, and his balling Beyerlinke, and the kennell of Sorbon, may bay at him, but not one of their Bandogs dare faſten. But why doe I ſuffer this babbler to lead mee out of my way? What is all this ſleeueleſſe diſcourſe to a man that neuer ſaid, neuer thought euery vow of this kinde vnlawfull, nor euery breach of ſuch vow ſinneleſs? When he takes me with this Tenet, let him load me with authorities; Till then, his now-friuolous papers may ſerue for an honeſt vſe.

NO leſſe wiſe and proper is that other diſcourſe of Impoſſibilitie: For, to make ſhort worke; That no man can contayne (though it bee giuen him) I neuer ſayd; That any man may containe (though it be not giuen him) either he will not ſay, or if he do, he hath Chriſt for his Aduerſarie. Why doe we blot Paper? How the performance of this Vow is not poſſible onely for all, but [p] facill alſo, (which he contendeth) the iſſue proues too well, and the World bluſhes to ſee it. Let it not be too much burden to his patience, that I ſaid, Some of their ſhauelings cannot hold; He knowes what their Gloſſe vpon Gratian ſaid of old (though now they haue pulled out the tongue for blabbing) [q] Communiter dicitur, &c. It is commonly ſaid, that a Clerke ought not to be depoſed for ſimple fornication, Cùm pauci ſine illo vitio inueniantur; Since there are but a few found without that vice. This they haue wiped out of the Booke, but the Margarita Decreti (as happy is) holds it ſtill: And their honeſt [r] Caſſander, yet more plainly, Vix centeſimum inuenias, you ſhall ſcarce finde one of an hundred free: And, if need were, I could tell him out of old [s] Bromiard what the voyce of a Ghoſt ſaid to a Prieſt of theirs, but I will not; onely thus he ſhut vp; That there came dayly ſuch ſtore of Prieſts to Hell for their Luxury, in plaine Engliſh, Lecherie, that hee had not thought there had beene any left vpon earth. And to theſe I could adde the ierkes of their zealous Preacher, Frier Menot, who fetches the threefold ſhame of their Clergie out of the Aue Mary; The ſecond whereof (though the firſt in miſchiefe) is, In Mulieribus. But what ſhould I fill Carts with ſuch ſtuffe, as I eaſily might, when the ſalacity of the Romiſh Clergie, is growne to be the Prouerbe, and ſcorne of the World? Let not my Refutor ſcare vs with the threat of recriminations, wee know that in all Profeſsions, there may be found lewdneſſe enough. But, when all is done, we ſhall iuſtifie that which worthy B. Iewel ſaid long agoe, Scortum apud nos modeſtiùs viuit, quàm apud vos Penelope; Our ſtrumpet is their Penelope. What needed he therefore to vpbraid vs with that frumpe of Eraſmus (Quæ malùm eſt iſta tanta ſalacitas, &c.) when he knowes how eaſily we can ouer-pay him in this Coyne? Was it not Eraſmus, whoſe word it was (which Maſter Doctor Collet Deane of Paules, was wont to haue familiarly in his mouth) [t] Nunc is eſt rerum ac temporum ſtatus, vt nuſquam reperias minus inquinatam morum integritatem, quàm inter coniugatos? Now ſuch is the ſtate of the times, that you ſhall neuer finde leſſe corruption of manners and life, then amongſt the maried. Was it not Eraſmus that ſaid, *Atque vtinam verè caſtrati ſint, quicunque ſuis vitijs magnificum caſtrationis prætexunt titulum, ſub vmbra caſtitatis turpiùs libidinantes, &c. SECT. XI.

BVt it is no arguing from the Act to the poſſibilitie. Theſe did not containe, but they might. What? whether it were giuen them or no? So ſeemes mine Aduerſarie to hold, whiles he cenſures Luther, for ſaying, that this is Gods gift; and that here we can onely take, and not giue. Yea, but if they had asked, it would haue beene giuen them. Aske, and it ſhall be giuen: ſo ſayes my Refuter, out of Origen, none of the beſt Interpreters; ſo his Maſters the Ieſuits, Sufficit promiſsio generalis, ſaith * Bellar. By this Rule, if the Cardinall ſhould but pray for the Popedome; the three Crownes muſt come tumbling vpon his Head; and if C. E. ſhould but pray for a red Hat, it would haue Mercuriall wings, and come flying to Doway; I would he had but prayed for Wit, he had then perhaps beene ſilent: Not conſidering, that Virginitie, and Honour, and degrees of Wit (though excellent in their kinds) yet are ſuch things as without which we may enioy God, and goe to Heauen, and therefore that perhaps God ſees it beſt for vs to aske them and goe without. What can be more plaine then that of * Hierome, If all all might be Virgins, Chriſt would neuer haue ſaid, Qui poteſt capere, capiat; Neither would the Apoſtle ſo timorouſly haue perſwaded to Virginity; Could he euer ſuppoſe that Virginity might bee had without prayers? and yet he ſayes, If all might bee Virgins, &c.

Who would not haue thought, that this one Text of our Sauiour, ſhould haue ſtopt all mouthes? His Diſciples had ſaid; If thus, it is good not to marry: He replyes, All men cannot receiue this Word ſaue they to whom it is giuen; and concludes, He that is able to receiue it, let him receiue it. Yet here, ſee the forehead of a Ieſuite, Maldonate vpon the place dares ſay thus: * That he ſaith, all men doe not receiue this Word, all Interpreters (almoſt) doe ſo expound it, as if the ſenſe were; All men cannot performe this which you ſay, that is, Want a wife, becauſe all haue not the gift of Chaſtity, but onely thoſe to whom it is giuen; for which he cites onely Origen, Gregory, Nazianzene, Ambroſe, concealing the reſt of his, Almoſt all; yet after in the ſame Page (forgetting himſelfe) ſolus D. Auguſtinus, &c. Onely Saint Auſtin vſes (ſaith he) to teach, that this gift of Continency is not giuen to all, but to ſome onely. It is happy yet that herein we are granted to erre with Saint Auſtin; and yet ere long, we take in Origen, Nazianzene, Ambroſe, Hierome, and at laſt, ouertake, Ferè omnes; ſo as we need not feare ſolitarineſſe in this errour. But what ſayes the Ieſuite to this good company? Adduci non poſſum, vt ſequar; No maruell. Marke, how well the Ieſuites follow Ieſus himſelfe: Ieſus ſayes, All men cannot receiue this. The Ieſuits ſay, * All men may receiue it. Ieſus ſayes, It muſt be giuen from God. The Ieſuits ſay, [a] It is ſo the gift of God, that it is in the power of Man. How can we looke to eſcape their Oppoſition, when they dare thus contradict our Sauiour? For me, I ſhall be ſtill in this Hereſie, That all their Prieſts, and Moncks, and Nuns cannot containe: And his [b] Bonauenture ſhall beare me out, who teaches me, that to the third degree of Chaſtity (requiri priuilegium ſingulare) there is a ſingular priuiledge required; for that it ſeemes to be aboue the pitch of naturall poſſibility, to liue in the Fleſh, and not to feele the faults of Fleſh.

SECT. XII.

AS for his holy Siſters at Bruxels, the touch of whom hath ſo much enfired his ghoſtly zeale; I intended no quarrell to them in particular; They may bee as honeſt, as their Champion is malicious. What I ſaid, was out of the ſuppoſition of the common frailty; And if he haue beene ſo much in their boſome, as to know they neuer repented them, it is well knowne that others haue; whoſe Song hath beene in the hearing of thoſe I know.

What ſhall I doe, ſhall I die, and neuer maried be?

Like vnto thoſe Veſtals,

Fœlices nuptæ, moriar niſi nubere dulce eſt.

As for the miſchiefe following hence, the viſible monuments of ſo many murthered Infants (if not in Gregories Ponds) in the very place where I now liue, and [c] elſwhere, conuinces it too much. But [d] my example (ywis) ſhall cleere his Veſtals of Bruxels, and all other Votaries. Maſter Hall was abſent (ſome three Moneths) in France: Fleſh is fraile, Temptations frequent (adde to theſe his body ſickly, and well neere to death) yet both then, and before his mariage, he would take it in great ſcorne (as well hee might) to bee ſuſpected for diſhoneſt. True, and might defie Men and Deuils in that Challenge. What of this? It followes then: If Maſter Hall could for ſo long together liue a chaſte life, why no more? Why not alwayes? Demonſtratiuely concluded: As if a man ſhould ſay, C.E. doth ſpeake ſome wiſe words, how can hee at any time write thus fooliſhly? A Chriſtian hath ſometime grace to auoyd a Temptation, why not alwayes? Why doth he not keepe himſelfe euer from ſinning? A good Swimmer may hold his breath vnder the water for ſome portion of a Minute, why not for an houre? why not for more? A deuout Papiſt may faſt after his Breake-faſt, till his Dinner in the afternoone, therefore why not a Weeke? why not a Moneth? why not ſo long as Eue the Maid of Meurs?

The Spirit of God (if at leaſt he may bee allowed for the Author of Continencie) breatheth where and when he liſteth, and that God which makes Mariages in Heauen, either auerts the heart from theſe thoughts, or inclines it at his pleaſure. Paul ſay that πρὸς καιρὸν, for a while they are able to liue chaſte, but not for any long while; I aske againe, How long that while ſhall endure? and what warrant they haue therein for not falling? ſeeing it may ſo fall out, that in the while appointed, they may bee more tempted then they ſhall be againe in all their liues after: How ſawcy would this Sophiſtrie be? how ſhameleſſe? The words are his; onely the Name is changed; what the elect Veſſell would anſwer in ſuch a caſe for himſelfe, let C. E. ſuppoſe returned by mee.

Refut. p. 63.

Sect. XIII.

THe Refuter hath borrowed ſome Weapons of his Maſter Bellarmine, and knowes not how to weare them. It would moue any mans diſdaine, to ſee, how abſurdly thoſe poore Arguments are blundred together; We muſt diſtinguiſh them as we may.

First, Saint Paul condemnes the yong Widowes mentioned; therefore hee ouerthrowes this impoſſibilitie of containing. I anſwer: Saint Paul aduiſes the yong Widowes to marry, and admits none into the Church-booke, vnder threeſcore yeares: therefore he eſtabliſhes in ſome, this impoſſibilitie.

Refut. p. 63.

Secondly, Saint Paul aduiſes Timothy to liue chaſte. Reader, tell him the word is (σώφρονα) which their owne vulgar, 1 Tit. 8. turnes, Sober; and in 2 Tit. 5. Prudent; But, to grant him his owne Phraſe: Can my Detector deſcry no difference betwixt Chaſte and Single? Did he and his Fellowes neuer heare of a coniugall Chaſtitie? So they haue ſtill wont to ſpeake, as if Chaſtitie were onely oppoſite to mariage, as if no ſingle life could be vnchaſte. His Eſpencæus might haue taught him that Verſe in Virgil, Caſta pudicitiam ſeruat domus: and he might haue heard of that Roman law of Veſtals, Caſtæ ex caſtis, puræ ex puris ſunto; yea his Eraſmus might haue taught him yet further, [f] E diuerſo nihil prohibet in coniugio Virginitati locum eſſe; that euen in Mariage there may be Virginitie.

Refut. p. 63. 64.

[f] Eraſ. Apol. pro declam. Matr. Secundus gradus Virginitatis eſt Matrimonii caſta dilectio. Opus Imperf. in Matth.

Thirdly, the Fathers exhort to Virginitie; eſpecially S. Ambroſe and Saint Auſtin. Let him tell this to them that know it not, to them that diſlike true chaſtity in Virgins, not to them that condemne vnchaſtneſſe in a pretended Virginity.

To what Vertue doe not the Fathers exhort? yet neuer ſuppoſing them to be within our lure. Laſtly, where is the ſhame of my Refuter, that cites Auſtin as the Man on whom he depends for his vniuerſall poſſibility of Continency: when his owne Maldonate profeſſes, that S. Auſtin is the only enemy to this Doctrine?

Fourthly, Where there is impoſſibility or neceſſity, there is no ſinne, no counſell; as no man ſinnes in not making new Starres, in not doing Miracles. A ſtale ſhift, that oft ſounded in the eares of Auſtin and Proſper from their Pelagians; The naturall man in this deprauedneſſe of eſtate cannot but offend God, therefore he ſinnes not in ſinning: Counſell giuen ſhewes what we ſhould do, not what we can. [g] Iubendo admonet, &c. ſaith Auſtin; In commanding hee admoniſheth vs both to doe what wee can, and to aske that which we cannot doe. In Continency then our indeuour is requi-

hall, J.

[r] ed for the attaining of that which God will giue vs; God neuer imployed vs in making of Starres; Though my Refuter is euery day ſet on greater Worke, then making of him that made Starres. Laſtly, it is true, there is no ſinne in marying, there may bee ſinne (after a vow) in not vſing all lawfull meanes of Chaſtitie: The Fathers therefore ſuppoſing a [h] pre-requited aſſurance of the gift, and calling of God in thoſe, whom mature deliberation, and long proofe had couered with the vayle of Virginity, do iuſtly both call for their continuance, and cenſure their lapſes.

Fiftly, vpon this ground the Father cannot blame his Childe for incontinence; To containe, implyes impoſsibility. Aske him wherefore ſerues Mariage? Yea, but to prouide an Husband or a Wife, is not a worke of an houres warning; in the meane time what ſhall they do? Sure, the man thinkes of thoſe hot Regions of his Religion, where they are ſo ſharpe ſet, that they muſt haue Stewes allowed of one Sexe at leaſt; Elſe what ſtrange violence is this that he conceiues? As our Iunius anſwered his Bellarmine, in the like, Hic homo ſibi videtur agere de equis admiſſarijs ruentibus in venerem, & de hippomane, non de hominibus ratione prædititis; hee ſpeakes as if he had to doe with Stalions, not with Men, not with Chriſtians, amongſt whom is to bee ſuppoſed a decent order, and due regard of ſeaſonableneſſe, and expediency: A doughty Argument, wherwith Maſter Hall is ſore preſſed, (They may containe till they marry, and therefore they may euer containe and not marry.) How eaſie is it for me to take vp this loade, and lay it vpon my Sauiour, which ſaid, All men cannot receiue it; and vpon his great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, who hath taught vs an (ἴδιον χάρισμα) a proper gift, which God hath beſtowed on ſome, not on others, and ſuppoſes a neceſsity, that may bee of giuing a Virgin in Mariage?

Marg. of the Refut. p. 65.

1 Cor. 7. 7.

Refut. p. 65.

Sixtly, The Husband and wife are ſeparated vpon diſcord, or diſeaſe: What ſhall they doe? To liue continent with this man is impoſsible. I anſwer; If onely their will ſunders them, that muſt yeeld to neceſsity; Diſſention may not abridge them of the neceſſary remedy of ſinne. If neceſſity; that findes reliefe in their prayers; If they call on him, who calls them to continencie by this Hand of his, hee will heare them, and inable them to perſiſt. And why not then in the neceſsitie of our Vowes? This is a neceſſity of our owne making; that is of his; Hee hath bound himſelfe to keepe his owne promiſes, not ours.

SECT. XIV.

Refut. p. 66.

WHiles his Fellow, or Maſter Maldonate, talkes of confuting Auſtin in this very point, by Auſtin himſelfe, this man will confute vs by him; whom he no otherwiſe cites for himſelfe, then his Anceſtor Pelagius cites Lactantius, Hilary, Ambroſe, Hierome, and Auſtin in this caſe. The thing (ſaith he) is in our power, and though it require the aſsiſtance of Gods grace, which ſtill preuenteth our will, yet that hinders not, but that we may (if we liſt) liue chaſte all the dayes of our life, as wee may vpon the ſame termes beleeue in God, and loue him. What impudency is this, to make him the Patrone of the power of our Free-will to God, whom all the World knowes to haue beene Malleus Pelagianorum? and who in ſo many Volumes damnes this conceit to the Pit of Hell; euermore ſo eſtabliſhing the naturall facultie and vſe of the will againſt Stoicall neceſſitie, as that he abandons any power of the act, or exerciſe of it vnto good (without grace) againſt humane preſumption. When he ſpeakes of this, here is not a cold and feeble preuention; but an effectuall in operation, yea a powerfull creation.

Since my Refuter then will needes bee paralleling our abilitie of contayning, and of beleeuing, let him heare that holy Father ſay, [i] Non ſolum Deus poſſe noſtrum, &c. God doth not onely giue, and helpe our power to good, but workes in vs both our will and working of good. And elſewhere; [k] Hee is drawne to Chriſt, to whom it is giuen to beleeue in Chriſt: Power is therefore giuen vnto them to bee made the ſonnes of God which beleeue in him, when this is giuen them to beleeue in him. And ſo farre is he from ſaying with my Detector and his Bellarmine, that who liſts may beleeue when he liſts, that he reaſons thus: Quid mihi oſtendis, &c.[l] what doſt thou tell me of thy Free-will; which can neuer be free to do good, except thou be a Sheepe of God? Hee therefore that makes men to be his ſheepe, frees the wills of men to the obedience of Piety: But why doth he make theſe men ſheepe, and thoſe not, ſince with him is no reſpect of perſons? The Apoſtle anſwers, O homo! &c. Thus he. Either therefore let him neuer cite St. Auſtin againſt vs in this point, or elſe wee muſt bee forced to countercite him once more then wee meant. [m] Planè poſſumus dicere frontem hæreticorum non eſſe frontem: And if there could be any more on that holy Fathers ſcore, Father Maldonate hath paid it for vs. To conclude therefore for him; Arbitrium humanæ voluntatis nequaquam deſtruimus: We know no man doth well againſt his will; God was not to make Virgins by force; and the ſame goodneſſe that giues Chaſtitie to the maried, continues Virginity to the ſingle: What of all this? Therefore (ſaith he) it is as well in the power of all ſingle perſons to bee alwayes continent, as of the maried to keepe coniugall Chaſtitie: An illation and concluſion worthy of my Refuters Logicke and Diuinity; As if he argued thus for himſelfe; The ſame God that diſpoſes of Orders, diſpoſes of the Popedome: therefore I may as well looke to weare three Crownes, as one ſhauen. Or the ſame God giues both Life, and Grace, and Glory. Therefore all thoſe that liue the naturall life, may alſo liue the ſpirituall and glorious. Who ſees not the reaſon of theſe vnlike? Coniugall honeſty is abſolutely commanded of God to all maried perſons; perpetuation of Virginitie (hee grants) was neuer commanded: the breach of coniugall honeſty, is of it ſelfe a ſinne to all; Mariage is not ſo. Againſt the one therefore, wee may abſolutely pray in [n] faith, againſt the other but with condition; God hath promiſed to deliuer vs from our ſins, not from our Mariage.

As for Saint Ambroſe, we eaſily grant him large in the praiſe of Virginitie: But no one word of all his cited authorities toucheth our Aſſertion: The helps of the Church, the ſeruice of Angels, the merit of the Prayers of our Sauiour, we yeeld to be good meanes of continence, where it is intended; but that it is meant to all commers, we deny; Let the ſucceſſe ſpeake.

Neither doe we taxe the Vow for any improbitie in it ſelfe, but for the incapacitie of the perſons: The Vow were good, if the men were not either euill, or vnfit. And here[o] by the way; whereas C. E. like a maſterly Monitor wiſhes Maſter Hall to reade the diuine workes of Ambroſe, concerning this ſubiect; Maſter Hall is bold (in requitall) to tell C. E. that he knowes not Ambroſe; and to teach him (ſince he hath not learned it of other Maſters) that the Book which he ſo oft, & ſo ſolemnly cites for Ambroſes, [p] Ad Virginem lapſam, is a noted Counterfeit, a true Nouation; which his graue ignorance might haue heard from his Bellarmine and Poſſeuine.

And how much better is that other Tract which he [q] cites from Ambroſe, Epiſt. 82. wherein mention is made of * Venice; which was not extant till Ambroſe was not? And the Commentary of Ambroſe vpon 1 Tim. 3. whence hee fetches his forceableſt [r] Teſtamony for forced Continency; ſlit in the Noſe, and bored in the Eare long ſince by [ſ] Salmeron, Baronius, Bellarmine, and Francis Lucas. Of the ſame ſtampe (that the Reader may here ſee once for all how he is gulled by this falſe Prieſt with foyſted Authorities) is his Auguſtine, De bono Viduatis, [t] thrice by him here quoted, not without great triumph; branded by Eraſmus, Hoſius, Lindanus: as likewiſe [u] his Auguſtine, de Eccleſ. dogmat. confeſſed counterfeit by Bellarmine, & his friends of Louain: and [x] the Sermons de Tempore, caſhier'd by Eraſmus, Mart. Lypſius, the Louanians: Whereto let vs adde the book of great Athanaſius, de Virginitate, [y] produced in great ſtate by C.E. not without great wrong and ſhame fathered vpon that Saint, as (if Eraſmus and Nannius did not ſhew) the ridiculous precepts therein contained would ſpeake enough. To follow all were endleſſe: Of this kind, laſtly, is his Cyprian de Diſciplin. & bono Pudicitiæ, not more magnificently [z] brought forth by C.E. then fairely eiected by Eraſmus, & Eſpencæus. Theſe are the glorious Teſtimonies which grace the ſwelling Pages of mine Aduerſarie; Theſe are the pious fraudes wherewith honeſt Readers are ſhamfully coozened.

coozened. It ſhall ſuffice thus in a word to haue thanked my Reuerend Monitor for his ſage aduice, and to aduiſe my Reader to know whom he truſts.

For Origen, we haue already anſwered; My Detector could not haue choſen a better man for the proofe of the facility of this Worke, then him, who (according to the broad Tralation of his rude Rhemiſts) gelded himſelfe, and made himſelfe no man for it. That all graces are deriued to vs from the Fountaine, or rather the full Ocean of Chriſts Merits and Mercies (which he ſhewes from S. Hierom) we willingly teach againſt them, ſo farre are we from being iniurious to the Paſſion of our Deare Redeemer; But if hee will therefore inferre, that euery man may be a perpetuall Virgin, he may as well hope that therfore euery Scribbler may write all true. Our Sauiour himſelfe, which ſaid I will draw all men vnto me, yet ſaid, All men cannot receiue this; not I cannot giue it, but they cannot take it.

As for that practice which he cites from S. Auſtin, of forcing men both into Orders, and Continency, it ſhewes rather the Fact then the Equity; what was done in a particular Church, rather then what ſhould be; The Refuter himſelfe renounceth it in the precedent Page; (For the Church forceth none thereunto) neither is it any other then a direct reſtraint of that, which the Councell of Nice determined to be left free.

Laſtly, that there may appeare to bee no leſſe impoſſibility of honeſt Truth in ſome men, then true Chaſtity, he cites one place for all, out of S. Auſtin, * Let not the burden of Continency affright vs, it will be light if it be of Chriſt, it will be of Chriſt if there be Faith, that obtaines of him which commands, the thing which he doth command. See Reader, with what fidelity; and by this eſteeme the reſt; S. Auſtin ſpeakes there of perſons diuorced each from other, whom neceſſity (as he ſuppoſes the caſe) cals to Continency; the Detector cites him for the power of voluntary votaries; The very place confutes him. It will be Chriſts yoke (ſaith Auſtin) if there be faith that obtaines of him which commands, the thing which he doth command: There can be no Faith where is no command; Now C. E. will grant there is no [o] command of ſingle life to all; Therefore all cannot aske it in Faith, therefore all cannot thinke it the yoke of Chriſt, all cannot beare it.

SECT. XV.

NOw at laſt (like ſome ſorie Squip, that after a little hiſſing and ſparkling, ends in an vnſauourie cracke, my Refuter, after all theſe Flouriſhes of their poſſibilitie, ſhuts vp in a ſcurrilous Declamation againſt our Miniſterie; granting it indeed impoſſible, amongſt vs, to liue chaſte; and telling his Reader that wee bluſh not to blaze in Pulpits, and printed Bookes, this brutiſh Paradox, that Chaſtitie is a vertue impoſſible to all, becauſe ſo it is to ſuch laſciuious [p] Libertines, ſenſuall and ſinfull people, as Heretikes are: and here are ſordes, dedecora, ſcabies libidinum: the brutiſh ſpirit of Hereſie, fleſhly and ſenſuall. long ſince τὸ σεμνὸν τῆς Παρθενίας ἀπόλωλεν The grace of Virginitie is loſt: γελῶσιν αἱ κοσμικαί: The world makes ſport with ſuch Maiden-head. For the reſt; The God of Heauen iudge betwixt vs and our enemies; To him wee appeale how wee deſire to ſerue him in chaſte Wedlocke, whom they diſhonour with vncleane and falſe Virginitie.

Not to put my Detector in mind how honorably he now ſpeakes of mariage, how dares he talke of our fleſhlineſſe, and their chaſtity? as if he had to doe with a world, that were both deafe and blind. Do not their owne Records fly in their faces: and tell him there are but a few of them honeſt? Did not their owne [t] ſelect Cardinals complaine, that the moſt of their Nunneries were iuſtly ſcandalized with ſacrilegious incontinencies?

Do not our [u] Hiſtories tell vs, that in the raigne of Henry the third, Robert Groſthead the famous Biſhop of Lincolne, in his Viſitation, was faine to explore the virginitie of their Nuns, by nipping of their dugs, indignum ſcribi, as Matth. Paris? Doe not the [x] forenamed Cardinals find it a common greeuance, that their Curtezans rode in ſtate thorow Rome it ſelfe, attended euen at noone day with the retinue of their Cardinals, and with their Clergy-men? Doth he finde the Church of England to maintaine Stewes? and to raiſe rents from profeſſed filthineſſe? Can he deny the vnnaturall beaſtlineſſe that raignes in his Italy? But what doe I ſtirre this puddle? Let mee heare no more brags of their chaſtitie, no more exprobrations of our laſciuiouſneſſe.

Sect. XVI.

As if my Reſuter had vowed to write no true word, he challenges me for tranſlating Iſidores Turpe votum, a filthy vow: I turne to my Epiſtle, and finde it not engliſhed by me at all. His owne conſcience, belike, ſo conſtrues it, or if ſome former Impreſsion of mine (which I beleeue not) had ſo turned it, here is neither ignorance, nor vnfaithfulneſſe. Wheereſoeuer is ſinne, there is filthineſſe: And if a lawfull vow be properly de meliore bono, can there not therefore be an vnlawfull vow? What was that of Iepthaes, or that of St. Pauls Conſpirators? But the word there (ſaith he) ſignifies a promiſe; As if euery vow were not a promiſe: and if Iſidore takes votum, for promiſſum, [y] Gregory takes (by his conſtruction) promiſſum for votum, in this very caſe we haue in hand.

This vow of theirs therefore is metonymically filthy, becauſe it makes them ſuch. In one word, (that he may raue no more of Epicures, Turks, Pagans,) Their vow is in profeſsion glorious, filthy in effect. And now for a concluſion of this point, I muſt out of all theſe groſſe and ignorant paſſages of his (though vnproperly, yet) truly vow to the world, that a truer Bayard did neuer ſtumble forth in the Preſſe.

Sect. XVII.

Hee hath done with their owne vowes, and now deſcends to vs, whom hee confeſſes vowleſſe; His ſcorne cannot ſtrip vs of the benefit of that Truth, which hee confeſſeth: Thus then hee writes: I freely with other Catholikes grant, that our Engliſh Miniſters, according to their calling, make no vowes: I grant their mariage to be lawfull; I grant that euery one of them may be the Husband of one Wife, &c. And why did not this liberality of my wiſe Detector tye vp his Tongue in his purſe all this while? No more was required, no leſſe is yeelded; whereto is all his iangling? But, that his grant may proue worſe then a deniall, thus he proceeds: But we deny them to be truly Clergy-men, or to haue any more authority in the Church, then their wiues or daughters haue: and this becauſe they want all true calling and Ordination; For, they entred not in at the doore, like true Paſtors, but ſtole in at the window like theeues; We deny their miniſterie (I ſay) to be lawfull, becauſe they did runne before they were ſent, tooke their places by intruſion. Let Maſter Hall diſproue this, and I will ſay, Tu Phillyda ſolus habeto. Thus he.

Refut. p. 89.

A deep crimination,and ſuch, as if it could be proued, would robbe our queſtion of the State,and vs of our duely challenged honour. Reader,this vehemency ſhewes thee where his ſhoo wrings him: It is the gall of Romiſh hearts that we proſper, and are not theirs; Where they haue preſumed vpon credulity,they haue not ſtucke to ſay, we are not men like others, but more frequently and boldly, that wee are no Chriſtian men; and here moſt peremptorily, that wee are no Clergie-men : There is no Church, no Chriſtianity, no Clergie not theirs; Neither can we be in Orders, whiles wee are out of Babylon.

The man dreames of the Nags-head in Cheapſide, where his lying Oracle Tradition hath not ſhamed to report, Iewel, Sands, Horne, Scory,Grindall, and others in the beginning of Q. Elizabeths time (being diſappointed of the Catholike Biſhop of Landaffe) to haue laid hands mutually on each other; and that from hence haue flowed our pretended Orders. This our ſhameleſs * Sacroboſco heard of ſome good old folkes,and they had it of one Neale,Profeſſor Ebrius in Oxford; Kelliſon tooke it of Sacroboſco,and C. E. of him. Concordat cum Originali; Diabolus eſt mendax & pater eius. And is not this a worthy engine to batter down the wals of a whole Church,to blow vp all our ordination? Is it poſſible that any Chriſtian face ſhould be ſo graceleſſe, as to beare out ſuch an apparent and ridiculous falſhood, againſt ſo many thouſands of witneſſes, againſt the euidence of authenticall Records, againſt reaſon, and ſenſe it ſelfe? For can they hope to perſwade any liuing man, that theſe hauing at that time a lawfull Archbiſhop of their owne religion, legally eſtabliſhed in the Metropoliticall chaire, by an acknowledged authority,the ſway of the times openly fauouring them, when all Churches,all Chappels gladly opened to them, that they would bee ſo mad as to goe and ordaine themſelues in a Tauerne? He that would beleeue this, may bee perſwaded that their adored blockes can weepe, and ſpeake, and moue; that their Cake is God; Neuer truth could be cleared, if not this; No leſſe then the whole Kingdome knew, that Q. Mary dyed in the yeare 1558,Nouember 17;and her Cardinall (then Archb.of Canterbury) accompanied her ſoule in death the ſame day. The ſame day was Q. Elizabeths Initium Regni; her Coronation,Ianuary 15 following. That leaſure enough might bee taken in theſe great affaires, the See of Canterbury continued void aboue a yeare. At laſt,in the ſecond yeare of Queene Elizabeth 1559, December 17, was Mathew Parker legally conſecrated Archb.of Canterbury,by foure Biſhops: William Barlow formerly Biſhop of Bathe, then elect of Chicheſter. Iohn Scory before of Chicheſter, now elect of Hereford. Miles Couerdale Biſhop of Exeter. Iohn Hodgeskins Suffragan of Bedford. Mathew Parker thus irrefragably ſetled in the Archiepiſcopall See, with three other Biſhops in the ſame Moneth of December, ſolemnely conſecrated Edmund Grindall, and Edwin Sands; The publike Records are euident and particular, relating the Time, Sunday morning after Prayers; The place, Lambeth-Chappell; The manner, Impoſition of hands; The conſecrators, Mathew Cant. William Chicheſter, Iohn Hereford, Iohn Bedford; The Preacher at the Conſecration, Alexander Nowell, afterwards the worthy Deane of Pauls; The Text, Take heed to your ſelues,and to all the flocke,&c. The Communion,laſtly adminiſtred by the Archbiſhop.

* Alias Halywell the Ieſuite.

For Biſhop Iewel, hee was conſecrated the Moneth following in the ſame forme by Mathew Cant.Edmund London,Richard Ely,Iohn Bedford.

Laſtly,for Biſhop Horne, he was conſecrated a whole yeare after this, by Mathew Cant.Thomas S.Dauids,Edmund London,Thomas Coventry and Lichfield;The circumſtances,Time,Place,Form,Preacher,Text, ſeuerally recorded. The particulars whereof,I referre to the faithfull and cleare relation of Maſter Francis Maſon; whoſe learned and full diſcourſe of this ſubiect,might haue ſatisfied all eyes,and ſtopped all mouthes. What incredible impudency is this then,for thoſe which pretend not Chriſtianity only,but the Conſecration of God, wilfully to raiſe ſuch ſhamefull ſlanders from the pit of Hell,to the diſgrace of Truth,to the diſparagement of our holy calling.

Let me therefore challenge my Detector in this ſo important a point, wherein his zeale hath ſo farre out-run his wit,and with him all the Brats of that proud Harlot, that no Church vnder Heauen can ſhew a more cleere, euen, vncontrolable, vntroubled Line of the iuſt ſucceſſion of her Sacred Orders, then this of ours; if his Rome, for her tyrannous Primacie, could bring forth but ſuch Cardes, the world would bee too ſtraight for her. He ſhall (maugre) be forced to confeſſe, that either there were neuer true Orders in the Church of England (which hee dares not ſay) or elſe that they are ſtill Ours. The Biſhops in the time of King Henry the eight, were vndoubted; If they left Rome in ſome corrected opinions, their Character was yet, by confeſſion,[a] indeleble. They laid their hands according to Eccleſiaſticall conſtitution, vpon the Biſhops in King Edwards dayes; and they both, vpon the Biſhops in the beginning of Queene Elizabeths; They againe, vpon the ſucceeding Inheritors of their holy Sees, and they laſtly vpon vs; ſo as neuer man could ſhew a more certaine and exquiſite Pedegree from his great Grand-father, then wee can from the acknowledged Biſhops of King Henries time, and thence vpwards to hundreds of Generations. I confeſſe indeed, our Archbiſhops, and Biſhops haue wanted ſome Aaronicall accouſtrements, Gloues, Rings, Sandals, Miters, and Pall, and ſuch other traſh: and our inferiour Orders haue wanted Greazing and Shauing, and ſome other pelting Ceremonies. But let C. E. proue theſe eſſentiall which we want, or thoſe Acts and Formes not eſſentiall, which we haue, Et Phyllida ſolus habeto. In the meane time, the Church of England is bleſſed with a true Clergy, and glorious; and ſuch a one, as his Italian generation may impotently enuy, and ſnarle at, ſhall neuer preſume to compete with, in worthineſſe and honour; And (as Doctor Taylor, that couragious Martyr, ſaid at his parting) Bleſſed bee God for holy Matrimony.

Sect. XVIII.

MY Cauiller purpoſely miſtakes my rule of Baſil the Great, and my Text of the Great Apoſtle, whiles from both I reſolue thus. I paſſe not what I heare men or Angels ſay, while I heare God ſay, Let him be the Husband of one Wife: he wil needs ſo conſtrue it, as if I tooke this of S. Paul for a command, not for an allowance: As if I meant to imply from hence, that euery Biſhop is bound to haue a Wife. Who is ſo blind as the wilfull? Their Leo[b] calls theſe words a Preception, I did not. If hee knew any thing, he could not be ignorant that this ſenſe is againſt the ſtreame of our Church, and no leſſe then a Grecian errour. Who knowes not the extreames of Greece and Rome: and the Track of Truth betwixt them both? The Greeke Church ſaith, Hee cannot be in holy Orders, that is not maried: The Romiſh Church ſaith, He cannot be in holy Orders, that is maried: The Church Reformed ſayes, Hee may bee in holy Orders that is maried, and conuertibly. Some good friends would needs fetch vs into this idle Greciſme, and to the ſociety of the old Friſons[c], and (if Saint Ierome take it aright) of Vigilantius, Eſpencæus, and Bellarmine and our Rhemiſts free vs. There is no leſſe difference betwixt them and vs, then betwixt May and Muſt, Libertie and Neceſſitie. If then (Let him be the Husband of one Wife,) argue that a Biſhop may bee a maried man, I haue what I would, and paſſe not for the contrary from Men and Angels. We willingly grant with Luther, that this charge is negatiue: Non velut ſanciens dicit, ſaith Chryſoſtome. But this negatiue charge implyes an affirmatiue allowance, we ſeeke for no more: As for the authorities which my Detector hath borrowed of his Vncles of Rhemes, they might haue beene well ſpared: He tels vs, Saint Ierome ſayes, Qui vnam habuerit, non habeat; He who hath had one Wife, not hee that hath one; I tell him Saint Paul ſaith[d] (εἴ τις ἐστιν) if any man be the Husband of one Wife, not, If he haue beene: Let[e] Saint Chryſoſtome therein anſwer Hierome, and Epiphanius, and all other pretended oppoſites: Obſtruere prorſus intendit hæreticorum ora, qui nuptias damnant, &c. He purpoſ'd in this to ſtop the mouthes of Heretikes, that condemned mariage, ſhewing that that eſtate is faultleſſe, yea, ſo precious, that with it a man might be aduanced to the holy epiſcopall Chaire. Thus hee; whom their learned[f] Biſhop Eſpencæus ſeconds;

and by the true force of the Text cleareth this ſenſe againſt all contradiction. Nec enim Paulini de Epiſcopis,&c. For (ſaith he) *thoſe places of S.*Paul concerning Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, cannot be ſo eluded, as that they doe onely belong to men that haue beene ſometimes maried, and are now Widdowers and ſingle; but the Text doth plainely note out Huſbands, and thoſe that are now found in the preſent eſtate of mariage; which is implyed, both by the word eſſe, and by vnius vxoris vir, that is, hauing one Wife, not (as ſome haue vnderſtood it) which hath had one; for (as Chryſoſtome hath noted) the Apoſtle would by the ſocietie of Mariage and Prieſthood, ſtop the mouthes of Heretikes that condemned mariage: whereto adde, That the Apoſtle amongſt the vertues of a Biſhop reckons vp this, That he doth gouerne his owne houſe well, not, that he did gouerne it. Thus he. Vnto which let mee yet adioyne this other conſideration, that the Apoſtle deſcribes what manner of Wife a Biſhop ſhould haue; which as in other profeſſions he hath not done, ſo in this would haue beene vſeleſſe, if he had onely aymed at an eſtate paſt, and not preſent.

Where it is a cunning tricke of the Rhemiſts, and their Vulgar, in ſtead of Their Wiues, to reade The Women, quite beſide the Scope and Context of the Apoſtle: As to the ſame purpoſe, Whereas their Leo in the fore-cited Epiſtle ſayes, that this Precept of a Biſhop, to be Huſband of one Wife, was alwaies ſo ſacred, vt etiam de muliere Sacerdotis eligenda, eadem intelligatur ſeruanda conditio: Bellarmine, and his Mates would needs face vs out, that the Copies are corrupted, and contends to haue it read Sacerdotis Eligendi; of the Prieſt to bee choſen, not, of the Wife: Whom our induſtrious and worthy Doctor Iames hath refelled both by the Preſſe, and the Pen; by the Coleine Edition and Manuſcript authority.

That the ſame condition is to bee vnderſtood of he that is to bee choſen for the wife of the Prieſt.

Refut.p.92,93.

As for that he cites from Hierome againſt Vigilantius, he might haue found the ſalue together with the Wound: Our Rhemiſts dare vs from the imputation of his opinion. For the reſt. Nothing is more plaine, then that our Apoſtle (according to the iuſt interpretation of Chryſoſtom, Theoderet, Theophylact, and others) alludes to the looſe faſhion, as of the Greekes, ſo eſpecially of the Iewes, with whom Polygamy and remariages, after vniuſt diuorces, were in ordinary vſe; Theſe the Apoſtolicall Spirit findes vnfit for the Man of God, whom he therefore charges to bee onely, The Husband of one Wife.

Refut p.94,95.

Neither doth it argue too much wit in my Refuter, to bring two Fathers vpon the Stage for his purpoſe, and then to ſet them together by the eares with each other, Ambroſe (I meane) and Hierome, who in this which he cites them for, confute one another, Hierome (though otherwiſe a backe friend to Wedlocke) cenſuring the opinion of Ambroſe, as ſauouring too ſtrongly of Cainiſme, and ſuperſtition: How euer, euen the more vehement of the two, out of this place doth hold Mariage, compatible with holy Orders, which is the onely thing I required: So as ſtill, This one word ſhall confirme mee againſt all impure mouthes: Impure, Not for preferring Continency, as my Cauiller will take it, but for deprauing of Mariage, by the foule titles of Fleſhlineſſe and Senſualitie; ſuch as his owne, a worſe we need not: Neither doth St. Ambroſe at all controll mee herein, whiles hee teacheth that the Apoſtle doth not here inuite vs to beget children in the Prieſthood; Habentem enim dixit filios, non facientem: we did not challenge hence any command, we challenge an allowance, which we haue and proclaime: That I may not ſay, ſome Copies of Ambroſe runne (according as I haue learned of our eminent Doctor Fulke) Habentem filios, aut facientem, Hauing children, or begetting them: The difference is not worth ſtanding for: Let it paſſe after his owne reading. I could ſtop his mouth with the ingenuous anſwer of his Eſpencæus: Habentem enim, &c. For he ſaid, Hauing children, not begetting them: Debellatum hic eſſet, &c. This field were wonne if either this were the Text, and not the Gloſſe, or they that thus interpret it, were Apoſtles, as they are not. Thus their owne Biſhop. But I need not call for any ayde. The words of Ambroſe doe plainely driue againſt an inuitation, or command, which we doe willingly diſclaime.

HOw vnhappy is this man that ſtill ſhoots his Arrowes quite beſides the Butt? He proues, forſooth, with great zeale, that the Fathers neuer vnderſtood a poſitiue command in our Apoſtles words, which I neuer thought ſo much as in dreame: and then he bends his Forces againſt Bygamie, which I no-where auouched. The Man of valour loues to play his prizes alone.

Refut. p. 96.

Here is no command then (ſaith he) but a permiſſion; How much are we bound to him for his fauour? Permiſſion? Thus much hee, with his holy Father, yeeldes to their Stewes. No, here is a direct allowance. Let him be the Husband of one Wife; Not, Hee may be ſo: But this was onely for a time, he ſaith, becauſe of the paucitie of ſingle Clergy-men: Let him ſhew me the Apoſtles limitation, and I am ſatisfied; otherwiſe, this miſſe-grounded conceit (what countenance ſo euer it may finde in a priuate humane authoritie) ſhall paſſe with vs as a Gloſſe of Burdeaux, that marres the Text. But how ſhameleſſely, how fraudulently, how like himſelfe, doth my Refuter cite Chryſoſtomes Caſtigat impudicos, &c? He checketh the incontinent (ſaith the Father) whiles he permitteth them not after their ſecond mariages, to be preferred to the gouernment of the Church, and dignity of Paſtors; and there my Refuter ſtops, with, So he; whereas, if he had gone forward, the place had anſwered him, and it ſelfe: For (ſaith Chryſoſtome) he which is found not to haue kept his beneuolence towards his wife, which is [c] gone from him, how ſhould he be a good Teacher to the Church? Plainely ſhewing vs, that hee intends this to thoſe vnchaſt Husbands, which after an vniuſt diuorce of their former wiues, haue maried alſo a ſecond; not after the death of the firſt.

Cqryſoſt. in Tit. Hom. 4.

[c] The word is τῇ ἀπελθούσῃ, by them tranſlated falſly, Defunctum.

The like Prieſtly fidelity he vſeth in the place of Chryſoſtome, Hom. 2. vpon Iob; the poore man had taken vp ſome ſcraps of quotations vpon truſt, hauing neuer ſeene the Authors; For, Chryſoſtome neuer wrote any Homilies vpon the Booke of Iob; onely he hath fiue Homilies of the Patience of Iob; whereof this cited is the ſecond; wherein his errori ignoſcebat, hath reference rather to, ſine crimine, which he oppoſeth to irreprehenſibiles, then, to vir vnius vxoris, as the ſequel plainly ſhewes. As for Bigamy, it is out of our way; but ſince his loquacitie will needs roue thither, let him ſhew that before Montanus infected the World with a preiudice againſt ſecond Mariages, after deceaſe, they were held vnlawfull for any calling, or perſon, and we will grant him clamorous to ſome purpoſe.

Refut. p. 97.

To proue this opinion and practice of the Church, like a wiſe Maſter, hee brings in * Tertullians authoritie, in his Booke which he wrote in the time of his Hereſie; whiles he was ouer the eares in Montaniſme; where hee tels vs hee hath knowne ſome eiected for ſecond Mariages. But if he had euer read the Booke following, of Monogamie, hee might haue found his Tertullian (then Montanizing) to vpbraid the true and Catholike Church, which he cals Pſychicos, with the vſual practice & allowance of the ſecond Mariages of their Biſhops. * Quot enim & digami, &c. For how many Biſhops are there amongſt you twice maried? But who euer was matcht with ſo vaine a Babler? I proued from Saint Paul, that a Biſhop might haue one Wife: he proues by Councels and Fathers, that he may not haue two. It is pity that his Maſters the Ieſuites haue no more Trees for him to ſet with the rootes vpward: Any thing rather then to weary the World with his fooliſh clacking.

Hereafter he ſhall receiue anſwer enough; What needs this diſorderly anticipation? To conclude then, this place of our Apoſtle ſtands for vs vnſhaken, by any the impotent blaſts of his friuolous Eluſions, and ſhall warrant vs againſt Earth and Hell, that a Biſhop may be the Husband of one wife.

*Refut.p.*100, 101.

MY next place, of the honourableneſſe of Mariage amongſt all, hee ſmoothes ouer with a pretended conceſſion; profeſſing with Fulgentius, and Hierom, to giue all high Titles to that ſtate, only preferring the rule of a better life; praiſing Mariage, but more extolling Virginitie: But who euer made the compariſon? Theſe are faire Nets to catch Fooles; Whiles hee heapes vp all the reproachfull termes that ſpight can deuiſe againſt the very ſtate of Mariage, in ſome callings, not ſo much as preiudiced by Vow; how doth he grant Mariage honourable amongſt all? If the compariſon be the matter he ſtands vpon, let him ſay, Mariage is good, and lawfull for all conditions; Virginity is better; he ſhall haue no aduerſary. And whereas (to call him to reckoning for arrerages) he turned off this place (when it was) with a ſcoffe out of Bellarmine, That Mariage is honorable amongſt all, yet not between Father and Daughter, &c. The Man alluded ſure to their great & good Alexander the ſixt, and the chaſte Lucrece, of whom he knowes the Riddle.

[d] Here lyes Lucrece in name, Thais in life. The ſame Popes daughter, Lemman, and his owne ſonnes Wife.

For vs, that it is honorable in all eſtates of men by Apoſtolicall warrant, is ſufficient aſſurance, that to no calling, or eſtate, it can bee diſhonourable and vnlawfull. But to vntye Bellarmines trifling knot: I ſay, Mariage is honourable, ἐν πᾶσι, but not πάντων πρὸς πάντας: in all, but not betweene all: That is, euery man may marry with a woman, but not with any woman whatſoeuer, as with his Mother, or Siſter. So Father and Daughter may marry, but not one the other. See now what a worthy Meſſe of Sophiſtry is layd in St. Pauls diſh by theſe Caruers, and how eaſily ouer-turned: So as I might very well proclaime to all the world (which I do now confidently ſecond) that if God might be Iudge of this Controuerſie, it were ſoone at an end. If my Refuter make faces at this, their whole Schoole ſhall beare mee out in it. Et [e] ſanè communis eſt ſcholæ reſolutio, &c. And in truth it is (ſaith their Eſpencæus) the common reſolution of the Schoole that if we inſiſt only in thoſe things which were ſpoken by Chriſt, and written by the Apoſtles in the Canon of the New Teſtament (ſeclading the Lawes of the Church) holy Orders, neither as Orders, nor as holy, are any hindrances of Matrimony. Thus he. And ſaid I any more? any other?

By their confeſſion then, God neuer impoſed this Law. My proofe was, that euen in the time of that legall ſtrictneſſe, he allowed Wedlock to the Miniſters of his Sanctuarie. Herein, how am I refuted? If he meane (ſaith my Detector) that for puritie and perfection of life, the Law of Moſes was more ſtrict then the Goſpell, the vntruth is notorious; To which he addes out of Hierome, that the greater perfection of the Euangelicall Sacrifice exacteth greater Holineſſe; and concludes, that the permiſsion of Wiues in the Aaronicall Prieſthood, argues euidently the imperfection of that Law. So he. Surely, God wanted this Counſell or vpon Mount Sinai; he could haue aduiſed him better Rules of his miſ-contriued Prieſthood.

Would my Refuter make himſelfe ſo ignorant, as not to know; that notwithſtanding the rather greater perfection of Moralitie required vnder the Goſpell, yet that Leuiticall Law placed impurity in many of thoſe creatures and actions, wherein the Euangelicall findeth none? Did not the touch of ſome Veſſels or Garments make a man legally vncleane? Did not the lawfull act of Coniugall Beneuolence; Did not the accidents of the holyeſt Child-bed carie in them an expiable impuritie? If he be not a Iew, he will not ſay it is ſtill thus vnder the Goſpell. How iuſtly therefore might I inferre, that if our holy God, vnto whoſe Wiſdome it ſeemed good to ſtand of old vpon ſuch points of outward vncleanneſſes, did notwithſtanding allow Wedlocke to his Prieſthood, much more (at leaſt no leſſe) vnder the Goſpell, doth he allow it, when as all thoſe imputations of impuritie are vaniſhed.

SECT. XXI.

Refut.103.104.

I Produced the Teſtimonie of their Pope, their Cardinall, their Doctor. Baſils Rule is a ſure one, that the Witneſſes of Enemies are moſt conuictiue. Their Cardinall was Panormitan, Their Pope, Pius the ſecond, Their Doctor, Gratian. For Panormitan; My Refuter likes his words ſo well, that like a ſawcy Fellow hee dare pull off his red Hat, and trample it in the Floore; denying his Cardinalſhip, and charging him With participation of the Schiſme.

But firſt, he cannot (I hope) deny him to haue beene their Abbot, then their Archbiſhop; As for his red Hat, it neuer came from Wittenberge nor Geneua; it was of their owne dying; Felix the falſe Pope (he ſayes) gaue it him. Reader, the famous Councell of Baſil, conſiſting of no leſſe then foure hundred reuerend Perſons, Cardinalls, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Doctors, gathered and allowed at firſt, by Pope Martin, then by his Succeſſor Eugenius the fourth, afterwards was vpon ſome Politike conſiderations called off by Eugenius; The Fathers of the Councell finding their owne ſtrength, ſtood vpon the right of their Superiority, and (as they well might) cenſured the Pope; hee proceeded to obſtinacy; thoſe braue ſpirits (vpon ripe conſideration) iuſtly depoſed him. In the roome of this Eugenius, (otherwiſe called Gabriel Condulmarius) was by iuſt number of voices elected Amadeus the deuout Duke of Sauoy, and named Felix the Fifth; a man too good for that See; neither had he euer any ſo great blemiſh in all his life, as the name of a Pope: Volateran can tell vs, what a Kennell of Hounds he ſhoued to the Ambaſſadors, namely, whole Tables of poore ſoules daily fed by him; All Hiſtories ſpeake of his Deuotion, and Piety; This man called from his intended retiredneſſe, muſt carry the Keyes. He makes choice of Archbiſhop Panormitan for one of his Cardinalls: What offence is here? But he was a falſe Pope. If the Councell of Baſil were a true Councell, then was Felix a true Pope. It is in my Readers choice whether he will beleeue foure hundred Diuines repreſenting the whole Church, or a Popes paraſite. But Panormitan dyed in the Schiſme againſt Eugenius. The World knowes that the greateſt blot Panormitan euer had, was his violent plea for Eugenius; againſt the Biſhop of Argens, againſt eloquent Segouius, againſt the whole ſtreame of that Councell; This is the thanke he now carries away, Felix ſcelus virtus vocatur; If Eugenius had not dealt vnder-hand with the Dolphin of France, and Fredericke of Auſtria, (then ambitious of the Empire) and tryed all his wits, both to make new Cardinals, and to diuert the Neutrals, Eugenius had not beene Felix; and Felix had beene ſtill Eugenius, the true and vndoubted Succeſſor of Peter: How-euer, if theſe points ſhould be ſtrictly ſtood vpon, Rome would be at a loſſe, which many a time hath been to ſeeke for her head. But what though it were granted that Panormitan was Cardinalated by an intruding Pope? Can this call downe the authority of his iudgement and Writings? eſpecially thoſe which hee wrote before he was Cardinall or Archbiſhop, being onely Abbot: And yet may be cited by vs vnder the name of Cardinall: as Bellarmines Dictates and Compoſures elder then his red Hat, yet are fathered vpon that Title.

Once, this I am ſure of, that [f] Cardinall Bellarmine doubts not to ſtile Panormitan a Catholike and learned Doctor. This is the man that ſtands with his Hat off to this worſhipfull Clarke of Doway, and tells him that Continency is not of the ſubſtance of order, nor by Diuine Law annexed to it; whereto he ſhuffles out a miſerable and deſperate anſwer, as we ſhall ſee in the ſequell.

But in the meane time, ſee the cunning of my Catholike Cauiller; This is not the ſentence I ſtood vpon, of Panormitan; it was not this, whereto I proclaimed mine Oyez, but another, which he ſlily ſmothers, not daring ſo much as to repeat it, leſt his Romanizing popular ignorant Readers ſhould heare, and ſee, and ſmell, that the ſacred Celibate of Prieſts did ſtinke an hundreth yeares before Luthers time. I will therefore here ſupply for him, and, hoping hee will in his next take notice of the ſentence, will repreſent it here againe.

The words are theſe : Melius foret, et pro bono & ſalute animarum ſalubrius, ſi & vniuſcuiuſq; voluntati relinqueretur, ita vt non valentes aut non volentes continere, poſſint contrahere; Quia experientia docente experimus contrarium effectum ſequi ex illa lege continentiæ, cùm hodie plerique non viuant ſpiritualiter, nec ſint mundi, ſed emaculenter illicito coitu cum ipſorum grauiſſimo peccato, vbi cum propria vxore eſſet caſtitas. That is, It were better, and more wholeſome for the good and ſaluation of ſoules, if it were left to euery mans will; ſo as they which either cannot, or will not containe, might marry. For we finde by experience a contrary effect to follow vpon that Law of Continency; ſince the greateſt part (of our Prieſts) at this day liue not ſpiritually, neither are chaſte, but are defiled with vnlawfull copulations, not without their moſt hainous ſinne; whereas, with their owne Wiues it ſhould be Chaſtity. Thus he. A ſentence worthy of that Epiphonema of mine. (Is this a Cardinall thinke you or an Huguenot?) With this, my Detector deales, as their Inquiſition doth with a miſ-named Heretike; he chokes it vp in ſecret, or, if he bring it forth, it is not without a gag in the mouth : All his anſwer is, Wee tye not our ſelues to euery mans opinion; and, This ſentence is cenſured by Bellarmine as erroneous; As if Panormitan were euery body, and Bellarmine an Oracle. It is enough for vs, that one of their owne greateſt, learnedſt, zealouſeſt Prelates iuſtifieth our Mariages; and wiſheth them in vſe rather then their Continency.

To that other Teſtimony of Panormitan, he anſwers by a grant, yeelding vs freely, That if we take diuine Law for that which is expreſſely determined in Scripture, it muſt needs be ſaid, that there is no euident proofe ſet downe of continency in Eccleſiaſticall men by the Apoſtles; yet, that it is ſo inſinuated, and the obſeruation of it hath beene ſo ancient, as Bellarmine noteth, that it may be truly termed Apoſtolicall; Thus he. And euen for this are we beholden to him; All his friends would not haue beene ſo liberall. His Ioannes Maior, his Clictouæus, his Torrenſis, and all their rigorous Clients would not haue ſaid ſo : As, on the other ſide, the old Gloſſe was not ſo wiſe, that could onely ſay (which is now expunged) Apoſtoli docuerunt exemplo, The Apoſtles taught this by their example. But what are theſe ſo pregnant inſinuations? Good wits haue found them out; One was that of [g] Innocentius the ſecond, That theſe men are the veſſels and Temples of God, therefore they may not Cubilibus & immunditiis ſeruire, ſerue for chambering and wantonneſſe. Ywis no Lay-man is ſuch; therefore hee may be allowed to be filthy. Another was of Franc. Torrenſis, Take heed leſt your hearts be oppreſſed with ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe, and cares of this life: Whereof Biſhop [h] Eſpencæus is ſo aſhamed, that he anſwers it with an Abſit; Godforbid, (ſaith he) that we ſhould thinke that the Lord, which is the Author and ſanctifier of Mariage, ſhould hold it in the ſame ranke with ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe. Another was of the ſame Author ([i] teaching vs to deny vngodlineſſe and worldly luſts:) vs, of the Clergy; belike the reſt need not; And who knowes not the witty and learned inſinuations of their good Siritius, Thoſe that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God? Theſe, and ſuch like are the forceable inſinuations of this impoſed continency, which euen very boyes and Ideots can hiſſe out of the Schooles.

Refut. 105.

FRom Panormitan, hee deſcends to my alledged Gratian, who becauſe he ſpeakes theſe words (by way of explication) in a continued tenor with a ſentence of Auſtin, is (to my mortall ſinne) cited by me as ſpeaking from Auſtin. The poſition and the inference of the words is ſuch, as might deceiue any eye that would truſt a Gratian; What might the price be (trow we) of ſuch a crime in the Apoſtolique chamber? In my next Shrift, he ſhall heare, meâ culpâ; The words are Gratians, that Copula Sacerdotalis vel conſanguineorum, The mariage or (as this Clerkly Grammarian tranſlates it) the carnall copulation of Prieſts, or kinſfolke, is not forbidden by any Legall, Euangelicall or Apoſtolicall authority, but by Eccleſiaſticall Law it is forbidden. Wee could not hyre a Proctor to ſay more. But herein C. E. hath detected two foule faults of the citation; The one, that I truſted his Gratian ſo far, as to make him ſpeake out of Auſtin, which *(I truſt)* a little Holy-water may waſh off. The other; That I concealed the mariage of kinsfolke, within the prohibited degrees: which (ſaith he) although only forbidden by Eccleſiaſticall Law, yet dares not M. Hall (I thinke) tranſgreſſe it; ſo as this Law hath greater force then he ſuppoſeth it to haue. So he. Plainly, my Refuter knowes not what he ſaith, elſe he would neuer thus palpably plead againſt himſelfe; For, what euer thing was there in all the conſtitutions of his Church, more ſubiect to variation, then the legall ſupputation of the forbidden degrees? which was a long time confined to the third degree incluſiuely; another while extended to the fourth; and ſometime to the ſeuenth. Let him herein reconcile his Pope Nicholas and Gregory, with Pope Innocent; Whereof the one left all free that were without the pale of the fourth degree, the other reſtrayned all to the ſeuenth; And when he findes an vnalterableneſſe in the determination of theſe degrees, let him plead for an equally-fatall neceſſity of his Eccleſiaſticall continence; in the meane time, let him take it patiently to be beaten with his owne Rod.

Refut. p. 106

No diuine Law then *(he grants)* hath inioyned this Celebate, but an Eccleſiaſticall. What is this other then I ſaid? God neuer impoſed this Law of continence; Who then? [k] The Church. And why may not I goe on, to aske, Whether a good wife would gain ſay what her husband willeth? Flouriſhing will not anſwer this. All the prayſes of beauty and fidelity which are giuen to the true Church, argue Rome to be the falſe. Whereas therefore the Prieſt ſhuts vp thus brauely; And this Miniſter; who would make the one to gain-ſay the other, ſhould bring ſome place or ſentence to ſhew the ſame (which he may chance to doe the next morning after the Greeke Calends) or elſe neuer auouch ſo vnchriſtian a Paradoxe. He ſhall vnderſtand that his Greeke Calends are paſt. The Spirit of God ſaith, A Biſhop may be the Husband of one Wife. The Church of Rome ſayes, A Biſhop may not be the Husband of any wife at all: Whether is this a contradiction? The Spirit of God ſayes, Mariage is honourable amongſt all men. The Church of Rome ſayes, Mariage is diſhonourable to ſome. The Spirit of God ſayes, To auoid Fornication, let euery man haue his wife: The Church of Rome, like a quick-huſwife, ſaies, Some order of men ſhall not haue a wife, though to auoyd Fornication. Let my Maſſe-Prieſt ſhew theſe to be no contradictions (which hee may chance to doe at the Greeke Calends*)* or elſe grant this to be neither Paradox, nor vnchriſtian.

SECT. XXIII.

FRom Cardinall Panormitan, I aſcended to Pope Pius the Second, whom I vſhered in with this Preface, Let a Pope himſelfe ſpeake out of Peters Chayre, Pius the ſecond, as learned as hath ſit in that roome this thouſand yeeres. Two things my Cauiller ſnarles at in the Preface, two in the authority it ſelfe.

Refu'. p. 108.

My firſt manifeſt vntruth is, that Pius the Second ſpake this as out of the Chayre. A witleſſe miſpriſion. I hope he ſate in Peters Chayre that ſpake it, if he ſpake it not as from the Chayre, I care for no more. Is not this ſufficient to win reſpect from a Catholike Prieſt? Otherwiſe, whether it were Stoole, or Chaire; or if a chayre, whether the conſiſtoriall, or the Porphyry chaire, wherein he ſits before his firſt Triumph, [l] tanquam in ſtercoraria, it is all one to me. Themſelues muſt firſt agree what it is to ſpeake as from the Chaire, ere I can affirme that Pius the Second ſo ſpake this. Id Populus curet, I referred the chaire to the man, not to the ſpeech: In the meane time C. E. is not ſo good a groome to the Chayre, as Gregory of Valence, who attributes infallibility to a Popes ſentence, though it be [m] ſine curâ & ſtudio. My ſecond wrong is the ſuperlatiue laſhing (ſo he cals it) of other Popes learning in compariſon of this. I cry him mercy; I did not know what ſinne it was to commend a Popes learning; That is not it (I confeſſe) that caries away the Crownes and the Keyes: But the compariſon offended. Perhaps *C. SECT. XXIIII.

* Mariage vpon good reaſon was forbidden to Prieſts, but vpon greater reaſon ſeemes fit to be reſtored. Refut. p. 109.

IN the authority it ſelfe, his Cauils are childiſh; Where Pius ſaid * Sacerdotibus magnâ ratione ſublatas nuptias, maiore reſtituendas videri : My firſt fault is, that I turne Sacerdotes, The Clergie, in ſtead of Prieſts; which word is of a larger extent, including alſo Biſhops : The ſilly man ſees not that I tranſlated it to his aduantage, againſt my owne; For, euery Sacerdos is Clericus, not euery Clericus, Sacerdos. Very frequently are Biſhops comprehended vnder the name of Sacerdotes, as well as of Clerus; and no leſſe vſuall vnder the name of Clerici the ſuperior Orders are not comprehended. He is not worthy to write himſelfe Prieſt, that vnderſtands his Orders no better.

My ſecond error is, That I turned the laſt Clauſe of the Sentence, (Is to bee reſtored) whereas the words are Reſtituendas videri. Here could be no fraud, whiles I ſet the Latine words in the Margine. The Man thinks of his (δοκεῖ μὲν, οὐκ ἔστι) or his, Videtur quod ſic; probatur quod non, but if his Grammar had not been ill learned, he had known that (Videri) doth not alwaies ſignifie a doubtfull probability, but ſometimes a certaine euidence, as, Viſum eſt Spiritui Sancto & nobis; and Qui videbantur columnæ; Or (if this Logicke had fully taught him the Diſtinctions of Sunt and Videntur) this quarrell had beene ſpared. This Seeming was Being; Or, if this lawleſſe Lurker had euer had any taſte of the Ciuill or Canon Law, hee might haue beene able to conſtrue that Maxime, Quod quis per alium facit; per ſe facere videtur : and that iudged Caſe, Qui nomen debitoris legatum viuens exegerit, legatum ademiſſe videtur. In this ſtile ſpake this learned Pope, which my vnlearned Aduerſary cannot reach vnto. For, if Pius, or Syluius, may haue leaue to comment vpon himſelfe, when the queſtion was of ſuffecting Amadeus Duke of Sauoy, a maried man, in the roome of Eugenius, Ex quo conſtat (ſaith he) &c. It is apparent that not onely hee, which hath beene maried, but hee that is maried, may bee aſſumed to the Popedome : and a little after; Fortaſſe peius non eſſet, &c. And perhaps it were not worſe, if more Prieſts had wiues for many would be ſaued in a maried Prieſthood, which now in a ſingle Prieſthood are damned; hee ſaith directly, Damnantur, They are damned, not, They ſeem to bee damned. And therefore to preuent this reall damnation, Mariage is really to be reſtored to them, not that it ſhould onely ſeeme to be reſtored. To conclude, take Videri, for bare ſeeming, ſurely, it muſt be conſtrued, Videtur mihi, I Pope Pius thinke, or iudge, that it were fit that Prieſts ſhould haue the libertie of mariage reſtored againe to them; which together with ſublatas implyeth, that in former times Prieſts were maried; and as the caſe now ſtandeth, ought againe ſo to be. Which is the very ſame ſtate of this queſtion, which we auouch.

And in his Epiſtle to Iohn Freünd, Credimus te non inſulſo vti conſilio; I think it is no ill counſell for thee (ſince thou canſt not containe) to ſeeke for a Wife; although that ſhould haue beene thought of, before thou didſt enter into holy Orders; but wee are not all Gods, that we can fore-ſee future things; ſince it is comne to this, that thou canſt not reſiſt the Law of thy Fleſh, it is better for thee to marry then to burn. Thus he. For which aduice, doubtleſſe he found good cauſe in his owne experience; who hauing beene imployed formerly in this Iland of ours, left two Baſtards behind him, the one, begotten of an Enliſh woman, the other, of a Scottiſh; The one whereof he commends to his Father Syluius, a Citizen of Syenna; the other he confeſſes to his friend P. de Noxeto : But this indeed was before his Prieſthood; Afterwards, it is ſtrange what he confeſſes of himſelfe in his 92 Epiſtle; Mihi herclè parum meriti eſt in caſtitate; I cannot boaſt of any merit in my chaſtity, for to tell the truth (Magis me Venus fugitat, quam ego illam horreo) Venus doth rather flie from me, then I abhorre it. It was not therefore out of ſpeculation, but ſenſe, not out of ſeeming, but certainty, that Syluius paſſes his Reſtituendas videri.

Whiles he was Cardinall, he had his Concubine, to whom at laſt hee gaue threeſcore Florens for her Dowry. Epiſt. 361.

So now to ſhut vp this point, the bleſſed Apoſtle St. Paul, and (in his Attendance) Panormitan, Gratian, and Pius (in their cleere ſuffrages for vs) are fully acquitted from the vaine cauils of my Detector; and God is on my ſide, the Church of Rome, on his. Let Sincerity iudge which Scale of the Ballance is heauier.

Sect. XXV.

FRom the lawfulneſſe of our Mariages, I deſcended to the Antiquity; where my Refuter takes an ignorant exception. I ſaid, Some things haue nothing to plead for them but Time : Age hath beene an old refuge for falſhood : Then I lay for my foundation Tertullians Rule; * That which is firſt is trueſt; My Detector findes here a flat contradiction, and cryes out, Doe theſe men wake or ſleepe when they write ? There are none of his wiſe friends which will not be aſhamed of this groſſe ſtupidity; For whether of theſe two Sentences can he diſlike ? and if both be allowable, how can they be contradictory ? neither am I his Aduerſary herein, but Tertullian. What ſurer way could there bee, then to controll the pretences of a ſecondary antiquity by the firſt ? And what contradiction is in this ? The firſt is true, all vnder the firſt is obnoxious to error, The puiſne poſthumous Antiquity hath beene a refuge for falſhood, the Primogenious Antiquity (which proceeded from the ancient of Dayes) is certaine. Let this Trifler goe learne to ſpell Engliſh, ere he preſume to Diuinity. This Antiquity is the touch, whereby we deſire all truth to be tryed; which eaſily findes all the gilded Coynes of Romiſh innouation, ſhamefully counterfeit.

* Rectum eſt quodcunq; primum; adulterinum quodcunq; poſterius, Tert. de Præſc.

Not to goe backe ſo farre as Paradiſe (though I well might) where God made the firſt wedding in perfect Innocence. I began with Moſes and his Leuiticall Brotherhood; to which my Refuter replyes; That yet in eating their Paſchall Lambe they had their loynes girt. Iuſtly concluded ! All the Iewes did eate the Paſchall Lambe with their loynes girt, for the expedition, or moment of their flight, therefore their Prieſts and Leuites did not conuerſe with their Wiues. If his Superiours of Doway doe not bluſh at this Logicke, his wit and their ſhame are gone together.

Refut. p. 111.

But, They abſtained (he ſaith) from their Wiues, whiles they did miniſter in the Sanctuary; What if we yeeld this ? Their miniſtration was by courſes, and had intermiſſions. There is an holy & decent modeſty in all thoſe which are worthy to ſerue at the Altar, which teacheth them to giue God his due times, with reſpect euen of outward purity; which is all that ᵍ Euſebius by them miſſe-tranſlated, and miſſe-alleaged by him, requireth. But what will my Refuter ſay to the High Prieſt himſelfe, which was bound euery day to a morning and euening Sacrifice, who yet was not reſtrained from a coniugall ſociety ? That Bone hath troubled, blunted, and broken better Teeth then his.

rituall Husband to his Church. If this man be not read to haue had a Wife; no more is he read to haue had Father or Mother. Nay, he is read to haue had neither. Why doe they not thence infer that Prieſts ought to haue neither, but to be begotten and borne of Angels, not of humane kinde? which is as good for an inference as that foppery is for a Legendary fable, that Luther was begotten by an Incubus. Yet had the Literall (not myſticall) Melchiſedec both Father and Mother: and if Sem were Melchiſedec (as wiſer men then mine Aduerſary haue vpon good probabilities thought) hee may paſſe, I hope, for a maried man.

As for the perfection of the new Law aboue the old, it onely bars thoſe inſtitutions which had in them an imperfection, not thoſe which God thought fit for Paradiſe it ſelfe. So as the practice of the Iewiſh Church, founded by God himſelfe, is an all-ſufficient warrant for the mariage of his Euangelicall Miniſters.

Sect. XXVI.

FRom Moſes and the Prophets I deſcend to the Apoſtles. What did they? C.E. anſwers roundly: They did not marie; and they who were maried before, did leaue their wiues. I vrge Saint Pauls report of the reſt of the Apoſtles, and the Brethren of the Lord and Cephas, that, they not onely had Wiues, but [r] caried them along in their Trauels. He anſwers, They were not Wiues, but other deuout Women, which followed them to adminiſter maintenance to them. A likely tale, if they could all agree in it; That the Apoſtles would caſt off their owne Wiues, and cary about ſtrange Women with them, vpon what-euer pretence Credat Iudæus apella, Non ego. Yet my ſhameleſſe Refuter cryes out of my pride and ignorance in not allowing this, which he dares proclaime for the receiued expoſition of all the Fathers, and all that euer wrote in the Greeke and Latine Church: When he knowes that his [s] Clement in his Recognitions and his own Pope in their Canon Law, hath expounded contrarily, of Wiues, not of ſtrange Women: [t] Leo the ninth, againſt the Epiſtle of Nicetas the Abbot, where he directly affirmes that the Apoſtles did cary about their Wiues, Vt de mercede prædicationis ſuſtentarentur ab ijs; That they might be maintained by the reward of their preaching, making the force of the word to lie in circumducendi, non amplectendi: Eyther therefore his Pope erres in a deliberate expoſition of Scripture, or elſe I haue not erred; And either his Popes are no Fathers, or C.E. hath no forehead.

That our laſt acurate Tranſlation of the Engliſh Bible, hath Women in the margin, is a poore aduantage, who ſeeth not, that it is the manner of that exquiſite Edition, to ſet all the Idiotiſmes of either Language, and diuers readings in the Margin? Euery Schoole-Boy knowes that the word ſignifies both; but whether of them is fit to be receiued into the Text, our Text it ſelfe ſhewes. How wittily is Saint Pauls, A Woman, a Siſter, paralleled with Saint Peters, Viri Fratres? Ye Men which are Brethren, is a meet predication, but, Ye Siſters which are Women, is abſurd; Neither doth St. Peter ſay (ἀδελφοὶ ἄνδρες) Brethren men, as Saint Paul ſayes, ἀδελφὴν γυναῖκα, A Siſter Woman. * A Title giuen to Gregory, alſo in Apolog. Tumultuaria.

Refut.p.115.

For the reſt, it is worth my Readers note, how the Plagiary Prieſt hauing ſtolne this whole paſſage (as moſt of the reſt verbatim out of Bellarmine, yet ouer-reaches his Maſter; for where Bellarmine ſayes, Ita ferè omnes Græci & Latini; So almoſt all the Greeke and Latine; this Bayard dares ſay, All (ſauing Clemens) as well Greeke, as Latine; and when he hath done, names ſome that ſay nothing of it at all, as Chryſoſtom;

Another, that in Hereſie ſpeakes for him one where, another-where againſt him, as Tertullian; who being alſo himſelfe a maried Prieſt, could ſay in his exhortation, Licebat & Apoſtolis nubere, & vxores circumducere; Another that grounds vpon an euident miſreading, as Ambroſe; and to make vp the Bulke, puts in Saint Bede and St. Thomas, parties to the cauſe, and then ſings Io pæan. It is well yet that hee grants Clemens of Alexandria, and Saint Ignatius to be on our ſide, for this interpretation; and when he hath done, he muſt be forced to yeeld vs his Pope Clement, Pope Leo, ſeconded by his Gratian, and Laurentius Valla, and others cited by Eraſmus; in ſo much as Eſpencæus himſelfe grants herein, [x] διαφωνίαν veterum, a difference amongſt the Ancient, And if theſe had neuer beene, the Text cleares it ſelfe; for, not to inforce the word (περιάγειν) which implyes a power ouer the party caried; The Apoſtle ſpeakes of a matter of charge to the Church, by this circumduction; Now, that rich Matrones ſhould follow the Apoſtles, and miniſter to them of their ſubſtance, was a matter of eaſe to the Church. Neither was this attendance for miniſtration, ſo much an act of Cephas, and the other Apoſtles, as a voluntarie act of the women themſelues. To conclude, in this, the Apoſtles practice ſhould haue croſſed their doctrine. For if Saint Paul gaue that charge (of being the Husband of one Wife) on purpoſe (as [y] Chryſoſtome ſaith) to ſtop the mouth of the Enemies to Mariage; how muſt this needs open them againe, and breed a conceit of that impurity, which Saint Paul meant to oppoſe, that the Apoſtles themſelues as aſhamed of their wiues, forſooke them; and choſe rather to bee attended by Strangers?

So as I muſt take leaue to be euer in this Hereſie, that the Apoſtles had wiues, and caried them about.

Sect. XXVII.

BVt what Boyes play is this, To giue and take? Our doughty Champion hath granted vs Clemens of Alexandria, and now hee puls him backe againe; Clemens (ſaith he) grants the Apoſtles to haue had wiues, but hee denyes that they vſed them as wiues; cunningly diſſembling that which Clemens ſaid in the beginning of the ſame period; For Peter and Philip (ſaith hee) did beget children, &c. How did Peter beget them, if he were not Peter when he begot them? In the time of their painefull Euangelicall peregrination they forbore perhaps: doth it therefore follow that they did alwaies forget to be husbands? Whence, in all likelihood, had S. Peter his Petronella, if ſhe were not borne after he was Peter? Whence was that inſcription on Pilagiaes Tombe, (if we may beleeue [z] Perionius) Hic ſita eſt ſponſa Dionyſij, Thomæ Apoſtoli filia? There is not (I grant) neceſſity in this proofe, there is probability. It is therefore too boldly affirmed by my Detector, that the Apoſtles, after that publike calling vndertaken, vſed not their Wiues. Is that of Saint Ignatius nothing againſt him? Opto Deo dignus, &c. I deſire to be found worthy of God, as Peter and Paul, and the reſt of the Apoſtles which were maried men, and [a] not for luſts ſake, but for propagation of proſterity inioyed their Wiues. Thus he. So much againſt C. E, that C.E. is no leſſe againſt him. The teſtimony of S. Ignatius (ſaith he) is a meer forgery, eaſily anſwered. If Ignatius had either denyed or diſliked theſe Mariages, no mans word had been more authentike; now, this clauſe hath made him falſified: He cannot (I hope) ſay, that the ſentence came out of our Forge; we take him as we find him; neither doth B. Eſpencæus, or any other ingenuous Writer, take ſuch exception, but finds the authority weighty. That more vnliked Epiſtle which Ignatius wrote to Saint Iohn, and the bleſſed Virgin (though palpably reiected by their owne) is claſſicall enough, when it may ſerue a Coccius, or [b] a Bellarmine, or a Pierre Cotton; But here the Epiſtle it ſelfe is not queſtioned, onely this clauſe is bored in the Eare. And why ſo? Forſooth the ancient Greeke Copies haue it not. Doubtleſſe the man hath vexed the old Greek Manuſcripts; but when he hath done, his owne Fellow ſhall giue him the lye; who confeſſes it to be in all Copies both Greeke and Latine, old and new, whiles he ſaith, thoſe words ([b] Et alij Apoſtoli) ex textu abradenda. Or if that will not ſerue, there is yet to be ſeene in Baliol Colledge in Oxford, an old Copy of the age of ſeuen hundred or eight hundred yeeres, wherein the words are found; Onely the words (Saint Paul, and the other Apoſtles) blurred; yet ſo, as they are ſtill to bee well diſcerned: If the Greeke ſhould want the clauſe, what were this? The firſt Edition of Ignatius in Greeke was (1558.) as the Centuriſts haue noted; and how eaſie was it to leaue out one ſentence that ſeemed preiudiciall? Let him neuer caſt this vpon the Grecians: they neuer ſo excelled in this Faculty of counterfeiting as the Romans: Greece in this muſt yeeld to Italie, how-euer it pleaſes [c] Pope Gregorie and Cardinall Bellarmine herein onely to giue it ſuperiority.

Amongſt the reſt, this very place puts me in mind of a memorable iugling Tricke of his Fellowes. The old Platina printed at Paris by Francis Regnault, Anno 1500. Theſe words* (ſaith Eraſmus) ſeeme patched to the reſt; ſince they neither are added in Sophronius, nor in the better Copies. Thus he. I alleaged the learned Cardinall Caietan for the likelihood of Saint Pauls Mariage; Can my Refuter deny this? The words are plaine: [f] Locus cogere videtur; The place ſeemes to inforce it, not by demonſtratiue reaſon, but in all reaſonable ſenſe, that Paul had a Wife. So he. Which is all I contended for. If now he ſhall thinke to choake me with a croſſe Teſtimonie of the ſame Author, concerning Saint Pauls not conuerſing with his Wife after his Apoſtleſhip, he may vnderſtand, that I well remember Caietan to haue beene a Roman Cardinall; and therefore in ſome points neceſſarily vnſound; whoſe ingenuity yet in this buſineſſe I haue formerly ſhewed.

SECT. XXVIII.

FRom the practice of the Apoſtles (which is yet cleare for vs) we deſcended to their Canons. It troubles my Refuter, that I ſay, the Romiſh Church fathers theſe vpon the Apoſtles, and that their Ieſuit Turrian ſweats to defend it, (inſinuating my contrary opinion) and yet that I cite them for my ſelfe; whereas his wiſdome might haue conſidered, that their force is no whit leſſe ſtrong againſt them, notwithſtanding our doubt or denyall. For example, The Trent Canons rore terribly to them: to vs, or the French, they are but as the Pot-guns of Boyes: wee may cite theſe to them as Goſpell, they may cite them to vs as Alchoran.

Refut. p. 118

By this it appeares how farre not onely Schoole-learning, but euen Logicke tranſcends this poore Refuters capacity, who could not diſtinguiſh betweene diſputing ad rem and ad hominem.

What I ſayd in my Epiſtle to my reuerend and worthy friend Maſter Doctor Iames, the incomparably induſtrious and learned Bibliothecary of Oxford (a man whom their Poſſeuine thought ſo well of, that he hath handſomely ſtolne a booke of his, and clapt it out for his owne, a man whom ſo baſe a Tongue as my Detectors cannot diſgrace) I profeſſe ſtill, that I hold thoſe Canons of the Apoſtles vncanonicall; And doe

I hold this alone? Doth not his Pope Gelaſius ſo? Doth not Iſidore, Biſhop of Hiſpalis ſo? Doth not Leo the Ninth ſo? Are not ſome of them at pleaſure reiected by Poſſeuine, Baronius, Bellarmine? Or, in a word, if they be the true iſſue of the Apoſtles, are they accordingly reſpected, and obſerued of the Roman Church? Doth not his [g] Medina grant to their ſhame, that the Latine Church ſcarce obſerues ſix or eight of them? Theſe Canons then I doe not hold Apoſtolicall; I doe hold ancient, and not vnworthy of reſpect; and ſuch as I wonder they haue eſcaped the Roman Purgations. As for thoſe other nine or ten noted Counterfeits, which I ioyned herewith for company, in that Epiſtle, his ſhame would ſerue him to iuſtifie, if his leaſure would, whereas there is ſcarce one of them whom his owne Authors haue not branded.

My Refuter muſt haue a fling; In an idle excurſion therefore hee iuſtly railes on the Proteſtant practice, in reiecting thoſe Fathers for baſtardie one while, whom otherwhiles they cite for currant; when his own eminēt impudency in the very paſſage next going before, and in the next following (to goe no further) offends in the ſame kind. The truth is, The Proteſtants take liberty to refuſe thoſe Fathers, whom euen ingenuous Papiſts haue cenſured as baſe; The Papiſts take libertie, when they liſt, to reiect the authority of thoſe Fathers, whoſe truth they cannot deny. The inſtances hereof would be endleſſe. But with what face can any Papiſt taxe vs for this, when all the World may ſee aboue three hundred and twenty of their Authors, whom after the firſt allowance they haue either ſuppreſſed, or cenſured? To their eternall and open conuiction, Doctor Iames, (whom they may reuile, but ſhall neuer anſwer) hath collected and publiſhed the names and pages.

SECT. XXIX.

NOt to follow therefore this babling vagary of my Aduerſary againſt Zuinglius, Luther, Muſculus, Whitakers, (what Puppy cannot barke at a dead Lyon?) we come cloſe to the Canon: That no Biſhop, Presbyter, or Deacon ſhall forſake or caſt off his Wife in pretence of Religion, or Piety, vpon paine of depoſition. Wherewith how much my Refuter is preſſed, appeares, in that hee is faine with Baronius to auoid it, with, Apocryphorum non eſt tanta authoritas; There is no ſo great authority in Apocryphall Canons.

Reſp. p. 126. 127. Apoſt. can. 5.

Where is the man that euen now vpbraided vs with the lawleſſe reiection of ancient Records; and by name would vndertake to iuſtifie thoſe whom my Epiſtle taxed for Adulterine, whereof theſe Canons of the Apoſtles, were a part? now he is fayne to change his note, Apocryphorum non eſt tanta authoritas. Hee hath caſt off Ignatius already, anon you ſhall finde him reiecting Socrates, Sozomen, Nicephorus, Gratian, Sigebert, H. Huntingdon, and whom not? vpon euery occaſion ſhameleſly practizing that which he cenſures.

If I alleage the ſixth generall Councell, that of Conſtantinople, proclaiming this ſenſe truly Apoſtolicall, euen the ſixth generall Councell is reiected as neither ſixth, nor generall, nor Councell; That this Apoſtolicall Canon is bent againſt the deniall of Matrimoniall conuerſation, is apparently expreſſed in thoſe Canons of Conſtantinople, how-euer the extent of it in regard of ſome perſons is reſtrained. There is no way therefore to vntie this knot, but by cutting it; and my cauilling Prieſt with his Ieſuits may gnaw long enough vpon this bone, ere they ſucke in any thing from hence, but the blood of their owne iawes.

Any of thoſe words ſingle might be auoided, but ſo ſet together, will abide no illuſion, Let him not vpon pretence of religion eiect his Wife.

The ſhift that C. E. borrowes from Bellarmine, is groſſe, and ſuch as his owne heart cannot truſt (προφάσει εὐλαβείας, ſaith he) that is, * prætextu cautionis. Looke ouer all the Copies; all interpretatiōs of theſe Canons; that of Dionyſius Exiguus; that of Gentianus Heruetus; that of Caranza; that which Gratian, (whom my either graceleſſe or ignorant aduerſarie dares name againſt me) citeth from hence; all of them runne prætextu religionis. How cleere is that of their owne [h] Law? Si quis docuit Sacerdotem, &c. If any man ſhall teach that a Prieſt, vnder pretence of Religion, may contemne his owne Wiſe, let him be accurſed.

And Zonaras, whom both our Iunius, and their Eſpençæus cite out of Quintinus his Expoſition, is moſt cleere; Hoc enim videtur in calumniam fieri nuptiarum, &c. [k] For this eiection (ſaith he) would ſeeme to be done in reproach of mariage, as if the Matrimoniall knowledge of Man and Wife cauſed any vncleanneſſe. Thus he. Where it is plaine, that he takes it not of maintenance, but (περὶ τῆς Μίξεως) of the Coniugall act. The neceſſity of which ſenſe alſo is euicted by their owne * Eſpenſæus out of Saint Chryſoſtome, in his ſecond Homily vpon Titus. And [i] Balſamon no leſſe directly; Becauſe (ſaith hee) before that Law of Iuſtinian, it was lawfull for a man vpon any cauſe to diuorce his Wife: therefore the preſent Canon giues charge, that it ſhall not be lawfull for a Biſhop, Prieſt or Deacon, vpon pretence of Piety, to put away his Wiſe. Thus he.

From all which it is not hard to ſee, that in thoſe young dayes of the Church, the myſtery of iniquity began in this point to worke; ſo as Mariage, according to the Apoſtles prediction, began to be in an ill name, though the cleere Light of that Primitiue Truth would not endure the diſgrace.

So as in all this I haue both by Moſes, and the examples of that Leuiticall Prieſthood; by the Teſtimonie of the Apoſtles, by their practice, by their anciently-reputed Canons, and by the teſtimonie of the ageſt Fathers, ſo made good the lawfulneſſe and antiquitie of the Mariages of perſons Eccleſiaſticall, that I ſhall not need to feare a Diuorce either from my Wife, or from the Truth in that my Confident and iuſt Aſſertion.

AND now, ſince in this point wee haue happily won the day; leſſe labour needes in the other. It is ſafe erring with Moſes and the Prophets, with Chriſt and his Apoſtles; ſoone after (according to Saint Pauls Propheſie) Spirits of Errors were abroad; and whether out of the neceſſarie exigence of thoſe perſecuted times, or out of an affectation to win fauour and admiration in the eyes of Gentiliſme, Virginitie began to raiſe vp it ſelfe in ſome priuate conceits, vpon the ruines of honeſt Wedlocke; neither is it hard to diſcerne by what degrees; yet neuer with ſuch abſolute ſucceſſe, as to proceed to any Law of reſtraint. I doe not therefore faine to my ſelfe (as mine idle Refuter) golden ages of mirth, and[k] marying, vnder thoſe tyrannous perſecutions, but in thoſe bloody ages, I doe auouch to him, and the World, an immunitie from the tyrannous yoke of forced continency. This if hee could haue diſproued by any iuſt inſtances, he had not giuen vs words.

If he be angry that I ſaid, ſome of the pretended Epiſtles of his ancient Popes to this purpoſe are palpably foyſted: Let him faſten where he liſts, if he haue not an anſwer, let me haue the ſhame; in the meane time, it is enough to ſnarle where he dares not bite.

That which I cited from Origen, aduiſing the ſons of Clergie-men not to bee proud of their parentage, he cannot deny, he can cauill at. The ſame perſwaſion (ſaith he) might be made to Saint Peters daughter (as many are of opinion that he had one) yet will it not follow that he knew his wife, after he was an Apoſtle. So he. But what needs this Parentheſis, if the man be true to his owne Authors? Did wee deuiſe the Storie of Petronilla? Did we inuent the paſſage of her Sutor Flaccus; Of her Feuer, the cure whereof her father denyed? Of her Epitaph ingrauen in Marble, by her fathers owne hand: Aureæ Petronillæ, dilectiſſimæ filiæ, To my deare and precious Petronilla, my moſt beloued daughter, found by Paul the Firſt? Are not theſe things reported by their owne Volateranus Petr. Natalis, Beda, Vſſuradus, Sigebertus, Platina? Still where is the man that cryes out of reiecting authorities in other caſes allowed? either then let him giue the lye to his Hiſtories;

As for that parcell of the teſtimony, which hee ſaith my chin-cough cauſed mee to ſuppreſſe (in ipſa Chriſtianitate) it is a Herbe-Iohn in the Pot, to the purpoſe of my allegation. Origen ſpeakes of that Text, Many that are firſt, ſhall be laſt, &c. Which he applies as a cooling-card to the children of Chriſtian Parents, eſpecially, Si fuerint ex patribus Sacerdotali ſede dignificatis, If they be the ſons of them, which are dignified with Sacerdotall honour: The change of the Prepoſition is remarkable, ex Patribus, arguing that hee ſpeakes not of their education, but their deſcent, and therefore implying no leſſe then I affirmed, that their parentage giues them a ſuppoſed cauſe of exaltation.

Holy [n] Athanaſius was brought by me in ſtead of a thouſand Hiſtories: Who tels vs that it was no rare thing to finde maried Biſhops in his time. My wiſe Refuter, after he hath idlely gone about the buſh a little, comes out with this dry verdict, What will Maſter Hall hence infer? That Biſhops and Prieſts may lawfully marrie? Saint Athanaſius ſaith it not, but onely recounteth the fact, that ſome maried of both ſorts, but whether they did well or ill, or whether himſelfe did approue or condemne the ſame, there is no word in this ſentence. Thus he. We take what he giues, and ſeeke for no more: We cited Athanaſius in ſtead of many Hiſtories, not of many Arguments: Hiſtories de facto, not diſcourſes de iure: The lawfulneſſe was diſcuſſed before; the practice and vſe is now inquired of. This Athanaſius witneſſes, and C.E. yeelds: Wherein yet I may not forget to put my Refuter in minde, how brittle his memory is; who in the ſame leafe contradicts himſelfe: For when he had before confeſſed that Athanaſius doth neither approue nor condemne the practice, either as good or euill, now he plainely tels vs, that the words were not ſpoken by way of ſimple narration, but of miſlike and reprehenſion. He would be a good lyer, if he could agree with himſelfe. Why of diſlike? For (ſaith he) it was neuer lawfull for Monks or Biſhops to beget children. Ipſe dixit, wee muſt beleeue him: Not to tell him that [o] Chryſoſtome teaches vs (δυνατὸν μετὰ γάμου τὰ τῶν μοναζόντων ποιεῖν) it is poſsible with Mariage to doe the acts of Monkes: not to conuince him with counter teſtimonies, let him tell me what fault it is, to doe or not to doe miracles. Theſe in this ſentence of * Athanaſius goe in the ſame ranke with Mariage. But, to cleare Athanaſius, he brings Hierom againſt Vigilantius, (impudently called by him, The father of the Proteſtants, who would haue all Clergie men to marry; when his very Rhemiſts haue checkt him for this ſlander) pleading againſt that neceſſitie, from which wee haue oft waſht our hands; when as the ſame Author againſt Iouinian affirmes de facto, the ſame with Athanaſius, and vs.

To ſay then that Athanaſius ſpoke this onely of Lewd licentious Monks or Biſhops, is but the Lewd libertie of a licentious tongue that hath ouer-runne both Truth and it it ſelfe.

From hence this Orator, this parcell of wit, flyes out into a pleaſant frumpe, as hee thinks, but indeed an vgly, inhũmane, lothſome ribauldry, ill-beſeeming the mouth of any that was borne of a woman, I will not ſay whether ill or well beſeeming the Pen of a Virgin-Prieſt, forſooth ſo pure and angelicall, that Mariage would vn-Saint him. Let Numid. the Prieſt be receiued into the numbe of the Prieſts of Carthage.&c.

Till then, he ſhall giue me leaue to ſtile the man as I finde him, Numidicus Presbyter.

If Cyprian had ſaid, Numidicus Presbyterorum numero aſcribatur, the caſe had beene cleare; but now doubling the word, he implies him a Prieſt before; and how long before, and whether not before his Confeſſion, it will trouble my learned Aduerſary to determine. How faine would this man crow, if hee could but get the colour of an aduantage?

Numid. Presbyter Presbyterorum Carth. numero aſcr.

In the meane while, this impotent inſultation bewrayes nothing but malice and ignorance.

Sect. IIII.

MY Refuter may tranſpoſe the Hiſtory of Paphnutius, but hee ſhall neuer anſwer it. After his old guiſe therefore he falls to his Hatchet, and when he hath tried to bow it a little and findes it ſtiffe, he cuts it vp by the roots. What one word can hee controll in the relation of [r] Socrates, or mine Illation? The Biſhops went about to bring in a new law of Continency to be impoſed vpon their Clergie, ſaith Socrates and Sozomen, therefore before it was not. Paphnutius reclaimed and called that yoake heauy and vnſupportable, the vſe of the Mariage-bed, Chaſtity. The iſſue was, Poteſtas permiſſa cuique pro arbitratu: Euery man left to his owne libertie: the ſtory is plaine, there is no place for cauils. The onely comfort that my Detector and his Tutors finde in the Hiſtorie, is, that Paphnutius is not all ours: Hee cals for the vſe of mariage to the wedded Clergie, not for wedlocke of the vnmaried. True; therein I muſt retort the anſwer of Sotus, that the good Martyr gaue way to the corruption of the Times; wherein the wicked myſtery had begun with St. Pauls (κωλυόντων,) But in the meane time, let him know, that if Paphnutius pleade but by halues for vs, hee pleades againſt them altogether; yea, this he knowes already, elſe he would neuer bee ſo audacious as to condemne the authors for vnſincere, and fabulous, yea hereticall; and to bring the clamours of his Bellarmine, to diſcredit Socrates in three groſſe vntruths, and Sozomen with Multa mentitur. O impudency without meaſure, without example! Caſſiodorus and Epiphanius, Socrates, Sozomen, Nicephorus, graue and approued Authors of our Eccleſiaſticall Story, for but reporting one piece of an Hiſtory, in fauour of Clergiemens mariages, are ſpit vpon, and diſcarded with diſgrace. This is no new Song; my Refuter hath learned it of Copus, Torrenſis, Bellarmine, Baronius, and others. All whoſe mouthes together with his, in theſe particular exceptions, let mee ſtop with that ingenuous anſwer of * B. Eſpencæus, there needs no other Aduocate, Excipit Torrenſis, &c. But Torrenſis excepts againſt Socrates and Sozomen, as though they had lewdly, and ſhamefully belyed this ſtory of Pathnutius; and ſayes, the one was a friend of the Nouatians, the other an abettor of Theodorus the Heretike; that both their Hiſtories are in this, voyd of credit, authority, probability. As if they could not at once be bad Men, and yet good hiſtorians: or if they lye in any other place, they muſt needs lye in this: For Sozomen, Tritemius commends him for a worthy furtherer of ſecular learning, and well verſed in the Scriptures. And for Socrates, he extols him for a learned and eloquent man, for a very excellent, and greatly experienced Hiſtorian. Thus he, and much more; to which (for breuity) I referre my peremptory Refuter; who ſhall there finde ſatisfaction to his Obiections of the ſilence of other Authors, and the Canon alledged againſt the ſub-introduction of (Mulieres extraneæ) ſtrange women into the houſes of Clergie-men: His Clictonæus telling him vxores dici non poſſe extraneas, and the Law made afterwards by Honorius and Theodoſius, plainly commenting vpon this Conſtitution.

As for his Teſtimonie of Leo the Great, liuing in the time of Socrates, I anſwer it by the teſtimony of * Socrates, liuing in the time of Leo the Great, Multi enim, &c. For many (ſaith he) in this Epiſcopall dignity, in their Epiſcopall houſes, in the time of their being Biſhops, doe beget children of their Wiues, whom they had before lawfully maried. Thus he. A place that anſwers for it ſelfe, and many others. Wherein yet my Refuter findes ſome of my faulty concealments. Firſt, that the more, and more famous Biſhops, and Prieſts did the contrary. True, they did ſo, but voluntarily, as with vs ſome of the Heads of our Clergie, and others of the Body, doe containe, not forced; [c] Continent ſponte ac pro arbitrio: This I thinke is not the Roman faſhion. Secondly, They conuerſed with the Wiues which they maried before their Ordination, they did not marry after. Let his wiſedome ſhew mee vpon what reaſon the act of marying ſhould be vnlawfull, where the act of Mariage is lawfull, and we will yeeld him iuſtly to ſticke at this difference. And when hee hath done, let him bite vpon their old [d] Gloſſe (though now by them defaced,) Dicunt quod olim, ante Siricium ſacerdotes poterant contrahere.

Sect. VI.

IN the reſt, he fals not vpon me, but the receiued Hiſtorians, Socrates and Nicephorus, They haue done him a ſpight, and he will reuenge it. Theſe hee will conuince of a double lye. The one, that Heliodorus was the firſt Author of the Law of Continencie in Theſſalia; the other, that this Continencie was arbitrarie. His reaſon for the former is weighty; It is not likely (ſaith he) that Heliodorus which would rather loſe his Biſhoprick then recall his laſciuious Booke, would be ſo eager aboue the reſt for the Continencie of his Clergie. As if euer any man had beene more luxurious then the greateſt enemies to mariage; as if it were poſſible for Pope Iohn the thirteenth (from whom Dunſtan receiued his rigorous Commiſſion) to be vnnaturally inceſtuous; as if it were impoſſible for his great Prelate of Crema, when he came to oppoſe the Mariage of our Engliſh Clergie, to be [e] found that night in bed with an Harlot?

And here my childiſh Aduerſarie will needs make ſport for Boyes; I cited in my Margin Heliodorus, the Author of the Æthiopick Hiſtory; As if (ſaith he) Heliodorus had written ſome Hiſtorie of Æthiopia, whereas he onely intuled his worke Æthiopia. Ridiculous head! what Schoole-boy, what apprentice knowes not Heliodorus? Noſque manum ferulæ, &c. If this learned Critick had but euer opened the Book, he had found Αἰθιοπικῶν; Neither doth any Engliſh man know it by any other name, then, as it is tranſlated (ere I was borne) The Æthiopick Hiſtory; yea, if a man were not reſolute to ſhut his eyes in the very place of Socrates, which he cites; the Booke is called Æthiopica; whereto what conſtruction can be giuen, but this of mine? Such folly is for the rod or Feruſe; This is (I confeſſe) a Trifle; yet ſuch as may giue my Reader a taſte of the bold blindneſſe of my impudent Detector.

Sect. VII.

THe other ſtings yet more, that this Epiſcopall and Prieſtly Continency was vpon no other termes, then [f] Modo ipſi voluerint, and, Nulla lege coacti, and conſuetudo inualuit. And now all in a rage my Refuter will proue againſt Socrates that there was a Law for this, and to this purpoſe he brings in two Canons of the Conſtantinopolitane Councell in Trullo: Marke, Reader, with what iudgement. The Trullan Councell was aboue two hundred yeares after: Socrates ended his Hiſtory in the yeare [g] 443. The Trullan Councell was held (as their Binius computes it) in the yeare 692, and yet the Canon of the Trullan Councell, in a matter of fact, diſproues Socrates. The other Councels of Ancyra, Cæſaria, and Nice, are either Prouinciall, or againſt him. As for the plea of Syneſius, that he might not be a Biſhop, becauſe he would not leaue his wife, it is anſwered by the fact of Syneſius, that he was made a Biſhop, and left not his Wife. But what an idle and inſolent boldneſſe is this, for an obſcure Libeller, to goe about now almoſt 1200 yeares after, to controll a graue approued Hiſtorian of the Church, in a matter of ordinary practice, which his owne eyes and the Worlds did dayly witneſſe; As if he durſt haue publiſhed ſuch a report of the common vſe of his time, wherein all the Age he liued in, could haue conuinced him?

The witleſſely-malicious Proſopopey, wherein my Refuter brings in the Reuerend and Peereleſſe Biſhop of London, pleading for his wife to his Metropolitan, becomes well the mouth of a ſcurrile Maſſe-Prieſt, and is worthy nothing but a ſcorne. Thoſe two incomparable Prelates are the chiefe obiects of theſe euill eyes; whom God hath raiſed happily aboue the reach of their enuy. It galls this Romiſh Rabble, that theſe two Ring-leaders of the Engliſh Clergie (beſides their buſie imploiments in their carefull, prudent, and zealous gouernment) preach more Sermons in a yeare, then, perhaps, all the Biſhops vnder the Papacie. Rumpantur & ilia.

Sect. VIII.

IT pleaſeth his diſcretion to marſhall my Epiſtle as he liſts, and then to complaine of diſorder, and my leaping ouer hundreds of yeares from the Nicen Councell to Gratian the Canoniſt; My Readers eyes can confute him, which cannot but witneſſe that I name diuers in all ages recorded for maried Biſhops and Presbyters. This Beadrole (ſaith he) is idle, becauſe I ſhew not that they then vſed their Wiues when they were Biſhops. An hard condition; That I muſt bring witneſſes from their Bed-ſides. It is not enough that we ſhew they had wiues, that they had children? No (ſaith my Refuter) It muſt be proued that they had theſe children by theſe Wiues after Ordination. Wee were neither their Midwiues nor their Goſsips, to keepe ſo ſtrict an account. But what meanes, * Cum vxoribus dormiunt? and, Tempore Epiſcopatus filios gignunt ex propriis vxoribus. This we haue ſhewed out of Socrates. What was that which Dionyſius, the ancient B. of Corinth, (before euer Paphnutius was) wrote to Pinytus, charging him, [x] Ne graue ſeruandæ caſtitatis onus neceſſario fratribus imponat.

What was that, for which Euſtathius, B. of Sebaſtia, the vnworthy ſonne of Eulanius B. of Cæſaria was cenſured? was not this one of the Articles, [y] Benedictionem, &c? That he taught men to decline the bleſsing and communion of maried Prieſts? Away then with this either ignorant, or impudent facing of ſo euident a falſhood.

The teſtimony of Hierom, the example of Vrbicus B. of Claramont, and of Genebaldus B. of Laudune, ſhew what was the conceit & practice of thoſe particular places wherin they liued. And yet Hierome in the ſame Booke can ſay; Quaſi non hodie quoque plurimi ſacerdotes habeant matrimonia. In the ſtory of Vrbicus, related by Greg. Turonenſis, I can but wonder how far men may bee tranſported by ſuperſtition; ſo as to make the Apoſtles charge giue way to an humane opinion. The wife of [a] Vrbicus comes to his doore, and alledges S. Pauls charge; (Meet together againe, leſt Satan tempt you, &c.) Cur coniugem ſpernis, &c? he yeelds to do the duty of an Husband, and now in remorſe inioynes himſelfe a perpetuall penance. What penance do we thinke S. Paul was worthy of, for giuing this charge which ſhe alledged? Let my Reader iudge whether of the two was the better Diuine. How inſolent is tradition, thus to trample vpon Scripture? But ſince it pleaſed my Refuter to lend me this one example of Greg. Turonenſis, I am ready to giue him vſe for it. In the 2. booke of Turonenſis he ſhall find [b] Sidonius a maried Biſhop, and his Wife, a Noble Matron, in all likelihood liuing with him, for (neſciente coniuge) without his wiues knowledge he gaue ſiluer plate to the Poore. [c] In the fourth Booke he ſhall finde Anaſtatius a maried Presbyter, feoffed in ſome Temporalties which he would rather die then not leaue to his iſſue. [d] In the eight Booke hee ſhall find Badegiſilus, the cruell Biſhop of the Cenomans, matched with an ill wife, who yet liued with him (as it ſeemes) all his time, and had altercations with Bertran Archdeacon of Paris, for his goods, deceaſed. In theſe there is ſtrength of legall preſumption, though no neceſſity of inference. But what doe I inſtance in theſe, or any other, when Balſamon tels vs cleerly that before the ſixt Synod [e] it was lawfull for Biſhops to haue wiues, Etiam poſt dignitatem Epiſcopalem? And his owne Canon law can tel him that in the Eaſt Church, their Prieſts, Matrimonio copulantur; which his warieſt Maſters expounding, would interpret by copulato vtuntur. Iudge then, Reader, what to think of the metall of this mans forehead, who would beare vs downe, that no one Biſhop or Prieſts was allowed, after Orders, to haue any wife. Yea, euen for the very contraction of mariage it ſelfe after Orders, [f] honeſt Eſpencæus can cite one [g] Ioannes Marius, a Dutch-man by birth, but a French Hiſtorian, to whom hee allowes the title of (non indiligentis) who writes, that he knowes that in the times of Pope Formoſus, & Ludouicus Balbus, Prieſts were maried, Et iis licuiſſe ſponſam legitimam ducere modò Virginem, non verò Viduam; and that it was lawfull for them to marry a Wife, ſo ſhe were a Virgin, not a Widow.

ous face of our renowned Archbiſhop and Martyr Doctor Cranmer; whom hee moſt lewdly charges with laſciuiouſneſſe and incontinent liuing with I know not what Dutch Fraw, it is worthy of no other anſwer then, Increpet te Dominus. It is true that the holy man wiſely declining the danger and malignitie of the times, made not at the firſt any publike profeſſion of his Mariage; as, what needed to inuite miſchiefe? But that hee euer had any diſhoneſt conuerſation with her or any other, it is no other then the accent of the mouth of Blaſphemy. And if any one of our Clergie, after a legall and iuſt Diuorce long ſince, haue taken to himſelfe that liberty which other Reformed Churches publikely allow (as granting in ſome caſe a full releaſe, both à thoro and à vinculo) what ground is this for an impure wretch to caſt dirt in the eyes of our Clergie, and in the teeth of our Church? Malicious Maſſe-Prieſt, caſt backe thoſe emiſſitious eyes to your owne infamous Chaire of Rome; and if euen in that thou canſt diſcerne no ſpectacles of abominable vncleanneſſe, ſpend thy ſpightfull cenſures vpon ours. I reckoned diuers examples of maried Biſhops and Prieſts out of Euſebius, Ruffinus, others; amongſt the reſt Domnus Biſhop of Antioch, which ſucceeded Samoſatenus, for which my Margent cited Euſebius, in his 7 Booke, and 29 Chap. My Detector taxes me for citing Authors at random; as Euſeb. lib. 7. cap. 29. when as there are (he ſaith) but 26 Chapters; and for things which are not found in him; As if the man had deſperately ſworne to write nothing but falſe. Truſt not me, Reader; Truſt thine owne eyes; Thou ſhalt finde that Booke of [h] Euſebius, to haue one and thirty Chapters; and in the cited place thou ſhalt duly finde the Hiſtory of Domnus. Whoſe patience would not this impudency moue?

What [l] danger is there now therefore either of the breach of my promiſe to my worthy friend Maſter Doctor Whiting, or of my diuorce, or of his victory? If the man and his modeſty had not been long ſince parted, theſe idle crackes had neuer beene.

But whereas this mighty Champion challenges me with great inſultation in many paſſages of his brauing diſcourſe, to name but one Biſhop or Prieſt of note, which after holy Orders conuerſed coniugally with his Wife; without the ſcandall of the Church branding ſuch (if any were) for infamous; and daring to pawne his cauſe vpon this tryall; I doe here accept his offer, and am ready to produce him ſuch an Example, as if all the Ieſuites heads in the world ſtood vpon his ſhoulders, they could not tell how to wrangle againſt. Sect. IX.

I Deſcend to the Teſtimony of Gratian; Champion E. calls this picking of Strawes. If picking of Strawes be boyes play, and argue that they which vſe it are foiled, and haue loſt all, as our Refuter merrily pipeth, let him acknowledge how beggerly the proofes are growne of the martyrdome of their Saintly Ieſuits and Prieſts amongſt vs, did they not ſtoop to picke ſtrawes, to threſh out a miracle (when it was) for tranſlating Father Garnet from a Traytor to a Martyr? yea, and that Chaffe, the gullery whereof themſelues ſmile at here, is deuoutly tranſported beyond the Seas, and enſhrined for a ſacred relique, and proclaimed by their Kornmannus for one of the great Wonders of the Dead; Ridet aruſpex vbi aruſpicem viderit.

It is well that the great Compiler of the Canon Law of Rome is grown ſo baſe with Catholique Prieſts. He witneſſes plainly, that ſome Biſhops of Rome were the ſonnes of Prieſts, not ſpurious, but begot in lawfull wedlocke; [m] Which was (according to Gratian) euery where lawfull to the Clergie, before the prohibition. C.E. bites the lip at this authoritie, and firſt hee tells vs, it is the Palea, not Gratian. But if this bee the Chaffe, there is no Corne. Reader, try by this the egregious impudence of this fellow. Turne to the place, thou ſhalt finde the words to be none but Gratians: and the notes allowed by publique authoritie, openly to confirme it: Hic aperte oſtendit Gratianus ſe in ea fuiſſe opinione, &c. Here Gratian openly ſhewes, that he was in that opinion, that heretofore the Prieſts of the Latine Church might be maried.

Secondly, my Parentheſis diſpleaſes him (As now adayes!) But what needes this quarrell? He muſt grant if the Romiſh Prieſts haue ſonnes, they can be no other then ſpurious. It is his beſt not to preſſe this point too farre. This idle iealouſie of his can argue no good. I touched not the continency of his Paulus Quintus, ſo much as in my thought, I onely wiſh that his holineſſe would beſtow ſome of the offals of his Nephewes great Benefices, vpon this Maſſe-Prieſt for the reward of his ſuperfluous Oleum peccatorum.

Refut.p.162.

My third vntruth, (and that a groſſe one) is, that I ſay many Biſhops of Rome followed their Fathers in the Pontificall Chaire: whereas in this Chaffe of Gratian, he findes but one Syluerius Pope, ſonne of Syluerius Biſhop of Rome. And what if in his Chaffe hee finde but one, whiles I in my Corne-heape can finde more? Did I tye my ſelfe in this clauſe onely to Gratian? Was not Pope Iohn the Eleuenth, or, in ſome accounts, the tenth, ſonne to Pope Sergeus? And is there no Chaire Pontificall but the Romane? Whas not Theodorus Pope, ſonne to Theodorus Biſhop of Ieruſalem? Felix the Third, ſonne to Biſhop Valerius? Pope Adrian the Second, ſonne to Biſhop Taralus? His Platina can ſupply his Gratian in theſe.

What haue I to doe with his quarrels about Hoſius, Felix, Agapetus, Steuen? Like a Philiſtim he hath pulled out the eyes of this Sampſon, and now makes ſport with him; If Doway like it well, it ſhall not be diſpleaſing to vs. The man (as ill as he loues mariage) will needes make a match betwixt his Gratians Pope Steuen, and his Pope Ioane, Iô Hymen! I See, that whiles I follow this Wrangler by the foote, I am become inſenſibly tedious, the reſidue of his longſome Treatiſe is ſpent vpon the Councell of Conſtantinople, Gregories charge, Iſodores rule, Hulderick, Hildebrand, Dunſtan, and Anſelme, and the eſtate of our fore-fathers in the Engliſh Clergie. The diſcuſſion of all which, as not being eſſentiall to our buſineſſe, (except onely the laſt) will admit more breuity of diſpatch. The vitall parts of our cauſe being ſecured, there will be leſſe danger in the remoter lims, which yet, if our Target gard not, our ſword ſhall. Concerning the Councell of Conſtantinople (after ſome idle miſ-taken diſcourſe of the occaſion thereof) he inſiſts vpon theſe foure points.

Firſt, That it was not generall: Secondly, Not the ſixt: Thirdly, Not peremptorily ours: Fourthly, Not by them defaced or torne out.

Firſt, it is no truſting what a Romane Prieſt ſayes in choller of a Grecian Councell. The Greeke Church is equally in their Bookes with ours; and this Councell, with the Synod of Dort. It is an eternall quarrell, which all the vaſſals of Rome haue againſt this Councell, that it equalled the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, with the Romane: A crime that cannot be forgiuen.

The inuectiues of our Popiſh Diuines, eſpecially Pighius, [p] Bellarmine, Baronius, haue made good that note of [q] Balſamon, Occidentales Epiſcopi, &c. The Weſterne Biſhops (ſaith he) that is, the Italian or Latine (Ab huius Synodi Canonibus opportunè icti) finding themſelues galled with the Canons of this Synod, haue giuen it out not to bee Generall: Thus he. And why was it not generall? It had no forme of a Councell (ſaith my Refuter) No Legates of the Pope, no inuitation of the Latine Biſhops, neither were any of the other Patriarkes preſent or conſenting. Euery word a ſhameleſſe vntruth! Baſilius Biſhop of Gortyna the Metropolis of Creete, (which was then vnder the Archbiſhop of Rome) and the Biſhop of Rauenna (ſaith Balſamon) were there to repreſent the Romane Church; The Biſhops of Theſſalonica, Sardinea, Heracles, Corinth, were there and then the Popes Legates. And for the Patriarkes; Baſilius (ſaith the ſame Balſamon) Biſhop of Gortina, which was preſent in the name of the Romane Church, is found to haue ſubſcribed after the foure Patriarks, and certaine other Metropolitans, what can be more plaine? But S. Beda (ſaith C.E.) tels vs that Iuſtinian the Yonger, commanded Sergius Biſhop of Rome to be caried to Conſtantinople, becauſe he would not ſubcribe huic erratica Synodo. Still miſtaking and ignorance. His Surius and Turrian could haue taught him out of Theophanes, this was another a Pſeudo-Synode, which the ſame Iuſtinian had in his firſt gouerment called in fauour of the Monothelites; which was ſome yeares after the true Synode vnder Conſtantine the Bearded. This mans wit wanders with his erraticall Synode.

SECT. XI.

FOr the number of Sixt, wee neede not be ſcrupulous, whether it were the fiſt, or ſixt, or both (as Balſamon cals it, πενθέκτην) or neither. It is enough for me that Gratian, Caranza, Eſpencæus, and other his owne great Maſters call it familiarly both Sixt, and Generall; In this I cannot but be ſafe enough. I grant, that (to ſpeake preciſely) the ſixt Synode vnder Conſtantine publiſhed no Canons, but afterwards many of the ſame Fathers which had formerly met in the ſixt Synode, and others to the number of 227, being called together by the then penitent & reſtored Iuſtinian, (ῥινότμητος) gathered vp, and ſet forth with vniuerſall conſent, the Canons formerly made, and by them re-enforced. But what need I trouble my ſelfe with any other anſwer to all theſe windie cauils of my Aduerſarie, then that which Tharaſius himſelfe, the Patriarke of Conſtantinople, hath moſt fully giuen; [r] Quæ eſt hæc ignorantia, &c. What ignorance (ſaith he) is this, wherewith many men are tainted about theſe Canons? For it is a ſcandall to doubt whether they were the Canons of the ſixt Synod. Let theſe men therfore know, that the ſixt Synod was gathered in the time of Conſtantine, againſt thoſe which aſcribe one onely action and will to Chriſt; The Fathers then condemning thoſe Heretikes, and confirming the Orthodoxe Faith about the fourteenth yeere of Conſtantine, returned home: After foure or fiue yeares, the ſame Fathers (being met vnder Iuſtinian the ſon of Conſtantine) ſet forth the foreſaid Canons; Neither let any man doubt of this; For thoſe very ſame Fathers, which in the time of Conſtantine ſubſcribed, did alſo vnder Iuſtinian ſubſigne this preſent Paper; which thing is euident enough by the vnchangeable likeneſſe of their owne hands. So he. Whether therefore the computation of Tharaſius or Theophanes, be followed, we haue what we deſired; The ſame acts are ſet forth, if not by altogether the ſame perſons, and [s] Gratians iudgement is herein ours.

SECT. XII.

FOr the third point. To proue that this Synode is not peremptorily for vs; Hee vrgeth diuers other Canons for it, which in other things ſound againſt vs. Then he ſhewes the inſtanced thirteenth Canon, not to bee ſo abſolutely and fully ours, as is pretended.

Refut. p. 175. vſq. ad 182.

Firſt, where findes he this Law, that no man may alledge one teſtimony of a Father, or a Councell, but he muſt be tyed to iuſtifie all the reſt? Himſelfe would be the firſt that would ſhrinke at this condition. This challenge is vnreaſonable, and might turne off all allegation. For example, If a man ſhould alledge the Nicene Counſell, Canon 1. againſt any ſuperſtitious Foole that hath made himſelfe a corporall Eunuch; might he ſtraight for his iuſtification fly vpon the laſt Canon of that Councell, vnneceſſarily inioyning vs to ſtand at our Sundayes Prayers. Or if a man ſhould cite the Synode of Laodicea againſt a Deacon (though a Cardinall) ſitting before a Prieſt, or againſt the worſhipping of Angels; were it meet to choke him with a return of the laſt Canon of that Councell, forbidding the Apocryphall bookes; or the 37 Canon forbidding his Holineſſe to take ſo much as a Bible in his ſolemnitie, from the hands of Iewes: If a man ſhall alledge a Teſtimonie of Cyprian, were it fit to vpbraid him with the errour of re-baptization? Or if of Auguſtine, with the errour of the neceſſity of Infants communicating? This is clauum clauo. For mee, I haue vndertaken no ſuch taske, to warrant them that once ſayd true, from euer erring: I doe therefore herein ſcorne my ſilly Refuters compaſſion, who is ſo farre from cruſhing me in this, that he hurts none but his owne fiſts, in beating them about his own hard head. For, if the preſſing vs with the authority of ſome of theſe Canons, be to iuſtifie the reſt, then the 36 Canon of that Councell beares him and his Rome down before it, whiles it ſets Conſtantinople cheeke by jole with it, maugre. they will be glad to abate vs all the reſt: This we are ſure of, that the alledged Canon is peremptorily, fully, cauteloully ours: For this, my credit is at the ſtake, which my Refuter pleaſes himſelfe with the hope to impaire, inſulting in the idle fancy of a iuſt aduantage, whiles he ſhewes the Canon to come ſhort in ſome points of our requiſition and practice; For there, Biſhops are excepted, and the freedome of Mariage after Ordination.

Reader, compare the Canon with the words of my ingagement, I vndertooke thou ſhouldeſt find no decree could be made more peremptory, more cautelous, more full and abſolute, for the lawfulneſſe of the Mariage of Eccleſiaſticall perſons.

For firſt; The Fathers profeſſe herein to croſſe the practice and Decree of the Romane Church. Secondly, they profeſſe the coniugall cohabitations of ſacred perſons to ſtand by the Apoſtolike Canons, and to be a ſincere, exquiſite, and orderly conſtitution. What could be ſaid more? They (thirdly) ratifie this libertie for euer. They (fourthly) giue charge that no man by the cohabitation with his lawfull wife, bee hindred from aſcending to the higheſt degree of holy Orders. (Fiftly) that in the time of their Ordination, it be not ſo much as required of them, to abſtaine from the lawfull companying with their Wiues; which were (ſay they) to offer iniury to mariage ordained by God, and bleſſed by his preſence; and to croſſe him that ſaid, Thoſe whom God hath ioyned together, let no man ſeparate; and, Mariage is honourable amongſt all, &c. (Sixtly) That if any man ſhall preſume ſo farre, as to offer to debarre any Prieſt, Deacon, or Subdeacon, from the coniunction and ſocietie with his lawfull Wife, he ſhall be depoſed; Or if any Prieſt, or Deacon ſhall voluntarily caſt off his Wife, vpon pretence of Religion, that he ſhall be ſuſpended, and (if he goe on) depoſed. Iudge now whether herein my proteſtation haue erred; Not that there can be no circumſtance deuiſed, as of the extent of the perſons, or time, or manner, wherein curioſitie might inlarge the ſcope of this libertie (ſo I neuer meant:) but if this one point (That the mariage of perſons Eccleſiaſticall is lawfull) can be more fully and warily ſet downe, let me lye open to cenſure; if not, hate the vanity of this idle Mountebanke, and confeſſe with Ariſtophanes, Aduerſus ictum Sycophantæ non ineſſe pharmacum.

The Parliamentall law in the time of King Edward, was (I grant) more full in extending the liberty, could not bee more full in auouching the lawfulneſſe of our Mariages. Where I muſt take leaue to tell my Refuter, that the compariſon he preſumes to make of King Edwards Parliament, with the proceedings of Iacke Straw, Wat Tiler, &c. is, like himſelfe ſeditious and traiterous. And what maruell if ſuch repiners blow out the foggie vaporous blaſt of ſeditious words, againſt our higheſt Court of Parliament, which ſome of their companions haue attempted to blow vp with a blaſt of fire? This Conſtitution was not ciuill onely, but Synodicall: And may not a lawfull Synode or Conuocation, with the concurrence of the three States, and the ſway of Royall authority, make or re-eſtabliſh a Law agreeable to the Word of God, and the receiued practice of their Progenitors, but euery Iacke-ſawce of Rome ſhall thus odiouſly dare to controll and diſgrace it? One of his Capitoline gods of Rome called England his Aſſe; So it was whiles it might beare nothing but his Trumperie, and goe but where his Groomes would either leade, or driue it: now that it hath taken heart, and (with Cardinall Campegius his Sumpter) caſt off this baſe loade, and hath happily ouer-runne his ſeruitude; they are ready, with the Keeper of metamorphoſed Apuleius, to ſeeke a deſperate remedie from the next Tree.

SECT. XIII.

SVch then is the Canon of Conſtantinople, which therefore (I ſaid) becauſe they cannot blemiſh enough, they haue indignely torne out of the Councels: and here is much vehement and brauing Rhetoricke, ſpent vpon me as a ſhameleſſe Writer; and this paſſage as the groſeſt lye, that euer was publiſhed by Proteſtant, and now I am coniured, how blemiſhed? how torne? what? where? how? when? Becauſe innocence is bold, the man will be bold, that he may ſeeme innocent; but we ſhall well find that facing will not ſerue his turne. Is he ſo ignorant as not to know that all his great [r] Maſters diſcard this whole Counſell as ſpurious? Doth he not know that it is (if not torne) yet left out in diuers of their Editions of the Councels? Let him learne, if he know not, that their ancient collection of Canons, which was called Codex, or Corpus Canonum, which was in vſe in Leo the fourths time, mentioned by Gratian, diſt. 20. c. de libellis, and printed Anno 1526 at Mentz, and re-printed at Paris, in octauo, Anno 1609. omits it. The other Collection of Councels by Iſidorus Mercator, which began to bee receiued about Charles the Great his Time, wherein, beſides the forged Decretal Epiſtles of diuers Popes, are the Canons of many Prouinciall Councels of Africke, France, Spaine, &c. ſet forth by Iac. Merlin at Coleine 1530. and which hath beene vſually receiued in the Weſterne Church, in the times of the Schoolemen, who vſually (as doe alſo Iuo and Burchardus) alledge them, likewiſe omits it. The two Editions of the Councels by P. Grabbe, likewiſe omit it; and if it had not been for ſtarke ſhame, ſo would the reſt alſo. Doth he not know what his Anaſtatius & Nübertus proteſt of ſome particular Canons, and this for one, [u] Hæc capitula omnino refutamus, and, nullatenùs recipiantur. And for this very particular Canon; If he know not; There is firſt an attempt of a double blemiſh to be caſt vpon it: The one, in that they read it ſo, as if the Romane Clergie profeſſed quòd copulentur vxoribus non ſuis, as by way of ſcorne; whereas the words runne, ſe deinceps cum vxoribus ſuis non congreſſuros.

And what is this in my Detectors conſtruction, but a caſhiering of this Canon out of the Councels againſt the authority of Gratian, and the Greeke Copies? Laſtly, the eyes of learned Chemnitius, are vndoubted witneſſes to vs, what credit ſoeuer they finde with this Italianate generation; In Tomis Conciliorum prorſus expunxerunt, & omiſerunt hunc Canonem: [y] In the Tomes of the Councels they haue altogether whip't out, and omitted this Canon. I Cited from Gratian the free confeſſion of Pope Steuen the ſecond, acknowledging the open liberty of Mariage to the Clergie of the Eaſterne Church, Matrimonio copulantur. A place truely irrefragable; My Refuter firſt excepts againſt the number, telling vs that Steuen the ſecond liued but three or foure dayes at the moſt, and therefore he could not be the man; what ſpirit of Cauillation poſſeſſes this Maſſe-Prieſt? He cannot but know that his owne Sigebertus aſcribes fiue yeares to this Steuen, and Hermannus, ſix: But fiue is the leaſt: And his Binius tels him that the Steuen he ſpeakes of (ſitting but two dayes excluſiuely) [z] is by the moſt omitted in the Catalogue of the Romane Biſhops: whence it is that the Chronicle names not two Steuens betwixt the firſt & the fourth. But this man (he ſaith) called no Councell; what is that to me? Gratian affirmes it, I do not. Let him fall out, for this, with his friends. And now according to the old wont, (after he hath tryed to ſhift off, Matrimonio copulantur, with the ſleeueleſs euaſion of a falſe gloſſe (i. vtuntur) which Cajetan hath ſufficiently confuted for vs) hee fals to a flat reiection of Gratian, and tels vs, out of Bellarmine, That Canon to bee perhaps of no authority, but an errour of the Collectors. Good God! what face haue theſe men? That none of their receiued Authors can be produced againſt thẽ, but they are ſtraight counterfeit, and yet the very ſame, where they ſpeake for them, canonicall? Their Clyents, if they might but know theſe tricks, would be aſhamed of their Patrons.

Refut. p.204.

That the Clergy not onely of the Eaſt might Matrimonio copulari, but of the Weſt alſo might Matrimonium contrahere (which are the words they are vnwilling to know in their owne Canon Law) ſhew ſufficiently that they not onely were maried of old, but might marry; But for the Eaſterne Clergie, it is freely granted, by all ingenuous ſpirits; inſomuch as Eſpencaus tels vs, that neuer Author, either old or new, imputed this for a fault vnto the Greeke Church, that their Clergie was maried.

Refut. p.207, 208.

What ſhall we ſay then to this bold Bayard, that compares this toleration of Mariage in the Greeke Church with Moſes's permiſsion of the Bill of Diuorce vnto the Iewes? As if Mariage had beene only tolerated, not allowed; as if vniuſt Diuorce were a fit match for lawfull Wedlocke; while he here talkes of Duritia cordis, well may we talke of his Duritia frontis. It is true, euery Church, euery Country, hath their Cuſtomes and Faſhions; which Ioannes Maior pleades againſt Beda's Cenſure of the Engliſh and Scottiſh and Brittiſh obſeruation of Eaſter, and may be as iuſtly in this caſe pleaded for vs. This was of old no leſſe ours, then the Greekes; And if any Church will be preſcribing againſt God, we haue no ſuch Cuſtome, nor the Church of God; But what a ridiculous inſinuation is it, that the Greek Prieſts are diſpenſed with by ſupreme authority Eccleſiaſticall? Forſooth, by the Pope of Rome. Faine would I learne when, vpon what termes, at what rate the Græcians purchaſed in the Court of Rome Diſpenſation for their Mariages.

I would my Refuter had the Office appointed him to ſhuffle ouer all the Records of the Apoſtolike Chamber, till hee finde ſuch a grant made propter duritiem cordis; then ſhould a great deale of good Paper eſcape the miſery of being beſmeared by his Pen.

What ſtrange fantaſtike Dreames are put vpon the World? Where the Papacy cannot preuaile, there forſooth his Holineſſe diſpenceth. The Greeke Church admitteth maried Prieſts, the Pope diſpenſeth with them; They deny and defie the Popes Supremacie; I trow he diſpenſeth with them for that too: and why not with the Church of England? We pay no Peter-pence, we run not to Romes-market to buy traſh, I hope his Holineſſe diſpenſeth with vs for theſe Peccadillo's; we take liberty here to marry rather then to burne, why ſhould wee not hope to receiue that Diſpenſation, whereof wee heard the newes of late from a poore Bankrupt Carier? Ad populum phaleras.

AS for the contradiction, which his ſagacitie findes (not without much ſcorne) in the two Parliamentall Lawes of the Father, and the Sonne, King Henry the Eight, and King Edward the Sixt; whereof the one forbids, the other allowes the Mariage of Eccleſiaſtiques, it needed not haue beene any wonder to a learned Prieſt, which might haue knowne Councels enow, diametrally oppoſite to each other: what fault was it in the recouer'd blind man, that he firſt ſaw men walk like Trees, and after like men? Euen the beſt man may correct himſelfe. Neither was there here any contradiction. King Henry ſpake with the Romane Church, (whoſe one halfe of him then was) King Edward ſpake with the Scriptures, and purer antiquitie: King Henry neuer ſaid, God diſallowed theſe Mariages; King Edward neuer ſaid, they were allowed by the Romiſh Church.

And why may not wee draw out the like abſurditie out of Queene Maries Parliaments; wherein ſhee reuerſed many things eſtabliſhed by King Edward, as in this very caſe concerning Mariage of Prieſts? May not wee hereupon aske, What will you ſay to ſuch Parliaments wherein the Brother is thwarted by the Siſter, and that with the conſent of the moſt of the ſame Parliament-men enacting in a few yeares contrarily?

Or as if it were any newes with Popes reſcindere acta prædeceſſorum; euen of thoſe which immediately preceded them. Who knowes not the Story of Pope Formoſus, and Stephanus, and the many and ſtrong contradictions of decrees in the frequent long and deſperate Schiſmes of the Romiſh Church.

NEither was it for want that I mentioned onely this Councell of Conſtantinople; The more ancient Conſtitutions of Ancyra, and Gangra; and the firſt and fourth of Toledo, beſides the Apoſtolicall and Nicene, might haue beene vrged by mee. It was not mine intent (with this blabber) to ſay more then all; but onely to take an handfull out of the Sacks mouth for a taſte to the buyer; That faire flouriſh therefore of Councels which hee muſters vp againſt me herein, will be but, Arma armis contraria: Wherein ſince my Refuter will needs make himſelfe ſo buſie, let mee intreat him by the way to compare the Councell of [a] Gangra, with the Decree of his Pope

Pope Hildebrand; The Councell ſayes flatly, Si quis diſcernit Presbyterium coniugatum, &c. If any man make difference of a maried Prieſt, ſo as that by occaſion of his mariage hee ought not to offer, and doth therefore abſtaine from his oblation, let him bee accurſed. But, this Hildebrand, vxoratos Sacerdotes à diuino remouit officio, & laicis miſſam eorum audire interdixit; nouo exemplo, &c. That is, remoued maried Prieſts from their diuine office, and forbade Lay-men to heare their Maſſes, ſaith [b] Sigebert; Therefore by the ſentence of the Councell, Pope Hildebrand is accurſed; And accurſed for that very point which made him a Romiſh Saint: When my Refuter hath gnawed a while vpon this bone, he may hope to be rewarded with a cruſt.

And now for his Councels, to make vp the number hee names for the foreman of the Queſt, the Councell of Ancyra (ſomewhat before the Nicene) one who hath paſſed a direct verdict againſt him, allowing Deacons, vpon their profeſſion, to marry. The miſerable euaſions of his [c] Binius, and Baronius, in this point, argue both a minde and a cauſe deſperate; whiles (without all colour of warrant) they imperiouſly turne downe theſe maried Deacons to a lay-communion, and faine this libertie onely in a forced Ordination, not in a voluntarie.

Refut. p. 226.

As for that firſt Canon which hee citeth of the Councell of Arles, That a man cannot be made Prieſt in the band of Wedlocke, vnleſſe hee promiſe conuerſion: It is a groſſe counterfeit: And that the world may ſee wee vſe not to paſſe theſe cenſures without euident reaſon; It mentions the Arrians which were not yet hatched; It mentions Bonoſus, which liued long after in the time of Innocent 1. It mentions the Concilium Vaſenſe, which was yet later, in the time of Leo the firſt. When his authors can agree of the time, and make good the Synode, hee ſhall receiue an anſwer to it: In the meane time, it was either before the Councell of Nice, or after it; if before, it was corrected by the Nicene; a Prouinciall muſt yeeld to a Generall; if after, it was preſumptuous, in decreeing that peremptorily which the Generall determinately left free.

Carthaginen 5. African. Can 3. ſub Cæleſt. Can 37. Secundum proprios terminos, vel propria ſtatuta. Where they read it, Secundum priora ſtatuta.

The Councell of Arauſica is cited by him in direct termes oppoſite to the Ancyran. He muſt make them friends, ere hee can bring it forth againſt an enemie. As for the maine ſtay of this cauſe of his, which is the two Councels of Africke, lent him by his Bellarmine, it is grounded (as our learned Iunius hath probably anſwered) vpon meere corruption, and miſ-taking; the Latine Copies taking propria, for priora: The charge of the Councell being onely, that Deacons, Prieſts, Biſhops (κατὰ τοὺς ἰδίους ὅρους) according to their turnes of miniſtration, ſhould abſtaine from their Wiues, which no modeſt Diuine will not willingly ſubſcribe vnto. Moreouer, I am ſure, if the one word be not corrupted, the other is ambiguous, and may as well ſignifie Balſamons ἑρμηνείας. And if theſe Canons were firſt Latine, and after tranſlated into the Greeke; yet the Greeke ſhewes what was the firſt Latine, and may well correct the miſtaken Originall. But to diſcuſſe the ſeuerall Councels, which he onely thinkes fit to name, and vtter by whole-ſale againſt vs, were a worke for a volume apart. The old word is Doloſus verſatur in generalibus; There is deceit in generalities; It were eaſie to ſhew that ſome of theſe are impertinent; others plainly againſt them; others corrupted to ſpeake againſt vs, as that of Mentz, and Wormes, whereof in the ſequell; others partiall to the faction of Rome. So then, here, Obruimur numero; Hee thinkes to cary it by number, not by weight; where with vs, one piece of Gold is worth a whole bagge of Counters. But, if after the Tyrannicall impoſitions of his Siritius and Innocentius tooke place in the Church, he could name for euery one of his Prouinciall Synods, an hundred, it were all one to vs; wee are not the worſe, his cauſe no whit the better. This Tradition, after that in an emulation of the Montaniſticall vaunt of Virginitie, it had gotten head in the Church, ranne like fire in a traine; Thoſe Prouinces that held correſpondence at Rome, according to the charge of [d] Gregory, ſpake as ſhee did prompt them: What ſhould they doe but follow their Miſtreſſe? The Greeke Church, and thoſe that either had dependance vpon it, or which had continued in the ſucceſſion of this cuſtome of mariage, ſtill maintaining the lawfulneſſe and vſe of it inuiolable. So then, in ſumme. This he hath gained, which I am ready euer to auow; The ancienteſt Councels are againſt him; The later are againſt vs; and God with vs againſt them; of which we haue learned [e] to ſay, Va vobis filij deſertores, vt faceretis Concilium & non ex me. And if his Miſtris of Rome haue elſe-where found vaſſals, it followes not, that we may not be free. Yea, it is more than manifeſt, by thoſe euidences we haue already produced from their owne records, that notwithſtanding this cogged number of his prouinciall Synods, and Priuate decrees (as Voluſian termes them) all the time of the firſt ſeuen hundred yeares, the freedome of this practice continued in many parts of the Chriſtian world; In ſo much as amongſt the reſt, the Church of Armenia, for the time of the yeares mentioned, vpheld a Tradition, [f] not to admit of any Clergy-man, but thoſe which deſcended ex genere Sacerdotali, deſcended from Prieſts; Witneſſe the Fathers of Conſtantinople, in their three and thirtieth Canon. Where my Detector ſhould doe well to inquire what Balſamons Clerici Chryſo-bullati meanes; Sure I am, that this example ſufficiently proues the practicall libertie of thoſe Churches in the queſtioned limits of the ſeuen firſt Centuries. To which we may adde the Church of Bulgaria, out of his [g] Gratian; The Church of Germany out of [h] Auentine; The Church of Ireland out of [i] Bernard, who confeſſes the Epiſcopall See of Armach to haue beene furniſhed with a lineall deſcent of Biſhops, for eight generations, before the time of his Malachias; which were ſtill both vxorati and literati. How thoſe men were Biſhops, and yet ſine ordinibus, is a Riddle which (I confeſſe) I cannot aread. Perhaps, they were without Romane Orders, but if they were not Clerkes after the then Iriſh faſhion, what needed they be Literati, that they might be Biſhops? The Church of our Britaine (as we ſhall ſee in the Proceſſe) and others. Theſe are more than enough to let the World ſee this reſtraint, for all this pretence of Prouinciall and partiall Councells neuer vniuerſally obtained.

SECT. XVII.

YEt the man hauing vnmercifully cruſht me in peeces with this emptie bladder of windy and worthleſſe authority, crowes ouer me, thus, in concluſion: And truly to me he ſeemeth not to be more mad, than blinde; for otherwiſe he would neuer haue proclaimed this freedome of ſeuen hundred yeeres, ſeeing the very forme of words vſed by his owne ſacred Councell, doth ſo ſtrongly withſtand his fond collection; For there it is decreed, Qui ſunt in ſacris, &c. We will that the mariages of ſuch as be in holy Orders, from this time forward be firme and valid: For in caſe this freedome had beene common before, why did they ſay, Deinceps, from this time forward? Thus he. Wherein I would his ſuperiours did but ſee how kindly he buffets himſelfe. For if this be the force of Deinceps or A modo, I thus argue againſt him; He hath pleaded before, that neither this nor any other Church euer allowed, nor euer practiſed the celebration of mariage after Ordination; Now, if hee turne to the ſixth Canon of this Councell of Conſtantinople, hee ſhall finde Decernimus vt nulli deinceps hypodiacono, &c. Wee decree that from hence forward no Sub-Deacon, Deacon, or Prieſt may marry after his Ordination; Therefore by the force of his inference before this time (for almoſt ſeuen hundred yeeres) this was commonly practiſed. And now to anſwer my Refuters Deinceps: If his wit had beene any way matchable with his malice, he might haue ſeene that this Deinceps had relation to the Roman Church, not to the Greeke; For, (if he know not) this Synod meant to preſcribe Lawes to his Miſtreſſe, and to correct that their iniurious Tradition of reſtraint, and to inlarge this liberty thorow all the Territories of the Vniuerſall Church; For this purpoſe is the Deinceps of the Conſtantinopolitane Fathers, who well knew, how much it needed in the Weſterne Church, which had inthralled their Clergie in the bondage of that vnlawfull prohibition. So as the Refuter, whiles hee playes

Sect. I.

THe Mariage of Eccleſiaſtiques, which had the common allowance of the firſt Times, had in ſome parts but the conniuence of the ſubſequent, and the prohibition of the laſt. Thoſe Churches that were not parties to the faction of Rome, could not but be much moued with ſo peremptory a Decree of a famous Councell, reducing them, in this point, to the exactneſſe of Apoſtolique inſtitution, and profeſſing to rectifie that Romane deuiation; No maruell therefore, if not long after, there enſued a colliſion of oppoſite parts, and much ſcuffling betwixt the abettors of Antichriſtian ſeruitude, and Euangelicall liberty; whom this Hedge-creeper dare terme incontinent Grecians, Schiſmatikes, Heretikes; his Pen is no ſlander: The multitude of his Synods, wherein was ſuch reiteration of the ſame Law, ſhewes the oppoſition which it ſtill found in the Church, and the preuailing vſe of the contrary practice.

The Epiſtle of Pope Gregory the Third, to the Clergie of Bauaria, which giues that diſiunct charge, Of either liuing chaſtely, or marying a Wife whom they may not diuorce, is no where (forſooth) extent, becauſe he findes it not in his Binius, or Baronius; as if no water had gone beſide their Mill; and here I am threatned with the Cornelian Law for forgery; no leſſe crime: To auoid the perill whereof, let my farre ſeene Detector turne to the Bauarian Annals of * Auentine, in the third Booke, there he ſhall finde it; An Epiſtle ſent to Viuilus, and the other Clergie of Bauaria, by the hands of Martinian, George, Dorotheus, a Biſhop, Prieſt, Deacon, with this expreſſe diſiunction, Aut caſtè viuat, aut vxorem ducat, &c. That which he brings from the ſucceſſor of this Gregory, Zacharias, ſhewes what his Pope wiſhed, when he had gotten better footing in Germany, but the ſucceſſe makes for vs; for B. Boniface either neuer durſt, or at leaſt neuer did vrge theſe Rules to his Germans. peepe forth before this in other mens bookes. Ywis nothing euer lookt forth of the Preſſe, that eſcaped that bookiſh eye: witneſſe the next paſſage, which if his Superiours could haue had the leiſure to haue viewed, they had bluſhed at their Champion. This charge Refut. p. 245. of Gregory (I ſaid) was according to that rule of Clerkes cited from Iſidore, and renued in the Councell of Mentz; but by our iuggling aduerſaries clipped in the recitall: Here the man cries out, as before of forgery, ſo now of ignorance, telling his Readers, that I haue onely taken this vpon truſt from another mans note-booke. Reader, by this iudge of the ſpirit of my Detractor. It is true; Iſidore wrote no booke of this title: But in the ſecond Booke of his Eccleſiaſticall Offices, he makes the title of his ſecond Chapter, De Regulis Clericorum; Of the Rules of Clerkes. From this Chapter, I cite a confeſſed paſſage, and am thus cenſured; whereas the Councell of Mentz cites it by this very ſtile, Sicut in Regulâ Clericorum dictum eſt, As it is ſaid in the Rule of Clerkes. Is it ſimplicitie that he knowes not this title of Iſidore? or maliciouſneſſe, that he conceales it? One of them is vnauoidable. It is cleere then, to his ſhame (if he haue any) that the teſtimony is aright cited; and is it leſſe cleere that it is maimed, and cut off by the hams Conc. Mogunt. 1. in their Moguntine Councell? Compare the places, the fraud ſhall be manifeſt. That Councell in the tenth Chapter profeſſes to tranſcribe (verbatim) the words of Iſidore in the forecited Tract; and where Iſidore ſaith, Caſtimoniam inuiolati corporis perpetuò conſeruare ſtudeant, aut certè vnius matrimonij vinculo fœderentur; Let them liue chaſte or marry but one: Their good Clerkes haue vtterly left out the latter clauſe, and make Iſidore charge his Clerkes with perpetuall continencie; Let them liue chaſte. He that denies this, let him deny that there is a Sunne in the Heauen, or light in that Sunne; what need I ſay more? Let the bookes ſpeake.

Here my Refuter doth ſo ſhuffle and cut, that any man may ſee he ſpeakes againſt his owne heart; for (to omit his ſtrained miſſe-interpretation of Iſidore, ſince we now contend not of the ſenſe, but of the citation) how poorely doth he ſalue vp the credit Refut. p. 246. & 249. of his Moguntine Fathers, whiles hee ſaith, Iſidore ſpake in generall, the Fathers in that Councell more ſtrictly; when hee that hath but one halfe of an eye may ſee, that both ſpeake in one latitude of the ſame perſons? Thoſe Fathers giuing the ſame title to that Chapter, and profeſſing to follow the Letters and Syllables of Iſidore; both name onely Clericos in that rule, without diſtinction. Away then with this graceleſſe facing of wilfull frauds in your faithleſſe Secretaries, which haue alſo fetcht two Canons out of Carthage to Wormes, and learne to be aſhamed of your groſſe falſifications, and iniurious expurgations; elſe doubtleſſe the World will be aſhamed of you.

SECT. II.

Refut. p. 252. & 281.

I Did but name Huldericus his Epiſtle in mine, as a witneſſe, not as the foundation of my cauſe; my Refuter ſpends but one and thirty whole Pages vpon him: how elſe ſhould he haue made a Volume? In all this what ſayes he? Little in many words; and the ſame words thrice ouer for failing.

And firſt, he wonders at my extreme prodigality of credit, and ſeareedneſſe of conſcience, in citing an Epiſtle ſo conuicted by Bellarmine, Baronius, Eckius, Faber, Fitz-Simons the Ieſuite, and others. Why doth he not wonder that the Moone will keepe her pace in the skie, whiles ſo many Dogs barke at her below? When theſe Proctors of Rome haue ſaid their worſt, there is more true authority in the very face of this Letter, and better Arguments in the body of it, than in an hundred Decretal Epiſtles which he adoreth. Let the World wonder rather at his ſhameleſneſſe, who relating the occaſion of this fable (as he termes it) faines it to be only a Lutheran fiction to couer their inceſtuous mariages, whereas their owne Cardinall Æneas Syluius, almoſt two hundred yeares ago, mentions it, and reports the argument of it; whereas it is yet extant (as Illiricus) in the Libraries of Germany; whereas Hedio found an ancient copy of it in Holland; and our Iohn Bale; Archbiſhop Parker, B. Iewel, Iohn Fox, had a copie of it remarkable able for reuerend Antiquitie, in aged Parchment here in England; which, I hope to haue the meanes to produce. Whereas, laſtly, the very ſtile importeth age. As well may he queſtion all the Records of their Vatican, all report of Hiſtories, all Hiſtories of Times: He that would doubt whether ſuch an Epiſtle were written, may as well doubt whether Pope Zachary wrote to B. Boniface in Germany a direction when to eat bacon: may doubt whether Paul the fiſt wrote to his Engliſh Catholikes to perſwade them not to ſweare they would be good ſubiects: may doubt whether Spider-catcher, corner-creeper C. E. Pſeudo-Catholike Prieſt, wrote a ſcurrilous Letter of aboue two quire of paper, in a twelue-yeeres anſwer to three leaues of I. H. It is not more ſure that there is a Rome, or that Gregory and Nicolas ſate there, than that ſuch an Epiſtle was written thither aboue ſeuen hundred yeeres agoe. It was extant of old, before euer thoſe Lutheran quarrels were hatched. Let him therefore goe fiſh for Frogs in the Pond of his Gregory; whiles he deriues thence the vaine pleas of improbabilitie. If there were differences in relating the circumſtances of that ſtory (as I know none) muſt it needs thereupon be falſe? Which of their Hiſtories is not lyable to variety of report? To begin with the firſt: The ſucceſſion of Linus, and Cletus, and Clemens, is diuerſly reported; is there no truth in it? To end with the laſt: The title of Paul the fiſt to the chaire of Peter in the lawfulneſſe of his election, is diuerſly reported; hath hee therefore no true claime to his ſeat? But who euer placed Gregories pond in Sicily? This is one of the fittens of his Fitz-Simons. If other authors haue mentioned this narration, then all the ſtrength of this Hiſtory lyeth not on Hulderick; If none beſides him, his words vary not; Theſe are but trickes to out-face truth.

The Epiſtle, in ſpight of contradiction, is ſo ancient; and what care wee then for names? Whether it were Saint Vdalricke, or Hulderick, or Voluſianus, wee labour not much. Let it be the taske of idle Criticks to diſpute who was Hecuba's mother, and what was her age; No leſſe vaine is my Refuter, that ſpends many waſte words about his Saint Vdalricke, in ſhewing the difference of time, betwixt him, and Pope Nicolas; the one dying, Anno 869. the other being borne, 890. and prouing out of his obſcure Sorboniſt Monchiacenus, that there were fiue Biſhops of Auſpurge, betwixt the times of the one, and the other: whereby a ſimple Reader might eaſily be deluded, and drawne to thinke, there is nothing but impoſſibility and vntruth in our report: whereas there is nothing in all this peremptory and colourable flouriſh of his, but meere cogging or miſpriſion: For both Illyricus apart, and the Centuriſts, and Chemnitius (all Germanes that ſhould be beſt acquainted with the ſtate of their owne) haue long ſince told him, that his Saint Vdalrick was not the man, whom they held the Author of this Epiſtle, but, Hulderick, another, not much different in name, but differing in time, aboue ſeuentie yeares; Ne nominis æquiuocatio lectorem turbet, and leſt the equiuocation of the name (ſaith Chemnitius) ſhould trouble the Reader; There is another Vdalrick of Augusta, whom Auentine writes to haue died Anno 973. But this Hulderick, Æneas Syluius writes to haue died, Anno 900. and in the yeare of his age 83. Thus he: from the authoritie of two their famouſeſt Hiſtorians: from whoſe account Onuphrius differs not much: But (that my Refuter may hereafter ſaue the labour of ſcanning their diſcordant Computations) whether it were either, or neither of them, it is not worth to vs one haire of his crowne: ſince with our faithfull and learned Fox, we rather from the authority of ancient Engliſh Copies, aſcribe it to Voluſianus, whoſe ſecond Epiſtle alſo in the ſame ſtile, to the ſame purpoſe, is extant from the ſame Records, not inferiour to the former: What matters it for the name, when it appeares that the Epiſtle it ſelfe is truly ancient, ponderous, reuerend, Theologicall, conuictiue: and ſuch as the beſt Romanes heads cannot after ſeuen hundred yeares ſhape a iuſt anſwer vnto? Euen in ſome Canonicall Bookes, though there be difference in the names of the Pen-men, there is full aſſent to to their diuine authoritie: And why is it not ſo in humane? Thus then we haue eaſily blowne away theſe light bubbles of Diſcourſe, which our Aduerſarie hath raiſed out of the Nut-ſhell of his computation; from the Age, Perſon, Writings, of his Saint Vdalricke; and returne his impuram neſcio cuius nebulonis Epiſtolam; with his ferrei oris, and plumbei cordis, backe whence it came; to the Writer cited by my Aduerſarie, not named: But by better due to the next hand; whereto I am no whit beholding for leauing it vn-engliſhed: In that C.E. ſpared not me but himſelfe: who is neſcio quis, but he that leapeth into the Preſſe without a name? Who Nebulo, rather than he that maſketh and marcheth ſub nebulâ, hoping to paſſe in the conflict for a doughtie Knight or Champion Sconoſciuto, not daring to lift vp his Beuer? Who writes impuram Epiſtolam, but he that hath ſcribbled a Voluminous Epiſtle, to cry downe pure and Honourable Mariage, for the inhauncing of impure Celibate? not that, in Theſi, Celibate is impure, but in Hypotheſi, theirs, forced and hypocriticall.

SECT. III.

As for the difference that he findes in our number of Pope Nicolas, whether firſt, or ſecond, or third, we may thanke his Gratian; whoſe faſhion it is (as likewiſe Sigeberts) to name the Popes without the note of their number; we are ſure it was not Nicolas Nemo, which wrote to Odo, Biſhop of Vienna, reprouing him for giuing leaue to Aluericus a Deacon to marry: thereupon ſending his contrary Decree to the Germane Churches; which it ſeemes, (or the like impoſition) gaue occaſion to this noble Epiſtle.

But can there be any Game amongſt our Engliſh Popiſh Pamphleters, where the Fox is not in chaſe? Where is the ſhame of this Romane Prieſt, whiles hee ſo manifeſtly belyes our holy, reuerend, worthy Maſter Fox, whom this Scoganly Pen dare ſay playes the Gooſe in the inconſtancie of his Relation of this Nicolas, firſt reporting him the firſt, then the ſecond; when it is moſt manifeſt in the during Monuments of that induſtrious and excellent Author, that he ſtill inſiſts vpon Nicolas the ſecond; reiecting by many Arguments, the opinion of them which haue referred it to the firſt? Such truth there is in ſhorne crownes.

Iohn Huſſe was a Gooſe by name, and now Iohn Fox is a Gooſe by reproch; Two ſuch Geeſe are more worth than all the fawning Curres of the Romane Capitoll.

And how much more wit than fidelitie is there in my Detector, whiles he would proue that Pope Gregory had then no pond; becauſe there is now no ponds at Rome? As if Rome were now in any thing as it was; as if twelue hundred yeeres had made no alteration; As if the ſtreets of Troy were not now Champaine; As if his Lipſius could now finde Rome in Rome: As if laſtly, that man were vncapable of a large pond, whoſe Sea is vniuerſall.

Nunc ſeges eſt vbi Troia fuit.

As for the number of childrens heads, I ſay no more for it than he can againſt it; this Hiſtory ſhall be more worth to vs than his deniall; But this I dare ſay, that I know perſons both of credit and honour, that ſaw betwixt fifty and threeſcore, caſt vp out of the little Mote of an Abbey where I now liue: Let who liſt caſt vp the proportion.

Vid. quæ ſupra. l.1.S.12. Hiſtor. Radulphi Bourn, &c.

After the refuſall of this worthy Epiſtle, according to his faſhion he tries to diſgrace it with vs; telling vs, that therein the Biſhop of Rome is ſtiled Supreme Head and Gouernour of the whole Church. If it were thus, ſo much more powerfull is the Teſtimony againſt them, by how much more the witneſſe was theirs. There muſt needs be much cauſe, when he that ſo humbly ouer-titles the perſon, reſiſts the Doctrine ſo vehemently. But the truth is, that the Epiſtle ſtiles Pope Nicolas no otherwiſe in the ſuperſcription, than Sanctæ Eccleſiæ Romanæ prouiſorem: Ouer-ſeer of the holy Romane Church. And in the body of the letter, Summæ ſedis Pontificem; Biſhop of the chiefe See; to whom the examination of the common affaires of the Church doth appertaine; which is far other, than in the now Romane ſenſe, the Supreme Head of the Church. Secondly, he tels vs that this Epiſtle both grants and allowes a Vow of Continency: Nullum excipit niſi profeſſorum continentiæ; wherein we are no other than friends, we yeeld no leſſe; where there is good euidence of the gift and calling of God. But whiles our Voluſian grants the profeſſor of continency bound, and pleads the Clergy to be free, how plainly doth he ſhew vs that there was no ſuch Vow, then required of, no ſuch made by the Clergie:

He excepts none, but a profeſſor of Continence.

But what needs the man to be ſo furiouſly angry with the good old Epiſtler, for ſaying, that the Apoſtles charge (Let euery one haue his own Wife) is generall to all; reaching to the Clergie as well as the Laity? excepting none but thoſe which haue the gift of Continency. What Logick, (the want whereof he ſometimes cauſleſly obiecteth of me) euer taught him that ἕκαστος, vnuſquiſque was any other than vniuerſall? Or what other ſenſe can be put vpon the words of the Apoſtle? Could I as truly vpbraid Sir Refuter with reading the Logick Leſſon, as he doth me with the Rhetorick, ſurely I ſhould not now be put to paines to teach this Nouice, that ἕκαστος (vnuſquiſque) is a terme of collectiue vniuerſalitie, and muſt be extended to all, where kinde is excepted tacitely, ex natura rei, as this caſe muſt needs be acknowledged to be; fore-prizing none but ſuch as haue the gift of Continencie; which S. Paul toucheth vpon in that Chapter.

Iudge then, Reader, whether the Catholike Biſhop that wrote this, or the Miſ-Catholike Maſſe-Prieſt that reproues it, be more worthy of Bedleem.

LAſtly yet, as if in the looſe he would ſhake hands and be friends with him, whom he had ſo long defied; he thus cloſes vp: Then if Prieſts haue this gift, and haue prefixed this courſe to themſelues in the Lord, they ſhall not need to marry. And this is the caſe of all Clergy-men who vow Chaſtitie. Thus he. Beleeue him, Readers, if ye can: All the Romiſh Clergie, all Votaries haue the gift of Continencie; Witneſſe our foreſaid Voluſianus in the ſame Period; Multos eiuſdem conſilij aſſentatores hominibus non Deo pro falsâ ſpecie continentiæ placere volentes, grauiora vides committere, patrum ſcilicet vxores ſubagitare, maſculorum ac pecudum amplexus non abhorrere. I will not Engliſh it for ſhame: Would God the World did not too well finde ſtill theſe proofes of Romiſh Chaſtitie.

Refut.p.274.

But as one that thinkes no man can be his friend, except alſo he be our enemy; like a true Make-bate, he will tell vs a tale in our eare, that ſhall ſet a perpetuall iarre betwixt vs and our Hulderick. Iwis, ſayes my Refuter, your Vdalricke is not the man you take him for; For thus he there writes to the Pope, Wherefore, O reuerend Father, it ſhall be your part to cauſe and ouer-ſee, that whoſoeuer either with hand or mouth hath made a Vow of Continencie (as all Clergy men in holy Orders haue) and afterwards would forſake the ſame, ſhould be either compelled to keepe his Vow, or elſe by lawfull authoritie ſhould be depoſed from his order. So he. But we are not ſo light of beleefe to loſe a friend thus eaſily. Know then, Reader, that the * Parentheſis (which is the harſheſt peece of this clauſe) is foiſted into the Text, and forged by this Cauiller; the quite contrary whereof is affirmed in the former Period of our Vdalrick, where thus he writes: Non parùm quippe, &c. From this holy diſcretion thou haſt not a little ſwarued, when as thou wouldeſt haue thoſe Clergie men, whom thou oughteſt only to aduiſe to Abſtinence from Mariage, compelled vnto it by a certaine imperious violence; For is not this iuſtly in the iudgement of all wiſe men to be accounted violence, when as againſt the Euangelicall Inſtitution, and the charge of the Holy Ghoſt, any man is conſtrained to the execution of priuate Decrees? The Lord in the old Law appointed Mariage to his Prieſt which he is neuer read afterwards to haue forbidden; So he. Let my Refuter then reconcile this falſe Parentheſis with the true Text, (which hee can neuer doe, ſince it directly croſſeth the whole ſcope of Huldericks Epiſtle) and then he ſhall ſee vs eaſily reconcile Huldericks propoſition with ours.

* (As all Clergie men in holy Orders haue.)

But, not ſo long to delay my Readers ſatisfaction; the truth is; The Author pleads for an indifferent immunitie of Clergie men from the neceſſitie of this Vow, elſe the Epiſtle were contradictorie to it ſelfe: for if he ſuppoſe that all the Clergie had vowed, and all that had vowed ſhould be compelled to keepe their Vow, how could he plead that the Clergie ſhould not be compelled to Continence? The driſt of Vdalricke or Voluſian, then, is, that it may be equally lawfull, equally free for Prieſts either to vow,

hall, J.

Præfixit hoc ſibi in Domino, ibid.

or not to vow continency; which granted, if any one hauing liberty not to haue vowed, or obſerued it, ſhall notwithſtanding prefix this courſe to himſelfe in the Lord, out of a long-ſetled experience and aſſurance of this calling and gift of God, and now, when he hath thus ingaged himſelfe to the expectation of the Church, voluerit apoſtare, ſhall be froward wantonly to abandon this vow, willingly neglecting all good meanes for the continued obſeruation thereof, ſuch a one ſhall be liable either to compulſion, or depoſition; As now, if any one of ours ſhould in the midſt of freedome binde himſelfe by a voluntary vow, it were pitie and ſhame that he ſhould play faſt and looſe at pleaſure with impunitie.

What Wooll then is here worthy of this crie? Or wherein hath our Author offended vs? whiles we neither make this vow, nor can therefore euer breake it, nor euer allowed the breakers of ſo made vowes, guiltleſſe?

Refut. p. 276.

One quarrell yet he cannot remit to Maſter Fox and me; that for this fore-named Hulderick, we cite Æneas Siluius in his Germania; a booke that neuer was.

This great helluo librorum hath wearied all Libraries, and conſulted with his Trjtemius and Poſſenine, neither of them mention any ſuch worke of Æneas Siluius; whereas, if he had but taken the booke next the doore, Geſners Bibliotheca, he had found (if at leaſt he could haue ſeene the Wood for Trees) Siluius his Germania; which (for failing) he might haue heard of in a double Edition; The one larger, the other more contracted. The firſt; Geſner expreſſes thus, Extat eiuſdem Germanja, quâ continentur grauamina nationis Germanicæ, & confutatio eorundem, cum replicâ. The latter is, Æneæ Sylujj Germania excerpta, &c. The Germania of Æneas Syluius gathered out of that booke, wherein the grieuances of the Germane nation obiected to the See of Rome, by Martine Mere a Lawyer of Mentz, are reſelled.

There is extant the ſame Authors Germania wherein are contained the grieuances of the German nation, and a confutation of the ſame, with a reply.

See now, Reader, whether my Refuter can bluſh. In the one of theſe, which (after deniall) he confeſſeth to haue ſeene, he findes ſomewhat that likes him not. Syluius ſpeaking of Auſpurge, Sanctus Vdalricus huic præſidet (ſaith he) qui Papam arguit de Concubinis; Vdalrick is the Saint of that Citie, who reproued the Pope concerning Concubines. The bone lyes before him, let him picke out the marrow as he can; which becauſe he findes hard to breake, he caſts it from him in a chafe, and tells vs for the Laſt refuge; He hath ſeene a printed Copie, and two manuſcripts without theſe words. In verbo Sacerdotis. And ſo iuſt haue we found him of his word, all this while, that hee were hard-hearted that would not beleeue him.

SECT. V.

Refut. p. 280.

BVt ſtill I am taken tardie in my time, or rather doe ouer-take. I reckon this Libertie to haue continued in Germany after Huldericke, for ſome two hundred yeares; Whereas betwixt Saint Vdalricke and Gregory the ſeuenth, were but a hundred and twelue yeeres.

But ſtill his Saint deceiues him, and (if I ſhould haue erred) his owne Chronologers ſhould haue deceiued me. For his Onuphrius in his Eccleſiaſticall Chronicle, makes our Huldericke Biſhop of Auſpurge in the beginning of Pope Nicolas, An. 859. And his Sigebert, and other Chroniclers caſt Gregory the ſeuenth his oppoſition to Prieſts mariage, vpon the yeare 1074. Where now is my errour? Where is my ouer-reaching? Count it, Reader, and ſee whether I cannot make my word good, and giue him fifteene yeares in to the bargaine: and now iudge whether of vs may ſay, Non ſat commodè diuiſa ſunt temporibus tibi, Daue, hæc; and whether of vs it is, from whom nothing commeth, ſauouring of any learning or truth: and if thou thinkſt it fit, bluſh for him.

Refut. p. 281.

The like (I feare) willing errour vpon the ſame ground is the miſ-calculation of the times of Leo the ninth, and Nicolas the ſecond, betwixt whoſe times, and Vdalricke, he makes but fiftie yeares; abating one other halfe of the hundred, to expoſe mee to the laughter of his credulous Clients, which may now ſay, Loe the man which in a reckoning of 200. yeares did out-laſh but 150. When as both their Sigebert and Hermannus

Contractus, (and who not?) make Leo the ninth, Pope, An. 1049, and Nicholas the ſecond ſome ten yeares after him; The very elder whereof, if we reckon to Huldericke, *An.*856, will be in no leſſe then 196. yeares diſtance. The man wanted either counters, or wit, or honeſty; Truth I am ſure he wants.

Sect. VI.

Antichriſt, which was conceiued in the Primitiue times, ſaw the light in Boniface the third, and was growne to his ſtature and ἀκμὴν in Gregory the ſeuenth. So as I might well ſay, that the body of Antichriſtianiſme, together with the prohibition of mariage, began to be compleat in that Hildebrand. The times accord better than our Papiſts would haue them. After a thouſand yeares Satan was looſed: at that very time did this Hildebrand (otherwiſe Gregory) by the inſtigation of the Deuill (as himſelfe confeſſed at his death (witneſſe Cardinall Benno and Sigebert) trouble the Church; belike with the violent obtruſion of this doctrine of Deuils (prohibition of mariage) and inſolent detruſion of imperiall authority. It is then but a Sardonian laughter that my Refuter takes vp at our compleat Antichriſt; whoſe ſupparaſitation may one day coſt him teares and gnaſhing.

Refut.p.283.

But (good God!) what Saints hath the Romane Church? Hildebrand is one of their Calender; the Legend of whoſe holineſſe ſhall anon make any man ſaue C. E. aſhamed.

Since it will be no better; Pergementiri; I am now charged with a faire contradiction, whiles I am accuſed to ſay, That the liberty of Prieſts mariages was vniuerſall for a thouſand yeares, and yet had before granted, that in Steuen the ſecond his time (which was two hundred and forty yeares before) the Weſterne Clergy was reſtrained. In all which hee perſwades his friends that I would faine lye groſſely, if my memory would let mee. Reader, doe but reuiew my words. Theſe they are: After him (that is, Huldericke) ſo ſtrongly did he plead and ſo happily, that for two hundred yeares more, this freedome ſtill bleſſed thoſe parts. I ſpeake of Germany, he of Italy: I ſpeake of thoſe parts, he of all. Is not this a Logicall and faithfull refutation? Yet more, this bold and falſe hand dares write, that Leo the ninth, and Nicholas the ſecond, neuer medled with the prohibition of theſe mariages; Onely the one made a decree againſt Harlots, the other againſt Concubines: neither of which (he hopes) we will apply to our ſelues. We are ſo vſed to theſe impudent aſſertions, that now we ceaſe to wonder at them. Let him tell mee what was that Epiſtle which Leo the ninth wrote to Peter the Hermite? Whoſe very title is Incontinentiam Clericorum deteſtatur, & puniendam deſcribit. The Epiſtle is bitter, like my Libellers. And leſt he ſhould ſay we guiltily take to our ſelues the imputation of Incontinencie, it is bent againſt quadrimodam carnalis contagionis pollutionem: a foure-fold pollution of Clergy-men: Whereof one he will not ſure deny to be mariage.

As for his Nicholas the ſecond; good man, he did nothing neither: Onely hee ſtayned women as honeſt as himſelfe, with the name of Concubines, and men more holy than himſelfe, with the name of Nicolaitans, (whom he muſt needs loue for the names ſake) and an eſtate of life, as holy as his owne, with the name of Filthy copulation. Let his Popes ſhamefull decrees, and his ſhameleſſe lyes, goe both together for company whence they came.

SECT. VII.

YEt ſtill the further we goe, the worſe. My Refuter ſurpaſſes himſelfe in the prizes that he playes for his Pope Gregory the ſeuenth, who firſt (hee ſaith) did not ruine this liberty of mariages: Let Vincentius, and Radulphus de Diceto and Sigebert ſpeake for vs both; [b] Vxoratos Sacerdotes à diuino, &c. Hee remoued maried Prieſts from their function, and forbade the people to heare their Maſſes; a new example, and as many thought inconſiderately preiudiciall, againſt the iudgement of the holy Fathers, &c. But hee fully preuailed not (ſaith my Refuter,) What thanke is that to him? hee did his beſt, and kindled thoſe coales that could neuer be quenched. Hee ledde the way to his Vrban the ſecond, and Paſchal the ſecond. They followed him, and preuailed; The broyles were his, if not the victory. Gratum opus ſcortatoribus (ſaith Auentine.) Auentine (ſaith my Refuter) a late Goſpelling brother. For vs, we are glad of the fraternity of ſo worthy an Author, whom Beatus Rhenanus gratulates to his Germany, and cals [c] Eruditiſſimum Auentinum, and [d] Variarum cognitione diſciplinarum præſtantem; and Eraſmus, [e] Hominem ſtudio indefatigabili, ac reconditæ lectionis. Laſtly, whom his iuſt Epitaph ſtiles, [f] Rerum antiquarum indagatorem ſagaciſſimum: But the truth is; no man by his Hiſtorie can tell his Religion: The Canons of Auguſta praiſe him for the light hee giues to the inſtitutions of their Monaſteries; And when he ſpeakes of the Shrines of Berg, Valentia, and Halle, I am ſure he mentions them with too Popiſh deuotion; and when of Io. Huſſe and Ierome of Prage, he taxes them with crimen irreligioſitatis; Yet this man (borne Anno 1466.) when he but ſpeakes a famous truth of Hildebrand, and the German Clergie, he is become a late Goſpelling brother. Still let vs haue Brethren that care more for their honeſty, than their faction.

[g] Sigebert himſelfe (their owne Monk) freely acknowledges it. Iohn Haywood our old Epigrammatiſt told Queene Mary, her Clergie was ſawcy; if they had not Wiues they would haue Lemans. Where there is not the gift of holy continency, how could it be otherwiſe? Where the water is dammed vp, and yet the ſtreame runnes full, how can it chooſe but riſe ouer the bankes? There is purity therefore out of Wedlocke, but not out of Continence. And what needed my detector to trauell ſo farre as England, for an example of incontinencie in a King Henry, or any wife of his, whether falſely or truly obiected, when he might haue looked neere the centre of their Church, and haue found his owne Pope Iohn (in the very time now queſtioned for his prohibition) [h] killed by the Deuill in the act of adultery with anothers mans wife? HIldebrand (as I learned of Auentine) is as much as Titio amoris. But how little hee differed in name or nature from Hellebrand, Titio infernalis (as Chemnitius cals him) his Hiſtory ſhewes too well. And is it poſſible that any man ſhould riſe vp after ſo many hundred yeares, to Canonize Saint Hildebrand, euen in that for which hee condemned himſelfe? My Reader muſt know the man a little from the witneſſe of his owne Conclaue, his Cardinall Benno, Arch-prieſt of the Romane Church, then liuing: Others, beſides, tell of his beginnings in wicked Necromancie, and murderous vnderminings, and tyrannicall ſwaying of the Keyes, ere he had them: Benno tels how hee got them, how he vſed them gotten: Hee got them by fraud, money, violence; vſed them with tyranny. There was a knot, and a ſucceſſion of Necromancers in thoſe dayes. Gerbertus, which was Sylueſter the ſecond, was the Maſter of the Schoole: His chiefe Schollers in the Blacke Art, were Theophylactus (afterwards changed into Pope Benedict) and Laurentius, and Gratianus. Theſe were the Tutors of Hildebrands younger times, of whom he learned both Magicke and Policie. It is a world to ſee what worke theſe Magicians made (like the ill ſpirits they raiſed) in Church and Commonwealth; oppoſing Emperours, ſetting vp what Popes they pleaſed, poiſoning whom they diſliked: at laſt it came to Hildebrands turne to take the Chaire: [i] To which purpoſe he ſeparated firſt the Biſhops from the Cardinals auerſe from him: when hee had done, hee compelled them by terrour and force to ſweare vnto his part; which done, he was elected in ſpight of the Canons, only by Lay-perſons, by Souldiers; he expelled the Cardinals, raſhly excommunicated the Emperour, of his owne head, without any Canonicall accuſation, without ſubſcription of any Cardinall; hired a bloudie Villaine to murder the Emperour; conſulted with the Oracle of his breaden God, which becauſe it anſwered not, he caſt it into the fire; he exerciſed moſt horrible cruelties vpon many, hanging vp men at his pleaſure vnconuicted; in a word, quantis hæreſibus mundum corruperit, &c? ſaith Benno in his concluſion, His hereſies, his periuries, can ſcarce be deſcribed by many Pens; Clamat tamen altiùs, &c. But the Chriſtian bloud ſhed by his inſtigation and command, (ſaith he) cries yet louder to God; yea, the bloud of the Church, which the ſword of his tongue in a miſerable prodition hath ſhed, cries out againſt him; for which things, the Church did moſt iuſtly depart from all communion with him. Thus Benno; who yet (to make amends) [k] tells vs, that Hildebrand vpon his death-bed repented of theſe lewd courſes, and ſent to the Emperour and the Church to crie them mercie: confeſſing (as Sigebert reports) that he had by the perſwaſion of the Deuill raiſed theſe wicked tumults.

Yet this is the man whom Bellarmine will iuſtifie by ſeuen and twenty Authors, and C.E. can adde two more to the heape; yea, in thoſe very things for which he condemned himſelfe.

Reader, if one of his euill ſpirits ſhould haue ſtept into Peters chaire, doe yee thinke he could haue wanted Proctors? But how good an account we were like to haue of ſeuen and twenty Authors (if it would requite the coſt to examine them) appeares, in that [l] Lambertus Schaſnaburgenſis (which is cited for the man that magnifies the miracles of this Gregory) ſayes only this one word of him, that he wrought many prodigies. And what prodigies theſe were, Benno the Cardinall tells vs, that he raiſed Deuils familiarly; that he ſhaked ſparkes of fire out of his ſleeue by his Magicke. A tricke that well beſeemed an Hellebrand, who ſet all the world on fire by his wicked impetuoſitie. We will not enuie Rome this Saint, let them enioy him, let them celebrate him, and crie downe Henry the Emperour, and all that oppoſed him. Still may ſuch as theſe be the Tutelar gods of that holy Citie; For vs, it is comfort enough to vs, that our mariages had ſuch a perſecutor.

That the Churches did hereupon ring of him for Antichriſt, Auentine is my Author: Pro concione, &c. In their Sermons (ſaith he) they did curſe Hildebrand, they cried out on him as a man tranſported with hatred and ambition, Antichriſtum eſſe prædicant, They declared him to be Antichriſt; They ſaid that vnder the colourable title of Chriſt, he did the ſeruice of Antichriſt; That he ſits in Babylon in the Temple of God, and is aduanced aboue all that is called God. So he. And little better is that which his [m] Schaſnaburgenſis (ſo much extolled by C.E.) recordeth: Aduerſus hoc decretum infremuit tota factio Clericorum, &c. Againſt this Decree (ſaith he) all the whole faction of Clergy-men fretted and mutined; accuſing him as an Heretike, and a man of peruerſe opinion, who forgetting the word of Chriſt, which ſaid All men cannot receiue this, did by a violent exaction compell men to liue in the faſhion of Angells.

To which if I ſhould adde the ſentence of the Synod of Wormes, and that of Brixia, my Reader would eaſily ſee, that it is not the applauſe of ſome deuoted Pen, that can free him from theſe foule imputations of deſerued infamie.

That vntruth then cleared, another belike hangs vpon the ſcore; My refuter charges me with falſhood, in ſaying, That Gregory the ſeuenth was depoſed by the French and German Biſhops. Onely the Germans (hee ſaith) were Actors in that Tragedie. But if not at

FRom foraine parts, I returne at laſt to our owne; ſo I feare hath C. E. done long ſince; lurking ſome-where in England for no good. The Fugitiues loue not home more, than their home hath cauſe to hate them. His cauils of the wondrous contradiction betwixt my Margin and my Text, are too childiſh to be honoured with an anſwer. My Text was; The bickerings of our Engliſh Clergie with their Dunſtans, about this time are memorable. My Margine cites Henry of Huntingdon, affirming Anſelme to be the firſt that forbade Mariage : Betwixt theſe two, ſaith my Refuter, was an hundred yeares difference. I grant it: But (had my words beene thus) if my Detector were not diſpoſed to ſeeke a knot in a Ruſh, hee had eaſily noted that in a generall ſuruay of all Ages, the phraſe (About that time) admits much latitude, and will eaſily ſtretch without any ſtraine to one whole Century of yeeres. Had the Quotation beene as he pleadeth, this anſwer were ſufficient. But my words need no ſuch reconciliation; I ſtand to the cenſure, and diſclaime the mercy of any Reader : For that citation of Anſelme hath plaine reference to the following words, Our Hiſtories teſtifie how late, how repiningly our Clergie ſtooped vnder this yoke : it is for this that my Margine points to Henry Huntingdon, and Fabian, reporting Anſelme the firſt man that prohibited theſe mariages. What contradiction now can his acuteneſſe detect in theſe two? The Engliſh Clergie had bickerings with their Dunſtans; and ſtooped late and repiningly to this yoke vnder Anſelme. See, Reader, and admire the equall Truth and Logicke of a Catholike Prieſt, and iudge how well he beſtoweth his Pages.

The Church wherein I am now intereſſed, and wherein I doe (by the prouidence of God, and the bounty of my gratious Maſter) ſucceed their Saint Oſwalds Priors, yeelds me ſufficient records hereof; which becauſe they are both worthy of publike light, and giue no ſmall light to the buſineſſe in hand, I haue thought good here to inſert.

Then followes the Charter of King Edgar founding the Monkes with this Title, Carta Regis Eadgari, de Oſwaldeſlaw.

In the end dated thus, Facta ſunt hæc Anno Dominicæ Natiuitatis D. CCCC. LXIIII. Indictione VIII. Regni Eadgari Anglorũ Regis, 6. in Regia vrbe quæ ab incolis Glounceaſtre nominatur, in Natale Domini. In Engliſh thus.

BY the bountifull mercy of Almighty God, which is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, I Edgar King of England; and of all the Kings of the Ilands of the Ocean lying about Brittaine, and of all the Nations that are included within it, Emperour and Lord; doe giue thankes to Almighty God my King, which hath inlarged my Empire, and exalted it aboue the Kingdome of my Fathers.——

Wherefore I alſo hauing deuoted my ſelfe to exalt the glory and praiſe of Chriſt in my Kingdome, and to inlarge his ſeruice, haue intended, and by my faithfull Wellwillers Dunſtan Archbiſhop, Athelwold and Oſwald Biſhops, (whom I haue choſen for my ſpirituall Fathers, and Counſellors) I haue for the greateſt part already performed what I intended, &c.——

And by the diligent indeuours of my fore-ſaid Helpers, I haue now conſtituted and made ſeuen and forty Monaſteries with Monkes and Nunnes; and if Chriſt ſhall giue me to liue ſo long, I haue decreed to draw forth the Oblation of this my deuout Munificence vnto God, to the full number of fifty, which is the number of my remiſſion. * Whereupon, now for the preſent, I doe by my Royall Authoritie confirme to perſons of Monaſticall Religion, and by the conſent and aſtipulation of my Princes and Peeres, doe eſtabliſh and conſigne to them, that Monaſterie which the foreſaid reuerend Biſhop Oſwald, (to the honour of the Bleſſed Mother of God) hath amplified in the Epiſcopall See of Wereceaſtre, and expelling the wanton and filthy laciuiouſneſſe of Clerkes, hath, by my conſent and fauour, beſtowed it vpon the religious ſeruants of God, the Monkes; ſo as from henceforth it ſhall not bee lawfull for the ſaid Clerkes, to challenge any thing therein, as thoſe which haue rather choſen (with the danger of their Order, and the loſſe of their Eccleſiaſticall * Benefice) to ſticke vnto their wiues, then chaſtely and canonically to ſerue God. And therefore all that euer they poſſeſſed of the ſaid Church, whether Eccleſiaſticall or Secular, moueable, or vnmoueable, together with the Church it ſelfe, I doe from this day forward for euer, giue and conſigne to the ſaid Monkes, to bee poſſeſſed of them in the right of my Royall Munificence; ſo firmely, that it ſhall not bee lawfull for any Prince or any Biſhop ſucceeding to ſubtract ought from them, or to withdraw any of the premiſſes from their power, and to deliuer it backe againe to the right and poſſeſſion of Clerkes, ſo long as the Chriſtian Faith ſhall remaine in England, &c.——

* So as it appeares, this number was ſet to King Edgar by Dunſtan for his penance

* That is, their Prebend.

Facta ſunt hæc, &c. Theſe things were done in the yeare of Chriſts Natiuitie, D.CCCC.LXIIII. Indiction VIII. In the ſixt yeare of the Raigne of Edgar King of England; in the Royall Citie, which by the Inhabitants is named Glouceaſtre, in the Feaſt of the Natiuity of our Lord, &c.——

That Dunſtan did this, none euer doubted; but withall it is conſiderable, who himſelfe was; an Abbot; and therefore partiall to the Cloyſters; and who put him into this Commiſſion; Pope Iohn the thirteenth: a Monſter of men, yea, of Popes; one who (as was articled againſt him in a generall Counſell) had committed Inceſt with two of his owne ſiſters, who called to the Deuill for his helpe at Dice; who defloured Virgins, who lay with Stephana his Fathers Concubine, who dranke to the Deuill, beſides many other horrible criminations; A man fit to ſet a Saint on worke againſt lawfull Mariages. And thirdly, what the ſtate of the Times were, wherein libertie was degenerate into ſtrange licentiouſneſſe; Euen change of Wiues (if we may beleeue Hiſtories) was then no wonder; For the correcting whereof, the Reformers (according to the Philoſophers aduice) laboured towards the other extreame; as thoſe which to ſtraighten a ſticke, bow it as much the contrary way. And laſtly, how farre this act and endeuour extended: for Dunſtan ſought not to thruſt maried men out of the Clergie, but to thruſt * maried Clergie-men out of the Cathedrall Churches, which required a quotidian attendance, which is euident both by the ſentence of Dunſtan (Aut Canonicè viuendum, aut ab Eccleſia exeundum) either that they muſt liue Canonically, or get out of the Church; that is, ex Eccleſiis maioribus, as Hiſtorians relate it; And by the ſentence of the Rood for Dunſtan: Mutaretis non benè: How much difference there was in theſe two, appeares in the Decree of Biſhop Lanfranc, Anſelm's Predeceſſor, which tolerating maried Seculars, driues directly againſt maried Canons. Little needed my Refuter then (but that he muſt haue ſomething to ſay) to fall vpon our right Reuerend and Learned Biſhop of Hereford (whoſe worthy labours haue iuſtly indeared him to all Poſterity) for that true compariſon he makes betwixt theſe three Saints of theirs, and Anſelme: They by action, he by Synodicall Decree perſecuted the Clergy: They bent their indeuours againſt Cathedrall Clerkes, hee againſt Prieſts; Their proiect was particular, his vniuerſall.

* Expulit malos Præsbyteres, introduxit peiores Monachos. Polyd. From the greater Churches.

That a peremptory ſentence paſſed generally againſt the Mariage of Eccleſiaſtiques in a publike Synod vnder Dunſtan, he refers vs to Binius, which at randome talkes of Concilium Anglicanum: without all particulars of place, or perſons, and refers vs to Surius, as if he had bidden vs aske his Fellow if hee lye: Why did hee not ſend vs to Father Parſons, or his Gabriel Gifford? Sure, it was in ſome obſcure hole of the Peake, or ſome blinde Dormitorie of a Couent; neither can wee ſay of it with the Apoſtle, Theſe things were not done in a Corner; The Canons, whereto the fore-alledged Charter, and the ſentence of Dunſtan haue reference, were no other than Romiſh, which theſe Monkiſh Prelates had perſwaded King Edgar to receiue, and in part to vrge vpon his maried prebendaries. The ſucceſſe of his Synode at Reading, or Wincheſter hee knowes well enough: And is hee aſhamed of the miraculous ſentence of his Holy-Rood (which Iornalenſis reports) who there openly ſpake for the Monks againſt the Clergie? Abſit vt hoc fiat; that he paſſes ouer to that of Calne, where the falling of an ouer-charged floore, cruſhed the Mariage of Clergy-men. Idle Monks who for their owne turne ſet ſuch a ſuperſtitious gloſſe vpon that accident, which (as * Henry Huntingdon more probably interprets it) was Signum excelſi Dei, quod proditione & interfectione Regis ſui ab amore Dei caſuri eſſent, & à diuerſis gentibus digna contritione centerendi: A ſigne from the High God, that by their Treaſon and Murder of their King (who was ſlaine in the yeare after) they ſhould fall from the fauour of God, and bee worthily cruſhed by other Nations. Thus he. Such was the euent; For the conſtruction of it the Reader may chuſe, whether he will beleeue an Archdeacon of Huntingdon, or a Monke of Malmesbury. Ywis theſe rotten ioyſts are foundation enough whereon to build the prohibition of our Mariages.

SECT. XI.

VNder theſe late Romiſh Saints, Dunſtan and Anſelme, I might ſafely ſay, our Engliſh Clergie found the firſt machinations againſt their Mariage, and at laſt ſtooped perforce to this yoake of conſtrained continencie. Neither doth my wit or my Logicke faile mee in this collection. If theſe were the men that made the firſt oppoſition to the mariage of Clergymen in England, then it formerly obtained here, without contradiction. The bare word of my Refuter, is a hot ſhot to batter this neceſſarie illation; and to aſſure the Reader that the forced Celibate of the Engliſh Clergie is of a greater Antiquitie than theſe his Saints; To which he addes (in an ignorant begging of the queſtion) A thing ſo filthy, after a ſolemne vow to God, to take a Wife, as it neuer appeared without the brand of infamy. As if our predeceſſors in the Engliſh Clergie had beene euer charged with a vow; As if the ſolemnitie of this vow had neuer had beginning? Chimericall fancies fit for a ſhorne head. [q] When as his Maſter Harding could not produce ſo much as a probabilitie of any vow anciently required, or vndertaken; whether by beck, or Dieu gard. When as the ancient Saxon Pontificall makes not the leaſt mention of any ſuch profeſſion; yea, when Girardus (who was the ſecond Biſhop of Yorke after the conqueſt) writes flatly to Anſelme concerning his owne Canons, Profeſſiones verò mihi penitus abnegant Canonici, &c. My Canons (ſaith he) vtterly deny to giue me profeſſion of continencie, which without this profeſſion haue beene diſorderly aduanced to holy Orders; Cùm verò ad ordines aliquos invito, dura ſeruice renituntur, ne in ordinando caſtitatem profiteantur, And when I doe inuite any to take Orders, they doe reſiſt me very ſtubbornly, that they will make no profeſſion of chaſtitie in their Ordination. Thus he. Shewing vs plainly that the Clergie in thoſe times challenged no other than the liberty of their Predeceſſors. But well may he face vs downe in this more obſcure (though certaine) truth, when hee dares to ſay that Grecce it ſelfe neuer tolerated this eſtate in their Clergie, till by bad life it fell to Schiſme, and from Schiſme to open Hereſie; whiles their owne Canon Law (beſides all Hiſtories) giue him the lye; and what [r] Eſpencaus hath ingenuouſly ſpoken concerning this point, we haue formerly ſhewed. If he did not preſume vpon Readers that neuer ſaw Bookes, he durſt not be thus impudent.

This argument therefore ſhall euer ſtand good, and ſhall ſcornefully trample vpon all his vaine cauills; Ethelwold was the firſt, which by the command of King Edgar expelled maried Prieſts, out of [ſ] the old erection of Wincheſter; Anno 963.

Dunſtan and Oſwald together with him were the men, who (two yeares after) firſt expelled maried Clergie-men out of the greater houſes of Merceland; As 1177, in the dayes of King Henry the Second, the ſecular Prebendaries of Waltham, were firſt turned out, to giue way to their irregulars; therefore vntill theſe times, theſe places were interruptedly poſſeſſed by maried Clergie-men. If now he ſhall except; that this poſſeſſion of theirs was not of long continuance, but vpon vſurpation; whereby the maried Incumbents had iniuriouſly incroached vpon the right of Monks; Our Monkes of Worceſter ſhall herein fully conuince him; who write vnder their Oſwaldus Archiepiſcopus; per me fundatus fuit ex clericis monachatus, That is, By mee were Monkes firſt founded out of Clerkes; Which was alſo the faſhion of all other erections of this nature; ſo as it is manifeſt, that originally theſe Churches were founded in maried Clergiemen; afterwards wrongfully tranſlated, from them to Monkes; And if the firſt poſſeſſors had beene [c] Monkes, how could Monkes haue beene there firſt founded by Oſwald, when as Ethelred had long before both founded, and furniſhed it? and how out of Clerkes, if Monkes had beene there before? Let my Refuter ſhew me but a Verſe of equall antiquitie in a contrarie rime, BVt to ſtrike it dead, my aduerſarie will proue the Engliſh Clergie euer to haue beene continent. Reader, looke now for Demonſtrations; His firſt proofe is, That in all the purſuit of this buſineſſe, we neuer reade of any that did ſtand vpon the former cuſtome of the Church. A proper argument ab authoritate negatiuè. And what other arguments doth my Detector finde vſed by the then perſecuted Clergie? Hiſtories record them not; therefore doubtleſſe they ſaid nothing for themſelues; and if they vrged other proofes, which are not now deſcended to vs by any relation, why not this for one? Who can but hiſſe out ſo ſilly ſophiſtry? But to ſtop that clamorous mouth in this poore cauill; doth not his owne [u] Monke of Malmesbury tell him, that the Clergie vrged this plea for themſelues, Ingens eſſe & miſerabile dedecus, vt nouus aduena veteres colonos migrare compellerit, &c. That [illegible] was a great and miſerable ſhame, that theſe vpſtarts, the Monkes, ſhould thurſt out the ancient poſſeſſors of thoſe places; that this was neither pleaſing to God, which had giuen them that long-continued habitation, nor yet to any good man, who might iuſtly feare the ſame hard meaſure which was offered to them: Thus they, whoſe plea and complaint ſeemed ſo iuſt, that Alſgina the Queene, Prince Alſere, and others of the Nobilitie, ouerthrew many of thoſe new-founded Monaſteries, and reinſtalled the Prieſts in their former right.

His next proofe is from the Letters of Pope Gregory, which he wrote to Auſtin the Monke here in England. Riſum teneatis? Did euer any man doubt, but that Pope Gregory was deſirous to eſtabliſh Romiſh Lawes, and orders, amongſt the Engliſh. Where yet his Legate found many as good Chriſtians as himſelfe vnder another rule, conforme to the Greeke Church? But how followes this? This Pope was willing to inromanize the Engliſh; therefore the ſtaffe ſtands in the corner: And yet euen Pope Gregory allowed mariage to thoſe of the [x] Engliſh Clergie, which were not within the higher Orders; appointing them to receiue their ſtipends apart; a fauour which he ſaw neceſſarily to be yeelded to our Nation, whiles he abridged others.

lowed; whoſe part Ioannes Maior iuſtly takes againſt him. This Beda in a generall ſpeculation ſpeakes his conceit of the voluntary continency which hee holds requiſite in the Prieſthood; ſayes nothing of the particular cuſtome of the Engliſh Clergie; rather in diuers paſſages inſinuating the contrary. Amongſt the reſt, hee tels vs that in the [y] Synod holden by Archbiſhop Theodorus, and other Biſhops (at Hereford) in the third yeare of King Egfride, (which was about Anno 673.) their tenth and laſt Canon was pro coniugiis; vt nulli liceat niſi legitimum habere connubium; For Mariages; That no man ſhould mary vnlawfully, no man ſhould commit inceſt, no man ſhould leaue his owne wife, vnleſſe (as the Goſpel teacheth) for fornication onely, &c. I know my Refuter will plead the vniuerſality of this Canon, and will contend, that a Law generally made for all Chriſtians, is not without iniury reſtrained to Eccleſiaſtiques; But let my Reader well conſider both the Prologue and Epilogue of that Synode, hee ſhall ſee, that they who are required to keepe theſe Lawes, are Conſacerdotes omnes; and that whoſoeuer ſhall violate them, Nouerit ſe ab omni officio Sacerdotali & noſtra ſocietate ſeparatum; muſt know himſelfe ſeparate from all ſacerdotall office and ſociety; ſo as it will neceſſarily follow, that this Law did (at leaſt) concerne the Clergie with others, though not apart; Neither is there any other of thoſe Canons, which concernes not the Clergie only; except the firſt, concerning the obſeruation of Eaſter, which principally alſo belonged to them. Whereto it makes not a little, that in the Booke of Saxon Canons ſet out for the gouerning of the ſecular Prieſts, the rule is, Let them alſo do their indeuour, that they hold with perpetuall diligence their chaſtity, in an vnſpotted body, or elſe let them be coupled with the bond of one Matrimony. Words, wherein our Clergie meant to regulate themſelues (as it ſeemes) by the holy preſcript of Iſidore, whereof wee haue ſpoken. Laſtly, my Aduerſary cannot deny, that this Synode giues order for many accidentall matters, concerning the Clergie, for their fixed ſtation, for their maintenance, &c. but except in this Canon, there is no one word of their ſtate of life; neither is there in all thoſe Canons, one ſyllable of this pretended Celibate, as that, which the contrary receiued cuſtome of our Church would neuer haue endured; My Refuter dares not ſay that theſe mariages were ſo quite out of vſe, that it was needleſſe to ordaine ought againſt them; he knowes that his Dunſtan found here this courſe ſo inueterate, that the very age and deepe rooting of it hindred his deſignes.

And laſtly, he makes vp the mouth of his diſcourſe with the full Decree of Archbiſhop Anſelme Richard in the Synods of London: and why not King Henries ſix Articles? and why not the Councell of Trent? Sic concluſum eſt contra hereticos, Now, becauſe his heart told him, how light theſe proofes were, he layes in the ſcales with them certaine graue ponderations, which all put together, will proue almoſt as waightie as the Feather he wrote withall.

The firſt is, That there cannot be a greater nationall proofe, then to haue the Biſhops, and the King, and his Nobilitie to define, and deliuer this point with ioynt conſent. Take this, Reader, of King Edward the ſixt, and his Parliament, and conuocation, and all is well. forbidden;and the cited Clergy and Laity doe now thus late-ward diſcuſſe de iure; Neither haue the Clergy and Laity by him alledged, euer contradicted that which Huntingdon and Fabian haue out of the courſe of all Story affirmed; Vnto which, let me adde [a] Polydore Virgil, ſeconding this their aſſertiō; who plainly tels vs, that for 970 yeares, the reſtraint of mariage was neuer in vſe amongſt the Engliſh Clergy. Search not for this, Reader, in the later editions, leſt thou complaine of loſt labour; Poore Polydore may cry out of his graue with that other Polydore in Virgil: Fas omne abrumpit Polydorum obtrancat. Let him then (to anſwer this vaine challenge) produce but any one author of equall authority, to any of theſe, which doth auouch the contrary to that which theſe three haue thus confidently deliuered, and I ſhall confeſſe my ſelfe herein ſufficiently anſwered; In the meane time, let him, and the world know, that all the ancient Clergy, and Laity of this Iland, was for this liberty, altogether ours: Wherto if he yeeld not, let him name the man, before his Dunſtan, that euer in this Ile opened his mouth againſt it; Till then, the Reader cannot but ſee, that whereas our proofe is, Ex ore duorum, aut trium, his ſide is mute; that for our Something, hee can ſhew Nothing at all; and that our Huntingdon, *F. *Refut. p.*335.

His ſecond Ponderation of the ſanctity of the perſons, is no truer auoir. de-pois. That B. Dunſtan was an holy man, we may eaſily grant; but taken from the Couent of Glaſtenbury. Neither would the Nobility of his time bee ſo liberall as to yeeld this; who accuſed him to the King, de libidinibus & praeſtigijs; for (two remarkable qualities in his Saintſhip) lechery and ſorcery; whereupon he was caſt out from the Court; & that he was receiued againe, he might thanke the Kings horſe, whoſe ſudden ſtop on the verge of a ſteepe down-fall, reſtored Dunſtan to the good opinion of the ſuperſtitious Prince; who was yet ſo farre from being guilty of this deliuerance, that hee did not ſo much as know of the danger; an acquitall at leaſt as cauſleſſe as the accuſation.

To King Athelſtan, who firſt brought him from his Cell.

That Biſhop Anſelme was deuout and learned, we willingly grant, but withall an Italian, & taken from a Norman * Couent; he was holy, but how impetuouſly addicted to his owne will; and how refractary to authority, I had rather Hiſtories ſhould ſpeake then my ſelfe. Neither is it any wonder if both theſe Prelates (how holy ſoeuer) ſauored ſomewhat too ſtrong of the Cloiſters, and of Rome. Something muſt be yeelded to times and places; wee will not thinke but a wel-meant zeale caried them into theſe reſolutions; but a zeale miſguided with the ſway of the times. The name of Saints, the truth of their ſanctity did not priuiledge them from errours; wee know how to ſeuer their chaffe from their wheat, and to ſend one of them to the windes, the other to the granary. As for the maried Clergy, That they were euer accounted the ſcumme and refuſe of their Order, it is but the ſcurrilous ſcummy blurre of an intemperate pen; what was Spiridion? what was Hilary? what were both Gregories? what was Sidonius? what was Tertullian, Proſper, Simplicius, Eupſychius? In a word, what were all thoſe whom his Damaſus recounteth? what was the father of the Archdeacon of Huntingdon, who within two leaues he recordeth (from his Epitaph) for [t] the ſtarre of the Clergy. This ſcumme is better then their broth: which though it ſend forth a fume, ſeemingly delicious, yet many times being neerer taſted, proueth but cock-crowen pottage. Theſe Saints he ignorantly ballanceth again with our Huntingdon and Fabian, as if their preſent decree did contradict the hiſtory of things paſſed; as if wee had no more hiſtories on our ſide, becauſe my margin cited them not. In the mean time he finds this teſtimonie of Huntingdon ſo too much, that he would faine ſtrip vs of it; denying peremptorily that Huntingdon affirmes Anſelme to be the firſt that forbade mariage to the Clergy. Reader, in ſtead of all other ponderations weigh the words, [u] Eodem anno ad feſtum S. Michaelis tenuit Anſelmus Archiepiſcopus Concilium, apud Londoniam, in quo prohibuit vxores.

* The Clergie of England did ſo well approue theſe Monkiſh Archbiſhops, that after Anſelme, and Rodulph, the Biſhops of the Land became Suiters to the King, that they might neuer haue any Archbiſhop of Canterbury choſen from the Monkiſh profeſsion Sax.Chron. An. 1123.

[u] Henr. Huntingd. edit. Sauil p. 378.

vxores ſacerdotibus Anglorum, antea non prohibitas, i. The ſame yeare; on the Feaſt of S. Michael, Archbiſhop Anſelme held a Synode at London, wherein he forbade wiues to the Prieſts of England, before not forbidden; and tell me whether my Detector be true.

The words are too plaine; hee will wrangle yet with the ſenſe, and tels vs that the word, Before, may ſignifie, perhaps, Immediately before, in the raigne of the Williams, and not all ſucceſſion of times. It were well if he could eſcape ſo: But this ſtarting hole will not hide him. For (not to ſend him to Schoole to learne the difference betwixt Antea and Dudum, or Pridem) The ſame Author, in the following words, ſhewes vs the cenſures and conceits that paſſed vpon this Act, as an abſolute and vnheard of noueltie, like as in Germany, the Hiſtorians brand this ſame act in Hildebrand, with a nouo exemplo, and inconſiderato præiudicio. And for the times preceding, Polydore Virgil giues the very ſame witneſſe. Neither let him fly for ſuccour to his Dunſtan, who neuer can be proued to haue prohibited the mariage of Prieſts, though he diſliked that Monaſteries and Cathedrall Churches ſhould be poſſeſſed by maried Clerkes.

Refut.p.343.

Laſtly, where the teſtimony is diſpleaſing, the witneſſe himſelfe muſt be diſgraced. Curioſity led my Detector to ſearch who this H. Huntingdon might bee, with one inquiry he might find him to be a Canon Regular of Auſtins Order, and for dignity an Archdeacon; a perſon paſt exception: But for his parentage, he went no further then to the next Leafe, to finde that he was the ſonne of a noted, and, in thoſe dayes, eminent Clergy-man: His Epitaph at Lincolne ſhewes him to haue beene the ſtar of the Clergie; no whit dimmed in his acknowledged light, or hindered in his influence, by his coniunction in lawfull wedlocke: What better inſtance could my Refuter haue giuen againſt himſelfe? If he thinke to inſinuate that his birth made him partiall; The Reader will eaſily conſider, that if ſuch Parentage had beene then accounted ſhamefull, the Hiſtorian would haue had the wit to haue ſuppreſſed it; And withall that he durſt not, writing in the times when this thing was ſo familiarly and vniuerſally knowne, haue offered ſuch a Propoſition to the light, out of a vaine partialitie, to incurre the controlment of all eyes.

Sect. XV.

Refut.p.333.

AS for our Fabian, if C.E. finde him a Merchant, I finde him to haue beene Sheriffe of the Honourable Citie of London; A man whoſe credit would ſcorne to be poiſed with an hundred nameleſſe Fugitiues, paraſiticall petty-chapmen of the late ſmalwares of Rome. Neither can the name of a Citizen diſparage him to any wiſe iudge. How many haue our times yeelded of that ranke, whom both Academicall education, and experience, and trauell, and ſtudy haue wrought to an eminent perfection in all Arts, eſpecially in Mathematikes, and Hiſtory! Such was Fabian, whoſe fidelitie (beſides his other worths) was neuer (that I find) taxed but by this inſolent Pen that hath learned to forbeare no man; He was too old for vs to bribe, and too credible for C. E. to diſgrace. If hee would haue lent Rome but this one lye, no man had beene more authenticall; now his truth makes him fabulous Fabian. That one fault hath marred our Archdeacon of Huntingdon alſo.

Refut.p.348.

The Story which hee tells of the Cardinall of Crema the Popes Legate, taken in bed (after his buſie indeuours againſt the maried Clergie) the ſame day with an Harlot, hath vndone his reputation. Why will C.E. ſtirre this ſinke? No man prouoked him: If hee did not long to blazon the ſhame of his friends, hee had rather ſmothered this foule occurrence; but ſince he will be medling, Res apertiſſima negari non potuit, celari non debuit, ſaith Huntingdon. The thing was moſt openly knowne, it could not be denyed, it might not be concealed. Yet now comes an Vpſtart-Nouice, and dares tell vs from Baronius, that this was a meere Fable; how publike and notorious ſoeuer Huntingdon makes it: with theſe men this rule is vniuerſall, whatſoeuer may tend to the diſhonour of the Church of Rome, is falſe and fabulous.

Hall, J.

Indeed, I remember what their Gloſſe ſaid of old, [x] Clericus amplectens mulierem, præſumitur bene agere, ſi ergo Clericus amplectitur mulierem, interpratabitur quòd cauſa benedicendi eam, hoc faciat : That is; A Clergie man imbracing a woman, muſt be preſumed to doe well; if therefore a Clerke take a woman by the middle, it muſt bee interpreted that he doth it to giue her his bleſſing. * Perhaps, the good Legate was but beſtowing his ghoſtly bleſſing on ſo needfull a ſubiect, but that he was found in bed with her, if C. E. were not as ſhameleſſe as that Cardinall, or his bed-fellow, he durſt not deny; For what impudency is this, to caſt this relation only vpon H. Huntingdon, when ſo many vncontrolable Pens haue recorded it to the world? Men of their owne ſtampe, for Religion, for Deuotion. Matthew Paris, Ranulfus Ceſtrenſis, Roger Houeden, Polydore Virgil, Fabian, Matthæus Weſtmonaſterienſis, otherwiſe called Florilegus ; Dictus Ioannes, qui in Concilio, &c. ſaith he; The ſaid Iohn which in the open Councell had grieuouſly condemned all the [y] Concubinary Prieſts, was taken himſelfe in the ſame crime. Now let my Reader iudge, whether this Prieſts Truth, or that Cardinals honeſty were greater.

* So the Chronicle tels vs of Adelme Abbot of Malmesbury, who when hee was ſtirred to the vice of the fleſh, had wont to deſpite the Deuill, and torment himſelfe with holding a faire yong Virgin in his bed ſo long as he might ſay ouer the whole Pſalter, Vid. Pask. Def.

Polyd. ſuppreſſing the name telleth the Hiſtory.

[y] Viz. the maried: ſo did the enemies of Mariage diſgracefully terme the maried Clergie, and ſo are the words of the Legate to be underſtood, de latere meretricis; he then railing againſt Mariage not (whoredome properly) was deprehended in whoredome.

Sect. XVI.

HIs third Ponderation is the ſame with the firſt; Euery thing eekes. His S. Dunſtan and Anſelme, Gregory and Beda are againe laid in our diſh; we cannot feed on theſe ouer-oft-ſod Coleworts. I am challenged here, to produce any Prieſt or Deacon that liued in Wedlocke before the times of Dunſtan; The man preſumes vpon the ſuppreſſion of Records. For one, I name him hundreds. Who were they that Dunſtan and his fellow Saints found ſeated in the Cathedrall Churches of this Land? Whom did they eiect? Were they not maried Prieſts? What did the eiected Clergy plead but ancient poſſeſſion? After that, in the Synod which Archbiſhop [a] Lanfranck held at Wincheſter (which I wonder my Detector would ouer-ſee: This neglect is not for nothing;) was it not decreed, that the Canons ſhould not haue Wiues, but that the Prieſts which dwelt in Townes and Villages, ſhould not bee compelled to put away their Wiues; though caution is put in for the future?

What doth this imply, but that in thoſe ancient Times the Engliſh Clergie were inoffenſiuely maried? To which adde that old Record from an ancient Martyrologue of the Church of Canterbury : Lanfrancus Archiepiſcopus reddidit Eccleſiæ Sancti Andreæ, &c. Lanfranck Archbiſhop hath reſtored to Saint Andrewes Church, the Monaſterie of Saint Mary, with the Lands and Houſes which Liuingus Prieſt, and his Wiſe had in London, &c. And before him, or Dunſtan either, in King Edmunds time, [b] Biſhop Oſulphus with Athelme and Vlrick, Laicks, thruſts out the Monkes of Eueſham, and placed Canons (maried Prieſts) in their roome.

Laſtly, Iornalenſis records it as king Ina's Law, long before theſe times; Si Epiſcopi filiolus ſit, ſit dimidium hoc, &c. as ſuppoſing this no other then ordinary in thoſe times.

Now let my Refuter comfort himſelfe and his Catholikes, with the weake defence of Hereſie, and the ſtrong Bulwarkes of Romane Truth; who in the meane time muſt be put in minde, that he puts on mee the burden which ſhould lye vpon his owne ſhoulders; I haue produced Hiſtories which affirme peremptorily, that the Engliſh Clergy were neuer forbidden to marry vntill Anſelmes time; it is now his taske to diſproue this aſſertion of theirs by equall authoritie to the contrarie, which till hee haue done, the day is ours.

Sect. XVII.

HIs fourth Ponderation, is the difficultie of this grant in King Edwards Parliament. And is it poſſible the man ſhould not ſee the greater difficultie that was found in the inforcement of this glorious Celibate? How Alfere and the Nobles diſpoſſeſſed poſſeſſed the Monkes of Dunſtan ; iuſtly reſtoring the maried prieſts to their ancient right? How Lanfranck durſt not ſpeake it out ; Anſelme did ; but preuailed little : Let [c] Girardus then Archbiſhop of Yorke witneſſe. After whom Roger Archbiſhop of that See (as Neubrigenſis records) thruſt out [d] Anſelmes Monkes, and ſtood for the libertie of Mariage : in ſo much as in the ſucceſſion of Times, euen by Royall leaue alſo, Mariage of ſpirituall perſons yet continued. Neither could Anſelmes Succeſſors, Radulphus, Gulielmus de Turbine and the reſt, (notwithſtanding all their Canons and practices) preuaile againſt it. How plaine is that of the [e] Saxon Chronicle? Thus did the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Biſhops, which were in England ; And yet all theſe Decrees and biddings ſtood not, All held their Wiues by the Kings leaue, euen as they did. In ſo much as Archbiſhop William referred it to the King. The King decreed that the Prieſts ſhould continue with their Wiues ſtill. Neither were any thing more eaſie than to giue ſtore of inſtances in this kinde. What need I giue more than that of Galfride B. of Ely, who was auouched before the Pope himſelfe to haue maried a wife? which [f] Euangelicall excuſe (vxorem duxit) was made for his not appearing at Rome with the reſt. Of Richard Biſhop of Chicheſter. Robert Biſhop of Lincolne maried men, after theſe Decrees ; yea, good Euidences of ancient Charts are ready in our hands, to ſhew the vſe and legall allowance of theſe Mariages for no leſſe than two hundred yeares after.

Refut. p. 347.

[d] Pope Paſchalis writing to Anſelme ſaith, that there was at this time ſo great a number of Prieſts ſons in England, that the greater part of the Clergie conſiſted of them.

As for thoſe idle words which his ſawcineſſe throwes after our reuerend Martyr, Archbiſhop Cranmer, (whom hee falſly affirmes to haue beene the firſt maried Archbiſhop of this Kingdome, when as Archbiſhop Boniface ſate maried in that See three hundred yeares before him) and King Edwards Parliament, wee anſwer them with ſilence and ſcorne. Let loſers haue leaue to talke.

Anno 1250

The approbation, and better expedience of ſingle life in capable ſubiects, we doe willingly ſubſcribe vnto ; The lawfulneſſe, yea, neceſſitie of Mariage where the gift of Continencie is denyed, our Sauiour and his choſen veſſell iuſtifie with vs. So as I ſtill conclude, He that made mariage, ſaith it is honourable, what care wee for the diſhonour of thoſe that corrupt it?

Sect. XVIII.

His laſt ponderation is leaden indeed ; That from the bickerings of our Engliſh Clergy with their Dunſtans, it will not follow, that Continencie was not ancient, but was repiningly, lately, vniuſtly impoſed. By this reaſon, hee will proue there was neuer Thiefe nor Malefactor in our Countrie, before the time of King Iames ; ſince all Iudges haue yeerely bickerings with ſuch people. Thus he. But did euer ſuch looſe Beſome ſweepe the preſſe before?

Refut. p. 351.

C.E. writes in the Margine, Maſter Halls looſe manner of diſputing.

Reader, vouchſafe yet once more to caſt thine eye vpon the cloſe of my Epiſtle ; Doth my argument runne thus wildly as hee makes it? The Engliſh Clergy had bickerings with their Dunſtans, therefore continencie was repiningly and vniuſtly impoſed? Canſt thou thinke I haue met with a ſober Aduerſary? My words are ; That our Hiſtories teach vs how late, how repiningly, how vniuſtly our Engliſh Clergy ſtooped vnder this yoake. And what can his ſophiſtrie make of this? Are ye not aſhamed (ye Superiors of Doway?) are ye not aſhamed of ſuch a Champion ; fitter for a troope of Pigmees to traile a reed in their bickerings with Cranes, than to be committed with any reaſonable or Scholler-like Antagoniſt? In the bickerings with his Dunſtans, the Patients pleaded preſcription (as we haue ſhewed out of Malmesbury) and taxed his Saints with noueltie ; In my bickerings with him, I plead Antiquity, Scripture, Reaſon ; and taxe him moſt iuſtly with impudence, and abſurditie. How well is that man, that is matcht but with an honeſt Aduerſarie?

The Concluſion.

Refut. p. 353, &c.

THe Concluſion followes, a fit couer for ſuch a diſh; The Reader was not weary enough, but he muſt be tyred out with a tedious recapitulation; wherein my Refuter recollects all his diſperſed folly, that it may ſhew the fairer: Telling his Proteſtant friend, what I haue bragged, what I haue vndertaken, what I haue not performed; how I haue falſified, how I haue miſtaken; what himſelfe hath in all paſſages performed againſt me, how he hath anſwered, how he hath conquered; The beſt is, the Concluſion can ſhew no more than the Premiſes. By them, let me be iudged: Thoſe haue made good to my Reader, that C. E. hath accuſed much, and proued nothing; vanted much, and done nothing; rayled much, and hurt nothing; laboured much, and gained nothing; talked much, and ſaid nothing.

It is a large and bold word: but if any one clauſe of mine be vnproued, if any one clauſe of mine be diſproued, any one exception againſt my defence proued iuſt, any one charge of his proued true, any one falſhood of mine detected, any one argument of mine refelled, any one argument or propoſition of his not refelled: Let me goe away conuicted with ſhame. But if I haue anſwered euery challenge, vindicated euery * authoritie, iuſtified euery proofe, wiped away euery cauill, affirmed no propoſition vntruly, cenſured nothing vniuſtly; ſatisfied all his malicious obiections, and warranted euery ſentence of my poore Epiſtle: Let my apologie liue and paſſe; and let my Refuter goe as he is, C.E. Cauillator Egregius: Let my cauſe be no more victorious than iuſt; and let honeſt Mariages euer hold vp their heads; in deſpite of Rome and Hell: With this Farewell, I leaue my Refuter, either to the acting of his vnbloudie executions of the Sonne of God, or the plotting of the bloudie executions of the Deputies of God, or (as it were his beſt) to the knocking of his Beads; but if he will needs be medling with his pen, and will haue me, after ſome Iubilies, to expect an anſwer to my ſix weekes labour, I ſhall in the meane time pray, that God would giue him the grace to giue way to the knowne Truth, and ſometimes to ſay true.

* I onely except that one ſlip of my Pen, that I ſaid Gracian cited a ſentence out of Auſtin, which was indeed his owne.

Yet to gratifie my Reader at the parting, I may not conceale from him an ancient and worthy Monument, which I had the fauour and happineſſe to ſee in the Inner Library of Corpus Chriſti College in Cambridge; An excellent Treatiſe written (amongſt ſeuenteene other) in a faire ſet hand, by an Author of great learning and Antiquitie; He would needs ſuppreſſe his name, but deſcribes himſelfe to be Rotomagenſis:

Of Roane in France.

The time wherein it was written, appeares to be amids the heat of contention, which was betwixt the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Yorke, for precedencie; * which quarrell fell betwixt Rodulph of Canterbury, and Thurſtin of Yorke, in the yeare (1114,) at which time Pope Paſchalis wrote to King Henry concerning it; and was renued after about the yeere 1175. The Diſcourſe ſhall ſpeake enough for it ſelfe.

ROTO-

ROTOMAGENSIS ANONYMVS.

AN LICEAT SACERDOTIBVS INIRE, MATRIMONIA.

SCire volui quis primus inſtituit ne Sacerdotes Chriſtiani inire deberent Matrimonia. Deus an homo? Si enim Deus, eius certe ſententia & tenenda & obſeruanda eſt cum omni veneratione & reuerentia. Si vero homo & non Deus, de corde hominis, & non ex ore Dei talis egreſſa eſt traditio: Ideoq; nec per eam ſalus acquiritus ſi obſeruetur, nec amittitur ſi non obſeruetur. Non enim eſt hominis ſaluare vel perdere aliquem pro meritis, ſed Dei proprium vnius eſt, ſcilicet, quod Deus hoc inſtituerit, nec in veteri Teſtamento nec in Euangelio, nec in Apoſtolorum Epiſtolis ſcriptum reperitur, in quibus quicquid Deus hominibus præcepit inſertum deſcribitur. Traditio ergo hominis eſt & non Dei, non Apoſtolorum inſtitutio. Quemadmodum & Apoſtolus inſtituit, vt oportet Epiſcopum eſſe vnius vxoris virum. Quod minime inſtituiſſet, ſi adulterium eſſet quod Epiſcopus haberet ſimul & vxorem, & Eccleſiam, quaſi duas vxores, vt quidam aſſerunt. Quodq; de Scripturis ſanctis non habet authoritatem eadem facilitate contemnitur qua dicitur. Sancta enim Eccleſia non Sacerdotis vxor, non ſponſa, ſed Chriſti eſt ſicut Ioannes dicit. Qui habet ſponſam, ſponſus eſt: huius inquam ſponſi Eccleſia ſponſa eſt, & tamen huic ſponſæ licet in parte inire matrimonia ex Apoſtolica traditione. Dicit enim Apoſtolus ad Cor. Propter fornicationes (inquit) vnuſquiſq; vxorem ſuam habeat, & cætera vſq; volo omnes homines eſſe ſicut meipſum, ſed vnuſquiſq; proprium donum habet à Deo, alius quidem ſic, alius verò ſic. Nam enim omnes habent vnum donum virginitatis, ſcilicet, & continentiæ, ſed quidam virgines ſunt & continentes, quidam vero incontinentes, quibus concidit nuptias, ne tentet eos Sathanas propter incontinentiam ſuam & in ruinam turpitudinis corruant. Sed & Sacerdotes quoq; alij quidem continentes ſunt, alij vero incontinentes, & qui continentes ſunt, continentiæ ſuæ donum à Deo conſecuti ſunt, ſine eius dono & gratia continentes eſſe non poſſunt. Incontinentes vero hoc donum gratiæ minime percipiunt, qui cum intemperantia ſuæ conſperſionis, tum etiam animi infirmitate per carnis deſideria diſſluunt. Quod nullo modo facerent; ſi continentiæ gratiam & virtutem à Deo percepiſſent. Sentiunt enim & ipſi aliam legem in membris ſuis repugnantem legi mentis ſuæ, & captiuantem eos in lege peccati, & quod nolunt agere cogentem, qui de corpore mortis huius liberantur gratia Dei. Hac itaque eos lege captiuante, & carnis conſcupiſcentia ſtimulante, aut fornicari coguntur aut nubere. Quorum quid melius ſit Apoſtolica docemur authoritate, qua dicitur, melius nubere quàm vri. Quod melius eſt, id certe eligendum & tenendum eſt: Melius eſt inquam nubere, quia peius eſt vri. Quia melius eſt nubere quàm vri, conueniens eſt incontinentibus vt nubant, non vt vrantur. Bonæ etenim ſunt nuptiæ, ſicut Auguſtinus ait in libro ſuper Geneſin ad literam, in ipſis commendatur bonum naturæ quo incontinentiæ regitur prauitas, & naturæ decoratur fœcunditas. Nam vtriuſq; ſexus infirmitas propendens in ruinam turpitudinis, rectæ excipitur honeſtate nuptiarum, vt quod ſanis poſsit eſſe officium, ſit ægrotis remedium. Neque enim quia incontinentia malum eſt ideo connubium, vel quo incontinentes copulantur non eſt bonum. Imo vero non propter illud malum culpabile eſt bonum, ſed propter hoc bonum veniale eſt illud malum: quoniam id quod bonum habent nuptiæ, & quod bonæ ſunt nuptiæ, peccatum eſſe nunquam poteſt. Hoc autem tripartitum eſt, fides, proles, Sacramentum. In fide attenditur, ne præter vinculum coniugale, cum altera vel cum altero concubatur. In prole, vt amanter ſuſcipiatur, benigne ſuſcipiatur, religioſe educetur. In Sacramento, vt coniugium non ſeparetur, & demiſſus aut demiſſa ne cauſa prolis alteri coniugatur. Hæc eſt tanquam regula nuptiarum, qua vel naturæ decoratur fœcunditas, vel incontinentiæ regitur prauitas. Hanc autem regulam nuptiarum, & hoc tripartitum bonum inſtituit æterna veritas ordine decenti & lege æterna, contra quām quicquid fit, vel dicitur, vel concupiſcitur, peccatum eſt. Quod in libro contra Fauſtum Manichæum Auguſtinus teſtatur, dicens, Peccatum eſt factum, vel dictum, vel concubitum contra æternam legem. Æterna lex eſt diuina voluntas, ſiue ratio ordinem naturalem perturbari vetans, conſeruari iubens. Quicquid igitur ordinem naturalem perturbari iubet, conſeruari vetat, exerceri nuptias & earum tripartitum bonum, fidem, ſcilicet, prolem & Sacramentum eos habere prohibet, & regulā illam æternæ veritatis qua naturæ decoratur fœcunditas, vel incontinentiæ regitur prauitas, eos ſoluere præcipit, &c. quibus naturalis ordo peragitur, abhominari iubet. Hoc inquam mandatum naturalem ordinem conſeruari vetat, perturbari iubet, & ideo contra æternam legem fit, & peccatum eſt: peccant enim qui mandatum tale inſtituunt, quo naturalis ordo deſtruitur. Nam etiam vt videtur, minime credunt quod de Sacerdotum filiis aſſumat Deus ad ædificandam ſupernam Ciuitatem, & ad reſtaurandum Angelorum numerum. Si enim crederent, nunquam tale mandatum inſtituerent, quia ſcienter & nimia temeritate id efficere conarentur, vt ſuperna Civitas nunquam proficiatur, & Angelorum numerus nunquam repararetur; ſi enim ſuperna Ciuitas de filiis etiam Sacerdotum perficienda eſt, & ſi Angelorum numerus de ipſis etiam reparandus eſt, qui hoc efficere conatur vt nulli ſint, quantum in ipſo eſt, & ſupernam ciuitatem deſtruit, & Angelorum numerus ne perficiatur efficit. Quo quod peruerſius poteſt fieri? Hoc enim fit contra voluntatem & prædeſtinationem illius, qui quæ futura ſint fecit. Fecit enim prædeſtinatione quæ futura ſunt in opere. Quicunque ergo id efficere conatur vt non faciat Deus in opere quæ fecit in Prædeſtinatione, ipſam Prædeſtinationem Dei conatur evacuere. Si ergo Deus fecit in Prædeſtinatione, vt filii Sacerdotum futuri ſint in opere, qui hoc efficere conatur vt non futuri ſint, in opere deſtruere molitur facta Dei quod fecit prædeſtinatione, & ita prædeſtinationem Dei nititur euertere, & voluntatem Dei contraire quæ æterna eſt. Voluit enim Deus ab æterno, & ante ſæculum omnes homines creare in ſæculo, certo quidem ordine quo præcogitauit & prædeſtinauit eos ſe creaturum. Nihil enim inordinate facit, nihil in ſæculo creat, quod non ante in prædeſtinatione ſuæ mentis procedente omnia ſæculo diſponendo præordinauerit. Quæcunq; ergo in hoc ſæculo ab ipſo creantur, Prædeſtinationem mentis prædiſponentem ac præordinantem omnia neceſſario ſequuntur, quod impoſsibile eſt non fieri quod Deus ab æterno voluit & præordinauit fieri. Neceſſe eſt igitur omnes homines eo ordine creari, quo voluit ab æterno & præordinauit. Alioquin non ſicut voluit Deus neq; ſicut præordinauit omnes homines ſunt creati, ſed quod hoc inconveniens eſt neceſſe eſt illos creari, ſicut voluit ab æterno & præcogitauit atq; præordinauit, quod omnia quæ voluit fecit, & nihil vnquam fecit quæ non voluit ab æterno & præcogitauit decreto certo & incommutabili. Quia nec eius voluntas irrita poteſt fieri, nec præcogitatio falli, nec præordinationes commutari. Quæ cùm ita ſint, neceſſe eſt vt ſicut Laici, ita etiam Sacerdotes de quibus homines creantur, ad ipſos creandos miniſterium exhibeant diuinæ voluntati & præordinationi. Parentes non ſunt authores creationis filiorum, ſed miniſtri. Qui ſi miniſterium non exhiberent voluntatem Dei & præcogitationem ſi poſsibile eſſet irritam facerent, ordinationique reſiſterent. Quid ſi ſcienter facerent grauius vtique delinquerent, ſi neſcienter minus, non ſolum in Deum Patrem, ſed & in cæleſtem Ieruſalem ſanctorum omnium matrem, quod quantum in ipſis eſſet illos creari non *permitterent, ex quibus ea ædificanda & cæleſtis patriæ dantia ſunt præparanda. Sed ab hoc delicto defendit eos impotentia, quod non poſſunt voluntati Dei reſiſtere & præordinationi contraire. Voluntas enim Dei & prædeſtinatio lex eterna eſt, in qua omnium rerum curſus decretus eſt, et paradigma eſt, in quo omnium ſæculorum forma depicta eſt, quod nulla rationi aboleri poteſt. Huic igitur miniſterium non exhibere malum eſt, quod exhibere bonum eſt & maxime cum bona ſit voluntate. Quod tum ſit, cum parentes conueniunt cauſa gignendæ prolis, non appetitu exercendi libidinis. Gignendæ prolis dico, quia & præſens Eccleſia multiplicetur, & cæleſtis Ciuitas fabricetur, & electorū numerus compleatur, quorum nihil poteſt fieri ſine conuentione tali. Si enim primi parentes Sanctorum omnes aut continentes permaniſſent aut virgines, nullus Sanctorum ex eis eſſet natus in ſæculo, nullus gloria & honore coronatus in cælo, nullus adſcitus in Angelorum numero. Sed quia ineſtimabile bonum eſt; quod ſancti nati ſunt in ſæculo, quod gloria & honore coronantur in cælo, & quod adſciti ſunt in Angelorum numero, ex eo parentum fœcunditas beatior prædicatur, & conuentus ſanctior. Sic ergo melius fuit eis tales filios genuiſſe quam non genuiſſe, talemq́ fructum nuptiarum protuliſſe, quam ſine fructu continentes, aut virgines extitiſſe. Quamvis bonum ſit quibuſdam continentes eſſe, vel virgines, illis viz. quos Deus voluit ab æterno, & præordinauit ita creandos eſſe in ſæculo, vt continentia vel virginitate permaneant: ſicut enim voluit ab æterno, & præordinauit quoſdam, ita creandos eſſe in ſæculo, vt fructum nuptiarum faciunt & filios generent, ita etiam voluit & præordinauit ab æterno, quoſdam ita creandos eſſe, vt in continentia vel virginitate permaneant. Et ſicut illi ad creandos filios voluntati Dei & præordinationi miniſterium exhibent, ita & iſti ad conſeruandā & continentiā & virginitatē voluntati Dei eſt præordinationi miniſtrant. Ac per hoc & illorū fœcunditas & iſtorū virginitas bona eſt atque laudabilis, quæ ſi non miniſteriū exhiberet volūtati Dei & præordinationi, nec bona eſſet nec laudabilis. Omne enim quod voluntati Dei & præordinationi contrarium eſt, nec bonum eſt nec laudabile. Si ergo voluit Deus & prædeſtinauit alios futuros virgines, alios nuptiarum fructū facientes. Si enim omnes eſſent virgines, nullus Sanctorum qui vel naſcitur vel naſciturus ſit, in hoc ſæculo natus eſſet, vel naſciturus. Nec ipſi etiam virgines eſſent, quia nati non eſſent. Ex fœcunditati enim illorum orta eſt iſtorum virginitas. Magnum igitur bonum eſt fœcunditas, de qua ſancta præceſſit virginitas. Quia autem virgines eſſe debeant, & qui nuptiarum fructus facientes, docet eos verbum quod Deus ſeminat in cordibus illorum. WHICH, FOR MY COVNTRYMENS SAKE,

I haue thus Engliſhed.

I Would faine know who it was that firſt ordained, that Chriſtian Prieſts might not marry, God or Man? For, if it were God, ſurely, his determination is to bee held and obſerued with all veneration and reuerence; But, if it were Man, and not God; and this Tradition came out of the heart of Man, not out of the Mouth of God, then neither is ſaluation got by it, if it be obſerued; nor loſt, if it be not obſerued: For it doth not belong to Man either to ſaue or deſtroy any man for his merits, but it is proper only vnto God. That God hath ordained this, it is neither found written in the Old Teſtament, nor in the Goſpell, nor in the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, in all which is ſet down whatſoeuer God hath enioyned vnto men. It is therefore a Tradition of man, and not an inſtitution of God, nor of his Apoſtles: As the Apoſtle inſtituted (rather) that a Biſhop ſhould be the husband of one Wife; which hee would neuer haue appointed, if it had beene adulterie for a Biſhop to haue at once a Wife, and a Church, as it were two Wiues, like as ſome affirme : Now, that which hath not authority from the holy Scriptures, is with the ſame facility contemned, that it is ſpoken : For, the holy Church is not the Wife, not the Spouſe of the Prieſt, but of Chriſt, as S. Iohn ſaith, He that hath the Bride, he is the bridegroome. Of this Bridegroome, I ſay, is the Church the Spouſe; and yet it is lawfull euen for this Spouſe in part to marry, by Apoſtolique Tradition ; For the Apoſtle ſpeakes thus to the Corinthians, becauſe of fornications, let euery man haue his owne Wife. And I would that all men were as I am, but euery man hath his proper gift of God, one thus, another otherwiſe. For, all men haue not one gift, namely, of Virginity and Continency, but ſome are Virgins and containe; others containe not; to whom he granteth mariage, leſt Sathan tempt them through their incontinency, and they ſhould miſcary in the ruine of their vncleanneſſe. So alſo of Prieſts, ſome are continent, and others incontinent; and thoſe which are continent, haue receiued the gift of their continence from God, without whoſe Gift and Grace, they cannot be continent. But thoſe which are incontinent, haue not receiued this gift of grace, but, whether by the intemperance of their humour, or the weakneſſe of their mind, run out into fleſhly deſires; which they would in no wiſe doe, if they had receiued from God the Grace and Vertue of Continence. For they alſo which are deliuered by the Grace of God from the body of this death, feele another Law in their members rebelling againſt the Law of their minde, and captiuating them to the Law of ſin, and compelling them to doe that which they would not. This Law therefore, holding them captiue, and this Concupiſcence of the fleſh prouoking them, they are compelled either to fornicate, or marry: whereof whether is the better, we are taught by the authority of the Apoſtle, who tels vs, it is better to marry then to burne. Surely, that which is the better, is to be choſen and held; now it is better to marry, becauſe it is worſe to burne; and becauſe it is better to marry then to burne, it is conuenient for thoſe which containe not, to marry, not to burne. For mariage is good, as Auguſt. ſpeaks in his booke((uper Geneſin ad Literam)in it is commended the good of nature, whereby the prauity of incontinence is ruled, and the fruitfulneſſe of Nature graced; For the weakneſſe of either Sexe, declining towards the ruine of filthineſſe, is well relieued by honeſty of mariage, ſo as the ſame thing, which may be the office of the ſound, is alſo the remedie vnto the ſicke : Neither yet, becauſe incontinence is euill, is therefore Mariage (euen that wherewith the Incontinent are ioyned) to be reputed not good; yea rather, not for that euill, is the good faulty, but for this good is that euill pardonable, ſince that good which mariage hath, yea which mariage is, can neuer be ſin. Now, this good is three-fold, the Fidelity, the Fruit, the Sacrament of that eſtate; In the Fidelity, is regarded: That beſides this bond of Mariage, there be not carnall ſociety with any other. In the Fruit of it, That it be louingly raiſed and religiouſly bred. In the Sacrament of it, That the mariage be not ſeparated, and that the diſmiſſed party of either Sexe, be not ioyned to any other, no not for iſſues ſake. This is as it were the Rule of Mariage, whereby the fruitfulneſſe of Nature is graced, or the prauity of Incontinence ruled. And this Rule of Mariage, and this three-fold good, the eternall Truth hath appointed in the order of his Decree, and that eternall Law of his, againſt which whatſoeuer is done, ſpoken, or willed, is ſinne; which Auguſtine in his booke againſt Fauſtus the Manichee witneſſeth, ſaying, Sin is either Deed, Word, or deſire againſt the Law eternall. This Eternall Law is the diuine Will or Decree; forbidding the diſturbance, and commanding the preſeruation of due naturall order; whatſoeuer therefore commands naturall Order to be diſturbed, forbids it to be conſerued, prohibits men to vſe Mariage; and attaine to the threefold good thereof, Fidelitie, Iſſue, Sacrament; and commands them to breake that Rule of Eternall Truth, whereby the fruitfulneſſe of Nature is graced, or the prauity of Incontinency is ruled, commands men to abhorre thoſe things whereby naturall order is held and maintained. This Commandement, I ſay, forbids naturall Order to bee obſerued, commands it to bee diſturbed, and therefore is againſt the Law of God, and by conſequence, is ſinne : For, they ſinne that ordaine ſuch a command by which naturall Order is deſtroyed.

Theſe men doe not (it ſeemes) beleeue, that of the children of Prieſts, God takes for the building of his City aboue, and for the reſtoring of the number of Angels: For, if they did beleeue it, they would neuer ordaine ſuch a Mandate, becauſe they ſhould wittingly and ouer-raſhly, goe about to effect, that the ſupernall City ſhould neuer be perfited, and the number of Angels neuer repayred. For if the ſupernall City be to be perfited euen of the ſonnes of Prieſts, and if the number of Angels be of them to be repayred, thoſe that endeuour to procure that they ſhould not be, doe (what in them lies) deſtroy the ſupernall City, and labour that the number of Angels may not be perfited; then which, what can be more peruerſely done? For this is done againſt the will and predeſtination of him which hath done thoſe things, which ſhall be; for he hath done in his predeſtination thoſe things which ſhall be in effect; whoſoeuer therefore goes about to procure that God may not in effect doe thoſe things, which he hath done in his predeſtination, goes about to make void the very predeſtination of God. If then God haue already in his predeſtination decreed, that the ſons of Prieſts ſhall once be in effect, he that goes about to procure that they may not be in effect, endeuours to deſtroy the worke of God, becauſe he hath already done it in predeſtination; and ſo ſtriues to ouerthrow Gods predeſtination, and to gain-ſtand that will of God which is eternall: For God would from eternity, and before all worlds, create all men in the world, in that certaine order wherein hee preconceiued, and predeſtinated to create them; He doth nothing diſorderly, he createth nothing in the world which he hath not fore-ordained, by diſpoſing it in the predeſtination of his mind that went before all worlds. Whatſoeuer therefore is by him created in this world, doth neceſſarily follow the predeſtination of his minde, prediſpoſing and preordaining all things; becauſe it is impoſſible that ſhould not be done, which God from eternity hath willed and fore-ordained to be done. It is therefore neceſſary that all men ſhould be created in that very Order, wherein he willed, and from eternity fore-ordained; Or elſe, all men are not created as God would haue them, nor as hee foreordained them; But becauſe this is inconuenient, it muſt needs bee that they are created as hee willed from eternity, and fore-thought, and fore-ordained; becauſe he hath done all things that he would, and neuer did any thing which he willed not from euerlaſting, and hath fore-conceiued in his certaine and vnchangeable Decree. For neither can his will be fruſtrated, nor his fore-thought deceiued, nor his fore-ordinations altered: Which, ſince it is ſo; needs muſt it be, that as Laicks, ſo Prieſts alſo, of whom men are created, ſhould yeeld their ſeruice to the diuine will and preordination to the creating of them. For parents are not the authors of the creation of their children, but the ſeruants; who if they ſhould not yeeld their ſeruice, they ſhould (if it were poſſible) make void the fore-thought of God, and reſiſt his ordination; which if they ſhould wittingly doe, they ſhould offend the more, if ignorantly, the leſſe; not onely againſt God the Father, but alſo againſt the heauenly Ieruſalem, the Mother of all Saints, becauſe (what in them were) they ſhould not ſuffer thoſe to be created of whom it is to be builded, and thoſe things to be prepared, whereby that Celeſtiall Country is beſtowed. But from this offence their impotence frees them, becauſe they cannot reſiſt the will of God and croſſe his preordination. For the will and predeſtination of God is that eternall Law, in which the courſe of all things is decreed; and the patterne where in the forme of all ages is ſet forth, which can by no meanes be defaced. Not to yeeld our ſeruice then hereunto, is euill, becauſe to yeeld it, is good, and eſpecially if it be done with a good intent, which is then done, when as Parents meet together in a deſire of propagation of iſſue, not in an appetite of exerciſing their luſt. Of propagation, I ſay, that both the preſent Church may be multiplyed, and the celeſtiall City built, and the number of the Elect made vp, none of which could be done without ſuch coniugal meeting. For if the firſt Parents of the Saints had continued all either continent or virgins, no Saint had beene borne of them in the world, none of them had beene crowned with glory and honour in heauen, none of them aſcribed into the number of Angels. But ſince it is an ineſtimable good, that Saints are borne in the world, that they are crowned with glory and honour in heauen, and that they are aſcribed into the number of Angels: thereupon the fruitfulneſſe of Parents is more bleſſed, and their meeting holier. So then it is better for them to haue begotten ſuch children, then not to haue begotten them, and to haue brought forth ſuch fruit of mariage, then to haue beene continent, or Virgins, without fruit. Although it is good for ſome to be continent, or virgins, namely, for them whom God eternally willed and preordained to be ſo created in the world, that they ſhould remaine either in Continence, or Virginity: For as he hath eternally willed and foreordained that ſome ſhould be ſo created in the world, as that they ſhould yeeld the fruit of mariage, and beget children, ſo alſo hath he willed, and from eternity fore-ordained, ſome to be ſo created, that they ſhould continue in Continencie or Virginity: And as thoſe other yeeld their ſeruice to the will and preordination of God in the creation of children; ſo theſe alſo ſerue the will and preordination of God in conſeruing their continence, and virginity; and hereupon is both the fruitfulneſſe of the one, and the virginity of the other good, and laudable; which if it did not yeeld ſeruice to the will and preordination of God, would be neither good nor laudable: For whatſoeuer is contrary to the will and preordination of God, is neither good nor laudable. If therefore God willed and predeſtinated ſome to be Virgins, others to yeeld the fruit of mariage (for if all were virgins, no Saint that now is, or ſhall bee borne, ſhould either bee now or hereafter borne in the world, neither ſhould thoſe virgins be at all, becauſe they ſhould not be borne; for of the fruitfulneſſe of the one ariſes the others virginity) therefore is fruitfulneſſe a great good, from which holy virginity hath proceeded: now that there ſhould be ſome virgins, and others that ſhould beare the fruits of mariage, the word which God ſoweth in their hearts, teacheth vs. For in the hearts of ſome he ſoweth the word of good fruitfulneſſe, yeelding the encreaſe of mariage, and in the hearts of others he ſowes the word of virginity; Thoſe then in whom hee ſowes the word of virginity, they deſire to keepe virginity, but thoſe in whom hee ſowes the word of mariage, they deſire to yeeld the fruit of mariage.

WHERETO I WILL ADDE FOR Concluſion the wiſe and ingenuous iudgement of Eraſnius Roterodamus; The rather, becauſe it pleaſed my Refuter to lay this worthy Author in our diſh.

In his Epiſtle to Chriſtopher Biſhop of Baſil, concerning humane Conſtitutions, Thus he writes.

Habetur Tom. nono Op. Eraſ. pag. 982.

Nam in totum quæ ſunt humani iuris, quemadmodum, in morbis remedia, &c.

For thoſe things which are altogether of humane conſtitution, muſt (like to remedies in diſeaſes) be attempered to the preſent eſtate of matters and times. Thoſe things which were once religiouſly inſtituted, afterwards according to occaſion, and the changed quality of manners and times, may be with more Religion and Piety abrogated; which yet is not to bee done by the temerity of the people, but by the authority of Gouernors; that tumult may be auoyded; and that the publicke cuſtome may be ſo altred, that concord may not be broken: the very ſame is perhaps to be thought concerning the Mariage of Prieſts of old, as there was great paucity of prieſts, ſo great Pietie alſo; They, that they might more freely attend thoſe holy Seruices, made themſelues chaſte of their owne accord. And ſo much were thoſe Ancients affected to Chaſtitie, that they would hardly permit Mariage vnto that Chriſtian, whom his Baptiſme found ſingle, but a ſecond Mariage yet more hardly: And now that which ſeemed plauſible in Biſhops and Prieſts, was tranſlated to Deacons, and at laſt to ſub-Deacons: which voluntarily receiued cuſtome was confirmed by the authority of Popes. In the meane time, the number of Prieſts increaſed, and their Pietie decreaſed. How many ſwarmes of Prieſts are maintained in Monaſteries and Colledges? and amongſt them how few are there that liue chaſtly? I ſpeake of them which doe publikely keepe Concubines in their houſes, in ſtead of their Wiues. I doe not now meddle with the myſteries of their more ſecret luſts; I onely ſpeake of thoſe things which are moſt notoriouſly knowne to the World: And yet, when we know theſe things, how eaſie are we to admit men into holy Orders, and how difficult in releaſing this conſtitution of ſingle life? when as contrarily S. Paul teaches, that hands muſt not be raſhly laid vpon any; and more then once hath preſcribed what manner of men Prieſts and Deacons ought to be, but of their ſingle life, neither Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles, hath euer giuen any Law in the holy Scriptures. Long ſince hath the Church abrogated the nightly Vigils at the Tombes of Martyrs, which yet had been receiued by the publike cuſtome of Chriſtians, and that for diuers Ages. Thoſe Faſts which were wont to continue till the euening, it hath transferred to noone; and many other things hath it changed according to the occaſions ariſing: And why then doe we ſo obſtinately vrge this humane conſtitution, eſpecially when ſo many cauſes perſwade vs to an alteration? For firſt a great part of our Prieſts liues with an ill name; and with an vnquiet conſcience handleth thoſe holy Myſteries; And then the fruit of their labours (for the moſt part) is vtterly loſt, becauſe their doctrine is contemned of their people by reaſon of their ſhamefull life. Whereas, if Mariage might be yeelded to thoſe which doe not containe, both they would liue more quietly, and ſhould preach Gods Word to the people with authority, and might honeſtly bring vp their children, neither ſhould the one of them bee a mutuall ſhame to other, &c.

Inter hos quanta raritas eorum qui caſtè viuunt?

Nec enim attingo nunc ſecretiorum libidinum miſteria, &c

Cur hic humanam conſtitutionem vrgemus tā obſtinatè, præſertim cum tot cauſæ ſuadeant mutationem? Primùm enim magna pars Sacerdotum viuit cum malâ famâ, parumque requieta conſcientia tractat illa ſacroſancta myſteria, &c.

FINIS.

A BRIEFE SVMME OF THE Principles of Religion, fit to be knowne of ſuch as would addreſſe themſelues to Gods
TABLE.

Q. How many things are required of a Chriſtian?

A. Two: Knowledge and Practice.

Q. What are we bound to know?

A. God and our ſelues.

Q. What muſt we know of God?

A. What one he is, and what he hath done.

Q. What is God?

A. He is one Almightie and infinite Spirit, Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt.

Q. What hath he done?

A. He hath made all things; he gouerneth and preſerueth all things, and hath eternally decreed how all things ſhall bee done, and hath reuealed his will to vs in his Word?

Q. What more muſt we know concerning God and his actions?

A. That God the Son, Chriſt Ieſus, tooke our nature vpon him, dyed for our redemption, roſe againe, and now liueth glorioully in Heauen, making interceſſion for vs,

Q. Thus much concerning God: What muſt we know of our ſelues?

A. What we were, what we are, and what we ſhall be.

Q. What were we?

A. We were made at firſt perfect and happy, according to Gods Image, in knowledge, in holineſſe, in righteouſneſſe.

Q. What are we?

A. Euer ſince the fall of our firſt Parents, we are all naturally the ſonnes of wrath, ſubiect to miſery and death: But thoſe whom God chooſeth out to himſelfe, are in part renewed through grace, and haue the Image of God in part repaired in them.

Q. What ſhall we be?

A. At the generall reſurrection of all fleſh, thoſe which were in part renewed here, ſhall be fully perfited and glorified in body and ſoule: thoſe which haue liued and dyed in their ſinnes, ſhall be iudged to perpetuall torments.

Q. Thus much for our knowledge: Now for our practice what is required of vs?

A. Due obedience and ſeruice to God, both in our ordinary courſe of life, and alſo in the ſpeciall exerciſe of his worſhip.

Q. What is that obedience which is required of vs in the ordinary courſe of our life?

Hall, J.
12637c

A. It is partly preſcribed vs by the Law, and partly by the Goſpell.

Q. What doth the Law require?

A. The Law contained in Ten Commandements, enioyneth vs all piety to God, and all iuſtice and charity to our neighbour.

Q. What doth the Goſpell require?

A. Faith in the Lord Ieſus, with the fruit of it, Repentance; as our onely remedie for the breach of the Law.

Q. What is faith?

A. The affiance of the ſoule vpon Chriſt Ieſus, depending vpon him alone for forgiueneſſe and ſaluation.

Q. What is Repentance?

A. An effectuall breaking off our old ſinnes, with ſorrow and deteſtation, and an earneſt purpoſe and endeuour of contrary obedience.

Q. Thus much of our obedience in the whole courſe of life: What are the ſeruices required more ſpecially in the immediate exerciſes of Gods worſhip?

A. They are chiefly three: firſt, Due hearing and reading the Word: ſecondly, Receiuing the Sacraments: thirdly, Prayer.

Q. Which call you the Word of God?

A. The holy Scriptures contained in the Old and New Teſtament.

Q. How many Sacraments are there?

A. Two: Baptiſme, and the Lords Supper.

Q. What is the vſe of Baptiſme?

A. By water waſhing the body, to aſſure vs that the blood of Chriſt, applied to the ſoule of euery beleeuer, clenſeth him from his ſinnes.

Q. What is the vſe of the Lords Supper?

A. To be a ſigne, a ſeale, a pledge, vnto vs of Chriſt Ieſus giuen for vs, & giuen to vs.

Q. What ſignifies the Bread and wine?

A. The body and blood of Chriſt, broken and powred out for our redemption.

Q. What is required of euery Receiuer?

A. Vpon paine of iudgement, that he prepare himſelfe by examination.

Q. Whereof muſt a man examine himſelfe?

A. Whether he find in himſelfe, firſt Competent knowledge: ſecondly, A true (though weake) Faith: thirdly, Vnfained repentance for his ſinnes: fourthly, Charity, and readineſſe to forgiue: fiftly, An hungring deſire to this Sacrament: ſixtly, A thankfull heart for Chriſt, and it.

Q. What is Prayer?

A. A calling vpon God through Chriſt for a ſupply of all our wants, and praiſing him for all his bleſſing.

HIS HIGHNESSES VNWORTHY Seruant dedicates all his labours, and wiſhes all Happineſſe.

Moſt Gracious Prince :

THis worke of mine, which (if my hopes and deſires faile mee not) time may hereafter make great, I haue preſumed both to dedicate in whole to your Highneſſe, and to parcell out in ſeueralls vnto ſubordinate hands. It is no maruell if Bookes haue this freedome, when we our ſelues can and ought to be all yours, while we are our owne, and others vnder you. I dare ſay theſe Meditations, how rude ſo euer they may fall from my Pen, in regard of their ſubiect are fit for a Prince. Here your Highneſſe ſhall ſee how the great patterne of Princes, the KING of HEAVEN, hath euer ruled the VVorld, how his Subſtitutes, earthly Kings, haue ruled it vnder him, and with what ſucceſſe either of glorie or ruine. Both your Peace and Warre ſhall finde here holy and great examples. And if Hiſtorie and obſeruation be the beſt Counſellors of your youth; what ſtorie can bee ſo wiſe and faithfull as that which God hath written for Men, wherein you ſee both what hath beene done, and what ſhould be? What obſeruation ſo worthy as that which is both raiſed from God, and directed to him? If the proprietie which your Highneſſe iuſtly hath in the Worke, and Author, may draw your Princely eyes and heart the rather to theſe holy Speculations, your Seruant ſhall bee happier in this fauour, then in all your outward bountie; as one to whom your ſpirituall progreſſe deſerues to bee dearer then his owne life; and whoſe daily ſuit is, that God would guide your ſteps aright in this ſlippery Age, and continue to reioyce all good hearts in the view of your gratious proceedings.

THE FIRST BOOKE.

The Creation.

WHat can I ſee, O God, in thy creation, but miracles of wonders? Thou madeſt ſomthing of nothing, and of that ſomething all things. Thou which waſt without a beginning, gaueſt a beginning to Time, and to the World in time. It is the praiſe of vs men, if when wee haue Matter, wee can giue faſhion: thou gaueſt a being to the Matter, without forme; thou gaueſt a forme to that Matter, and a glory to that Forme. If wee can but finiſh a ſlight and vnperfect Matter according to a former patterne, it is the height of our skill: but to begin that which neuer was, whereof there was no example, whereto there was no inclination, wherein there was no poſsibilitie of that which it ſhould be, is proper only to ſuch power as thine; the infinite power of an infinite Creator: with vs, not ſo much as a thought can ariſe without ſome Matter; but here with thee, all Matter ariſes from nothing. How eaſie is it for thee to repaire all out of ſomething, which couldeſt thus fetch all out of nothing? wherein can wee now diſtruſt thee, that haſt proued thy ſelfe thus Omnipotent? Behold: to haue made the leaſt Clod of nothing, is more aboue wonder, then to multiply a World; but now the Matter doth not more praiſe thy power, then the Forme thy wiſdome: what beauty is here? what order? what order in working? what beauty in the worke?

Thou mighteſt haue made all the World perfect in an inſtant, but thou wouldeſt not. That Will which cauſed thee to create, is reaſon enough why thou didſt thus create. How ſhould we deliberate in our actions, which are ſo ſubiect to imperfection? ſince it pleaſed thine infinite perfection (not out of neede) to take leaſure. Neither did thy wiſdome herein proceede in time onely, but in degrees: At firſt thou madeſt nothing abſolute; firſt thou madeſt things which ſhould haue being without Life; then thoſe which ſhould haue life and being; laſtly, thoſe which haue Being, Life, Reaſon: So we our ſelues in the ordinary courſe of generation, firſt liue the life of Vegetation, then of Senſe, of Reaſon afterwards. That inſtant wherein the Heauen and the Earth were created in their rude Matter, there was neither Day nor Light, but preſently thou madeſt both Light and Day. Whiles we haue this example of thine, how vainely do we hope to be perfect at once? It it well for vs, if through many degrees wee can riſe to our conſummation.

hall, J.

But(alas) what was the very Heauen it ſelfe without Light? how confuſed? how formleſſe? like to a goodly Body without a Soule, like a ſoule without thee. Thou art Light, and in thee is no darkneſſe. Oh how incomprehenſibly glorious is the light that is in thee, ſince one glimpſe of this created light, gaue ſo liuely a glory to all thy workmanſhip! This, euen the brute Creatures can behold; That, not the very Angels. That ſhines forth onely to the other ſupreme World of immortalitie, this to the baſeſt part of thy creation. There is one cauſe of our darkneſſe on earth, and of the vtter darkneſſe in Hell; the reſtraint of thy light. Shine thou, O God, into the vaſt corners of my ſoule, and in thy light I ſhall ſee light.

But whence, O God, was that firſt light? the Sunne was not made till the fourth day; light the firſt. If man had been, he might haue ſeene all lightſome; but whence it had comne he could not haue ſeene; as in ſome great Pond, we ſee the bankes full, we ſee not the Springs from whence that water ariſeth. Thou madeſt the Sunne, madeſt the Light, without the Sunne, before the Sunne, that ſo Light might depend vpon thee, and not vpon thy Creature. Thy power will not be limited to meanes. It was eaſie to thee to make an Heauen without Sunne, Light without an Heauen, Day without a Sunne, Time without a day: It is good reaſon thou ſhouldeſt be the Lord of thine owne workes: All meanes ſerue thee: why doe we weake wretches diſtruſt thee, in the want of thoſe meanes, which thou canſt either command, or forbeare? How plainly wouldeſt thou teach vs, that we Creatures need not one another, ſo long as we haue thee? One day we ſhall haue light againe without the Sun. Thou ſhalt be our Sunne; thy preſence ſhall be our light: Light is ſowne for the righteous. The Sunne and Light is but for the World below it ſelfe; thine onely for aboue. Thou giueſt this light to the Sunne, which the Sunne giues to the World: That light which thou ſhalt once giue vs, ſhall make vs ſhine like the Sunne in glory.

Now this light which for three daies was thus diſperſed through the whole heauens, it pleaſed thee at laſt to gather and vnite into one body of the Sun. The whole Heauen was our Sun, before the Sun was created: but now one Starre muſt be the Treaſury of Light to the Heauen and Earth. How thou loueſt the vnion and reduction of all things of one kind to their own head and centre! ſo the Waters muſt by thy command be gathered into one place, the ſea; ſo the vpper Waters muſt be ſeuered by theſe Aerie limits from the lower: ſo heauy ſubſtances haſten downeward, and light mount vp: ſo the generall light of the firſt dayes muſt be called into the compaſſe of one Sunne, ſo thou wilt once gather thine Elect, from all coaſts of Heauen, to the participation of one glory. Why doe we abide our thonghts and affections ſcattered from thee, from thy Saints, from thine anointed? Oh let this light which thou haſt now ſpread abroad in the hearts of all thine, once meet in thee: We are as thy Heauens in this their firſt imperfection; be thou our Sunne, vnto which our light may be gathered.

Yet this light was by thee inter-changed with darknes, which thou mightſt as eaſily haue commanded to be perpetuall. The continuance, euen of the beſt things, cloyeth & wearieth: there is nothing but thy ſelfe, wherein there is not ſatiety. So pleaſing is the viciſſitude of things, that the inter-courſe euen of thoſe occurrents which in their own nature are leſſe worthy, giues more contentment, then the vn-altered eſtate of better. The day dyes into night, and riſes into the morning againe, that we might not expect any ſtabilitie here below, but in perpetual ſucceſſions: It is alwayes day with thee aboue: the night ſauoureth only of mortality: Why are we not here ſpiritually as we ſhall be hereafter? Since thou haſt made vs Children of the light, and of the day, teach vs to walke euer in the light of thy preſence, not in the darkneſſe of error and vnbeliefe.

Now in this thine inlightned frame, how fitly, how wiſely are all the parts diſpoſed; that the Method of the Creation might anſwere the Matter, and the Forme both. Behold all purity aboue; belowe, the dregs and lees of all. The higher I goe, the more perfection; each Element ſuperior to other, not more in place then dignity; that by theſe ſtaires of aſcending perfection, our thoughts might climbe vnto the top of all glory, and might know thine imperiall Heauen no leſſe glorious aboue the viſible, then thoſe aboue the earth. Oh how miſerable is the place of our pilgrimage, in reſpect of our home! Let my ſoule tread a while in the ſteps of thine owne proceedings; and ſo thinke as thou wroughteſt: When we would deſcribe a man, we begin not at the feet, but the head: The head of thy Creation is the heauen; how high? how ſpatious? how glorious? It is a wonder that we can looke vp to ſo admirable a height, and that the very eye is not tyred in the way. If this aſcending line could be drawne right forwards, ſome that haue calculated curiouſly, haue found it fiue hundred yeares iourney vnto the ſtarrie Heauen. I doe not examine their Art; O Lord I wonder rather at thine, which haſt drawne ſo large a line about this little point of earth: for in the plaineſt rules of Art and experience the Compaſſe muſt needs be ſix times as much as halfe the height. We thinke one Iland great, but the Earth vnmeaſurably. If wee were in that Heauen with theſe eyes, the whole earth (were it equally enlightned) would ſeeme as little to vs, as now the leaſt ſtarre in the firmament ſeemes to vs vpon Earth: And indeed, how few Starres are ſo little as it? And yet how many void and ample ſpaces are there beſide all the Starres? The hugeneſſe of this thy worke, O God, is little inferior for admiration to the maieſty of it. But oh what a glorious heauen is this which thou haſt ſpred ouer our heads? With how precious a Vault haſt thou walled in this our inferiour world? What worlds of light haſt thou ſet aboue vs? Thoſe things which we ſee, are wondrous? but thoſe which wee beleeue and ſee not, are yet more. Thou doſt but ſet out theſe vnto view, to ſhew vs what there is within. How proportionable are thy workes to thy ſelfe? King erect not cottages, but ſet forth their magnificence in ſumptuous buildings: ſo haſt thou done, O King of glory. If the loweſt pauement of that Heauen of thine be ſo glorious, what ſhall wee thinke of the better parts yet vnſeene? And if this Sun of thine bee of ſuch brightneſſe and maieſtie, oh what is the glory of the Maker of it? And yet if ſome other of thy Starres were let downe as low as it, thoſe other Starres would be Sunnes to vs; which now thou hadſt rather to haue admired in their diſtance. And if ſuch a Skie be prepared for the vſe and benefit euen of thine Enemies alſo vpon Earth, how happy ſhall thoſe eternall Tabernacles be, which thou haſt ſequeſtred for thine owne?

Behold then in this high and ſtately building of thine, I ſee three ſtages; This loweſt Heauen for Fowles, for Vapours, for Meteors: The ſecond, for the Starres: The third, for thine Angels and Saints. The firſt is thine outward Court, open for all: The ſecond is the body of thy couered Temple, wherein are thoſe Candles of Heauen perpetually burning: The third is thine Holy of Holies. In the firſt is Tumult and Vanity: In the ſecond, Immutability and Reſt: In the third Glory and Bleſſedneſſe. The firſt we feele; the ſecond wee ſee; the third wee beleeue. In theſe two lower is no felicitie; for neither the Fowles, nor Starres are happy. It is the third heauen alone, where thou, O bleſſed Trinity, enioyeſt thy ſelfe, and thy glorified ſpirits enioy thee. It is the manifeſtation of thy glorious preſence that makes Heauen to be it ſelfe. This is the priuiledge of thy Children: that they here ſeeing thee (which art inuiſible) by the eye of faith, haue already begunne that heauen which the perfect ſight of thee ſhall make perfect aboue. Let my ſoule then let theſe heauens alone, till it may ſee, as it is ſeene; That we may deſcend to this loweſt and meaneſt Region of Heauen, wherewith our ſenſes are more acquainted. What maruels doe euen here meet with vs? There are thy Clouds thy bottles of raine, Veſſels as thinne as the liquor which is contained in them: there they hang, and moue, though weighty with their burden: How they are vpheld, and why they fall, here, and now, we know not, and wonder. Theſe thou makeſt one while as ſome Aerie Seas to hold water: another while, as ſome Aerie Furnaces whence thou ſcattereſt the ſudden fires vnto all the parts of the Earth, aſtoniſhing the World with the fearfull noyſe of that eruption: out of the midſt of water thou fetcheſt fire, and hard ſtones out of the midſt of thin vapours; another while as ſome ſteele-glaſſes, wherein the Sunne lookes and ſhewes his face in the variety of thoſe colours which he hath not; There thy are ſtreames of light, blazing and falling Starres, fires darted vp and down in many formes, hollow openings, (and as it were) Gulfes in the skie, bright circles about the Moone, and other Planets, Snowes, Haile: In all which it is enough to admire thine hand, though we cannot ſearch out thine action. There are thy ſubtill Windes, which we heare and feele, yet neither can ſee their ſubſtance, now know their cauſes: whence and whither they paſſe, and what they are thou knoweſt. There are thy Fowles of all ſhapes, colours, notes, and natures: whilſt I compare theſe with the inhatants of that other heauen, I finde thoſe Starres, and ſpirits like one another; Theſe Meteors and fowles, in as many varieties, as there are ſeuerall creatures. Why is this? Is it becauſe Man (for whoſe ſake theſe are made) delights in change; thou in conſtancie? Or is it, that in theſe thou mayeſt ſhew thine owne skill, and their imperfection? There is no varietie in that which is perfect, becauſe there is but one perfection, and ſo much ſhall wee grow nearer to perfectneſſe, by how much wee draw nearer to vnity, and vniformitie. From thence, if we goe downe to the great deepe, the Wombe of moiſture, the Well of fountaines, the great Pond of the world, wee know not whether to wonder at the Element it ſelfe, or the gueſts which it containes. How doth that ſea of thine roare, and ſome and ſwell, as if it would ſwallow vp the earth? Thou ſtayeſt the rage of it by an inſenſible violence; and by a naturall miracle confineſt his waues, why it moues, and why it ſtayes, it is to vs equally wonderfull: what liuing Mountaines (ſuch are thy Whales) rowle vp and down in thoſe fearefull billowes: for greatneſſe of number, hugeneſſe of quantitie, ſtrangeneſſe of ſhapes, varietie of faſhions, neither aire nor earth can compare with the waters. I ſay nothing of thy hid treaſures which thy wiſedome hath repoſed in the bowels of the earth and ſea; How ſecretly, and how baſely are they laid vp? ſecretly, that we might not ſeeke them; baſely, that wee might not ouer-eſteeme them: I neede not digge ſo low as theſe metals, mineries, quarries, which yeeld riches enough of obſeruation to the ſoule. How many millions of wonders doth the very face of the earth offer me; Which of theſe Herbs, Flowers, Trees, Leaues, Seeds, Fruits, is there; what Beaſt, what Worme, wherein we may not ſee the footſteps of a Deity? Wherein wee may not reade infiniteneſſe of power, of skill: and muſt be forced to confeſſe, that hee which made the Angels and Starres of heauen, made alſo the vermine on the earth? O God the heart of man is too ſtrait to admire enough, euen that which he treads vpon! What ſhall wee ſay to thee the Maker of all theſe? O Lord, how wonderfull are thy workes in all the world? In wiſedome haſt thou made them all. And in all theſe thou ſpakeſt and they were done. Thy will is thy word, and thy word is thy deede. Our tongue, and hand, and heart are different: all are one in thee; which art ſimply one, and infinite. Here needed no helpes, no inſtruments: what could be preſent with the Eternall? what needed, or what could be added to the infinite? Thine hand is nor ſhortned, thy word is ſtill equally effectually; ſay thou the word, and my ſoule ſhall be made new againe: ſay thou the word, and my body ſhall bee repaired from his duſt. For all things obey thee, O Lord, why doe I not yeeld to the word of thy counſell; ſince I muſt yeeld, as all thy creatures, to the word of thy command.

Of Man.

BVT (O God) what a little Lord haſt thou made ouer this great World? The leaſt corne of ſand is not ſo ſmall to the whole Earth as Man is to the Heauen: when I ſee the Heauens, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres; O God, what is man? who would thinke thou ſhouldeſt make all theſe Creatures for one? and that one, well neere the leaſt of all? Yet none, but hee, can ſee what thou haſt done; none but he can admire, and adore thee in what he ſeeth; how had he need to do nothing but this, ſince he alone muſt do it? Certainly, the price and vertue of things conſiſt not in the quantity: one diamond is more worth then many Quarries of ſtone, one Loadſtone hath more vertue then Mountaines of earth: It is lawfull for vs to praſe thee in our ſelues: All thy creation hath not more wonder in it, then one of vs: other Creatures thou madeſt by a ſimple command; Man, not without a diuine conſultation: others at once; Man, thou didſt firſt forme, then inſpire: others in ſeuerall ſhapes like to none but themſelues; Man, after thine owne Image: others with qualities fit for ſeruice; Man, for dominion. Man had his name from thee; They had their names from Man. How ſhould wee be conſecrated to thee aboue all others ſince thou haſt beſtowed more coſt on vs then others? What ſhall I admire firſt? Thy prouidence in the time of our Creation? Or thy power and wiſedome in the act? Firſt, thou madeſt the great houſe of the World, and furniſhedſt it: then thou broughteſt in thy Tenant to poſſeſſe it. The bare wals had beene too good for vs, but thy loue was aboue our deſert: Thou that madeſt the earth ready for vs before we were, haſt by the ſame mercy prepared a place in heauen for vs whiles wee are on earth. The ſtage was firſt fully prepared, then was man brought forth thither, as an Actor or Spectator: that he might neither be idle nor diſcontent: behold, thou hadſt addreſſed an earth for vſe, and Heauen for contemplation: after thou hadſt drawne that large reall Map of the World; thou didſt thus abridge it into this little table of Man; hee alone conſiſts of Heauen and earth; Soule and body. Euen this earthly part, which is vile in compariſon of the other; as it is thine (O God) I dare admire it, though I can neglect it as mine owne; for lo, this heape of Earth hath an outward reference to Heauen: other Creatures grouell downe to their earth, and haue all their ſenſes intent vpon it; this is reared vp towards Heauen, and hath no more power to looke beſide Heauen, then to tread beſide the Earth. Vnto this euery part hath his wonder. The head is neareſt to heauen, as in place, ſo in reſemblance; both for roundneſſe of figure, and for thoſe diuine gueſts which haue their ſeat in it; There dwell thoſe maieſticall Powers of reaſon, which make a Man; all the ſenſes as they haue their originall from thence, ſo they doe all agree there to maniſeſt the vertue: how goodly proportions haſt thou ſet in the face? ſuch as tho oft times we can giue no reaſon when they pleaſe, yet tranſport vs to admiration. What liuing glaſſes are thoſe which thou haſt placed in the midſt of this viſage, whereby all obiects from far are clearely repreſented to the minde? and becauſe their tendernes lies open to dangers, how haſt thou defenced them with hollow bones, and with prominent browes, and lids? And leſt they ſhould be too much bent on what they ought not, thou haſt giuen them peculiar nerues to pull them vp towards the ſeat of their reſt. What a tongue haſt thou giuen him; the inſtrument not of taſt onely, but of ſpeech; how ſweet & excellent voyces are formed by that little looſe filme of fleſh? what an incredible ſtrength haſt thou giuen to the weake bones of the iawes? What a comely and towre-like necke, therefore moſt ſinewy, becauſe ſmalleſt? And leſt I be infinite, what able armes and actiue hands haſt thou framed him, whereby he can frame all things to his owne conceit? In euery part, beauty, ſtrength, conuenience meet together. Neither is there any whereof our weakneſſe cannot giue reaſon, why it ſhould be no otherwiſe. How haſt thou diſpoſed of all the inward veſſels, for all offices of life, nouriſhment, egeſtion, generation? No veine, ſinew, arterie is idle. There is no piece in this exquiſite frame, whereof the place, vſe, forme, doth not admit wonder, and exceed it: Yet this body if it be compared to the ſoule, what is it, but as a clay wall that encompaſſes a treaſure; as a woodden boxe of a Ieweller; as a coorſe caſe to a rich inſtrument; or as a maske to a beautifull face? Man was made laſt, becauſe he was worthieſt. The ſoule was inſpired laſt, becauſe yet more noble; If the body haue this honor to be the companion of the Soule, yet withall it is the drudge. If it bee the inſtrument, yet alſo the clog of that diuine part. The companion for life, the drudge for ſeruice, the inſtrument for action, the clog in reſpect of contemplation. Theſe externall workes are effected by it, the internall which are more noble, hindred; contrary to the bird which ſings moſt in her cage, but flyes moſt and higheſt at libertie. This my ſoule teaches me of it ſelfe, that it ſelfe cannot conceiue how capable, how actiue it is. It can paſſe by her nimble thoughts from heauen to earth in a moment: it can be all things, can comprehend all things; know that which is; and conceiue that which neuer was, neuer ſhal be. Nothing can fill it, but thou which art infinite: nothing can limit it, but thou which art euery-where. O God which madeſt it, repleniſh it, poſſeſſe it, dwel thou in it, which haſt appointed it to dwell in clay. The bodie was made of earth common to his fellowes; the ſoule inſpired immediately from God. The bodie lay ſenſeleſſe vpon the earth like it ſelfe: the breath of liues gaue it what it is; and that breath was from thee. Senſe, motion, reaſon, are infuſed into it, at once. From whence then was this quickening breath? No ayre, no earth, no water was here vſed to giue helpe to this Worke: Thou that breathedſt vpon man, and gaueſt him the Holy Spirit; didſt alſo breathe vpon the bodie and gaueſt it a liuing Spirit; wee are beholden to nothing but thee for our ſoule. Our fleſh is from fleſh, our ſpirit is from the God of ſpirits. How ſhould our ſoules riſe vp to thee, and fixe themſelues in their thoughts vpon thee, who alone created them in their infuſion, and infuſed them in their creation? How ſhould they long to returne backe to the Fountaine of their being, and Author of being glorious? Why may wee not ſay that this ſoule as it came from thee, ſo it is like thee? as thou, ſo it, is one, immateriall, immortall, vnderſtanding ſpirit, diſtinguiſhed into three powers, which all make vp one ſpirit. So thou the wiſe Creator of all things, wouldeſt haue ſome things to reſemble their Creator. Theſe other creatures are al body; Man is body and ſpirit; the Angels are all ſpirit not without a kind of ſpirituall compoſition; Thou art alone after thine owne manner, ſimple, glorious, infinite; no creature can be like thee in thy proper being; becauſe it is a creature; How ſhould our finite, weake compounded nature, giue any perfect reſemblance of thine? Yet of all viſible creatures thou vouchſafeſt Man the neareſt correſpondence to thee: not ſo much in the naturall faculties, as in thoſe diuine graces, wherewith thou beautifieſt his ſoule.

Our knowledge, holineſſe, righteouſneſſe, was like the firſt copie from which they were drawne. Behold, we were not more like thee in theſe, then now we are vnlike our ſelues in their loſſe. O God we now praiſe our ſelues to our ſhame, for the better wee were we are the worſe; as the ſonnes of ſome prodigall, or tainted Anceſtors, tell of the Lands, and Lordſhips which were once theirs. Onely doe thou whet our deſires anſwerably to the readineſſe of thy mercies, that we may redeeme what wee haue loſt; that we may recouer in thee, what we haue loſt in our ſelues. The fault ſhall be ours, if our damage proue not beneficiall.

I doe not finde, that Man thus framed, found the want of an helper. His fruition of God gaue him fulneſſe of contentment; the ſweetneſſe which hee found in the contemplation of this new workmanſhip, and the glory of the Author, did ſo take him vp, that he had neither leaſure nor cauſe of complaint. If Man had craued an helper, hee had grudged at the condition of his Creation, and had queſtioned that which hee had; perfection of being. But he that gaue him his being, and knew him better then himſelfe, thinkes of giuing him comfort in the creature, whiles he ſought none but in his Maker: He ſees our wants, and fore-caſts our reliefe, when wee thinke our ſelues too happy to complaine: How ready will he be to helpe our neceſſities, that thus prouides for our perfection?

God giues the nature to his creatures: Man muſt giue the name; that hee might ſee they were made for him, they ſhall bee to him, what he will. In ſtead of their firſt homage, they are preſented to their new Lord, and muſt ſee of whom they hold. He that was ſo carefull of mans ſoueraigntie in his innocence, how can hee bee careleſſe of his ſafety in his renouation?

If God had giuen them their names, it had not bin ſo great a praiſe of Adams memory to recall them, as it was now of his iudgement (at firſt ſight) to impoſe them: he ſaw the inſide of all the creatures at firſt; (his Poſteritie ſees but their skins euer ſince;) and by this knowledge he fitted their names to their diſpoſitions. All that he ſaw were fit to be his ſeruants, none to bee his companions. The ſame God that findes the want, ſupplyes it. Rather then Mans innocencie ſhall want an outward comfort, God will begin a new creation. Not out of the Earth, which was the matter of Man, not out of the inferiour creatures, which were the ſeruants of Man, but out of himſelfe for deareneſſe, for equalitie. Doubtleſſe ſuch was Mans power of obedience, that if God had bidden him yeeld vp his rib, waking, for his vſe, hee had done it cheerefully: but the bounty of God was ſo abſolute, that he would not ſo much as conſult with mans will, to make him happy. As man knew not while he was made, ſo ſhall he not know while his other ſelfe is made out of him: that the comfort might be greater, which was ſeene before it was expected.

If the Woman ſhould haue beene made, not without the paine or will of the Man, ſhee might haue beene vpbraided with her dependance, and obligation. Now ſhee owes nothing but to her Creator: The ribbe of Adam ſleeping, can challenge no more of her, then the earth can of him. It was an happy change to Adam, of a rib, for an helper; what helpe did that bone giue to his ſide? God had not made it, if it had beene ſuperfluous: and yet if Man could not haue beene perfit without it, it had not beene taken out.

Many things are vſefull and conuenient, which are not neceſſarie: and if God had ſeene Man might not want it, how eaſie had it beene for him, which made the Woman of that bone, to turne the fleſh into another bone? But hee ſaw man could not complaine of the want of that bone, which he had ſo multiplyed, ſo animated.

O God, wee can neuer bee loſers by thy changes, wee haue nothing but what is thine: take from vs thine owne, when thou wilt, wee are ſure thou canſt not but giue vs better.

Of Paradiſe.

MAn could no ſooner ſee, then hee ſaw himſelfe happy: His eye-ſight and reaſon were both perfect at once, and the obiects of both were able to make him as happy as he would. When hee firſt opened his eyes, hee ſaw heauen aboue him, earth vnder him, the creatures about him, God before him, hee knew what all theſe things meant as if he had beene long acquainted with them all: Hee ſaw the heauens glorious, but farre off: his Maker thought it requiſite to fit him with a Paradiſe nearer home. If God had appointed him immediately to heauen, his body had beene ſuperfluous; It was fit his body ſhould bee anſwered with an earthen Image of that heauen, which was for his ſoule: had Man beene made onely for contemplation, it would haue ſerued as well to haue beene placed in ſome vaſt deſart, on the top of ſome barren Mountaine; But the ſame power which gaue him a heart to meditate, gaue him hands to worke; and worke fit for his hands. Neither was it the purpoſe of the Creator, that Man ſhould but liue: pleaſure may ſtand with innocence; he that reioyced to ſee all he had made to bee good, reioyceth to ſee all that hee had made to be well. God loues to ſee his creatures happy; Our lawfull delight is his: they know not God, that thinke to pleaſe him with making themſelues miſerable.

The Idolaters thought it a fit ſeruice for Baal, to cut and launce themſelues; neuer any holy man lookt for thankes from the True God, by wronging himſelfe. Euery Earth was not fit for Adam, but a Garden; a Paradiſe. What excellent pleaſures, and rare varieties haue men found in Gardens planted by the hands of men? And yet all the world of men cannot make one twigge or leafe, or ſpire of graſſe: When hee that made the matter, vndertakes the faſhion, how muſt it needs be beyond our capacitie, excellent? No herbe, no flowre, no tree was wanting there, that might be for ornament or vſe; whether for ſight, or for ſent, or for taſte. The bounty of God raught further then to neceſſitie, euen to comfort and recreation: Why are wee niggardly to our ſelues, when God is liberall? But for all this; if God had not there conuerſed with man, no abundance could haue made him bleſſed.

Yet behold: that which was mans ſtore-houſe was alſo his worke-houſe; his pleaſure was his taske: Paradiſe ſerued not onely to feed his ſenſes, but to exerciſe his hands. If happineſſe had conſiſted in doing nothing, man had not beene employed; All his delights could not haue made him happy in an idle life. Man therefore is no ſooner made, then he is ſet to worke: neither greatneſſe, nor perfection can priuiledge a folded hand; he muſt labour, becauſe he was happy; how much more wee, that wee may bee? This firſt labour of his was, as without neceſſitie, ſo without paines, without wearineſſe; how much more cheerefully we goe about our buſineſſes, ſo much nearer we come to our Paradiſe.

Neither did theſe Trees afford him onely action for his hands, but inſtruction to his heart: for here hee ſaw Gods Sacraments grow before him; All other trees had a naturall vſe; theſe two in the middeſt of the Garden, a ſpirituall. Life is the act of the Soule, Knowledge the life of the Soule; the Tree of Knowledge, and the Tree of Life then, were ordained as earthly helpes of the ſpirituall part: Perhaps hee which ordained the end, immortalitie of life; did appoint this Fruit as the meanes of that life. It is not for vs to enquire after the life we had; and the meanes we ſhould haue had. I am ſure it ſerued to nouriſh the ſoule by a liuely repreſentation of that liuing Tree, whoſe fruit is eternall life, and whoſe leaues ſerue to heale the Nations.

O infinite mercy! Man ſaw his Sauiour before him ere hee had neede of a Sauiour; he ſaw in whom hee ſhould recouer an heauenly life, ere he loſt the earthly; but after he had taſted of the Tree of Knowledge, he might not taſte of the Tree of Life; That immortall food was not for a mortall ſtomach: Yet then did he moſt ſauour that inuiſible Tree of Life, when he was moſt reſtrained from the other.

O Sauiour, none but a Sinner can relliſh thee: My taſte hath beene enough ſeaſoned with the forbidden fruit, to make it capable of thy ſweetneſſe; Sharpen thou as well the ſtomach of my ſoule by repenting, by beleeuing: ſo ſhall I eate and in deſpite of Adam liue for euer. The one Tree was for confirmation; the other for tryall: one ſhewed him what life he ſhould haue; the other what knowledge he ſhould not deſire to haue: Alas, he that knew all other things, knew not this one thing, that hee knew enough: how Diuine a thing is knowledge, whereof euen Innocencie it ſelfe is ambitious? Satan knew what he did: If this bait had beene gold, or honour, or pleaſure, Man had contemned it: who can hope to auoid error, when euen mans perfection is miſtaken? he lookt for ſpeculatiue knowledge, hee ſhould haue looked for experimentall: hee thought it had been good to know euill: Good was large enough to haue perfected his knowledge, and therein his bleſſedneſſe.

All that God made was good, and the Maker of them much more good; they good in their kindes, he good in himſelfe. It would not content him to know God, and his creatures; his curioſitie affected to know that which God neuer made, euill of ſinne, and euill of death, which indeed himſelfe made by deſiring to know them; now wee know well euill enough, and ſmart with knowing it. How deare hath this leſſon coſt vs that in ſome caſes it is better to be ignorant; and yet doe the ſonnes of Eue inherit this ſaucy appetite of their Grand-mother: How many thouſand ſoules miſcarie with the preſumptuous affectation of forbidden knowledge!

O God, thou haſt reuealed more then wee can know, enough to make vs happy, teach me a ſober knowledge, and a contented ignorance.

Paradiſe was made for Man, yet there I ſee the Serpent; What maruell is it if my corruption find the ſerpent in my Cloſet, in my Table, in my bed, when our holy Parents found him in the midſt of Paradiſe? No ſooner hee is entred, but hee tempteth: he can no more be idle, then harmleſſe; I doe not ſee him at any other Tree; hee knew there was no danger in the reſt, I ſee him at the Tree forbidden. How true a Serpent is hee in euery point; In his inſinuation to the place; in his choice of the Tree, in his aſſault of the Woman, in his plauſibleneſſe of ſpeech to auoid terror, in his queſtion to moue doubt, in his reply to worke diſtruſt, in his proteſtation of ſafety, in his ſuggeſtion to enuie and diſcontent, in his promiſe of gaine!

And if he were ſo cunning at the firſt, what ſhall we thinke of him now, after ſo many thouſand yeares experience? Onely thou (O God) and theſe Angels that ſee thy face, are wiſer then he; I doe not aske why, when he left his goodneſſe, thou didſt not bereaue him of his skill? Still thou wouldeſt haue him an Angell, though an euill one: And thou knoweſt how to ordaine his craft to thine owne glory; I doe not deſire thee to abate of his ſubtilty, but to make mee wiſe; Let mee begge it without preſumption, make me wiſer then Adam; euen thine Image which he bore, made him not (through his owne weakeneſſe) wiſe enough to obey thee; thou offeredſt him all Fruits, and reſtrainedſt but one; Satan offered him but one, and reſtrained not the reſt: when hee chooſe rather to be at Satans feeding, then thine, it was iuſt with thee to turne him out of thy gates with a curſe: why ſhouldeſt thou feed a Rebell at thine owne boord?

And yet we tranſgreſſe daily and thou ſhutteſt not heauen againſt vs: how is it that wee finde more mercy then our fore-father? His ſtrength is worthy of ſeuerity, our weakeneſſe finds pity. That God, from whoſe face he fled in the Garden, now makes him with ſhame to flie out of the Garden: thoſe Angels that ſhould haue kept him, now keepe the gates of Paradiſe againſt him; It is not ſo eaſie to recouer happineſſe, as to keepe it, or leeſe it: Yea the ſame cauſe that draue Man from Paradiſe, hath alſo withdrawne Paradiſe from the World?

That fierie ſword did not defend it againſt thoſe waters wherewith the ſinnes of men drowned the glory of that place: neither now doe I care to ſeeke where that Paradiſe was, which we loſt: I know where that Paradiſe is, which wee muſt care to ſeeke, and hope to finde. As man was the Image of God, ſo was that earthly Paradiſe an Image of Heauen; both the Images are defaced, both the firſt Patternes are eternall: Adam was in the firſt, and ſtayed not: In the ſecond, is the ſecond Adam which ſaid, This day ſhalt thou be with me in Paradiſe. There was that choſen Veſſell, and heard, and ſaw what could not be expreſſed: by how much the third heauen exceeds the richeſt Earth; ſo much doth that Paradiſe, whereto wee aſpire, exceed that which wee haue loſt.

Of Cain and Abel.

Looke now (O my ſoule) vpon the two firſt Brethren, perhaps Twins; and wonder at their contrary diſpoſitions and eſtates: If the priuiledges of Nature had beene worth any thing, the firſt borne Child ſhould not haue beene a Reprobate.

Now that we may aſcribe all to free Grace, the elder is a Murderer, the yonger a Saint; though goodneſſe may bee repaired in our ſelues, yet it cannot bee propagated to ours: Now might Adam ſee the Image of himſelfe in Caine, for after his owne Image begot he him; Adam ſlue his Poſteritie, Caine his Brother: we are too like one another in that wherein we are vnlike to God: Euen the cleaneſt graine ſends forth that chaffe from which it was fanned, ere the ſowing: yet is this Cain a poſſeſſion, the ſame Eue that miſtooke the fruit of the Garden, miſtooke alſo the fruit of her owne body, her hope deceiued her in both; ſo, many good names are ill beſtowed, and our comfortable expectations in earthly things doe not ſeldome diſappoint vs.

Doubtleſſe, their education was holy, For Adam though in Paradiſe he could not be innocent, yet was a good man out of Paradiſe; his ſinne and fall now made him circumſpect, and ſince hee ſaw that his act had bereaued them of that Image of God, which he once had for them,he could not but labor by all holy indeauours to repaire it in them, that ſo his care might make amends for his treſpaſſe. How plaine is it, that euen good breeding cannot alter deſtinie? That which is crooked can none make ſtraight; who would thinke that Brethren, and but two Brethren, ſhould not loue each other? Diſperſed loue growes weake,and fewneſſe of obiects vſeth to vnite affections: If but two Brothers be left aliue of many, they thinke that the loue all the reſt ſhould ſuruiue in them; and now the beames of their affection are ſo much the hotter, becauſe they reflect mutually in a right line vpon each other: yet behold, here are but two Brothers in a World; and one is the Butcher of the other. Who can wonder at diſſentions amongſt thouſands of brethren,when he ſees ſo deadly oppoſition betwixt two, the firſt roots of brotherhood: who can hope to liue plauſibly & ſecurely amongſt ſo many Cains, when he ſees one Cain the death of one Abel? The ſame Deuill that ſet enmity betwixt Man and God; ſets enmity betwixt Man and Man; and yet God ſaid, I will put enmity betweene thy ſeed and her ſeed. Our hatred of the Serpent and his ſeed is from God: Their hatred of the holy Seed is from the Serpent: Behold here at once, is one perſon, the Seed of the Woman and of the Serpent: Cains naturall parts are of the Woman; his vitious qualities of the Serpent: The Woman gaue him to be a brother, the Serpent to be a man-ſlayer; all vncharitableneſſe, all quarrels are of one Author: we cannot entertaine Wrath, and not giue place to the Deuill. Certainly, ſo deadly an act muſt needs be deeply grounded.

What then was the occaſion of this capitall malice? Abels ſacrifice is accepted; what was this to Cain? Cains is reiected; what could Abel remedie this? Oh enuie,the corroſiue of all ill minds; and the roote of all deſperate actions: the ſame cauſe that moued Satan to tempt the firſt Man, to deſtroy himſelfe,and his poſteritie, the ſame moues the ſecond Man to deſtroy the third.

It ſhould haue beene Cains ioy to ſee his brother accepted; It ſhould haue beene his ſorrow, to ſee that himſelfe had deſerued a reiection; his Brothers example ſhould haue excited, and directed him: Could Abel haue ſtayed Gods fire from deſcending? Or ſhould he (if he could) reiect Gods acceptation,and diſpleaſe his Maker,to content a Brother? Was Cain euer the farther from a bleſſing, becauſe his Brother obtained mercy? How proud and fooliſh is malice? which growes thus mad,for no other cauſe, but becauſe God, or Abel is not leſſe good; It hath beene an old and happy danger to be holy; Indifferent actions muſt be carefull to auoid offence; But I care not what Deuill or what Cain be angry that I doe good, or receiue good.

There was neuer any nature without enuie; Euery man is borne a Cain; hating that goodneſſe in another, which he neglecteth in himſelfe. There was neuer enuie that was not bloody; for if it eate not anothers heart, it will eate our owne: but vnleſſe it be reſtrained, it will ſurely feed it ſelfe with the blood of others, oft-times in act, alwayes in affection. And that God,which(in good) accepts the will for the deed,condemnes the will for the deed in euill. If there bee an euill heart, there will bee an euill eye; and if both theſe, there will be an euill hand.

How early did Martyrdome come into the world? the firſt man that dyed, dyed for Religion; who dare meaſure Gods loue by outward euents, when hee ſees wicked Cain ſtanding ouer bleeding Abel; whoſe ſacrifice was firſt accepted, and now himſelfe is ſacrificed? Death was denounced to man as a curſe; yet behold, it firſt lights vpon a Saint: how ſoone was it altered by the mercy of that iuſt hand which inflicted it? If Death had beene euill, and Life good, Cain had beene ſlaine, and Abel had ſuruiued; now that it begins with him that God loues, O Death, where is thy ſting?

Abel ſayes nothing, his blood cryes: Euery drop of innocent blood hath a tongue, and is not onely vocall, but importunate: what a noyſe then did the blood of my Sauiour make in Heauen? who was himſelfe the Shepheard and the Sacrifice; the Man that was offered, and the God to whom it was offered; The Spirit that heard both, ſayes, It ſpake better things then the blood of Abel. Abels blood called for reuenge, his for mercy. Abels pleaded his owne innocency, his the ſatisfaction for all the beleeuing world: Abels procured Cains puniſhment, his freed all repentant ſoules from puniſhment; better things indeed, then the blood of Abel. Better, and therefore that which Abels blood ſayd, was good: It is good, that God ſhould be auenged of ſinners. Execution of iuſtice vpon offenders, is no leſſe good, then rewards of goodneſſe.

No ſooner doth Abels blood ſpeake vnto God, then God ſpeakes to Cain; There is no wicked man to whom God ſpeakes not, if not to his eare, yet to his heart: what ſpeech was this? Not an accuſation, but an inquirie; yet ſuch an inquirie as would inferre an accuſation. God loues to haue a ſinner accuſe himſelfe, and therefore hath he ſet his Deputie in the breſt of man; neither doth God loue this more then nature abhorres it: Cain anſwers ſtubbornly: The very name of Abel wounds him no leſſe, then his hand had wounded Abel; Conſciences that are without remorſe, are not without horror: wickedneſſe makes men deſperate, the Murderer is angry with God as of late for accepting his brothers oblation, ſo now for liſtning to his blood.

And now he dares anſwer God with a queſtion, Am I my brothers Keeper? where he ſhould haue ſaid, Am not I my brothers murderer? Behold, hee ſcorneth to keepe whom he feared not to kill: Good duties are baſe and troubleſome to wicked minds, whiles euen violences of euill are pleaſant. Yet this miſcreant, which neither had grace to auoyd his ſinne, nor to confeſſe it, now that he is conuinced of ſinne, and curſed for it, how he howleth, how he exclaimeth? He that cares not for the act of his ſinne, ſhall care for the ſmart of his puniſhment. The damned are weary of their torments, but in vaine. How great a madneſſe is it to complaine too late! He that would not keepe his brother, is caſt out from the protection of God; he that feared not to kill his brother, feares now, that whoſoeuer meets him will kill him. The troubled conſcience proiecteth fearefull things, and ſinne makes euen cruell men cowardly: God ſaw it was too much fauour for him to die: hee therefore wills that which Cain wills. Cain would liue; It is yeelded him, but for a curſe: how often doth God heare ſinners in anger? He ſhall liue baniſhed from God, carrying his hell in his boſome, and the brand of Gods vengeance in his fore-head: God reiects him, the Earth repines at him, men abhorre him; himſelfe now wiſhes that death which he feared, and no man dare pleaſure him with a murder; how bitter is the end of ſin, yea, without end, ſtill Cain finds that he killed himſelfe more then his brother. We ſhould neuer ſinne, if our fore-ſight were but as good as our ſenſe; The iſſue of ſinne would appeare a thouſand times more horrible then the act is pleaſant.

Of the Deluge.

THE World was growne ſo foule with ſinne, that God ſaw it was time to waſh it with a Floud. And ſo cloſe did wickednes cleaue to the Authors of it, that when they were waſht to nothing, yet it would not off: yea ſo deep did it ſticke in the very graine of the earth; that God ſaw it meet to let it ſoke long vnder the waters. So vnder the Law, the very veſſels that had touched vncleane water, muſt either be rinced, or broken. Mankind began but with one; and yet he that ſaw the firſt man, liued to ſee the Earth peopled with a world of men: yet men grew not ſo faſt as wickedneſſe. One man could ſoone and eaſily multiply a thouſand ſins, neuer Man had ſo many children: ſo that when there were men enow to ſtore the earth, there were as many ſins as would reach vp to heauen, where-vpon the waters come downe from heauen, and ſwelled vp to heauen againe; If there had not been ſo deepe a Deluge of ſin, there had been none of the waters; Frō whence then was this ſuperfluity of iniquity? Whence, but from the vnequall yoke with Infidels? Theſe mariages did not beget men, ſo much as wickedneſſe, from hence religious husbands both loſt their piety, and gained a rebellious and godleſſe generation.

That which was the firſt occaſion of ſinne, was the occaſion of the increaſe of ſinne: A woman ſeduced Adam, women betray theſe ſonnes of God: the beauty of the Apple betrayed the woman, the beauty of theſe women betrayed this holy ſeed: Eue ſaw, and luſted, ſo did they, this alſo was a forbidden fruit, they luſted, taſted, ſinned, died; the moſt ſins begin at the eyes, by them commonly Satan creeps into the heart: that ſoule can neuer be in ſafety, that hath not couenanted with his eyes.

God needed not haue giuen theſe men any warning of his iudgement; they gaue him no warning of their ſinnes, no reſpite: yet that God might approue his mercies to the very wicked; he giues them an hundred and twenty yeares reſpite of repenting: how loth is God to ſtrike, that threats ſo long! He that delights in reuenge, ſurpriſes his aduerſarie, whereas he that giues long warnings, deſires to be preuented: if we were not willfull, we ſhould neuer ſmart.

Neither doth he giue them time onely, but a faithfull teacher. It is an happy thing, when he that teacheth others is righteous; Noahs hand taught them as much as his tongue. His buſineſſe in building the Arke, was a reall ſermon to the world, wherein at once were taught mercy and life to the beleeuer; and to the rebellious deſtruction.

Me thinks I ſee thoſe monſtrous ſonnes of Lamech comming to Noah, and asking him, what he meanes by that ſtrange worke; whether he meane to ſaile vpon the drie land. To whom when he reports Gods purpoſe, and his, they goe away laughing at his idleneſſe, and tell one another, in ſport, that too much holineſſe hath made him mad; yet cannot they all flout Noah out of his faith, hee preaches, and builds, and finiſhes. Doubtleſſe more hands went to this worke then his: many a one wrought vpon the Arke, which yet was not ſaued in the Arke. Our outward Workes cannot ſaue vs, without our Faith; we may helpe to ſaue others, and periſh our ſelues: what a wonder of mercy is this that I here ſee? One poore Family called out of a World, and as it were eight graines of corne fanned from a whole barnefull of chaffe: one Hypocrite was ſaued with the reſt, for Noahs ſake; not one righteous man was ſwept away for company; For theſe few was the Earth preſerued ſtill vnder the Waters; and all kinds of Creatures vpon the Waters; which elſe had beene all deſtroyed. Still the World ſtands, for their ſakes, for whom it was preſerued; Elſe fire ſhould conſume that, which could not be clenſed by water.

This difference is ſtrange; I ſee the ſauageſt of all creatures, Lyons, Tygres, Beares, by an inſtinct from God come to ſeeke the Arke (as we ſee ſwine fore-ſeeing a ſtorme, runne home crying for ſhelter) men I ſee not; Reaſon once debauched is worſe then bruitiſhneſſe: God hath vſe euen of theſe fierce and cruell beaſts, and glory by them: euen they being created for man, muſt liue by him, though to his puniſhment: how gently doe they offer & ſubmit themſelues to their Preſeruer; renewing that obeyſance to this Repairer of the World, which they, before ſin, yeelded to him that firſt ſtored the World: Hee that ſhut them into the Arke when they were entred, ſhut their mouthes alſo while they did enter. The Lyons fawne vpon Noah, and Daniel; What heart cannot the Maker of them mollifie.

The vncleane beaſts God would haue to liue, the cleane to multiply; and therefore he ſends to Noah ſeauen of the cleane, of the vncleane two: Hee knew the one would annoy Man with their multitude, the other would inrich him; Thoſe things are worthy of moſt reſpect which are of moſt vſe.

But why ſeuen? Surely that God that created ſeuen dayes in the Weeke, and made one for himſelfe; did here preſerue of ſeuen cleane beaſts, one for himſelfe, for ſacrifice; He giues vs ſix for one in earthly things, that in ſpirituall we ſhould be all for him:

Now the day is come, all the gueſts are entred, the Arke is ſhut, and the windows of Heauen opened: I doubt not but many of thoſe ſcoffers, when they ſaw the violence of the Waues deſcending, and aſcending, according to Noahs prediction, came wading middle-deepe vnto the Arke, and importunately craued that admittance, which they once denyed: But now as they formerly reiected God, ſo are they iuſtly reiected of God. Ere vengeance begin, repentance is ſeaſonable; but if iudgement bee once gone out, we cry too late. While the Goſpell ſolicites vs, the doores of the Arke are open, if wee neglect the time of grace, in vaine ſhall wee ſeeke it with teares; God holds it no mercy to pity the obſtinate. Others, more bold than they, hope to ouerrunne the iudgement, and climbing vp to the high Mountaines, looke downe vpon the Waters, with more hope than feare: and now when they ſee their Hills becomne Ilands, they climbe vp into the talleſt Trees; there with paleneſſe and horror at once looke for death, and ſtudy to avoyde it, whom the waues ouer-take at laſt halfe dead with famine, and halfe with feare. Loe now from the tops of the Mountaines they deſcry the Arke floating vpon the waters, and behold with enuie that which before they beheld with ſcorne.

In vaine doth he fly whom God purſues. There is no way to fly from his iudgements, but to fly to his mercy by repenting. The Faith of the righteous cannot be ſo much derided, as their ſucceſſe is magnified: How ſecurely doth Noah ride out this vproare of Heauen, Earth and Waters! Hee heares the powering downe of the raine aboue his head; the ſhrieking of Men, and roaring and bellowing of Beaſts, on both ſides him; the raging and threats of the waues vnder him; he ſaw the miſerable ſhifts of the diſtreſſed vnbeleeuers; and in the meane time ſits quietly in his dry Cabbin, neither feeling, nor fearing euill: he knew that he which owed the waters, would ſteere him; that he who ſhut him in, would preſerue him. How happy a thing is Faith? what a quiet ſafety, what an heauenly peace doth it worke in the ſoule, in the midſt of all the inundations of euill?

Now when God hath fetcht againe all the life which he had giuen to his vnworthy creatures, and reduced the world vnto his firſt forme wherein waters were ouer the face of the Earth, it was time for a renouation of all things to ſucceed this deſtruction. To haue continued the Deluge long, had beene to puniſh Noah, that was righteous. After forty dayes therefore, the Heauens cleare vp, after an hundred and fifty the waters ſinke downe: How ſoone is God weary of puniſhing, which is neuer weary of bleſſing! yet may not the Arke reſt ſuddenly. If we did not ſtay ſome-while vnder Gods hand, we ſhould not know how ſweet his mercy is, and how great our thankefulneſſe ſhould bee. The Arke though it was Noahs Fort againſt the waters; yet it was his priſon; he was ſafe in it, but pent vp; he that gaue him life by it, now thinkes time to giue him liberty out of it.

God doth not reueale all things to his beſt ſeruants: behold, Hee that told Noah an hundred and twenty yeares before, what day he ſhould goe into the Arke, yet foretels him not now in the Arke what day the Arke ſhould reſt vpon the Hills, and he ſhould goe forth. Noah therefore ſends out his Intelligencers, the Rauen, and the Doue; whoſe wings in that vaporous ayre might eaſily deſcry further then his ſight: The Rauen of quicke ſent, of groſſe feed, of tough conſtitution, no Fowle was ſo fit for diſcouery; the likelieſt things alwayes ſucceed not. He neither will venture farre into that ſolitary world for feare of want, nor yet come into the Arke for loue of liberty; but houers about in vncertainties. How many carnall mindes flye out of the Arke of Gods Church, and imbrace the preſent world: rather chooſing to feed vpon the vnſauory carcaſes of ſinfull pleaſures, then to bee reſtrained within the ſtraight liſts of Chriſtian obedience.

The Doue is ſent forth, a Fowle, both ſwift and ſimple. Shee like a true Citizen of the Arke, returnes; and brings faithfull notice of the continuance of the Waters, by her reſtleſſe and empty returne; by her Oliue leafe, of the abatement: how worthy are thoſe Meſſengers to be welcome, which with innocence in their liues, bring glad tydings of peace, and ſaluation, in their mouthes!

Noah reioyces and beleeues; yet ſtill hee waites ſeuen daies more: It is not good to deuoure the fauours of God too greedily; but to take them in, that we may digeſt them. O ſtrong faith of Noah, that was not weary with this delay; ſome man would haue ſo longed for the open ayre after ſo long cloſeneſſe, that vpon the firſt notice of ſafety hee would haue vncouered, and voyded the Arke; Noah ſtayes ſeuen dayes ere he will open; and well neere two Moneths ere he will forſake the Arke; and not then, vnleſſe God, that commanded to enter, had bidden him depart. There is no action good without Faith: no Faith without a word. Happy is that man, which in all things (neglecting the counſels of fleſh and blood) depends vpon the commiſſion of his Maker.

HONOVRABLE
THE LORD STANHOPE,

ONE OF HIS MAIESTIES MOST HONOVRABLE PRIVY COVNSELL,

All Grace and Happineſſe.

Right Honorable,

I Durſt appeale to the iudgement of a carnall Reader (let him not be preiudicate) that there is no Hiſtorie ſo pleaſant as the Sacred. Set aſide the Maieſtie of the Inditer; none can compare with it for the Magnificence and Antiquitie of the Matter, the ſweetneſſe of compiling, the ſtrange varietie of memorable occurrences: And if the delight be ſuch, what ſhall the profit be eſteemed of that which was written by GOD for the ſaluation of Men? I confeſſe, no thoughts did euer more ſweetly ſteale Me and Time away, then thoſe which I haue imployed in this ſubiect, and I hope, none can equally benefit others: for, if the meere relation of theſe holy things be profitable, how much more when it is reduced to vſe? This ſecond part of the World repaired,

Hall, J.

I dedicate to your Lordſhip, wherein you ſhall ſee Noah as weake in his Tent, as ſtrong in the Arke; an vngratious Sonne reſerued from the Deluge to his Fathers curſe: modeſt pietie rewarded with bleſsings : the building of Babel, begunne in pride, ending in confuſion; Abrahams Faith, Feare, Obedience; Iſaac bound vpon the Altar vnder the hand of a Father that hath forgotten both nature and all his hopes; Sodom burning with a double fire, from Hell, and from Heauen : Lot reſcued from that impure Citie, yet after finding Sodom in his Caue : Euery one of theſe paſſages is not more full of wonder, then of edification. That Spirit which hath penned all theſe things for our learning, teach vs their right vſe: and ſanctifie theſe my vnworthy Meditations to the good of his Church. To whoſe abundant grace I humbly commend your Lordſhip.

Your Lordſhips vnfainedly

deuoted in all due

THE SECOND BOOKE.

NOAH.

NO ſooner is Noah come out of the Arke, but hee builds an Altar: not an houſe for himſelfe, but an Altar to the Lord: Our faith will euer teach vs to preferre God to our ſelues. Delayed thankfulneſſe is not worthy of acceptation. Of thoſe few creatures that are left, God muſt haue ſome; they are all his: yet his goodneſſe will haue Man know that it was hee, for whoſe ſake they were preſerued. It was a priuiledge to thoſe very bruit creatures, that they were ſaued from the waters, to be offered vp in fire vnto God: What a fauour is it to men, to be reſerued from common deſtructions, to be ſacrificed to their Maker and Redeemer!

Loe this little fire of Noah, through the vertue of his faith, purged the world, and aſcended vp into thoſe heauens, from which the waters fell, and cauſed a glorious Rainbow to appeare therein for his ſecuritie: All the ſins of the former world were not ſo vnſauoury vnto God, as this ſmoake was pleaſant. No perfume can be ſo ſweet as the holy obedience of the faithfull. Now God that was before annoyed with the ill ſauour of ſinne, ſmels a ſweet ſauour of reſt: Behold here a new and ſecond reſt: Firſt, God reſted from making the World, now he reſts from deſtroying it: Euen while we ceaſe not to offend, he ceaſes from a publike reuenge. His word was enough, yet withall hee giues a ſigne, which may ſpeake the truth of his promiſe to the very eyes of men: thus hee doth ſtill in his bleſſed Sacraments, which are as reall words to the ſoule. The Rain-bow is the pledge of our ſafety, which euen naturally ſignifies the end of a ſhower: all the ſignes of Gods inſtitution are proper, and ſignificant.

But who would looke after all this, to haue found righteous Noah, the Father of the new World, lying drunken in his tent? Who could thinke that wine ſhould ouerthrow him that was preſerued from the waters? That he who could not be tainted with the ſinfull examples of the former world, ſhould begin the example of a new ſinne of his owne? What are we men, if we be but our ſelues? While God vpholds vs, no temptation can moue vs: when he leaues vs, no temptation is too weake to ouerthrow vs. What liuing man euer had ſo noble proofes of the mercy, of the iuſtice of God? Mercy vpon himſelfe, iuſtice vpon others. What man had ſo gratious approbation from his Maker? Behold, hee of whom in an vncleane world God ſaid, Thee onely haue I found righteous, proues now vncleane when the world was purged. The Preacher of righteouſnes vnto the former age, the King, Prieſt, & Prophet of the world renued, is the firſt that renues the ſins of that world which he had reproued, and which he ſaw condemned for ſinne: Gods beſt children haue no fence for ſins of infirmity: Which of the Saints haue not once done that, whereof they are aſhamed? God that lets vs fall, knowes how to make as good vſe of the ſins of his holy ones, as of their obedience: If we had not ſuch patternes, who could chooſe but deſpaire at the ſight of his ſinnes?

Yet we find Noah drunken but once. One act can no more make a good heart vnrighteous, then a trade of ſinne can ſtand with regeneration: but when I looke to the effect of this ſinne, I cannot but buſh and wonder; Loe, this ſin is worſe then ſinne; Other ſinnes moue ſhame, but hide it: this diſplayes it to the world. Adam had no ſooner ſinned, but he ſaw and abhorred his owne nakedneſſe, ſeeking to hide it euen with buſhes. Noah had no ſooner ſinned, but he diſcouers his nakedneſſe, and hath not ſo much rule of himſelfe, as to be aſhamed: One houres drunkennes bewrayes that, which more then ſix hundred yeares ſobriety had modeſtly concealed; he that giues himſelf to wine is not his owne: what ſhall we thinke of this vice, which robs a man of himſelfe, and layes a beaſt in his roome? Noahs nakedneſſe is ſeene in wine, it is no vnvſuall quality, in this exceſſe to diſcloſe ſecrets; drunkenneſſe doth both make imperfections, and ſhew thoſe we haue, to others eyes; ſo would God haue it, that we might be double aſhamed, both thoſe of weakneſſes which we diſcouer, and of that weakneſſe which moued vs to diſcouer. Noah is vncouered; but in the midſt of his owne Tent: It had beene ſinfull, though no man had ſeene it: vnknown ſins haue their guilt & ſhame, & are iuſtly attended with known puniſhments. Vngracious Cham ſaw it and laughed, his fathers ſhame ſhould haue bin his; the deformity of thoſe parts from which he had his being, ſhould haue begotten in him a ſecret horror, and deiection: how many graceleſſe men make ſport at the cauſes of their humiliation? Twiſe had Noah giuen him life: yet neither the name of a Father, & Preſeruer, nor Age, nor vertue could ſhield him from the contempt of his owne. I ſee that euen Gods Arke may nouriſh Monſters: ſome filthy toads may lye vnder the ſtones of the Temple, God preſerues ſome men in iudgment; Better had it beene for Cham to haue periſhed in the waters, then to liue vnto his fathers curſe. Not content to be a witneſſe of this filthy ſight; he goes on to be a Proclaimer of it. Sin doth ill in the eye, but worſe in the tongue: As all ſinne is a worke of darkneſſe, ſo it ſhould be buried in darkneſſe. The report of ſinne is oft-times as ill, as the commiſſion; for it can neuer be blazoned without vncharitableneſſe; ſeldome without infection: Oh the vnnaturall and more then Chammiſh impietie of thoſe ſonnes, which reioyce to publiſh the nakedneſſe of their ſpirituall Parents, euen to their Enemies.

Yet it was well for Noah that Cham could tell it to none but his owne; and thoſe gracious and dutifull Sons. Our ſhame is the leſſe, if none know our faults but our friends. Behold, how loue couereth ſinnes; theſe good Sonnes are ſo far from going forward to ſee their Fathers ſhame, that they goe backward to hide it. The cloake is laid on both their ſhoulders; they both goe backe with equall paſes, and dare not ſo much as looke backe, leſt they ſhould vnwillingly ſee the cauſe of their ſhame; and will rather aduenture to ſtumble at their Fathers body, then to ſee his nakedneſſe: How did it grieue them to thinke, that they which had ſo oft come to their holy Father with reuerence, muſt now in reuerence turne their backs vpon him; and that they muſt now clothe him in pity; which had ſo often clothed them in loue! And which addes more to their duty, they coucred him, and ſaid nothing. This modeſt ſorrow is their praiſe, and our example; The ſinnes of thoſe we loue and honour, we muſt heare of with indignation, fearfully and vnwillingly beleeue, acknowledge with griefe and ſhame, hide with honeſt excuſes, and burie in ſilence.

How equall a regard is this both of piety and diſobedience? becauſe Cham ſinned againſt his Father, therefore he ſhall be plagued in his children; Iapheth is dutifull to his Father, and finds it in his poſterity. Becauſe Cham was an ill Son to his Father, therefore his ſonnes ſhall be Seruants to his Brethren; becauſe Iapheth ſet his ſhoulder to Sems, to beare the cloake of ſhame, therefore ſhall Iapheth dwell in the Tents of Sem, partaking with him in bleſſings as in dutie. When we doe but what we ought, yet God is thankfull to vs; and rewards that, which we ſhould ſinne if wee did not: who could euer yet ſhew mee a man rebellioully vndutifull to his Parents, that hath proſpered in himſelfe, and his ſeed?

Of BABEL.

HOw ſoone are men and ſinnes multiplyed? within one hundred yeares the World is as full of both, as if there had beene no Deluge. Though men could not but ſee the fearfull monuments of the ruine of their Anceſtors, yet how quickly had they forgotten a flood? Good Noah liued to ſee the World both populous, and wicked againe; and doubtleſſe oft-times repented to haue beene preſeruer of ſome, whom he ſaw to traduce the vices of the former World, to the renued. It could not but grieue him to ſee the deſtroyed Gyants reuiue out of his owne loynes, and to ſee them of his fleſh and blood tyrannize ouer themſelues. In his ſight Nimrod caſting off the awe of his holy Grandfather grew imperious and cruell, and made his owne kinſmen ſeruants. How eaſie a thing it is for a great ſpirit to bee the head of a faction; when euen brethren will ſtoope to ſeruitude. And now when men are combined together, euill and preſumptuous motions finde encouragement in multitudes; and each man takes a pride in ſeeming forwardeſt: we are the cheerfuller in good when wee haue the aſſiſtance of company; much more in ſinning, by how much we are more prone to euill then good. It was a proud word; Come, let vs build vs a Citie and a Tower, whoſe top may reach to Heauen.

They were newly come downe from the Hils vnto the Playnes, and now thinke of raiſing vp an Hill, of building in the Plaine: when their Tents were pitched vpon the Mountaines of Armenia, they were as neere to Heauen as their Tower could make them; but their ambition muſt needs aſpire to an height of their owne raiſing. Pride is euer diſcontented; and ſtill ſeekes matter of boaſting in her owne workes.

How fondly doe men reckon without God, Come, let vs build; As if there had beene no ſtop but in their owne will: As if both Earth and Time had beene theirs: Still doe all naturall men build Babel forecaſting their owne plots ſo reſolutely, as if there were no power to countermand them: It is iuſt with God that peremptorie determinations ſeldome proſper: whereas thoſe things which are fearfully, and modeſtly vndertaken, commonly ſucceed.

Let vs build vs a Citie. If they had taken God with them, it had beene commendable; eſtabliſhing of ſocieties is pleaſing to him that is the God of order: But a Tower whoſe top may reach to Heauen, was a ſhamefull arrogance, an impious preſumption. Who would thinke that wee little Ants that creepe vpon this Earth, ſhould thinke of climbing vp to Heauen, by multiplying of earth?

Pride euer lookes at the higheſt: the firſt Man would know as God, theſe would dwel as God, Couetouſnes and Ambition know no limits. And what if they had reacht vp to Heauen? ſome Hils are as high as they could hope to be, and yet are no whit the better; no place alters the condition of Nature: an Angell is glorious, though he be vpon earth, and Man is but earth, though he be aboue the clouds: The neerer they had been to Heauen, the more ſubiect ſhould they haue been to the violences of Heauen; to thunders, lightenings, and thoſe other higher inflamations; what had this beene, but to thruſt themſelues into the hands of the reuenger of all wicked inſolencies? God loues that Heauen ſhould be lookt at, and affected with all humble deſires, with the holy ambitions of faith, not with the proud imaginations of our owne atchieuements.

But wherefore was all this? Not that they loued ſo much to bee neighbours to heauen, as to bee famous vpon earth; It was not commodity that was here ſought, not ſafety, but glory: whither doth not thirſt of fame carie men, whether in good or euill? It makes them ſeek to climbe to heauen, it makes them not feare to runne downe headlong to hell: Euen in the beſt things deſire of praiſe ſtands in competition with conſcience, and brags to haue the more clients. One builds a Temple to Diana, in hope of glory, intending it for one of the great wonders of the World, another in hope of Fame burnes it. He is a rare man that hath not ſome Babel of his owne, whereon hee beſtowes paines and coſt, onely to be talked of. If they had done better things in a vaine-glorious purpoſe, their act had been accurſed; if they had built houſes to God, if they had ſacrificed, prayed, liued well; the intent poyſons the action: but now both the act and the purpoſe are equally vaine, and the iſſue is as vaine as either.

God hath a ſpeciall indignation at pride aboue all ſinnes, and will croſſe our endeuours, not for that they are euill (what hurt could bee in laying one bricke vpon another?) but for that they are proudly vndertaken: He could haue hindred the laying of the firſt ſtone; and might as eaſily haue made a trench for the foundation, the graue of the builders: but he loues to ſee what wicked men would doe; and to let fooles run themſelues out of breath: what monument ſhould they haue had of their owne madneſſe, and his powerfull interruption, if the wals had riſen to no height? To ſtop them then in the midſt of their courſe, he meddles not with either their hands, or their feet, but their tongues; not by pulling them out, not by looſing their ſtrings, not by making them ſay nothing, but by teaching them to ſay too much: Here is nothing varied but the ſound of Letters; euen this fruſtrates the worke, and befooles the workemen: How eaſie it is for God ten thouſand wayes to correct and foreſtall the greateſt proiects of men? He that taught Adam the firſt words, taught them words that neuer were. One cals for bricke, the other lookes him in the face, and wonders what he commands, and how and why he ſpeakes ſuch words as were neuer heard; and in ſtead thereof brings him morter, returning him an anſwere as little vnderſtood: each chides with other, expreſſing his choller, ſo as hee onely can vnderſtand himſelfe: From heat they fall to quiet intreaties, but ſtill with the ſame ſucceſſe. At firſt euery man thinkes his fellow mocks him: but now perceiuing this ſerious confuſion, their onely anſwer was ſilence, and ceaſing; they could not come together, for no man could call them to bee vnderſtood; and if they had aſſembled, nothing could be determined becauſe one could neuer attaine to the others purpoſe: No, they could not haue the honour of a generall diſmiſſion, but each man leaues his Trowell and ſtation, more like a foole then hee vndertooke it: So commonly actions begun in glory, ſhut vp in ſhame. All externall actions depend vpon the tongue: No man can know anothers minde, if this bee not the interpreter; hence, as there were many tongues giuen to ſtay the building of Babel, ſo there were as many giuen to build the new Ieruſalem, the Euangelicall Church. How deare hath Babel coſt all the world? At the firſt, when there was but one language, men did ſpend their time in Arts; (ſo was it requiſite at the firſt ſetling of the world) and ſo came early to perfection, but now we ſtay ſo long (of neceſſitie) vpon the ſhell of tongues, that wee can hardly haue time to chew the ſweet kernell of knowledge: Surely men would haue growne too proud, if there had beene no Babel: It fals out ofttimes that one ſinne is a remedy of a greater. Diuiſion of tongues muſt needs ſlacken any worke: Multiplicitie of language had not beene giuen by the Holy Ghoſt, for a bleſſing to the Church, if the world had not beene before poſſeſſed with multiplicitie of languages for a puniſhment: Hence it is, that the building of our Sion riſes no faſter, becauſe our tongues are diuided; Happy were the Church of God, if we all ſpake but one language: Whiles we differ, we can build nothing but Babel; difference of tongues cauſed their Babel to ceaſe, but it builds ours.

Of ABRAHAM.

IT was fit that he which ſhould be the Father and patterne of the faithfull, ſhould be throughly tryed: for in a ſet copie euery fault is important, and may proue a rule of errour: of ten trials which Abraham paſſed, the laſt was the soreſt: No ſonne of Abraham can hope to eſcape temptations, while he ſees that boſom, in which he deſires to reſt, ſo aſſaulted with difficulties. Abraham muſt leaue his Countrey, and kinred, and liue amongſt ſtrangers; The calling of God neuer leaues men, where it findes them; The earth is the Lords, and all places are alike to the wiſe and faithfull: If Chaldea had not been groſſely idolatrous Abraham had not left it; no bond muſt tie vs to the danger of infection.

But whither muſt hee goe? to a place he knew not, to men that knew not him: it is enough comfort to a good man, whereſoeuer he is, that hee is acquainted with God; we are neuer out of our way, while we follow the calling of God. Neuer any man loſt by his obedience to the Higheſt; becauſe Abraham yeelded, God giues him the poſſeſſion of Canaan: I wonder more at his faith in taking this poſſeſſion, then in leauing his owne; Behold, Abraham takes poſſeſſion for that Seed which hee had not; which in nature he was not like to haue; of that Land whereof hee ſhould not haue one foot, wherein his Seed ſhould not be ſetled of almoſt fiue hundred yeares after: The power of faith can preuent time, and make future things preſent; if wee be the true ſonnes of Abraham, wee haue already (while wee ſoiourne here on earth) the poſſeſſion of our Land of Promiſe: while we ſeeke our Countrey, we haue it.

Yet euen Canaan doth not afford him bread, which yet hee muſt beleeue ſhall flow with milke and honey to his Seede: ſenſe muſt yeeld to faith; woe were vs, if we muſt iudge of our future eſtate by the preſent: Ægypt giues reliefe to Abraham, when Canaan cannot. In outward things, Gods enemies may fare better then his friends: Thriſe had Ægypt preſerued the Church of God, in Abraham, in Iacob, in Chriſt; God ofttimes makes vſe of the world, for the behoofe of his; though without their thankes: as contrarily hee vſes the wicked for ſcourges to his owne inheritance, and burnes them; becauſe in his good they intended euill.

But what a change is this? Hitherto hath Sarah bin Abrahams wiſe, now Ægypt hath made her his ſiſter; feare hath turned him from a husband to a brother; No ſtrength of faith can exclude ſome doubtings: God hath ſaid, I will make thee a great Nation; Abraham ſaith, the Ægyptians will kiſſ me: He that liued by his faith, yet ſhrinketh, and ſinneth. How vainely ſhall we hope to beleeue without all feare, and to liue without infirmities? Some little aſperſions of vnbeliefe cannot hinder the praiſe and power of faith; Abraham beleeued, and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe. Hee that through inconſideratenes doubted twiſe of his own life, doubted not of the life of his Seed, euen from the dead and dry wombe of Sarah, yet was it more difficult that his Poſteritie ſhould liue in Sarah, then that Sarahs husband ſhould liue in Ægypt: This was aboue nature, yet he beleeues it. Sometimes the beleeuer ſticks at eaſie trials, and yet breakes through the greateſt temptations without feare: Abraham was old ere this promiſe and hope of a ſonne; and ſtill the older, the more vncapable; yet God makes him waite twenty fiue yeares for performance. No time is long to faith; which hath learned to deferre hopes without fainting and irkeſomeneſſe.

Abraham heard this newes from the Angell, and laughed: Sarah heard it, and laughed: they did not more agree in their deſire, then differ in their affection: Abraham laughed for ioy; Sarah for diſtruſt: Abraham laughed, becauſe he beleeued it would be ſo; Sarah, becauſe ſhe beleeued it could not bee: the ſame act varies in the manner of doing, and the intention of the doer: Yet Sarah laught but within her ſelfe, and is bewrayed: How God can finde vs out in ſecret ſinnes! how eaſily did ſhee now thinke, that he which could know of her inward laughter, could know of her conception! and now ſhe that laughed, and beleeued not, beleeueth and feareth.

What a liuely patterne doe I ſee in Abraham and Sarah, of a ſtrong faith, and weake! of ſtrong in Abraham, and weake in Sarah: She to make God good of his word to Abraham, knowing her owne barrenneſſe, ſubſtitutes an Hagar; and in an ambition of Seed perſwades to Poligamy. Abraham had neuer looked to obtaine the promiſe by any other then a barren wombe, if his owne wife had not importuned him to take another: when our own apparent means faile, weake faith is put to the ſhifts; and proiects ſtrange deuices of her owne, to attaine the end. Shee will rather conceiue by another wombe, then be childleſſe: when ſhee heares of an impoſſibilitie to nature, ſhee doubteth, and yet hides her diffidence; and when ſhe muſt beleeue, feareth, becauſe ſhe did diſtruſt: Abraham heares and beleeues, and expects and reioyces; he ſaith not, I am old and weake; Sarah is old and barren; where are the many Nations that ſhall come from theſe withered loynes? It is enough to him that God hath ſaid it: hee ſees not the meanes, he ſees the promiſe. Hee knew that God would rather raiſe him vp ſeed from the very ſtones that be trod vpon, then himſelfe ſhould want a large and happy iſſue.

There is no faith where there is either meanes or hopes. Difficulties and impoſſibilities are the true obiects of beliefe: Hereupon Gods addes to his name, that which hee would fetch from his loynes, and made his name as ample as his poſteritie: neuer [illegible] man was a looſer by beleeuing: Faith is euer recompenced with glory.

Neither is Abraham content onely to wait for God, but to ſmart for him: God bids him cut his owne fleſh; he willingly ſacrifices this parcell of his skin and blood to him that was the owner of all: How glad hee is to carrie this painfull marke of the loue of his Creator? How forward to ſeale this couenant with blood, betwixt God and him? not regarding the ſoreneſſe of his body, in compariſon of the confirmation of his ſoule. The wound was not ſo grieuous as the ſignification was comfortable. For herein he ſaw, that from his loynes ſhould come that bleſſed Seed, which ſhould purge his ſoule from all corruption. Well is that part of vs loſt, which may giue aſſurance of the ſaluation of the whole; our faith is not yet ſound, if it haue not taught vs to neglect paine for God, and more to loue his Sacraments, then our owne fleſh.

Of Isaac ſacrificed.

BVt all theſe are but eaſie taskes of Faith: all ages haue ſtood amazed at the next; not knowing whether they ſhould more wonder at Gods command, or Abrahams obedience: Many yeares had that good Patriarch waited for his Iſaac; now at laſt hee hath ioyfully receiued him, and that with this gratious acclamation; In Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called, and all Nations bleſſed. Behold, the ſonne of his Age, the ſonne of his Loue, the ſonne of his Expectation, he that might not endure a mocke from his brother, muſt now endure the knife of his Father; Take thine onely ſonne Iſaac whom thou loueſt, and get thee to the Land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt-offering.

Neuer any gold was tryed in ſo hot a fire. Who but Abraham would not haue expoſtulated with God? What? Doth the God of mercies now bigin to delight in blood? Is it poſſible that Murder ſhould become Piety? Or if thou wilt needs take pleaſure in an humane ſacrifice, is there none but Iſaac fit for thine Altar, none but Abraham to offer him? Shall theſe hands deſtroy the fruits of mine owne loynes? Can I not bee faithfull vnleſſe I be vnnaturall? Or if I muſt needs bee the monſter of all Parents, will not Iſmael yet be accepted? O God where is thy mercy; where is thy iuſtice? Haſt thou giuen me but one onely ſonne, and muſt I now ſlay him? Why did I wait ſo long for him? Why didſt thou giue him me? Why didſt thou promiſe mee a bleſſing in him? What will the Heathen ſay, when they ſhall heare of this infamous maſſacre? How can thy Name, and my profeſsion eſcape a perpetuall blaſphemie? With what face ſhall I looke vpon my wife Sarah, whoſe ſonne I haue murdered? How ſhall ſhe entertaine the Executioner of Iſaac? Or who will beleeue, that I did this from thee? How ſhall not all the World ſpet at this holy cruelty, and ſay, There goes the man that cut the throat of his owne ſonne. Yet if he were an vngracious or rebellious child, his deſerts might giue ſome colour to this violence: but to lay hands on ſo deare, ſo dutifull, ſo hopefull a ſonne, is vncapable of all pretences.

But grant that thou which art the God of Nature, mayſt either alter or neglect it; what ſhall I ſay to the truth of thy promiſes? Can thy Iuſtice admit contradictions? Can thy decrees be changeable? Canſt thou promiſe and diſappoint? Can theſe two ſtand together, Iſaac ſhall liue to be the father of Nations; and Iſaac ſhall now dye by the hand of his Father? when Iſaac is once gone, where is my ſeed, where is my bleſſing? O God, if thy commands and purpoſes be capable of alteration, alter this bloody ſentence, and let thy firſt word ſtand.

Theſe would haue been the thoughts of a weake heart: But God knew that he ſpake to an Abraham, and Abraham knew that hee had to doe with a God: Faith had taught him not to argue, but obey. In an holy wilfulneſſe he either forgets Nature, or deſpiſes her, he is ſure that what God commands, is good; that what he promiſes is infallible, and therefore is careleſſe of the meanes, and truſts to the end.

In matters of God, whoſoeuer conſults with fleſh and blood ſhall neuer offer vp his Iſaac to God; there needs no counſellor when wee know God is the Commander; here is neither grudging nor deliberating, nor delaying: His faith would not ſuffer him ſo much as to be ſorie for that hee muſt doe. Sarah her ſelfe may not know of Gods charge, and her husbands purpoſe, leſt her affection ſhould haue ouercome her faith; leſt her weakneſſe now growne importunate, ſhould haue ſaid, Diſobey God and dye. That which he muſt doe, he will doe; he that hath learned not to regard the life of his ſonne, had learned not to regard the ſorrow of his wife. It is too much tenderneſſe to reſpect the cenſures and conſtructions of others, when wee haue a direct word from God. The good Patriarch riſes early, and addreſſes himſelfe to his ſad iourney. And now muſt he trauell three whole dayes to this execution; and ſtill muſt Iſaac be in his eye, whom all this while he ſeemes to ſee bleeding vpon the pile of Wood which hee caries; there is nothing ſo miſerable as to dwell vnder the expectation of a great euill; That miſery which muſt bee, is mitigated with ſpeed, and aggrauated with delay. All this while if Abraham had repented him, hee had leiſure to returne. There is no ſmall tryall, euen in the very time of tryall: now when they are come within ſight of the choſen Mountaine, the ſeruants are diſmiſſed; what a deuotion is this that will abide no witneſſes? he will not ſuffer two of his owne Vaſſals to ſee him doe that, which ſoone after all the world muſt know he hath done; yet is not Abraham afraid of that pietie, which the beholders could not ſee without horror, without reſiſtance, which no eare could heare of without abomination. What ſtranger could haue endured to ſee the Father carie the knife and fire, inſtruments of that death, which hee had rather ſuffer then inflict? The ſonne ſecurely carrying that burden which muſt carie him?

But if Abrahams heart could haue knowne how to relent, that queſtion of his deare, innocent, and religious ſonne had melted it into compaſsion, My Father, Behold the fire and the wood, but where is the Sacrifice? I know not whether that word, My Father, did not ſtrike Abraham as deepe as the knife of Abraham could ſtrike his ſonne: yet doth he not ſo much as thinke, (O miſerable man, that may not at once be a Sonne to ſuch a God, and Father to ſuch a Sonne:) Still hee perſiſts, and conceales, and where hee meant not, propheſies, My ſonne, God ſhall prouide a Lambe for the burnt-offering.

The heauy tidings was loath to come forth: It was a death to Abraham to ſay what he muſt doe: He knowes his owne faith to act this, he knowes not Iſaacs to endure it. But now when Iſaac hath helped to build the Altar, whereon he muſt be conſumed; he heares (not without aſtoniſhment) the ſtrange command of God, the finall will of his Father: My ſonne thou art the Lambe which God hath prouided for this burnt-offering: If my blood would haue excuſed thee, how many thouſand times had I rather to giue thee mine own life, then take thine! Alas, I am full of dayes, and now of long liued not but in thee; Thou mighteſt haue preſerued the life of thy Father, and haue comforted his death, but the God of vs both hath choſen thee: He that gaue thee vnto me miraculouſly, bids me by an vnuſuall meanes returne thee vnto him. I need not tell thee, that I ſacrifice all my worldly ioyes, yea and my ſelfe in thee, but God muſt be obeyed; neither art thou too deare for him that cals thee: Come on my Sonne, reſtore the life that God hath giuen thee by me: offer thy ſelfe willingly to theſe flames; ſend vp thy ſoule cheerefully vnto thy glory; and know that God loues thee aboue others, ſince he requires thee alone to be conſecrated in ſacrifice to himſelfe.

Who cannot imagine with what perplexed mixtures of paſſions, with what changes of countenance, what doubts, what feares, what amazement, good Iſaac receiued this ſudden meſſage from the mouth of his Father, how he queſtioned, how hee pleaded? But when hee had ſomewhat digeſted his thoughts, and conſidered that the Author was God, the actor Abraham, the action a ſacrifice, hee now approues himſelfe the ſonne of Abraham; now he encourages the trembling hands of his Father; with whom he ſtriues in this praiſe of forwardneſſe and obedience; now hee offers his hands and feet to the cords, his throat to the knife, his body to the Altar; and growing ambitious of the ſword & fire, intreats his Father to doe that, which he would haue done though he had diſſwaded him. O holy emulation of faith! O bleſſed agreement of the Sacrificer, and Oblation: Abraham is as ready to take, as Iſaac to giue; hee binds thoſe deare hands which are more ſtraitly bound with the cords of duty, and reſolution: he layes his ſacrifice vpon the wood, which now before-hand burnt inwardly with the heauenly fire of zeale and deuotion.

And now hauing kiſſed him his laſt, not without mutuall teares; he lifts vp his hand to fetch the ſtroke of death at once, not ſo much as thinking, perhaps God wil relent after the firſt wound. Now the ſtay of Abraham, the hope of the Church, lyes on bleeding vnder the hand of a father, what bowels can chooſe but yearne at this ſpectacle? which of the ſauageſt Heathens that had bin now vpon the hill of Moriah, and had ſeen (through the buſhes) the ſword of a Father hanging ouer the throat of ſuch a ſonne, would not haue beene more perplexed in his thoughts, then that vnexpected ſacrifice was in thoſe briers? yet hee whom it neereſt concerned, is leaſt touched; Faith hath wrought the ſame in him, which crueltie would in others, Not to be moued; He contemnes all feares, and ouerlookes all impoſſibilities; His heart tels him that the ſame hand which raiſed Iſaac from the dead wombe of Sarah, can raiſe him againe from the aſhes of his ſacrifice: with this confidence was the hand of Abraham now falling vpon the throat of Iſaac, who had giuen himſelfe for dead, and reioyced in the change; when ſuddenly the Angell of God interrupts him, forbids him, commends him.

The voyce of God was neuer ſo welcome, neuer ſo ſweet, neuer ſo ſeaſonable as now: It was the tryall that God intended, not the fact; Iſaac is ſacrificed, and is yet aliue: and now both of them are more happy in that they would haue done, then they could haue been diſtreſſed if they had done it. Gods charges are oft-times harſh in the beginnings and proceeding, but in the concluſion alwayes comfortable: true ſpirituall comforts are commonly late and ſudden: God defers on purpoſe, that our tryals may be perfect, our deliuerance welcome, our recompence glorious? Iſaac had neuer beene ſo precious to his father, if he had not been recouered from death; if he had not been as miraculouſly reſtored, as giuen,: Abraham had neuer beene ſo bleſſed in his ſeed, if he had not neglected Iſaac for God.

The only way to finde comfort in any earthly thing, is to ſurrender it (in a faithfull carelesneſſe) into the hands of God. Abraham came to ſacrifice, he may not goe away with dry hands: God cannot abide that good purpoſes ſhould be fruſtrate. Leſt either he ſhould not doe that, for which hee came: or ſhould want meanes of ſpeedy thankgiuing for ſo gratious a diſappointment; Behold, a Ram ſtands ready for the ſacrifice, and as it were, proffers himſelfe to this happy exchange. Hee that made that Beaſt, brings him thither, faſtens him there: Euen in ſmall things there is a great prouidence, what myſteries there are in euery act of God! the onely Sonne of God vpon this very hill, is laid vpon the Altar of the Croſſe; and ſo becomes a true ſacrifice for the world, that yet he is raiſed without impeachment, and exempted from the power of death: The Lamb of God which takes away the ſins of the World, is here really offred, and accepted: One Sauiour in two figures; in the one, dying; reſtored in the other. So Abraham whiles he exerciſes his faith, confirmes it; and reioyces more to foreſee the true Iſaac in that place offered to death for his ſinnes, then to ſee the carnall Iſaac preſerued from death for the reward of his Faith. Whatſoeuer is deareſt to vs vpon earth is our Iſaac; happy are we if we can ſacrifice it to God; thoſe ſhall neuer reſt with Abraham, that cannot ſacrifice with Abraham.

Of LOT and Sodom.

BEFORE Abraham and Lot grew rich, they dwelt together; now their wealth ſeparates them; Their ſocietie was a greater good then their riches: Many a one is a loſer by his wealth; who would account thoſe things good which make vs worſe? It had beene the duty of yong Lot to offer rather then to chooſe; to yeeld rather then contend: who would not here thinke Abraham the Nephew, and Lot the Vncle? It is no diſparagement for greater perſons to begin treaties of Peace. Better doth it beſeeme euery ſonne of Abraham to winne with loue, then to ſway with power. Abraham yeelds ouer this right of his choiſe; Lot takes it. And behold, Lot is croſſed in that which he choſe, Abraham is bleſſed in that which was left him; God neuer ſuffers any man to leeſe by an humble remiſsion of his right in a deſire of peace?

Wealth hath made Lot not only vndutifull, but couetous; he ſees the goodly Plaines of Iordan, the richneſſe of the ſoyle, the commoditie of the Riuers, the ſituation of the Cities, and now not once inquiring into the conditions of the Inhabitants, hee is in loue with Sodom: Outward appearances are deceitfull guides to our iudgement, or affections: they are worthy to be deceiued that value things as they ſeeme: It is not long after that Lot payes deare for his raſhneſſe. He fled for quietneſſe with his Vncle, and finds Warre with ſtrangers: Now is he carried priſoner with all his ſubſtance, by great Enemies; Abraham muſt reſcue him, of whom hee was forſaken. That wealth which was the cauſe of his former quarrels, is made a prey to mercileſſe Heathens: That place which his eye couetouſly choſe, betrayes his life and goods. How many Chriſtians, whiles they haue looked at gaine, haue loſt themſelues.

Yet this ill ſucceſſe hath neither driuen out Lot, nor amended Sodom, he ſtill loues his commoditie, and the Sodomites their ſinnes: wicked men grow worſe with afflictions, as water growes more cold after an heat: And as they leaue not ſinning, ſo God leaues not plaguing them, but ſtill followes them with ſucceſſion of iudgements. In how few yeares hath Sodom forgot ſhe was ſpoiled, and led captiue? If that wicked Citie had beene warned by the ſword, it had eſcaped the fire; but now this viſitation hath not made ten good men, in thoſe fiue Cities: How fit was this heape for the fire, which was all chaffe ? Onely Lot vexed his righteous ſoule with the ſight of their vncleanneſſe; Hee vexed his owne ſoule, for who bade him ſtay there ? yet becauſe he was vexed, he is deliuered. He eſcapeth their iudgement, from whoſe ſinnes he eſcaped. Though he would be a gueſt of Sodom, yet becauſe hee would not entertaine their ſinnes, he becomes an Hoſt to the Angels : Euen the good Angels are the executioners of Gods iudgement : There cannot be a better or more noble act then to doe iuſtice vpon obſtinate Malefactors.

Who can be aſhamed of that which did not miſ-beſeeme the very Angels of God? Where ſhould the Angels lodge but with Lot ? the houſes of holy men are full of theſe heauenly Spirits, when they know not; they pitch their Tents in ours, and viſit vs, when we ſee not; and when we feele not, protect vs; It is the honour of Gods Saints to be attended by Angels. The filthy Sodomites now flocke together, ſtirred vp with the fury of enuy, and luſt, and dare require to doe that in troops, which to act ſingle, had beene too abominable, to imagine, vnnaturall. Continuance and ſociety in euill makes wicked men outrageous, and impudent : It is not enough for Lot to bee the Witneſſe, but he muſt be the Bawd alſo. (Bring forth theſe men that we may know them.)

Behold : euen the Sodomites ſpeake modeſty; though their acts and intents be villanous. What a ſhame is it for thoſe which profeſſe purity of heart, to ſpeake filthily? The good man craues and pleads the lawes of hoſpitalitie; and when hee ſees headſtrong purpoſes of miſchiefe, chooſes rather to bee an ill Father, then an ill hoſt : His intention was good, but his offer was faulty; If through his allowance the Sodomites had defiled his daughters; it had beene his ſinne : If through violence they had defiled his gueſts; it had beene onely theirs: There can be no warrant for vs to ſinne, leſt others ſhould ſinne : It is for God to preuent ſinnes with iudgements, it is not for men to preuent a greater ſinne with a leſſe : the beſt mindes when they are troubled, yeeld inconſiderate motions; as water that is violently ſtirred, ſends vp bubbles : God meant better to Lot, then to ſuffer his weake offer to be accepted : Thoſe which are bent vpon villany are more exaſperated by diſſwaſion; as ſome ſtrong ſtreames, when they are reſiſted by flood-gates, ſwell ouer the bankes.

Many a one is hardned by the good word of God; and in ſtead of receiuing the counſell, rages at the meſſenger : When men are growne to that paſſe, that they are no whit better by afflictions, and worſe with admonitions, God findes it time to ſtrike; Now Lots gueſts begin to ſhew themſelues Angels, and firſt deliuer Lot in Sodom, then from Sodom : Firſt ſtrike them with blindneſſe, whom they will after conſume with fire. How little did the Sodomites thinke that vengeance was ſo neere them! While they went groping in the ſtreets, and curſing thoſe whom they could not find: Lot with the Angels is in ſecure light, and ſees them miſerable, and fore-ſees them burning. It is the vſe of God to blind and beſot thoſe whom hee meanes to deſtroy : The light which they ſhall ſee ſhall be fierie, which ſhall be the beginning of an euerlaſting darkneſſe, and a fire vnquenchable : Now they haue done ſinning, and God begins to iudge : Wickedneſſe hath but a time, the puniſhment of wickedneſſe is beyond all time. The reſidue of the night was both ſhort and dangerous. Yet good Lot, though ſought for by the Sodomites, and newly pull'd into his houſe by the Angels, goes forth of his houſe to ſeeke his ſonnes in law : No good man would bee ſaued alone; faith makes vs charitable with neglect of all perill : Hee warnes them like a Prophet, and aduiſes them like a Father, but both in vaine; hee ſeemes to them as if he mocked, and they doe more then ſeeme to mock him againe. Why ſhould to morrow differ from other dayes ? Who euer ſaw it raine fire ? Or whence ſhould that brimſtone come ? Or if ſuch ſhowres muſt fall, how ſhall nothing burne but this Valley ? So to carnall men preaching is fooliſhneſſe, deuotion idleneſſe, the Prophets mad men, Paul a babler : Theſe mens incredulitie is as worthy of the fire, as the others vncleanneſſe. He that beleeues not, is condemned already.

The meſſengers of God do not onely haſten Lot, but pull him by a gracious violence out of that impure Citie. They thirſted at once after vengeance vpon Sodom, and Lots ſafety; they knew God could not ſtrike Sodom, till Lot were gone out, and that Lot could not be ſafe within thoſe walls. Wee are all naturally in Sodom: if God did not hale vs out, whiles wee linger, wee ſhould be condemned with the world. If God meet with a very good field, hee puls vp the weeds, and lets the corne grow; if indifferent, he lets the corne and weeds grow together; if very ill, he gathers the few eares of corne, and burnes the weeds.

Oh the large bounty of God which reacheth not to vs onely, but to ours! God ſaues Lot for Abrahams ſake, and Zoar for Lots ſake; If Sodom had not beene too wicked, it had eſcaped: Were it not for Gods deare children, that are intermixed with the world, it could not ſtand: The wicked owe their liues vnto thoſe few good; whom they hate and perſecute. Now at once the Sunne riſes vpon Zoar, and fire falls downe vpon Sodom: Abraham ſtands vpon the hill, and ſees the Cities burning; It is faire weather with Gods children, when it is fouleſt with the wicked. Thoſe which burned with the fire of luſt, are now conſumed with the fire of vengeance: They ſinned againſt nature; and now againſt the courſe of nature, fire deſcends from Heauen, and conſumes them: Lot may not ſo much as looke at the flame, whether for the ſtay of his paſſage, or the horror of the ſight, or tryall of his faith, or feare of commiſeration. Small precepts from God are of importance; obedience is as well tryed, and diſobedience as well puniſhed in little, as in much: His wife doth but turne backe her head, whether in curioſitie, or vnbeliefe, or loue and compaſſion of the place; ſhee is turned into a monument of diſobedience: what doth it auaile her not to be turned into aſhes in Sodom, when ſhe is turned into a pillar of Salt in the Plaine? He that ſaued a whole Citie, cannot ſaue his owne Wife. God cannot abide ſmall ſinnes, in thoſe whom hee hath obliged. If we diſpleaſe him, God can as well meet with vs out of Sodom: Lot now come into Zoar, maruels at the ſtay of her, whom hee might not before looke backe to call; and ſoone after returning to ſeeke her, beholds this change with wonder and griefe: He finds Salt in ſtead of fleſh, a Pillar in ſtead of a Wife: he findes Sodome conſumed, and her ſtanding; and is more amazed with this, by how much it was both more neere him, and leſſe expected.

When God deliuers vs from deſtruction, he doth not ſecure vs from all afflictions: Lot hath loſt his Wife, his allies, his ſubſtance, and now betakes himſelfe to an vncomfortable ſolitarineſſe.

Yet though he fled from company, he could not fly from ſinne: He who could not be tainted with vncleanneſſe in Sodom, is ouertaken with drunkenneſſe and inceſt in a Caue: Rather then Satan ſhall want baits, his owne daughters will proue Sodomites; Thoſe which ſhould haue comforted, betrayed him, How little are ſome hearts moued with iudgements? The aſhes of Sodom, and the Pillar of Salt, were not yet out of their eye, when they dare thinke of lying with their owne Father. They knew that whileſt Lot was ſober, he could not be vnchaſte: Drunkenneſſe is the way to all beaſtiall affections, and acts. Wine knowes no difference either of perſons, or ſins: No doubt, Lot was afterwards aſhamed of his inceſtuous Seed, and now wiſhed he had come alone out of Sodom; yet euen this vnnaturall bed was bleſſed with increaſe; and one of our Sauiours worthy Anceſtors ſprung after from this line. Gods election is not tyed to our meanes; neither are bleſſings or curſes euer traduced; The chaſte bed of holy Parents hath ofttimes bred a monſtrous generation; and contrarily God hath raiſed ſometimes an holy Seed from the drunken bed of Inceſt, or Fornication. It hath beene ſeene, that weightie eares of corne haue growne out of the compaſſe of the tilled field: Thus will God magnifie the freedome of his owne choyce; and let vs know that wee are not borne, but made good.

THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE

THE LORD DENNY,
BARON OF WALTHAM,
my ſingular good Patron,
All Grace and Happineſſe.

Right Honorable;

I Know, and in all humilitie confeſſe, how weake my Diſcourſe is, and how vnworthy of this divine ſubiect, which I haue vndertaken; which if an Angell from Heauen ſhould ſay hee could ſufficiently comment vpon, I ſhould diſtruſt him: Yet this let me ſay (without any vaine boaſting) that theſe thoughts (ſuch as they are) through the bleſsing of God, I haue wouen out of my ſelfe, as holding it (after our Sauiours rule) better to giue, than to receiue. It is eaſier to heape together large volumes of others labours, then to worke out leſſer of our owne: and the ſuggeſtion of one new thought, is better then many repeated.

This part (which together with the Author is yours) ſhall preſent to your Lordſhip the buſieſt of all the Patriarks, together with his tryalls, and ſucceſſe: wherein you ſhall ſee Eſau ſtripped by fraud of that which hee willingly ſold, Iacobs hard aduentures for the bleſsing, and no leſſe hard ſeruices for his wiues and ſubſtance, his dangerous encounters ending ioyfully, the rape of his onely daughter, ſeconded with the trecherous murder of his ſonnes; Iudahs wrong to Thamar repayed by his owne vncleanneſſe; Ioſephs ſale, impriſonment, honour, pietie; The ſinne of his brethren well beſtowed, well anſwered. I ſo touch at the vſes of all theſe, as one that knowes it is eaſie to ſay more, and impoſsible to ſay enough. God giue a bleſsing to my endeauours, and a pardon to my weakeneſſe, to your Lordſhip an increaſe of his graces, and perfection of all happineſſe.

Your Lordſhips humbly and officiouſly deuoted in

THE THIRD BOOKE.

Of Iacob and Eſau.

OF all the Patriarkes, none made ſo little noyſe in the World as Iſaac; none liued either ſo priuately, or ſo innocently: Neither know I whether hee approued himſelfe a better ſonne or an Husband. For the one; he gaue himſelfe ouer to the knife of his Father, and mourned three yeeres for his Mother: for the other, he ſought not to any handmaids bed, but in a chaſt forbearance reſerued himſelfe for twenty yeeres ſpace, and prayed: Rebecca was ſo long barren, his prayers proued more effectuall then his ſeed. At laſt ſhee conceiued, as [illegible] hee had beene more then the daughter in law to Sarah; whoſe ſonne was giuen her [illegible]ot out of the power of Nature, but of her husbands Faith.

God is oft better to vs then we would: Iſaac prayes for a ſonne, God giues him two at once: Now, ſhee is no leſſe troubled with the ſtrife of the children in her wombe, then before with the want of children: we know not when we are pleaſed; that which we deſire, oft-times diſcontents vs more in the fruition; wee are ready to complaine both full and faſting. Before Rebecca conceiued, ſhe was at eaſe: Before ſpirituall regeneration there is all peace in the ſoule: No ſooner is the new man formed in vs, but the fleſh conflicts with the ſpirit: There is no grace where is no vnquietneſſe: Eſau alone would not haue ſtriuen: Nature will euer agree with it ſelfe; Neuer any Rebecca conceiued onely an Eſau; or was ſo happy as to conceiue none but a Iacob; She muſt be the mother of both, that ſhe may haue both ioy and exerciſe. This ſtrife began early; Euery true Iſraelite begins his warre with his being. How many actions which we know not of, are not without preſage and ſignification?

Theſe two were the champions of two Nations; the field was their mothers wombe; their quarrell, precedency & ſuperiority: Eſau got the right of Nature; Iacob of grace: yet that there might be ſome pretence of equality, leſt Eſau ſhould out-run his brother into the World, Iacob holds him faſt by the heele: So his hand was borne before the others foot: But becauſe Eſau is ſome minutes the elder; that the younger might haue better claime to that which God had promiſed, he buies that which he could not winn: If either by ſtrife, or purchaſe, or ſuite, we can attaine ſpirituall bleſſings, we are happy: If Iacob had come forth firſt, he had not knowne how much he was bound to God for the fauour of his aduancement.

There was neuer any meat, except the fordidden fruit, ſo deare bought as this broth of Iacob; In both, the receiuer and the Eater is accurſed: Euery true ſonne of Iſrael will bee content to purchaſe ſpirituall fauours with earthly; And that man hath in him too much of the blood of Eſau, which will not rather dye then forgoe his birth-right.

But what hath careleſſe Eſau loſt, if hauing ſold his birth-right, he may obtaine the bleſſing? Or what hath Iacob gained, if his brothers Veniſon may counteruaile his Pottage? Yet thus hath old Iſaac decreed; who was now not more blind in his eyes, then in his affections: God had forewarned him that the elder ſhould ſerue the yonger, yet Iſaac goes about to bleſſe Eſau.

It was not ſo hard for Abraham to reconcile Gods promiſe and Iſaacs ſacrifice, as for Iſaac to reconcile the ſuperiority of Iacob, with Eſau benediction: for Gods hand was in that, in this none but his owne: The deareſt of Gods Saints haue beene ſometimes tranſported with naturall affections: He ſaw himſelfe preferred to Iſmael, through the elder; he ſaw his Father wilfully forgetting nature at Gods command, in binding him for ſacrifice; He ſaw Eſau lewdly matched with Heathens; and yet he will remember nothing, but, Eſau is my firſt borne; But how gratious is God, that when we would will not let vs ſinne? And ſo orders our actions, that wee doe not what we will, but what we ought.

That God which had ordained the Lordſhip to the yonger, will alſo contriue for him the bleſſing; what he will haue effected, ſhall not want meanes: the Mother ſhall rather defeat the Sonne, and beguile the Father, then the Father ſhall beguile the choſen ſonne of his beſſing. What was Iacob to Rebecca more then Eſau? or what Mother doth not more affect the elder? But now God inclines the loue of the Mother to the yonger, againſt the cuſtome of nature, becauſe the father loues the elder, againſt the promiſe: The affections of the Parents are diuided, that the promiſe might be fulfilled; Rebeccaes craft ſhall anſwer Iſaacs partiality: Iſaac would vniuſtly turne Eſau into Iacob, Rebecca doth as cunningly turne Iacob into Eſau: her deſire was good, her meanes were vnlawfull: God doth oft-times effect his iuſt will by our weakneſſes; yet neither thereby iuſtifying our infirmities, nor blemiſhing his owne actions.

Here was nothing but counterfeiting; a fayned Perſon, a fayned Name, fayned Veniſon, a fained Anſwer, and yet behold, a true bleſſing; but to the man, not to the meanes: Thoſe were ſo vnſound, that Iacob himſelfe doth more feare their curſe then hope for their ſucceſſe. Iſaac was now both ſimple and old: yet if hee had perceiued the fraud, Iacob had beene more ſure of a curſe, then he could bee ſure, that hee ſhould not be perceiued.

Thoſe which are plaine-hearted in themſelues, are the bittereſt enemies to deceit in others: Rebecca preſuming vpon the Oracle of God, and her husbands ſimplicity, dare be his ſurety for the danger, his counſeller for the cariage of the buſineſſe, his cooke for the dyet, yea dreſſes both the meat and the man: and now puts words into his mouth, the diſh into his hand, the garments vpon his backe, the Goats haire vpon the open parts of his body, and ſends him in thus furniſhed for the bleſſing; Standing, no doubt, at the doore, to ſee how well her leſſon was learned, how well her deuice ſucceeded. And if old Iſaac ſhould by any of his ſenſes haue diſcerned the guile, ſhe had ſoone ſtept in and vndertaken the blame, and vrged him with that knowne will of God concerning Iacobs Dominion, and Eſaus ſeruitude, which either age or affection had made him forget.

And now ſhe wiſhes ſhe could borrow Eſaus tongue as well as his garments, that ſhe might ſecurely deceiue all the ſenſes of him, which had ſuffered himſelf more dangerouſly deceiued with his affection: But this is paſt her remedy: her ſon muſt name himſelfe Eſau with the voice of Iacob. It is hard if our tongue doe not bewray what we are, in ſpight of our habit. This was enough to worke Iſaac to a ſuſpition, to an inquiry, not to an incredulity: He that is good of himſelfe, will hardly beleeue euill of another;

And will rather diſtruſt his owne ſenſes, then the fidelity of thoſe he truſted: All the ſenſes are ſet to examine; none ſticketh at the iudgement but the eare; To deceiue that, Iacob muſt ſecond his diſſimulation with three lyes at one breath: I am Eſau, as thou badſt me, my Veniſon: one ſinne entertained fetcheth in another: and if it be forced to lodge alone, eyther departeth, or dyeth: I loue Iacobs bleſsing, but I hate his lye. I would not doe that wilfully, which Iacob did weakly; vpon condition of a bleſſing: He that pardoned his infirmitie, would curſe my obſtinateneſſe.

Good Iſaac ſets his hands to try whether his eares informed him aright; hee feeles the hands of him whoſe voyce he ſuſpected: that honeſt heart could not thinke, that the skinne might more eaſily be counterfaited, then the lungs: A ſmall ſatisfaction contents thoſe whom guiltineſſe hath not made ſcrupulous: Iſaac beleeues, and bleſſes the younger Sonne in the garments of the elder: If our heauenly Father ſmell vpon our backes the ſauour of our elder brothers Robes, we cannot depart from him vnbleſſed.

No ſooner is Iacob gone away full of the ioy of his bleſſing, then Eſau comes in, full of the hope of the bleſſing: And now he cannot repent him to haue ſold that in his hunger for pottage; which in his pleaſure he ſhall buy againe with Veniſon. The hopes of the wicked faile them when they are at higheſt, wheras Gods children finde thoſe comforts in extremitie which they durſt not expect.

Now he comes in blowing, and ſweating for his reward, and findes nothing but a repulſe: Lewd men when they thinke they haue earned of God, and come proudly to challenge fauour, receiue no anſwer, but, Who art thou? Both the Father and the Son wonder at each other, the one with feare, the other with griefe; Iſaac trembled, & Eſau wept; the one vpon conſcience, the other vpon enuy: Iſaacs heart now told him that he ſhould not haue purpoſed the bleſſing where he did; and that it was due to him vnto whom it was giuen, and not purpoſed; hence hee durſt not reuerſe that which hee had done with Gods will; beſides his owne: For now hee ſaw that hee had done vnwilling Iuſtice: God will finde both time and meanes to reclaime his owne, to preuent their ſinnes, to manifeſt and reforme their errours. Who would haue looked for teares from Eſau? Or who dare truſt teares, when hee ſees them fall from ſo graceleſſe Eyes?

It was a good word, Bleſſe me alſo, my Father; Euery miſcreant can wiſh himſelfe wel: No man would be miſerable, if it were enough to deſire happineſſe: Why did hee not rather weepe to his brother for the pottage; then to Iſaac for a bleſſing? If hee had not then ſold, hee had not needed now to begge: It is iuſt with God to deny vs thoſe fauors which wee were careleſſe in keeping, and which wee vnderualued in enioying. Eſaus teares finde no place for Iſaacs repentance; Except it were that he hath done that by wile, which he ſhould haue done vpon duty.

No motiue can cauſe a good heart to repent that he hath done well; How happy a thing it is to know the ſeaſons of grace, and not to neglect them! how deſperate to haue knowne and neglected them! theſe teares were both late and falſe; the teares of rage, of enuy, of carnall deſire; worldly ſorrow cauſeth death: yet whiles Eſau howles out thus for a bleſſing, I heare him cry out of his Fathers ſtore (Haſt thou but one bleſsing, my Father?) of his brothers ſubtlety (Was he not rightly called Iacob?) I doe not heare him blame his owne deſerts. Hee did not ſee, while his Father was deceiued, and his Brother crafty, that God was iuſt, and himſelfe vncapable: he knew himſelfe profane, and yet claimes a bleſſing.

Thoſe that care not to pleaſe God, yet care for the outward fauours of God, and are ready to murmure if they want them, as if God were bound to them, and they free. And yet ſo mercifull is God, that he hath ſecond bleſſings for thoſe that loue him not, and giues them all they care for. That one bleſſing of ſpeciall loue is for none but Iſrael; but thoſe of common kindneſſe are for them that can ſell their birth-right: this bleſſing was more then Eſau could be worthy of: yet like a ſecond Cain, he reſolues to kill his brother, becauſe he was more accepted: I know not whether he were a worſe ſonne or brother; he hopes for his fathers death, and purpoſes his brothers, and vowes to ſhed blood in ſtead of teares. But wicked men cannot be ſo ill as they would; that ſtrong Wreſtler againſt whom Iacob preuailed, preuailed with Eſau, and turned his wounds into kiſſes. An hoaſt of men came with Eſau, an army of Angels met Iacob. Eſau threatned, Iacob prayed: His prayers and preſents haue melted the heart of Eſau into loue. And now in ſtead of the grim and ſterne countenance of an executioner, Iacob ſees the face of Eſau, as the face of God. Both men and Deuils are ſtinted, the ſtouteſt heart cannot ſtand out againſt God. He that can wreſtle earneſtly with God, is ſecure from the harmes of men. Thoſe mindes which are exaſperated with violence, and cannot be broken with feare, yet are bowed with loue; when the wayes of a man pleaſe God, he will make his enemies at peace with him.

Hall, J.

Of IACOB and LABAN.

ISAACS life was not more retyred and quiet, then Iacobs was buſie and troubleſome. In the one I ſee the image of contemplation, of action in the other. None of the Patriarkes ſaw ſo euill dayes as hee; from whom iuſtly hath the Church of God therfore taken her name. Neither were the faithfull euer ſince called Abrahamits, but Iſraelites. That no time might be loſt, he began his ſtrife in the womb; after that, he flyes for his life from a cruell brother to a cruell vncle. With a ſtaffe goes hee ouer Iordan alone, doubtfull and comfortleſſe, not like the ſonne of Iſaac. In the way, the earth is his bed, and a ſtone his pillow; Yet euen there he ſees a viſion of Angels: Iacobs heart was neuer ſo full of ioy, as when his head lay hardeſt. God is moſt preſent with vs in our greateſt deiection, and loues to giue comfort to thoſe that are forſaken of their hopes.

He came farre to finde out an hard friend; and of a Nephew becomes a Seruant. No doubt when Laban heard of his ſiſters ſonne, hee looked for the Camels and attendance that came to fetch his ſiſter Rebecca; not thinking that Abrahams ſeruant could come better furniſhed then Iſaacs ſonne: but now when hee ſaw nothing but a ſtaffe, hee looks vpon him, not as an vncle, but a maſter. And while he pretends to offer him a wife as the reward of his ſeruice, he craftily requires his ſeruice as the dowry of his wife.

After the ſeruice of an hard Apprentiſeſhip hath earned her whom hee loued; his wife is changed, and he is in a ſort, forced to an vnwilling adultery: His mother had before in a cunning diſguiſe ſubſtituted him who was the younger ſon, for the elder; and now not long after, his father in law by a like fraud, ſubſtitutes to him the elder daughter for the younger: God comes oftentimes home to vs in our owne kinde; and euen by the ſinne of others payes vs our owne, when we looke not for it. It is doubtfull whether it were a greater croſſe to marry whom hee would not, or to be diſappointed of her whom he deſired. And now he muſt begin a new hope, where he made account of fruition. To raiſe vp an expectation once fruſtrate, is more difficult, then to continue a long hope drawne on with likelihoods of performance: yet thus deare is Iacob content to pay for Rachel, fourteene yeares ſeruitude. Commonly Gods children come not eaſily by their pleaſures: what miſeries will not loue digeſt and ouercome? And if Iacob were willingly conſumed with heat in the day, and froſt in the night, to become the ſonne in law to Laban, What ſhould we refuſe to be the ſonnes of God?

Rachel whom he loued, is barren: Lea which was deſpiſed, is fruitfull; How wiſely God weighes out to vs our fauours and croſſes, in an equall ballance: ſo tempering our ſorrowes that they may not oppreſſe, and our ioyes that they may not tranſport vs: each one hath ſome matter of enuy to others, and of griefe to himſelfe.

Leah enuies Rachels beauty, and loue; Rachel enuies Leahs fruitfulneſſe: Yet Leah would not be barren, nor Rachel bleare-eyed. I ſee in Rachel the image of her Grandmother Sara; both in her beauty of perſon, in her actions, in her ſucceſſe: ſhee alſo will needs ſuborne her handmaid to make her a mother; and at laſt beyond hope herſelfe conceiueth: It is a weake greedineſſe in vs to affect Gods bleſſings by vnlawfull meanes; what a proofe and praiſe had it beene of her faith if ſhee had ſtayed Gods leaſure, and would rather haue endured her barrenneſſe, then her husbands polygamy? Now ſhe ſhewes her ſelfe the daughter of Laban; the Father for couetouſneſſe, the daughters for emulation haue drawne ſinne into Iacobs bed: he offended in yeelding, but they more in ſoliciting him, and therefore the fact is not imputed to Iacob, but to them. In thoſe ſinnes which Satan drawes vs into, the blame is ours: in thoſe which we moue each other vnto, the moſt fault and puniſhment lyes vpon the tempter. None of the Patriarkes diuided his ſeed into ſo many wombes as Iacob; none was ſo much croſſed in his ſeed.

Thus, rich in nothing but wiues and children, was he now returning to his Fathers houſe, accounting his charge his wealth. But God meant him yet more good. Laban ſees that both his Family and his Flocks were well encreaſed by Iacobs ſeruice. Not his loue therefore but his gaine makes him loth to part. Euen Labans couetouſneſſe is made by God the meanes to enrich Iacob.

Behold, his ſtrait maſter entreats him to that recompence, which made his nephew mighty, and himſelfe enuious: God conſidering his hard ſeruice, payd him wages out of Labans folds. Thoſe Flocks and Herds had but few ſpotted Sheepe and Goates, vntill Iacobs couenant: then (as if the faſhion had beene altered) they all ran into parted colours; the moſt and beſt (as if they had beene weary of their former owner) changed the colours of their young, that they might change their maſter.

In the very ſhapes and colours of brute creatures there is a diuine hand, which diſpoſeth them to his owne ends. Small and vnlikely meanes ſhall preuaile where God intends an effect. Little pilled ſticks of Haſell or poplar laid in the troughs, ſhall inrich Iacob with an increaſe of his ſpotted flocks; Labans ſonnes might haue tried the ſame meanes, and failed: God would haue Laban know that he put a difference betwixt Iacob and him; that as for fourteene yeares he had multiplied Iacobs charge of cattell to Laban, ſo now for the laſt ſix yeares he would multiply Labans flock to Iacob: and if Laban had the more, yet the better were Iacobs: Euen in theſe outward things, Gods children haue many times ſenſible taſtes of his fauours aboue the wicked.

I know not whether Laban were a worſe Vncle, or Father, or Maſter: he can like well Iacobs ſeruice, not his wealth. As the wicked haue no peace with God, ſo the godly haue no peace with men; for if they proſper not, they are deſpiſed; if they proſper, they are enuied. This Vncle, whom his ſeruice had made his father, muſt now vpon his wealth be fled from as an enemy, and like an enemy purſues him: If Laban had meant to haue taken a peaceable leaue, hee had neuer ſpent ſeuen dayes iourney in following his innocent ſonne: Iacob knew his churliſhneſſe, and therefore reſolued rather to bee vnmannerly then iniured: well might he thinke, that hee, whoſe oppreſſion changed his wages ſo often in his ſtay, would alſo abridge his wages in the parting; now therefore he wiſely prefers his owne eſtate to Labans loue: it is not good to regard too much the vniuſt diſcontentment of worldly men, and to purchaſe vnprofitable fauour with too great loſſe.

Behold: Laban followes Iacob with one troope, Eſau meets him with another, both with hoſtile intentions: both goe on till the vtmoſt point of their execution: both are preuented ere the execution. God makes fooles of the enemies of his Church, he lets them proceed, that they may be fruſtrate, and when they are gone to the vtmoſt reach of their tether, hee puls them backe to their taske with ſhame: Loe now, Laban leaues Iacob with a kiſſe; Eſau meets him with a kiſſe: Of the one he hath an oath, teares of the other, peace with both: Who ſhall need to feare man that is in league with God?

But what a wonder is this? Iacob receiued not ſo much hurt from all his enemies, as from his beſt friend. Not one of his hairs periſhed by Laban, or Eſau; yet he loſt a ioint by the Angell, and was ſent halting to his graue: He that knowes our ſtrength, yet will wreſtle with vs for our exerciſe, and loues our violence and importunity.

O happy loſſe of Iacob! he loſt a ioynt, and wonne a bleſſing: It is a fauour to halt from God, yet this fauour is ſeconded with a greater. He is bleſſed becauſe hee would rather halt, then leaue ere he was bleſſed. If he had left ſooner, he had not halted, but hee had not proſpered. That man ſhall goe away ſound, but miſerable, that loues a limbe more then a bleſſing. Surely, if Iacob had not wreſtled with God, he had beene foyled with euills: how many are the troubles of the righteous!

Not long after, Rachel, the comfort of his life, dyeth. And when, but in her trauell, and in his trauell to his Father? When hee had now before digeſted in his thoughts the ioy and gratulation of his aged Father, for ſo welcome a burden. His children, (the ſtaffe of his age) wound his ſoule to the death. Reuben proues inceſtuous, Iudah adulterous, Dinah rauiſhed, Simeon and Leui murderous, Er and Onan ſtriken dead, Ioſeph loſt, Simeon impriſoned; Beniamin, the death of his Mother, the Fathers right-hand, indangered; himſelfe driuen by famine in his old age to die amongſt the Ægyptians, a people that held it abomination to eat with him. If that Angell, with whom hee ſtroue, and who therefore ſtroue for him, had not deliuered his ſoule out of all aduerſity, he had beene ſupplanted with euills, and had beene ſo far from gaining the name of Iſrael, that he had loſt the name of Iacob: now what ſonne of Iſrael can hope for good daies, when hee heares his Fathers were ſo euill? It is enough for vs, if when wee are dead, we can reſt with him in the land of Promiſe. If the Angell of the Couenant once bleſſe vs, no paine, no ſorrowes can make vs miſerable.

Of DINAH.

I Find but one onely daughter of Iacob. Who muſt needes therefore be a great darling to her Father; and ſhee ſo miſcaries, that ſhe cauſes her Fathers griefe to be more then his loue. As her mother Leah; ſo ſhee hath a fault in her eyes; which was Curioſitie: She will needes ſee, and bee ſeene; and whiles ſhe doth vainely ſee, ſhee is ſeene luſtfully. It is not enough for vs to looke to our owne thoughts, except wee beware of the prouocations of others: If wee once wander out of the liſts, that God hath ſet vs in our callings, there is nothing but danger: Her Virginitie had bene ſafe, if ſhe had kept home; or if Sechem had forced her in her mothers tent, this loſſe of her Virginity had beene without her ſin; now ſhe is not innocent that gaue the occaſion.

Her eyes were guilty of the temptation; Onely to ſee is an inſufficient warrant to draw vs into places of ſpirituall hazard: If Sechem had ſeen her buſie at home, his loue had beene free from out-rage; now the lightneſſe of her preſence gaue encouragement to his inordinate deſires. Immodeſty of behauiour makes way to luſt; and giues life vnto wicked hopes: yet Sechem bewrayes a good nature euen in filthineſſe; He loues Dinah after his ſinne, and will needs marry her whom he had defiled. Commonly luſt ends in loathing: Ammon abhors Thamar as much, after his act, as before, he loued her; and beats her out of doores, whom hee was ſicke to bring in. But Sechem would not let Dinah fare the worſe for his ſinne. And now hee goes about to entertaine her with honeſt loue whom the rage of his luſt had diſhoneſtly abuſed. Her deflouring ſhall be no preiudice to her, ſince her ſhame ſhall redound to none but him, and hee will hide her diſhonour with the name of an husband. What could hee now doe, but ſue to his Father, to hers, to her ſelfe, to her brethren; intreating that with humble ſubmiſſion, which he might haue obtained by violence? Thoſe actions which are ill begun, can hardly be ſalued vp with late ſatisfactions; whereas good entrances giue ſtrength vnto the proceedings, and ſucceſſe to the end.

The yong mans father doth not only conſent, but ſolicite; and is ready to purchaſe a daughter either with ſubſtance, or paine: The two old men would haue ended the matter peaceably; but youth commonly vndertakes raſhly, and performes with paſſion. The ſons of Iacob thinke of nothing but reuenge, and (which is worſt of all) begin their cruelty with craft, and hide their craft with Religion: A ſmiling malice is moſt deadly; and hatred doth moſt rancle the heart, when it is kept in and diſſembled. Wee cannot giue our ſiſter to an vncircumciſed man; here was God in the mouth, and Satan in the heart: The bloodieſt of all proiects haue euer wont to be coloured with Religion: becauſe the worſe any thing is, the better ſhew it deſires to make; and contrarily, the better colour is put vpon any vice, the more odious it is; for as euery ſimulation addes to an euill, ſo the beſt addes moſt euill: themſelues had taken the daughters and ſiſters of vncircumciſed men; yea Iacob himſelfe did ſo; why might not an vncircumciſed man obtaine their ſiſter? Or if there be a difference of giuing and taking; it had beene well, if it had not beene only pretended: It had beene an happy Rauiſhment of Dinah, that ſhould haue drawne a whole Countrey into the boſome of the Church: but here was a Sacrament intended, not to the good of the ſoule, but to murder of the body: It was a hard taske for Hamor and Sechem, not onely to put the knife to their owne foreskins, but to perſwade a multitude to ſo painefull a condition.

The ſons of Iacob diſſemble with them, they with the people. (Shall not their flocks and ſubſtance be ours?) Common profit is pretended; whereas onely Sechems pleaſure is meant. No motiue is ſo powerfull to the vulgar ſort, as the name of Commoditie; The hope of this, makes them prodigall of their skin and blood; Not the loue to the Sacrament, not the loue to Sechem: ſiniſter reſpects draw more to the profeſſion of Religion, then conſcience: if it were not for the loaues and fiſhes, the traine of Chriſt would bee leſſe. But the Sacraments of God miſ-receiued, neuer proſper in the end. Theſe men are content to ſmart, ſo they may gaine.

And now that euery man lyes ſore of his owne wound, Simeon and Leui ruſh in armed, and wound all the males to death: Curſed be their wrath, for it was fierce, and their rage, for it was cruell. Indeed, filthineſſe ſhould not haue beene wrought in Iſraell: yet, murder ſhould not haue beene wrought by Iſrael; if they had beene fit Iudges (which were but bloody executioners) how far doth the puniſhment exceed the fault? To puniſh aboue the offence, is no leſſe iniuſtice, then to offend: one offendeth, and all feele the reuenge: yea all (though innocent) ſuffer that reuenge, which he that offended, deſerued not. Sechem ſinneth, but Dinah tempted him: She that was ſo light, as to wander abroad alone, only to gaze, I feare was not ouer difficult to yeeld: And if hauing wrought her ſhame, he had driuen her home with diſgrace to her Fathers tent, ſuch tyrannous luſt had iuſtly called for blood: but now hee craues, and offers, and would pay deare for but leaue to giue ſatisfaction.

To execute rigour vpon a ſubmiſſe offender, is more mercileſſe than iuſt: Or if the puniſhment had bin both iuſt and proportionable from another, yet from them which had vowed peace and affinitie, it was ſhamefully vniuſt. To diſappoint the truſt of another, and to neglect our owne promiſe and fidelity for priuate purpoſes, adds faithleſneſſe vnto our cruelty. That they were impotent, it was through their circumciſion: what impiety was this; in ſtead of honouring an holy ſigne, to take an aduantage by it? What ſhrieking was there now in the ſtreets of the Citty of the Hiuites? And how did the beguiled Sichemits, when they ſaw the ſwords of the two brethren, die curſing that Sacrament in their hearts, which had betrayed them? Euen their curſes were the ſins of Simeon and Leui; whoſe fact, though it were adhorred by their Father, yet it was ſeconded by their brethren. Their ſpoile makes good the others ſlaughter. Who would haue looked to haue found this outrage in the family of Iacob? How did that good Patriarke, when he ſaw Dinah come home blubbered and wringing her hands, Simeon and Leui ſprinkled with blood, wiſh that Leah had beene barren as long as Rachel! Good Parents haue griefe enough (though they ſuſtaine no blame) for their childrens ſinnes: What great euills ariſe from ſmall beginnings! The idle curioſity of Dinah hath bred all this miſchiefe; Rauiſhment followes vpon her wandring, vpon her rauiſhment murder, vpon the murder ſpoyle: It is holy and ſafe to be iealous of the firſt occaſions of euill, either done or ſuffered.

Of IVDAH and THAMAR.

I Finde not many of Iacobs ſonnes more faulty then Iudah; who yet is ſingled out from all the reſt, to be the royall Progenitor of Chriſt; and to be honoured with the dignity of the birth-right, that Gods election might not be of merit, but of grace: Elſe howſoeuer hee might haue ſped alone, Thamar had neuer beene ioyned with him in this line: Euen Iudah marries a Canaanite; it is no maruell though his Seed proſper not: And yet that good children may not be too much diſcouraged with their vnlawfull propagation, the Fathers of the promiſed Seed are raiſed from an inceſtuous bed: Iudah was very yong, ſcarce frō vnder the rod of his Father, yet he takes no other counſell for his mariage, but from his owne eyes, which were like his ſiſter Dinahs, rouing and wanton: what better iſſue could be expected from ſuch beginnings? Thoſe proud Iewes that glory ſo much of their Pedigree and Name from this Patriarke, may now chooſe whether they will haue their mother a Canaanite, or an Harlot: Euen in theſe things oft-times the birth followes the belly. His eldeſt ſonne Er, is too wicked to liue; God ſtrikes him dead ere he can leaue any iſſue, not abiding any ſiens to grow out of ſo bad a ſtocke: Notorious ſinners God reſerues to his owne vengeance. Hee doth not inflict ſenſible iudgments vpon all his enemies, leſt the wicked ſhould thinke there were no puniſhment abiding for them elſe-where. Hee doth inflict ſuch Iudgments vpon ſome, leſt he ſhould ſeeme careleſſe of euill. It were as eaſie for him to ſtrike all dead, as one: but hee had rather all ſhould be warned by one; and would haue his enemies find him mercifull, as his children, iuſt: His brother Onan ſees the iudgment, and yet followes his ſins. Euery little thing diſcourages vs from good; nothing can alter the heart that is ſet vpon euill: Er was not worthy of any loue; but though hee were a miſcreant, yet he was a brother. Seed ſhould haue been raiſed to him; Onan iuſtly leeſes his life with his Seed; which he would rather ſpill, then lend to a wicked brother. Some duties we owe to humanity, more to neereneſſe of blood. Ill deſeruings of others can be no excuſe for our iniuſtice, for our vncharitableneſſe. That which Thamar required, Moſes afterward, as from God, commanded; the ſucceſſion of brothers into the barren bed: Some lawes God ſpake to his Church, long ere he wrote them: while the Author is certainly knowne, the voyce and the finger of God are worthy of equall reſpect. Iudah hath loſt two ſonnes, and now doth but promiſe the third, whom hee ſinnes in not giuing. It is the weakeneſſe of nature, rather to hazard a ſinne, then a danger; and to neglect our owne duty, for wrongfull ſuſpition of others: though he had loſt his ſon in giuing him, yet hee ſhould haue giuen him: A faithfull mans promiſe is his debt, which no feare of damage can diſpenſe with.

But whereupon was this ſlackneſſe? Iudah feared that ſome vnhappineſſe in the bed of Thamar was the cauſe of his ſonnes miſcariage; whereas it was their fault, that Thamar was both a widow and childleſſe. Thoſe that are but the patients of euill, are many times burdened with ſuſpitions; and therefore are ill thought of, becauſe they fare ill: Afflictions would not bee ſo heauy, if they did not lay vs open vnto vncharitable conceits.

What difference God puts betwixt ſinnes of wilfulneſſe, and infirmitie? The ſons pollution is puniſhed with preſent death, the fathers inceſt is pardoned, and in a ſort proſpereth.

Now Thamar ſeekes by ſubtlety, that which ſhe could not haue by award of iuſtice; the neglect of due retributions driues men to indirect courſes; neither know I whether they ſin more in righting themſelues wrongfully, or the other in not righting them: She therefore takes vpon her the habit of an harlot, that ſhe might performe the act; If ſhe had not wiſhed to ſeeme an Whore, ſhe had not worn that attire, nor choſen that place. Immodeſty of outward faſhion or geſture bewrayes euill deſires: the heart that meanes well, will neuer wiſh to ſeeme ill; for commonly we affect to ſhew better then wee are. Many harlots will put on the ſemblances of chaſtity, of modeſty; neuer the contrary. It is no truſting thoſe, which doe not wiſh to appeare good. Iudah eſteemes her by her habit: and now the ſight of an harlot hath ſtird vp in him a thought of luſt; Satan finds well, that a fit obiect is halfe a victory.

Who would not bee aſhamed to ſee a ſonne of Iacob thus tranſported with filthy affections? At the firſt ſight he is inflamed; neither yet did he ſee the face of her, whom he luſted after: it was enough motiue to him that ſhe was a woman; neither could the preſence of his neighbour, the Adullamite, compoſe thoſe wicked thoughts, or hinder his vnchaſt acts.

That ſinne muſt needs be impudent which can abide a witneſſe: yea ſo hath his luſt beſotted him, that he cannot diſcerne the voyce of Thamar, that he cannot foreſee the danger of his ſhame in parting with ſuch pledges. There is no paſſion, which doth not for the time bereaue a man of himſelfe: Thamar had learned not to truſt him without a pawne; He had promiſed his ſonne to her as a daughter, and failed; now he promiſed a Kid to her, as an Harlot, and performeth it: Whether his pledge conſtrained him or the power of his word, I inquire not: Many are faithfull in all things, ſaue thoſe which are the greateſt, and deareſt; If his credit had beene as much indangered in the former promiſe he had kept it: now hath Thamar requited him. She expected long the enioying of his promiſed ſon, and he performed not: but here hee performes the promiſe of the Kid, and ſhee ſtayes not to expect it. Iudah is ſorry that he cannot pay the hire of his luſt, and now feareth leſt he ſhall be beaten with his owne ſtaffe, leſt his ſignet ſhall be vſed to confirme, and ſeale his reproach; reſoluing not to know them; and wiſhing they were vnknowne of others. Shame is the eaſieſt wages of ſin, and the ſureſt which euer begins firſt in our ſelues. Nature is not more forward to commit ſinne, then willing to hide it.

I heare as yet of no remorſe in Iudah, but feare of ſhame. Three moneths hath his ſinne ſlept, and now when he is ſecureſt, it awakes and baites him. Newes is brought him that Thamar begins to ſwell with her conception, and now he ſwels with rage, and cals her forth to the flame like a rigorous Iudge, without ſo much as ſtaying for the time of her deliuerance, that his cruelty in this Iuſtice, ſhould be no leſſe ill, then the vniuſtice of occaſioning it. If Iudah had not forgotten his ſinne, his pittie had beene more then his hatred to this of his daughters: How eaſie is it to deteſt thoſe ſinnes in others, which we flatter in our ſelues! Thamar doth not deny the ſinne, nor refuſe puniſhment; but cals for that partner in her puniſhment, which was her partner in the ſinne: the ſtaffe, the ſignet, the handkerchiefe accuſe and conuince Iudah, and now he bluſhes at his owne ſentence, much more at his act, and cries out, Shee is more righteous then I. God will finde a time to bring his children vpon their knees, and to wring from them penitent confeſſions: And rather then he will not haue them ſoundly aſhamed, he will make them the trumpets of their owne reproach.

Yet doth he not offer himſelfe to the flame with her, but rather excuſes her by himſelfe. This relenting in his own caſe, ſhamed his former zeale: Euen in the beſt men nature is partiall to it ſelfe: It is good ſo to ſentence others frailties, that yet we remember our owne, whether thoſe that haue beene, or may be: with what ſhame, yea with what horror muſt Iudah needs looke vpon the great belly of Thamar, and on her two ſons, the monuments of his filthineſſe?

How muſt it needs wound his ſoule, to heare them call him both Father and Grandfather; to call her mother and ſiſter? If this had not coſt him many a ſigh, hee had no more eſcaped his Fathers curſe, then Reuben did: I ſee the difference, not of ſinnes, but of men: Remiſſion goes not by the meaſure of the ſinne, but the qualitie of the ſinner; yea rather the mercy of the Forgiuer: Bleſſed is the man (not that ſinnes not, but) to whom the Lord imputes not his ſinne.

Of IOSEPH.

I Maruell not that Ioſeph had the double portion of Iacobs land, who had more then two parts of his ſorrowes: None of his ſonnes did ſo truly inherit his afflictions; none of them was either ſo miſerable, or ſo great: ſuffering is the way to glory: I ſee in him not a cleerer type of Chriſt, then of euery Chriſtian; Becauſe wee are deare to our Father, and complaine of ſinnes, therefore are we hated of our carnall brethren: If Ioſeph had not medled with his brothers faults, yet he had beene enuied for his Fathers affection; but now malice is met with enuy: There is nothing more thankleſſe or dangerous then to ſtand in the way of a reſolute ſinner: That which doth correct and oblige the penitent, makes the wilfull minde furious and reuengefull.

All the ſpight of his brethren cannot make Ioſeph caſt off the liuery of his Fathers loue: what need we care for the cenſures of men, if our hearts can tell vs that we are in fauour with God?

But what meant young Ioſeph to adde vnto his owne enuy, by reporting his dreames? The concealement of our hopes, or abilities, hath not more modeſty, then ſafety: Hee that was enuied for his dearneſſe, and hated for his intelligence, was both enuied & hated for his dreames. Surely God meant to make the relation of theſe dreames, a means to effect that which the dreames imported. Wee men worke by likely meanes; God by contraries. The maine quarrell was, Behold, this dreamer commeth. Had it not been for his dreames, he had not bin ſold: if he had not bin ſold, he had not bin exalted. So Ioſephs ſtate had not deſerued enuy, if his dreams had not cauſed him to be enuied. Full little did Ioſeph thinke, when he went to ſeeke his brethren, that this was the laſt time he ſhould ſee his fathers houſe: Full little did his brethren thinke, when they ſold him naked to the Iſmaelites, to haue once ſeene him in the Throne of Ægypt. Gods decree runnes on; and while we either thinke not of it, or oppoſe it, is performed.

In an honeſt and obedient ſimplicity, Ioſeph comes to enquire of his brethrens health; and now may not returne to carry newes of his own miſery: whiles he thinkes of their welfare, they are plotting his deſtruction; Come, let vs ſlay him. Who would haue expected this cruelty in them, which ſhould be the fathers of Gods Church? It was thought a fauour, that Reubens entreaty obtained for him that he might be caſt into the pit aliue; to dye there. He lookt for brethren, and behold murtherers; Euery mans tongue, euery mans fiſt was bent againſt him: Each one ſtriues who ſhall lay the firſt hand vpon that changeable cote, which was dyed with their Fathers loue, and their enuy: And now they haue ſtript him naked; and haling him by both armes, as it were, caſt him aliue into his graue. So in pretence of forbearance, they reſolue to torment him with a lingring death: the ſauageſt robbers could not haue beene more mercileſſe:

for now beſides (what in them lyes) they kill their Father in their brother. Nature, if it once degenerate, growes more monſtrous and extreme, then a diſpoſition borne to cruelty.

All this while Ioſeph wanted neither words nor teares; but like a paſſionate ſuppliant (bowing his bare knees to them, whom he dreamed ſhould bow to him) intreats and perſwades by the deare name of their brotherhood, by their profeſſion of one common God, for their Fathers ſake, for their owne ſoules ſake, not to ſinne againſt his blood. But enuy hath ſhut out mercy; and makes them not onely forget themſelues to be brethren, but men: What ſtranger can thinke of poore innocent Ioſeph, crying naked in that deſolate and dry pit (only ſauing that he moyſtned it with teares) and not be moued? Yet his hard-hearted brethren ſit them downe careleſſely, with the noyſe of his lamentation in their eares, to eate bread, not once thinking by their owne hunger, what it was for Ioſeph to be affamiſht to death.

Whatſoeuer they thought, God neuer meant that Ioſeph ſhould periſh in that pit; and therefore hee ſends very Iſmaelites to ranſome him from his Brethren; the ſeed of him that perſecuted his brother Iſaac, ſhall now redeeme Ioſeph from his brethrens perſecution. When they came to fetch him out of the pit, hee now hoped for a ſpeedie diſpatch; That ſince they ſeemed not to haue ſo much mercy, as to prolong his life, they would not continue ſo much crueltie, as to prolong his death.

And now, when hee hath comforted himſelfe with hope of the fauour of dying, behold, death exchanged for bondage: how much is ſeruitude, to an ingenuous nature, worſe then death? For, this is common to all; that, to none but the miſerable: Iudah meant this well, but God better: Reuben ſaued him from the ſword, Iudah from affamiſhing: God will euer raiſe vp ſome ſecret fauourers to his owne, amongſt thoſe that are moſt malicious. How well was this fauour beſtowed? If Ioſeph had dyed for hunger in the pit, both Iacob, and Iudah, and all his brethren had dyed for hunger in Canaan. Little did the Iſmaelitiſh Merchants know what a treaſure they bought, carried and ſold; more precious then all their Balmes and Mirrhs. Little did they thinke that they had in their hands the Lord of Ægypt, the Iewell of the World? Why ſhould we contemne any mans meaneſſe, when wee know not his deſtiny?

One ſinne is commonly vſed for the vaile of another: Ioſephs coat is ſent home dipped in blood, that whiles they ſhould hide their owne cruelty, they might afflict their Father, no leſſe then their brother. They haue deuiſed this reall lye, to puniſh their old Father, for his loue, with ſo grieuous a monument of his ſorrow.

Hee that is mourned for in Canaan, as dead, proſpers in Ægypt vnder Potiphar; and of a Slaue, is made Ruler: Thus God meant to prepare him for a greater charge; hee muſt firſt rule Potiphars Houſe, then Pharaohs Kingdome: his owne ſeruice is his leaſt good, for his very preſence procures a common bleſſing: A whole Family ſhall fare the better for one Ioſeph. Vertue is not lookt vpon alike with all eyes: his fellowes praiſe him, his Maſter truſts him, his Miſtreſſe affects him too much. All the ſpight of his brethren was not ſo great a croſſe to him, as the inordinate affection of his Miſtreſſe. Temptations on the right hand, are now more perillous, and hard to reſiſt, by how much they are more plauſible and glorious; But the heart that is bent vpon God, knowes how to walke ſteddily, and indifferently betwixt the pleaſures of ſinne, and feares of euill. He ſaw, this pleaſure would aduance him: He knew what it was to be a Minion of one of the greateſt Ladies in Ægypt: yet reſolues to contemne it: A good heart will rather lye in the duſt, then riſe by wickedneſſe. How ſhall I doe this, and ſinne againſt God?

He knew that all the honours of Ægypt could not buy off the guilt of one ſinne, and therefore abhors not onely her bed, but her company: He that will be ſafe from the acts of euill, muſt wiſely avoid the occaſions. As ſinne ends euer in ſhame, when it is committed, ſo it makes vs paſt ſhame, that we may commit it; The impudent ſtrumpet dare not onely ſolicit, but importune, and in a ſort force the modeſty of her good ſeruant; She layes hold on his garment; her hand ſeconds her tongue.

Good Ioſeph found it now time to flee, when ſuch an enemie purſued him: how much had he rather leaue his cloake, then his vertue! and to ſuffer his Miſtreſſe to ſpoyle him of his liuery, rather then he ſhould blemiſh her honour, or his Maſters in her, or God in either of them.

This ſecond time is Ioſeph ſtript of his garment; before in the violence of enuy, now of luſt; before of neceſſitie, now of choyce: Before, to deceiue his Father, now his Maſter: for behold, the pledge of his fidelity, which he left in thoſe wicked hands, is made an euidence againſt him, of that which he refuſed to doe: therefore did hee leaue his cloake becauſe he would not doe that; of which he is accuſed and condemned, becauſe he left it: what ſafety is there againſt great Aduerſaries, when euen arguments of innocence are vſed to conuince of euill? Luſt yeelded vnto, is a pleaſant madneſſe, but is a deſperate madneſſe when it is oppoſed: No hatred burnes ſo furiouſly, as that which ariſes from the quenched coales of loue.

Malice is witty to deuiſe accuſations of others out of their vertue, and our owne guiltineſſe: Ioſeph either pleads not, or is not heard.

Doubtleſſe he denied the fact, but hee dare not accuſe the offender: There is not onely the praiſe of patience, but oft-times of wiſedome, euen in vniuſt ſufferings: Hee knew that God would finde a time to cleare his innocence, and to regard his chaſte faithfulneſſe.

No priſon would ſerue him, but Pharaohs. Ioſeph had lyen obſcure and not beene knowne to Pharaoh, if he had not beene caſt into Pharaohs dungeon: the afflictions of Gods children turne euer to their aduantages. No ſooner is Ioſeph a priſoner, then a Guardian of the priſoners. Truſt and honour accompany him whereſoeuer he is: In his fathers houſe, in Potiphars, in the Iayle, in the Court: ſtill he hath both fauour and rule.

So long as God is with him, hee cannot but ſhine in ſpight of men: The wals of that dungeon cannot hide his vertues, the irons cannot hold them. Pharaohs Officers are ſent to witneſſe his graces, which he may not come forth to ſhew: the Cupbearer admires him in the Iayle, but forgets him in the Court. How eaſily doth our owne proſperitie makes vs either forget the deſeruings, or miſeries of others! But as God cannot neglect his owne, ſo leaſt of all in their ſorrowes. After two yeares more of Ioſephs patience; that God which cauſed him to bee lift out of the former pit to be ſold, now cals him out of the dungeon to honour. Hee now puts a dreame into the head of Pharaoh. He puts the remembrance of Ioſephs skill into the head of the Cupbearer; who to pleaſure Pharaoh, not to requite Ioſeph, commends the Priſoner, for an Interpreter: He puts an interpretation in the mouth of Ioſeph: he puts this choyce into the heart of Pharaoh, of a miſerable priſoner, to make the Ruler of Ægypt. Behold: one houre hath changed his fetters into a chaine of gold; his rags into fine linnen, his ſtocks into a Chariot, his Iayle into a Palace, Potiphars captiue into his Maſters Lord; the noiſe of his chaines into Abrech. He whoſe chaſtitie refuſed the wanton allurements of the Wife of Potiphar, hath now giuen him to his Wife the daughrer of Potipherah. Humilitie goes before honour; Seruing and Suffering are the beſt Tutors to Gouernement. How well are Gods children paid for their patience! How happy are the iſſues of the faithfull! Neuer any man repented him of the aduancement of a good man.

Pharaoh hath not more preferd Ioſeph, then Ioſeph hath enriched Pharaoh; If Ioſeph had not ruled, Ægypt and all the bordering Nations had periſhed. The prouidence of ſo faithfull an Officer hath both giuen the Ægyptians their liues; and the money, cattell, lands, bodies of the Ægyptians to Pharaoh. Both haue reaſon to bee well pleaſed. The ſubiects owe to him their liues; the King his Subiects, and his Dominions: the bounty of God made Ioſeph able to giue more then hee receiued. It is like the ſeuen yeares of plenty were not confined to Ægypt; other Countries adioyning were no leſſe fruitfull: yet in the ſeuen yeares of famine, Ægypt had corne when they wanted.

See the difference betwixt a wiſe prudent frugalitie, and a vaine ignorant expence of the benefits of God: The ſparing hand is both full and beneficiall, whereas the lauiſh is not onely empty, but iniurious.

Good Iacob is pinched with the common famine, No piety can exempt vs from the euils of neighbourhood. No man can tell by outward euents, which is the Patriarke, and which the Canaanite.

Neither doth his profeſſion lead him to the hope of a miraculous preſeruation. It is a vaine tempting of God, to caſt our ſelues vpon an immediate prouiſion, with neglect of common meanes: His tenne ſonnes muſt now leaue their flocks, and goe downe into Ægypt, to be their Fathers purueyours. And now they goe to buy of him whom they had ſold; and bowe their knees to him for his reliefe, which had bowed to them, before for his owne life. His age, his habite, the place, the language, kept Ioſeph from their knowledge; neither had they called off their minds from their folds, to enquire of matters of forrane State, or to heare that an Hebrew was aduanced to the higheſt honour of Ægypt. But he cannot but know them, whom hee left at their full growth, whoſe tongue, and habit, and number were all one: whoſe faces had left ſo deepe an impreſſion in his minde, at their vnkinde parting: It is wiſedome ſomtimes to conceale our knowledge, that we may not preiudice truth.

Hee that was hated of his brethren, for being his Fathers ſpye; now accuſes his brethren for common ſpyes of the weakeneſſe of Ægypt; he could not without their ſuſpition haue come to a perfit intelligence of his Fathers eſtate, and theirs, if he had not obiected to them that which was not. Wee are alwayes bound to goe the neareſt way to truth. It is more ſafe in caſes of inquiſition, to fetch farre about; that he might ſeeme enough an Ægyptian, he ſweares heatheniſhly: how little could they ſuſpect, this Oath could proceed from the ſonne of him, which ſwore by the feare of his Father Iſaac? How oft haue ſiniſter reſpects drawne weake goodneſſe to diſguiſe it ſelfe euen with ſinnes?

It was no ſmall ioy to Ioſeph, to ſee this late accompliſhment of his ancient dreame; to ſee theſe ſuppliants (I know not whether more brethren, or enemies) groueling before him in an vnknowne ſubmiſſion: and now it doth him good to ſeeme mercileſſe to them, whom he had found wilfully cruell; to hide his loue from them which had ſhewed their hate to him; and to thinke how much he fauoured them, and how little they knew it: And as ſporting himſelfe in their ſeeming miſery, he pleaſantly imitates all thoſe actions reciprocally vnto them, which they in deſpight and earneſt had done formerly to him; hee ſpeakes roughly, reiects their perſwaſions, puts them in hold, and one of them in bonds. The minde muſt not alwayes be iudged by the outward face of the actions. Gods countenance is oft-times as ſeuere, and his hand as heauy to them whom he beſt loueth. Many a one, vnder the habit of an Ægyptian, hath the heart of an Iſraelite. No ſong could be ſo delightfull to him, as to heare them in a late remorſe condemne themſelues before him, of their old crueltie towards him, who was now their vnknowne witneſſe and Iudge.

Nothing doth ſo powerfully call home the conſcience, as affliction, neither need there any other art of memory for ſinne, beſides miſery. They had heard Ioſephs deprecation of their euill with teares, and had not pittied him; yet Ioſeph doth but heare their mention of this euill which they had done againſt him, and pitties them with teares; he weepes for ioy to ſee their repentance, and to compare his ſafety and happineſſe with the cruelty which they intended, and did, and thought they had done.

Yet hee can abide to ſee his brother his priſoner; whom no bonds could bind ſo ſtrong, as his affection bound him to his captiue: Simeon is left in pawne, in fetters; the reſt returne, with their corne, with their money, paying nothing for their prouiſion, but their labour; that they might be as much troubled with the beneficence of that ſtrange Ægyptian Lord, as before with his imperious ſuſpition. Their wealth was now more irkeſome to them, then their need: and they feare, God meanes to puniſh them more in this ſuperfluitie of money then in the want of victuals (What is this that God hath done to vs?) It is a wiſe courſe to be iealous of our gaine; and more to feare, then deſire abundance.

Old Iacob that was not vſed to ſimple and abſolute contentments, receiues the bleſſing of ſeaſonable prouiſion, together with the affliction of that heauy meſſage the loſſe of one ſonne, and the danger of another; and knowes not whether it be better for him to dye with hunger, or with griefe, for the departure of that ſonne of his right hand: He driues of all till the laſt; Protraction is a kinde of eaſe in euils that muſt come.

At length (as no plea is ſo importunate, as that of famine) Beniamin muſt goe; one euill muſt be hazarded for the redreſſe of another; what would it auaile him, to ſee whom he loued, miſerable? How iniurious were that affection to keepe his ſonne ſo long in his eye, till they ſhould ſee each other dye for hunger!

The ten brothers returne into Ægypt loaded with double money in their ſacks, and a preſent in their hands; the danger of miſtaking in required, by honeſt minds, with more then reſtitution. It is not enough to finde our owne hearts cleare in ſuſpicious actions except we ſatisfie others: Now hath Ioſeph what he would, the ſight and preſence of his Beniamin, whom he therefore borrowes of his Father for a time, that hee might returne him with a greater intereſt of ioy: And now hee feaſts them whom hee formerly threatned, and turnes their feare into wonder: all vnequall loue is not partiall; all the brethren are entertained bountifully, but Beniamin hath a fiue-fold portion: By how much his welcome was greater, by ſo much his pretended theft ſeemed more hainous; for good turnes aggrauate vnkindneſſes, and our offences are encreaſed with our obligations; How eaſie is it to finde aduantages where there is a purpoſe to accuſe! Beniamins ſacke makes him guilty of that whereof his heart was free; Crimes ſeeme ſtrange to the innocent; well might they abiure this fact, with the offer of bondage and death: For they which carefully brought againe that which they might haue taken, would neuer take that which was not giuen them. But thus Ioſeph would yet dally with his brethren, and make Beniamin a thiefe, that he might make him a ſeruant, and fright his brethren with the perill of that their charge, that he might double their ioy, and amazedneſſe, in giuing them two brothers at once: our happineſſe is greater, and ſweeter, when we haue well feared, and ſmarted with euils.

But now when Iudah ſeriouſly reported the danger of his old Father, and the ſadneſſe of his laſt complaint, compaſſion and ioy will be concealed no longer, but breake forth violently at his voyce and eyes. Many paſſions doe not well abide witneſſes, becauſe they are guilty to their owne weakeneſſe. Ioſeph ſends forth his ſeruants, that hee might freely weepe. He knew hee could not ſay, I am Ioſeph, without an vnbeſeeming vehemence.

Neuer any word ſounded ſo ſtrangly as this, in the eares of the Patriarkes. Wonder, doubt, reuerence, ioy, feare, hope, guiltineſſe, ſtrooke them at once. It was time for Ioſeph to ſay, Feare not; No maruell if they ſtood with paleneſſe and ſilence before him; looking on him, and on each other: the more they conſidered, they wondred more; and the more they beleeued, the more they feared: For thoſe words (I am Ioſeph) ſeemed to ſound thus much to their guilty thoughts; You are murtherers: and I am a Prince in ſpight of you; My power and this place, giue me all opportunities of reuenge; My glory is your ſhame, my life your danger, your ſinne liues together with me. But now the teares and gracious words of Ioſeph haue ſoone aſſured them of pardon and loue, and haue bidden them turne their eyes from their ſinne againſt their brother, to their happineſſe in him, and haue changed their doubts into hopes and ioyes; cauſing them to looke vpon him without feare, though not without ſhame. His louing embracements cleare their hearts of all iealouſies; and haſten to put new thoughts into them of fauour, and of greatneſſe: So that now forgetting what euill they did to their brother, they are thinking of what good their brother may doe to them. Actions ſalued vp with a free forgiueneſſe, areas not done: and as a bone once broken, is ſtronger after well ſetting, ſo is loue after reconcilement.

But as wounds once healed, leaue a ſcarre behind them; ſo remitted iniuries leaue commonly in the actors a guilty remembrance; which hindered theſe brethren from that freedome of ioy, which elſe they had conceiued: This was their fault, not Iosephs: who ſtriues to giue them all ſecuritie of his loue; and will be as bountifull, as they were cruell. They ſent him naked to ſtrangers, hee ſends them in new and rich liueries to their Father; they tooke a ſmall ſumme of money for him, hee giues them great treaſures; They ſent his torne coat to his Father; He ſends varietie of coſtly rayments to his Father, by them. They ſold him to be the load of Camels; He ſends them home with Chariots. It muſt be a great fauour that can appeaſe the conſcience of a great iniury. Now they returne home rich and ioyfull, making themſelues happy to thinke how glad they ſhould make their Father with this newes.

That good old man would neuer haue hoped that Ægypt could haue afforded ſuch prouiſion as this. Ioſeph is yet aliue: This was not food, but life to him. The returne of Beniamin was comfortable: but that his dead ſonne was yet aliue after ſo many yeares lamentation, was tidings too happy to be beleeued, and was enough to endanger that life with exceſſe of ioy, which the knowledge thereof doubled. Ouer-excellent obiects are dangerous in their ſudden apprehenſions. One graine of that ioy would haue ſafely cheered him, whereof a full meaſure ouer-layes his heart with too much ſweetneſſe. There is no earthly pleaſure whereof we may not ſurfet: of the ſpirituall we can neuer haue enough.

Yet his eyes reuiue his mind, which his eares had thus aſtoniſhed. When hee ſaw the Chariots of his ſonne, he beleeued Ioſephs life, and refreſhed his owne. He had too much before, ſo that he could not enioy it: now he ſaith, I haue enough, Ioſeph my ſonne is yet aliue.

They told him of his honour, he ſpeakes of his life: life is better then honour. To haue heard that Ioſeph liued a ſeruant, would haue ioyed him more, then to heare that he dyed honourably. The greater bleſſing obſcures the leſſe. He is not worthy of honour, that is not thankefull for life.

Yet Ioſephs life did not content Iacob without his preſence: (I will goe downe and ſee him ere I dye:) The ſight of the eye is better then to walke in deſires; Good things pleaſure vs not in their being, but in our ioying.

The height of all earthly contentment appeared in the meeting of theſe two; whom their mutuall loſſe had more endeared to each other: The intermiſſion of comforts, hath this aduantage, that it ſweetens our delight more in the returne, then was abated in the forbearance. God doth oft-times hide away our Ioſeph for a time, that we may bee more ioyous and thankfull in his recouerie: This was the ſincereſt pleaſure that euer Iacob had, which therefore God reſerued for his age.

And if the meeting of earthly friends be ſo vnſpeakably comfortable; how happy ſhall we be in the light of the glorious face of God our heauenly Father! of that our bleſſed Redeemer whom we ſold to death by our ſinnes! and which now after that noble Triumph hath all power giuen him in Heauen and Earth.

Thus did Iacob reioyce when he was to goe out of the Land of Promiſe, to a forraine Nation, for Ioſephs ſake; being glad that hee ſhould loſe his Countrey for his ſonne. What ſhall our ioy be, who muſt goe out of this forraine Land of our Pilgrimage, to the home of our glorious inheritance, to dwell with none but our owne; in that better and more lightſome Goſhen, free from all the incumbrances of this Ægypt, and full of all the riches and delights of God? The guilty conſcience can neuer thinke it ſelfe ſafe: So many yeares experience of Ioſephs loue could not ſecure his brethren of remiſſion: thoſe that know they haue deſerued ill, are wont to miſ-interpret fauours, and thinke they cannot bee beloued: All that while his goodneſſe ſeemed but concealed and ſleeping malice; which they feared in their Fathers laſt ſleepe would awake, and bewray it ſelfe in reuenge: Still therefore they plead the name of their Father, though dead; not daring to vſe their owne: Good meanings cannot bee more wronged, then with ſuſpition: It grieues Ioſeph to ſee their feare, and to find they had not forgotten their owne ſinne, and to heare them ſo paſſionately craue that which they had.

Forgiue the treſpaſſe of the ſeruants of thy Fathers God:) What a coniuration of pardon was this? What wound could be either ſo deepe, or ſo feſtred, as this plaſter could not cure? They ſay not, the ſonnes of thy Father, for they knew Iacob was dead, and they had degenerated; but the ſeruants of thy Fathers God: How much ſtronger are the bonds of Religion then of Nature? If Ioſeph had beene rancorous, this deprecation had charmed him; but now it reſolues him into teares: They are not ſo ready to acknowledge their old offence, as he to proteſt his loue; and if he chide them for any thing, it is for that they thought they needed to intreat; ſince they might know, it could not ſtand with the fellow-ſeruant of their Fathers God to harbour maliciouſneſſe, to purpoſe reuenge. Am not I vnder God? And fully to ſecure them, hee turnes their eyes from themſelues to the Decree of God, from the action to the euent; as one that would haue them thinke, there was no cauſe to repent of that which proued ſo ſucceſſefull.

Euen late confeſſion finds forgiueneſſe; Ioſeph had long agoe ſeene their ſorrow, neuer but now heard their humble acknowledgement; Mercy ſtayes not for outward ſolemnities: How much more ſhall that infinite goodneſſe pardon our ſinnes, when hee findes the truth of our repentance?

ALL GRACE AND HAPPINESSE.

Right Honorable.

ALL that I can ſay for my ſelfe, is a deſire of doing good; which if it were as feruent in richer hearts, the Church which now we ſee comely, would then be glorious: this honeſt ambition hath carried mee to neglect the feare of ſeeming prodigall of my little; and while I ſee others Talents ruſting in the earth, hath drawne mee to traffique with mine in publike. I hope, no aduenture that euer I made of this kinde, ſhall be equally gainfull to this my preſent labour, wherein I take Gods owne Hiſtorie for the ground, and worke vpon it by what Meditations my weakneſſe can afford: The diuineneſſe of this ſubiect ſhall make more then amends for the manifold defects of my diſcourſe; although alſo the blame of an imperfection is ſo much the more, when it lighteth vpon ſo high a choice. This part which I offer to your Lordſhip, ſhall ſhew you Pharaoh impotently enuious and cruell, the Iſraelites of friends become ſlaues, puniſhed onely for proſpering; Moſes in the Weedes, in the Court, in the Deſart, in the Hill

THE FOVRTH BOOKE.

The affliction of Iſrael.

EGYPT was long an harbour to the Iſraelites; now it proues a Iayle: the Poſteritie of Iacob finds too late, what it was for their forefathers to ſell Ioſeph, a ſlaue into Ægypt. Thoſe whom the Ægyptians honoured before as Lords, now they contemne as drudges: One Pharaoh aduances, whom another labours to depreſſe: Not ſeldome the ſame man changes copies: but if fauours out-liue one age, they proue decrepit and heartleſſe: It is a rare thing to find poſterity heires of their fathers loue: How ſhould mens fauour be but like themſelues, variable and inconſtant? there is no certaintie but in the fauour of God, in whom can be no change; whoſe loue is intayled vpon a thouſand generations.

Yet if the Iſraelites had been trecherous to Pharaoh, if diſobedient, this great change of countenance had been iuſt; now the onely offence of Iſrael, is, that he proſpereth; that which ſhould be the motiue of their gratulation, and friendſhip, is the cauſe of their malice. There is no more hatefull ſight to a wicked man, then the proſperitie of the conſcionable; None but the ſpirit of that true Harbinger of Chriſt, can teach vs to ſay with contentment, He muſt encreaſe, but I muſt decreaſe.

And what if Iſrael be mighty and rich? (If there be warre, they may ioyne with our enemies, and get them out of the Land.) Behold, they are afraid to part with thoſe whom they are grieued to entertaine: either ſtaying, or going, is offence enough, to thoſe that ſeeke quarrels; There were no warres, and yet they ſay, If there be warres. The Iſraelites had neuer giuen cauſe of feare to reuolt, and yet they ſay, Leſt they ioyne to our enemies, to thoſe enemies which we may haue; So they make their certaine friends ſlaues, for feare of vncertaine enemies. Wickedneſſe is euer cowardly, and full of vniuſt ſuſpitions; it makes a man feare, where no feare is; fly, when none purſues him. What difference there is betwixt Dauid and Pharaoh! The faith of the one ſayes, I will not be afraid for ten thouſand that ſhould beſet me; The feare of the other ſaies, Leſt if there be warre, they ioyne with our enemies; therefore ſhould hee haue made much of the Iſraelites, that they might be his: his fauour might haue made them firme; Why might they not as well draw their ſwords for him?

Weake and baſe minds euer incline to the worſe; and ſeeke ſafety, rather in an impoſſibility of hurt, then in the likelihood of iuſt aduantage. Fauours had bin more binding then cruelties : yet the fooliſh Ægyptian had rather haue impotent ſeruants, then able friends. For their welfare alone, Pharaoh owes Iſrael a miſchiefe; and how wil he pay it? (Come let vs worke wiſely;) Lewd men call wicked policies wiſdome, and their ſucceſſe happineſſe : Herein Satan is wiſer then they; who both layes the plot, and makes them ſuch fooles, as to miſtake villany and madneſſe, for the beſt vertue.

Iniuſtice is vpheld by violence, whereas iuſt gouernments are maintained by loue: Taske-maſters muſt be ſet ouer Iſrael; they ſhould not be the true Seed of Iſrael, if they were not ſtill ſet to wreſtle with God in afflictions : Heauy burdens muſt bee laid vpon them : Iſrael is neuer but loaded, the deſtiny of one of Iacobs ſonnes is common to all; To lye downe betwixt their burdens. If they had ſeemed to breathe them in Goſhen ſometimes, yet euen there it was no ſmall miſerie to be forainers, and to liue among Idolaters; but now the name of a ſlaue is added to the name of a ſtranger. Iſrael had gathered ſome ruſt in idolatrous Ægypt, and now he muſt be ſcowred : they had borne the burden of Gods anger, if they had not borne the burdens of the Ægyptians.

As God afflicted them with another minde then the Ægyptians; (God to exerciſe them, the Ægyptians to ſuppreſſe them;) ſo cauſes he the euent to differ. Who would not haue thought with theſe Ægyptians, that ſo extreme miſery ſhould not haue made the Iſraelites vnfit, both for generation and reſiſtance? Moderate exerciſe ſtrengthens, extreame deſtroyes nature : That God which many times workes by contrary means, cauſed them to grow with depreſſion, with perſecution to multiply; How can Gods Church but fare well, ſince the very malice of their enemies benefits them? Oh the ſoueraigne goodnes of our God, that turnes all our poiſons into cordials! Gods Vine beares the better with bleeding.

And now the Ægyptians could be angry with their owne maliciousneſſe, that this was the occaſion of multiplying them whom they hated, and feared; to ſee that this ſeruice gained more to the workmen, then to their Maſters; The ſtronger therefore the Iſraelites grew, the more impotent grew the malice of their perſecutors. And ſince their owne labour ſtrengthens them, now tyrannie will try what can be done by the violence of others : ſince the preſent ſtrength cannot bee ſubdued; the hopes of ſucceſsion muſt be preuented : women muſt be ſuborned to bee murderers; and thoſe whoſe office is to helpe the birth, muſt deſtroy it.

There was leſſe ſuſpition of crueltie in that ſexe, and more opportunitie of doing miſchiefe. The male children muſt be borne, and die at once; what can be more innocent, then the childe that hath not liued ſo much as to cry, or to ſee light? It is fault enough to be the ſonne of an Iſraelite : the daughters may liue for bondage, for luſt; a condition ſo much (at the leaſt) worſe then death, as their ſex was weaker. O maruellous cruelty, that a man ſhould kill a man, for his ſexes ſake! Whoſoeuer hath looſed the reynes vnto cruelty, is eaſily caried into incredible extremities.

From burdens, they proceed to bondage, and from bondage to blood : from an vniuſt vexation of their body, to an inhumane deſtruction of the fruit of their body. As the ſinnes of the concupiſcible part, from ſlight motions, grow on to foule executions, ſo doe thoſe of the iraſcible; there is no ſinne, whoſe harbour is more vnſafe, then of that of malice : But oft times the power of tyrants anſwers not their will : euill commanders cannot alwayes meet with equally miſchieuous agents.

The feare of God teaches the Midwiues to diſobey an vniuſt command; they well knew, how no excuſe it is for euill, I was bidden. God ſaid to their hearts, Thou ſhalt not kill : This voice was lowder then Pharaohs. I commend their obedience in diſobeying; I dare not commend their excuſe; there was as much weakeneſſe in their anſwer, as ſtrength in their practice : as they feared God in not killing, ſo they feared Pharaoh in diſſembling : oft-times thoſe that make conſcience of greater ſinnes, are ouertaken with leſſe. It is well and rare, if we can come forth of a dangerous action without any ſoyle; and if we haue eſcaped the ſtorme, that ſome after-drops wet vs not.

Who would not haue expected that the Midwiues ſhould be murdered, for not murthering? Pharaoh could not be ſo ſimple to thinke theſe women truſty : yet his indignation had no power to reach to their puniſhment. God proſpered the Mid-wiues, who can harme them? Euen the not doing of euill is rewarded with good. And why did they proſper? Becauſe they feared God; Not for their diſſimulation, but their piety. So did God regard their mercy, that he regarded not their infirmity. How fondly doe men lay the thanke vpon the ſinne, which is due to the vertue: true wiſedome teaches to diſtinguiſh Gods actions, and to aſcribe them to the right cauſes; Pardon belongs to the lye of the Mid-wiues, and remuneration to their goodneſſe, proſperity to their feare of God.

But that which the Mid-wiues will not, the multitude ſhall doe; It were ſtrange, if wicked Rulers ſhould not finde ſome or other inſtruments of violence: all the people muſt drowne whom the women ſaued. Cruelty hath but ſmoked before, now it flames vp, ſecret practiſing hath made it ſhameleſſe, that now it dare proclaime tyranny. It is a miſerable ſtate, where euery man is made an executioner: there can be no greater argument of an ill cauſe, then a bloody perſecution, whereas Truth vpholds her ſelfe by mildneſſe, and is promoted by patience. This is their act, what was their iſſue? The people muſt drowne their males, themſelues are drowned: they died by the ſame meanes, by which they cauſed the poore Iſraelitiſh infants to dye; that law of retaliation which God wil not allow to vs, becauſe we are fellow-creatures, he iuſtly practiſeth in vs. God would haue vs reade our ſinnes in our iudgements, that we might both repent of our ſins, and giue glory to his Iuſtice.

Pharaoh raged before, much more now, that he receiued a meſſage of diſmiſſion; the monitions of God make ill men worſe: the waues doe not beat, nor roare any where ſo much, as at the banke which reſtraines them. Corruption when it is checked, growes mad with rage; as the vapour in a cloud would not make that fearefull report, if it met not with oppoſition. A good heart yeelds at the ſtilleſt voyce of God: But the moſt gratious motions of God harden the wicked. Many would not be ſo deſperately ſetled in their ſinnes, if the word had not controuled them. How mild a meſſage was this to Pharaoh, and yet how galling? Wee pray thee let vs goe. God commands him that which he feared. He tooke pleaſure in the preſent ſeruitude of Iſrael: God cals for a releaſe. If the ſute had been for mitigation of labour, for preſeruation of their children, it might haue carried ſome hope, and haue found ſome fauour: but now God requires that which he knowes will as much diſcontent Pharaoh, as Pharaohs crueltie could diſcontent the Iſraelites; Let vs goe. How contrary are Gods precepts to naturall minds? and indeed, as they loue to croſſe him in their practice, ſo he loues to croſſe them in their commands before, and his puniſhments afterwards. It is a dangerous ſigne of an ill heart to feele Gods yoke heauy.

Moſes talks of ſacrifice, Pharaoh talkes of worke. Any thing ſeemes due worke to a carnall minde ſauing Gods ſeruice: nothing ſuperfluous, but religious duties. Chriſt tels vs, there is but one thing neceſſary: Nature tels vs, there is nothing but that needleſſe: Moſes ſpeakes of deuotion, Pharaoh of idleneſſe. It hath bin an old vſe, as to caſt faire colours vpon our owne vicious actions, ſo to caſt euill aſperſions vpon the good actions of others. The ſame Deuill that ſpoke in Pharaoh, ſpeakes ſtill in our ſcoffers, and cals Religion Hypocriſie, conſcionable care, ſingularity. Euery vice hath a title, and euery vertue a diſgrace.

Yet while poſſible taskes were impoſed, there was ſome comfort: Their diligence might ſaue their backes from ſtripes. The conceit of a benefit to the commander, and hope of impunity to the labourer, might giue a good pretence to great difficulties: but to require tasks not faiſible, is tyrannicall, and doth onely picke a quarrell to puniſh. they could neither make ſtraw, nor finde it, yet they muſt haue it. Doe what may be, is tolerable; but doe what cannot be, is cruell. Thoſe which are aboue others in place, muſt meaſure their commands, not by their owne wils, but by the ſtrength of their inferiours. To require more of a beaſt then he can doe, is inhumane. The taske is not done; the task-maſters are beaten: the puniſhment lyes where the charge is; they muſt exact it of the people, Pharaoh of them. It is the miſery of thoſe which are truſted with authority, that their inferiours faults are beaten vpon their backes. This was not the fault to require it of the taske-maſters, but to require it by the taske-maſters, of the people. Publike perſons doe either good or ill with a thouſand hands, and with no fewer ſhall receiue it.

Of the birth and breeding of MOSES.

IT is a wonder that Amram the father of Moſes, would think of the mariage bed in ſo troubleſome a time, when he knew he ſhould beget children either to ſlauery or ſlaughter: yet euen now in the heat of this bondage he maries Iochebed: the drowning of his ſons was not ſo great an euill, as his owne burning; the thraldome of his daughters not ſo great an euill, as the ſubiection vnto ſinfull deſires. Hee therefore vſes Gods remedie for his ſinne; and referres the ſequell of his danger to God. How neceſſary is this imitation for thoſe which haue not the power of containing! perhaps wee would haue thought it better to liue childleſſe: but Amram and Iochebed durſt not incurre the danger of a ſinne, to auoid the danger of a miſchiefe. No doubt when Iochebed the mother of Moſes, ſaw a man-child borne of her, and him beautifull and comely, ſhe fell into extreame paſſion, to thinke that the executioners hand ſhould ſucceed the Midwiues. All the time of her conception, ſhe could not but feare a ſonne; now ſhe ſees him, and thinkes of his birth and death at once, her ſecond throes are more grieuous then her firſt. The paines of trauell in others are ſomewhat mitigated with hope, and counteruailed with ioy, that a man-child is borne; in her they are doubled with feare, the remedy of others is her complaint: ſtill ſhe lookes when ſome fierce Ægyptian would come in, and ſnatch her new-borne infant out of her boſome; whoſe comelineſſe had now alſo added to her affection.

Many times God writes preſages of Maieſty and honor, euen in the faces of children. Little did ſhe think, that ſhe held in her lap the Deliuerer of Iſrael. It is good to hazard in greateſt apparances of danger. If Iochebed had ſayd, If I beare a ſon, they will kill him, where had beene the great Reſcuer of Iſrael? Happy is that reſolution which can follow God hood-winkt, and let him diſpoſe of the euent: When ſhe can no longer hide him in her wombe, ſhee hides him in her houſe, afraid leſt euery of his cryings ſhould guide the executioners to his cradle. And now ſhee ſees her treaſure can be no longer hid, ſhe ſhips him in a barke of bulruſhes, and commits him to the mercy of the waues, and (which was more mercileſſe) to the danger of an Ægyptian paſſenger, yet doth ſhe not leaue him without a guardian.

No tyranny can forbid her to loue him, whom ſhe is forbidden to keep; Her daughters eyes muſt ſupply the place of her armes. And if the weake affection of a mother, were thus effectually carefull, what ſhall we thinke of him, whoſe loue, whoſe compaſſion is (as him ſelfe) infinite? His eye, his hand, cannot but be with vs, euen when wee forſake our ſelues: Moſes had neuer a ſtronger protection about him, no not when all his Iſraelites were pitched about his Tent in the Wilderneſſe, then now when he lay ſprawling alone vpon the waues: no water, no Ægyptian can hurt him. Neither friend nor mother dare own him, and now God challenges his cuſtodie. When we ſeem moſt neglected and forlorne in our ſelues, then is God moſt preſent, moſt vigilant.

Hi's prouidence brings Pharaohs daughter thither to waſh her ſelfe. Thoſe times lookt for no great ſtate: A Princeſſe comes to bathe her ſelfe in the open ſtreame: ſhe meant onely to waſh her ſelfe; God fetches her thither, to deliuer the Deliuerer of his people. His deſignes go beyond ours. We know not (when we ſet our foot ouer our threſhold) what he hath to doe with vs. This euent ſeemed caſuall to this Princeſſe, but predetermined and prouided by God, before ſhe was: how wiſely and ſweetly God brings to paſſe his owne purpoſes, in our ignorance and regardleſneſſe! She ſaw the Arke, opens it, finds the child weeping; his beauty and his teares had God prouided for the ſtrong perſwaſions of mercy. This young and liuely Oratorie preuailed. Her heart is ſtrucke with compaſſion, and yet her tongue could ſay, It is an Hebrew child.

See here the mercifull daughter of a cruell father: It is an vncharitable and iniurious ground, to iudge of the childs diſpoſition by the parents. How well doth pitty beſeeme great perſonages! and moſt in extremities. It had beene death to another to reſcue the child of an Hebrew; in her it was ſafe and noble. It is an happy thing, when great ones improue their places to ſo much more charity, as their liberty is more.

Moſes his ſiſter finding the Princeſſe compaſſionate, offers to procure a nurſe, and fetches the mother: and who can bee ſo fit a nurſe as a mother? She now with glad hands receiues her child, both with authoritie and reward. She would haue giuen all her ſubſtance for the life of her ſon; & now ſhe hath a reward to nurſe him. The exchange of the name of a mother, for the name of a nurſe, hath gained her both her ſon, and his education, and with both a recompence. Religion doth not call vs to a weake ſimplicitie, but allowes vs as much of the Serpent as of the Doue: lawfull policies haue from God both liberty in the vſe, and bleſſing in the ſucceſſe.

The good Lady did not breed him as ſome child of almes, or as ſome wretched outcaſt, for whom it might be fauour enough to liue, but as her owne ſon; in all the delicacies, in all the learning of Ægypt. Whatſoeuer the Court or the Schoole could put into him, he wanted not; yet all this could not make him forget that he was an Hebrew. Education works wonderous changes, and is of great force either way: a little aduancement hath ſo puffed ſome vp aboue themſelues; that they haue not onely forgot their friends, but ſcorned their parents. All the honors of Ægypt could not win Moſes not to call his nurſe mother, or weane him from a willing miſery with the Iſraelites. If we had Moſes his faith, we could not but make his choice. It is only our infidelity that binds vs ſo to the world, and makes vs preferre the momentany pleaſures of ſinne, vnto that euerlaſting recompence of reward.

He went forth, and looked on the burdens of Iſrael. What needed Moſes to haue afflicted himſelfe with the afflictions of others? Himſelfe was at eaſe and pleaſure in the Court of Pharaoh. A good heart cannot endure to be happy alone; and muſt needs, vnbidden, ſhare with others in their miſeries. He is no true Moſes that is not moued with the calamities of Gods Church. To ſee an Ægyptian ſmite an Hebrew, it ſmote him, and moued him to ſmite. He hath no Iſraelitiſh blood in him, that cane ndure to ſee an Iſraelite ſtricken either with hand or with tongue.

Here was his zeale: where was his authoritie? Doubtleſſe, Moſes had an inſtinct from God of his Magiſtracy; elſe how ſhould he thinke they would haue vnderſtood what himſelfe did not? Oppreſſions may not be righted by violence, but by law. The redreſſe of euill by a perſon vnwarranted, is euill. Moſes knew that God had called him; he knew that Pharaoh knew it not: therefore he hides the Ægyptian in the ſand. Thoſe actions which may be approued vnto God, are not alwayes ſafe with men: as contrarily, too many things goe currant with men, which are not approued of God.

Another Hebrew is ſtricken, but by an Hebrew: the act is the ſame, the agents differ: neither doth their profeſſion more differ, then Moſes his proceedings. He giues blowes to the one: to the other, words. The blowes, to the Ægyptian were deadly; the words, to the Hebrew, gentle & plauſible. As God makes a difference betwixt chaſtiſements of his owne, and puniſhments of ſtrange children: ſo muſt wiſe Gouernors learn to diſtinguiſh of ſins and iudgements, according to circumſtances. How mildly doth Moſes admoniſh! Sirs, ye are brethren. If there had been but any dram of good nature in theſe Hebrewes, they had relented: now it is ſtrange to ſee, that being ſo vniuerſally vexed with their common aduerſary, they ſhould yet vexe one another: One would haue thought that a common oppoſition ſhould haue vnited them more, yet now priuate grudges do thus dangerouſly diuide them. Blowes enow were not dealt by the Ægyptians, their owne muſt adde to the violence. Still Satan is thus buſie, and Chriſtians are thus malicious, that (as if they wanted enemies) they flye in one anothers faces. While we are in this Ægypt of the world, all vnkind ſtriſes would eaſily be compoſed, if wee did not forget that we are brethren.

Behold an Ægyptian in the skin of an Hebrew: how dogged an anſwer doth Moſes receiue to ſo gentle a reproofe? who would not haue expected that this Hebrew had bin enough deiected with the common affliction? But vexations may make ſome more miſerable, not more humble; as we ſee ſickneſſes make ſome tractable, others more froward. It is no eaſie matter to beare a reproofe well, if neuer ſo well tempered; no Sugar can bereaue a Pill of his bitterneſſe. None but the gratious can ſay, Let the righteous ſmite me. Next to the not deſeruing a reproofe, is the well taking of it. But who is ſo ready to except and exclaime as the wrong-doer? The patient replies not. One iniury drawes on another: firſt to his brother, then to his reprouer. Guiltineſſe will make a man ſtir vpon euery touch: he that was wronged, could incline to reconciliation: Malice makes men vncapable of good counſell; and there are none ſo great enemies to Iuſtice, as thoſe which are enemies to peace.

With what impatience doth a galled heart receiue an admonition! This vnworthy Iſraelite is the patterne of a ſtomackfull offender; firſt, hee is moued to choller in himſelfe: then he cals for the authoritie of the admoniſher: a ſmall authority will ſerue for a louing admonition. It is the duty of men, much more of Chriſtians, to adviſe againſt ſin; yet this man askes, Who made thee a Iudge? for but finding fault with his iniury. Then, he aggrauates, and miſconſtrues, Wilt thou kill me? when Moſes meant onely to ſaue both. It was the death of his malice onely that was intended, and the ſafety of his perſon. And laſtly, he vpbraids him with former actions, Thou killedſt the Ægyptian: What if he did? What if vniuſtly? What was this to the Hebrew? another mans ſin is no excuſe for ours. A wicked heart neuer lookes inward to it ſelfe, but outward to the quality of the reprouer; if that afford exception, it is enough; as a dog runs firſt to reuenge on the ſtone: What matter is it to me who he be that admoniſheth me? Let me looke home into my ſelfe: let me looke to his aduice. If that be good, it is more ſhame to me to be reproued by an euill man. As a good mans allowance cannot warrant euill, ſo an euill mans reproofe may remedy euill: If this Hebrew had beene well pleaſed, Moſes had not heard of his ſlaughter; now in choller all will out; and if this mans tongue had not thus caſt him in the teeth with blood, he had beene ſurpriſed by Pharaoh, ere he could haue knowne that the fact was knowne.

Now he growes iealous, flees, and eſcapes. No friend is ſo commodious in ſome caſes as an aduerſary; This wound which the Hebrew thought to giue Moſes, ſaued his life. As it is good for a man to haue an enemy, ſo it ſhall be our wiſedome to make vſe of his moſt cholericke obiections. The worſt of an enemy may proue moſt ſoueraigne to our ſelues. Moſes flees. It is no diſcomfort for a man to flee when his conſcience purſues him not: Where Gods warrant will not protect vs, it is good for the heeles to ſupplie the place of the tongue.

Moſes when he may not in Ægypt, he will be doing iuſtice in Midian. In Ægypt, hee deliuers the oppreſſed Iſraelite; in Midiã the wronged daughters of Iethro. A good mã wil be doing good, whereſoeuer he is; his Trade is a compound of Charity and Iuſtice; as therefore euill diſpoſitions cannot be changed with ayres, no more will good. Now then he ſits him downe by a Well in Midian. There he might haue to drinke, but where to eat he knew not. The caſe was altered with Moſes; To come from the dainties of the Court of Ægypt, to the hunger of the fields of Midian: it is a leſſon that al Gods childrẽ muſt learne to take out, To want & to abound. Who can think ſtrange of penury when the great gouernor of Gods people once hath nothing? Who would not haue thought in this caſe, Moſes ſhould haue been heartleſſe and ſullen; ſo caſt downe with his owne cõplaints, that he ſhould haue had no feeling of others; yet how hot is he vpon Iuſtice? No aduerſity can make a good man neglect good duties: hee ſees the oppreſſion of the Shepherds, the image of that other he left behind him in Ægypt: the Mayds (daughters of ſo great a Peere) draw water for their flocks, the inhumane ſhepherds driue them away; rudeneſſe hath no reſpect either to Sexe or Condition; if wee liued not vnder lawes, this were our caſe; Might would bee the meaſure of Iuſtice: wee ſhould not ſo much as enioy our owne water. Vniuſt courſes will not euer proſper: Moſes ſhall rather come from Ægypt to Midian to beat the ſhepheards, then they ſhall vex the daughters of Iethro. This act of Iuſtice was not better done then taken. Reuel requites it kindly with an hoſpitall entertainment. A good nature is ready to anſwer courteſies: we cannot doe too much for a thankfull man. And if a courteous Heathen reward the watring of a ſheepe in this bountifull manner, how ſhall our God recompence but a cup of cold water that is giuen to a Diſciple? This fauour hath won Moſes, who now conſents to dwell with him, though out of the Church. Curioſity, or whatſoeuer idle occaſions may not draw vs (for our reſidence) out of the bounds of the Church of God: danger of life may; we loue not the Church if we eaſily leaue it: if in a caſe of life, wee leaue it not (vpon opportunity) for a time of reſpit, we loue not our ſelues. The firſt part of Moſes his requitall was his wife, one of thoſe whom he had formerly protected.

I doe not ſo much maruell that Iethro gaue him his daughter (for hee ſaw him valiant, wiſe, learned, nobly bred) as that Moſes would take her; a ſtranger both in Blood and Religion. I could plead for him neceſſity: his owne nation was ſhut vp to him: if he would haue tried to fetch a daughter of Iſrael, he had endangered to leaue himſelfe behind: I could plead ſome correſpondence in common principles of Religion; for doubtleſſe Moſes his zeale could not ſuffer him to ſmother the truth in himſelfe: hee ſhould haue beene an vnfaithfull ſeruant, if he had not beene his Maſters teacher. Yet neither of theſe can make this match either ſafe, or good. The euent bewrayes it dangerouſly inconuenient. This choice had like to haue coſt him deare: ſhe ſtood in his way for circumciſion; God ſtands in his way for reuenge. Though hee was now in Gods meſſage, yet might he not be forborne in this neglect. No circumſtance either of the dearneſſe of the Sollicitor or our owne ingagement, can beare out a ſinne with God: Thoſe which are vnequally yoked, may not euer looke to draw one away. True loue to the perſon cannot long agree with diſlike of the religion. He had need to be more then a man that hath a Zipporah in his boſome, & would haue true zeale in his heart. All this while Moſes his affection was not ſo tied to Midian, that he could forget Ægypt. Hee was a ſtranger in Midian: what was he elſe in Ægypt? Surely, either Ægypt was not his home, or a miſerable one; & yet in reference to it, he cals his ſon Gerſhom, a ſtranger there. Much better were it to be a ſtranger there then a dweller in Ægypt. How hardly can we forget the place of our abode or education, although neuer ſo homely! And if hee ſo thought of his Ægyptian home, where was nothing but bondage and tyranny; how ſhould wee thinke of that home of ours, aboue, where is nothing but reſt and bleſſedneſſe?

Of Moses calling.

Forty yeares was Moſes a Courtier, and forty yeares (after that) a Shepheard. That great men may not bee aſhamed of honeſt vocations, the greateſt that euer were haue beene content to take vp with meane trades. The contempt of honeſt callings in thoſe which are well borne, argues pride without wit. How conſtantly did Moſes ſticke to his hooke? and yet a man of great ſpirits, of excellent learning, of curious education: and if God had not (after his forty yeares ſeruice) called him off, he had ſo ended his daies. Humble reſolutions are ſo much more heroycall, as they fall into higher ſubiects.

There can be no fitter diſpoſition for a leader of Gods people, then conſtancy in his vndertakings, without either wearineſſe, or change. How had he learned to ſubdue all ambitious deſires, and to reſt content with his obſcurity! ſo he might haue the free-dome of his thoughts and ful opportunity of holy meditations, he willingly leaues the World to others, and enuies not his proudeſt acquaintance of the Court of Pharaoh. He that hath true worth in himſelfe, and familiarity with God, finds more pleaſure in the Deſarts of Midian, then others can doe in the Palaces of Kings.

Whiles he is tending his ſheepe, God appeared vnto him: God neuer graces the idle with his viſions; when he finds vs in our callings, we finde him in the tokens of his mercy. Satan appeares to the idle man in manifold temptations; or rather preſents himſelfe, and appeares not. God was euer with Moſes, yet was he not ſeene till now. He is neuer abſent from his; but ſometimes he makes their ſenſes witneſſes of his preſence. In ſmall matters may be greater wonders. That a buſh ſhould burne, is no maruell; but that it ſhould not conſume in burning, is iuſtly miraculous: God chuſeth not euer great ſubiects wherin to exerciſe his power. It is enough that his power is great in the ſmalleſt. When I look vpon this burning buſh with Moſes, me thinkes I cã neuer ſee a worthier and more liuely Embleme of the Church; that in Ægypt was in the furnace, yet waſted not. Since then how oft hath it beene flaming, neuer conſumed! The ſame power that enlightens it, preſerues it; & to none but to his enemies is he a conſuming fire. Moſes was a great Philoſopher: but ſmall skill would haue ſerued to know the nature of fire, & of the buſh: that fire meeting with combuſtible matter, could not but conſume: If it had bin ſome ſolid wood, it would haue yeelded later to the flame; but buſhes are of ſo quicke diſpatch, that the ioy of the wicked is compared to a fire of thornes. Hee noted a while, ſaw it continued, and beganne to wonder. It was ſome maruell how it ſhould come there: but how it ſhould continue without ſupply, yea, without diminution of matter, was truly admirable. Doubtleſſe he went oft about it, and viewed it on all ſides, and now when his eye and mind could meet with no likely cauſes, ſo far off, reſolues, I will goe ſee it: His curioſity led him neerer, and what could he ſee but a buſh and a flame, which he ſaw at firſt vnſatisfied? It is good to come to the place of Gods preſence, howſoeuer; God may perhaps ſpeake to thy heart, though thou come but for nouelty: Euen thoſe which haue come vpon curioſitie haue beene oft taken: abſence is without hope; If Moſes had not come, he had not beene called out of the buſh.

To ſee a fire not conſuming the buſh, was much; but to heare a ſpeaking fire, this was more; and to heare his owne name out of the mouth of the fire, it was moſt of all. God makes way for his greateſt meſſages by aſtoniſhment and admiration: as on the contrary, careleſneſſe caries vs to a meere vnproficiency vnder the beſt meanes of God: If our hearts were more awfull, Gods meſſages would be more effectuall to vs.

In that appearance God meant to call Moſes to come, yet when he is come, inhibits him (Come not hither.) We muſt come to God, muſt not come too neare him. When we meditate of the great myſteries of his word, we come to him: we come too neere him when we ſearch into his counſels. The Sun and the fire ſay of themſelues, Come not too neere: how much more the light which none can attaine vnto? We haue all our limits ſet vs: The Gentiles might come into ſome outter courts, not into the inmoſt: The Iewes might come into the inner Court, not into the Temple: the Prieſts and Leuites into the Temple, not into the Holy of Holyes: Moſes to the Hill, not to the Buſh. The waues of the Sea had not more need of bounds, then mans preſumption. Moſes muſt not come cloſe to the buſh at all; and where he may ſtand, he may not ſtand with his ſhooes on. There is no vnholineſſe in clothes: God prepared them for man at firſt, and that of skinnes, leſt any exception ſhould be taken at the hides of dead beaſts. This rite was ſignificant. What are the ſhooes but worldly and carnall affections? If theſe be not caſt off when we come to the holy place, we make our ſelues vnholy: how much leſſe ſhould we dare to come with reſolutions of ſinne? This is not onely to come with ſhooes on, but with ſhooes bemired with wicked filthineſſe, the touch whereof profanes the pauement of God, and makes our preſence odious.

Moſes was the Sonne of Amram, Amram of Kohath, Kohath of Leui, Leui of Iacob, Iacob of Iſaac, Iſaac of Abraham. God puts together both ends of his pedigree, I am the God of thy father, and of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob. If he had ſaid onely, I am thy God, It had beene Moſes his duty to attend awfully; but now that he ſayes, I am the God of thy Father, and of Abraham,&c. He challenges reuerence by preſcription. Any thing that was our Anceſters, pleaſes vs; their Houſes, their Veſſels, their Cote-armour; How much more their God? How carefull ſhould Parents be to make holy choices? Euery preſident of theirs are ſo many monuments and motiues to their poſterity. What an happineſſe it is to be borne of good Parents! hence God claimes an intereſt in vs and wee in him, for their ſake. As many a man ſmarteth for his fathers ſinne, ſo the goodneſſe of others is crowned in a thouſand generations. Neither doth God ſay, I was the God of Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob; but, I am. The Patriarkes ſtill liue after ſo many thouſand yeares of diſſolution. No length of time can ſeparate the ſoules of the iuſt from their Maker. As for their body, there is ſtill a reall relation betwixt the duſt of it, & the ſoule: and if the being of this part be more defectiue, the being of the other is more liuely, and doth more then recompence the wants of that earthly halfe.

God could not deſcribe himſelfe by a more ſweet name then this, I am the God of thy father, & of Abraham,&c. yet Moſes hides his face for feare, If he had ſaid, I am the glorious God that made heauen and earth, that dwels in light inacceſſible, whom the Angels cannot behold; or, I am God the auenger, iuſt and terrible, a conſuming fire to mine enemies, here had beene iuſt cauſe of terror.

But why was Moſes ſo frighted with a familiar compellation? God is no leſſe awfull to his owne in his very mercies. Great is thy mercy that thou mayeſt be feared: for to them no leſſe maieſty ſhines in the fauours of God, then in his iudgements and iuſtice. The wicked heart neuer feares God but thundring, or ſhaking the earth, or raining fire from heauen; but the good can dread him in his very ſunne-ſhine: his louing deliuerances & bleſſings affect them with awfulneſſe. Moſes was the true ſon of Iacob, who when he ſaw nothing but viſions of loue & mercy, could ſay, How dreadfull is this place!

I ſee Moſes now at the buſh hiding his face at ſo milde a repreſentation: hereafter we ſhall ſee him in this very Mount betwixt heauen and earth; in Thunder, Lightning, Smoke, Earth-quakes, ſpeaking mouth to mouth with God, bare-faced, and fearleſſe: God was then more terrible, but Moſes was leſſe ſtrange. This was his firſt meeting with God, further acquaintance makes him familiar, and familiarity makes him bold: Frequence of conuerſation giues vs freedome of acceſſe to God; and makes vs powre out our hearts to him as fully and as fearleſly as to our friends. In the meane time now at firſt he made not ſo much haſte to ſee, but he made as much to hide his eies: Twiſe did Moſes hide his face; once for the glory which God put vpon him, which made him ſo ſhine, that he could not bee beheld of others; once for Gods owne glory, which hee could not behold. No maruell. Some of the creatures are too glorious for mortall eies: how much more, when God appeares to vs in the eaſieſt manner, muſt his glory needs ouercome vs? Behold the difference betwixt our preſent and future eſtate: Then the more Maieſty of appearance, the more delight: when our ſin is quite gone, all our feare at Gods preſence ſhall be turned into ioy. God appeared to Adam before his ſin with comfort, but in the ſame forme which after his ſin was terrible. And if Moſes cannot abide to looke vpon Gods glory when he deſcends to vs in mercy, how ſhall wicked ones abide to ſee his fearfull preſence when he ſets vpon vengeance! In this fire he flamed and conſumed not, but in his reuenge our God is a conſuming fire.

Firſt, Moſes hides himſelfe in feare, now in modeſty. Who am I? None in all Ægypt or Midian was comparably fit for this embaſſage. Which of the Iſraelites had bin brought vp a Courtier, a Scholler, an Iſraelite by blood, by education an Ægyptian, learned, wiſe, valiant, experienced? Yet, Who am I? The more fit any man is for whatſoeuer vocation, the leſſe he thinkes himſelfe. Forwardneſſe argues inſufficiency. The vnworthy thinkes ſtill, Who am I not? Modeſt beginnings giue hopefull proceedings, and happy endings. Once before, Moſes had taken vpon him, and laid about him; hoping then they would haue knowne, that by his hand God meant to deliuer Iſrael: but now when it comes to the point, Who am I? Gods beſt ſeruants are not euer in an equall diſpoſition to good duties. If we find differences in our ſelues ſometimes, it argues that grace is not our owne. It is our frailty, that thoſe ſeruices which we are forward to, alooſe off, wee ſhrinke at, neere hand, and fearfully miſſe-giue. How many of vs can bid defiances to death, and ſuggeſt anſwers to abſent temptations, which when they come home to vs, we flye off, and change our note, and in ſtead of action, expoſtulate!

Of the plagues of Ægypt.

IT is too much honour for fleſh and blood to receiue a meſſage from heauen, yet here God ſends a meſſage to man, and is repulſed: well may God aske, Who is man that I ſhould regard him? but for man to aske, Who is the Lord? is a proud and bold blaſphemy. Thus wyld is Nature at the firſt; but ere God haue done with Pharaoh, he will be knowne of him, he will make himſelfe knowne by him, to all the world. God might haue ſwept him away ſuddenly. How vnworthy is he of life, who with the ſame breath that he receiues, denies the Giuer of it! But he would haue him conuinced, ere hee were puniſhed; Firſt therefore he workes miracles before him, then vpon him. Pharaoh was now, from a ſtaffe of protection & ſuſtentation to Gods people, turned to a Serpent that ſtung them to death; God ſhewes himſelfe in this reall Embleme; doing that ſuddenly before him, which Satan had wrought in him by leiſure; And now when he crawles, and winds, and hiſſes, threatning perill to Iſrael, he ſhewes him how in an inſtant he can turne him into a ſenſleſſe ſticke, and make him if not vſefull, yet fearleſſe: The ſame God which wrought this, giues Satan leaue to imitate it; the firſt plague that hee meant to inflict vpon Pharaoh, is deluſion: God can be content the Deuill ſhould winne himſelfe credit, where he meanes to iudge; and holds the honour of a miracle well loſt, to harden an enemy: Yet to ſhew that his miracle was of power, the others of permiſſion; Moſes his Serpent deuours theirs: how eaſily might the Ægyptians haue thought, that hee which cauſed their Serpent not to bee, could haue kept it from being: and that they which could not keepe their Serpent from deuouring, could not ſecure them from being conſumed! but wiſe thoughts enter not into thoſe that muſt periſh. All Gods iudgments ſtand ready, and wait but till they be called for. They need but a watch-word to be giuen them: No ſooner is the rod lift vp, but they are gone forth into the world, preſently the waters run into blood, the Frogs & Lice crawle about, & all the other troops of God come ruſhing in vpon his aduerſaries: All creatures conſpire to reuenge the iniuries of God. If the Ægyptians looke vpward, there they haue Thunder, Lightning, Hayle, Tempeſts; one while no light at all, another while ſuch fearfull flaſhes as had more terror then darknes. If they look vnder them, there they ſee their waters changed into blood, their earth ſwarming with Frogs & Graſhoppers: if about them, one while the Flies fill their eyes and eares; another while they ſee their fruits deſtroyed, their cattell dying, their children dead. If, laſtly, they looke vpon themſelues, they ſee themſelues lothſome with Lice, painfull and deformed with Scabs, Biles, and Botches.

First, God begins his iudgements with waters, As the riuer of Nilus was to Ægypt, in ſtead of heauen, to moiſten and fatten the earth; ſo their confidence was more in it then in heauen. Men are ſure to be puniſht moſt and ſooneſt, in that which they make a corriuall with God. They had before defiled the riuers with the blood of innocents; and now it appeares to them, in his owne colour. The waters will no longer keep their counſell: Neuer any man delighted in blood, which had not enough of it ere his end: they ſhed but ſome few ſtreames, and now behold, whole riuers of blood: Neither was this more a monument of their ſlaughter paſt, then an image of their future deſtruction. They were afterward ouer-whelmed in the Red Sea, and now beforehand they ſee the Riuers red with blood. How dependant and ſeruile is the life of man, that cannot either want one Element, or endure it corrupted! It is hard to ſay whether there were more horror, or annoyance in this plague. They complaine of thirſt, and yet doubt whether they ſhould dye, or quench it with blood. Their fiſh (the chiefe part of their ſuſtenance) dyes with infection, and infecteth more by being dead. The ſtench of both is ready to poiſon the inhabitants; yet Pharaohs curioſity caries him away quite from the ſenſe of the iudgement: he had rather ſend for his Magicians to worke feats, then to humble himſelfe vnder God for the remoueall of this plague; and God plagues his curioſity with deceit, thoſe whom he truſts, ſhall vndoe him with preuailing; the glory of a ſecond miracle ſhall bee obſcured by a falſe imitation, for a greater glory to God in the ſequell.

The rod is lift vp again, Behold, that Nilus which they had before adored, was neuer ſo beneficiall as it is now troubleſome; yeelding them not onely a dead, but a liuing annoyance: It neuer did ſo ſtore them with Fiſh, as now it plagues them with Frogges; whatſoeuer any man makes his god, beſides the true one, ſhall be once his tormenter. Thoſe lothſome creatures leaue their owne element, to puniſh them which rebelliouſly detained Iſrael from their owne. No Bed, no Table can be free from them, their daintie Ladies cannot keepe them out of their boſomes; neither can the Ægyptians ſooner open their mouthes, then they are ready to creepe into their throats; as if they would tell them, that they came on purpoſe to reuenge the wrongs of their Maker: yet euen this wonder alſo is Satan allowed to imitate. Who can maruell to ſee the beſt vertues counterfaited by wicked men, when hee ſees the Deuill emulating the miraculous power of God? The feats that Satan playes may harden, but cannot benefit. He that hath leaue to bring Frogs, hath neither leaue, nor power, to take them away, nor to take away the ſtench from them. To bring them, was but to adde to the iudgement; to remoue them was an act of mercy. God doth commonly vſe Satan in executing of iudgement, neuer in the workes of mercy to men.

Yet euen by thus much is Pharaoh hardned, & the Sorcerers growne inſolent. When the deuill and his agents are in the height of their pride, God ſhames them in a trifle. The rod is lift vp: the very duſt receives life: Lice abound euery where, and make no difference betwixt Beggers and Princes. Though Pharaoh and his Courtiers abhorred to ſee themſelues louzy, yet they hoped this miracle would be more eaſily imitable: but now the greater poſſibility, the greater foyle. How are the great wonder-mongers of Ægypt abaſhed, that they can neither make Lice of their owne, nor deliuer themſelues from the Lice that are made! Thoſe that could make Serpent and Frogs, could not either make or kill Lice; to ſhew them that thoſe Frogs and Serpents were not their own workmanſhip. Now Pharaoh muſt needs ſee how impotent a deuill he ſerued that could not make that vermine which euery day riſes voluntarily out of corruption. Iannes and Iambres cannot now make thoſe Lice (ſo much as by deluſion) which at another time they cannot chuſe but produce vnknowing, & which now they cannot auoid. That ſpirit which is powerfull to execute the greateſt things when he is bidden, is vnable to doe the leaſt when he is reſtrained. Now theſe corriuals of Moſes can ſay, This is the finger of God. Ye fooliſh inchanters, was Gods finger in the Lice, not in the Frogs, not in the Blood, not in the Serpent? And why was it rather in the leſſe, then in the greater? Becauſe ye did imitate the other, not theſe. As if the ſame finger of God had not beene before in your imitation, which was now in your reſtraint: As if yee could haue failed in theſe, if ye had not beene onely permitted the other. Whiles wicked minds haue their full ſcope, they neuer looke vp aboue themſelues; but when once God croſſes them in their proceedings, their want of ſucceſſe teaches them to giue God his owne. All theſe plagues perhaps had more horror then paine in them. The Frogs creep vpon their clothes, the Lice vpon their skins: but thoſe ſtinging Hornets which ſucceed them, ſhall wound and kill. The water was annoyed with the firſt plague, the earth with the ſecond and third, this fourth fils the ayre, and beſides corruption brings ſmart. And that they may ſee this winged army comes from an angry God (not either from nature, or chance) euen the very Flies ſhall make a difference betwixt Ægypt and Goſhen.

He gaue them their being, ſets them their ſtint. They can no more ſting an Iſraelite, then fauor an Ægyptian. The very wings of Flies are directed by a prouidence, and doe acknowledge their limits. Now Pharaoh finds how impoſſible it is for him to ſtand out with God, ſince all his power cannot reſcue him from Lice and Flyes.

And now his heart begins to thaw a little: Goe, doe ſacrifice to your God in this Land; or (ſince that will not be accepted,) Goe into the wilderneſſe, but not far: but how ſoone it knits againe! Good thoughts make but a thorow fare of carnall hearts, they can neuer ſettle there: yea, his very miſgiuing hardens him the more: that now neither the murren of his cattell, nor the botches of his ſeruants can ſtir him a whit. He ſaw his cattle ſtrucke dead with a ſudden contagion; hee ſaw his Sorcerers (after their conteſtation with Gods meſſengers) ſtrucke with a ſcab in their very faces, and yet his heart is not ſtrucke. Who would thinke it poſſible that any ſoule could be ſecure in the middeſt of ſuch variety, and frequence of iudgements? Theſe very plagues haue not more wonder in them, then their ſucceſſe hath. To what an height of obduration will ſinne lead a man, and of all ſins, incredulity? Amidſt all theſe ſtorms Pharaoh ſleepeth, till the voice of Gods mighty thunders, and hayle mixed with fire, rouzed him vp a little.

Now, as betwixt ſleeping and waking, he ſtarts vp, and ſayes, God is righteous, I am wicked. Moſes pray for vs, and preſently layes downe his head againe. God hath no ſooner done thundering, then he hath done fearing. All this while you neuer find him carefull to preuent any one euill, but deſirous ſtill to ſhift it off, when hee feeles it; neuer holds conſtant to any good motion; neuer prayes for himſelfe, but careleſly wills Moſes and Aaron to pray for him; neuer yeelds God his whole demand, but higgleth and dodgeth, like ſome hard chapman, that wold get a releaſe with the cheapeſt: Firſt, They ſhall not goe; then, Goe and ſacrifice, but in Ægypt; next, Goe ſacrifice in the wildernes but not far off; after, Goe ye that are men; then, Goe you and your children onely; at laſt, Goe all ſaue your ſheepe and cattle. Whereſoeuer meere Nature is, ſhe is ſtill improuident of future good, ſenſible of preſent euill, inconſtant in good purpoſes; vnable, through vnacquaintance, and vnwilling to ſpeake for her ſelfe, niggardly in her grants, and vncheerefull. The plague of the Graſhoppers ſtartled him a little; and the more through the importunity of his ſeruants: for when hee conſidered the fiſh deſtroyed with the firſt blow, the cattle with the fift, the corne with the ſeuenth, the fruit and leaues with this eighth, and nothing now left him, but a bare fruitleſſe earth to liue vpon (and that, couered ouer with Locuſts) neceſſity droue him to relent for an aduantage: Forgiue me this once; take from me this death onely.

But as conſtrained repentance is euer ſhort and vnſound; the Weſt wind, together with the Graſhoppers, blowes away his remorſe; & now is he ready for another iudgement. As the Graſhoppers tooke away the ſight of the earth from him, ſo now a groſſe darkneſſe takes away the ſight of heauen too: other darkneſſes were but priuatiue, this was reall and ſenſible. The Ægyptians thought this night long, (how could they chuſe when it was ſix in one?) and ſo much the more, for that no man could riſe to talk with other, but was neceſſarily confined to his owne thoughts: One thinkes the fault in his owne eyes, which he rubs oftentimes in vaine: Others think, that the Sunne is loſt out of the Firmament, and is now withdrawn for euer: Others, that all things are returning to their firſt confuſion: all think themſelues miſerable, paſt remedy, and wiſh (whatſoeuer had befalne them) that they might haue had but light enough to ſee themſelues die.

Now Pharaoh proues like to ſome beaſts that grow mad with baiting: grace often reſiſted, turnes to deſperateneſſe, Get thee from me, looke thou ſee my face no more; whenſoeuer thou commeſt in my ſight, thou ſhalt dye. As if Moſes could not plague him as well in abſence as if he that could not take away the Lice, Flyes, Frogs, Graſhoppers, could at his pleaſure take away the life of Moſes, that procured them. VVhat is this but to run vpon the iudgements, and run away from the remedies? Euermore when Gods meſſengers are abandoned, deſtruction is neere. Moſes will ſee him no more, till he ſee him dead vpon the ſands; but God will now viſit him more then euer: The fearefulleſt plagues God ſtill reſerues for the vpſhot: All the former do but make way for the laſt.

Pharaoh may exclude Moſes and Aaron, but Gods Angell hee cannot exclude: Inſenſible meſſengers are vſed, when the viſible are debarred.

Now God begins to call for the Blood they owed him: In one night euery houſe hath a carkaſſe in it, and (which is more grieuous) of their firſt borne, and (which is yet more fearefull) in an inſtant. No man could comfort other; euery man was too full of his owne ſorrow, helping rather to make the noiſe of the lamentation more dolefull, and aſtoniſhing. How ſoone hath God changed the note of this tyrannicall people! Ægypt was neuer ſo ſtubborne in denying paſſage to Iſrael, as now importunate to entreat it: Pharaoh did not more force them to ſtay before, then now to depart: whom lately they would not permit, now they hire to go. Their rich Iewels of ſiluer and gold were not too deare for them, whom they hated; how much rather had they to ſend them away wealthy, then to haue them ſtay to be their Executors? Their loue to themſelues obtained of them the enriching of their enemies; and now they are glad to pay them well for their old worke, and their preſent iourney: Gods people had ſtayed like Slaues, they goe away like Conquerors, with the ſpoile of thoſe that hated them; armed for ſecurity, and wealthy for maintenance.

Old Iacobs ſeuenty ſoules which he brought downe into Ægypt, in ſpight of their bondage and blood-ſhed, goe forth ſix hundred thouſand men, beſides children. The world is well mended with Iſrael, ſince he went with his ſtaffe and his ſcrip ouer Iordan. Tyranny is too weake, where God bids, Increaſe and multiply. I know not where elſe the good herbe ouer-growes the weeds; the Church out-ſtrips the World. I feare if they had liued in eaſe and delicacie, they had not beene ſo ſtrong, ſo numerous. Neuer any true Iſraelite loſt by his affliction. Not onely for the action, but the time, Pharaohs choice meets with Gods: That very night, when the hundred and thirty yeares were expired, Iſrael is gone, Pharaoh neither can, nor can will to keepe them any longer; yet in this, not fulfilling Gods will, but his owne. How ſweetly doth God diſpoſe of all ſecond cauſes, that whiles they doe their owne will, they doe his!

The Iſraelites are equally glad of this haſte. Who would not be ready to goe, yea to fly out of bondage? They haue what they wiſhed; it was no ſtaying for a ſecond inuitation. The loſſe of an opportunity is many times vnrecouerable: the loue of their liberty made the burden of their dough light: who knew whether the variable mind of Pharaoh might returne to a deniall, and (after all his ſtubborneſſe) repent of his obedience? It is fooliſh to hazard where there is certainty of good offers, and vncertainty of continuance. They goe therefore; and the ſame God that fetcht them out, is both their guide and protector. How carefully doth he chuſe their way! not the neerer, but the ſafer. He would not haue his people ſo ſuddenly change from bondage to war.

It is the wondrous mercy of God, that he hath reſpect, as to his owne glory, ſo to our infirmities. He intends them warres hereafter, but after ſome longer breathing, and more preparation; his goodneſſe ſo orders all, that euils are not ready for vs, till we be ready for them. And as he chuſes, ſo he guides their way. That they might not erre in that ſandy and vntracted wilderneſſe, himſelfe goes before them: who could but follow cheerfully, when he ſees God lead him? He that led the wiſe men by a Star, leads Iſrael by a Cloud: That was an higher obiect, therefore he giues them an higher and more heauenly conduct; This was more earthly, therefore he contents himſelfe with a lower repreſentation of his preſence; A pillar of cloud and fire: A pillar for firmnes; of cloud and fire for viſibility and vſe. The greater light extinguiſhes the leſſe; therefore in the day he ſhewes them not fire, but a cloud: In the night nothing is ſeene without light; therefore he ſhewes them not the cloud, but fire: The cloud ſhelters them from heat by day; the fire digeſts the rawneſſe of the night. The ſame God is both a cloud and a fire to his children, euer putting himſelfe into thoſe formes of gracious reſpects, that may beſt fit their neceſſities.

As good motions are long ere they can enter into hard hearts, ſo they ſeldome continue long. No ſooner were the backs of Iſrael turned to depart, then Pharaohs heart and face is turned after them, to fetch them backe againe. It vexes him to ſee ſo great a command, ſo much wealth, caſt away in one night; which now he reſolues to redeem, though with more plagues. The ſame ambition and couetouſneſſe that made him weare out ſo many iudgements, will not leaue him, till it haue wrought out his full deſtruction. All Gods vengeances haue their end; the finall perdition of his enemies, which they cannot reſt till they haue attained: Pharaoh therefore & his Ægyptians will needs go fetch their bane. They well knew that Iſrael was fitter to ſerue then to fight; weary with their ſeruitude, not trained vp to war, not furniſhed with prouiſion for a field: Themſelues Captaines and Souldiers by profeſſion, furniſhed with horſes, and Chariots of warre. They gaue themſelues therefore the victory beforehand, and Iſrael either for ſpoile or bondage: yea, the weake Iſraelites gaue vp themſelues for dead, and already are talking of their graues. They ſee the Sea before them; behind them the Ægyptians: they know not whether is more mercileſſe, and are ſtricken with the feare of both. O God, how couldeſt thou forbeare ſo diſtruſtfull a people! they had ſeene all thy wonders in Ægypt and in their Goſhen; they ſaw euen now thy pillar before them, and yet they did more feare Ægypt then beleeue thee. Thy patience is no leſſe miracle then thy deliuerance. But in ſtead of remouing from them, the cloudy pillar remoues behind them, and ſtands betwixt the Iſraelites and Ægyptians: as if God would haue ſaid, They ſhall firſt ouercome me, O Iſrael, ere they touch thee. Wonder did now iuſtly ſtriue with feare in the Iſraelites, when they ſaw the cloud remoue behind them, and the ſea remoue before them. They were not vſed to ſuch bulwarkes. God ſtood behind them in the cloud; the ſea reared them vp wals on both ſides them. That which they feared would be their deſtruction, protected them: how eaſily can God make the cruelleſt of his creatures both our friends and patrons.

Yet here was faith mixed with vnbeleefe. Hee was a bold Iſraelite that ſet the firſt foot into the channell of the Sea: and euery ſtep that they ſet in that moiſt way, was a new exerciſe of their faith. Pharaoh ſees all this, and wonders; yet hath not the wit or grace to thinke (though the pillar tels him ſo much) that God made a difference betwixt him and Iſrael. He is offended with the Sea, for giuing way to his enemies, and yet ſees not why he may not truſt it as well as they. He might well haue thought, that he which gaue light in Goſhen, when there was darkneſſe in Ægypt, could as well diſtinguiſh in the Sea: but he cannot now either conſider, or feare: it is his time to periſh. God makes him faire way, and lets him run ſmoothly on, till he be come to the midſt of the Sea; not one waue may riſe vp againſt him, to wet ſo much as the hoofe of his horſe. Extraordinary fauours to wicked men, are the forerunners of their ruine.

Now when God ſees the Ægyptians too far to returne, he findes time to ſtrike them with their laſt terror: they know not why, but they would returne too late. Thoſe Chariots in which they truſted now faile them, as hauing done ſeruice enough, to carie them into perdition. God purſues them, and they cannot flye from him. Wicked men make equall haſte, both to ſin, and from iudgement: but they ſhall one day finde, that it is not more eaſie to run into ſin, then impoſſible to run away from iudgement: the ſea will ſhew them, that it regards the Rod of Moſes, not the Scepter of Pharaoh; and now (as glad to haue got the enemies of God at ſuch an aduantage) ſhuts her mouth vpon them, and ſwallowes them vp in her waues, and after ſhee hath made ſport with them a while, caſts them vpon her ſands, for a ſpectacle of triumph to their aduerſaries.

What a ſight was this to the Iſraelites, when they were now ſafe on the ſhore, to ſee their enemies come floating after them vpon the billowes, and to find among the carkaſſes vpon the ſands, their knowne oppreſſors, which now they can tread vpon with inſultation! They did not cry more loud before, then now they ſing. Not their faith, but their ſenſe, teaches them now to magnifie that God after their deliuerance, whom they hardly truſted for their deliuerance.

TO THE HIGH AND MIGHTIE PRINCE, CHARLES, PRINCE of Great Britaine.

Moſt excellent Prince:

ACcording to the true dutie of a ſeruant, I entended all my Contemplations to your now glorious Brother, of ſweet and ſorowfull memorie. The firſt part whereof, as it was the laſt Booke, that euer was dedicated to that deare, and immortall name of his: ſo it was the laſt, that was turned ouer by his gratious hand.

Now, ſince it pleaſed the GOD of ſpirits to call him from theſe poore Contemplations of ours, to the bleſſed contemplation of himſelfe, to ſee him as Hee is, to ſee as hee is ſeene; to whom is this ſequell of my labours due; but to your Highneſſe, the heire of his Honor and Vertues? Euery yeare of my ſhort pilgrimage, is like to adde ſomething to this Worke; which in regard of the ſubiect, is ſcarce finite: The whole doth not onely craue your Highneſſes Patronage, but promiſes to requite your Princely acceptation, with many ſacred examples, and rules, both for pietie, and wiſedome; towards the decking vp of this flouriſhing ſpring of your Age: in the hopes whereof, not onely wee liue, but he that is dead, liues ſtill in you: And if any piece of theſe endeuours, come ſhort of my deſires, I ſhall ſupply the reſt with my prayers: which ſhall neuer be wanting to the God of Princes that your happy proceedings may make glad the Church of God, your ſelfe in either World, glorious.

Your Highneſſes in all humble deuotion, and faithfull obſeruance.

THE FIFTH BOOKE.

The waters of Marah.

ISRAEL was not more loth to come to the Red Sea, then to part from it. How ſoone can God turne the horror of any euill into pleaſure! One ſhore reſounded with ſhriekes of feare; the other with Timbrels and Dances, and Songs of Deliuerance. Euery maine affliction is our Red Sea, which while it threats to ſwallow, preſerues vs: At Laſt, our Songs ſhall be lowder then our cries. The Iſraelitiſh Dames, whē they ſaw their danger though they might haue left their Timbrels behind them; how vnprofitable a burden ſeemed thoſe inſtruments of Muſick! yet now they liue to renue that forgotten Minſtralſie, and Dancing, which their bondage had ſo long diſcontinued: and well might thoſe feet dance vpon the ſhore, which had walked thorow the Sea. The land of Goſhen was not ſo bountifull to them, as theſe Waters. That afforded them a ſeruile life: This gaue them at once freedome, victorie, riches; beſtowing vpon them the remainder of that wealth which the Ægyptians had but lent. It was a pleaſure to ſee the floating carcaſes of their Aduerſaries; and euery day offers them new booties: It is no maruell then if their hearts were tyed to theſe bankes. If we finde but a little pleaſure in our life, we are ready to dote vpon it. Euery ſmall contentment glues our affections to that we like: And if here our imperfect delights hold vs ſo faſt, that wee would not bee looſed; how forcible ſhall thoſe infinite ioyes be aboue, when our ſoules are once poſſeſſed of them!

Yet if the place had pleaſed them more, it is no maruell they were willing to follow Moſes; that they durſt follow him in the Wilderneſſe, whom they followed through the Sea: It is a great confirmation to any people, when they haue ſeene the hand of God with their guide. O Sauiour, which haſt vndertaken to cary me from the ſpirituall Ægypt to the Land of Promiſe; How faithfull, how powerfull haue I found thee? How fearleſly ſhould I truſt thee? how cheerefully ſhould I follow thee through contempt, pouerty, death it ſelfe! Maſter, if it be thou, bid vs come vnto thee.

Immediately before, they had complained of too much water: now they goe three dayes without. Thus God meant to puniſh their infidelitie, with the defect of that, whoſe abundance made them to diſtruſt. Before they ſaw all Water, no Land; now all dry and duſtie Land, and no Water. Extremities are the beſt tryals of men; as in bodies, thoſe that can beare ſudden changes of heats and cold without complaint, are the ſtrongeſt. So much as an euill touches vpon the meane, ſo much help it yeelds towards patience; Euery degree of ſorrow is a preparation of the next: but when we paſſe to extreames without the meane, we want the benefit of recollection; and muſt truſt to our preſent ſtrength. To come from all things to nothing, is not a deſcent but a downfall; and it is a rare ſtrength and conſtancy, not to be maimed at leaſt. Theſe headlong euills, as they are the ſoreſt, ſo they muſt be moſt prouided for; as on the contrary, a ſudden aduancement from a low condition to the height of Honour, is moſt hard to manage. No man can maruell how that Tyrant blinded his Captiues, when he heares that he brought them immediately, out of a darke dungeon, into Roomes that were made bright and glorious. Wee are not worthy to know, for what wee are reſerued: no euill can amate vs, if we can ouercome ſudden extremities.

The long deferring of a good (though tedious) yet makes it the better, when it comes. Well did the Iſraelites hope that the Waters which were ſo long in finding, would be precious when they were found: Yet behold, they are croſſed, not onely in their deſires, but in their hopes; for after three dayes trauell, the firſt Fountaines they finde are bitter Waters. If theſe Wels had not runne pure Gall, they could not haue ſo much complained. Long thirſt will make bitter Waters ſweet; yet ſuch were theſe Springs, that the Iſraelites did not ſo much like their moiſture, as abhorre their reliſh. I ſee the firſt handſell that God giues them in their voyage to the Land of Promiſe; Thirſt and Bitterneſſe. Satan giues vs pleaſant entrances into his wayes, and reſerues the bitterneſſe for the end: God inuites vs to our worſt at firſt; and ſweetens our concluſion with pleaſure.

The ſame God that would not lead Iſrael through the Philiſtins Land, leſt they ſhould ſhrinke at the ſight of Warre, now leads them through the Wilderneſſe, and feares not to try their patience with bitter potions. If hee had not loued them, the Ægyptian Furnace or Sword had preuented their thirſt, or that Sea whereof their Enemies drunke dead; and yet ſee how hee dyets them. Neuer any haue had ſo bitter draughts vpon Earth as thoſe he loues beſt: The palate is an ill iudge of the fauours of God. O my Sauiour, thou didſt drinke a more bitter Cup from the hands of thy Father, then that which thou refuſedſt of the Iewes, or then that which I can drinke from thee.

Before, they could not drinke if they would; now they might and would not. God can giue vs bleſſings with ſuch a tang, that the fruition ſhall not much differ from the want: So many a one hath riches, not grace to vſe them; many haue children, but ſuch as they preferre barrenneſſe. They had ſaid before, Oh that we had water! now, Oh that we had good water! It is good ſo to deſire bleſſings from God; that we may be the better for inioying them; ſo to craue water, that it may not be ſawced with bitternes.

Now, theſe fond Iſraelites in ſtead of praying, murmur; in ſtead of praying to God, murmur againſt Moſes. What hath the righteous done? Hee made not either the Wilderneſſe dry, or the Waters bitter; Yea (if his conduct were the matter) what one foot went he before them without God? The Pillar led them, and not he; yet Moſes is murmured at. It is the hard condition of authoritie, that when the multitude fare well, they applaude themſelues; when ill, they repine againſt their Gouernours. Who can hope to be free, if Moſes eſcape not? Neuer any Prince ſo merited a people. Hee thruſt himſelfe vpon the Pikes of Pharaohs tyrannie. Hee brought them from a bondage worſe then death. His Rod diuided the Sea, and ſhared life to them, death to their Purſuers. Who would not haue thought theſe men, ſo obliged to Moſes, that no death could haue opened their mouthes or raiſed their hands againſt him? Yet now, the firſt occaſion of want makes them rebell. No benefit can ſtop the mouth of Impatience. If our turne be not ſerued for the preſent, former fauours are either forgotten, or contemned. No maruell if we deale ſo with men, when God receiues this meaſure from vs. One yeere of Famine, One Summer of Peſtilence, One Moone of vnſeaſonable weather, makes vs ouer-looke all the bleſſings of God; and more to mutine at the ſenſe of our euill, then to praiſe him for our varieties of good: whereas fauours well beſtowed, leaue vs both mindfull and confident; and will not ſuffer vs either to forget or diſtruſt. O God, I haue made an ill vſe of thy mercies, if I haue not learned to be content with thy corrections.

Moſes was in the ſame want of water with them, in the ſame diſtaſte of bitterneſſe, and yet they ſay to Moſes, What ſhall we drinke? If they had ſeene him furniſhed with full veſſels of ſweet water, and themſelues put ouer to this vnſauoury liquor, enuie might haue giuen ſome colour to this mutiny: but now their Leaders common miſerie, might haue freed him from their murmurs. They held it one piece of the late Egyptian tyrannie, that a taske was required of them, which the impoſers knew they could not performe; to make Bricke when they had no Straw; Yet they ſay to Moſes, What ſhall we drinke? Themſelues are growne Exactors, and are ready to menace more then ſtripes, if they haue not their ends, without meanes. Moſes tooke not vpon him their prouiſion, but their deliuerance: and yet, as if he had been the common Victualer of the Campe, they aske, What ſhall wee drinke? When want meets with impatient minds, it tranſports them to fury; Euery thing diſquiets, and nothing ſatisfies them.

What courſe doth Moſes now take? That which they ſhould haue done, and did not: They cryed not more feruently to him, then he to God: if he were their Leader, God was his. That which they vniuſtly required of him, he iuſtly requires of God, that could doe it; He knew whence to looke for redreſſe of all complaints; this was not his charge, but his Makers, which was able to maintaine his owne act. I ſee and acknowledge the harbour, that wee muſt put into, in all our ill weather. It is to thee, O God, that wee muſt powre out our hearts, which onely canſt make our bitter waters ſweet.

Might not that Rod, which tooke away the liquid nature from the waters, and made them ſolid; haue alſo taken away the bitter qualitie from theſe waters, and made them ſweet: ſince to flow is naturall vnto the water; to bee bitter is but accidentall. Moſes durſt not imploy his Rod without a Precept; he knew the power came from the commandement. We may not preſume on likelihoods, but depend vpon warrants; therefore Moſes doth not lift vp his Rod to the Waters, but his hand and voyce to God.

The hand of faith neuer knocked at heauen in vaine: no ſooner hath Moſes ſhewed his grieuance, then God ſhewes him the remedie: yet an vnlikely one, that it might be miraculous. He that made the waters, could haue giuen them any ſauour: How eaſie is it for him that made the matter, to alter the qualitie! It is not more hard to take away, then to giue. Who doubts but the ſame hand that created them, might haue immediately changed them? Yet that Almightie power will doe it by meanes. A piece of wood muſt ſweeten the waters: What relation had wood to water; or that which hath no ſauour, to the redreſſe of bitterneſſe? Yet here is no more poſſibilitie of failing, then proportion to the ſucceſſe. All things are ſubiect to the command of their Maker; He that made all of nothing, can make euery thing of any: There is ſo much power in euery creature, as he will pleaſe to giue. It is the praiſe of Omnipotencie to worke by improbabilities; Eliſha with Salt, Moſes with wood, ſhall ſweeten the bitter waters; Let no man deſpiſe the meanes, when he knowes the Author.

God taught his people by actions, as well as words. This entrance ſhewed them their whole iourney; wherein they ſhould taſte of much bitterneſſe: but at laſt through the mercy of God, ſweetned with comfort. Or did it not repreſent themſelues rather, in the iourney? in the fountaines of whoſe hearts, were the bitter waters of manifold corruptions, yet their vnſauorie ſoules are ſweetned by the graces of his Spirit. O Bleſſed Sauiour: the Wood of thy Croſſe, that is, the application of thy ſufferings, is enough to ſweeten a whole Sea of bitterneſſe. I care not how vnpleaſant a portion I finde in this Wilderneſſe, if the power and benefit of thy pretious death may ſeaſon it to my ſoule.

Of the Quailes and Manna.

THe thirſt of Iſrael is well quenched : for beſides the change of the waters of Marah, their ſtation is changed to Elim; where were twelue Fountaines, for their twelue Tribes, and now they complaine as faſt of hunger.

Contentation is a rare bleſſing; becauſe it ariſes either from a fruition of all comforts, or a not deſiring of ſome which we haue not. Now, we are neuer ſo bare, as not to haue ſome benefits; neuer ſo full, as not to want ſomething, yea as not to be full of wants. God hath much ado with vs; either we lacke health or quietneſſe, or children, or wealth, or company, or our ſelues in all theſe. It is a wonder theſe men found not fault with the want of ſawce to their Quailes, or with their old cloathes, or their ſolitarie way. Nature is moderate in her deſires; but conceit is vnſatiable. Yet who can deny hunger to be a ſore vexation? Before, they were forbidden ſowre bread; but now what leauen is ſo ſowre as want? When meanes hold out, it is eaſie to bee content. Whiles their dough, and other cates laſted, whiles they were gathering of the Dates of Elim, we heare no newes of them. Who cannot pray for his dayly bread, when he hath it in his cup-bord? But when our owne prouiſion failes vs, then not to diſtruſt the prouiſion of God, is a noble tryall of faith. They ſhould haue ſaid; He that ſtopt the mouth of the Sea, that it could not deuoure vs, can as eaſily ſtop the mouth of our ſtomacks: It was no eaſier matter to kill the firſt-borne of Ægypt, by his immediate hand, then to preſerue vs; He that commanded the Sea to ſtand ſtill and guard vs, can as eaſily command the earth to nouriſh vs: He that made the Rod a Serpent, can as well make theſe ſtones, bread: He that brought armies of Frogs and Caterpillers to Ægypt, can as well bring whole drifts of birds and beaſts to the deſart: He that ſweetened the waters with Wood, can as well refreſh our bodies with the fruits of the earth. Why doe we not wait on him, whom we haue found ſo powerfull? Now they ſet the mercy and loue of God vpon a wrong laſte; Whiles they meaſure it onely by their preſent ſenſe. Nature is iocond and cheerfull, whiles it proſpereth : let God withdraw his hand; no ſight, no truſt. Thoſe can praiſe him with Timbrels for a preſent fauour, that cannot depend vpon him, in the want of meanes for a future. Wee all are neuer weary of receiuing, ſoone weary of attending.

The other mutiny, was of ſome few male-contents, perhaps thoſe ſtrangers, which ſought their owne protection vnder the wing of Iſrael; this, of the whole troope. Not that none were free: Caleb, Ioſhua, Moſes, Aaron, Miriam, were not yet tainted: vſually God meaſures the ſtate of any Church or countrey by the moſt; the greater part caries both the name and cenſure. Sinnes are ſo much greater, as they are more vniuerſall: ſo farre is euill from being extenuated by the multitude of the guilty, that nothing can more aggrauate it. With men commonneſſe may plead for fauour; with God it pleads for iudgement. Many hands draw the Cable with more violence, then few : The leproſie of the whole body is more loathſome, then that of a part.

But what doe theſe mutiners ſay? Oh that wee had dyed by the hand of the Lord! And whoſe hand was this, Oh ye fond Iſraelites, if yee muſt periſh by famine? God caried you forth; God reſtrained his creatures from you : and while you are ready to dye thus, ye ſay, Oh that we had dyed by the hand of the Lord!

It is the folly of men, that in immediate iudgements they can ſee Gods hand; not in thoſe, whoſe ſecond cauſes are ſenſible: whereas God holds himſelfe equally intereſſed in all: challenging that there is no euill in the City, but from him. It is but one hand, and many inſtruments, that God ſtrikes vs with : The water may not loſe the name, though it come by chanels and pipes from the ſpring. It is our faithleſneſſe, that in viſible meanes we ſee not him that is inuiſible.

And when would they haue wiſht to die? When wee ſate by the fleſh-pots of Ægypt: Alas, what good would their fleſh-pots haue done them, in their death? If they might ſuſtaine their life, yet what could they auaile them in dying? For, if they were vnpleaſant, what comfort was it, to ſee them? If pleaſant, what comfort to part from them? Our greateſt pleaſures are but paines in their loſſe. Euery minde affects that which is like it ſelfe. Carnall minds are for the fleſh-pots of Ægypt, though bought with ſeruitude; ſpirituall are for the preſence of God, through redeemed with famine; and would rather die in Gods preſence, then liue without him in the ſight of delicate or full diſhes.

They loued their liues well enough: I heard how they ſhrieked, when they were in danger of the Ægyptians; yet now they ſay, Oh that we had dyed! Not, Oh that wee might liue by the fleſh-pots; but, Oh that wee had dyed! Although life be naturally ſweet, yet a little diſcontentment makes vs weary. It is a baſe cowardlineſſe, ſo ſoone as euer we are called from the gariſon to the field, to thinke of running away. Then is our fortitude worthy of praiſe, when we can endure to be miſerable.

But what? can no fleſh-pots ſerue but thoſe of Ægypt? I am deceiued, if that Land affoorded them any fleſh-pots ſaue their owne: Their Landlords of Ægypt held it abomination to eate of their diſhes or to kill that which they did eate. In thoſe times then they did eate of their owne; and why not now? They had droues of cattell in the Wilderneſſe: why did they not take of them? Surely, if they would haue beene as good husbands of their cattell, as they were of their dough, they might haue had enough to eate without need of murmuring: for if their back-burden of dough laſted for a moneth; their heards might haue ſerued them many yeares. All grudging is odious; but moſt, when our hands are full. To whine in the midſt of abundance; is a ſhamefull vnthankfulneſſe.

When a man would haue looked that the anger of God ſhould haue appeared in fire: now behold, his glory appeares in a Cloud. Oh the exceeding long ſuffering of God, that heares their murmurings! and as if he had beene bound to content them, in ſtead of puniſhing, pleaſes them; as a kind mother would deale with a crabed child, who rather ſtils him with the breſt, then cals for the rod. One would haue thought, that the ſight of the cloud of God ſhould haue diſpel'd the cloud of their diſtruſt; and this glory of God ſhould haue made them aſham'd of themſelues. and afraid of him: Yet I doe not heare them once ſay, What a mighty and gracious God haue we diſtruſted? Nothing will content an impotent minde, but fruition. When an heart is hardned with any paſſion, it will endure much, ere it will yeeld to relent.

Their eyes ſaw the cloud; their eares heard the promiſe, the performance is ſpeedie and anſwerable. Needs muſt they be conuinced, when they ſaw God as glorious in his worke, as in his preſence; when they ſaw his word iuſtified by his act. God tels them afore-hand what hee wil doe, that their expectation might ſtay their hearts. He doth that which he fore-told, that they might learne to truſt him, ere he performe. They deſired meat, and receiue Quailes; they deſired bread, and haue Manna. If they had had of the courſeſt fleſh, and of the baſeſt Pulſe, hunger would haue made it dainty: But now God will pamper their famine; and giues them meat of Kings, and Bread of Angels. What a world of Quailes were but ſufficient to ſerue ſix hundred thouſand perſons? They were all ſtrong, all hungry; neither could they bee ſatisfied with ſingle Fowles: What a Table hath God prepared in the Deſart, for abundance, for delicacie? Neuer Prince was ſo ſerued in his greateſt pompe, as theſe rebellious Iſraelites in the Wilderneſſe. God loues to ouer-deſerue of men; and to exceed not onely their ſinnes; but their very deſires, in mercy. How good ſhall wee finde him to thoſe that pleaſe him, ſince he is ſo gracious to offenders! If the moſt graceleſſe Iſraelites be fed with Quailes and Manna; Oh, what goodneſſe is that hee hath laid vp for them that loue him! As on the contrary, If the Righteous ſcarce be ſaued, where will the Sinners appeare? Oh God, thou canſt, thou wilt make this difference. Howſoeuer with vs men, the moſt crabed and ſtubborne oftentimes fare the beſt, the Righteous

Hall, J.

Iudge of the world frames his remuneration as he finds vs: And if his mercy ſometime prouoke the worſt to repentance by his temporall fauours, yet he euer reſerues ſo much greater reward for the Righteous, as eternitie is beyond time, and heauen aboue earth.

It was not of any naturall inſtinct, but from the ouer-ruling power of their Creator, that theſe Quailes came to the Deſart. Needs muſt they come whom GOD brings. His hand is in all the motions of his meaneſt Creatures. Not onely wee, but they mooue in him. As not many Quailes, ſo not one Sparrow falls without him: How much more are the actions of his beſt creature, Man, directed by his prouidence? How aſhamed might theſe Iſraelites haue been, to ſee theſe creatures ſo obedient to their Creator, as to come and offer themſelues to their ſlaughter; whiles they went ſo repiningly to his ſeruice and their owne preferment? Who can diſtruſt the prouiſion of the great Houſe-keeper of the world, when hee ſees how hee can furniſh his tables at pleaſure? Is he growne now careleſſe, or we faithleſſe rather? Why doe wee not repoſe vpon his mercy? Rather then we ſhall want, when we truſt him, he will fetch Quailes from all the coaſts of heauen to our boord. Oh Lord, thy hand is not ſhortned to giue: let not ours bee ſhortned, or ſhut in receiuing.

Eliahs ſeruitors, the Rauens, brought him his full ſeruice of bread, and fleſh at once; each morning and euening. But theſe Iſraelites haue their fleſh at euen, and their bread in the morning: Good reaſon there ſhould be a difference. Eliahs table was vpon Gods direct appointment; the Iſraelites vpon their mutiny: Although God will relieue them with prouiſion, yet he will puniſh their impatience with delay; ſo ſhall they know themſelues his people, that they ſhall finde they were murmurers. Not onely in the matter, but in the order, God anſwers their grudging; Firſt they complaine of the want of fleſh-pots, then of bread. In the firſt place therefore they haue fleſh, bread after. When they haue fleſh, yet they muſt ſtay a time ere they can haue a full meale; vnleſſe they would eate their meat breadleſſe, and their bread dry. God will be waited on and will giue the conſummation of his bleſſings at his leaſure. In the euening of our life, we haue the firſt pledges of his fauour: but in the morning of our reſurrection, muſt we looke for our perfect ſacietie of the true Manna, the bread of life.

Now the Iſraelites ſped well with their Quailes; they did eate and digeſt, and proſper: not long after, they haue Quailes with a vengeance; the meat was pleaſant, but the ſauce was fearfull. They let downe the Quailes at their mouth, but they came out at their noſtrils. How much better had it been to haue died of hunger, through the chaſtiſement of God, then of the plague of God, with the fleſh betwixt their teeth! Behold, they periſh of the ſame diſeaſe then, whereof they now recouer. The ſame ſinne repeated, is death, whoſe firſt act found remiſsion: Relapſes are deſperate, where the ſickneſſe it ſelfe is not. With vs men, once goes away with a warning, the ſecond act is but whipping, the third is death. It is a mortall thing to abuſe the lenity of God; we ſhould be preſumptuouſly mad, to hope that God will ſtand vs for a ſinning-ſtock, to prouoke him how we will. It is more mercy then he owes vs, if he forbeare vs once: it is his iuſtice to plague vs the ſecond time: We may thanke our ſelues, if we will not be warned.

Their meate was ſtrange, but nothing ſo much as their bread. To finde Quailes in a Wilderneſſe was vnuſuall; but for bread to come downe from Heauen was yet more. They had ſeene Quailes before (though not in ſuch number:). Manna was neuer ſeene till now. From this day till their ſetling in Canaan, God wrought a perpetuall miracle in this food. A miracle in the place: other bread riſes vp from below, this fell down from aboue; neither did it euer raine bread till now; Yet ſo did this heauenly ſhowre fall, that it is confined to the campe of Iſrael. A miracle in the quantitie: That euery morning ſhould fall enough to fill ſo many hundred thouſand mouthes and mawes. A miracle in the compoſition; That it is ſweet like hony-cakes, round like Corianders,tranſparent as dew. A miracle in the qualitie; That it melted by one heat, by another hardened. A miracle in the difference of the fall; That (as if it knew times, and would teach them as well as feed them) it fell double in the euen of the Sabbath, and on the Sabbath fell not. A miracle in the putrefaction and preſeruation; That it was full of wormes, when it was kept beyond the due houre for diſtruſt:full of ſweetneſſe, when it was kept a day longer for religion; Yea many Ages, in the Arke for a monument of the power and mercy of the Giuer. A miracle in the continuance and ceaſing; That this ſhowre of bread followed their Campe in all their remouals, till they came to taſte of the bread of Canaan, and then withdrew it ſelfe, as if it ſhould haue ſaid: Ye need no miracles, now ye haue meanes.

They had the Tipes; we haue the ſubſtance. In this wilderneſſe of the World, the true Manna is rained vpon the tents of our hearts. Hee that ſent the Manna, was the Manna, which he ſent: He hath ſaid, I am the Manna that came downe from heauen. Behold, their whole meales were ſacramentall: Euery morſell they did eate, was ſpirituall. We eate ſtill of their Manna: ſtill hee comes downe from heauen. He hath ſubſtance enough for worlds of ſoules; yet onely is to be found in the liſts of the true Church; He hath more ſweetneſſe then the hony, and the hony-combe. Happy are we if we can find him ſo ſweet as he is.

The ſame hand that rained Manna vpon their tents, could haue rained it into their mouths,or laps. God loues we ſhould take paines for our ſpirituall food. Little would it haue auailed them, that the Manna lay about their tents, if they had not gone forth and gathered it, beaten it, back't it: Let ſaluation be neuer ſo plentifull, if wee bring it not home,and make it ours by faith,we are no whit the better. If the worke done,and meanes vſed, had beene enough to giue life, no Iſraelite had dyed: Their bellies were full of that bread, whereof one crumme giues life: yet they dyed many of them in diſpleaſure. As in naturall, ſo in ſpirituall things, wee may not truſt to meanes: The carkaſſe of the Sacrament cannot giue life, but the ſoule of it; which is the thing repreſented. I ſee each man gather, and take his iuſt meaſure out of the common heape. We muſt be induſtrious, and helpfull each to other: but when we haue done, Chriſt is not partiall. If our ſanctification differ,yet our iuſtification is equall in all.

He that gaue a Gomer to each, could haue giuen an Ephah: As eaſily could hee haue rained downe enough for a moneth, or a yeare at once,as for a day. God delights to haue vs liue in a continual dependance vpon his prouidence,and each day renue the acts of our faith and thankfulneſſe. But what a couetous Iſraelite was that, which in a fooliſh diſtruſt would be ſparing the charges of God; and reſeruing that for morning, which he ſhould haue ſpent vpon his ſupper? He ſhall know, that euen the bread that came downe from heauen, can corrupt: The Manna was from aboue; the wormes and ſtinke from his diffidence. Nothing is ſo ſoueraigne which being peruerted, may not annoy in ſtead of benefiting vs.

Yet I ſee ſome difference betweene the true and typicall Manna; God neuer meant that the ſhadow and the body ſhould agree in all things. The outward Manna reſerued, was poiſon: the ſpirituall Manna is to vs, as it was to the Arke; not good, vnleſſe it be kept perpetually. If we keepe it, it ſhall keepe vs from putrefaction. The outward Manna fell not at all on the Sabbath: The ſpirituall Manna (tho it balkes no day) yet it fals double on Gods day: and if we gather it not then, we famiſh. In that true Sabbath of our glorious reſt, we ſhall for euer feed of that Manna which we haue gathered in this euen of our life.

Of the Rocke of Rephidim.

BEfore, Iſrael thirſted and was ſatisfied; after that, they hungred and were filled; now they thirſt againe. They haue bread and meat, but want drink: It is a maruell if God doe not euermore hold vs ſhort of ſomething, becauſe hee would keepe vs ſtill in exerciſe. Wee ſhould forget at whoſe coſt we liue, if we wanted nothing. Still God obſerues a viciſſitude of euill, and good; and the ſame euils that we haue paſſed, returne vpon vs in their courſes. Croſſes are not of the nature of thoſe diſeaſes, which they ſay a man can haue but once. Their firſt ſeiſure doth but make way for their re-entry. None but our laſt enemie comes once for all; and I know not, if that: for euen in liuing we dye daily. So muſt wee take our leaues of all afflictions, that wee reſerue a lodging for them, and expect their returne.

All Iſrael murmured when they wanted bread, meat, water; and yet all Iſrael departed from the wilderneſſe of Sin to Rephidim, at Gods command. The very worſt men will obey God in ſomething; none but the good, in all: Hee is rarely deſperate, that makes an vniuerſall oppoſition to God. It is an vnſound praiſe that is giuen a man, for one good action: It may be ſafely ſaid of the very Deuils themſelues, that they doe ſomething well: They know and beleeue, and tremble. If we follow God, and murmur, it is all one, as if we had ſtayed behind.

Thoſe diſtruſt his prouidence in their neceſſity, that are ready to follow his guidance in their welfare. It is an harder matter to endure in extreame want, then to obey an hard commandement Sufferings are greater tryals, then actions: How many haue we ſeen ieopard their liues, with cheerfull reſolution, which cannot endure in cold blood to loſe a limbe with patience! But God will haue his throughly tryed, he puts them to both: and if we cannot endure both to follow him from Sin, and to thirſt in Rephidim, we are not ſound Iſraelites.

God led them, on purpoſe to this drie Rephidim: He could as well haue conducted them to another Elim, to conuenient waterings: Or hee that giues the waters of all their channels, could as well haue deriued them to meet Iſrael: But God doth purpoſely carry them to thirſt. It is not for neceſſity, that we fare ill, but out of choyce: It were all one with God to giue vs health, as ſickneſſe; abundance as pouerty. The treaſurie of his riches hath more ſtore then his creature can be capable of; wee ſhould not complaine, if it were not good for vs to want.

This ſhould haue beene a contentment able to quench any thirſt: God hath led vs hither; If Moſes out of ignorance had miſguided vs, or we chanceably falne vpon theſe dry deſarts, though this were no remedy of our griefe yet it might be ſome ground of our complaint. But now the counſell of ſo wiſe and mercifull a God, hath drawne vs into this want; and ſhall not he as eaſily finde the way out? It is the Lord, let him doe what he will. There can be no more forcable motiue to patience, then the acknowledgment of a diuine hand that ſtrikes vs. It is fearfull to be in the hand of an aduerſarie; but who would not be confident of a Father? Yet in our fraile humanity, choler may tranſport a man from remembrance of nature; but when wee feele our ſelues vnder the diſcipline of a wiſe God, that can temper our afflictions to our ſtrength, to our benefit; who would no rather murmur at himſelfe, that hee ſhould ſwerue towards impatience? Yet theſe ſturdy Iſraelites wilfully murmur: and will not haue their thirſt quenched with faith, but with water. Giue vs water.

I looked to heare when they would haue entreated Moſes to pray for them: but in ſtead of entreating, they contend, and in ſtead of prayers, I finde commands: Giue vs water. If they had gone to God without Moſes, I ſhould haue praiſed their faith: but now they goe to Moſes without God, I hate their ſtubborne faithleſneſſe. To ſeeke to the ſecond meanes, with neglect of the firſt, is the fruit of a falſe faith.

The anſwer of Moſes is like himſelfe, milde and ſweet; Why contend ye with me? Why tempt ye the Lord? In the firſt expoſtulation condemning them of iniuſtice; ſince not he, but the Lord had afflicted them. In the ſecond, of preſumption; that ſince it was God that tempted them by want, they ſhould tempt him by murmuring. In the one, hee would haue them ſee their wrong; in the other their danger. As the act came not from him, but from God; ſo he puts it off to God, from himſelfe: Why tempt yee the Lord? The oppoſition which is made to the inſtruments of God, redounds euer to his perſon. He holds himſelfe ſmitten through the ſides of his Miniſters: ſo hath God incorporated theſe reſpects, that our ſubtiltie cannot diuide them.

But what temptation is this? Is the Lord among vs or no? Infidelitie is crafty, and yet fooliſh; Craftie in her inſinuations, fooliſh in her conceits. They imply, If we were ſure the Lord were with vs, we would not diſtruſt; They conceiue doubts of his preſence, after ſuch confirmations. What could God doe more, to make them know him preſent, vnleſſe euery moment ſhould haue renued miracles? The plagues of Ægypt, and the diuiſion of the Sea were ſo famous, that the very Innes of Iericho rang of them. Their waters were lately ſweetned; the Quailes were yet in their teeth; their Manna was yet in their eye; yea, they ſaw God in the Pillar of the Cloud, and yet they ſay, Is the Lord amongſt vs? No argument is enough to an incredulous heart; not ſenſe, not experience. How much better was that faith of Thomas, that would beleeue his eyes and hands, though his eare he would not? Oh the deepe infidelitie of theſe Iſraelites, that ſaw and beleeued not!

And how will they know if God be amongſt them? As if hee could not bee with them, and they be athirſt: either God muſt humour carnall minds, or be diſtruſted: If they proſper (though it be with wickedneſſe) God is with them; If they be thwarted in their owne deſignes; ſtraight, Is God with vs? It was the way to put God from them, to diſtruſt and murmure. If he had not beene with them, they had not liued; If hee had beene in them, they had not mutined. They can thinke him abſent in their want, and cannot ſee him abſent in their ſinne: and yet wickedneſſe, not affliction, argues him gone; Yea, then is he moſt preſent, when he moſt chaſtiſes.

Who would not haue looked, that this anſwer of Moſes ſhould haue appeaſed their fury? As what can ſtill him that will not be quiet to thinke he hath God for his Aduerſarie? But, as if they would wilfully warre againſt Heauen, they proceed; yet with no leſſe craft then violence; bending their exception to one part of the anſwer: and ſmoothly omitting, what they could not except againſt. They will not heare of tempting God? they maintaine their ſtrife with Moſes, both with words and ſtones. How malicious, how headdy is impatience! The act was Gods, they caſt it vpon Moſes, Wherefore haſt thou brought vs? The act of God was mercifull, they make it cruell, To kill vs and our children: As if God and Moſes meant nothing but their ruine; who intended nothing but their life and liberty. Fooliſh men! What needed this iourney to death? Were they not as obnoxious to God in Ægypt? Could not God by Moſes as eaſily haue killed them in Ægypt, or in the Sea, as their enemies? Impatience is full of miſconſtruction; If it be poſſible to find out any gloſſe to corrupt the Text of Gods actions, they ſhall be ſure not to ſcape vntainted.

It was no expoſtulating with an vnreaſonable multitude; Moſes runs ſtraight to him, that was able at once to quench their thirſt, and their fury: What ſhall I do to this people? It is the beſt way, to truſt God with his owne cauſes: when men will be intermedling with his affaires, they vndoe themſelues in vaine. We ſhall finde difficulties in all great enterpriſes: if wee be ſure we haue begun them from God, we may ſecurely caſt all euents vpon his prouidence, which knowes how to diſpoſe, and how to end them.

Moſes perceiued rage, not in the tongues onely, but in the hands of the Iſraelites. Yet a while longer and they will ſtone me. Euen the Leader of Gods people, feared death; and ſinned not in fearing. Life is worthy to be deare to all: eſpecially to him, whom publike charge hath made neceſſary: Meere feare is not ſinfull; It is impotence and diſtruſt that accompany it, which make it euill. How well is that feare beſtowed, that lends vs the more importunately to God. Some man would haue thought of flight; Moſes flies to his Prayers; and that not for reuenge, but for helpe. Who but Moſes would not haue ſaid, This twice they haue mutined, and beene pardoned; and now againe thou ſeeſt, O Lord, how madly they rebell; and how bloodily they intend againſt me; preſerue me I beſeech thee, and plague them. I heare none of this: but imitating the long ſuffering of his God, he ſeekes to God for them, which ſought to kill him, for the quarrell of God.

Neither is God ſooner ſought then found: All Iſrael might ſee Moſes goe towards the Rocke: None but the Elders might ſee him ſtrike it. Their vnbeleefe made them vnworthy of this priuiledge. It is no ſmall fauour of God, to make vs witneſſes of his great Workes; That he crucifies his Sonne before vs; that he fetches the water of Life, out of the true Rocke, in our ſight, is an high prerogatiue; If his rigour would haue taken it, our infidelity had equally excluded vs, whom now his mercy hath receiued.

Moſes muſt take his Rod; God could haue done it by his will, without a word; or by his word, without the Rod; but he will doe by meanes, that which he can as eaſily doe without. There was no vertue in the Rod, none in the ſtroke; but all in the command of God. Meanes muſt be vſed, and yet their efficacy muſt be expected out of themſelues.

It doth not ſuffice God to name the Rod, without a deſcription; (Whereby thou ſmoteſt the Riuer:) Wherefore? but to ſtrengthen the faith of Moſes; that hee might well expect this wonder from that, which he had tried to be miraculous. How could he but firmely beleeue, that the ſame meanes which turned the waters into blood, and turned the ſea into a wall, could as well turne the ſtone into water? Nothing more raiſes vp the heart in preſent affiance, then the recognition of fauors, or wonders paſſed. Behold the ſame Rod that brought plagues to the Ægyptians, brings deliuerances to Iſrael. By the ſame meanes can God ſaue and condemne: like as the ſame ſword defends and kils.

That power, which turned the wings of the Quailes to the wilderneſſe, turned the courſe of the water through the Rocke: He might (if hee had pleaſed) haue cauſed a Spring to well out of the plaine earth; but he will now fetch it out of the ſtone, to conuince and ſhame their infidelity.

What is more hard and dry then the Rocke? What more moiſt and ſupple then water? That they might be aſhamed to thinke, they diſtruſted leſt God could bring them water out of the Clouds or Springs, the very Rocke ſhall yeeld it.

And now, vnleſſe their hearts had beene more rockie then this ſtone, they could not but haue reſolued into teares, for this diffidence.

I wonder to ſee theſe Iſraelites, fed with Sacraments: Their bread was ſacramentall, whereof they communicated euery day: leſt any man ſhould complaine of frequence, the Iſraelites receiued daily; and now their drinke was ſacramentall, that the ancient Church may giue no warrant of a dry Communion.

Twice therefore hath the Rocke yeelded them water of refreſhing; to ſignifie that the true ſpirituall Rocke yeelds it alwayes. The Rocke that followed them was Chriſt: Out of thy ſide, O Sauiour, iſſued that bloodie ſtreame, whereby the thirſt of all beleeuers is comfortably quenched: Let vs but thirſt; not with repining, but with faith; this Rocke of thine ſhall abundantly flow forth to our ſoules, and follow vs, till this water be changed into that new wine, which we ſhall drinke with thee in thy Fathers Kingdome.

The Foyle of AMALEK: or the hand of MOSES liſt vp.

NO ſooner is Iſraels thirſt ſlaked, then God hath an Amalekite ready to aſſault them. The Almighty hath choyce of rods to whip vs with; and will not be content with one tryall. They would needs bee quarrelling with Moſes, without a cauſe; and now God ſends the Amalekites to quarrell with them. It is iuſt with God, that they which would bee contending with their beſt friends, ſhould haue worke enough of contending with enemies.

In their paſſage out of Ægypt, God would not lead them the neereſt way, by the Philiſtims Land, leſt they ſhould repent at the ſight of warre; now they both ſee, and feele it. He knowes how to make the fitteſt choyce of the times of euill; and with-holds that one while, which he ſends another, not without a iuſt reaſon, why he ſends, and with-holds it: And though to vs, they come euer (as wee thinke) vnſeaſonably, and at ſome times more vnfitly, then others; yet hee that ſends them knowes their opportunities:

Who would not haue thought, a worſe time could neuer haue beene pickt for Iſraels warre, then now? In the feebleneſſe of their troopes, when they were wearied, thirſty, vnweaponed; Yet now muſt the Amalekites doe that, which before, the Philiſtims might not doe: We are not worthy, not able to chuſe for our ſelues.

To be ſicke, and dye in the ſtrength of youth, in the minority of children: To bee pinched with pouerty, or miſcariage of children in our age, how harſhly vnſeaſonable it ſeemes! But the infinite wiſedome, that orders our euents, knowes how to order our times. Vnleſſe we will be ſhameleſſe vnbeleeuers, O Lord, we muſt truſt thee with our ſelues and our ſeaſons, and know, that not that which we deſire, but that which thou haſt appointed, is the fitted time for our ſufferings.

Amalek was Eſaus grand-child; and theſe Iſraelites the Sons of Iacob. The abode of Amalek was not ſo farre from Ægypt, but they might well heare what became of their Coſins of Iſrael; and now, doubtleſſe out of enuy watcht their opportunity of reuenge for their old grudge. Malice is commonly hereditarie, and runs in the blood; and (as we vſe to ſay of Runnet) the older it is, the ſtronger.

Hence is that fooliſh hoſtilitie, which ſome men vniuſtly nouriſh vpon no other grounds then the quarrels of their Fore-fathers. To wreake our malice vpon poſteritie, is at the beſt, but the humour of an Amalekite.

How cowardly, and how craftie was the Skirmiſh of Amalek! They doe not bid them battell in termes of Warre, but without all noiſe of warning, come ſtealing vpon the hindmoſt, and fall vpon the weake, and ſcattered remnants of Iſrael.

There is no looking for fauour at the hands of malice: The worſt that either force or fraud can doe, muſt be expected of an Aduerſarie; but much more of our ſpirituall enemie; by how much his hatred is deeper. Behold, this Amalek lyes in ambuſh to hinder our paſſage vnto our Land of Promiſe; and ſubtilly takes all aduantages of our weakneſſes. We cannot be wiſe, or ſafe, if we ſtay behind our colours; and ſtrengthen not thoſe parts, where is moſt perill of oppoſition.

I doe not heare Moſes ſay to his Ioſhua: Amalek is come vp againſt vs; it matters not whether thou goe againſt him, or not; or if thou goe, whether alone or with company; or if accompanied, whether with many or ſew, ſtrong or weake; Or if ſtrong men, whether they doe fight or no; I will pray on the Hill: but Chooſe vs out men and goe fight.

Then onely can we pray with hope, when wee haue done our beſt. And though the meanes cannot effect that, which wee deſire; yet God will haue vs vſe the likelyeſt meanes on our part, to effect it. Where it comes immediately from the charge of God, any meanes are effectuall; One ſtick of wood ſhall fetch water out of the Rocke, another ſhall fetch bitterneſſe out of the water: but in thoſe proiects which wee make for our owne purpoſes, we muſt chooſe thoſe helpes which promiſe moſt efficacie. In vaine ſhall Moſes bee vpon the Hill, if Ioſhua bee not in the Valley. Prayer without meanes, is a mockery of God.

Here are two ſhadowes of one ſubſtance; The ſame Chriſt in Ioſhua fights againſt our ſpirituall Amalek, and in Moſes ſpreads out his Armes vpon the hill; and in both, conquers. And why doth he climb vp the hill rather, then pray in the valley? perhaps that hee might haue the more freedome to his thoughts; which, following the ſenſe, are ſo much more heauenly, as the eye ſees more of heauen. Though vertue lyes not in the place, yet choyce muſt bee made of thoſe places, which may be moſt helpe to our deuotion: Perhaps that he might be in the eye of Iſrael.

The preſence and ſight of the Leader giues heart to the people: neither doth any thing more moue the multitude, then example. A publike perſon cannot hide himſelfe in the Valley: but yet it becomes him beſt to ſhew himſelfe vpon the Hill.

The hand of Moſes muſt be raiſed, but not emptie; neither is it his owne Rod that he holds, but Gods. In the firſt meeting of God with Moſes, the Rod was Moſes's; it is like, for the vſe of his trade: now the proprietie is altered; God hath ſo wrought by it, that now he challenges it; and Moſes dare not call it his owne.

Thoſe things which it pleaſes God to vſe for his owne ſeruice, are now changed in their condition. The bread of the Sacrament was once the Bakers, now it is Gods: the water was once euery mans, now it is the Lauer of Regeneration. It is both vniuſt and vnſafe, to hold thoſe things common wherein God hath a peculiaritie.

At other times, vpon occaſion of the plagues, and of the Quailes, and of the Rocke, he was commanded to take the Rod in his hand; now he doth it vnbidden. Hee doth it not now for miraculous operation, but for encouragement.

For when the Iſraelites ſhould caſt vp their eyes to the Hill, and ſee Moſes and his Rod (the man and the meanes that had wrought ſo powerfully for them) they could not but take heart to themſelues, and thinke, There is the man that deliuered vs from the Ægyptian, Why not now from the Amalekite? There is the Rod which turned waters to blood, and brought varieties of plagues on Ægypt, Why not now on Amalek?

Nothing can more hearten our faith, then the view of the monuments of Gods fauour: if euer we haue found any word, or act of God cordiall to vs, it is good to fetch it forth oft to the eye. The renewing of our ſenſe, and remembrance, makes euery gift of God perpetually beneficiall.

If Moſes had receiued a command, that Rod which fetcht water from the Rocke, could as well haue fetcht the blood of the Amalekites out of their bodies: God will not worke miracles alwayes; neither muſt we expect them vnbidden.

Not as a Standard-bearer ſo much as a ſuppliant, doth Moſes lift vp his hand: The geſture of the body ſhould both expreſſe and further the piety of the ſoule. This fleſh of ours is not a good ſeruant, vnleſſe it helpe vs in the beſt offices: The God of Spirits doth moſt reſpect the ſoule of our deuotion; yet, it is both vnmannerly and irreligious, to be miſgeſtured in our Prayers. The careleſſe and vncomely carriage of the body helpes both to ſignifie, and make a prophane ſoule.

The hand, and the Rod of Moſes neuer moued in vaine; Though the Rod did not ſtrike Amalek, as it had done the Rocke: yet it ſmote Heauen, and fetcht downe victorie. And that the Iſraelites might ſee, the hand of Moſes had a greater ſtroke in the fight, then all theirs, The ſucceſſe muſt riſe and fall with it: Amalek roſe, and Iſrael fell, with his hand falling: Amalek fell, and Iſrael riſes, with his hand raiſed. Oh the wondrous power of the prayers of faith! All heauenly fauours are deriued to vs from this channell of grace: To theſe are we beholden for our peace, preſeruations, and all the rich mercies of God, which we enioy. We could not want, if we could aske.

Euery mans hand would not haue done this; but the hand of a Moſes. A faithleſſe man may as well hold his hand and tongue ſtill; hee may babble, but prayes not; hee prayes ineffectually, and receiues not: Onely the prayer of the Righteous auaileth much; and onely the beleeuer is Righteous.

There can be no merit, no recompence anſwerable to a good mans prayer; for Heauen, and the eare of God is open to him: but the formall deuotions of an ignorant, and faithleſſe man, are not worth that cruſt of bread which he askes: Yea, it is preſumption in himſelfe; how ſhould it be beneficiall to others? it prophanes the name of God, in ſtead of adoring it.

But how iuſtly is the feruency of the prayer added to the righteouſneſſe of the perſon? When Moſes hand ſlackned, Amalek preuailed. No Moſes can haue his hand euer vp; It is a title proper to God, that his hands are ſtretched out ſtill: whether to mercy, or vengeance. Our infirmity will not ſuffer any long intention, either of body or minde. Long prayers can hardly maintaine their vigour; as in tall bodies the ſpirits are diffuſed. The ſtrongeſt hand will languiſh, with long entending: And when our deuotion tyres, it is ſeene in the ſucceſſe; then ſtraight our Amalek preuailes. Spirituall wickedneſſes are maſtered by vehement prayer; and by heartleſneſſe in prayer, ouercome vs.

Moſes had two helpes, A ſtone to ſit on, and an hand to raiſe his: And his ſitting, and holpen hand is no whit leſſe effectuall. Euen in our prayers will God allow vs to reſpect our owne infirmities. In caſes of our neceſſity, hee regards not the poſture of body, but the affections of the ſoule.

Doubtleſſe Aaron and Hur did not onely raiſe their hands, but their minds with his: The more cords, the eaſier draught. Aaron was brother to Moſes: There cannot bee a more brotherly office, then to helpe one another in our prayers, and to excite our mutuall deuotions. No Chriſtian may thinke it enough to pray alone; He is no true Iſraelite, that will not be ready to lift vp the weary hands of Gods Saints.

All Iſrael ſaw this: or if they were ſo intent vpon the ſlaughter, and ſpoile, that they obſerued it not, they might heare it after from Aaron, and Hur: yet this contents not God; It muſt be written. Many other miracles had God done before; not one, directly commanded to be recorded: The other were onely for the wonder; this for the imitation of Gods people. In things that muſt liue by report, euerie tongue addes, or detracts ſomething; The word once written is both inalterable and permanent.

As God is carefull to maintaine the glory of his miraculous victory: ſo is Moſes deſirous to ſecond him; God by a Booke, and Moſes by an Altar, and a name. God commands to enroule it in parchment; Moſes regiſters it in the ſtones of his Altar; which he raiſes not onely for future memory, but for preſent vſe. That hand which was weary of lifting vp, ſtraight offers a ſacrifice of praiſe to God: How well it becomes the iuſt to be thankfull! Euen very nature teacheth vs men to abhorre ingratitude in ſmall fauours. How much leſſe can that Fountaine of goodneſſe abide to be laded at with vnthankfull hands? O God, we cannot but confeſſe our deliuerances: where are our Altars? where are our Sacrifices? where is our Iehouaniſſi? I doe not more wonder at thy power in preſeruing vs, then at thy mercy, which is not weary of caſting away fauours vpon the ingratefull.

Of

Of the Law.

IT is but about ſeuen weekes, ſince Iſrael came out of Ægypt: In which ſpace God had cheriſhed their faith by fiue ſeuerall wonders: yet now he thinkes it time to giue them Statutes from heauen, as well as bread. The Manna and water from the Rocke (which was Chriſt in the Goſpell) were giuen before the Law. The Sacraments of Grace, before the legall Couenant. The grace of God preuenteth our obedience; Therefore ſhould wee keepe the Law of God, becauſe we haue a Sauiour. Oh the mercy of our God! which before we ſee what we are bound to doe, ſhewes vs our remedy, if we doe it not: How can our faith diſanull the Law, when it was before it? It may helpe to fulfill that, which ſhall be: it cannot fruſtrate that which was not. The Letters which God had written in our fleſhly tables, were now (as thoſe which were carued in ſome barkes) almoſt growne out; he ſaw it time to write them in dead Tables, whoſe hardnes ſhould not be capable of alteration: He knew, that the ſtone would be more faithfull then our hearts.

O maruellous accordance betwixt the two Teſtaments! In the very time of their deliuery, there is the ſame agreement, which is in the ſubſtance. The ancient Iewes kept our Feaſts; and we ſtill keepe theirs. The Feaſt of the Paſſeouer is the time of Chriſts reſurrection, then did he paſſe from vnder the bondage of Death. Chriſt is our Paſſeouer, the ſpotleſſe Lambe, whereof not a bone muſt bee broken. The very day, wherein God came down in fire and thunder, to deliuer the Law: Euen the ſame day came alſo the Holy Ghoſt downe vpon the Diſciples in fiery tongues, for the propagation of the Goſpell. That other was in fire and ſmoke, obſcurity was mingled with terror; This was in fire without ſmoke, befitting the light and cleereneſſe of the Goſpell: Fire, not in flaſhes, but in tongues; not to terrifie, but to inſtruct. The promulgation of the Law, makes way for the Law of the Goſpell; No man receiues the Holy Ghoſt, but he which hath felt the terrours of Sinai.

God might haue impoſed vpon them a Law perforce; They were his creatures, and he could require nothing but iuſtice. It had beene but equall, that they ſhould bee compelled to obey their Maker; yet that God which loues to doe all things ſweetly, giues the law of iuſtice in mercy, and will not imperiouſly command, but craues our aſſent for that, which it were rebellion not to doe.

How gentle ſhould be the proceeding of fellow creatures, who haue an equalitie of being, with an inequality of condition; when their infinite Maker requeſts, where he might conſtraine! God will make no couenant with the vnwilling; How much leſſe the couenant of Grace; which ſtands all vpon loue? If we ſtay till God offer violence to our will, or to vs, againſt our will, we ſhal die ſtrangers from him. The Church is the Spouſe of Chriſt; he will enioy her loue by a willing contract, not by a rauiſhment. The obſtinate haue nothing to doe with God; The title of all Conuerts, is, A willing people.

Then Iſrael inclined to God, it was from God; he enquires after his owne gifts in vs, for our capacity of more. They had not receiued the Law, vnleſſe they had firſt receiued a diſpoſition fit to be commanded. As there was an inclination to heare, ſo there muſt be a preparation for hearing. Gods iuſtice had before prepared his Iſraelites, by hunger, thirſt, feare of enemies; his mercies had prepared them by deliuerances, by prouiſions of water, meat, bread: and yet beſides all the ſight of God in his miracles, they muſt be three dayes prepared to heare him. When our ſoules are at the beſt, our approach to God requires particular addreſſes: And if three dayes were little enough to prepare them to receiue the Law; how is all our life ſhort enough to prepare for the reckoning of our obſeruing it? And if the word of a command expected ſuch readineſſe; what ſhall the word of promiſe, the promiſe of Chriſt and ſaluation?

The Moraine of Ægypt was not ſo infectious as their vices; the contagion of theſe ſtucke ſtill by Iſrael: All the water of the Red Sea, and of Marah, and that which guſhed out of the Rocke, had not waſhed it off. From theſe, they muſt now bee ſanctified. As ſinne is alwayes dangerous; ſo moſt, when we bring it into Gods ſight: It enuenometh both our perſons and ſeruices, and turnes our good into euill. As therefore wee muſt be alwayes holy: ſo moſt, when we preſent our ſelues to the holy eyes of our Creator. We waſh our hands euery day; but when we are to ſit with ſome great perſon, we ſcowre them with balls. And if wee muſt be ſanctified, onely to receiue the Law, how holy muſt we be to receiue the grace promiſed in the Goſpell?

Neither muſt themſelues onely be cleanſed, but their very cloathes: Their garments ſmelt of Ægypt, euen they muſt be waſhed: Neither can cloaths be capable of ſinne, nor can water cleanſe from ſinnes: The danger was neither in their garments, nor their skin; yet they muſt bee waſhed, that they might learne by their cloathes, with what ſoules to appeare before their God. Thoſe garments muſt bee waſhed, which ſhould neuer waxe old, that now they might begin their age in purity; as thoſe which were in more danger of being foule, then bare. It is fit that our reuerence to Gods preſence ſhould appeare in our very garments; that both without and within we may be cleanly: but little would neatneſſe of veſtures auaile vs with a filthy ſoule. The God of ſpirits lookes to the inner man; and challenges the purity of that part which reſembles himſelfe: Cleanſe your hands you ſinners, and purge your hearts ye double minded.

Yet euen when they were waſhed, and ſanctified, they may not touch the Mount; not onely with their feet; but not with their eyes: The ſmoake keepes it from their eyes; the markes from their feet. Not onely men that had ſome impurity at their beſt, are reſtrained, but euen beaſts, which are not capable of any vnholineſſe. Thoſe beaſts which muſt touch his Altars, yet might not touch his hill: And if a beaſt touch it, hee muſt die: yet ſo as no hands may touch that, which had touched the Hill. Vnreaſonableneſſe might ſeeme to be an excuſe in theſe creatures: that therefore which is death to a beaſt, muſt needs be capital to them, whoſe reaſon ſhould guide them to auoid preſumption. Thoſe Iſraelits which ſaw God euery day in the pillar of fire, and the cloud, muſt not come neere him in the Mount. God loues at once familiarity and feare; Familiarity in our conuerſation, and feare in his commands. Hee loues to be acquainted with men, in the walkes of their obedience: yet he takes ſtate vpon him in his ordinances; and will be trembled at, in his word and Iudgements.

I ſee the difference of Gods cariage to men in the Law, and in the Goſpel: There the very Hil where he appeared, may not be touched of the pureſt Iſraelite; Here the hem of his garment is touched by the woman, that had the flux of blood; yea, his very face was touched with the lips of Iudas. There the very earth was prohibited them, on which he deſcended: Here, his very body and blood is profered to our touch and taſte. Oh the maruellous kindneſſe of our God! How vnthankfull are we, if we doe not acknowledge this mercy aboue his ancient people! They were his owne; yet ſtrangers, in compariſon of our libertie. It is our ſhame and ſinne, if in theſe meanes of intireneſſe, we be no better acquainted with God, then they; which in their greateſt familiaritie, were commanded a looſe.

God was euer wonderfull in his workes, and fearfull in his iudgements: but he was neuer ſo terrible in the execution of his will, as now in the promulgation of it. Here was nothing, but a maieſticall terror in the eyes, in the eares of the Iſraelites; as if God meant to ſhew them by this, how fearfull he could be. Here was the lightning darted in their eyes, the thunders roaring in their eares, the Trumpet of God drowning the thunderclaps, the voice of God out-ſpeaking the Trumpet of the Angell: The Cloud enwrapping, the ſmoake aſcending, the fire flaming, the Mount trembling, Moſes climbing and quaking, paleneſſe and death in the face of Iſrael, vproare in the elements, and all the glory of heauen turned into terrour. In the deſtruction of the firſt World, there were clouds without fire: In the deſtruction of Sodom, there was fire raining without clouds; but here was fire, ſmoake, clouds, thunder, earthquakes, and whatſoeuer might worke more aſtoniſhment, then euer was in any vengeance inflicted.

And if the Law were thus giuen, how ſhall it be required? If ſuch were the Proclamation of Gods Statutes, what ſhall the Seſſions bee? I ſee and tremble at the reſemblance. The Trumpet of the Angell called vnto the one: The voyce of an Archangell, the Trumpet of God, ſhall ſummon vs to the other. To the one Moſes (that climbed vp that Hill, and alone ſaw it) ſayes, God came with ten thouſands of his Saints; In the other, thouſand thouſands ſhall miniſter to him, and ten thouſand thouſands ſhall ſtand before him. In the one, Mount Sinai onely was on a flame; all the World ſhall bee ſo, in the other. In the one there was fire, ſmoake, thunder and lightning: In the other a fiery ſtreame ſhall iſſue from him, wherewith the heauens ſhall be diſſolued, and the Elements ſhall melt away with a noiſe. O God, how powerfull art thou to inflict vengeance vpon ſinners, who didſt thus forbid ſinne! and if thou wert ſo terrible a Law-giuer, what a Iudge ſhalt thou appeare? What ſhall become of the breakers of ſo fierie a Law? Oh where ſhall thoſe appeare, that are guilty of the tranſgreſſing that Law, whoſe very deliuery was little leſſe then death? If our God ſhould exact his Law but in the ſame rigour wherein hee gaue it, ſinne could not quite the coſt: But now the fire wherein it was deliuered, was but terrifying; the fire wherein it ſhall bee required, is conſuming. Happy are thoſe that are from vnder the terrours of that Law, which was giuen in fire, and in fire ſhall be required.

God would haue Iſrael ſee, that they had not to doe with ſome impotent Commander, that is faine to publiſh his Lawes without noyſe, in dead paper; which can more eaſily enioyne, then puniſh; or deſcry, then execute; and therefore, before hee giues them a Law, he ſhewes them that he can command Heauen, Earth, Fire, Ayre, in reuenge of the breach of the Law; That they could not but thinke it deadly to diſpleaſe ſuch a Law-giuer, or violate ſuch dreadfull ſtatutes; that they might ſee all the Elements, examples of that obedience, which they ſhould yeeld vnto their Maker.

This fire wherein the Law was giuen, is ſtill in it; and will neuer out: Hence are thoſe terrours which it flaſhes in euery conſcience, that hath felt remorſe of ſinne. Euery mans heart is a Sinai, and reſembles to him both a heauen and hell. The ſting of death is ſinne; and the ſtrength of ſinne is the Law.

That they might ſee, he could finde out their cloſeſt ſinnes, hee deliuers his Law in the light of fire, from out of the ſmoake: That they might ſee, what is due to their ſinnes, they ſee fire aboue, to repreſent the fire that ſhould be below them: That they might know he could waken their ſecuritie, the Thunder, and lowder voyce of GOD ſpeakes to their hearts. That they might ſee what their hearts ſhould doe, the Earth quakes vnder them. That they might ſee they could not ſhift their appearance, the Angels call them together. Oh royall Law, and mighty Law-giuer! How could they think of hauing any other God, that had ſuch proofes of this? How could they think of making any reſemblance of him, whom they ſaw could not be ſeene; and whom they ſaw in not being ſeene, infinite? How could they thinke of daring to prophane his Name, whom they heard to name himſelfe, with that voice, Iehouah? How could they thinke of ſtanding with him for a day, whom they ſaw to command that heauen, which makes and meaſures day? How could they thinke of diſobeying his Deputies, whom they ſaw ſo able to reuenge? How could they thinke of killing, when they were halfe dead with the feare of him, that could kill both body and ſoule? How could they thinke of the flames of luſt, that ſaw ſuch fires of vengeance? How could they thinke of ſtealing from others, that ſaw whoſe the heauen and the earth was to diſpoſe of at his pleaſure? How could they thinke of ſpeaking falſly, that heard God ſpeake in ſo fearfull a tone? How could they thinke of coueting others goods, that ſaw how weake and vncertaine right they had to their owne? Yea to vs, was this Law ſo deliuered; to vs in them: neither had there beene ſuch ſtate in the promulgation of it, if God had not intended it for Eternity. We men, that ſo feare the breach of humane Lawes, for ſome ſmall mulcts of forfeiture; how ſhould wee feare thee (O Lord) that canſt caſt body and ſoule into hell!

Of the Golden Calfe.

IT was not much aboue a moneth, ſince Iſrael made their couenant with God; ſince they trembled to heare him ſay, Thou ſhalt haue no other Gods but me; ſince they ſaw Moſes part from them, and climbe vp the Hill to God: and now they ſay, Make vs Gods, wee know not what is become of this Moſes. Oh, ye mad Iſraelites, haue ye ſo ſoon forgotten that fire, and thunder, which you heard and ſaw? Is that ſmoake vaniſhed out of your minde, as ſoone as out of your ſight? Could your hearts ceaſe to tremble with the earth? Can yee in the very ſight of Sinai, call for other Gods? And for Moſes; was it not for your ſakes, that he thruſt himſelfe into the midſt of that ſmoake and fire, which ye feared to ſee afar off? Was he not now gone after ſo many ſudden embaſſages, to be your Lieger with God? If ye had ſeene him take his heeles, and runne away from you into the wilderneſſe, what could ye haue ſaid, or done more? Behold, our better Moſes was with vs a while vpon earth: he is now aſcended into the Mount of Heauen, to mediate for vs; ſhall we now thinke of another Sauiour? Shall we not hold it our happineſſe, that he is for our ſakes aboue?

And what if your Moſes had beene gone for euer? Muſt yee therefore haue gods made? If ye had ſaid, Chooſe vs another Gouernour, it had beene a wicked and vnthankfull motion; ye were too vnworthy of a Moſes, that could ſo ſoone forget him: but to ſay, Make vs Gods, was abſurdly impious. Moſes was not your God, but your Gouernour: Neither was the preſence of God tyed to Moſes. You ſaw God ſtill, when he was gone, in his pillar, and in his Manna; and yet ye ſay, Make vs Gods: Euery word is full of ſenſeleſſe wickedneſſe. How many gods would ye haue? Or what gods are thoſe that can be made? Or (what euer the Idolatrous Ægyptians did) with what face can ye, after ſo many miraculous obligations, ſpeake of another God? Had the voice of God ſcarce done thundring in your eares? Did you ſo lately heare and ſee him to be an infinite God? Did ye quake to heare him ſay out of the midſt of the flames, I am Iehouah thy God: Thou ſhalt haue no Gods but me? Did yee acknowledge God your Maker; and doe ye now ſpeake of making of gods? If ye had ſaid, Make vs another man to goe before vs, it had beene an impoſſible ſuit. Aaron might helpe to marre you, and himſelfe; He could not make one haire of a man: and doe ye ſay, Make vs Gods? And what ſhould thoſe gods doe? Goe before you. How could they go before you, that cannot ſtand alone? your helpe makes them to ſtand, and yet they muſt conduct you. Oh the impatient ingratitude of carnall mindes! Oh the ſottiſhneſſe of Idolatry! Who would not haue ſaid, Moſes is not with vs; but he is with God for vs? He ſtayes long: He that called him, withholds him: His delay is for our ſakes, as well as his aſcent. Though we ſee him not, we will hope for him: his fauours to vs haue deſerued, not to be reiected: Or, if God will keepe him from vs, he that withholds him, can ſupply him: He that ſent him, can lead vs without him; His fire and Cloud is all-ſufficient; God hath ſaid, and done enough for vs, to make vs truſt him: We will, we can haue no other God; we care not for any other guide. But behold, here is none of this: Moſes ſtayes but ſome fiue and thirty dayes, and now he is forgotten, and is become but this Moſes: Yea, God is forgotten, with him; and, as if God and Moſes had beene loſt at once, they ſay, Make vs Gods. Naturall men muſt haue God at their bent: and if hee come not at a call, he is caſt off, and they take themſelues to their owne ſhifts: like as the Chinois whip their gods, when they anſwer them not; Whereas his holy ones wait long, and ſeeke him; and not onely in their ſinking, but from the bottome of the deepes, call vpon him; and though he kill them, will truſt in him.

Superſtition beſots the minds of men, and blinds the eye of reaſon; and firſt makes them not men, ere it makes them idolaters. How elſe could hee, that is the Image of God, fall downe to the Images of creatures? How could our forefathers haue ſo doted vpon ſtockes and ſtones, if they had beene themſelues? As the Syrians were firſt blinded and then led into the midſt of Samaria: ſo are the Idolaters firſt bereaued of their wits and common ſenſe, and afterwards are caried brutiſhly into all palpable impiety.

Who would not haue been aſhamed to heare this anſwer from the brother of Moſes, Plucke off your Earings? Hee ſhould haue ſaid, Plucke this Idolatrous thought out of your hearts: and now in ſtead of chiding he ſoothes them. And as if he had been no kin to Moſes, he helpes to lead them backe againe from God, to Ægypt. The people importuned him, perhaps with threats. Hee that had waded thorow all the menaces of Pharaoh; doth he now ſhrinke at the threats of his owne? Moſes is not afraid of the terrors of God: His faith that caried him thorow the water, led him vp to the fire of Gods preſence; whiles his brother Aaron feares the faces of thoſe men, which he lately ſaw pale with the feare of their glorious Law-giuer. As if hee that forbade other gods, could not haue maintained his owne act, and agent, againſt men. Sudden feares, when they haue poſſeſſed weake minds, lead them to ſhamefull errours. Importunitie or violence may leſſen, but they cannot excuſe a fault. Wherefore was he a Gouernor, but to depreſſe their diſordered motions? Facility of yeelding to a ſinne, or wooing it with our voluntarie ſuit, is a higher ſtayre of euill: but, euen at laſt to be won to ſinne, is damnable. It is good to reſiſt any onſet of ſinne; but one condeſcent loſes all the thankes of our oppoſition. What will it auaile a man, that others are plagued for ſolliciting him, whiles he ſmarteth for yeelding? If both bee in hell, what eaſe is it to him, that another is deeper in the pit?

What now did Aaron? Behold, he that alone was allowed to climbe vp the trembling and fiery Hill of Sinai, with Moſes, and heard God ſay, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any grauen Image, for I am a iealous God: (as if he meant particularly to preuent this act) within one moneth, cals for their earings, makes the grauen Image of a Calfe, erects an Altar, conſecrates a day to it, cals it their God, and weepes not, to ſee them dance before it. It is a miſerable thing, when Gouernours humour the people in their ſinnes; and in ſtead of making vp the breach, enlarge it. Sinne will take heart by the approbation of the meaneſt looker on; but if authoritie once ſecond it, it growes impudent. As contrarily, where the publike gouernment oppoſes euill, (though it be vnder-hand practiſed, not without feare) there is life in that ſtate.

Aaron might haue learned better counſell of his brothers example: When they came to him with ſtones in their hands, and ſaid, Giue vs water, he ranne as roundly to God, with prayers in his mouth; So ſhould Aaron haue done, when they ſaid, Giue vs gods: but he weakely runnes to their earings, that which ſhould bee made their god: not to the True God, which they had, and forſooke. Who can promiſe to himſelfe freedome from groſſe infirmities, when he that went vp into the Mount, comes down, and doth that in the valley, which he heard forbidden in the Hill?

I ſee yet, and wonder at the mercy of that God, which had iuſtly called himſelfe iealous. This very Aaron, whoſe infirmity had yeelded to ſo foule an Idolatry, is after choſen by God, to be a Prieſt to himſelfe: Hee that had ſet vp an Altar to the Calfe, muſt ſerue at the Altar of God: Hee that had melted, and carued out the Calfe for a god, muſt ſacrifice Calues and Rams, and Bullocks vnto the True God: He that conſecrated a day to the Idol, is himſelfe conſecrated to him, which was diſhonored by the Idol. The groſeſt of all ſinnes cannot preiudice the calling of God; Yea, as the light is beſt ſeene in darkneſſe, the mercy of God is moſt magnified in our vnworthineſſe.

What a difference God puts betweene perſons, and ſinnes! While ſo many thouſand Iſraelites were ſlaine, that had ſtomackfully deſired the Idol; Aaron that in weakneſſe condeſcended, is both pardoned the fact, and afterwards laden with honour from God. Let no man take heart to ſinne, from mercy: He that can purpoſe to ſinne vpon the knowledge of Gods mercy, in the remiſſion of infirmities, preſumes, and makes himſelfe a wilfull offender. It is no comfort to the wilfull, that there is remiſſion to the weake and penitent.

The earings are pluckt off; Ægyptian iewels are fit for any idolatrous vſe. This very gold was contagious. It had been better the Iſraelites had neuer borrowed theſe ornaments, then that they ſhould pay them back to the Idolatry of their firſt owners. What coſt the ſuperſtitious Iſraelites are content to be at for this lewd deuotion! The riches, and pride of their outward habite, are they willing to part with, to their molten god; as glad to haue their eares bare that they might fill their eyes. No gold is too deare, for their Idol; each man is content to ſpoyle their wiues and children, of that whereof they ſpoyled the Ægyptians.

Where are thoſe worldlings, that cannot abide to be at any coſt for their Religion; which could be content to doe God chargeleſſe ſeruice? Theſe very Iſraelites that were ready to giue Gold, not out of their purſes, but from their very eares to miſ-deuotion, ſhall once condemne them. O Sacriledge ſucceeding to Superſtition! Of old they were ready to giue gold to the falſe ſeruice of God; we, to take away gold from the true: How doe we ſee men prodigall to their luſts and ambitions, and we hate not to be niggards to God!

This gold is now growne to a Calfe; Let no man thinke that forme came forth caſually out of the melted earerings: This ſhape was intẽded by the Iſraelites, and perfected by Aaron: they brought this god in their hearts with them out of Ægypt, and now they ſet it vp in their eyes. Still doth Ægypt hurt them: Seruitude was the leaſt euill, that Iſrael receiues from Ægypt; for that ſent them ſtill to the True God, but this Idolatrous example led them to a falſe. The very ſight of euill is dangerous: and it is hard for the heart not to runne into thoſe ſinnes, to which the eye and eare is inured: Not out of loue, but cuſtome, we fall into ſome offences.

The Iſraelites wrought ſo long in the furnaces of the Ægyptian bricke, that they haue brought forth a molten Calfe. The blacke Calfe with the white ſpots, which they ſaw worſhipped in Ægypt, hath ſtollen their hearts: And they, which before would haue beene at the Ægyptian fleſh pots, would now be at their deuotions. How many haue falne into a faſhion of ſwearing, ſcoffing, drinking, out of the vſuall practiſe of others; as thoſe that liue in an ill ayre, are infected with diſeaſes! A man may paſſe thorow Æthiopia vnchanged: but he cannot dwell there, and not bee diſcoloured.

Their ſin was bad enough, let not our vncharitableneſſe make it worſe: No man may thinke they haue ſo put off humanity, and ſenſe, with their Religion, as to thinke that Calfe a god; or that this Idoll, which they ſaw yeſterday made, did bring them out of Ægypt, three moneths agoe. This were to make them more beaſts then that Calfe, which this Image repreſented: Or if they ſhould haue been ſo inſenſate, can we thinke, that Aaron could be thus deſperately mad? The Image and the Holy-day were both to one Deity: To morrow is the Holy-day of the Lord your God. It was the true God they meant to worſhip in the Calfe: and yet at beſt this Idolatry is ſhamefull. It is no maruell if this foule ſinne ſeekes pretences; yet no excuſe can hide the ſhame of ſuch a face. Gods iealouſie is not ſtirred onely by the riuality of a falſe God; but of a falſe worſhip: nothing is more dangerous, then to mint Gods ſeruice in our owne braine.

God ſends downe Moſes to remedy this ſinne. He could as eaſily haue preuented, as redreſſed it. He knew ere Moſes came vp, what Iſrael would doe ere he came downe: like as he knew, the two Tables would be broken, ere he gaue them. God moſt wiſely permits, and ordaines ſinne to his owne ends, without our excuſe: And though hee could eaſily by his owne hands remedy euils; yet he will doe it by meanes, both ordinary, and ſubordinate. It is not for vs to looke for any immediate redreſſe from God, when we haue a Moſes; by whom it may bee wrought: Since God himſelfe expects this from man, why ſhould man expect it from God?

Now might Moſes haue found a time to haue been euen with Iſrael for all their vnthankfulneſſe, and mutinous inſurrections; Let me alone: I will conſume them, and make thee a mighty Nation. Moſes ſhould not neede to ſollicite God for reuenge; God ſollicits him, in a ſort, for leaue to reuēge. Who would look for ſuch a word from God to Man, Let me alone? As yet Moſes had ſaid nothing; Before hee opens his mouth, God preuents his importunitie as fore-ſeeing that holy violence, which the requeſts of Moſes would offer to him. Moſes ſtood trembling before the Maieſtie of his Maker; and yet heares him ſay, Let me alone. The mercy of our God hath, as it were, obliged his power, to the faith of men: The feruent prayers of the faithfull, hold the hands of the Almighty. As I finde it ſaid afterwards of Chriſt, That hee could doe no miracles there, becauſe of their vnbeliefe: So now, I heare God (as if he could not doe execution vpon Iſrael, becauſe of Moſes's faith) ſay, Let me alone, that I may conſume them.

We all naturally affect propriety, and like our owne ſo much better, as it is freer from parteners. Euery one would be glad to ſay, with that proud one, I am, and there is none beſide me: ſo much the more ſweetly would this meſſage haue ſounded to nature, I will conſume them, and make of thee a mighty Nation: How many indeauour that (not without danger of curſes and vproare) which was voluntarily tendred vnto Moſes! Whence are our depopulations, and incloſures, but for that men cannot abide either fellowes, or neighbours? But how gratiouſly doth Moſes ſtriue with God, againſt his owne preferment? If God had threatned, I will conſume thee, and make of them a mighty Nation: I doubt whether he could haue beene more moued. The more a man can leaue himſelfe behinde him, and aſpire to a care of communitie, the more ſpirituall he is. Nothing makes a man ſo good a patriot, as Religion.

Oh the ſweet diſpoſition of Moſes; fit for him that ſhould bee familiar with God! He ſaw they could be content to be merry, and happy without him; he would not be happy without them. They had profeſſed to haue forgoten him: he ſlacks not to ſue for them. He that will euer hope for good himſelfe, muſt returne good for euill vnto others.

Yet was it not Iſrael ſo much that Moſes reſpected, as God in Iſrael. Hee was thrifty and iealous for his Maker; and would not haue him loſe the glory of his mighty deliuerances; nor would abide a pretence for any Ægyptian dogge, to barke againſt the powerfull worke of God; Wherefore ſhall the Ægyptians ſay? If Iſrael could haue periſhed without diſhonor to God, perhaps his hatred to their Idolatry, would haue ouercome his naturall loue, and he had let God alone. Now ſo tender is he ouer the name of God, that he would rather haue Iſrael ſcape with a ſin, then Gods glory ſhould be blemiſhed in the opinions of men, by a iuſt iudgement. He ſaw that the eyes and tongues of all the world were intent vpon Iſrael; a people ſo miraculouſly fetcht from Ægypt, whom the Sea gaue way to; whom heauen fed; whom the Rocke watred; whom the fire and cloud guarded, which heard the audible voyce of God. Hee knew withall, how readie the world would be to miſconſtrue, and how the Heathens would bee ready to caſt imputations of leuity, or impotence vpon God; and therefore ſayes, What will the Ægyptians ſay? Happy is that man which can make Gods glory the ſcope of all his actions, and deſires; neither cares for his owne wel-fare, nor feares the miſeries of others, but with reſpect to God, in both. If God had not giuen Moſes this care of his glory, he could not haue had it: and now his goodneſſe takes it ſo kindly, as if himſelfe had receiued a fauour from his creature; and for a reward of the grace hee had wrought, promiſes not to doe that which he threatned. But what needs God to care for the ſpeech of the Ægyptians, men, Infidels? And if they had beene good yet their cenſure ſhould haue bin vniuſt. Shall God care for the tongues of men; the holy God, for the tongues of Infidels? The very Iſraelites, now they were from vnder the hands of Ægypt, cared not for their words; and ſhall the God of Heauen regard that which is not worth the regard of men? Their tongues could not walke againſt God, but from himſelfe; and if it could haue beene the worſe for him; would hee haue permitted it? But, O God, how dainty art thou of thine honour, that thou canſt not endure the worſt of men ſhould haue any colour to taint it! What doe wee men ſtand vpon our iuſtice and innocence, with neglect of all vniuſt cenſures; when that infinite God, whom no cenſures can reach, will not abide, that the very Ægyptians ſhould falſely taxe his power and mercy? Wiſe men muſt care, not onely to deſerue well but to heare well, and to wipe off, not onely, crimes but cenſures.

There was neuer ſo precious a Monument, as the Tables written with Gods owne hand. If we ſee but the ſtone which Iacobs head reſted on; or, on which the foot of Chriſt did once tread, wee looke vpon it with more then ordinarie reſpect: With what eye ſhould wee haue beheld this ſtone, which was hewed, and written with the finger of God! Any manu-ſcript ſcroll written by the hand of a famous man, is laid vp amongſt our iewels; What place then ſhould wee haue giuen to the hand-writing of the Almighty!

That which hee hath dictated to his ſeruants the Prophets, challenges iuſt honour from vs; how doth that deſerue veneration, which his owne hand wrote immediately! Propheſies and Euangelicall diſcourſes he hath written by others, neuer did hee write any thing himſelfe, but theſe Tables of the Law: neither did he euer ſpeake any thing audibly to whole mankinde, but it; The hand, the ſtone, the Law, were all his. By how much more precious this Record was, by ſo much was the fault greater, of defacing it. What King holds it leſſe then rebellion, to teare his writing, and blemiſh his Seale? At the firſt, he ingraued his Image in the table of mans heart; Adam blurred the Image, but (through Gods mercy) ſaued the Tablet. Now hee writes his will in the Tables of ſtone, Moſes breaks the Tables, and defaced the writing: if they had been giuen him for himſelfe, the Author, the matter had deſerued, that as they were written in ſtone, for permanency; So they ſhould be kept for euer: and as they were euerlaſting in vſe, ſo they ſhould be in preſeruation. Had they beene written in clay, they could but haue beene broken: But now they were giuen for all Iſrael, for all mankinde. He was but the meſſenger, not the owner, Howſoeuer therefore, Iſrael had deſerued, by breaking this Couenant with God, to haue this Monument of Gods Couenant with them, broken by the ſame hand that wrote it: yet how durſt Moſes thus careleſly caſt away the Treaſure of all the world; and by his hands vndoe that, which was with ſuch coſt and care done by his Creator? How durſt hee faile the truſt of that God, whoſe pledge he receiued with awe, and reuerence? He that expoſtulated with God, to haue Iſrael liue and proſper, why would he deface the rule of their life, in the keeping whereof they ſhould proſper? I ſee, that forty dayes talke with God cannot bereaue a man of paſſionate infirmity: Hee that was the meekeſt vpon earth, in a ſudden indignation abandons that, which in cold blood hee would haue held faſter then his life: He forgets the Law written, when hee ſaw it broken; His zeale for God hath tranſported him from himſelfe, and his duty to the charge of God: Hee more hates the Golden Calfe, wherein hee ſaw ingrauen the Idolatry of Iſrael, then he honoured the Tables of ſtone, wherein God had ingrauen his Commandements; and more longed to deface the Idol, then he cared to preſerue the Tables. Yet that God, which ſo ſharpely reuenged the breach of one Law, vpon the Iſraelites, checks not Moſes for breaking both the Tables of the Law. The Law of God is ſpirituall; the internall breach of one Law, is ſo hainous, that in compariſon of it, God ſcarce counts the breaking of the outward Tables, a breach of the Law. The goodneſſe of God winks at the errours of honeſt zeale, and ſo loues the ſtrength of good affections, that it paſſeth ouer their infirmities: How highly God doth eſteeme a well gouerned zeale; when his mercy crownes it with all the faults!

The Tables had not offended: the Calfe had, and Iſrael in it. Moſes takes reuenge on both: He burnes and ſtamps the Calfe to powder, and giues it Iſrael to drinke; that they might haue it in their guts, in ſtead of their eyes: How hee haſteth to deſtroy the Idol, wherein they ſinned! that, as an Idol is nothing, ſo it might bee brought to nothing; and Atomes and duſt is neareſt to nothing: that in ſtead of going before Iſrael, it might paſſe thorow them; ſo as the next day they might finde their god in their excrements; To the iuſt ſhame of Iſrael, when they ſhould ſee their new god cannot defend himſelfe, from being either nothing, or worſe.

Who can but wonder, to ſee a multitude of ſo many hundred thouſands (when Moſes came running downe the Hill) to turne their eyes from their god, to him; And on a ſudden, in ſtead of worſhipping their Idol, to batter it in pieces, in the very height of the noueltie? In ſtead of building Altars, and kindling fires to it, to kindle an hotter fire, then that, wherewith it was melted, to conſume it? In ſtead of dancing before it, to abhorre and deface it; in ſtead of ſinging, to weepe before it? There was neuer a more ſtiffe-necked people: Yet I doe not heare any one man of them ſay, He is but one man; We are many; how eaſily may we deſtroy him, rather then hee our god? If his brother durſt not reſiſt our motion in making it: Why will we ſuffer him to dare reſiſt the keeping of it? It is our act, and we will maintaine it. Here was none of this; but an humble obayſance to the baſeſt and bloodieſt reuenge that Moſes ſhall impoſe. God hath ſet ſuch an impreſſion of Maieſtie in the face of lawfull authoritie, that wickedneſſe is confounded in it ſelfe, to behold it. If from hence viſible powers where not more feared, then the inuiſible God, the world would be ouer-run with out-rage. Sinne hath a guiltineſſe in it ſelfe, that when it is ſeaſonably checked, it puls in his head, and ſeekes rather an hiding place, then a fort.

The Idol is not capable of a further reuenge: It is not enough, vnleſſe the Idolaters ſmart: The gold was good, if the Iſraelites had not beene euill: So great a ſinne cannot be expiated without blood. Behold, that meeke ſpirit, which in his plea with God, would rather periſh himſelfe, then Iſrael ſhould periſh, armes the Leuites againſt their brethren, and reioyces to ſee thouſands of the Iſraelites bleed, and bleſſes their executioners.

It was the mercy of Moſes that made him cruell: He had beene cruell to all, if ſome had not found him cruell. They are mercileſſe hands, which are not ſometimes imbrued in blood: There is no leſſe charitie, then iuſtice, in puniſhing ſinners with death; God delights no leſſe in a killing mercy, then in a pitifull iuſtice: Some tender hearts would be ready to cenſure the rigour of Moſes. Might not Iſrael haue repented and liued? Or if they muſt dye, muſt their brethrens hand be vpon them? Or, if their throats muſt be cut by their brethren, ſhall it bee done in the very heat of their ſinne? But they muſt learne a difference betwixt pity, and fondneſſe; mercy, and vniuſtice. Moſes had an heart as ſoft as theirs, but more hot; as pitifull, but wiſer. He was a good Phyſitian, and ſaw that Iſrael could not liue, vnleſſe he bled: hee therefore lets out this corrupt blood, to ſaue the whole body. There cannot bee a better ſacrifice to God, then the blood of Malefactors: and this firſt ſacrifice ſo pleaſed God in the hands of the Leuites, that he would haue none but them ſacrifice to him for euer. The blood of the Idolatrous Iſraelites cleared that Tribe from the blood of the innocent Sichemites.

THE SIXTH BOOKE.

Of the Vaile of MOSES.

IT is a wonder, that neither Moſes nor any Iſraelite gathered vp the ſhiuers of the former Tables: Euery ſheard of that ſtone, and euery letter of that writing had beene a Relike worth laying vp: but he well ſaw how headlong the people were to Superſtition; and how vnſafe it were, to feed that diſpoſition in them.

The ſame zeale that burnt the Calfe to aſhes, concealed the ruines of this Monument. Holy things, beſides their vſe, challenge no further reſpect. The breaking of the Tables did as good as blot out all the Writings defaced, left no vertue in the ſtone, no reuerence to it.

If God had not beene friends with Iſrael, he had not renewed his Law. As the Iſraelites were wilfully blind, if they did not ſee Gods anger in the Tables broken: ſo could they not but hold it a good ſigne of grace, that God gaue them his Teſtimonies.

There was nothing wherein Iſrael out-ſtripped all the reſt of the world more, then in this priuiledge; the pledge of his Couenant, the Law written with Gods owne hand. Oh what a fauour then is it, where God beſtowes his Goſpell vpon any Nation? That was but a killing letter: this is the power of God to ſaluation.

Neuer is God throughly diſpleaſed with any people, where that continues. For, like as thoſe which purpoſed loue, when they fall off, call for their tokens back againe; So when God begins once perfectly to miſlike, the firſt thing hee with-drawes, is his Goſpell.

Iſrael recouers this fauour, but with an abatement; Hew thee two Tables. God made the firſt Tables: The matter, the forme, was his; now Moſes muſt hew the next: As God created the firſt man after his owne Image; but, that once defaced, Adam begat Cain after his owne; Or as the firſt Temple razed, a ſecond was built; yet ſo far ſhort, that the Iſraelites wept at the ſight of it. The firſt workes of God are ſtill the pureſt: thoſe that he ſecondarily works by vs decline in their perfection. It was reaſon, that though God had forgotten Iſrael, they ſhould ſtill finde they had ſinned. They might ſee the footſteps of diſpleaſure, in the differences of the Agent.

When God had told Moſes before, I will not goe before Iſrael, but my Angell ſhall lead lead them; Moſes ſo noted the difference, that he reſted not till God himſelfe vndertooke their conduct: So might the Iſraelites haue noted ſome remainders of offence, whiles in ſtead of that which his owne hand did formerly make, hee ſaith now, Hew thee; And yet theſe ſecond Tables are kept reuerently in the Arke, when the other lay mouldred in ſhiuers vpon Sinai; like as the repaired Image of God in our Regeneration is preſerued, perfited, and layd vp at laſt, ſafe in Heauen; whereas the firſt Image of our created innocence is quite defaced; ſo the ſecond Temple had the glory of Chriſts exhibition, though meaner in frame. The mercifull reſpects of God are not tyed to glorious out-ſides; or the inward worthineſſe of things or perſons: Hee hath choſen the weake and ſimple, to confound the wiſe and mighty.

Yet God did this worke by Moſes, Moſes hewed and God wrote: Our true Moſes repaires that Law of God which we in our nature had broken; He reuiues it for vs, and it is accepted of God, no leſſe then if the firſt Characters of his Law had been ſtill entyre. We can giue nothing, but the Table: it is God that muſt write in it. Our hearts are but a bare boord, till God by his finger ingraue his Law in them; Yea, Lord, wee are a rough Quarry; hew thou vs out, and ſquare vs fit for thee to write vpon.

Well may wee maruell, to ſee Moſes, after this ouerſight, admitted to this charge againe: Who of vs would not haue ſayd, Your care indeed deſerues truſt; you did ſo carefully keep the firſt Tables, that it would doe well to truſt you with ſuch another burden.

It was good for Moſes, that hee had to doe with God, not with men: The God of mercy will not impute the ſlips of our infirmitie, to the preiudice of our faithfulneſſe. He that after the miſ-anſwere of the one Talent, would not truſt the euill ſeruant with a ſecond, becauſe he ſaw a wilfull neglect; will truſt Moſes with his ſecond Law, becauſe he ſaw fidelitie in the worſt error of his zeale. Our charity muſt learne as to forgiue, ſo to beleeue where we haue beene deceiued: Not that we ſhould wilfully beguile our ſelues in an vniuſt credulitie, but that we ſhould ſearch diligently into the diſpoſition of perſons, and grounds of their actions; perhaps none may bee ſo ſure as they that haue once diſappointed vs. Yea Moſes brake the firſt; therefore hee muſt hew the ſecond: If God had broken them, he would haue repaired them; The amends muſt be where the fault was. Both God, and his Church, looke for a ſatisfaction, in that wherein we haue offended:

It was not long ſince Moſes his former faſt of forty dayes: When he then came downe from the hill, his firſt queſtion was not for meat: and now going vp againe to Sinai, he takes not any repaſt with him: That God which ſent the Quailes to the Hoſt of Iſrael, and Manna from Heauen, could haue fed him with dainties: He goes vp confidently in a ſecure truſt of Gods prouiſion. There is no life to that of faith; Man liues not by bread only: The Viſion of God did not onely ſatiate, but feaſt him. What a bleſſed ſatiety ſhall there be, when we ſhall ſee him as he is; and he ſhall be all in all to vs; ſince this very fraile mortalitie of Moſes was ſuſtained, and comforted, but with repreſentations of his preſence!

I ſee Moſes the Receiuer of the Law, Elias the Reſtorer of the Law, Chriſt the fulfiller of the old Law, and Author of the new, all faſting forty daies: and theſe three great faſters I finde together glorious in mount Tabor. Abſtinence merits not; For Religion conſiſts not in the belly, either full, or empty: What are meates, or drinkes, to the Kingdome of God, which is like himſelfe, ſpirituall? But it prepares beſt for good duties. Full bellies are fitter for reſt: not the bodie, ſo much as the ſoule, is more actiue with emptineſſe; Hence, ſolemne prayer takes euer faſting to attend it, and ſo much the rather ſpeeds in Heauen, when it is ſo accompanied. It is good ſo to dyet the body, that the ſoule may be fatned.

When Moſes came downe before, his eyes ſparkled with anger; and his face was both interchangeable pale, and red with indignation: now it is bright with glory. Before there were the flames of fury in it: now the beames of Maieſtie. Moſes had before ſpoken with God; why did not his face ſhine before? I cannot lay the cauſe vpon the inward trouble of his paſsions, for this brightneſſe was externall. Whither ſhall wee impute it, but to his more intyreneſſe with God.

The more familiar acquaintance we haue with God, the more doe wee partake of him. He that paſſes by the fire, may haue ſome gleames of heat: but he that ſtands by it, hath his colour changed. It is not poſſible a man ſhould haue any long conference with God, and be no whit affected. Wee are ſtrangers from God, it is no wonder if our faces be earthly; but he that ſets himſelfe apart to God, ſhall finde a kinde of Maieſtie, and awfull reſpect put vpon him, in the mindes of others.

How did the heart of Moſes ſhine with illumination, when his face was thus lightſome! And if the fleſh of Moſes in this baſe compoſition, ſo ſhined by conuerſing with God forty dayes in Sinai; What ſhall our glory bee, when clothed with incorruptible bodies, we ſhall conuerſe with him in the higheſt heauens?

Now his face onely ſhone: afterwards the three Diſciples ſaw all his body ſhining: The nature of a glorified body, the clearer Viſion, the immediate preſence of that fountaine of glory, challenge a far greater reſplendence to our faces, then his. O God, we are content that our faces be blemiſhed a while with contempt, and blubred with teares; how can wee but ſhine with Moſes, when wee ſhall ſee thee more then Moſes!

The brightneſſe of Moſes's face reflected not vpon his owne eyes; He ſhone bright, and knew not of it: He ſaw Gods face glorious, hee did not thinke others had ſo ſeene his. How many haue excellent graces, and perceiue them not! Our owne ſenſe is an ill iudge of Gods fauours to vs; Thoſe that ſtand by, can conuince vs in that which wee deny to our ſelues. Here below, it is enough if we can ſhine in the eies of others; aboue, we ſhall ſhine and know it. At this inſtant Moſes ſees himſelfe ſhine: then he needed not. God meant not that he ſhould more eſteeme himſelfe, but that hee ſhould be more honoured of the Iſraelites: That other glory ſhall bee for our owne happineſſe, and therefore requires our knowledge.

They that did but ſtand ſtill, to ſee anger in his face; ranne away to ſee glory in it: Before, they had deſired that God would not ſpeake to them any more but by Moſes; and now, that God doth but looke vpon them in Moſes, they are afraid; and yet there was not more difference betwixt the voices, then the faces of God and Moſes. This ſhould haue drawne Iſrael to Moſes ſo much the more, to haue ſeene this impreſſion of Diuinity in his face.

That which ſhould haue comforted, affrights them: Yea, Aaron himſelfe, that before went vp into the Mount to ſee and ſpeake with God, now is afraid to ſee him that had ſeene God: Such a feare there is in guiltineſſe, ſuch confidence in innocency. When the ſoule is once cleared from ſinne, it ſhall run to that glory with ioy, the leaſt glimpſe whereof now appales it, and ſends it away in terror. How could the Iſraelites now chuſe but thinke; How ſhall wee abide to looke God in the face, ſince our eyes are dazeled with the face of Moſes! And well may we ſtill argue, If the image of God, which he hath ſet in the fleſhly forehead of authority, dant vs; how ſhall wee ſtand before the dreadfull Tribunall of Heauen!

Moſes maruels to ſee Iſrael run away from their Guide, as from their Enemie; and lookes backe to ſee if he could diſcerne any new cauſe of feare; and not conceiuing how his myld face could affray them, cals them to ſtay and retyre.

Oh my people, whom doe you flee? It is for your ſakes, that I aſcended, ſtaid, came downe: Behold here are no armed Leuites to ſtrike you, no Amalekites, no Ægyptians to purſue you, no fires and thunders to diſmay you. I haue not that rod of God in my hand, which you haue ſeene to command the Elements: or if I had; ſo farre am I from purpoſing any rigour againſt you, that I now lately haue appeaſed God towards you; and lo here the pledges of his reconciliation. God ſends me to you for good; and doe you run from your beſt friend? Whither will ye go from me; or without me? Stay and heare the charge of that God, from whom ye cannot flee.

They perceiue his voice the ſame, though his face were changed, and are perſwaded to ſtay, and returne and heare him, whom they dare not ſee; and now after many doubtfull paces, approching neerer, dare tell him he was growne too glorious.

Good Moſes, finding that they durſt not looke vpon the Sunne of his face, clouds it with a vayle: Chooſing rather to hide the worke of God in him, then to want opportunity of reuealing Gods will to his people. I doe not heare him ſtand vpon termes of reputation; if there be glory in my face, God put it there; he would not haue placed it ſo conſpicuouſly, if he had meant it ſhould be hid: Hide ye your faces rather, which are blemiſhed with your ſinne; and looke not that I ſhould wrong God and my ſelfe, to ſeeme leſſe happy, in fauor of your weakeneſſe. But without all ſelfe reſpects, he modeſtly hides his glorified face; & cares not their eyes ſhould pierce ſo far, as to his skin, on condition, that his words may pierce into their eares. It is good for a man ſometimes to hide his graces; Some Talents are beſt improoued by being layd vp: Moſes had more glory by his Vaile, then by his face. Chriſtian modeſty teaches a wiſe man, not to expoſe himſelfe to the faireſt ſhew, and to liue at the vtmoſt pitch of his ſtrength.

There is many a rich ſtone layd vp in the bowels of the Earth; many a fayre Pearle layd vp in the boſome of the Sea, that neuer was ſeene, nor neuer ſhall bee. There is many a goodly Starre, which becauſe of height comes not within our account. How did our true Moſes, with the Vaile of his fleſh, hide the glory of his Diety, and put on vileneſſe, beſides the laying aſide of Maieſty: and ſhut vp his great and Diuine Miracles, with, See you tell no man! How farre are thoſe ſpirits from this, which care only to be ſeene; and wiſh onely to dazle others eyes with admiration, not caring for vnknowne Riches? But thoſe yet more, which deſire to ſeeme aboue themſelues, whether in parts, or graces; whoſe Vaile is fairer then their skinne. Modeſt faces ſhall ſhine through their Vailes, when the vain glorious ſhall bewray their ſhame through their couering.

That God which gaue his Law in ſmoke, deliuered it againe, through the Vaile of Moſes. Iſrael could not looke to the end of that, which ſhould be aboliſhed; for the ſame cauſe had God a Vayle vpon his face, which hid his preſence in the Holy of Holies. Now as the Vayle of God did rend, when he ſaid, It is finiſhed; ſo the Vayle of Moſes then pulled off, wee cleerely ſee Chriſt, the end of the Law. Our Ioſhua that ſucceeded Moſes, ſpeakes to vs bare-faced: what a ſhame is it there ſhould be a Vayle vpon our hearts, when there is none on his face?

When Moſes went to ſpeake with God, he pulled off his Vayle: It was good reaſon hee ſhould preſent to God that face which hee had made. There had beene more need of his Vayle, to hide the glorious face of God from him, then to hide his from God: but his faith and thankfulneſſe ſerue for both theſe vſes. Hypocrites are contrary to Moſes: he ſhewed his worſt to men, his beſt to God; they ſhew their beſt to men, their worſt to God: but God ſees both their Vayle and their face: and I know not whether he hates their vaile of diſſimulation, or their face of wickedneſſe.

Of NADAB and ABIHV.

THat God, which ſhewed himſelfe to men in fire when hee deliuered his Law, would haue men preſent their Sacrifices to him in fire: and this fire hee would haue his owne, that there might be a iuſt circulation in this creature, as the water ſends vp thoſe vapours, which it receiues downe againe in raine. Hereupon it was, that fire came downe from God vnto the Altar: That as the charge of the Sacrifice was deliuered in fire and ſmoake, ſo God might ſignifie the acceptation of it, in the like faſhion, wherein it was commanded. The Baalites might lay ready their Bullocke vpon the wood, and water in their Trench: but they might ſooner fetch the blood out of their bodies, and deſtroy themſelues, then one flaſh out of Heauen to conſume the Sacrifice.

That Deuill which can fetch downe fire from Heauen, either maliciouſly or to no purpoſe; (although he abound with fire, and did as feruently deſire this fire in emulation to God, as euer he deſired mitigation of his owne) yet now, hee could no more kindle a fire for the Idolatrous Sacrifice, then quench the flames of his owne torment. Herein God approues himſelfe onely worthy to be ſacrificed vnto, that he creates the fire of his owne ſeruice; whereas the impotent Idols of the Heathen muſt fetch fire from their neighbours Kitchen, and themſelues are fit matter for their borrowed fire.

The Iſraelites (that were led too much with ſenſe) if they had ſeene the Bullocke conſumed with a fire fetch from a common hearth, could neuer haue acknowledged what relation the Sacrifice had to God; had neuer perceiued that God tooke notice of the Sacrifice: but now they ſee the fire comming out from the preſence of God, they are conuinced both of the power and acceptation of the Almightie; They are at once amazed, and ſatisfied to ſee the ſame God anſwere by fire, which before had ſpoken by fire: God doth not leſſe approue our Euangelicall Sacrifices, then theirs vnder the Law; but as our Sacrifices are ſpirituall, ſo are the ſignes of his acceptation; Faith is our guide, as Senſe was theirs. Yea euen ſtill doth God teſtifie his approbation by ſenſible euidences: when by a liuely faith, and feruent zeale, our hearts are conſecrated to God, then doth this heauenly fire come down vpon our Sacrifices, then are they holy, liuing, acceptable.

This flame, that God kindled, was not as ſome momentany bonefire, for a ſudden and ſhort triumph, nor as a domeſticall fire, to goe out with the day; but is giuen for a perpetuity, and neither muſt dye, nor be quenched. God, as he is himſelfe eternall, ſo he loues permanency and conſtancy of grace in vs: If wee bee but a flaſh and away, God regards vs not; all promiſes are to perſeuerance. Sure, it is but an elementary fire, that goes out, that which is celeſtiall, continues: it was but ſome preſumptuous heat in vs that decayes vpon euery occaſion.

But he that miraculouſly ſent down this fire, at firſt, will not renew the miracle euery day, by a like ſupply; It began immediately from God, it muſt bee nouriſhed by meanes. Fuell muſt maintaine that fire, which came from Heauen; God will not worke miracles euery day: if he haue kindled his Spirit in vs, we may not expect he ſhall euery day begin againe; wee haue the fuell of the Word and Sacraments, Prayers, and Meditations, which muſt keepe it in for euer. It is from God that theſe helps can nouriſh his graces in vs; like as euery flame of our materiall fire hath a concourſe of prouidence; but we may not expect new infuſions: rather know, that God expects of vs an improuement of thoſe habituall graces we haue receiued.

Whiles the people with feare and ioy ſee God lighting his owne fire, fire from heauen, the two ſonnes of Aaron, in a careleſſe preſumption, will bee ſeruing him with a common flame; As if he might not haue leaue to chooſe the formes of his owne worſhip. If this had beene done ſome ages after, when the memory of the originall of this heauenly fire had beene worne out, it might haue beene excuſed with ignorance; but now, when God had newly ſent his fire from aboue, newly commanded the continuance of it; either to let it goe out, or whiles it ſtill flamed, to fetch prophane coales to Gods Altar, could ſauour of no leſſe then preſumption, and Sacriledge: when wee bring zeale without knowledge, miſconceits of faith, carnall affections, the deuices of our Wil-worſhip, ſuperſtitious Deuotions into Gods Seruice; we bring common fire to his Altar; theſe flames were neuer of his kindling; Hee hates both Altar, Fire, Prieſt and Sacrifice. And now behold, the ſame fire which conſumed the Sacrifice before, conſumes the Sacrificers. It was the ſigne of his acceptation, in conſuming the beaſt; but whiles it deſtroyed men, the fearfull ſigne of his diſpleaſure. By the ſame meanes can God bewray both loue and hatred. Wee would haue pleaded for Nadab and Abihu; They are but yong men, the ſonnes of Aaron, not yet warme in their Function; let both age, and blood, and inexperience excuſe them, as yet. No pretences, no priuiledges can beare off a ſinne with God: Men thinke either to patronize, or mitigate euils, by their fained reaſons. That no man may hope the plea either of birth, or of youth, or of the firſt commiſſion of euill may challenge pardon; I ſee heere yong men, ſonnes of the Ruler of Iſrael, for the firſt offence ſtrooke dead.

Yea, this made God the more to ſtomacke, and the rather to reuenge this impietie, becauſe the Sonnes of Aaron did it. God had both pardoned and graced their Father, he had honoured them, of the thouſands of Iſrael, culling them out for his Altar; and now, as their Father ſet vp a falſe god, ſo they bring falſe fire vnto the True God.

If the ſonnes of Infidels liue godleſſely, they doe their kinde; their puniſhment ſhall bee, (though iuſt) yet leſſe: but if the children of religious Parents, after all Chriſtian nurture, ſhall ſhame their Education; God takes it more hainouſly, and reuenges it more ſharply. The more bonds of duty, the more plagues of neglect.

It from the Agents, wee looke to the act it ſelfe; ſet aſide the originall deſcent, and what difference was there betwixt theſe fires? Both lookt alike, heated alike, aſcended alike, conſumed alike: both were fed with the ſame materiall wood, both vaniſhed into ſmoke; There was no difference, but the Commandement of God.

If God had inioyned ordinarie fire, they had ſinned to looke for celeſtiall: now he commanded onely the fire which he ſent; they ſinned in ſending vp Incenſe, in that fire, which he commanded not. It is a dangerous thing in the ſeruice of God to decline from his owne inſtitutions; wee haue to doe with a power which is wiſe to preſcribe his owne worſhip, iuſt to require what he hath preſcribed, powerfull to reuenge that which he hath not required.

If God had ſtrooke them with ſome Leproſie in their forehead, as he did their Aunt Miriam, ſoon after, or with ſome palſie, or lingring conſumption, the puniſhment had beene grieuous: but he, whoſe iudgements are euer iuſt, ſometimes ſecret, ſaw fire the fitteſt reuenge, for a ſinne of fire; his owne fire fitteſt to puniſh ſtrange fire; A ſudden iudgment, fit for a preſent and exemplarie ſinne; He ſaw, that if he had winkt at this, his ſeruice had been oppoſed to prophanation.

It is wiſedome in gouernours to take ſinne at the firſt bound; and ſo to reuenge it, that their puniſhments may bee preuentions. Speed of death is not alwayes a iudgement: ſuddenneſſe as it is euer iuſtly ſuſpicable; ſo then certainly argues anger, when it finds vs in an act of ſinne. Leaſure of repentance is an argument of fauour: when God giues a man Law, it implyes that he would not haue iudgment ſurprize him.

Doubtleſſe, Aaron lookt ſomewhat heauily on this ſad ſpectacle; It could not but appale him, to ſee his two ſonnes dead before him, dead in diſpleaſure, dead ſuddenly, dead by the immediate hand of God. And now hee could repent him of his new honour, to ſee it ſucceed ſo ill with the ſonnes of his loynes: neither could he chuſe but ſee himſelfe ſtriken in them. But his Brother Moſes that had learned not to know either Nephewes, or Brother, when they ſtood in his way to God, wiſely turned his eyes from the dead carkaſſes of his Sonnes, to his reſpect of the liuing God; My Brother, this euent is fearfull, but iuſt; Theſe were thy ſonnes, but they ſinned; it was not for God, it is not for thee, to looke ſo much who they were, as what they did. It was their honour and thine, that they were choſen to miniſter before the Lord: He that called them, iuſtly required their Sanctification & obedience. If they haue profaned God, and themſelues; can thy naturall affection ſo miſcary thee, that thou couldeſt wiſh their impunity with the blemiſh of thy Maker? Our ſonnes are not ours, if they diſobey our Father: to pittie their miſery, is to partake of their ſinnes; If thou grudge at their iudgement, take heed leſt the ſame fire of God come forth vpon this ſtrange fire of nature. Shew now whether thou more loueſt God, or thy ſonnes; Shew whether thou be a better Father, or a Sonne.

Aaron, weighing theſe things, holds his peace, not out of an amazement, or ſullenneſſe, but out of patient and humble ſubmiſſion; and ſeeing Gods pleaſure, and their deſert, is content to forget that hee had ſonnes. Hee might haue had a ſilent tongue, and a clamorous heart. There is no voyce louder in the eares of God, then a ſpeechleſſe repining of the ſoule. Heat is more intended with keeping in; but Aarons ſilence was no leſſe inward: He knew how little he ſhould get by brawling with God. If he breathed out diſcontentment, he ſaw God could ſpeake fire to him againe; And therefore he quietly ſubmits to the will of God; And held his peace, becauſe the Lord had done it. There is no greater proofe of grace, then to ſmart patiently; and humbly and contentedly to reſt the heart in the iuſtice, and wiſedome of Gods proceeding; and to bee ſo farre from chiding, that we diſpute not. Nature is froward; and though ſhee well knowes we meddle not with our match, when we ſtriue with our Maker, yet ſhe pricks vs forward to this idle quarrell; and bids vs with Iobs wife, Curſe and dye. If God either chide or ſmite (as ſeruants are charged to their Maſters) wee may not anſwere againe; when Gods hand is on our backe, our hand muſt be on our mouth: elſe, as mothers doe their children, God ſhall whip vs ſo much the more for crying.

It is hard for a ſtander by, in this caſe to diſtinguiſh betwixt hard-heartedneſſe, and piety. There Aaron ſees his ſonnes lye; he may neither put his hand to them, to bury them, nor ſhed a teare for their death. Neuer parent can haue iuſter cauſe of mourning, to then ſee his ſonnes dead in their ſinne; if prepared, and penitent, yet who can but ſorrow for their end? but to part with children to the danger of a ſecond death, is worthy of more then teares. Yet Aaron muſt learne ſo far to deny nature, that he muſt more magnifie the iuſtice of God, then lament the iudgment. Thoſe whom God hath called to his immediate ſeruice, muſt know that he will not allow them the common paſſions, and cares of others. Nothing is more naturall then ſorrow for the death of our owne: if euer griefe be ſeaſonable, it becomes a funerall. And if Nadab and Abihu had dyed in their beds, this fauour had been allowed them, the ſorrow of their Father and Brethren: for when God forbids ſolemne mourning to his Prieſts, ouer the dead, hee excepts the caſes of this neerneſſe of blood. Now all Iſrael may mourne for theſe two: only the Father and Brethren may not. God is iealous leſt their ſorrow ſhould ſeeme to countenance the ſinne, which he had puniſhed: euen the fearfulleſt acts of God muſt be applauded by the heauieſt hearts of the faithfull.

That which the Father and Brother may not doe, the Couſins are commanded: dead carcaſſes are not for the preſence of God; His iuſtice was ſhewne ſufficiently in killing them: They are now fit for the graue, not the Sanctuary: neither are they caried out naked, but in their coats. It was an vnuſuall ſight for Iſrael to ſee a linnen Ephod vpon the Beere; The iudgement was ſo much more remarkable, becauſe they had the badge of their calling vpon their backs.

Nothing is either more pleaſing vnto God, or more commodious to men, then that when he hath executed iudgement, it ſhould bee ſeene and wondred at; for therefore he ſtrikes ſome that he may warne all.

Of AARON and MIRIAM.

THe Iſraelites are ſtayed ſeuen dayes in the ſtation of Hazzeroth, for the puniſhment of Miriam. The ſinnes of the gouernours are a iuſt ſtop to the people; all of them ſmart in one; all muſt ſtay the leaſure of Miriams recouerie. Whoſoeuer ſeekes the Land of Promiſe, ſhall finde many lets; Amalek, Og, Sehon, and the Kings of Canaan meet with Iſrael: theſe reſiſted, but hindred not their paſſage, their ſinnes onely ſtay them from remouing. Afflictions are not croſſes to vs, in the way to heauen, in compariſon to our ſinnes.

What is this I ſee? Is not this Aaron, that was brother in nature; and by office ioynt-

Commiſſioner with Moſes? Is not this Aaron, that made his Brother an interceſſor for him, to God, in the caſe of his Idolatry? Is not this Aaron, that climbed vp the Hill of Sinai, with Moſes? Is not this Aaron, whom the mouth and hand of Moſes conſecrated an high Prieſt vnto God? Is not this Miriam, the elder Siſter of Moſes? Is not this Miriam, that led the Triumph of the Women, and ſung gloriouſly to the Lord? Is not this Miriam,, which layd her Brother Moſes in the Reeds, and fetcht her Mother to be his Nurſe? Both, Prophets of God; both, the fleſh and blood of Moſes: And doth this Aaron repine at the honor of him, which gaue himſelfe that honour, and ſaued his life? Doth this Miriam repine at the proſperitie of him whoſe life ſhee ſaued? Who would not haue thought, this ſhould haue beene their glory, to haue ſeene the glory of their owne Brother? What could haue beene a greater comfort to Miriam, then to thinke; How happily doth he now ſit at the Sterne of Iſrael, whom I ſaued from periſhing in a Boat of Bul-ruſhes! It is to mee, that Iſrael owes this Commander; But now enuie hath ſo blinded their eyes, that they can neither ſee this priuiledge of nature, nor the honour of Gods choyce. Miriam and Aaron are in mutiny againſt Moſes. Who is ſo holy that ſinnes not? What ſinne is ſo vnnaturall that the beſt can auoyde without God? But what weakeneſſe ſoeuer may plead for Miriam, who can but grieue to ſee Aaron at the end of ſo many ſinnes? Of late, I ſaw him caruing the molten Image, and conſecrating an Altar to a falſe god: now I ſee him ſeconding an vnkind mutiny againſt his Brother: Both ſinnes find him acceſſary; neither principall. It was not in the power of the legall Prieſthood to performe, or promiſe innocency to her Miniſters: It was neceſſary wee ſhould haue another high Prieſt, which could not bee tainted. That King of righteouſneſſe was of another order; He being without ſinne hath fully ſatisfied for the ſinnes of men. Whom can it now offend, to ſee the blemiſhes of the euangelicall Prieſthood, when Gods firſt high Prieſt is thus miſcaried?

Who can looke for loue and proſperity at once, when holy and meeke Moſes finds enmity in his owne fleſh and blood? Rather then we ſhall want, A mans enemies ſhall be thoſe of his owne houſe. Authority cannot fayle of oppoſition, if it be neuer ſo mildly ſwayed: that common make-bate will rather raiſe it out of our owne boſome. To doe well, and heare ill, is Princely.

The Midianitiſh wife of Moſes coſt him deare. Before, ſhe hazarded his life: now, the fauour of his people: Vnequall matches are ſeldome proſperous. Although now this ſcandall was onely taken: Enuy was not wiſe enough to chooſe a ground of the quarrell. Whether ſome ſecret and emulatory brawles paſſed betweene Zipporah and Miriam, (as many times theſe ſparkes of priuate brawles grow into a perillous and common flame) or whether now that Iethro and his Family was ioyned with Iſrael, there were ſurmiſes of tranſporting the Gouernment to ſtrangers; or whether this vnfit choyce of Moſes is now raiſed vp to diſparage Gods gifts in him; Euen in ſight, the exceptions were friuolous: Emulation is curious; and out of the beſt perſon, or act, will raiſe ſomething to cauill at.

Seditions doe not euer looke the ſame way they moue; Wiſe men can eaſily diſtinguiſh betwixt the viſor of actions, and the face. The wife of Moſes is mentioned, his ſuperioritie is ſhot at. Pride is lightly the ground of all ſedition. Which of their faces ſhined like Moſes? Yea, let him but haue drawne his vaile, which of them durſt looke on his face? Which of them had faſted twice forty dayes? Which of them aſcended vp to the top of Sinai, and was hid with ſmoke, and fire? Which of them receiued the Law twice in two ſeuerall Tables, from Gods owne hand? And yet they dare ſay, Hath God ſpoken only by Moſes? They do not deny Moſes his honour, but they challenge a part with him: and as they were the elder in nature, ſo they would be equall in dignitie, equall in adminiſtration. According to her name, Miriam would bee exalted. And yet how vnfit were they? One, a woman, whom her ſex debarred from rule; the other a Prieſt, whom his office ſequeſtred from earthly gouernment. Selfe-loue makes men vnreaſonable, and teaches them to turne the glaſſe, to ſee themſelues bigger, others leſſe then they are. It is an hard thing for a man, willingly and gladly to ſee his equals lifted ouer his head, in worth and opinion. Nothing will more try a mans grace, then queſtions of emulation. That man hath true light, which can bee content to be a candle before the Sunne of others.

As no wrong can eſcape God; ſo leaſt of all thoſe which are offered to Princes: He that made the eare, needs no intelligence of our tongues. We haue to doe with a God, that is light of hearing, we cannot whiſper any euill ſo ſecretly, that he ſhould not cry out of noyſe: and what need we any further euidence, when our Iudge is our witneſſe?

Without any delation of Moſes, God heares and challenges them. Becanſe he was meeke, therefore he complained not: Becauſe hee was meeke and complained not, therefore the Lord ſtruck in for him the more. The leſſe a man ſtriues for himſelfe, the more is God his Champion. It is the honour of great perſons, to vndertake the patronage of their Clients: How much more will God reuenge his Elect, which cry to him, day and night! He that ſaid, I ſeeke not mine owne glory, addes, But there is one that ſeekes it, and iudges. God takes his part euer, that fightes not for himſelfe.

No man could haue giuen more proofes of his courage, then Moſes. Hee ſlue the Ægyptian; He confronted Pharaoh in his owne Court; Hee beat the Midianite ſhepheards; He feared not the troopes of Ægypt! He durſt looke God in the face, amidſt all the terrors of Sinai: and yet that ſpirit, which made, and knew his heart, ſayes, He was the mildeſt man vpon earth. Mildneſſe and Fortitude may well lodge together in one breſt; to correct the miſconceits of thoſe men, that thinke none valiant, but thoſe that are fierce, and cruell.

No ſooner is the word out of Miriams mouth, then the Word of Gods reproofe meets it; How he beſtirs him, and will be at once ſeene and heard, when the name of Moſes is in queſtion! Moſes was zealouſly carefull for Gods glory, and now God is zealous for his. The remunerations of the Almightie, are infinitely gratious. He cannot want honour and patronage, that ſeekes the honour of his Maker. The ready way to true glory, is goodneſſe.

God might haue ſpoken ſo lowd, that Heauen and Earth ſhould haue heard it; ſo as they ſhould not haue needed to come forth for audience: but now, hee calls them out to the barre, that they may be ſeene to heare. It did not content him, to chide them within doores: the ſhame of their fault had beene leſſe in a priuate rebuke: but the ſcandall of their repining was publike. Where the ſinne is not affraid of the light, God loues not the reproofe ſhould be ſmothered.

They had depreſſed Moſes, God aduances him: They had equalled them to Moſes, God prefers him to them. Their plea was, that God had ſpoken by them, as well as by Moſes: Gods reply is, That he hath in a more intire faſhion ſpoken to Moſes, then them. God ſpake to the beſt of them, but either in their dreame, ſleeping; or in viſion, waking. But to Moſes he ſpake with more inward illumination, with more liuely repreſentation: To others, as a ſtranger; to Moſes as a friend. God had neuer ſo much magnified Moſes to them, but for their enuy. We cannot deuiſe to pleaſure Gods ſeruants, ſo much as by deſpighting them.

God was angry when he chode them, but more angry when he departed. The withdrawing of his preſence, is the preſence of his wrath. Whiles hee ſtayes to reproue, there is fauour in his diſpleaſure: but when he leaues either man, or Church, there is no hope but of vengeance. The finall abſence of God, is hell it ſelfe. When he forſakes vs (though for a time) it is an introduction to his vtmoſt iudgement. It was time to looke for a iudgment, when God departed: ſo ſoone as he is gone from the eyes of Miriam, the leproſie appeares in her face: her foule tongue is puniſhed with a foule face. Since ſhe would acknowledge no difference betwixt her ſelfe and her brother Moſes, euery Iſraelite now ſees his face glorious, hers leprous. Deformitie is a fit cure of Pride. Becauſe the venome of her tongue would haue eaten into the reputation of her brother, therefore a poiſonous infection eates into her fleſh. Now both Moſes & Miriam, need to weare a vayle: the one to hide his glory; the other her deformitie That Midianite Zipporah, whom ſhe ſcorned, was beautifull in reſpect of her.

Miriam was ſtriken, Aaron eſcaped: both ſinned; his Prieſthood could not reſcue him; the greatneſſe of his dignity did but adde to the haynouſneſſe of his ſinne: his repentance freed him; Alaſſe, my Lord, I beſech thee lay not this ſinne vpon vs, which we haue fooliſhly committed. I wonder not to ſee Aaron free, while I ſee him penitent; This very confeſſion ſaued him before, from bleeding for Idolatry, which now preſerues him from Leproſie, for his enuious repining. The vniuerſall Antidote, for all the iudgements of God, is our humble repentance.

Yea, his ſad deprecation preuailed, both to cleare himſelfe, and recouer Miriam; The brother ſues for himſelfe and his ſiſter, to that brother whom they both emulated, for pardon from himſelfe, and that God which was offended in him. Where now is that equality which was pretended? Behold, hee that ſo lately made his brother his fellow, now makes him his God: Lay not this ſinne vpon vs; Let her not bee as one dead: As if Moſes had impoſed this plague, and could remoue it. Neuer any oppoſed the ſeruants of God, but one time or other they haue beene conſtrained to confeſſe a ſuperioritie.

Miriam would haue wounded Moſes with her tongue; Moſes would heale her with his, O Lord, heale her now: The wrong is the greater, becauſe his ſiſter did it. He doth not ſay, I ſought not her ſhame, ſhee ſought mine; if God haue reuenged it, I haue no reaſon to looke on her, as a ſiſter, who lookt at mee, as an aduerſarie: But, as if her leproſie were his, he cryes out for her cure. O admirable meekeneſſe of Moſes! His people the Iewes rebelled againſt him; God profers reuenge; He would rather dye, then they ſhould periſh: His ſiſter rebelled againſt him; God workes his reuenge: Hee will not giue God peace, till ſhee bee recured. Behold a worthy and noble patterne for vs to follow. How farre are they from this diſpoſition, who are not onely content God ſhould reuenge; but are ready to preuent Gods reuenge with their owne?

Gods Loue to Moſes ſuffers him not to obtaine preſently his ſute for Miriam; his good nature to his ſiſter, made him pray againſt himſelfe. If the iudgement had been at once inflicted, and remoued, there had been no example of terrour for others: God either denyes, or defers the grant of our requeſts, for our good; It were wide for vs, if our ſuits ſhould be euer heard. It was fit for all parts, Miriam ſhould continue ſomewhile leprous. There is no policie in a ſudden remouall of iuſt puniſhment: vnleſſe the raine ſo fall that it lye, and ſoke into the earth, it profits nothing. If the Iudgements of God ſhould be onely as paſſengers, and not ſoiourners at leaſt, they would be no whit regarded.

Of the Searchers of Canaan.

I Can but wonder at the counſell of God. If the Iſraelites had gone on to Canaan, without inquiry; their confidence had poſſeſſed it: now they ſend to eſpie the Land, ſixe hundred thouſand of them neuer liued to ſee it: And yet I ſee God enioyning them to ſend; but enioyning it, vpon their inſtance. Some things God allowes in iudgement; their importunity, and diſtruſt, extorted from God this occaſion of their ouerthrow. That which the Lord moues vnto, proſpers; but that which we moue him to firſt, ſeldome ſucceedeth. What needed they doubt of the goodneſſe of that Land, which God told them did flow with milke and honey? What needed they doubt of obtayning that, which God promiſed to giue? When wee will ſend forth our ſenſes, to bee our ſcouts in the matters of faith, and rather dare truſt men, then God, wee are worthy to be deceiued.

The baſeſt ſort of men are commonly held fit enough for intelligencers; but Moſes, to make ſure worke, chooſeth forth the beſt of Iſrael, ſuch as were like to be moſt iudicious in their inquiry, and moſt credible in their report. Thoſe that ruled Iſrael at home could beſt deſcry for them abroad; What ſhould direct the body, but the head? Men can iudge but by appearance; It is for him onely that ſees the euent, ere hee appoint the meanes, not to bee deceiued. It had beene better for Iſrael to haue ſent the offall of the multitude: By how leſſe the credit of their perſons is, by ſo much leſſe is the danger of ſeducement. The error of the mighty is armed with authority, and in a ſort commands aſſent; whether in good or euill, Greatneſſe hath euer a traine to follow it at the heeles.

Forty dayes they ſpent in this ſearch; and this cowardly vnbeliefe in the ſearch ſhall coſt them forty yeares delay of the fruition. Who can abide to ſee the Rulers of Iſrael ſo baſely timorous? They commend the Land, the fruit commends it ſelfe, and yet they plead difficulty: We be not able to go vp. Their ſhoulders are laden with the grapes; and yet their hearts are ouerlaid with vnbeliefe: It is an vnworthy thing to plead hardneſſe of atchieuing, where the benefit will more then requite the indeauour. Our Land of Promiſe is aboue; we know, the fruit thereof is ſweet and glorious, the paſſage difficult. The gyantly ſons of Anak (the powers of darkeneſſe) ſtand in our way: If we ſit downe and complaine, we ſhall once know, that without ſhall be the fearefull.

See the idle pleas of diſtruſt; We are not able: They are ſtronger. Could not God inable them? Was he not ſtronger then their Giants? Had he not promiſed to diſplace the Canaanites, to ſettle them in their ſtead? How much more eaſie is it for vs to ſpy their weaknes, then for them to eſpy the ſtrength of their aduerſaries? When we meaſure our ſpirituall ſucceſſe by our owne power, we are vanquiſhed, before we fight: He that would ouercome, muſt neither looke vpon his own arme, nor the arme of his enemy, but the mouth and hand of him that hath promiſed, and can performe. Who are we fleſh and blood, with our breath in our noſtrils, that we ſhould fight with Principalities, powers, ſpirituall wickedneſſes in heauenly places? The match is too vnequall; we are not like Graſhoppers, to theſe Giants; when we compare our ſelues with them how can we but deſpaire? when we compare them with God, how can we be diſcouraged? He that hath brought vs into this field, hath promiſed vs victory. God knew their ſtrength, ere he offered to commit vs.

Well might they haue thought, Were not the Amalekites ſtronger then we? Were not they armed, wee naked? Did not the onely hand of Moſes, by lifting vp, beat them downe? Were not the Ægyptians no leſſe our maſters? Did not Death come running after vs in their Chariots? Did wee not leaue theſe buried in the Sea, the other vnburied in the Wilderneſſe? Whence had the Anakims their ſtrength, but from him, that bids vs goe vp againſt them? Why haue the bodies of our foreſathers taken poſſeſſion of their Hebron, but for vs? But now, their feare hath not left them ſo much reaſon, as to compare their aduerſaries with others, but onely with themſelues: Doubtleſſe, theſe Gyants were mighty, but their feare hath ſtretched them out ſome Cubits, beyond their ſtature. Diſtruſt makes our dangers greater, and our helpes leſſe then they are, and forecaſts euer worſe, then ſhall bee; and if euils be poſſible, it makes them certaine.

Amongſt thoſe twelue Meſſengers, whom our ſecond Moſes ſent thorow the Land of Promiſe, there was but one Iudas; But amongſt thoſe twelue, which the former Moſes addreſſed thorow the ſame Land, there is but one Caleb: and yet thoſe were choſen out of the meaneſt; theſe out of the heads of Iſrael. As there is no ſociety free from ſome corruption: ſo it is hard, if in a community of men, there bee not ſome faithfulneſſe.

Wee ſhall wrong God, if wee feare leſt good cauſes ſhall bee quite forſaken; Hee knowes how to ſerue himſelfe of the beſt, if the feweſt; And could as eaſily bee attended with a multitude, if hee did not ſeeke his owne glory, in vnlikelihoods.

Ioſhua was ſilent, and wiſely ſpared his tongue for a further aduantage; Onely Caleb ſpake: I doe not heare him ſay, Who am I to ſtriue with a multitude? What can Ioſhua and I doe againſt ten Rulers? It is better to ſit ſtill then to riſe, and fall: But hee reſolues to ſwimme againſt this ſtreame, and will either draw friends to the truth, or enemies vpon himſelfe.

True Chriſtian fortitude teaches vs not to regard the number, or qualitie of the opponents, but the equity of the cauſe; and cares not to ſtand alone, and challenge all commers: and if it could be oppoſed by as many worlds, as men, it may be ouerborn, but it cannot be daunted: Whereas popularity caries weake minds, and teaches them the ſafety of erring with a multitude.

Caleb ſaw the Giantly Anakims, and the walled Cities, as well as the reſt; and yet he ſayes, Let vs goe vp and poſſeſſe it: As if it were no more, but to go, and ſee, and conquer. Faith is couragious, & makes nothing of thoſe dangers, wherewith others are quailed.

It is very materiall with what eyes we looke vpon all ſubiects. Feare doth not more multiply euils, then faith diminiſheth them; which is therefore bold, becauſe either it ſees not, or contemnes that terror, which feare repreſents to the weake. There is none ſo valiant as the beleeuer.

It had beene happy for Iſrael, if Calebs counſell had beene as effectuall as good: But how eaſily haue theſe Rulers diſcouraged a faint-hearted people! In ſtead of lifting vp their enſignes, and marching towards Canaan; they ſit them downe, and lift vp their voyce and cry. The rods of their Ægyptian Taske-maſters had neuer beene ſo fit for them, as now, for crying. They had cauſe indeed to weepe for the ſinne of their infidelitie: but now they weepe for feare of thoſe enemies they ſaw not. I feare if there had beene ten Calebs to perſwade, and but two faint ſpies to diſcourage them, thoſe two cowards would haue preuailed againſt thoſe tenne ſolicitors: How much more, now ten oppoſe and but two incourage! An eaſie Rhetoricke drawes vs to the worſe part; yea, it is hard not to run downe the hill. The faction of Euill is ſo much ſtronger in our nature, then that of Good, that euery leaſt motion preuailes for the one: ſcarce any ſute for the other.

Now is Moſes in danger of loſing all the coſt and care, that euer he beſtowed vpon Iſrael: His people are already gone backe to Ægypt, in their hearts; and their bodies are returning. Oh ye rebellious Hebrewes, where ſhall God haue you at laſt! Did euer Moies promiſe to bring you to a fruitfull Land, without Inhabitants? To giue you a rich Country, without reſiſtance? Are not the graues of Canaan as good, as thoſe of Ægypt? What can ye but dye at the hands of the Anakims? Can yee hope for leſſe from the Ægyptians? What madneſſe is this to wiſh to dye, for feare of death? Is there leſſe hope from your enemies, that ſhall be, when ye goe vnder ſtrong and expert Leaders, then from the enemies that were, when yee ſhall returne maſterleſſe? Can thoſe cruell Ægyptians ſo ſoone haue forgotten the blood of their fathers, children, brothers, husbands, which periſhed in purſuing you? Had yee rather truſt the mercy of knowne enemies, then the promiſe of a faithfull God? Which way will ye returne? Who ſhall diuide the Sea for you? Who ſhall fetch you water out of the Rocke? Or can ye hope that the Manna of God will follow you, while yee runne from him? Feeble minds, when they meet with croſſes they lookt not for, repent of their good beginnings, and wiſh any difficultie rather, then that they finde. How many haue pulled backe their foot from the narrow way, for the troubles of a good profeſſion!

It had beene time for the Iſraelites to haue fallen downe on their faces before Moſes and Aaron, and to haue ſayd, Ye led vs thorow the Sea, make way for vs into Canaan. Thoſe Giants are ſtrong, but not ſo ſtrong as the Rocke of Rephidim; ye ſtroke that and it yeelded; If they be tall, the Pillar of God is higher then they: when we looke on our ſelues, we ſee cauſe of fear; but when we conſider the miraculous power of you our leaders, we cannot but contemne thoſe men of meaſures. Leaue vs not therfore, but go before vs in your directiõs, go to God for vs in your prayers. But now contrarily Moſes and Aaron fall on their faces to them, and ſue to them, that they would be content to be conducted. Had they beene ſuffered to depart, they had periſhed; Moſes and his ſaw had beene victorious: And yet, as if he could not be happy without them, he fals on his face to them, that they would ſtay. Wee haue neuer ſo much need to be importuned as in thoſe things whoſe benefit ſhould make vs moſt importunate. The ſweetneſſe of Gods Law, and our promiſed glory is ſuch, as ſhould draw all hearts after it; And yet if we did not ſue to men (as for life) that they would bee reconciled to God, and be ſaued, I doubt whether they would obtaine; yea, it were well, if our ſute were ſufficient to preuaile.

Though Moſes and Aaron intreat vpon their faces, and Ioſhua and Caleb perſwade and rend their garments, yet they moue nothing. The obſtinate multitude, growne more violent with oppoſing, is ready to returne them ſtones for their prayers. Such hath beene euer the thankes of fidelity, and truth; Croſſed wickedneſſe proues deſperate; and in ſtead of yeelding, ſeekes for reuenge. Nothing is ſo hatefull to a reſolute ſinner, as good counſell: We are become enemies to the world becauſe we tell them truth.

That God which was inuiſibly preſent, whiles they ſinned; when they haue ſinned, ſhewes himſelfe glorious. They might haue ſeene him before, that they ſhould not ſinne; Now they cannot chooſe but ſee him in the height of their ſinne: They ſaw before, the Pillar of his ordinary preſence: now they ſee him vnuſually terrible; that they may with ſhame and horror, confeſſe him able to defend, able to reuenge. The helpe of God vſes to ſhew it ſelfe in extremitie. He that can preuent euils, conceales his aide, till danger be ripe; And then, he is fearfull as before he ſeemed conniuent.

Of Corah's Conſpiracie.

THe teares of Iſrael were ſcarce drie, ſince the ſmart of their laſt mutiny, and now they begin another. The multitude is like a raging Sea; full of vnquiet billowes of diſcontentment; whereof one riſes in the fall of another. They ſaw, God did but threaten, and therefore are they bold to ſinne: It was now high-time, they ſhould know what it is for God to be angry. There was neuer ſuch a reuenge taken of Iſrael; neuer any better deſerued. When leſſer warnings will not ſerue, God lookes into his Quiuer for deadly arrowes. In the meane time what a weary life did Moſes lead, in theſe continuall ſucceſſions of conſpiracies? What did he gaine by his troubleſome gouernment, but danger and deſpight? Who but hee would not haue wiſht himſelfe rather with the ſheepe of Iethro, then with theſe wolues of Iſrael? But, as he durſt not quit his hooke, without the calling of God, ſo now he dare not his Scepter, except he be diſmiſſed of him that called him; no troubles, no oppoſitions can driue him from his place: we are too weake, if we ſuffer men to chaſe vs from that ſtation, where God hath ſet vs.

I ſee the Leuites, not long ſince drawing their ſwords for God and Moſes, againſt the reſt of Iſrael; and that fact wins them both praiſe and bleſſing: Now they are the forwardeſt in the rebellion againſt Moſes and Aaron, men of their owne Tribe. There is no aſſurance of a man, for one act: whom one ſinne cannot faſten vpon, another may. Yea the ſame ſinne may finde a repulſe one while, from the ſame hand, which another time giues it entertainment: and that yeeldance loſes the thanke of all the former reſiſtance. It is no praiſe to haue done once well, vnleſſe we continue.

Outward priuiledges of blood can auaile nothing, againſt a particular calling of God. Theſe Reubenites had the right of the natural primogeniture; yet do they vainly challenge preeminence, where God hath ſubiected them. If all ciuill honour flow from the King, how much more from the God of Kings? His hand exalts the poore, and caſts downe the mighty from their throne. The man that will bee lifting vp himſelfe, in the pride of his heart, from vnder the foot of God, is iuſtly troden in the duſt.

Moſes is the Prince of Iſrael; Aaron the Prieſt: Moſes was milde; Aaron popular; yet both are conſpired againſt: Their places are no leſſe Brothers, then their perſons. Both are oppoſed at once; He that is a traytor to the Church, is a traytor to the King. Any ſuperioritie is a marke of Enuy. Had Moſes and Aaron beene but fellowes with the Iſraelites, none had beene better beloued; their diſpoſitions were ſuch, as muſt needs haue forced fauour from the indifferent: now they were aduanced, their malice is not inferiour to their honour. High towers muſt looke for lightenings; we offer not to vndermine but thoſe wals, which we cannot ſcale. Nature in euery man is both enuious, and diſdainfull; and neuer loues to honour another, but where it may be an honour to it ſelfe.

There cannot be conceiued an honour leſſe worth emulation, then this principality of Iſrael; a people that could giue nothing; a people that had nothing, but in hope; a people, whom their leader was faine to feed with bread, and water; which paid him no tribute, but of ill words; whoſe command was nothing but a burden: and yet this dignitie was an eye-ſore to theſe Leuites and theſe Reubenites, Ye take too much vpon you, ye ſonnes of Leui.

And this challenge (though thus vnſeaſonable) hath drawne in two hundred and fifty Captaines of Iſrael. What wonder is it, that the tenne Rulers preuailed ſo much with the multitude to diſſwade them from Canaan; when three traitors preuailed thus with 250 Rulers, famous in the Congregation and men of renowne? One man may kindle ſuch a fire, as all the world cannot quench. One plague-ſore may infect a whole Kingdome: The infection of euill is much worſe then the act.

It is not like, thoſe Leaders of Iſrael could erre without followers: Hee is a meane man that drawes not ſome Clients after him. It hath beene euer a dangerous policie of Satan, to aſſault the beſt: he knowes, that the multitude (as wee ſay of Bees) will follow their maſter.

Nothing can be more pleaſing to the vulgar ſort, then to heare their Gouernours taxed, and themſelues flattered. All the Congregation is holy; Euery one of them; Wherefore lift ye vp your ſelues? Euery word is a falſhood. For Moſes deiected himſelfe (Who am I?) God lifted him vp, ouer Iſrael: And ſo was Iſrael holy, as Moſes was ambitious. What holineſſe was there in ſo much infidelitie, feare, Idolatry, mutiny, diſobedience? What could make them vncleane, if this were holineſſe? They had ſcarce wip't their mouthes, or waſht their hands, ſince their laſt obſtinacie: and yet theſe pick-thankes ſay, All Iſrael is holy.

I would neuer deſire a beter proofe of a falſe teacher, then flatterie: True meaning need not vphold it ſelfe by ſoothing. There is nothing eaſier then to perſwade men well of themſelues; when a mans ſelfe-loue meets with anothers flattery, it is an high praiſe that will not be beleeued. It was more out of oppoſition, then beliefe, that theſe men plead the holineſſe of Iſrael. Violent aduerſaries, to vphold a ſide, will maintaine thoſe things they beleeue not.

Moſes argues not for himſelfe, but appeales to God; neither ſpeakes for his owne right, but his brother Aarons: He knew, that Gods immediate ſeruice was worthy to be more precious, then his gouernment: That, his Princedome ſerued but to the glory of his Maſter. Good Magiſtrates are more tender ouer Gods honour then their owne; and more ſenſible of the wrongs offered to Religion, then to themſelues.

It is ſafeſt to truſt God with his owne cauſes. If Aaron had been choſen by Iſrael, Moſes would haue ſheltred him vnder their authoritie: Now that God did immediately appoint him, his patronage is ſought, whoſe the election was. We may eaſily fault in the managing of diuine affaires; and ſo our want of ſucceſſe cannot want ſinne; He knowes how to vſe, how to bleſſe his owne meanes.

As there was a difference betwixt the people, and Leuites; ſo betwixt the Leuites, and Prieſts. The God of order loues to haue our degrees kept. Whiles the Leuites would be looking vp to the Prieſts, Moſes ſends downe their eyes to the people. The way not to repine at thoſe aboue vs, is to looke at thoſe below vs. There is no better remedy for ambition, then to caſt vp our former receits, and to compare them with our deſeruings, and to conferre our owne eſtate with inferiours: So ſhall wee finde cauſe to be thankfull, that wee are aboue any, rather then of enuy that any is aboue vs.

Moſes hath chid the ſonnes of Leui, for mutining againſt Aaron; and ſo much the more, becauſe they were of his owne Tribe: now hee ſends for the Reubenites, which roſe againſt himſelfe. They come not, and their meſſage is worſe then their abſence. Moſes is accuſed of iniuſtice, crueltie, falſhood, treacherie, vſurpation; and Ægypt it ſelf muſt be commended, rather then Moſes ſhall want reproch. Innocency is no ſhelter from ill tongues; Malice neuer regards how true any accuſation is but how ſpightfull.

Now it was time for Moſes to be angry. They durſt not haue beene thus bold, if they had not ſeene his mildneſſe. Lenity is ill beſtowed vpon ſtubborne natures: It is an iniurious ſenſleſneſſe, not to feele the wounds of our reputation. It well appeares hee is angry, when he prayes againſt them. He was diſpleaſed before; but when he was moſt bitter againſt them, he ſtill prayed for them: but now, hee bends his very prayers againſt them. Looke not to their offering. There can be no greater reuenge, then the imprecation of the righteous; There can be no greater iudgement, then Gods reiection of our ſeruices. With vs men, what more argues diſlike of the perſon, then the turning backe of his preſent? What will God accept from vs, if not prayers?

The innocence of Moſes cals for reuenge on his Aduerſaries. If hee had wronged them in his gouernment, in vaine ſhould he haue looked to Gods hand for right. Our ſinnes exclude vs from Gods protection; whereas vprightneſſe challenges, and findes his patronage. An Aſſe taken had made him vncapable of fauour. Corrupt Gouernors loſe the comfort of their owne breſt, and the tuition of God.

The ſame tongue that prayed againſt the Conſpirators, prayes for the people. As lewd men thinke to carie it with number; Corah had ſo farre preuailed, that hee had drawne the multitude to his ſide. God, the auenger of treaſons, would haue conſumed them all at once: Moſes and Aaron pray for their Rebels. Although they were worthy of death, and nothing but death could ſtop their mouths; yet their mercifull Leaders will not buy their owne peace, with the loſſe of ſuch enemies. Oh rare and imitable mercy! The people riſe vp againſt their Gouernors; Their Gouernors fall on their faces to God, for the people: ſo farre are they from plotting reuenge, that they will not endure God ſhould reuenge for them.

Moſes knew well enough, that all thoſe Iſraelites muſt periſh in the Wilderneſſe; God had vowed it, for their former inſurrection: yet how earneſtly doth hee ſue to God, not to conſume them as once! The very reſpit of euils, is a fauour next to the remouall.

Corah kindled the fire; the two hundred and fifty Captaines brought ſtickes to it; All Iſrael warmed themſelues by it; onely the incendiaries periſh. Now doe the Iſraelites owe their life to them, whoſe death they intended. God and Moſes knew to diſtinguiſh betwixt the heads of a faction, and the traine; though neither be faultleſſe; yet the one is plagued, the other forgiuen. Gods vengeance, when it is at the hoteſt, makes differences of men: Get you away from about the Tabernacles of Corah. Euer before common iudgements, there is a ſeparation. In the vniuerſall iudgement of all the earth, the Iudge himſelfe will ſeparate: in theſe particular executions, we muſt ſeparate our ſelues. The ſocietie of wicked men, eſpecially in their ſinnes, is mortally dangerous: whiles we will not be parted, how can we complaine, if we be enwrapped in their condemnation? Our very company ſinnes with them; why ſhould wee not ſmart with them alſo?

Moſes had well hoped, that when theſe Rebels ſhould ſee all the Iſraelites run from them, as from monſters, and looking affrightedly vpon their Tents, and ſhould heare that fearfull Proclamation of vengeance, againſt them, (howſoeuer they did before ſet a face on their conſpiracie; yet now) their hearts would haue miſgiuen. But lo, theſe bold Traitors ſtand impudently ſtaring in the doore of their Tents, as if they would outface the reuenge of God; As if Moſes had neuer wrought miracle before them; As if no one Iſraelite had euer bled for rebelling. Thoſe that ſhall periſh, are blinded. Pride and infidelitie obdures the heart, and makes euen cowards fearleſſe.

So ſoone as the innocent are ſeuered, the guilty periſh: the earth cleaues, and ſwallowes vp the Rebels. This element was not vſed for ſuch morſels. It deuours the carkaſſes of men; but bodies informed with liuing ſoules, neuer before. To haue ſeene them ſtruck dead vpon the earth had beene fearfull: but to ſee the earth at once their executioner and graue, was more horrible. Neither the Sea, nor the earth are fit to giue paſſage; The Sea is moiſt and flowing, and will not be diuided, for the continuitie of it; The earth is dry and maſſie, and will neither yeeld naturally, nor meet againe, when it hath yeelded; yet the waters did cleaue to giue way vnto Iſrael, for their preſeruation; the earth did cleaue, to giue way to the Conſpirators, in iudgement: Both Sea and earth did ſhut their iawes againe vpon the aduerſaries of God.

There was more wonder in this latter. It was a maruell that the waters opened: it was no wonder that they ſhut againe; for, the retiring and flowing, was naturall. It was no leſſe maruell, that the earth opened; but more maruell that it did ſhut againe, becauſe it had no naturall diſpoſition to meet, when it was diuided. Now might Iſrael ſee, they had to doe with a God, that could reuenge with eaſe.

There were two ſorts of Traitors: the Earth ſwallowed vp the one; the Fire, the other. All the Elements agree to ſerue the vengeance of their Maker. Nadab and Abihu brought fit perſons, but vnfit fire to God; theſe Leuites bring the right fire, but vnwaranted perſons, before him: Fire from God conſumes both. It is a dangerous thing to vſurpe ſacred functions. The miniſterie will not grace the man; The man may diſgrace the miniſterie.

The common people were not ſo faſt gathered to Corahs flattering perſwaſion before, as now they ranne from the ſight and feare of his iudgement. I maruell not if they could not truſt that earth whereon they ſtood, whiles they knew their hearts had been falſe. It is a madneſſe to run away from puniſhment, and not from ſinne.

THE SEVENTH BOOKE.

AARONS Cenſer and Rod.

WHen ſhall wee ſee an end of theſe murmurings, and theſe iudgements? Becauſe theſe men roſe vp againſt Moſes and Aaron, therefore God conſumed them; and becauſe God conſumed them, therefore the people riſe vp againſt Moſes and Aaron: and now becauſe the people thus murmure, God hath againe begun to conſume them. What a circle is here of ſinnes, and iudgements? Wrath is gone out from God: Moſes is quick-ſighted, and ſpies it at the ſetting out. By how much more faithfull, and familiar we are with God, ſo much earlier doe we diſcerne his iudgements; as thoſe which are well acquainted with men, know by their lookes and geſtures that, which ſtrangers vnderſtand but by their actions; As finer tempers are more ſenſible of the changes of weather. Hence the Seers of God haue euer from their Watch-tower deſcried the iudgements of God afarre off. If another man had ſeene from Carmel a cloud of a hand-breadth, he could not haue told Ahab, he ſhould be wet. It is enough for Gods Meſſengers, out of their acquaintance with their Maſters proceedings, to fore-ſee puniſhment: No maruell if thoſe ſee it not, which are wilfully ſinfull: we men reueale not our ſecret purpoſes, either to enemies or ſtrangers: all their fauour is to feele the plague ere they can eſpy it.

Moſes, though he were great with God, yet he takes not vpon him this reconciliation; he may aduiſe Aaron what to doe, himſelfe vndertakes not to act it: It is the worke of the Prieſthood, to make an atonement for the people: Aaron was firſt his brothers tongue to Pharaoh; now he is the peoples tongue to God: he onely muſt offer vp the incenſe of the publike prayers to God. Who would not thinke it a ſmall thing to hold a Cenſer in his hand? yet if any other had done it, he had falne with the dead, and not ſtood betwixt the liuing and dead; in ſtead of the ſmoake aſcending, the fire had deſcended vpon him: And ſhall there be leſſe vſe, or leſſe regard of the Euangelicall miniſterie, then the Legall? When the world hath powred out all his contempt, wee are they, that muſt reconcile men to God; and without vs, they periſh.

I know not whether more to maruell at the courage, or mercy of Aaron:

Hall, J.

his mercy, that hee would yet ſaue ſo rebellious a people; his courage, that hee would ſaue them, with ſo great a danger of himſelfe. For, as one that would part a fray, he thruſts himſelfe vnder the ſtrokes of God; and puts it to the choyce of the reuenger, whether hee will ſmite him, or forbeare the reſt; Hee ſtands boldly betwixt the liuing and the dead, as one that will either dye with them, or haue them liue with him; the ſight of fourteene hundred carkaſes diſmayed him not: hee that before feared the threats of the people, now feares not the ſtrokes of God. It is not for Gods Miniſters, to ſtand vpon their owne perils in the common cauſes of the Church: Their praiers muſt oppoſe the iudgements of the Almighty; When the fire of Gods anger is kindled, their Cenſers muſt ſmoke with fire from the Altar. Euery chriſtian muſt pray for the remouall of vengeance: how much more they, whom God hath appointed to mediate for his people? Euery mans mouth is his owne: but they are the mouths of all.

Had Aaron thruſt in himſelfe with empty hands, I doubt whether he had preuailed; now this Cenſer was his protection; When we come with ſupplications in our hands, we neede not feare the ſtrokes of God. We haue leaue to reſiſt the diuine iudgements by our prayers, with fauour and ſucceſſe. So ſoone as the incenſe of Aaron aſcended vp vnto God, he ſmelt a ſauour of reſt; hee will rather ſpare the offenders, then ſtrike their interceſſor. How hardly can any people miſcarie, that haue faithfull Miniſters to ſue for their ſafety? Nothing but the ſmoke of hearty prayers can cleanſe the ayre from the plagues of God.

If Aarons ſacrifice were thus accepted; how much more ſhall the High-Prieſt of the New Teſtament, by interpoſing himſelfe to the wrath of his Father, deliuer the offenders from death? The plague was entred vpon all the ſonnes of men: O Sauiour, thou ſtood'ſt betwixt the liuing, and the dead, that all which beleeue in thee, ſhould not periſh. Aaron offered and was not ſtricken; but thou O Redeemer, wouldeſt offer and be ſtrucke, that by thy ſtripes we might be healed: So ſtood'ſt thou betwixt the dead and liuing, that thou wert both aliue and dead; and all this that we when we were dead, might liue for euer.

Nothing more troubled Iſrael, then a feare leſt the two brethren ſhould cunningly ingroſſe the gouernment to themſelues. If they had done ſo, what wiſe men would haue enuied them an office ſo little worth, ſo dearely purchaſed? But becauſe this conceit was euer apt to ſtir them to rebellion, and to hinder the benefit of this holy ſoueraignty; therefore God hath endeuoured nothing more, then to let them ſee that theſe officers, whom they ſo much enuied, were of his owne proper inſtitution: They had ſcarce ſhut their eyes, ſince they ſaw the confuſion of thoſe two hundred and fifty vſurping ſacrificers; and Aarons effectuall interceſſion for ſtaying the plague of Iſrael. In the one, the execution of Gods vengeance vpon the competitors of Aaron for his ſake. In the other, the forbearance of vengeance vpon the people for Aarons mediation, might haue challenged their voluntarie acknowledgement of his iuſt calling from God; If there had beene in them either awe, or thankefulneſſe, they could not haue doubted of his lawfull ſupremacie. How could they chooſe but argue thus; Why would God ſo fearfully haue deſtroyed the riuals that durſt conteſt with Aaron, if he would haue allowed him any equall? Wherefore ſerue thoſe plates of the Altar, which wee ſee made of thoſe vſurped Cenſers, but to warne all poſteritie of ſuch preſumption? Why ſhould God ceaſe ſtriking, whiles Aaron interpoſed betwixt the liuing and the dead, if he were but as one of vs? Which of vs if wee had ſtood in the plague, had not added to the heape? Incredulous minds will not be perſwaded with any euidence. Theſe two brothers had liued aſunder forty yeeres, God makes thē both meet in one office of deliuering Iſrael. One halfe of the miracles were wrought by Aaron; he ſtrooke with the rod, whiles it brought thoſe plagues on Ægypt. The Iſraelites heard God call him vp by name to mount Sinai; They ſaw him anointed from God: and (leſt they ſhould thinke this a ſet match betwixt the brethren) they ſaw the earth opening, the fire iſſuing from God vpon their emulous oppoſites: they ſaw his ſmoke a ſufficient antidote for the plague of God; and yet ſtill Aarons calling is queſtioned. Nothing is more naturall to euery man, then vnbeliefe: but the earth neuer yeelded a people ſo ſtrongly incredulous, as theſe; and after ſo many thouſand generations, their children doe inherite their obſtinacie; ſtill doe they oppoſe the true High-Prieſt, the Anointed of God: ſixteene hundred yeares deſolation hath not drawne from them to confeſſe him whom God hath choſen.

How deſirous was God to giue ſatisfaction euen to the obſtinate! There is nothing more materiall, then that men ſhould bee aſſured their ſpirituall guides haue their Commiſſion and Calling from God: The want whereof is a preiudice to our ſucceſſe. It ſhould not be ſo: but the corruption of men will not receiue good, but from due meſſengers.

Before, God wrought miracles in the Rod of Moſes; now, in the rod of Aaron. As Pharaoh might ſee himſelfe in Moſeſes rod; who, of a rod of defence and protection, was turned into a venemous Serpent: So Iſrael might ſee themſelues in the rod of Aaron. Euery Tribe and euery Iſraelite was, of himſelfe, as a ſere-ſticke, without life, without ſap; and if any one of them had power to liue, and flouriſh, he muſt acknowledge it from the immediate power, and gift of God.

Before Gods calling, all men are alike: Euery name is alike written in their Rod; there is no difference in the letters, in the wood; neither the characters of Aaron are fayrer, nor the ſtaffe more precious; It is the choiſe of God that makes the diſtinction: So it is in our calling of Chriſtianitie; All are equally deuoid of poſſibilitie of grace: all equally liueleſſe; by nature we are all ſonnes of wrath: If we bee now better then others, who ſeparated vs? We are all Crabſtockes in this Orchard of God, he may graffe what fruit he pleaſes, vpon vs; onely the grace and effectuall calling of God makes the difference.

Theſe twelue heads of Iſrael would neuer haue written their names in their rods, but in hope they might be choſen to this dignitie. What an honour was this Prieſthood, whereof all the Princes of Iſrael are ambitious? If they had not thought it an high preferment, they had neuer ſo much enuied the office of Aaron. What ſhall wee thinke of this change? Is the Euangelicall miniſtration of leſſe worth then the Liuiticall? Whiles the Teſtament is better, is the ſeruice worſe? How is it, that the great thinke themſelues too good for this imployment? How is it, that vnder the Goſpell, men are diſparaged with that, which honoured them vnder the Law; that their ambition and ſcorne, meet in one ſubiect?

Theſe twelue rods are not laid vp in ſeuerall cabinets of their owners; but are brought forth, and laid before the Lord. It is fit God ſhould make choyce of his owne attendants. Euen wee men hold it iniurious to haue ſeruants obtruded vpon vs, by others: neuer ſhall that man haue comfort in his Miniſterie, whom God hath not choſen. The great Commander of the world hath ſet euery man in his ſtation; To one he hath ſaid, Stand thou in this Tower and watch; To another, Make thou good theſe Trenches; To a third, Digge thou in this Mine. Hee that giues, and knowes our abilities, can beſt ſet vs on worke.

This rod was the paſtorall ſtaffe of Aaron, the great Shepheard of Iſrael. God teſtifies his approbation of his charge, by the fruit. That a rod cut off from the tree, ſhould bloſſome, it was ſtrange; but that in one night it ſhould beare buds, bloſſomes, fruit, and that both ripe and hard, it was highly miraculous. The ſame power that reuiues the dead plants of winter, in the Spring, doth it here without earth, without time, without ſunne; that Iſrael might ſee and grant, it was no reaſon his choyce ſhould be limited, whoſe power is vnlimited.

Fruitfulneſſe is the beſt argument of the calling of God: Not onely all the plants of his ſetting, but the very boughs cut off from the body of them, will flouriſh. And that there may not want a ſucceſſion of increaſe, here are fruit, bloſſomes, buds; both proofe and hope, inſeparably mixed.

It could not but bee a great comfort vnto Aaron, to ſee his rod thus miraculouſly flouriſhing; to ſee this wonderfull Teſtimonie of Gods fauour, and Election: Sure he could not but thinke; Who am I, O God, that thou ſhouldeſt thus chooſe me out of all the Tribes of Iſrael? My weakeneſſe hath beene more worthy of thy rod of correction, then my rod hath beene worthy of theſe bloſſomes. How haſt thou magnified me, in the ſight of all thy people? How able art thou to vphold my imbecilitie with the rod of thy ſupport? how able to defend me with the rod of thy power, who haſt thus brought fruit out of the ſapleſſe rod of my profeſſion? That ſeruant of God is worthy to faint, that holds it not a ſufficient encouragement, to ſee the euident proofes of his Maſters fauour.

Commonly, thoſe fruits which are ſoone ripe, ſoone wither, but theſe Almonds of Aarons rod, are not more early, then laſting: the ſame hand which brought them out before their time, preſerued them beyond their time; and for perpetuall memorie, both rod and fruit muſt bee kept in the Arke of God. The Tables of Moſes, the rod of Aaron, the Manna of God, are monuments fit for ſo holy a ſhrine. The Doctrine, Sacraments and gouernment of Gods people, are precious to him, and muſt be ſo to men. All times ſhall ſee and wonder, how his ancient Church was fed, taught, ruled. Moſes his rod did great miracles, yet I finde it not in the Arke. The rod of Aaron hath this priuiledge, becauſe it caried the miracle ſtill in it ſelfe; whereas the wonders of that other rod were paſſed. Thoſe monuments would God haue continued in his Church, which carie in them the moſt manifeſt euidences of that which they import.

The ſame God, which by many tranſient demonſtrations had approued the calling of Aaron to Iſrael, will now haue a permanent memoriall of their coniunction; that whenſoeuer they ſhould ſee this relike, they ſhould be aſhamed of their preſumption, and infidelity. The name of Aaron was not more plainly written in that rod, then the ſin of Iſrael was in the fruit of it; and how much Iſrael finds their rebellion beaten with this rod, appeares in their preſent relenting, and complaint; Behold we are dead, we periſh. God knowes how to pull downe the biggeſt ſtomack, and can extort glory to his owne Name, from the moſt obſtinate gainſayers.

Of the Brazen Serpent.

SEuen times already hath Iſrael mutined againſt Moſes, and ſeuen times hath either beene threatned, or puniſhed; yet now they fall to it afreſh. As a teaſtie man finds occaſion to chafe at euery trifle: ſo this diſcontented people either finde or make all things troubleſome. One while they haue no water; then bitter; One while no God; then one too many; One while no bread; then bread enough, but too light; One while they will not abide their Gouernours: then they cannot abide their loſſe. Aaron and Miriam were neuer ſo grudged aliue, as they are bewailed dead. Before, they wanted Onions, Garlike, Fleſh-pots; now they want Figs, Vines, Pomegranates, Corne. And as crabid children that cry for euery thing they can thinke of, are whipped by their wiſe mother: So God iuſtly ſerues theſe fond Iſraelites.

It was firſt their way that makes them repine: They were faine to goe round about Idumea; the iourney was long and troubleſome. They had ſent intreaties to Edom for licence of paſſage the next way, reaſonably, ſubmiſſely: It was churliſhly denyed them. Eſau liues ſtill in his poſteritie; Iacob in Iſrael: The combate which they began in Rebeccaes belly, is not yet ended. Amalec, which was one limme of Eſau, followes them at the heeles; The Edomite, which was another, meets them in the face: So long as there is a world, there will be oppoſition to the choſen of God. They may come at their perill; the way had beene nearer, but bloody; they dare not goe it, and yet complaine of length.

If they were afraid to purchaſe their reſting place with war, how much leſſe would they their paſſage? What ſhould God doe with impatient men? They will not goe the neareſt way, and yet complaine to goe about. Hee that will paſſe to the promiſed Land, muſt neither ſtand vpon length of way, nor difficulty. Euery way hath his inconueniencies: the neareſt hath more danger, the fartheſt hath more paine; Either, or both muſt be ouercome, if euer we will enter the reſt of God.

Aaron and Miriam were now paſt the danger of their mutinies; for want of another match, they ioyne God with Moſes, in their murmurings: Though they had not mentioned him, they could not ſeuer him in their inſurrection; For, in the cauſes of his owne ſeruants, he challenges euen when he is not challenged. What will become of thee, O Iſrael, when thou makeſt thy Maker thine enemy? Impatience is the couſin to Frenſie: this cauſes men not to care vpon whom they run, ſo they may breathe out ſome reuenge. How oft haue we heard men that haue beene diſpleaſed by others, teare the name of their Maker in pieces? Hee that will iudge, and can confound, is fetcht into the quarrell without cauſe. But if to ſtriue with a mighty man be vnwiſe, and vnſafe, what ſhall it be to ſtriue with the mighty God?

As an angry child caſts away that which is giuen him, becauſe hee hath not that hee would: ſo doe theſe fooliſh Iſraelites; their bread is light, and their water vnſatisfying, becauſe their way diſpleaſed them. Was euer people fed with ſuch bread, or water? Twice hath the very Rocke yeelded them water, and euery day the heauen affords them bread. Did any one ſoule amongſt them miſcarie, either for hunger, or thirſt? But no bread will downe with them, ſaue that which the earth yeelds; no water but from the naturall Wels, or Riuers. Vnleſſe nature may be allowed to bee her owne caruer, ſhe is neuer contented.

Manna had no fault, but that it was too good, and too frequent: the pulſe of Egypt had been fitter for theſe coorſe mouths: This heauenly bread was vnſpeakably delicious: it taſted like wafers of hony, and yet euen this Angels food is contemned. He that is full deſpiſeth an hony-combe. How ſweet and delicate is the Goſpel! Not onely the Fathers of the Old Teſtament, but the Angels deſired to looke into the glorious myſteries of it, and yet we are cloyed. This ſupernaturall food is too light: the bread-corne of our humane reaſon, and profound diſcourſe, would better content vs.

Moſes will not reuenge this wrong, God will; yet will he not deale with them himſelfe, but he ſends the fiery Serpents to anſwer for him: How fitly! They had caried themſelues like ſerpents to their gouernors: how oft had they ſtung Moſes and Aaron, neere to death? If the Serpent bite when he is not charmed, no better is a ſlanderer. Now theſe venemous Adders reuenge it; which are therefore called fiery, becauſe their poiſon ſcalded to death; God hath an hand in the annoyance and hurt of the baſeſt creature; how much leſſe can the ſting of an ill tongue, or the malice of an ill ſpirit, ſtrike vs without him? Whiles they were in Goſhen, the Frogs, Lice, Caterpillers ſpared them, and plagued the Egyptians; now they are rebellious in the Deſart, the ſerpents find them out, and ſting them to death. Hee that brought the Quailes thither to feed them, fetches theſe Serpents thither to puniſh them. While we are at warres with God, we can looke for no peace with his creatures: Euery thing reioyces to execute the vengeance of his Maker. The ſtones of the field will not be in league with vs, while we are not in league with God.

Theſe men, when the Spyes had told them newes of the Gyants of Canaan, a little before had wiſht, Would God we were dead in this wilderneſſe: Now God hath heard their prayers, what with the Plague, what with the Serpents, many thouſands of them dyed. The ill wiſhes of our impatience are many times heard. As thoſe good things are not granted vs, which we pray for, without care; ſo thoſe euills which wee pray for, and would not haue, are oft granted. The eares of God are not onely open to the prayers of faith, but to the imprecations of infidelity. It is dangerous wiſhing euill to our ſelues, or ours; It is iuſt with God to take vs at our word, and to effect that, which our lips ſpeake againſt our heart.

Before, God hath euer conſulted with Moſes; and threatned, ere he puniſht: now he ſtrikes, and ſayes nothing. The anger is ſo much more, by how much leſſe notified. When God is not heard before he is felt, (as in the hewing of wood, the blow is not heard, till the axe be ſeene to haue ſtrooke) it is a fearfull ſigne of diſpleaſure: It is with God, as with vs men, that ſtill reuenges are euer moſt dangerous. Till now, all was well enough with Iſrael, and yet they grudged; Thoſe that will complaine without a cauſe, ſhall haue cauſe to complaine for ſomething. Diſcontented humours ſeldome ſcape vnpuniſhed; but receiue that moſt iuſtly whereat they repined vniuſtly.

Now the people are glad to ſeeke to Moſes vnbidden. Euer heretofore, they haue beene wont to be ſued to, and intreated for without their owne intreaty; now their miſerie makes them importunate; There need no ſollicitor, where there is ſenſe of ſmart. It were pitty, men ſhould want affliction, ſince it ſends them to their prayers, and confeſſions. All the perſwaſions of Moſes could not doe that which the Serpents haue done for him. O God, thou ſeeſt how neceſſary it is we ſhould be ſtung ſometimes: elſe we ſhould runne wilde, and neuer come to a ſound humiliation; wee ſhould neuer ſeeke thee, if thy hand did not finde vs out.

They had ſpoken againſt God, and Moſes; and now they humbly ſpeake to Moſes that he would pray to God for them. He that ſo oft prayed for them vnbidden, cannot but much more doe it requeſted; and now obtaines the meanes of their cure. It was equally in the power of God, to remoue the Serpents; and to heale their ſtinging; to haue cured the Iſraelites by his word, and by his ſigne: But he finds it beſt for his people (to exerciſe their faith) that the Serpents may bite, and their bitings may inuenome, and that this venome may indanger the Iſraelites; and that they, thus affected, may ſeeke to him for remedy; and ſeeking, may finde it, from ſuch meanes, as ſhould haue no power, but in ſignification; that while their bodies were cured by the ſigne, their ſoules might be confirmed by the matter ſignified. A Serpent of braſſe could no more heale, then ſting them. What remedy could their eyes giue to their legges? Or what could a Serpent of cold braſſe preuaile againſt a liuing and fiery Serpent? In this troubleſome Deſart, we are all ſtung by that fiery and old Serpent; O Sauiour, it is to thee we muſt looke, and be cured; It is thou that wert their Paſchal Lambe, their Manna, their Rocke, their Serpent. To all purpoſes doſt thou vary thy ſelfe to thy Church, that we may finde thee euery-where: Thou art for our nouriſhment, refreſhing, cure; as hereafter, ſo euen now, all in all.

This Serpent which was appointed for cure to Iſrael, at laſt ſtings them to death, by idolatrous abuſe. What poiſon there is in Idolatry, that makes euen Antidotes deadly! As Moſes therefore raiſed this Serpent, ſo Ezekias pulled it downe: God commanded the raiſing of it, God approued the demoliſhing of it. Superſtitious vſe can marre the very inſtitutions of God: how much more the moſt wiſe and well-grounded deuices of men?

Of BALAAM.

MOab and Midian had beene all this while ſtanders by; and lookers on; If they had not ſeene the patterne of their own ruine, in theſe neighbors; it had neuer troubled them, to ſee the kings of the Amorites, and Baſhan to fall before Iſrael. Had not the Iſraelites camped in the Plaines of Moab, their victories had beene no eye-ſore to Balac. Wicked men neuer care to obſerue Gods iudgements, till themſelues be touched; The fire of a neighbours houſe would not ſo affect vs, if it were not with the danger of our owne: Secure mindes neuer ſtartle, till God come home to their very ſenſes.

Balac and his Moabites had wit enough to feare, not wit enough to preuent iudgement: They ſee an enemy in their borders, and yet take no right courſe for their ſafety. Who would not haue looked, that they ſhould haue come to Iſrael, with conditions of peace? Or, why did they not thinke; Either Iſraels God is ſtronger then ours, or he is not? If he be not, Why are we afraid of him? If he be, Why doe we not ſerue him? The ſame hand which giues them victorie, can giue vs protection. Carnall men that are ſecure of the vengeance of God, ere it doe come, are maſtered with it, when it doth come; and not knowing which way to turne them, run forth at the wrong doore.

The Midianites ioyne with the Moabites, in conſultation, in action againſt Iſrael. One would haue thought, they ſhould haue looked for fauour from Moſes, for Iethroes ſake; which was both a Prince of their Country, and father in law to Moſes; and either now, or not long before, was with Iſrael in the Wilderneſſe. Neither is it like, but that Moſes hauing found forty yeeres harbour amongſt them, would haue beene (what he might) inclinable to fauourable treaties with them: but now, they are ſo faſt linked to Moab, that they will either ſinke or ſwim together. Intireneſſe with wicked conſorts is one of the ſtrongeſt chaines of Hell, and bindes vs to a participation both of ſin, and puniſhment: An eaſie occaſion will knit wicked hearts together, in conſpiracy againſt the Church of God.

Their errand is deuilliſh (Come curſe Iſrael:) That which Satan could not do by the ſwords of Og and Sehon, he will now try to effect, by the tongue of Balaam. If either ſtrength, or policie would preuaile againſt Gods Church, it could not ſtand. And why ſhould not wee bee as induſtrious to promote the glory of God, and bend both our hands and heads to the cauſes of the Almighty? When all helpes faile Moab, the Magician is ſought to. It is a ſigne of a deſperate cauſe, to make Satan either our Counſellor, or our refuge.

Why did they not ſend to Balaam to bleſſe themſelues, rather then to curſe Iſrael? It had beene more eaſie to be defended from the hurt of their enemies, then to haue their enemies laid open to be hurt by them. Pride and malice did not care ſo much for ſafety, as for conqueſt: It would not content them to eſcape Iſrael, if Iſrael may eſcape them; It was not thank-worthy, to ſaue their own blood, if they did not ſpill the blood of others; As if their owne proſperitie had beene nothing, if Iſrael alſo proſpered. If there bee one proiect worſe then another, a wicked heart will finde it out: Nothing but deſtruction will content the malicious.

I know not whether Balaam were more famous, or Balac more confident. If the King had not beene perſwaded of the ſtrength of his charm, he had not ſent ſo far, and payd ſo deare for it; now he truſts more to his inchantment, then to the forces of Moab, and Midian: and (as if heauen and earth were in the power of the charmers tongue) he ſaith, He that thou bleſſeſt, is bleſſed; and hee whom thou curſeſt, is curſed. Magicke, through the permiſſion of God, is powerfull; for whatſoeuer the Deuill can doe, the Magician may doe; but it is madneſſe to thinke either of them omnipotent. If either the curſes of men, or the indeauors of the powers of darkneſſe, ſhould be effectuall, all would be Hell. No, Balac: So ſhort is the power of thy Balaam, that neither thou, nor thy prophet himſelfe, can auoid that curſe, which thou wouldeſt haue brought vpon Iſrael. Had Balaam beene a true Prophet of God, this bold aſſurance had been but iuſt. Both thoſe ancient Seers, and the Prophets of the Goſpel haue the ratification of God in heauen, to their ſentences on earth. Why haue wee leſſe care of the bleſſings, and leſſe feare of the curſes and cenſures of Gods Miniſters? Who would not rather haue Eliſhaes guard, then both the Kings of Iſrael, and Aſſyria? He himſelfe as hee had the Angelical chariots and horſemen about him, ſo was he the chariots and horſemen of Iſrael. Why ſhould our faith be leſſe ſtrong then ſuperſtition? Or why ſhould Gods agents haue leſſe vertue then Satans?

I ſhould wonder to heare God ſpeake with a falſe prophet, if I did not know, it hath beene no rare thing with him (as with men) to beſtow words, euen where hee will not beſtow fauour. Pharaoh, Abimelec, Nebuchadnezzar, receiue viſions from God: neither can I thinke this ſtrange, when I heare God ſpeaking to Satan, in a queſtion no leſſe familiar then this of Balaam, Whence com'ſt thou, Satan? Not the ſound of the voice of God, but the matter which he ſpeakes, argues loue: Hee may ſpeake to an enemy; he ſpeakes peace to none, but his owne. It is a vaine bragge, God hath ſpoken to me. So may he doe to reprobates, or Deuils. But what ſaid he? Did he ſay to my ſoule, I am thy ſaluation? Hath he indented with me that he will be my God, and I ſhall be his? I cannot heare this voice and not liue.

God heard all the conſultation, and meſſage of theſe Moabites; theſe meſſengers could not haue moued their foot, or their tongue, but in him: and yet he which asked Adam, where he was, askes Balaam, What men are theſe? I haue euer ſeene, that God loues to take occaſion of proceeding with vs from our ſelues, rather then from his owne immediate preſcience. Hence it is, that we lay open our wants, and confeſſe our ſinnes, to him that knowes both, better then our own hearts, becauſe he will deale with vs from our owne mouthes.

The preuention of God, forbids both his iourney, and his curſe. And what if he had beene ſuffered to goe and curſe? What corne had this wind ſhaken, when God meant to bleſſe them? How many Buls haue bellowed out execrations againſt this Church of God? What are we the worſe? Yea I doubt, if we had bin ſo much bleſſed, had not thoſe Balaamitiſh curſes beene ſpent vpon vs. He that knowes what waſte winde the cauſeleſſe curſes of wicked men are, yet will not haue Balaam curſe Iſrael; becauſe he will not allow Balac ſo much incouragement, in his oppoſition, as the conceit of this helpe. Or perhaps, if Balac thought this Sorcerer a true Prophet, God would not haue his Name, ſo much, as in the opinion of the heathen, ſcandalized, in vſurping it to a purpoſe, which he meant not ſhould ſucceed.

The hand of God is in the reſtraint of many euils, which we neuer knew to be towards vs. The Iſraelites ſate ſtill in their Tents, they little thought what miſchiefe was brewing againſt them: without euer making them of counſell, God croſſes the deſignes of their enemies. He that keepeth Iſrael, is both a ſure and a ſecret friend: The reward of the diuination had eaſily commanded the iourney, and curſe of the couetous prophet, if God had not ſtayed him. How oft are wicked men curſed by a diuine hand, euen in thoſe ſins, which their heart ſtands to? It is no thank to lewd men that their wickedneſſe is not proſperous. Whence is it that the world is not ouer-run with euill, but from this; that men cannot be ſo ill as they would?

The firſt entertainment of this meſſage, would make a ſtranger thinke Balaam wiſe, and honeſt: He will not giue a ſudden anſwer, but craues leaſure to conſult with God, and promiſes to returne the anſwer he ſhall receiue. Who would not ſay; This man is free from raſhneſſe, from partiality? Diſſimulation is crafty, and able to deceiue thouſands. The words are good: when he comes to action, the fraud bewrayes it ſelfe: For, both he inſinuates his owne forwardneſſe, and caſts the blame of the prohibition, vpon God, and (which is worſe) deliuers but halfe his anſwer : he ſayes indeed, God refuſes to giue them leaue to goe : He ſayes not, as it was, He charges me not to curſe them, for they are bleſſed. So did Balaam deny, as one that wiſht to be ſent for againe. Perhaps a peremptory refuſall had hindered his further ſolicitation. Concealement of ſome truths, is ſometimes as faulty, as a deniall. True fidelitie is not niggardly in her relations.

Where wickedneſſe meets with power, it thinkes to command all the world, and takes great ſcorne of any repulſe. So little is Balac diſcouraged with one refuſall, that he ſends ſo much the ſtronger meſſage; Mo Princes, and more honourable. Oh that wee could be ſo importunate for our good, as wicked men are for the compaſſing of their owne deſignes! A deniall doth but whet the deſires of vehement ſuitors. Why are we faint in ſpirituall things, when we are not denied, but delayed?

Thoſe which are themſelues tranſported with vanity, and ambition, thinke that no heart hath power to reſiſt theſe offers. Balacs Princes thought they had ſtrooke it dead, when they had once mentioned promotion to great honour. Selfe-loue makes them thinke they cannot be ſlaues, whiles others may be free; and that all the world would be glad to runne on madding after their bait. Nature thinks it impoſſible to contemne honour and wealth; and becauſe too many ſoules are thus taken, cannot beleeue that any would eſcape. But let carnall hearts know, there are thoſe can ſpit the world in the face, and ſay, Thy Gold and ſiluer periſh with thee: and that in compariſon of a good conſcience, can tread vnder foot his beſt proffers, like ſhadowes, as they are; and that can doe as Balaam ſaid.

How neere, truth, and falſhood can lodge together! Here was piety in the lips, and couetouſneſſe in the heart. Who can any more regard good words, that heares Balaam ſpeake ſo like a Saint? An houſefull of gold and ſiluer may not peruert his tongue, his heart is won with leſſe: for if he had not already ſwallowed the reward, and found it ſweet, why did he againe ſolicit God, in that which was peremptorily denyed him? If his minde had not beene bribed already, why did he ſtay the meſſenger? why did he expect a change in God? why was he willing to feed them with hope of ſucceſſe, which had fed him with hope of recompence? One prohibition is enough for a good man. Whiles the delay of God doth but hold vs in ſuſpence, importunitie is holy and ſeaſonable : but when once he giues a reſolute deniall, it is prophane ſaucineſſe to ſolicit him. When we aske what we are bidden, our ſuites are not more vehement then welcome : but when we begge prohibited fauours, our preſnmption is troubleſome, and abhominable : No good heart will endure to be twice forbidden.

Yet this importunitie had obtained a permiſſion; but a permiſſion, worſe then a deniall. I heard God ſay, before; Goe not, nor curſe them; Now he ſayes, Goe, but curſe not. Anon, he is angry that he did goe. Why did he permit that which he forbade, if he be angry for doing that which he permitted? Some things God permits with an indignation; not for that he giues leaue to the act, but that he giues a man ouer to his ſinne in the act; this ſufferance implies not fauour, but iudgement : ſo did God bid Balaam to goe, as Salomon bids the yong man follow the wayes of his owne heart. It is one thing to like, another thing to ſtffur; Moſes neuer appoued thoſe legall diuorces, yet he tolerated them : God neuer liked Balaams iourney, yet he diſpleaſedly giues way to it: as if he ſaid; Well, ſince thou art ſo hot, ſet on this iourney, be gone. And thus Balaam tooke it : elſe, when God after profeſſed his diſpleaſure for the iourney, it had beene a ready anſwer, Thou commandedſt me: but herein his confeſſion argues his guilt. Balaams ſuite, and Iſraels Quailes had both one faſhion of grant; in anger. How much better is it, to haue gracious denyals, then angry yeeldings?

A ſmall perſwaſion hartens the willing : It booted not to bid the couetous prophet haſten to his way. Now he makes himſelfe ſure of ſucceſſe: His corrupt heart tels him, that as God had relented in his licence to goe, ſo he might perhaps, in his licence to curſe; and he ſaw how this curſe might bleſſe him with abundance of wealth : hee roſe vp earely therefore and ſadled his Aſſe. The night ſeemed long to his forwardneſſe.

Couetous men need neither clocke nor bell to awaken them: their deſires make them reſtleſſe. O that we could, with as much eagerneſſe ſecke the true riches, which onely can make vs happy!

We that ſee onely the out-ſide of Balaam, may maruell, why he that permitted him to goe, afterward oppoſes his going: but God that ſaw his heart, perceiued what corrupt affections caried him: hee ſaw, that his couetous deſires and wicked hopes, grew the ſtronger, the neerer he came to his end: An Angell is therefore ſent to with-hold the haſty Sorcerer. Our inward diſpoſition, is the life of our actions; according to that doth the God of ſpirits iudge vs, whiles men cenſure according to our externall motions. To goe at all, when God had commanded to ſtay, was preſumptuous: but to goe with deſire to curſe, made the act doubly ſinfull, and fetcht an Angell to reſiſt it. It is one of the worthy imployments of good Angels, to make ſecret oppoſition to euill deſignes: Many a wicked act haue they hindered, without the knowledge of the agent. It is all one with the Almighty, to worke by Spirits, and men; It is therefore our glory to bee thus ſet on worke: To ſtop the courſe of euill, either by diſſwaſion, or violence, is an Angelicall ſeruice.

In what danger are wicked men, that haue Gods Angels their oppoſites? The Deuill moued him to goe; a good Angell reſiſts him. If an heauenly Spirit ſtand in the way of a Sorcerers ſinne, how much more ready are all thoſe ſpirituall powers, to ſtop the miſcariages of Gods deare children? How oft had we fallen yet more, if theſe Guardians had not vpheld vs, whether by remouing occaſions, or by caſting in good inſtincts? As our good indeauours are oft hindered by Satan; ſo are our euill, by good Angels: elſe were not our protection equall to our danger; and wee could neither ſtand nor riſe.

It had beene as eaſie for the Angell to ſtrike Balaam, as to ſtand in his way; and to haue followed him in his ſtarting aſide, as to ſtop him in a narrow path: But euen the good Angels haue their ſtints, in their executions. God had ſomewhat more to doe with the tongue of Balaam, and therefore he will not haue him ſlaine, but withſtood: and ſo withſtood, that hee ſhall paſſe. It is not ſo much glory to God, to take away wicked men, as to vſe their euill to his owne holy purpoſes. How ſoone could the Commander of heauen and earth rid the world of bad members? But ſo ſhould hee loſe the praiſe of working good by euill inſtruments. It ſufficeth that the Angels of God reſiſt their actions, while their perſons continue.

That no man may maruell to ſee Balaam haue viſions from God, and vtter prophecies from him; his very Aſſe hath his eyes opened, to ſee the Angell, which his Maſter could not; and his mouth opened to ſpeak more reaſonably then his Maſter. There is no beaſt deſerues ſo much wonder, as this of Balaam, whoſe common ſenſe is aduanced aboue the reaſon of his rider; ſo as for the time the prophet is bruitiſh, and the beaſt propheticall. Who can but ſtand amazed at the eye, at the tongue of this ſilly creature? For ſo dull a ſight, it was much to ſee a bodily obiect, that were not too apparent: but to ſee that ſpirit, which his rider diſcerned not, was farre beyond nature. To heare a voyce come from that mouth, which was vſed onely to bray, it was ſtrange, and vncouth: but to heare a beaſt, whoſe nature is noted for incapacitie, to outreaſon his Maſter, a profeſſed Prophet, is in the very height of miracles: Yet can no heart ſticke at theſe, that conſiders the diſpenſation of the Almighty, in both. Our eye could no more ſee a beaſt, then a beaſt can ſee an Angell, if he had not giuen this power to it. How eaſie is it for him that made the eye of man and beaſt to dimme, or inlighten it at his pleaſure! And if his power can make the very ſtones to ſpeake, how much more a creature of ſenſe? That euill ſpirit ſpake in the Serpent to our firſt Parents; Why is it more that a ſpirit ſhould ſpeake in the mouth of a beaſt? How ordinarily did the heathen receiue their Oracles out of ſtones, and trees? Do not we our ſelues teach birds to ſpeak thoſe ſentences they vnderſtand not? We may wonder, we cannot diſtruſt, when we compare the act with the Author; which can as eaſily create a voyce, without a body, as a body without a voyce. Who now can hereafter plead his ſimplicity, and dulneſſe of apprehending ſpirituall things, when he ſees how God exalts the eies of a beaſt, to ſee a ſpirit? Who can be proud of ſeeing viſions, ſince an Angell appeared to a beaſt? neither was his skinne better after it, then others of his kind. Who can complaine of his owne rudeneſſe, and inabilitie to reply in a good cauſe, when the very beaſt is inabled by God, to conuince his Maſter? There is no mouth, into which God cannot put words: and how oft doth he chooſe the weake, and vnwiſe, to confound the learned, and mighty!

What had it beene better for the Aſſe to ſee the Angell, if he had ruſhed ſtill vpon his ſword? Euils were as good not ſeen, as not auoyded; But now he declines the way, and saues his burthen. It were happy for peruerſe ſinners, If they could learne of this beaſt, to runne away from fore-ſeene iudgements. The reuenging Angell ſtands before vs; and though we know we ſhall as ſure die, as ſinne: yet we haue not the wit or grace to giue backe; though it be with the hurt of a foot, to ſaue the body; with the paine of the body, to ſaue the ſoule.

I ſee, what fury and ſtripes the impotent Prophet beſtowes vpon this poore beaſt, becauſe he will not goe on; yet if he had gone on, himſelfe had periſhed. How oft doe we wiſh thoſe things, the not obtaining whereof is mercy? We grudge to be ſtayd in the way to death, and fly vpon thoſe which oppoſe our perdition.

I doe not (as who would not expect) ſee Balaams haire ſtand vpright, nor himſelfe alighting, and appaled at this monſter of miracles: But, as if no new thing had happened, he returnes words to the beaſt, full of anger, voyd of admiration; Whether his trade of ſorcering had ſo inured him to receiue voyces from his Familiars, in ſhape of beaſts, that this euent ſeemed not ſtrange to him; Or, whether his rage, and couetouſneſſe had ſo tranſported him, that he had no leaſure to obſerue the vnnaturall vnuſualneſſe of the euent. Some men make nothing of thoſe things, which ouercome others with horror, and aſtoniſhment.

I heare the Angell of God taking notice of the crueltie of Balaam to his beaſt: His firſt words to the vnmercifull prophet, are in expoſtulating of his wrong. Wee little thinke it; but God ſhall call vs to an account, for the vnkind and cruell vſages of his poore mute creatures: He hath made vs Lords, not tyrants; owners, not tomenters: hee that hath giuen vs leaue to kill them, for our vſe, hath not giuen vs leaue to abuſe them, at our pleaſure; they are ſo our drudges, that they are our fellowes by creation. It was a ſigne, the Magican would eaſily wiſh to ſtrike Iſrael with a curſe, when hee wiſhed a ſword to ſtrike his harmeleſſe beaſt. It is ill falling into thoſe hands, whom beaſts finde vnmercifull.

Notwithſtanding theſe rubs, Balaam goes on, and is not afraid to ride on that beaſt, whoſe voyce he had heard: And now, Poſts are ſped to Balac, with the newes of ſo welcome a gueſt: Hee that ſent Princes to fetch him, comes himſelfe on the way to meet him; Although hee can ſay; (Am not I able to promote thee?) yet hee giues this high reſpect to him as his better, from whom hee expected the promotion of himſelfe, and his people. Oh the honor that hath beene formerly done by Heathens, to them that haue borne but the face of Prophets! I ſhame, and grieue to compare the times and men: Onely, O God, bee thou mercifull to the contempt of thy ſeruants.

As if nothing needed but the preſence of Balaam, the ſuperſtitious King (out of the ioy of his hope) feaſts his gods, his Prophet, his Princes; and on the morrow, caries him vp to the high places of his Idol. Who can doubt whether Balaam were a falſe prophet, that ſees him ſacrificing in the mount of Baal? Had he beene from the true God, he would rather haue ſaid, Pull me downe theſe altars of Baal, then Build me here ſeuen others. The very place conuinces him of falſhood, and Idolatry; And why ſeuen Altars? What needs all this pompe? When the true God neuer required but one at once, as himſelfe is one; why doth the falſe Prophet call for no leſſe then ſeuen? As if God ſtood vpon nũbers? As if the Almighty would haue his power either diuided, or limited? Here is nothing, but a glorious and magnificent pretence of deuotion. It hath beene euer ſeen, that the falſe worſhippers of God haue made more pompous ſhewes, and fairer flouriſhes of their piety, and religion, then the true.

Now when Balaam ſees his ſeuen bullockes and ſeuen rams ſmoking vpon his ſeuen Altars, hee goes vp higher into the mount (as ſome counterfeit Moſes) to receiue the anſwere of God. But will God meet with a Sorcerer? Will hee make a Prophet of a Magician? O man, who ſhall preſcribe God what inſtruments to vſe? He knowes how to imploy, not only Saints, and Angels, but wicked men, Beaſts, Diuels, to his own glory: He that put words into the mouth of the Aſſe, puts words into the mouth of Balaam: The words doe but paſſe from him; They are not polluted, becauſe they are not his; as the Trunke, thorow which a man ſpeakes, is not more eloquent for the ſpeech that is vttered thorow it. What a notable proclamation had the Infidels wanted of God fauour to his people, if Balaams tongue had not beene vſed? How many ſhall once ſay, Lord, we haue prophecied in thy name, that ſhall heare, Verely I know you not.

What madneſſe is this in Balaam? Hee that found himſelfe conſtant in ſolliciting, thinkes to finde God not conſtant in denying; and, as if that infinite Deity were not the ſame euery where, hopes to change ſucceſſe, with places. Neither is that bold forehead aſhamed to importune God againe in that, wherein his owne mouth had teſtified an aſſurance of deniall. The reward was in one of his eyes; the reuenging Angell in the other: I know not whether (for the time) hee more loued the bribe, or feared the Angell. And whiles hee is in this diſtraction, his tongue bleſſes againſt his heart; and his heart curſes againſt his tongue. It angers him that hee dare not ſpeake what he would; and now at laſt, rather then loſe his hopes, he reſolues to ſpeake worſe then curſes. The feare of Gods iudgments in a worldly heart, is at length ouercome with the loue of gaine.

Of PHINEAS.

BAlaam pretended an haſte homeward: but he lingred ſo long that hee left his bones in Midian. How iuſtly did he periſh with the ſword of Iſrael, whoſes tongue had inſenſibly ſlaine ſo many thouſands of them? As it is vſually ſaid of the Deuill, that he goes away in a ſtench; ſo may it truely bee ſaid of this Prophet of his: According to the faſhion of all hypocrites, his words were good, his actions abominable; He would not curſe, but hee would aduiſe; and his counſell is worſe then a curſe: For his curſe had hurt none but himſelfe; his counſell coſt the blood of 24000 Iſraelites. Hee that had heard God ſpeake by Balaam, would not looke for the Deuill, in the ſame mouth. And if God himſelfe had not witneſſed againſt him, who could beleeue that the ſame tongue which vttered ſo diuine propheſies, ſhould vtter ſo villanous and curſed aduice? Hypocriſie gaines this of men, that it may doe euill, vnſuſpected: But now, hee that heard what hee ſpake in Balaks eare, hath bewrayed, and condemned his counſell, and himſelfe.

This policie was fetcht from the bottome of hell. It is not for lacke of deſire, that I curſe not Iſrael; thou doeſt not more wiſh their deſtruction, then I doe thy wealth, and honor: But ſo long as they hold firme with God, there is no ſorcery againſt Iacob; withdraw God from them, and they ſhall fall alone, and curſe themſelues; Draw them into ſinne, and thou ſhalt with-draw God from them. There is no ſinne more plauſible then wantonneſſe; One fornication ſhall draw in another, and both ſhall fetch the anger of God after them; ſend your faireſt women into their tents, their ſight ſhall draw them to luſt, their luſt to folly, their folly to Idolatry : and now God ſhall curſe them for thee vnasked. Where Balaam did ſpeake well, their was neuer any Prophet ſpake more diuinely : where he ſpake ill, there was neuer any Deuill ſpake more deſperately : Ill counſell ſeldome ſucceedeth not : God ſeed fals often out of the way, and rootes not, but the tares neuer light amiſſe. This proiect of the wicked Magician was too proſperous. The daughters of Moab come into the tents of Iſrael, and haue captiued thoſe, whom the Amorites and Amalekites could not reſiſt. Our firſt mother Eue bequeathed this dowry to her daughters, that they ſhould bee our helpers to ſinne; the weaker ſexe is the ſtonger, in this conqueſt : had the Moabites ſent their ſubtilleſt Councellors, to perſwade the Iſraelites to their Idol-ſacrifices; they had beene repelled with ſcorne : but now the beauty of their women is ouer-eloquent, and ſucceſſefull. That which in the firſt world betrayed the ſonnes of God, hath now enſnared Gods people; It had beene happy for Iſrael, if Balaam had vſed any charmes, but theſe. As it is the vſe of GOD to fetch glory to himſelfe out of the worſt actions of Satan; ſo it is the guiſe of that euill one (through the iuſt permiſſion of the Almighty) to raiſe aduantage to himſelfe, from the faireſt peeces of the workmanſhip of God : No one meanes hath ſo much enriched hell, as beautifull faces.

All Idols are abominable : but this of Baal-Peor, was beſides the ſuperſtition of it, beaſtly; Neither did Baal euer put on a forme of ſo much ſhame, as this ; yet very Iſraelites are drawne to adore it. When luſt hath blinded the eyes, it caries a man whither it liſts; euen beyond all differences of ſinne. A man beſotted with filthy deſires, is fit for any villany.

Sinne is no leſſe crafty, then Satan himſelfe : but giue him but roome in the eye, and he will ſoone be poſſeſſed of body and ſoule. Theſe Iſraelites firſt ſaw the faces of theſe Moabites and Midianites, then they grew to like their preſence, from thence to take pleaſure in their feaſt : From their boords, they are drawne to their beds, from their beds, to their Idols, and now they are ioyned to Baal-Peor, and ſeparated from God. Bodily fornication is the way to ſpirituall: If we haue made Idols of fleſh, it is iuſt to be giuen vp to Idols of wood, and ſtones. If we haue not grace to reſiſt the beginnings of ſinne, where ſhall we ſtay? If our foot ſlip into the mouth of hell, it is a miracle to ſtop ere we come to the bottome.

Well might God bee angry, to ſee his people goe a whoring in this double fornication; neither doth he ſmoother his wrath, but himſelfe ſtrikes with his plague, and bids Moſes ſtrike with the ſword. Hee ſtrikes the body, and bids Moſes ſtrike the head. It had beene as eaſie for him to plague the Rulers, as the vulgar : and one would thinke, theſe ſhould be more properly reſerued for his immediate hand; and theſe he leaues to the ſword of humane authority, that hee might winne awe to his owne ordinances. As the ſinnes of great men are exemplary, ſo are their puniſhments. Nothing procures ſo much credit to gouernment, as ſtrict and impartiall executions of great and noble offenders. Thoſe whom their ſinnes haue imbaſed, deſerue no fauour in the puniſhment. As God knowes no honour, no royalty in matter of ſinne, no more may his Deputies. Contrarily, conniuence at the outrages of the mighty, cuts the ſinewes of any State; neither doth any thing make good lawes more contemptible, then the making difference of offenders; that ſmall ſacriledges ſhould be puniſhed, when great ones ride in rriumph. If good ordinations turne once to Spiders webs, which are broken thorow by the bigger Flyes, no hand will feare to ſweepe them downe.

God was angry; Moſes and all good Iſraelites grieued; the heads hanged vp; the people plagued : yet behold, one of the Princes of Iſrael feares not to braue God and his Miniſters, in that ſinne which he ſees ſo grieuouſly reuenged in others. I can neuer wonder enough at the impudence of this Iſraelite. Here is fornication, an odious crime and that of an Iſraelite, whoſe name challenges holineſſe; yea, of a Prince of Iſrael, whole practice is a rule to inferiours; and that with a woman of Midian, with whom euen a chaſt contract had beene vnlawfull, and that with contempt of all gouernment; and that in the face of Moſes, and all Iſrael; and that in a time of mourning, and iudgement, for that ſame offence. Thoſe that haue once paſſed the bounds of modeſty, ſoone grow ſhameleſſe in their ſinnes. Whiles ſinne hides it ſelfe in corners, there is yet hope; for, where there is ſhame, there is poſſibility of grace: but when once it dare looke vpon the Sunne, and ſends challenges to authority, the caſe is deſperate, and ripe for iudgment. This great Simeonite thought hee might ſinne by priuiledge; He goes, as if he ſaid, Who dares controll me? His nobility hath raiſed him aboue the reach of correction. Commonly, the ſinnes of the mighty are not without preſumption: and therefore their vengeance is no leſſe then their ſecurity: and their puniſhment is ſo much greater, as their conceit of impunity is greater. All Iſrael ſaw this bold lewdneſſe of Zimri, but their hearts and eyes were ſo full of griefe, that they had not roome enough for indignation. Phineas lookt on with the reſt, but with other affections. When he ſaw this defiance bidden to God; and this inſultation vpon the ſorrow of his people, that whiles they were wringing their hands, a proud miſcreant durſt out-face their humiliation, with his wicked dalliance; his hart boiles with a deſire of an holy reuenge: and now that hand, which was vſed to a Cenſer, and ſacrificing knife, takes vp his Iauelin, and with one ſtroke ioynes theſe two bodies in their death, which were ioyned in their ſin; and in the very flagrance of their luſt, makes a new way for their ſoules, to their owne place. O noble and heroicall courage of Phineas! which as it was rewarded of God, ſo is worthy to be admired of men. He doth not ſtand caſting of ſcruple: Who am I to doe this? The ſon of the high Prieſt; My place is all for peace and mercy; It is for me to ſacrifice, and pray for the ſinne of the people, not to ſacrifice any of the people, for their ſinne. My duty calls me to appeaſe the anger of God, what I may, not to reuenge the ſins of men, to pray for their conuerſion, not to worke the confuſion of any ſinner: and who are theſe? Is not the one a great Prince in Iſrael, the other a Princeſſe of Midian? Can the death of two ſo famous perſons go vnreuenged? Or if it be ſafe, and fit, why doth my vncle Moſes rather ſhead his owne teares, then their blood? I will mourne with the reſt: let them reuenge whom it concerneth. But the zeale of God hath barred out all weake deliberations; and he holds it now both his duty, and his glory, to be an executioner of ſo ſhameleſſe a paire of offenders.

God loues this heat of zeale, in all the cariages of his ſeruants: And if it tranſport vs too farre, he pardoneth the errors of our feruency, rather then the indifferences of lukewarmneſſe. As theſe two were more beaſts, then any that euer hee ſacrificed, ſo the ſhedding of their blood, was the acceptableſt ſacrifice, that euer hee offered vnto God: for both all Iſrael is freed from the plague, and all his poſterity haue the Prieſthood entayled to them, ſo long as the Iewes were a people. Next to our prayers, there is no better ſacrifice, then the blood of malefactors; not as it is theirs, but as it is ſhed by authority. Gouernors are faulty of thoſe ſinns they puniſh not. There can bee no better ſight in any State, then to ſee a malefactor at the Gallowes. It is not enough for vs, to ſtand gazing vpon the wickedneſſe of the times (yea although with teares) vnleſſe wee endeauor to redreſſe it: eſpecially publike perſon cary not their Iauelin in their hand for nought.

Euery one is ready to aske Phineas for his commiſſion: and thoſe that are willing to ſalue vp the act, plead extraordinary inſtinct from God; who (no doubt) would not haue accepted that, which himſelfe wrought not. But what need I run ſo farre for this warrant? when I heare God ſay to Moſes, Hang vp all the heads of Iſrael; and Moſes ſay to the Vnder-Rulers, Euery one ſlay his men, that are ioyned to Baal-Peor. Euery Iſraelite is now made a Magiſtrate for this execution; and why not Phineas, amongſt the reſt? Doth his Prieſthood exempt him from the blood of ſinners? How then doth Samuel hew Agag in peices? Euen thoſe may make a carkaſſe, which may not touch it. And if Leui got the Prieſthood, by ſhedding the blood of Idolaters; why may it not ſtand with that Prieſthood, to ſpill the blood of a fornicator, and Idolater? Ordinary iuſtice will beare out Phineas in this act; It is not for euery man to challenge this office, this which double proclamation allowed to Phineas. All that priuate perſons can doe, is either to lift vp their hands to heauen for redreſſe of ſinne; or to lift vp their hands againſt the ſinne, not againſt the perſon. Who made thee a Iudge, is a lawfull queſtion, if it meet with a perſon vnwarranted.

Now the ſinne is puniſhed, the plague ceaſeth. The reuenge of God ſets out euer after the ſinne; but if the reuenge of men (which commonly comes later) can ouertake it, God giues ouer the chaſe. How oft hath the infliction of a leſſe puniſhment, auoyded a greater. There are none ſo good friends to the State, as couragious and impartiall miniſters of iuſtice. Theſe are the reconcilers of God and the people, more then the prayers of them that ſit ſtill, and doe nothing.

Of the death of Moses.

AFter many painefull and perillous enterpriſes, now is Moſes drawing to his reſt. He hath brought his Iſraelites frō Egypt, thorow the Sea and wilderneſſe, within the ſight of their promiſed Land; and now himſelfe muſt take poſſeſſion of that Land whereof Canaan was but a type. When we haue done that we came for, it is time for vs to be gone; This earth is made only for action, not for fruition; the ſeruices of Gods children ſhould bee ill rewarded, if they muſt ſtay here alwaies. Let no man thinke much, that thoſe are fetcht away which are faithfull to God; they ſhould not change, if it were not to their preferment. It is our folly that wee would haue good men liue for euer, and account it an hard meaſure that they were. Hee that lends them to the world, owes them a better turne then this earth can pay them. It were iniurious to wiſh, that goodneſſe ſhould hinder any man from glory. So is the death of Gods Saints precious, that it is certaine.

Moſes muſt goe vp to mount Nebo, and die. The time, the place, and euery circumſtance of his diſſolution, is determined. That one dyes in the field, another in his bed, another in the water: one in a forraine Nation, another in his owne, is foredecreed in heauen. And, though wee heare it not vocally, yet God hath called euery man by his name, and ſaith, Dye thou there. One man ſeemes to dye caſually, another by an inexpected violence: both fall by a deſtiny; and all is ſet downe to vs by an eternall decree. He that brought vs into the world, will carry vs out according to his owne purpoſes.

Moſes muſt aſcend vp to the hill to dye. He receiued his charge for Iſrael, vpon the hill of Sinai; And now hee deliuers vp his charge, on the hill of Nebo: His brother Aaron dyed on one hill; hee on another. As Chriſt was transfigured on an hill: ſo was this excellent type of his; neither doubt I, but that theſe hills were types to them, of that heauen whither they were aſpiring. It is the goodneſſe of our God, that hee will not haue his children dye any where, but where they may ſee the Land of Promiſe before them; neither can they depart without much comfort, to haue ſeene it: Contrarily, a wicked man that lookes downe, and ſees hell before him, how can hee chooſe but finde more horror in the end of death, then in the way?

How familiarly doth Moſes heare of his end! It is no more betwixt God and Moſes, but goe vp and dye. If he had inuited him to a meale, it could not haue beene in a more ſociable compellation: No otherwiſe then he ſaid to his other Prophet, Vp and eate. It is neither harſh, nor newes to Gods children, to heare or thinke of their departure; To them, death hath loſt his horror, through acquaintance: Thoſe faces which at firſt ſight ſeemed ill-fauoured, by oft viewing, grow out of diſlike: They haue ſo oft thought and reſolued of the neceſſity, and of the iſſue of their diſſolution, that they cannot hold it either ſtrange, or vnwelcome: He that hath had ſuch entire conuerſation with God, cannot feare to goe to him. Thoſe that know him not, or know that he will not know them, no maruell if they tremble.

This is no ſmall fauour; that God warnes Moſes of his end: he that had ſo oft made Moſes of his counſell, what he meant to do with Iſrael, would not now do ought with himſelfe, without his knowledge. Expectation of any maine euent, is a great aduantage to a wiſe heart; If the fiery chariot had fetcht away Elias, vnlookt for, we ſhould haue doubted of the fauour of his tranſportation: It is a token of iudgement, to come as a theefe in the night. God forewarnes one by ſickneſſe, another by age, another by his ſecret inſtincts, to prepare for their end: If our hearts bee not now in readineſſe, we are worthy to be ſurprized.

But what is this I heare? Diſpleaſure mixed with loue? and that to ſo faithfull a ſeruant as Moſes? He muſt but ſee the Land of Promiſe, he ſhall not tread vpon it; becauſe he once, long agoe, ſinned in diſtruſting. Death, though it were to him an entrance into glory, yet ſhall be alſo a chaſtiſement of his infidelity. How many noble proofes had Moſes giuen of his courage and ſtrength of faith? How many gracious ſeruices had hee done to his Maſter? Yet for one act of diſtruſt, he muſt bee gathered to his Fathers. All our obediences cannot beare out one ſinne againſt God; How vainly ſhall we hope to make amends to God for our former treſpaſſes, by our better behauiour, when Moſes hath this one ſinne layd in his diſh, after ſo many and worthy teſtimonies of his fidelitie? When we haue forgotten our ſinnes, yet God remembers them, and (although not in anger, yet) he cals for our arrerages. Alas, what ſhall become of them, with whom God hath tenne thouſand greater quarrels; that amongſt many millions of ſinnes, haue ſcattered ſome few acts of formall ſeruices? If Moſes muſt die the firſt death, for one fault; how ſhall they eſcape the ſecond for ſinning alwayes? Euen where God loues, he will not winke at ſinne; and if he doe not puniſh, yet he will chaſtiſe: How much leſſe can it ſtand with that eternall Iuſtice, to let wilfull ſinners eſcape iudgement?

It might haue beene iuſt with God, to haue reſerued the cauſe to himſefe; and in a generalitie, to haue told Moſes, that his ſinne muſt ſhorten his iourney: but it is more of mercy, then iuſtice, that his children ſhall know why they ſmart; That God may at once both iuſtifie himſelfe, and humble them for their particular offences: Thoſe to whom he meanes vengeance, haue not the ſight of their ſinnes till they bee paſt repentance. Complaine not that God vpbraids thee with thy old ſinnes, whoſoeuer thou art: but know it is an argument of loue; whereas concealement is a fearefull ſigne of a ſecret diſlike from God.

But what was that noted ſinne which deſerues this late exprobation, and ſhall cary ſo ſharpe a chaſtiſement? Iſrael murmured for water; Gods bids Moſes, take the rod in his hand, and ſpeak to the rock to giue water; Moſes in ſtead of ſpeaking, and ſtriking the rocke with his voice, ſtrikes it with the rod: Here was his ſinne; An ouer-reaching of his commiſſion; a fearefulneſſe and diſtruſt of the effect. The rod, he knew, was approued for miracles; he knew not how powerfull his voyce might be; therefore hee did not ſpeake, but ſtrike, and he ſtrooke twice for failing; And now, after theſe many yeares, hee is ſtriken for it of God. It is a dangerous thing in diuine matters, to goe beyond our warrant: Thoſe ſinnes which ſeeme triuiall to men, are hainous in the account of God; Any thing that ſauours of infidelity, diſpleaſes him more, then ſome other crimes of morality.. Yet the mouing of the, Rod was but a diuerſe thing from the mouing of the tongue, it was not contrary; He did not forbid the one, but he commanded the other: This was but acroſſe the ſtreame, not againſt it; where ſhall they appeare, whoſe whole courſes are quite contrary to the Commandements of God?

Vpon the act done, God paſſed the ſentence of reſtraining Moſes with the reſt, from the promiſed Land: Now he performes it: Since that time, Moſes had many fauors from God. All which could not reuerſe this decreed caſtigation; That euerlaſting rule is grounded vpon the very eſſence of God, I am Iehouah, I change not. Our purpoſes are as our ſelues, fickle and incertaine; His are certaine, and immutable: ſome things which he reueales, he alters; nothing that hee hath decreed. Beſides the ſoule of Moſes (to the glory whereof God principally intended this change) I finde him carefull of two things: His Succeſſor, and his Body: Moſes moues for the one: the other God doth vnasked: He that was ſo tender ouer the welfare of Iſrael, in his life, would not ſlacken his care in death: Hee takes no thought for himſelfe (for hee knew how gainfull an exchange hee muſt make.) All his care is for his charge. Some enuious natures deſire to bee miſſed, when they muſt goe; and wiſh that the weakeneſſe, or want of a ſucceſſor, may be the foyle of their memory, and honour: Moſes is in a contrary diſpoſition; It ſufficeth him not, to finde contentment in his owne happineſſe, vnleſſe hee may haue an aſſurance, that Iſrael ſhall proſper after him. Carnall minds are all for themſelues, and make vſe of gouernment, onely for their owne aduantages; But good hearts looke euer to the future good of the Church, aboue their owne, againſt their owne. Moſes did well, to ſhew his good affection to his people; but in his ſilence God would haue prouided for his owne: Hee that called him from the ſheepe of Iethro, will not want a gouernour for his choſen, to ſucceed him; God hath fitted him, whom he will chooſe. Who can be more meet, then he whoſe name, whoſe experience, whoſe graces might ſupply, yea reuiue Moſes to the people? Hee that ſearched the Land before, was fitteſt to guide Iſrael into it; Hee that was indued with the Spirit of God, was the fitteſt deputy for God: He that abode ſtill in the Tabernacle of Ohel moed, as Gods attendant, was fitteſt to be ſent forth from him, as his Lieutenant: But, oh the vnſearchable counſell of the Almighty! Aged Caleb, and all the Princes of Iſrael are paſt ouer; and Ioſhua the ſeruant of Moſes, is choſen to ſucceed his maſter; The eye of God is not blinded either with gifts, or with blood, or with beauty, or with ſtrength: but as in his eternall elections, ſo in his temporary, he will haue mercy on whom he will.

And well doth Ioſhua ſucceed Moſes; The very acts of God of old were allegories: where the Law ends, there the Sauiour begins; we may ſee the Land of Promiſe in the Law; Onely Ieſus the mediator of the new Teſtament can bring vs into it. So was he a ſeruant of the Law, that hee ſupplies all the defects of the Law to vs: Hee hath taken poſſeſſion of the promiſed Land for vs, he ſhall carry vs from this Wilderneſſe, to our reſt.

It is no ſmall happineſſe to any ſtate, when their gouernours are choſen by worthineſſe, and ſuch elections are euer from God; whereas the intruſions of bribery, and vniuſt fauour, or violence, as they make the common-wealth miſerable, ſo they come from him, which is the author of confuſion: Woe be to that ſtate that ſuffers it; woe be to that perſon that workes it; for both of them haue ſold themſelues; the one to ſeruitude, the other to ſinne.

I doe not heare Moſes repine at Gods choyce, and grudge that this Scepter of his is not hereditarie; but he willingly layes hands vpon his ſeruant, to conſecrate him for his ſucceſſor. Ioſhua was a good man, yet he had ſome ſparkes of Enuy; for when Eldad and Medad propheſied, he ſtomackt it; (My Lord Moſes, forbid them.) Hee that would not abide two of the Elders of Iſrael to propheſie; how would hee haue allowed his ſeruant to ſit in his throne? What an example of meekeneſſe (beſides all the reſt) doth he here ſee in this laſt act of his maſter, who without all murmuring reſignes his chaire of State to his Page? It is all one to a gratious heart, whom God will pleaſe to aduance: Emulation and diſcontentment are the affections of carnall mindes. Humility goes euer with regeneration; which teaches a man to thinke (what euer honor be put vpon others) I haue more then I am worthy of.

The ſame God that by the hands of his Angels caried vp the ſoule of Moſes to his glory, doth alſo by the hand of his Angels cary his body down into the valley of Moab, to his ſepulture. Thoſe hands which had taken the Law from him, thoſe eyes that had ſeene his preſence, thoſe lips that had conferred ſo oft with him, that face that did ſo ſhine with the beames of his glory, may not bee neglected, when the ſoule is gone: He that tooke charge of his birth, and preſeruation in the Reedes, takes charge of his cariage out of the world: The care of God ceaſeth not ouer his owne, either in death or after it. How iuſtly doe we take care of the comely burials of our friends, when God himſelfe giues vs this example!

If the miniſtery of man had beene vſed in this graue of Moſes, the place might haue beene knowne to the Iſraelites; but God purpoſely conceales this treaſure, both from Men and Deuils; that ſo he might both croſſe their curioſity, and preuent their ſuperſtition. If God had loued the adoration of his ſeruants relikes; hee could neuer haue had a fitter opportunity for this deuotion, then in the body of Moſes. It is folly to place Religion in thoſe things, which God hides on purpoſe from vs; It is not the property of the Almighty, to reſtraine vs from good.

Yet, that diuine hand which lockt vp this treaſure, and kept the key of it, brought it forth afterwards, glorious. In the transfiguration, this body which was hid in the valley of Moab, appeared in the hill of Tabor; that wee may know, theſe bodies of ours are not loſt, but layd vp; and ſhall as ſure bee raiſed in glory, as they are layd downe in corruption. We know that when he ſhall appeare, wee ſhall alſo appeare with him in Glory.

THE EIGHTH BOOKE.

Of RAHAB.

IOſhua was one of thoſe twelue ſearchers which were ſent to view the Land of Canaan; yet now he addreſſes two Spyes, for a more particular Suruey: Thoſe twelue were onely to enquire of the generall condition of the people, and Land; theſe two find out the beſt entrance into the next part of the Countrey, and into their greateſt City. Ioſhua himſelfe was full of Gods Spirit, and had the Oracle of God ready for his direction: yet now he goes not to the Propitiatorie for conſultation, but to the Spyes. Except where ordinarie meanes faile vs, it is no appealing the immediate helpe of GOD; wee may not ſeeke to the poſterne, but where the common gate is ſhut: It was promiſed Ioſhua, that he ſhould leade Iſrael into the promiſed Land; yet he knew it was vnſafe to preſume. The condition of his prouident care was included in that aſſurance of ſucceſſe. Heauen is promiſed to vs, but not to our careleſneſſe, infidelity, diſobedience. He that hath ſet this bleſſed Inheritance before vs, preſuppoſes our wiſedome, faith, holineſſe.

Either force or policie, are fit to be vſed vnto Canaanites. He that would be happy in this ſpirituall warfare, muſt know where the ſtrength of his enemy lyeth; and muſt frame his guard, according to the others aſſault. It is a great aduantage to a Chriſtian, to know the faſhion of Satans onſets, that he may the more eaſily compoſe himſelfe to reſiſt. Many a ſoule hath miſcaried, through the ignorance of his enemy, which had not periſhed, if it had well knowne that the weakneſſe of Satan ſtands in our faith.

The Spyes can finde no other lodging, but Rahabs houſe. Shee was a victualler by profeſſion, and (as thoſe perſons and trades, by reaſon of the commonneſſe of entertainment, were amongſt the Iewes infamous by name, and note) ſhee was Rahab the Harlot, I will not thinke ſhe profeſſed filthineſſe: onely her publike trade (through the corruption of thoſe times) hath caſt vpon her this name of reproach; yea, rather will I admire her faith, then make excuſes for her calling. How many women in Iſrael (now Miriam was dead) haue giuen ſuch proofes of their knowledge, and faith? How noble is that confeſſion, which ſhe makes of the power and truth of God? Yea I ſee here, not onely a Diſciple of God, but a Propheteſſe. Or if ſhe had once beene publike, as her houſe was; now ſhe is a chaſte and worthy Conuert; and ſo approued her ſelfe for honeſt and wiſe behauiour, that ſhe is thought worthy to be the great Grandmother of Dauids Father: and the holy Line of the Meſſias, is not aſhamed to admit her into that happy Pedegree. The mercy of our God doth not meaſure vs, by what wee were; It would be wide with the beſt of vs, if the eye of God ſhould looke backward to our former eſtate: there he ſhould ſee Abraham an Idolater; Paul a Perſecutor; Manaſſes a Necromancer; Mary Magdalen a Curtizan; and the beſt, vile enough to be aſhamed of himſelfe. Who can deſpaire of mercy, that ſees euen Rahab fetcht into the blood of Iſrael, and line of Chriſt?

If Rahab had not receiued theſe Spies, but as vnknowne paſſengers, with reſpect to their money, and not to their errand, it had been no praiſe: for in ſuch caſes, the thanke is rather to the gheſt, then to the Oaſt: but now, ſhe knew their purpoſe; ſhe knew that the harbour of them, was the danger of her owne life: and yet, ſhee hazards this entertainment. Either faith or friendſhip are neuer tried, but in extremities: To ſhew countenance to the meſſengers of God, whiles the publike face of the State ſmiles vpon them, is but a courteſie of courſe; but to hide our owne liues in theirs, when they are perſecuted, is an act that lookes for a reward. Theſe times need not fauour; wee know not what may come: Alas! how likely is it they would ſhelter them in danger, which reſpect them not in proſperity?

All intelligences of State come firſt to the Court; It moſt concernes Princes to harken after the affaires of each other. If this poore Inholder knew of the Sea dried vp before Iſrael, and of the diſcomfiture of Og and Sehon; Surely this rumor was ſtale with the King of Iericho; he had heard it, and feared: and yet in ſtead of ſending Ambaſſadors for peace, he ſends Purſuiuants for the Spyes. The ſpirit of Rahab melted with that ſame report, wherewith the King of Iericho was hardned: all make not one vſe of the meſſages of the proceedings of God.

The King ſends to tell her, what ſhee knew; ſhee had not hid them, if ſhe had not knowne their errand. I know not whether firſt to wonder at the gracious prouiſion of God for the Spies; or at the ſtrong faith which hee hath wrought in the heart of a weake woman: two ſtrangers, Iſraelites, Spies (and noted for theſe) in a foraine, in an hoſtile Land, haue a ſafe harbour prouided them, euen amongſt their enemies; In Iericho, at the very Court-gate, againſt the Proclamation of a King, againſt the indeuours of the people. Where cannot the God of heauen either finde, or raiſe vp friends to his owne cauſe and ſeruants?

Who could haue hoped for ſuch faith in Rahab? which contemned her life for the preſent, that ſhe might ſaue it for the future; neglected her owne King and Countrey, for ſtrangers, which ſhe neuer ſaw; and more feared the deſtruction of that City, before it knew that it had an aduerſary, then the diſpleaſure of her King, in the mortall reuenge of that, which he would haue accounted treacherie. She brings them vp to the roofe of her houſe, and hides them with ſtalkes of Flax: That plant which was made to hide the body from nakedneſſe and ſhame, now is vſed to hide the Spies from death. Neuer could theſe ſtalkes haue beene improued ſo well with all her houſwifery, after they were bruiſed, as now before they were fitted to her wheele: Of theſe ſhee hath wouen an euerlaſting web, both of life and propagation. And now her tongue hides them no leſſe then her hand: her charitie was good, her excuſe was not good. Euill may not be done, that good may come of it; we may doe any thing but ſinne, for promoting a good cauſe: And if not in ſo maine occaſions; how ſhall God take it, that we are not dainty of falſhoods in trifles?

No man will looke that theſe Spies could take any ſound ſleepe, in theſe beds of ſtalkes; It is enough for them that they liue, though they reſt not. And now, when they heard Rahab comming vp the ſtaires, doubtleſſe they looked for an executioner: but behold, ſhe comes vp with a meſſage better then their ſleepe, adding to their protection, aduice for their future ſafety; whereto ſhe makes way by a faithfull report of Gods former wonders, and the preſent diſpoſition of her people; and by wiſe capitulations for the life, and ſecurity of her Family. The newes of Gods miraculous proceedings for Iſrael, haue made her reſolue of their ſucceſſe, and the ruines of Iericho. Then only doe we make a right vſe of the works of God, when by his iudgements vpon others, we are warned to auoid our owne. He intends his acts for preſidents of iuſtice.

The parents and brethren of Rahab take their reſt; They are not troubled with the feare and care of the ſucceſſe of Iſrael; but ſecurely goe with the current of the preſent condition: She watches for them all; and breakes her mid-night ſleepe, to preuent their laſt. One wiſe and faithfull perſon does well in an houſe; where all are careleſſe, there is no comfort, but in periſhing together. It had beene an ill nature in Rahab, if ſhe had beene content to be ſaued alone: that her loue might be a match to her faith, ſhe couenants for all her Family; and ſo returnes life to thoſe, of whom ſhee receiued it. But the bond of nature, and of grace, will draw all ours, to the participation of the ſame good, with our ſelues.

It had been neuer the better for the Spyes, if after this nights lodging they had beene turned out of doores to the hazard of the way; For ſo the purſuers had light vpon them, and preuented their returne with their death. Rahabs counſell therefore was better then her harbour; which ſent them (no doubt, with victuals in their hands) to ſeek ſafety in the mountaines, till the heat of that ſearch were paſt. He that hath giuen vs charge of our liues, will not ſuffer vs to caſt them vpon wilfull aduentures: Had not theſe Spyes hid themſelues in thoſe Deſart hils, Iſrael had wanted directors for their enterpriſes. There is nothing more expedient for the Church, then that ſome of Gods faithfull meſſengers ſhould withdraw themſelues, and giue way to perſecutions. Courage in thoſe that muſt die, is not a greater aduantage to the Goſpell, then a prudent retiring of thoſe, which may ſuruiue, to maintaine and propagate it.

It was a iuſt and reaſonable tranſaction betwixt them, that her life ſhould bee ſaued by them which had ſaued theirs; They owe no leſſe to her, to whom they were not ſo much gueſts as priſoners: And now they paſſe not their promiſe onely, but their oath. They were ſtrangers to Rahab, and for ought ſhe knew, might haue been godleſſe: yet ſhe dares truſt her life vpon their oath. So ſacred and inuiolable hath this bond euer beene, that an heathen woman thought her ſelfe ſecure, vpon the oath of an Iſraelite.

Neither is ſhe more confident of their oath taken, then they are carefull both of taking, and performing it. So farre are they from deſiring to ſalue vp any breach of promiſe, by equiuocation, that they explaine all conditions; and would preuent all poſſibilities of violation. All Rahabs Family muſt be gathered into her houſe; and that red cord, which was an inſtrument of their deliuerie, muſt be a ſigne of hers. Behold, this is the ſauing colour: The deſtroying Angell ſees the doore-cheekes of the Iſraelites ſprinkled with red, and paſſes them ouer. The Warriours of Iſrael ſee the window of Rahab dyed with red, and ſaue her family from the common deſtruction. If our ſoules haue this tincture of the precious blood of our Sauiour, vpon our doores, or windowes, we are ſafe.

But if any one of the brethren of Rahab ſhall fly from this red flag, and roue about the City, and not containe himſelfe vnder that roofe, which hid the Spyes, it is vaine for him to tell the auengers, that he is Rahabs brother: That title will not ſaue him in the ſtreet, within doores it will. If we will wander out of the limits that God hath ſet vs, wee caſt our ſelues out of his protection; wee cannot challenge the benefit of his gratious Preſeruation, and our moſt precious Redemption, when wee fly out into the by-wayes of our owne hearts; Not for innocence, but for ſafety and harbour: the Church is that houſe of Rahab, which is ſaued, when all Iericho ſhall periſh. Whiles wee keepe vs in the liſts thereof, we cannot miſ-cary, through miſ-opinion; but when once we runne out of it, let vs looke for iudgement from God, and errour in our owne iudgement.

Of Jordan diuided.

THe two Spies returned with newes of the victorie that ſhould be. I doe not heare them ſay, The Land is vnpeopled; or the people are vnfurniſhed with armes; vnskilfull of the diſcipline of warre; but (They faint becauſe of vs: therefore their Land is ours.) Either ſucceſſe, or diſcomfiture, begins euer at the heart. A mans inward diſpoſition doth more then preſage the euent. As a man raiſes vp his owne heart, before his fall; and depreſſes it, before his glory: ſo God raiſes it vp, before his exaltation; and caſts it downe, before his ruine. It is no otherwiſe in our ſpirituall conflicts: If Satan ſee vs once faint, hee giues himſelfe the day. There is no way to ſafety, but that our hearts be the laſt that ſhall yeeld. That which the heathens attributed to Fortune, we may iuſtly to the hand of God; That he ſpeedeth thoſe that are forward. All the ground that we looſe, is giuen to our aduerſaries.

This newes is brought but ouer-night; Ioſhua is on his way by morning, and preuents the Sunne for haſt. Delayes, whether in the buſineſſe of God or our owne, are hatefull and preiudiciall. Many a one loſes the Land of Promiſe, by lingring: if we neglect Gods time, it is iuſt with him, to croſſe vs in ours.

Ioſhua haſtens till hee haue brought Iſrael to the verge of the promiſed Land: Nothing parts them now, but the riuer of Iordan. There he ſtayes a time: that the Iſraelites might feed themſelues awhile with the ſight of that, which they ſhould afterwards enioy. That which they had beene forty yeares in ſeeking, may not be ſeized vpon too ſuddenly: God loues to giue vs cooles, and heats in our deſires; and will ſo allay our ioyes, that their fruition hurt vs not. He knowes, that as it is in meats, the long forbearance whereof cauſes a ſurfet, when we come to full feed: ſo it fares in the contentments of the mind; therefore he feeds vs not with the diſh, but with the ſpoon; and will haue vs, neither cloyed nor famiſhed. If the mercy of God haue brought vs within ſight of heauen, let vs bee content to pauſe a while, and vpon the banks of Iordan, fit our ſelues for our entrance.

Now that Iſrael is brought to the brim of Canaan, the cloud is vaniſhed which led them all the way: And as ſoone as they haue but croſſed Iordan, the Manna ceaſeth, which nouriſht them all the way. The cloud and Manna were for their paſſage, not for their reſt; for the Wilderneſſe, not for Canaan. It were as eaſie for God to worke miracles alwayes; but he knowes, that cuſtome were the way to make them no miracles. He goes by-wayes, but till he haue brought vs into the Roade; and then he refers vs to his ordinary proceedings. That Iſraelite ſhould haue beene very fooliſh, that would ſtill haue ſayd, I will not ſtir, till I ſee the cloud; I wil not eate, vnleſſe I may haue that food of Angels. Wherefore ſerues the arke but for their direction? Wherefore ſerues the Wheat of Canaan, but for bread? So fond is that Chriſtian, that will ſtill depend vpon expectation of miracles, after the fulneſſe of Gods Kingdome. If God beare vs in his armes, when we are children, yet when we are well-growne, he looks we ſhould goe on our owne feet: it is enough, that he vpholds vs, though he carry vs not.

He that hitherto had gone before them in the cloud, doth now goe before them in the Arke; the ſame guide, in two diuers ſignes of his preſence. The cloud was for Moſes, the Arke for Ioſhua's time: the cloud was fit for Moſes; the Law offered vs Chriſt, but enwrapped in many obſcurities. If he were ſeene in the cloud, hee was heard from the couer of the Arke. Why was it the Arke of the Teſtimony, but becauſe it witneſſed both his preſence and loue? And within it were, his Word, the Law; and his Sacrament, the Manna. Who can wiſh a better Guide, then the God of heauen, in his Word, and Sacraments? Who can know the way into the Land of Promiſe, ſo well as he that ownes it? And what meanes can better direct vs thither, then thoſe of his Inſtitution?

That Arke which before was as the heart, is now as the head: It was in the middeſt of Iſrael, whiles they camped in the Deſart; now when the cloud is remoued, it is in the front of the Army; That as before they depended vpon it for life, ſo now, they ſhould for direction. It muſt goe before them, on the ſhoulders of the ſonnes of Leui; they muſt follow it, but within ſight, not within breathing. The Leuites may not touch the Arke, but onely the barres: The Iſraelites may not approach neerer then a thouſand paces to it. What awfull reſpects doth God require to be giuen vnto the teſtimony of his preſence? Vzzah paid deare for touching it; the men of Bethſhemeſh, for looking into it. It is a dangerous thing to be too bold with the ordinances of God. Though the Iſraelites were ſanctified, yet they might not come neere either the mount Sinai, when the Law was deliuered; or the Arke of the Couenant, wherein the Law was written. How fearfull ſhall their eſtate be, that come with vnhallowed hearts and hands to the Word of the Goſpel, and the true Manna of the Euangelicall Sacrament? As we vſe to ſay of the Court and of fire; ſo may we of theſe diuine Inſtitutions, We freeze, if we be farre off from them; and if we be more neere then befits vs, we burne. Vnder the Law, we might looke at Chriſt aloofe; now vnder the Goſpell, wee may come neere him: He cals vs to him; yea, he enters into vs.

Neither was it onely for reuerence, that the Arke muſt be, not ſtumbled at, but waited on, afar; but alſo for conuenience, both of ſight and paſſage. Thoſe things that are neere vs, though they be leſſe, fill our eye; Neither could ſo many thouſand eyes ſee the ſame obiect vpon a leuell, but by diſtance: It would not content God, that one Iſraelite ſhould tell another, Now the Arke goes, now it turnes, now it ſtands; but hee would haue euery one his owne witneſſe. What can be ſo comfortable to a good heart, as to ſee the pledges of Gods preſence, and fauour? To heare the louing kindneſſes of God, is pleaſant; but to behold, and feele the euidences of his mercy, is vnſpeakably delectable: Hence the Saints of God, not contenting themſelues with faith, haue ſtill prayed for ſight, and fruition, and mourned when they haue wanted it. What an happy proſpect hath God ſet before vs of Chriſt Ieſus crucified before vs, and offered vnto vs?

Ere God will worke a miracle before Iſrael, they haue charge to be ſanctified. There is an holineſſe required, to make vs either patients, or beholders of the great workes of God; how much more when we ſhould be actors in his ſacred ſeruices? There is more vſe of ſanctification, when wee muſt preſent ſomething to God, then when hee muſt doe ought to vs.

The ſame power that diuided the Red-ſea before Moſes, diuides Iordan before Ioſhua; that they might ſee the Arke no leſſe effectuall, then the cloud; and the hand of God as preſent with Ioſhua, to bring them into Canaan, as it was with Moſes to bring them out of Egypt: The bearers of the Arke had need be faithfull; they muſt firſt ſet their foot into the ſtreames of Iordan, and beleeue that it will giue way; The ſame faith that led Peter vpon the water, muſt cary them into it. There can bee no Chriſtian without beleefe in God; but thoſe that are neere to God, in his immediate ſeruices, muſt goe before others, no leſſe in beleeuing, then they doe in example.

The waters know their Maker: That Iordan that flowed with full ſtreames, when Chriſt went into it, to be baptized; now giues way, when the ſame God muſt paſſe thorow it in ſtate: Then there was vſe of his water, now of his ſand: I heare no newes of any rod to ſtrike the waters; the preſence of the Arke of the Lord God, the Lord of all the World, is ſigne enough to theſe waues; which now, as if a ſinew were broken, runne backe to our Iſſues, and dare not ſo much as wet the feet of the Prieſts, that bore it; What ayled thee, O Sea, that thou fleddeſt, and thou, Iordan, that thou wert driuen back? Ye mountaines, that ye leaped like Rammes, and ye little hils, like Lambs? The earth trembled at the preſence of the Lord; at the preſence of the God of Iacob. How obſeruant are all the Creatures to the God that made them? How glorious a God doe we ſerue? whom all the powers of the Heauens and Elements are willingly ſubiect vnto; and gladly take that nature which he pleaſes to giue them. He could haue made Iordan like ſome ſolid pauement of Chryſtall, for the Iſraelites feet to haue trod vpon; but this worke had not bin ſo magnificent. Euery ſtrong Froſt congeales the water, in a natural courſe: but for the Riuer to ſtand ſtill, and runne on heapes, and to bee made a liquid wall for the paſſage of Gods people, is, for Nature to runne out of it ſelfe, to do homage to her Creator: Now muſt the Iſraelites needs thinke; How can the Canaanites ſtand out againſt vs, when the Seas and Riuers giue vs way? With what ioy did they now trample vpon the dry channell of Iordan, whiles they might ſee the dry Deſarts ouercome; the promiſed Land before them, the very waters ſo glad of them, that they ranne back to welcome them into Canaan? The paſſages into our promiſed Land are troubleſome and perillous; and euen at laſt, offer themſelues to vs the maine hindrances of our ſaluation; which after all our hopes, threaten to defeat vs: for what will it auaile vs to haue paſſed a Wilderneſſe, if the waues of Iordan ſhould ſwallow vs vp? But the ſame hand that hath made the way hard, hath made it ſure: He that made the Wilderneſſe comfortable, will make Iordan dry; he will maſter all difficulties for vs; and thoſe things, which we moſt feared, will he make moſt ſoueraigne, and beneficiall to vs. O God, as we haue truſted thee with the beginning, ſo will wee with the finiſhing of our glory. Faithfull art thou that haſt promiſed, which wilt alſo doe it.

He that led them about, in forty yeares iourney, thorow the Wilderneſſe, yet now leades them the neareſt cut to Iericho; Hee will not ſo much as ſeeke for a Foord for their paſſage; but diuides the waters. What a ſight was this to their heathen aduerſaries, to ſee the waters make both a lane, and a wall for Iſrael? Their hearts could not chooſe, but be broken, to ſee the ſtreames broken off for a way to their enemies. I doe not ſee Ioſhua haſting thorow this channell, as if hee feared, leſt the Tide of Iordan ſhould returne; but as knowing that watery wall ſtronger then the wals of Iericho, he paces ſlowly: And leſt this miracle ſhould paſſe away with themſelues, he commands twelue ſtones to be taken out of the channell of Iordan, by twelue ſelected men, from euery Tribe, which ſhall be pitched in Gilgal; and twelue other ſtones to be ſet in the midſt of Iordan, where the feet of the Prieſts had ſtood, with the Arke; That ſo both land and water might teſtifie the miraculous way of Iſrael, whiles it ſhould bee ſaid of the one; Theſe ſtones were fetcht out of the pauement of Iordan; of the other, There did the Arke reſt, whiles we walked dry-ſhod thorow the deepes of Iordan: Of the one, Iordan was once as dry as this Gilgal; Of the other, Thoſe waues which drowne theſe ſtones, had ſo drowned vs, if the power of the Almighty had not reſtrained them. Many a great worke had God done for Iſrael, which was now forgotten: Ioſhua therefore will haue monuments of Gods mercy, that future Ages might be both witneſſes, and applauders of the great workes of their God.

Of the ſiege of Iericho.

I*Oſhua* begins his warres with the Circumciſion and Paſſeouer; Hee knew that the way to keepe the blood of his people from ſhedding, was to let out that Paganiſh blood of their vncircumciſion. The perſon muſt bee in fauour, ere the worke can hope to proſper: His predeceſſor Moſes had like to haue beene ſlaine for neglect of this Sacrament, when hee went to call the people out of Egypt: he iuſtly feares his owne ſafety, if now he omit it, when they are brought into Canaan: wee haue no right of inheritance in the ſpirituall Canaan, the Church of God, till we haue receiued the Sacrament of our matriculation:

So ſoone as our couenants are renued with our Creator, wee may well looke for the viſion of God, for the aſſurance of victory.

What ſure worke did the King of Iericho thinke he had made! hee blocked vp the paſſages, barred vp the gates, defended the wals, and did enough to keepe out a common enemy: If wee could doe but this to our ſpirituall aduerſaries, it were as impoſſible for vs to be ſurpriſed, as for Iericho to be ſafe. Me thinkes I ſee how they called their counſell of warre; debated of all meanes of defence; gathered their forces, trained their ſouldiers, ſet ſtrong guards to the gates, and wals; and now would perſwade one another, that vnleſſe Iſrael could fly into their City, the ſiege was vaine. Vaine worldlings thinke their Rampiers and Barricadoes, can keepe out the vengeance of God; their blindneſſe ſuffers them to looke no further then the meanes: The ſupreme hand of the Almighty comes not within the compaſſe of their feares. Euery carnall heart is a Iericho ſhut vp; God ſets downe before it, and diſplayes mercy and iudgement, in ſight of the wals thereof; It hardens it ſelfe in a wilfull ſecuritie; and ſaith, Tuſh, I ſhall neuer be moued.

Yet their courage and feare fight together within their wals, within their boſomes: Their courage tels them of their owne ſtrength; their feare ſuggeſts the miraculous ſucceſſe of this (as they could not but thinke) inchanted generation; and now whiles they haue ſhut out their enemy, they haue ſhut in their owne terror. The moſt ſecure heart in the world hath ſome flaſhes of feare; for it cannot but ſometimes looke out of it ſelfe, and ſee what it would not. Rahab had notified that their hearts fainted: and yet now, their faces bewray nothing but reſolution. I know not whether the heart or the face of an hypocrite bee more falſe; and as each of them ſeekes to beguile the other, ſo both of them agree to deceiue the beholders: In the midſt of laughter, their heart is heauy; who would not thinke him merry that laughs? Yet their reioycing is but in the face: who would not thinke a blaſphemer, or prophane man reſolutely careleſſe? If thou hadſt a window into his heart, thou ſhouldeſt ſee him tormented with horrors of conſcience.

Now the Iſraelites ſee thoſe walled cities, and towers; whoſe height was reported to reach to heauen; the fame whereof had ſo affrighted them, ere they ſaw them, and were ready doubtleſſe to ſay, in their diſtruſt, Which way ſhall we ſcale theſe inuincible fortifications? what ladders, what engines ſhall we vſe to ſo great worke? God preuents their infidelity; Behold, I haue giuen Iericho into thine hand. If their wals had their foundations layd in the center of the earth; If the battlements had been ſo high built, that an Eagle could not ſoare ouer them; this is enough, I haue giuen it thee. For, on whoſe earth haue they raiſed theſe caſtles? Out of whoſe treaſure did they digge thoſe piles of ſtone? Whence had they their ſtrength, and time to build? Cannot hee that gaue, recall his owne? O ye fooles of Iericho; what if your wals be ſtrong, your men valiant, your leaders skilfull, your King wiſe, when God hath ſaid, I haue giuen thee the Citie: What can ſwords or ſpeares doe againſt the Lord of Hoſts? Without him, meanes can doe nothing: how much leſſe againſt him? How vaine and idle is that reckoning, wherein God is left out? Had the Captaine of the Lords hoſt drawne his ſword for Iericho, the gates might haue been opened; Iſrael could no more haue entred, then they can now be kept from entring, when the wals were falne. What courſes ſoeuer we take for our ſafety, it is good making God of our ſide: Neither men, nor deuils can hurt vs againſt him; neither men nor Angels can ſecure vs from him. There was neuer ſo ſtrange a ſiege as this of Iericho: Here was no mount raiſed, no ſword drawne, no engine planted, no Pioners vndermining; Here were trumpets ſounded, but no enemy ſeene; Here were armed men, but no ſtroke giuen: They muſt walke and not fight, ſeuen ſeuerall daies muſt they pace about the wals, which they may not once looke ouer to ſee what was within. Doubtleſſe, the inhabitants of Iericho made themſelues merry with this ſight: When they had ſtood ſix daies vpon their wals & beheld none but a walking enemy; What (ſay they) could Iſrael finde no walke to breathe them with, but about our wals? Haue they not trauelled enough in their forty yeares

Pilgrimage,but they muſt ſtretch their limmes in this circle ? Surely if their eyes were engines, our wals could not ſtand : wee ſee they are good footmen ; but when ſhall we try their hands ? What, doe theſe vaine men thinke Iericho will be won with looking at ? Or, doe they onely come to count how many paces it is about our City ? If this be their manner of ſiege, we ſhall haue no great cauſe to feare the ſword of Iſrael. Wicked men thinke God in ieſt, when he is preparing for their iudgement. The Almighty hath wayes and counſels of his owne, vtterly vnlike to ours : which becauſe our reaſon cannot reach, we are ready to condemne of fooliſhneſſe and impoſſibility. With vs, there is no way to victory but fighting ; and the ſtrongeſt caries the ſpoile : God can giue victory to the feet,as well as to the hands;and when he will,makes weakneſſe no diſaduantage. What ſhould we doe but follow God through by-wayes, and know,that he will in ſpight of nature lead vs to our end ?

All the men of warre muſt compaſſe the City ; yet it was not the preſence of the great warriours of Iſrael that threw downe the wals of Iericho. Thoſe foundations were not ſo ſlightly laid,as that they could not endure either a looke, or a march, or a battery : It was the Arke of God whoſe preſence demoliſhed the wals of that wicked City. The ſame power that draue backe the waters of Iordan before, and afterwards laid Dagon on the floore,caſt down all thoſe forts. The Prieſts beare on their ſhoulders that mighty engine of God, before which thoſe wals, if they had beene of molten braſſe, could not ſtand. Thoſe ſpirituall wickedneſſes, yea,thoſe gates of hell, which to nature are vtterly inuincible, by the power of the Word of God (which he hath committed to the carriage of his weake ſeruants)are ouerthrowne and triumphed ouer. Thy Arke,O God,hath beene long amongſt vs ; how is it that the wals of our corruptions ſtand ſtill vnruined ? It hath gone before vs ; his Prieſts haue caried it, wee haue not followed it,our hearts haue not attended vpon it ; and therefore, how mighty ſoeuer it is in it ſelfe ; yet to vs, it hath not beene ſo powerfull, as it would.

Seuen dayes together they walkt this round ; They made this therefore their Sabbath-dayes iourney ; and who knowes whether the laſt, and longeſt walke, which brought victory to Iſrael, were not on this day ? Not long before,an Iſraelite is ſtoned to death,for but gathering a few ſtickes,that day:Now all the hoſt of Iſrael muſt walke about the wals of a large and populous City, and yet doe not violate the day. Gods precept is the rule of the iuſtice, and holineſſe of all our actions : Or was it, for that reuenge vpon Gods enemies is an holy worke, and ſuch as God vouchſafes to priuiledge with his owne day ? Or, becauſe when we haue vndertaken the exploits of God, he will abide no intermiſſion, till we haue fulfilled them ? He allowes vs to breathe ; not to breake off, till we haue finiſhed.

It had beene as eaſie for God, to haue giuen this ſucceſſe to their firſt dayes walke, yea to their firſt pace,or their firſt ſight of Iericho ; yet he will not giue it vntill the end of their ſeuen dayes toile : It is the pleaſure of God to hold vs both in worke and in expectation ; And though he require our continuall indeuours for the ſubduing of our corruptions,during the ſixe dayes of our life,yet we ſhall neuer find it perfectly effected till the very euening of our laſt day : In the meane time, it muſt content vs, that we are in our walke,and that theſe wals cannot ſtand, when we come to the meaſure, and number of our perfection. A good heart grones vnder the ſenſe of his infirmities,faine would be rid of them,and ſtriues and prayes : but when hee hath all done, vntill the end of the ſeuenth day,it cannot be : If a ſtone or two moulder off from theſe wals, in the meane time,that is all;but the foundations will not be remoued till then.

When we heare of ſo great a deſigne as the miraculous winning of a mighty City, who would not looke for ſome glorious meanes to worke it ? when we heare that the Arke of God muſt beſiege Iericho, who would not looke for ſome royall equipage ? But behold:here ſeuen Prieſts muſt go before it,with ſeuen Trumpets of Rams hornes. The Iſraelites had trumpets of ſiluer, which God had appointed for the vſe of aſſembling, and diſſoluing the Congregation, for warre, and for peace. Now I doe not heare them called for ; but in ſtead thereof, Trumpets of Rams hornes ; baſe for the matter, and not loud for ſound; the ſhortneſſe and equall meaſure of thoſe inſtruments could not afford, either ſhrilneſſe of noiſe, or variety. How meane and homely are thoſe meanes which God commonly vſes in the moſt glorious workes! No doubt, the Citizens of Iericho anſwered this dull alarum of theirs, from their wals, with other inſtruments of lowder report, and more martiall oſtentation: and the vulgar Iſraelites thought, We haue as cleare, and as coſtly trumpets as theirs; yet no man dares offer to ſound the better, when the worſe are commanded. If we finde the ordinances of God poore and weake; let it content vs that they are of his owne chooſing, and ſuch, as whereby he will ſo much more honour himſelfe, as they in themſelues are more inglorious. Not the outſide, but the efficacie, is it that God cares for.

No Ramme of iron could haue been ſo forceable for battery, as theſe Rams horns: For when they ſounded long, and were ſeconded with the ſhout of the Iſraelites, all the wals of Iericho fell downe at once: They made the Heauen ring with their ſhout: but the ruine of thoſe wals drowned their voyce, and gaue a pleaſant kinde of horrour to the Iſraelites: The earth ſhooke vnder them with the fall; but the hearts of the Inhabitants ſhooke yet more: many of them doubtleſſe were ſlaine with thoſe walles, wherein they had truſted: A man might ſee death in the faces of all the reſt that remained; who now being halfe dead with aſtoniſhment, expected the other halfe from the ſword of their enemies; They had now, neither meanes, nor will to reſiſt; for if onely one breach had beene made (as it vſes in other ſieges) for the entrance of the enemy; perhaps new ſupplyes of defendants might haue made it vp with their carkaſſes: but now, that at once Iericho is turned to a plaine field, euery Iſraelite, without reſiſtance, might runne to the next booty; and the throats of their enemies ſeemed to inuite their ſwords to a diſpatch.

If but one Iſraelite had knockt at the gates of Iericho, it might haue beene thought, their hand had helped to the victory: Now, that God may haue all the glory, without the ſhow of any riuall, yea of any meanes, they doe but walke and ſhout, and the walls giue way. He cannot abide to part with any honour, from himſelfe: As hee doth all things, ſo he would be acknowledged.

They ſhout all at once. It is the preſence of Gods Arke and our conioyned prayers, that are effectuall to the beating downe of wickedneſſe. They may not ſhout, till they be bidden. If we will be vnſeaſonable in our good actions, we may hurt, and not benefit our ſelues.

Euery liuing thing in Iericho, man, woman, child, cattell, muſt die: our folly would thinke this mercileſſe: but there can be no mercy in iniuſtice, and nothing but iniuſtice in not fulfilling the charge of God: The death of Malefactors, the condemnation wicked men, ſeeme harſh to vs; but we muſt learne of God, that there is a puniſhing mercy. Curſed be that mercy, that oppoſes the God of mercy.

Yet was not Ioſhua ſo intent vpon the ſlaughter, as not to be mindefull of Gods part, and Rahabs: Firſt, he giues charge (vnder a curſe) of reſeruing all the treaſure for God; Then of preſeruing the Family of Rahab. Thoſe two Spyes, that receiued life from her, now returne it to her, and hers: They call at the window with the red cord; and ſend vp newes of life to her, the ſame way which they receiued theirs: Her houſe is no part of Iericho; neither may fire be ſet to any building of that City, till Rahab and her family be ſet ſafe without the hoſt. The actions of our faith and charity will be ſure to pay vs; if late, yet ſurely. Now Rahab findes what it is to beleeue God; whiles out of an impure idolatrous Citie, ſhe is tranſplanted into the Church of God, and made a mother of a royall and holy poſteritie.

Of ACHAN.

WHen the wals of Iericho were falne, Ioſhua charged the Iſraelites but with two precepts; Of ſparing Rababs houſe; and of abſtaining from that treaſure, which was anathematized to God; and one of them is broken: As in the entrance to Paradiſe, but one tree was forbidden, and that was eaten of. God hath prouided for our weakeneſſe in the paucity of commands: but our innocency ſtands not ſo much in hauing few precepts, as in keeping thoſe we haue. So much more guilty are wee in the breach of one, as wee are more fauoured in the number.

They needed no command to ſpare no liuing thing in Iericho: but to ſpare the treaſure, no command was enough. Impartialitie of execution is eaſier to performe, then contempt of theſe worldly things; becauſe we are more prone to couet for our ſelues, then to pitie others. Had Ioſhua bidden ſaue the men, and diuide the treaſure, his charge had beene more plauſible, then now to kill the men, and ſaue the treaſure: or, if they muſt kill, earthly minds would more gladly ſhead their enemies blood, for a bootie, then out of obedience, for the glory of their Maker. But now, it is good reaſon, ſince God threw downe thoſe wals, and not they; that both the blood of that wicked Citie ſhould be ſpilt to him, not to their owne reuenge; and that the treaſure ſhould bee reſerued for his vſe, not for theirs. Who but a miſcreant can grudge, that God ſhould ſerue himſelfe of his owne? I cannot blame the reſt of Iſrael, if they were well pleaſed with their conditions; onely one Achan troubles the peace, and his ſinne is imputed to Iſrael: the innocence of ſo many thouſand Iſraelites, is not ſo forcible to excuſe his one ſinne, as his one ſinne is to taint all Iſrael.

A lewd man is a pernicious creature: That hee damnes his owne ſoule, is the leaſt part of his miſchiefe; he commonly drawes vengeance vpon a thouſand, either by the deſert of his ſinne, or by the infection. Who would not haue hoped that the ſame God, which for ten righteous men would haue ſpared the fiue wicked Cities, ſhould not haue beene content to drowne one ſinne, in the obedience of ſo many righteous? But ſo venemous is ſinne, (eſpecially, when it lights among Gods people) that one dram of it is able to infect the whole maſſe of Iſrael.

Oh righteous people of Iſrael, that had but one Achan! How had their late circumciſion cut away the vncleane foreskin of their diſobedience? How had the blood of their Paſchal Lambe ſcoured their ſoules from couetous deſires? The world was well mended with them, ſince their ſtubborne murmurings in the Deſart. Since the death of Moſes, and the gouernment of Ioſhua, I doe not find them in any diſorder. After that the Law hath brought vs vnder the conduct of the true Ieſus, our ſinnes are more rare, and our liues are more conſcionable. Whiles we are vnder the Law, we do not ſo keepe it, as when we are deliuered from it: our Chriſtian freedome is more holy then our ſeruitude. Then haue the Sacraments of God their due effect, when their receit purgeth vs from our old ſinnes; and makes our conuerſation cleane and ſpirituall.

Little did Ioſhua know, that there was any ſacriledge committed by Iſrael: that ſinne is not halfe cunning enough, that hath not learned ſecrecie: Ioſhua was a vigilant Leader, yet ſome ſinnes will eſcape him: Onely that eye which is euery where, findes vs out in our cloſe wickedneſſe. It is no blame to authority, that ſome ſinnes are ſecretly committed: The holieſt congregation, or family, may be blemiſht with ſome malefactors: it is iuſt blame, that open ſinnes are not puniſhed; wee ſhall wrong gouernment, if wee ſhall expect, the reach of it ſhould be infinite. Hee therefore, which if he had knowne the offence, would haue ſent vp prayers and teares to God, now ſends Spyes for a further diſcouery of Ai; They returne, with newes of the weaknes of their aduerſaries: and (as contemning their paucity) perſwades Ioſhua, that a wing of Iſrael is enough to ouerſhadow this citie of Ai. The Iſraelites were ſo fleſhed with their former victorie, that now they thinke no wals or men can ſtand before them. Good ſucceſſe lifts vp the heart with too much confidence; and whiles it diſſwades men from doing their beſt, oft-times diſappoints them. With God, the meanes can neuer bee too weake; without him, neuer ſtrong enough.

It is not good to contemne an impotent enemy. In this ſecond battell the Iſraelites are beaten: It was not the fewneſſe of their aſſailants that ouerthrew them, but the ſin that lay lurking at home. If all the Hoſt of Iſrael had ſet vpon this poore village of Ai, they had beene all equally diſcomfited: the wedge of Achan did more fight againſt them, then all the ſwords of the Canaanites. The victories of God goe not by ſtrength, but by innocence.

Doubtleſſe, theſe men of Ai inſulted in this foyle of Iſrael, and ſaid; Loe, theſe are the men, from whoſe preſence the waters of Iordan ran backe, now they runne as faſt away from ours: Theſe are they, before whom the wals of Iericho fell downe; now they are falne as faſt before vs; and all their neighbours tooke heart from this victory. Wherein I doubt not, but beſides the puniſhment of Iraels ſinne, God intended the further obduration of the Canaanites: Like as ſome skilfull player loſes on purpoſe at the beginning of the game, to draw on the more abetments. The newes of their ouerthrow ſpred as farre as the fame of their ſpeed; and euery City of Canaan could ſay, Why not we as well as Ai?

But good Ioſhua that ſucceeded Moſes, no leſſe in the care of Gods glory then in his gouernment, is much deiected with this euent. Hee rends his cloathes, fals on his face, caſts duſt vpon his head, and (as if he had learned of his Maſter, how to expoſtulate with God) ſayes, What wilt thou doe to thy mighty Name?

That Ioſhua might ſee, God tooke no pleaſure to let the Iſraelites lye dead vpon the earth, before their enemies; himſelfe is taxed for but lying all day, vpon his face, before the Arke. All his expoſtulations are anſwered in one word, Get thee vp, Iſrael hath ſinned. I doe not heare God ſay, Lye ſtill, and mourne for the ſin of Iſrael. It is to no purpoſe to pray againſt puniſhment, while the ſinne continues. And though God loues to be ſued to; yet he holds our requeſts vnſeaſonable, till there bee care had of ſatisfaction. When we haue riſen, and redreſſed ſin, then may we fall downe for pardon.

Victory is in the free hand of God, to diſpoſe were he will; and no man can maruell that the dice of Warre run euer with hazard, on both ſides: ſo as God needed not to haue giuen any other reaſon of this diſcomfiture of Iſrael, but his owne pleaſure: yet Ioſhua muſt now know, that Iſrael which before preuailed for their faith, is beaten for their ſin. When we are croſſed in iuſt and holy quarrels, we may well thinke there is ſome ſecret euill vnrepented of, which God would puniſh in vs; which, though we ſee not, yet he ſo hates, that he will rather be wanting to his owne cauſe, then not reuenge it. When we goe about any enterpriſe of God, it is good to ſee that our hearts be cleere from any pollution of ſin; and when we are thwarted in our hopes, it is our beſt courſe to ranſack our ſelues, and to ſearch for ſome ſin hid from vs in our boſome but open to the view of God.

The Oracle of God, which told him, a great offence was committed, yet reueales not the perſon: It had beene as eaſie for him, to haue named the man, as the crime. Neither doth Ioſhua requeſt it; but refers that diſcouery to ſuch a meanes, as whereby the offender (finding himſelfe ſingled out by the lot) might bee moſt conuinced. Achan thought he might haue lyen as cloſe in all that throng of Iſrael, as the wedge of gold lay in his Tent. The ſame hope of ſecreſie which moued him to ſinne, moued him to confidence in his ſinne: but now, when hee ſaw the lot fall vpon his Tribe, hee began to ſtart a little; when vpon his Family, he began to change countenance: when vpon his houſhold, to tremble and feare; when vpon his perſon, to be vtterly confounded in himſelfe. Fooliſh men thinke to runne away with their priuie ſinnes; and

ſay

ſay, Tuſh, no eye ſhall ſee me: but when they thinke themſelues ſafeſt, God puls them out with ſhame. The man that hath eſcaped iuſtice, and now is lying downe in death, would thinke; My ſhame ſhall neuer be diſcloſed: but, before Men and Angels ſhall he be brought on the ſcaffold, and finde confuſion, as ſure as late.

What needed any other euidence, when God had accuſed Achan? Yet Ioſhua will haue the ſinne out of his mouth, in whoſe heart it was hatched; My ſonne, I beſeech thee giue glory to God. Whom God had conuinced as a malefactor, Ioſhua beſeeches as a ſon. Some hot ſpirit would haue ſaid; Thou wretched traitor, how haſt thou pilfred from thy God, and ſhed the blood of ſo many Iſraelites, and cauſed the Hoſt of Iſrael to ſhew their backes, with diſhonour, to the Heathen? now ſhall we fetch this ſin out of thee with tortures, and plague thee with a condigne death. But like the Diſciple of him whoſe ſeruant he was, he meekely intreats that, which he might haue extorted by violence, (My ſonne, I beſeech thee.) Sweetneſſe of compellation, is a great help towards the good entertainment of an admonition: roughneſſe and rigor, many times hardens thoſe hearts, which meekeneſſe would haue melted to repentance: whether we ſue, or conuince, or reproue, little good is gotten by bitterneſſe. Deteſtation of the ſinne, may well ſtand with fauour to the perſon: and theſe two not diſtinguiſhed, cauſe great wrong, either in our charity, or iuſtice; for, either we vncharitably hate the creature of God, or vniuſtly affect the euill of men. Subiects are, as they are called, ſonnes to the Magiſtrate: All Iſrael was not onely of the family, but as of the loynes of Ioſhua; ſuch muſt be the corrections, ſuch the prouiſions of Gouernours, as for their children; as againe, the obedience and loue of Subiects muſt be filiall.

God had glorified himſelfe ſufficiently, in finding out the wickedneſſe of Achan; neither need he honour from men, much leſſe from ſinners; They can diſhonour him by their iniquities: but what recompence can they giue him for their wrongs? yet Ioſhua ſayes, My ſonne, giue glory to God. Iſrael ſhould now ſee, that the tongue of Achan did iuſtifie God in his lot. The confeſſion of our ſins doth no leſſe honour God, then his glory is blemiſhed by their commiſſion. Who would not be glad to redeeme the honour of his Redeemer, with his owne ſhame?

The lot of God, and the mild words of Ioſhua, wonne Achan to accuſe himſelfe, ingenuouſly, impartially: a ſtorme perhaps would not haue done that, which a Sunſhine had done. If Achan had come in vncalled; and before any queſtion made, out of an honeſt remorſe, had brought in his ſacrilegious booty, and caſt himſelfe and it at the foot of Ioſhua; doubtleſſe, Iſrael had proſpered, and his ſinne had caried away pardon: now, he hath gotten thus much thanke, that he is not a deſperate ſinner. God will once wring from the conſcience of wicked men their owne inditements; They haue not more carefully hid their ſinne, then they ſhall one day freely proclaime their owne ſhame.

Achans confeſſion, though it were late, yet was it free and full: For he doth not onely acknowledge the act, but the ground of his ſinne; I ſaw, and coueted, and tooke. The eye betrayed the heart; and that, the hand; and now all conſpire in the offence. If we liſt not to flatter our ſelues, this hath beene the order of our crimes. Euill is vniforme; and beginning at the ſenſes, takes the inmoſt fort of the ſoule, and then armes our own outward forces againſt vs; This ſhall once be the laſciuious mans ſong, I ſaw, and coueted, and tooke: This the theeues, this the Idolaters, this the gluttons and drunkards: All theſe receiue their death by the eye. But, oh fooliſh Achan! with what eyes didſt thou looke vpon that ſpoile, which thy fellowes ſaw and contemned? Why couldeſt thou not before, as well as now, ſee ſhame hid vnder that gay Babyloniſh garment? and an heape of ſtones couered with thoſe ſhekles of ſiluer? The ouer-prizing, and ouer-deſiring of theſe earthly things, caries vs into all miſchiefe, and hides from vs the ſight of Gods iudgments: whoſoeuer deſires the glory of metals, or of gay cloathes, or honour, cannot be innocent.

Well might Ioſhua haue proceeded to the execution of him, whom God and his owne mouth accuſed: but as one that thought no euidence could bee too ſtrong, in a caſe that was capitall; he ſends to ſee, whether there was as much truth in the confeſſion, as there was falſhood in the ſtealth. Magiſtrates and Iudges muſt pace ſlowly, and ſure, in the puniſhment of offenders. Preſumptions are not ground enough for the ſentence of death; no, not in ſome caſes the confeſſions of the guilty: It is no warrant for the Law to wrong a man, that he hath before wronged himſelfe. There is leſſe ill in ſparing an offender, then in puniſhing the innocent.

Who would not haue expected, ſince the confeſſion of Achan was ingenuous, and his pillage ſtill found entire, that his life ſhould haue beene pardoned? But here was, Confeſſe and die; he had beene too long ſicke of this diſeaſe, to be recouered. Had his confeſſion beene ſpeedy and free, it had ſaued him. How dangerous it is, to ſuffer ſin to lye fretting into the ſoule! which if it were waſht off betimes with our repentance, could not kill vs. In mortall offences, the courſe of humane iuſtice is not ſtayd by our penitence: It is well for our ſoules that we haue repented; but the lawes of men take not notice of our ſorrow. I know not whether the death, or the teares of a malefactor, be a better ſight: The cenſures of the Church are wip't off with weeping, not the penalties of Lawes.

Neither is Achan alone called forth to death, but all his family, all his ſubſtance. The actor alone doth not ſmart with ſacriledge; all that concernes him, is enwrapped in the iudgement. Thoſe that defile their hands with holy goods, are enemies to their owne fleſh and blood. Gods firſt reuenges are ſo much the more fearefull, becauſe they muſt be exemplary.

Of the Gibeonites.

THe newes of Iſraels victory had flowne ouer all the Mountaines & Valleys of Canaan; and yet thoſe Heatheniſh Kings and people, are muſtered together againſt them. They might haue ſeene themſelues in Iericho and Ai; and haue well perceiued, it was not an arme of fleſh, that they muſt reſiſt; yet they gather their forces, and ſay, Tuſh, we ſhall ſpeed better. It is madneſſe in a man, not to be warned, but to run vpon the point of thoſe iudgements, wherewith he ſees others miſcary, and not to beleeue, till he cannot recouer. Our aſſent is purchaſed too late, when we haue ouerſtayed preuention; and truſt to that experience which we cannot liue to redeeme.

Onely the Hiuites are wiſer then their fellowes, and will rather yeeld and liue. Their intelligence was not diuerſe from the reſt; all had equally heard of the miraculous conduct, and ſucceſſe of Iſrael: but their reſolution was diuerſe. As Rahab ſaued her Family, in the midſt of Iericho: ſo theſe foure cities preſerued themſelues, in the midſt of Canaan; and both of them by beleeuing what God would doe. The efficacy of Gods maruellous workes, is not in the acts themſelues, but in our apprehenſion; ſome are ouercome with thoſe motiues, which others haue contemned for weake.

Had theſe Gibeonites ioyned with the forces of all their neighbours, they had periſhed in their common ſlaughter; If they had not gone away by themſelues, death had met them; It may haue more pleaſure, it cannot haue ſo much ſafety to follow the multitude. If examples may lead vs, the greateſt part ſhuts out God vpon earth, and is excluded from God elſewhere. Some few poore Hiuites yeeld to the Church of God, and eſcape the condemnation of the world. It is very like, their neighbours flouted at this baſe ſubmiſſion of the Gibeonites; and out of their termes of honour, ſcorned to beg life of an enemy, whiles they were out of the compaſſe of mercy: but when the bodies of theſe proud Iebuſites and Perizzites lay ſtrewed vpon the earth, and the Gibeonites ſuruiued; whether was more worthy of ſcorne and inſultation?

If the Gibeonites had ſtayed till Iſrael had beſieged their Cities, their yeeldance had beene fruitleſſe; now they make an early peace,and are preſerued. There is no wiſdome in ſtaying till a iudgement come home to vs;the onely way to auoid it,is to meet it halfe way. There is the ſame remedy of warre and of danger: To prouoke an enemy in his owne borders, is the beſt ſtay of inuaſion; and to ſollicit God betimes in a manifeſt danger, is the beſt antidote for death.

I commend their wiſedome in ſeeking peace; I doe not commend their falſhood,in the manner of ſeeking it: who can looke for any better of Pagans? But as the faith of Rahab is ſo rewarded, that her lye is not puniſhed: ſo the fraud of theſe Gibeonites is not an equall match of their beleefe; ſince the name of the Lord God of Iſrael brought them to this ſuit of peace.

Nothing is found fitter to deceiue Gods people, then a counterfeit copy of age: Here are old ſacks,old bottles, old ſhooes, old garments,old bread. The Iſraelites that had worne one ſuit forty yeares, ſeemed new clad in compariſon of them. It is no new policy, that Satan would beguile vs with a vaine colour of antiquity, clothing falſhood in rags. Errors are neuer the elder for their patching: Corruption can doe the ſame that time would doe: we may make age as well as ſuffer it. Theſe Gibeonites did teare their bottles,and ſhooes, and clothes, and made them naught, that they might ſeeme old: ſo doe the falſe patrons of new errors. If wee be caught with this Gibeonitiſh ſtratagem,it is a ſigne we haue not conſulted with God.

The ſentence of death was gone out againſt all the inhabitants of Canaan. Theſe Hiuites acknowledge the truth,and iudgements of God, and yet ſeeke to eſcape by a league with Iſrael. The generall denunciations of the vengeance of God, enwrap all ſinners; Yet may we not deſpaire of mercy. If the ſecret counſell of the Almighty had not deſigned theſe men to life, Ioſhua could not haue beene deceiued with their league. In the generality there is no hope: Let vs come in old rags of our vileneſſe, to the true Ioſhua, and make our truce with him; we may liue, yea,we ſhall liue. Some of the Iſraelites ſuſpect the fraud; and notwithſtanding all their old garments, and prouiſions,can ſay, It may be thou dwelleſt amongſt vs. If Ioſhua had continued this doubt, the Gibeonites had torne their bottles in vaine. In caſes and perſons vnknowne, it is ſafe not to be too credulous: Charity it ſelfe will allow ſuſpition, where wee haue ſeene no cauſe to truſt.

If theſe Hiuites had not put on new faces,with their old cloathes, they had ſurely changed countenance, when they heard this argument of the Iſraelites, (It may bee thou dwelleſt amongſt vs; how then can I make a league with thee?) They had (perhaps) hoped,their ſubmiſſion would not haue been refuſed,whereſoeuer they had dwelt: but leſt, their neighbourhood might be a preiudice, they come diſguiſed; and now heare, that their neereneſſe of abode was an vnremoueable barre of peace. It was quarrell enough, that they were Canaanites; God had forbidden both the league, and the life of the natiue inhabitants. He that cals himſelfe the God of peace, proclaimes himſelfe the God of Hoſts: and not to fight where he hath commanded, is to breake the peace with God, whiles wee nouriſh it with men. Contention with brethren is not more hatefull to him then leagues with Idolaters. The condition that hee hath ſet to our peace is our poſſibility and power. That fals not within the poſſibility of our power, which we cannot doe lawfully.

What a ſmooth tale did theſe Gibeonites tell for themſelues? of the remoteneſſe of their Countrey; the motiues of their iourney; the conſultation of their Elders; the ageing of their prouiſions in the way: that it might ſeeme not onely ſafe,but deſerued on their parts, that they ſhould be admitted to a peace, ſo farre ſought and purchaſed with ſo much toyle,and importunity. Their clothes, and their tongues agreed together; and both diſagree from the truth. Deceit is euer lightly wrapped vp in plauſibility of words; as faire faces oft times hide much vnchaſtity. But this guile ſped the better, becauſe it was clad with much plainneſſe: For who would haue ſuſpected, that clouted ſhooes, and ragged coats could haue couered ſo much ſubtilty?

The caſe ſeemed ſo cleare, that the Iſraelites thought it needleſſe to conſult with the mouth of the Lord. Their owne eyes and eares were called onely to counſell; and now their credulity hath drawne them into inconuenience.

There is no way to conuince the Gibeonitiſh pretences of antiquity, but to haue recourſe to the Oracle of God. Had this beene adviſed with, none of theſe falſe rags had ſhamed the Church of God: whether in our practice, or iudgement, this direction cannot faile vs, whereas what wee take vp on the words of men, proues euer either light, or falſe wares.

The facility of Iſrael had led them into a league, to an oath, for the ſafety of the Gibeonites: and now within three dayes they finde both their neighbourhood and deceit. Thoſe old ſhooes of theirs would eaſily hold to cary them backe to their home. The march of a great Army is eaſie: yet within three dayes the Iſraelites were before their Cities, Ioſhua might now haue taken aduantage of their owne words, to diſſolue his league, and haue ſaid; Ye are come from a farre Countrey, theſe Cities are neere; Theſe are not therefore the people, to whom wee are ingaged by our promiſe, and oath: And if theſe Cities be yours, yet yee are not your ſelues. Ere-while, ye were ſtrangers; now ye are Hiuites borne, and dwelling in the midſt of Canaan: wee will therefore deſtroy theſe Cities neere-hand, and doe you ſaue your people afarre off. It would ſeeme very queſtionable, Whether Ioſhua needed to hold himſelfe bound to this oath; for fraudulent conuentions oblige not; and Iſrael had put in a direct caueat of their vicinity: yet dare not Ioſhua and the Princes truſt to ſhifts, for the eluding their oath; but muſt faithfully performe, what they haue raſhly promiſed.

Ioſhuaes heart was cleare from any intention of a league with a Canaanite, when hee gaue his oath to theſe diſguiſed ſtrangers: yet he durſt neither repeale it himſelfe, neither doe I heare him ſue to Eleazar the High-Prieſt, to diſpence with it; but takes himſelfe tied to the very ſtrict words of his oath; not to his owne purpoſe. His tongue had bound his heart and hands, ſo as neither might ſtirre; leſt while he was curious of fulfilling the will of God, he ſhould violate the oath of God. And if the Gibeonites had not knowne theſe holy bonds indiſſoluble, they neither had beene ſo importunate to obtaine their vow, nor durſt they haue truſted it being obtained. If either diſpenſation with oathes, or equiuocation in oathes, had beene knowne in the world, or at leaſt approued, theſe Gibeonites had not liued, and Iſrael had ſlaine them without ſinne: Either Iſrael wanted skill; or our reſeruers honeſty.

The multitude of Iſrael, when they came to the wals of theſe foure exempted Cities, itched to be at the ſpoile: Not out of a deſire to fulfill Gods commandement, but to enrich themſelues, would they haue falne vpon theſe Hiuites; They thought all loſt that fell beſides their fingers. The wealthy City of Iericho was firſt altogether interdicted them; the wals and houſes either fell, or muſt be burnt; the men and cattell killed; the goods and treaſure confiſcate to God. Achans booty ſhewes, that City was both rich and proud: yet Iſrael might be no whit the better for them, carying away nothing but empty victory: and now foure other Cities muſt be exempted from their pillage. Many an enuious looke did Iſrael therefore caſt vpon theſe wals; and many bitter words did they caſt out againſt their Princes, the enemies of their gaine; whether for ſwearing, or for that they would not forſweare: But howſoeuer, the Princes might haue ſaid in a returne to their fraud, We ſwore indeed to you, but not the people: yet, if any Iſraelite had but pulled downe one ſtone from their wals, or ſhed one drop of Gibeonitiſh blood; he had no leſſe plagued all Iſrael for periury, then Achan had before plagued them for ſacriledge. The ſequell ſhewes how God would haue taken it: For, when three hundred yeares after, Saul (perhaps forgetting the vow of his fore-fathers) ſlew ſome of theſe Gibeonites, although out of a wel-meant zeale; all Iſrael ſmarted for the fact, with a three yeares famine, and that in Dauids reigne, who receiued this Oracle from God; It is for Saul, and for his bloody houſe, becauſe he ſlue the Gibeonites. Neither could this wrong be expiated, but by the blood of Sauls ſeuen ſonnes, hanged vp at the very Court-gates of their father.

Ioſhua

12637c

Ioſhua and the Princes had promiſed them life, they promiſed them not liberty: no Couenant was paſt againſt their ſeruitude. It was iuſt therefore with the Rulers of Iſrael, to make ſlauery the price both of their liues, and their deceit. The Iſraelites had themſelues beene drudges, if the Gibeonites had not beguiled them, and liued. The old rags therefore wherewith they came diſguiſed, muſt now be their beſt ſuites, and their life muſt be toileſomely ſpent in hewing of wood, and drawing of water for all Iſrael. How deare is life to our nature, that men can be content to purchaſe it with ſeruitude? It is the wiſedome of Gods children to make good vſe of their ouer-ſights. The raſh oath of Iſrael proues their aduantage: Euen wicked men gaine by the outſide of good actions: Good men make a benefit of their ſinnes.

The Reſcue of GIBEON.

THe life of the Gibeonites muſt coſt them ſeruitude from Iſrael, and dangers from their neighbors: if Ioſhua will but ſit ſtill, the deceit of the Gibeonites ſhall be reuenged by his enemies. Fiue Kings are vp in Armes againſt them, and are ready to pay their fraud with violence. What ſhould theſe poore men doe? If they make not their peace, they die by ſtrangers; if they do make their peace with Forrainers, they muſt die by Neighbors. There is no courſe that threatens not ſome danger: Wee haue ſped well, if our choice hath light vpon the eaſieſt inconuenience.

If theſe Hiuites haue ſinned againſt God, againſt Iſrael; yet what haue they done to their Neighbours? I heare of no trechery, no ſecret information, no attempt. I ſee no ſinne but their league with Iſrael, and their life: yet (for ought we finde) they were freemen; no way either obliged, or obnoxious. As Satan, ſo wicked men cannot abide to loſe any of their community: If a Conuert come hōme, the Angels welcome him with Songs, the Deuils follow him with vprore and fury, his old Partners, with ſcornes and obliquie,

I finde theſe Neighbour Princes halfe dead with feare, and yet they can finde time to be ſicke of enuy. Malice in a wicked heart, is the King of Paſſions: all other vaile and bow when it comes in place; euen their owne life was not ſo deare to them as reuenge. Who would not rather haue lookt, that theſe Kings ſhould haue tried to haue followed the copy of this League? Or if their fingers did itch to fight, why did they not rather thinke of a defenſiue warre againſt Iſrael, then an offenſiue againſt the Gibeonites? Gibeon was ſtrong, and would not be wonne without bloud; yet theſe Amorites, which at their beſt were too weake for Iſrael, would ſpend their forces before hand on their Neighbours. Here was a ſtrong hatred in weake breſts: they feared, and yet began to fight; they feared Iſrael, yet began to fight with Gibeon. If they had ſate ſtill, their deſtruction had not been ſo ſudden: the malice of the wicked, haſtens the paſe of their owne iudgement. No rod is fit for a miſchieuous man as his owne.

Gibeon, and theſe other Cities of the Hiuites, had no King: and none yeelded and eſcaped but they. Their elders conſulted before for their League; neither is there any challenge ſent to the King, but to the city: And now theſe fiue Kings of the Amorites haue vniuſtly compacted againſt them. Soueraigntie abuſed, is a great ſpurr to outrage: the conceit of authority in great perſons, many times lies in the way of their owne ſafety, whiles it will not let them ſtoope to the ordinary courſes of inferiours. Hence it is, that heauen is peopled with ſo few Great-ones: hence it is, that true contentment ſeldom dwels high; whiles meaner men of humble ſpirits, enioy both earth and heauen.

hall, J.

The Gibeonites had well proued, that though they wanted an Head, yet they wanted not wit; and now the ſame wit that wonne Ioſhua & Iſrael to their friendſhip and protection, teacheth them to make vſe of thoſe they had won. If they had not more truſted Ioſhua, then their wals, they had neuer ſtolne that League; & when ſhould they haue vſe of their new Protectors, but now that they were aſſailed? Whither ſhuld we flie, but to our Ioſhua, when the powers of darknes (like mighty Amorites) haue beſieged vs? If euer we wil ſend vp our prayers to him, it will be when we are beleagured with euils. If we truſt to our own reſiſtance, we cannot ſtand; we cannot miſcarry, if we truſt to his: in vain ſhall we ſend to our Ioſhua in theſe ſtraits, if we haue not before come to him in our freedome.

Which of vs would not haue thought Ioſhua had a good pretence for his forbearance, and haue ſaid, You haue ſtolne your League with me; why do you expect helpe frō him whom ye haue deceiued? All that we promiſed you, was a ſufferance to liue: enioy what we promiſed, we wil not take your life from you. Hath your faithfulneſſe deſerued to expect more then our couenant? We neuer promiſed to hazard our liues for you, to giue you life with the loſſe of our own. But that good man durſt not conſtrue his owne couenant to ſuch an aduantage: he knew little difference betwixt killing them with his owne ſword, and the ſword of an Amorite: woſoeuer ſhould giue the blow, the murder would be his. Euen permiſſion in thoſe things we may remedy, makes vs no leſſe Actors then conſent: ſome men kill as much by looking on, as others by ſmiting: We are guiltie of all the euill we might haue hindred.

The noble diſpoſition of Ioſhua, beſides his ingagement, will not let him forſake his new Vaſſals: Their confidence in him, is argument enough to draw him into the Field. The greateſt obligation to a good mind, is anothers truſt; which to diſappoint, were mercileſly perfidious. How much leſſe ſhall our true Ioſhua fail the confidence of our faith? Oh, my Sauiour, if we ſend the meſſengers of our praiers to thee into thy Gilgal, thy mercy bindes thee to reliefe: neuer any ſoule miſcarried that truſted thee; we may be wanting in our truſt, our truſt can neuer want ſucceſſe.

Speed in beſtowing, doubles a gift; a benefit deferred, loſes the thankes, and proues vnprofitable. Ioſhua marches all night, and fights all day for the Gibeonites: They tooke not ſo much paines in comming to deceiue him, as he in going to deliuer them. It is the nobleſt victorie to ouercome euill with good: If his very Iſraelites had been in danger, he could haue done no more: God, and his Ioſhua, make no difference betwixt Gibeonites Iſraelited, and his owne naturall people. All are Iſraelites whom he hath taken to league: we ſtrangers of the Gentiles, are now the true Iewes; God neuer did more for the naturall Oliue, then for that wild Impe which hee hath graffed in. And as theſe Hiuites could neuer be thankfull enough to ſuch a Ioſhua; no more can we to ſo gracious a Redeemer, who forgetting our worthineſſe, deſcended to our Gibeon, and reſcued vs from the powers of hell and death.

Ioſhua fought, but God diſcomfited the Amorites. The praiſe is to the workman, not the inſtrument: Neither did God ſlay them only with Ioſhuas ſword, but with his own haile-ſtones; that now the Amorites may ſee both theſe reuenges come from one hand. Theſe bullets of God doe not wound, but kill: It is no wonder that theſe fiue Kings flie; they may ſoone run away from their hope, neuer from their horror. If they looke behind, there is the ſword of Iſrael, which they dare not turne vpon, becauſe God had taken their heart from them, before their life: If they looked vpwards there is the haile-ſhot of God fighting againſt them out of heauen; which they can neither reſiſt, nor auoid.

If they had no enemie but Iſrael, they might hope to runne away from death, ſith feare is a better footman, then deſire of reuenge; but now whither-ſoeuer they runne, heauen will be about their heads: And now, al the reaſon that is left them in this confuſion of their thoughts, is to wiſh themſelues well dead; there is no euaſion, where God intends a reuenge. We men haue deuiſed to imitate theſe inſtruments of death, & ſend forth dedly bullets out of a cloud of ſmoke; wherin yet as there is much danger; ſo much vncertenty: but this God, that diſcharges his Ordnance from heauen, directs euery ſhot to an head; and can as eaſily kill as ſhoot. It is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the liuing God: he hath moe wayes of vengance, then he hath creatures. The ſame heauen that ſent forth water to the old world, fire to the Sodomites, lightning and Thunder-bolts to the Egyptians, ſends out haile-ſtones to the Amorites. It is a good care how wee may not anger God; it is a vaine ſtudy how we may flie from his iudgements, when we haue angred him; if we could runne out of the world, euen there ſhall we finde his reuenges farre greater.

Was it not miracle enough that God did braine their Aduerſaries from heauen, but that the Sun & Moone muſt ſtand ſtill in heauen? Is it not enough that the Amorites flie, but that the greateſt Planets of heauen muſt ſtay their own courſe, to witnes and wonder at the diſcomfiture? For him which gaue them both being & motion, to bid then ſtand ſtill, it ſeemes no difficulty, although the rareneſſe would deſerue admiration: but for a man to command the chieſe Stars of heauen, (by whoſe influence he liueth) as the Centurian would doe his ſeruant; Sunne, ſtay in Gibeon, and Moone ſtand ſtill in Aialon, it is more then a wonder. It was not Ioſhua, but his faith that did this; not by way of precept, but of prayer, If I may not ſay, that the requeſt of a faithful man (as wee ſay of the great) commands. Gods glory was that which Ioſhua aimed at: he knew that all the world muſt needes be witneſſes of that, which the Eye of the world ſtood ſtill to ſee. Had he reſpected but the ſlaughter of the Amorites, he knew the Haile-ſtones could doe that alone; the Sunne needed not ſtand ſtill to direct that cloud to perſecute them; but the glory of the ſlaughter was ſought by Ioſhua, that he might ſend that vp, whence thoſe Haile-ſtones and that Victory came: All the Earth might ſee the Sunne and Moone; all could not ſee the Cloud of Haile, which becauſe of that heauy burden flew but low. That al Nations might know, the ſame hand commands both in Earth, in the Clouds, in heauen, Ioſhua now praies, that he which diſheartned his enemies vpon earth, and ſmote them from the cloud, would ſtay the Sunne and Moone in Heauen. God neuer got himſelfe ſo much honour by one dayes worke amongſt the Heathen; and when was it more fit then now, when fiue Heathen Kings are banded againſt him?

The Sun and the Moone were the ordinary gods of the world: and who would not but thinke that their ſtanding ſtill but one houre, ſhould be the ruine of nature? And now al Nations ſhal wel ſee, that there is an higher then their higheſt; that their gods are but ſeruants to the God whō themſelues ſhould ſerue, at whoſe pleaſure both they & Nature ſhal ſtand at once. If that God which meant to work this miracle, had not raiſed vp his thoughts to deſire it, it had beene a blameable preſumption, which now is a faith worthy of admiration. To deſire a miracle without cauſe, is a tempting of God. O powerful God that can effect this! O power of faith that can obtain it! What is there that God cannot doe? and what is there which God can doe, that faith cannot doe?

The Altar of the Reubenites.

REuben and Gad were the firſt that had an inheritance aſſigned them; yet they muſt enioy it laſt: So it falls out oft in the heauenly Canaan, the firſt in title are the laſt in poſſeſſion. They had their lot aſſigned thē beyond Iordan; which though it were allotted them in peace, muſt be purchaſed with their war: that muſt be done for their brethren, which needed not be done for themſelues: they muſt yet ſtill fight, & fight formoſt, that as they had the firſt patrimony, they might endure the firſt encounter. I doe not heare them ſay, This is our ſhare, let vs ſit down, and inioy it quietly, fight who will for the reſt:

12637c

but when they knew their own portion, they leaue wiues and children to take poſſeſſion, & march armed before their brethren; til they had Conquerd all Canaan. Whether ſhould we more commend their courage, or their charity? Others were moued to fight with hope; they onely with loue: they could not win more, they might loſe themſelues; yet they will fight, both for that they had ſomething, and that their brethren might haue. Thankeſulneſſe and loue can doe more with Gods children, then deſire to merit, or neceſſity: No true Iſraelite can (if he might chuſe) abide to ſit ſtill beyond Iordan, when all his brethren are in the field. Now when all this warre of God was ended, & all Canaan is both won and diuided, they returne to their owne; yet not till they were diſmiſſed by Ioſhua: all the ſweet attractiues of their priuate loue cannot haſten their pace. If heauen be neuer ſo ſweet to vs, yet may we not run from this earthen warfare, till our great Captaine ſhall pleaſe to diſcharge vs. If theſe Reubenites had departed ſooner, they had been recalled, if not as cowards, ſurely as fugitiues; now they are ſent backe with victory and bleſſing. How ſafe and happy it is to attend both the call and the diſpatch of God!

Being returned in peace to their home, their firſt care is, not for Trophees, nor for houſes, but for an Altar to God; an Altar, not for ſacrifice, which had been abominable, but for a memoriall what God they ſerue. The firſt care of true Iſraelites, muſt bee the ſafety of Religion; the world, as it is inferiour in worth, ſo muſt it be in reſpect: hee neuer knew God aright, that can abide any competition with his Maker.

The reſt of the Tribes no ſooner heare newes of their new Altar, but they gather to Shiloh, to fight againſt them: they had ſcarce breathed from the Canaanitiſh war, & now they will go fight with their brethren: if their brethren will (as they ſuſpected) turne Idolaters, they cannot hold them any other then Canaanites. The Reubenites and their fellowes had newly ſetled the reſt of Iſrael in their poſſeſſions, and now ere they can be warm in their ſeates, Iſrael is vp in Arms to thruſt them out of their own. The hatred of their ſuſpected Idolatry, maks them forget either their blood, or their benefits. Iſrael ſayes, Theſe men were the firſt in our battels; & ſhall be the firſt in our reuenge: they fought well for vs; we wil try how they can fight for themſelues. What if they were our Champions? Their reuolt frō God hath loſt them the thanke of their former labours; their Idolatry ſhall make them of brethren, aduerſaries; their owne blood ſhall giue handſell to their new Altar. O noble and religious zeale of Iſrael! Who would thinke theſe men the ſonnes of them that danced about the molten Calfe? That conſecrated an Altar to that Idoll? Now they are ready to die or kill, rather then endure an Altar without an Idoll. Euery ouerture in matter of Religion, is worthy of ſuſpition, worthy of our ſpeedy oppoſition: God looks for an early redreſſe of the firſt beginnings of impiety. As in treaſons or mutinies, wiſe States-men finde it ſafeſt to kil the ſerpent in the egge; ſo in motions of ſpiritual alterations, one ſpoonfull of water will quench that fire at the firſt, which afterwards whole buckets cannot abate.

Yet doe not theſe zealous Iſraelites run raſhly & furiouſly vpon their brethren, nor ſay, What need we expoſtulate? The fact is cleere: what care we for words, when wee ſee their Altar? What can this meane, but either ſeruice to a falſe god, or diuiſion in the ſeruice of the true? There can be no excuſe for ſo manifeſt a crime: why doe wee not rather think of puniſhment, then ſatisfaction? But they ſend ere they go, & conſult ere they execute, Phineas the ſonne of Eleazar the Prieſt, and ten Princes (for euery Tribe one) are addreſſed both to inquire, & diſſwade; to inquire of the purpoſe of the fact; to diſſwade from that which they imagined was purpoſed. Wiſdome is a good giude to zeale, and onely can keepe it from running out into fury: If diſcretion doe not hold in the reynes, good intentions will both breake their owne necks, and the ryders: yea, which is ſtrange, without this, the zeale of God may lead vs from God.

Not onely wiſdome, but charity moued them to this meſſage. For, grant they had been guilty, muſt they periſh vnwarned? Peaceable meanes muſt firſt be vſed to recall them, ere violence be ſent to perſecute them. The old rule of Iſrael hath been, ſtill to inquire of Abel; No good Shepheard ſends his dog to pull out the throat of his ſtrayed ſheepe, but rather fetches it on his ſhoulders to the fold: Sudden cruelty ſtands not with Religion: He which will not himſelfe breake the bruiſed reede, how will hee allow vs, either to bruiſe the whole, or to breake the bruiſed, or to burne the broken?

Neither yet was here more charity in ſending, then vncharitableneſſe in the miſconſtruction. They begin with a challenge, and charge their brethren deeply with tranſgreſſion, apoſtaſie, rebellion. I know not how two contrary qualities fall into loue; it is not naturally ſuſpicious, and yet many times ſuggeſts iealous feares of thoſe wee affect. If theſe Iſraelites had not loued their brethren, they would neuer haue ſent ſo far to reſtraine them; they had neuer offered them part of their owne patrimony: if they had not been exceſſiuely iealous, they had not cenſured a doubtfull action ſo ſharply. They met at Shilo, where the Tabernacle was; but if they had conſulted with the Arke of God, they had ſaued both this labour, & this challenge: This caſe ſeemed ſo plain, that they thought aduice needleſſe: Their inconſideratenes therefore brands their brethren with crimes whereof they were innocent; and makes themſelues the onely offenders. In caſes which are doubtfull and vncertaine, it is ſafe either to ſuſpend the iudgement, os to paſſe it in fauour; otherwiſe, a plaine breach of charity in vs, ſhall be worſe then a queſtionable breach of iuſtice in another.

Yet this little gleame of their vncharitable loue began at themſelues; if they had not feared their owne iudgements in the offence of Reuben, I know not whether they had been ſo vehement: The fearefull reuenges of their brethrens ſin are ſtill in their eye. The wickedneſſe of Peor ſtreched not ſo far as the plague; Achan ſinned, and Iſrael was beaten: therefore by iuſt induction, they argue (Yee rebell to day againſt the Lord; to morrow will the Lord be wroth with all the Congregation.) They ſtill tremble at the vengeance paſſed; and finde it time to preuent their own puniſhment, in puniſhing their brethren. Gods proceedings haue then their right vſe, when they are both carefully remembred, and made patterns of what he may doe.

Had theſe Reubenites been as hot in their anſwere, as the Iſraelites were in their charge, heere had growne a bloudy warre out of miſpriſion: But now their anſwer is milde and moderate, & ſuch as well ſhewed, that though they were further from the Arke, yet no leſſe neere to God. They thought in themſelues, This act of ours, though it were well meant by vs, yet might well be by interpretation ſcandalous; it is reaſon our mildnes ſhould giue ſatisfaction for that offence, which we haue not preuented. Hereupon their anſwer was as pleaſing, as their act was dangerous. Euen in thoſe actions whereby an offence may bee occaſioned (though not giuen) charity bindes vs to cleare both our owne name, and the conſcience of others.

Little did the Iſraelites looke for ſo good a ground of an action ſo ſuſpicious; An Altar without a ſacrifice? An Altar and no Tabernacle? An Altar without a precept, and yet not againſt God? It is not ſafe to meaſure all mens actions by our own conceit, but rather to thinke there may be a further drift & warrant of their act, then we can attaine to ſee.

By that time the Reubenites haue commented vpon their owne worke, it appeares as iuſtifiable, as before offenſiue. What wiſdome and religion is found in that Altar, which before ſhewed nothing but Idolatry? This diſcourſe of theirs is full both of reaſon and piety; We are ſeuered by the riuer Iordan from the other Tribes; perhaps hereafter, our choice may exclude vs frō Iſrael: Poſterity may peraduenture ſay, Iordan is the bounds of al natural Iſraelites; the ſtreams whereof neuer gaue way to thoſe beyond the Riuer: If they had been ours, either in blood or religion, they would not haue been ſequeſtred in habitation. Doubtleſſe therefore theſe men are the offspring of ſome Strangers, which by vicinity of abode, haue gotten ſome tincture of our language, manners, religion; What haue we to doe with them, what haue they to doe with the Tabernacle of God? Sith therfore we may not either remoue Gods Altar to vs, or remoue our Patrimony to the Altar; The Patterne of the Altar ſhall goe with vs, not for ſacrifice, but for memoriall; that both the poſterity of the other Iſralites may know, we are no leſſe deriued from them, then this Altar from theirs; & that our poſterity may know, they pertaine to that Altar, whereof this is the reſemblance. There was no danger of the preſent; but poſterity might both offer and receiue preiudice, if this Monument were not. It is a wiſe & holy care to preuent the dangers of enſuing times, and to ſettle religion vpon the ſucceeding generations. As we affect to leaue a perptuity of our bodily iſſue, ſo much more to traduce piety with them. Doe we not ſee good husbands ſet and plant thoſe trees, wherof their grand-children ſhal receiue the firſt fruit, & ſhade? Why are we leſſe thrifty in leauing true religion intire to our childrens children?

EHVD and EGLON.

AS euery man is guilty of his owne ſorrow, the Iſraelites bred miſchiefe to themſelues: It was their mercy that plagued them with thoſe Canaanites, which their obedience ſhould haue rooted out. If fooliſh pitty be a more humane ſinne, yet it is no leſſe dangerous then cruelty: Cruelty kils others, vniuſt pitty kills our ſelues. They had been Lords alone of the promiſed Land, if their commiſeration had not ouer-ſwaied their iuſtice; & now their enemies are too cruel to them (in the iuſt reuenge of God) becauſe they were too mercifull. That God, which in his reuealed will had commanded all the Canaanites to the ſlaughter, yet ſecretly giues ouer Iſrael to a toleration of ſome Canaanites for their owne puniſhment. Hee hath bidden vs cleanſe our hearts of al our corruptions: yet hee will permit ſome of theſe thornes ſtill in our ſides, for exerciſe, for humiliation. If we could lay violent hands vpon our ſinnes, our ſoules ſhould haue peace; now our indulgence coſts vs many ſtripes; and many teares; what a continued circle is here of ſinnes, iudgements; repentance, deliuerances? The conuerſation with Idolaters, taints them with ſinne, their ſinne drawes on iudgements, the ſmart of the iudgement moues them to repentance, vpon their repentance followes ſpeedy deliuerance, vpon their peace and deliuerance, they ſinne againe.

Othniel, Calebs nephew, had reſcued them from Idolatry and ſeruitude: his life and their innocence and peace ended together. How powerfull the preſence of one good man is in a Church or State, is beſt found in his loſſe.

A man that is at once eminent in place and goodneſſe, is like a ſtake in a hedge; pul that vp, & all the reſt are but looſe and rotten ſticks, eaſily remoued: or like the piller of a vaulted roofe, which either ſupports, or ruines the building. Who would not thinke Idolatry an abſurd and vnnaturall ſinne? which as it hath the feweſt inducements, ſo had alſo the moſt direct inhibitions from God; & yet after all theſe warnings, Iſrael falls into it againe: neither affliction nor repentance can ſecure an Iſraelite from redoubling the worſt ſinne, if hee be left to his owne frailty. It is no cenſuring of the truth of our preſent ſorrow, by the euent of a following miſcarriage; The former cryes of Iſrael to God were vnfained, yet their preſent wickedneſſe is abominable: Let him that thinkes he ſtands, take heed leſt he fall.

No ſooner had he ſaid (Iſrael had reſt) but he addes, They committed wickedneſſe: The ſecurity of any people is the cauſe of their corruption; ſtanding waters ſoone grow noyſome. Whiles they were exerciſed with war, how ſcrupulous were they of the leaſt intimation of Idolatry? the newes of a bare Altar beyond Iordan, drew them together for a reuenge; now they are at peace with their enemies, they are at variance with God. It is both hard and happy not to be the worſe with libertie; The ſedentary life is moſt ſubiect to diſeaſes.

Rather then Iſrael ſhall want a ſcourge for their ſin, God himſelfe ſhal raiſe them vp an enemy: Moab had no quarrel but his own ambition: but God meant by the ambition of the one part, to puniſh the Idolatrie of the other; his iuſtice can make one ſinne the executioner of another, whileſt neither ſhall looke for any other meaſure frō him, but iudgement: The euill of the City is ſo his, that the inſtrument is not guiltles. Before, God had ſtirred vp the King of Syria againſt Iſrael; now, the King of Moab; afterwards, the King of Canaan: Hee hath more varietie of iudgements, then there can be offences; if wee haue once made him our aduerſarie, hee ſhall be ſure to make vs aduerſaries enow; which ſhall reuenge his quarrell, whileſt they proſecute their owne.

Euen thoſe were Idolaters, by whoſe hands God plagued the Idolatries of Iſrael. In Moab, the ſame wickedneſſe proſpers, which in Gods owne people is puniſhed: the iuſtice of the Almighty can leaſt brook euill in his own; the ſame heathen which prouoked Iſrael to ſin, ſhall ſcourge them for ſinning. Our very profeſſion hurts vs, if we be not innocent.

No leſſe then eighteene yeeres did the rod of Moab reſt vpon the inheritance of God: Iſrael ſeemes as borne to ſeruitude; they came from their bondage in the Land of Egypt, to ſerue in the Land of Promiſe: They had neglected God, now they are neglected of God; their ſinnes haue made them ſeruants, whom the choyce of God had made free, yea, his firſt borne. Worthy are they to ſerue thoſe men, whoſe falſe gods they had ſerued; and to ſerue them alwayes in thraldome, whom they haue once ſerued in Idolatry. Wee may not meaſure the continuance of puniſhment, by the time of the commiſſion of ſinne; one minutes ſin deſerues a torment beyond all time.

Doubtleſſe, Iſrael was not ſo inſenſible of their owne miſerie, as not to complaine ſooner then the end of eighteen yeers: The firſt houre they ſighed for themſelues, but now they cryed vnto God. The very purpoſe of affliction is to make vs importunate: He that hears the ſecret murmures of our griefe, yet will not ſeem to heare vs, till our cries be loud and ſtrong. God ſees it beſt to let the penitent dwell for the time vnder their ſorrowes; he ſees vs ſinking al the while, yet he lets vs alone, till we be at the bottome: and when once wee can ſay, Out of the depths haue I cried to thee; inſtantly followes, The Lord heard me. A vehement ſuter cannot but be heard of God, whatſoeuer hee askes. If our prayers want ſucceſſe, they want heart; their bleſſing is according to their vigour. Wee liue in bondage to theſe ſpirituall Moabites, our owne corruptions. It diſcontents vs: but where are our ſtrong cries vnto the God of heauen Where are our teares? If we could paſſionately bemoane our ſelues to him, how ſoon ſhould wee bee more then conquerours? Some good motions wee haue to ſend vp to him, but they faint in the way. Wee may call long enough, if wee cry not to him.

The ſame hand that raiſed vp Eglon againſt Iſrael, raiſed vp alſo Ehud for Iſrael, againſt Eglon: When that Tyrant hath reuenged God of his people, God will reuenge his people of him. It is no priuiledge to be an inſtrument of Gods vengeance by euill meanes: Though Eglon were an Vſurper, yet had Ehud been a Traytor, if God had not ſent him: it is only in the power of him that makes Kings, when they are once ſetled, to depoſe them. It is no more poſſible for our moderne butchers of Princes, to ſhew they are imployed by God, then to eſcape the reuenge of God in offering to doe this violence, not being imployed.

What a ſtrange choyce doth God make of an Executioner? A man ſhut of his right hand; either he had but one, hand or vſed but one, and that the worſe, and more vnready. Who would not haue thought both hands too little for ſuch a worke, or, if either might haue been ſpared, how much rather the left? God ſeeth not as man ſeeth: It is the ordinary wont of the Almightie, to make choyce of the vnlikelieſt meanes.

Hall, J.

The inſtruments of God muſt not be meaſured by their owne power, or aptitude; but by the wil of the Agent. Though Ehud had no hands, he that imployed him, had enabled him to this ſlaughter. In humane things, it is good to looke to the meanes; in diuine, to the worker; No meanes are to be contemned that God will vſe; no meanes to be truſted that man will vſe without him.

It is good to be ſuſpicious where is leaſt ſhew of danger, and moſt appearance of fauour. This left-handed man comes with a preſent in his hand, but a dagger vnder his skirt. The Tyrant, beſides ſeruice, lookt for gifts; and now receiues death in his bribe: Neither God nor men doe alwaies giue where they loue. How oft doth God giue extraordinary illumination, power of miracles, beſides wealth & honour, where he hates? So doe men too oft accompany their curſes with preſents; either leaſt an enemy ſhould hurt vs, or that we may hurt them. The intention is the fauour in gifts, and not the ſubſtance.

Ehuds faith ſupplies the want of his hand: Where God intends ſucceſſe, hee lifts vp the heart with reſolutions of courage and contempt of danger. What indifferent beholder of this proiect would not haue condemned it, as vnlikely to ſpeed; To ſee a maimed man goe alone to a great King, in the middeſt of all this troopes; to ſingle him out from all witneſſes; to ſet vpon him with one hand in his owne Parlor, where his Courtiers might haue heard the leaſt exclamation, and haue comne in, if not to the reſcue, yet to the reuenge? Euery circumſtance is full of improbabilities: Faith euermore ouer-lookes the difficulties of the way, and bends her eyes onely to the certaintie of the end. In this inteſtine ſlaughter of our tyrannicall corruptions, when wee caſt our eyes vpon our ſelues, wee might well deſpaire: Alaſſe, what can our left hands doe againſt theſe ſpirituall wickedneſſes? But when wee ſee who hath both commanded, and vndertaken to proſper theſe Holy deſignes, how can wee miſdoubt the ſucceſſe? I can doe all things through him that ſtrengthens mee.

When Ehud hath obtained the conuenient ſecrecie both of the weapon and place; now with a confident forehead hee approaches the Tyrant, and ſalutes him, with a true and awfull preface to ſo important an act: I haue a meſſage to thee from God. Euen Ehuds poynard was Gods meſſage; not onely the vocall admonitions, but alſo the reall iudgements of God, are his errands to the world. Hee ſpeakes to vs in raine and waters, in ſickneſſes and famine, in vnſeaſonable times and inundations: Theſe are the ſecondary meſſages of God; if we will not heare the firſt, we muſt heare theſe to our coſt.

I cannot but wonder at the deuout reuerence of this Heathen Prince: hee ſate in his Chaire of State; the vnweildineſſe of his fat body was ſuch, that hee could not riſe with readines and eaſe; yet no ſooner doth he heare newes of a meſſage from God, but hee riſes vp from his Throne, and reuerently attends the tenor thereof: Though hee had no ſuperior to controll him, yet he cannot abide to be vnmannerly in the buſineſſe of God.

This man was an Idolater, a Tyrant: yet what outward reſpects doth hee giue to the true God? Externall ceremonies of pietie, and complements of deuotion, may well be found with falſhood in Religion. They are a good ſhaddow of truth where it is: but where it is not, they are the very body of hypocriſie. Hee that had riſen vp in Armes againſt Gods people, and the true worſhip of God, now riſes vp in reuerence to his Name. God would haue liked well to haue had leſſe of his courteſie, more of his obedience.

He lookt to haue heard the meſſage with his eares, and hee feeles it in his guts; ſo ſharpe a meſſage, that it pierced the body, & let out the ſoule through that vncleane paſſage: neither did it admit of any anſwere, but ſilence and death. In that part had he offended by pampering it, and making it his god; and now his bane findes the ſame way with his ſinne.

This one hard and cold morſell, which hee cannot digeſt, paies for all thoſe gluttonous delicates, whereof he had formerly ſurfetted. It is the manner of God, to take fearefull reuenges of the profeſſed enemies of his Church.

It is a maruell, that neither any noyſe in his dying, nor the fall of ſo groſſe a body, called in ſome of his attendants: But that God, which hath intended to bring about any deſigne, diſpoſes of all circumſtances to his owne purpoſe. If Ehud had not come forth with a calme and ſetled countenance, and ſhut the doores after him, all his proiect had been in the duſt. What had it been better that the King of Moab was ſlaine, if Iſrael had neither had a meſſenger to informe, nor a Captaine to guide them? Now he departs peaceably, and blowes a Trumpet in Mount Ephraim; gathers Iſrael, and fals vpon the body of Moab, as well as he had done vpon the head, and procures freedome to his people. He that would vndertake great enterpriſes, had need wiſedome, and courage; wiſedome to contriue, and courage to execute; wiſedome to guide his courage, and courage to ſecond his wiſedome: both which, if they meet with a good cauſe, cannot, but ſucceede.

IAEL and SISERA.

IT is no wonder if they, who ere foure-ſcore dayes after the Law deliuered, fell to Idolatry alone, now after foure-ſcore yeers ſince the Law reſtored, fell to Idolatry among the Canaanites. Peace could in a ſhorter time worke looſeneſſe in any people. And if forty yeeres after Othniels deliuerance, they relapſed, what maruell is it that in twiſe forty after Ehud, they thus miſcarried? What are they the better to haue killed Eglon the King of Moab, if the Idolatry of Moab haue killed them? The ſinne of Moab ſhall be found a worſe Tyrant then their Eglon. Iſrael is for euery market; they ſold themſelues to Idolatry, God ſels them to the Canaanites; it is no maruel they are ſlaues, if they wil be Idolaters. After their longeſt intermiſſion, they haue now the ſoreſt bondage. None of their Tyrants were ſo potent, as Iabin with his nine hundred Chariots of yron. The longer the reckoning is deferred, the greater is the ſumme: God prouides on purpoſe mighty Aduerſaries for his Church, that their humiliation may be the greater in ſuſtayning; and his glory may be greater in deliuerance.

I do not finde any Prophet in Iſrael during their ſinne; but ſo ſoone as I heare newes of their repentance, mention is made of a Propheteſſe, and Iudge of Iſrael. There is no better ſigne of Gods reconciliation, then the ſending of his holy meſſengers to any people: He is not vtterly falne out with thoſe whom he bleſſes with prophecy. Whom yet doe I ſee raiſed to this honour? Not any of the Princes of Iſrael; not Barac the Captaine; not Lapidoth the husband; but a woman, for the honour of her ſex; a wife for the honour of wedlocke: Debora, the wife of Lapidoth.

He that had choice of all the millions of Iſrael, culs out two weake women, to deliuer his people, Deborah ſhall iudge, Iael ſhall execute. All the Palaces of Iſrael muſt yeeld to the Palme-tree of Deborah; The weakneſſe of the inſtruments, redounds to the greater honour of the Workman. Who ſhall aske God any reaſon of his elections, but his own pleaſure? Deborah was to ſentence, not to ſtrike; to command, not to execute: This act is maſculine, fit for ſome Captaine of Iſrael; She was the Head of Iſrael, it was meet ſome other ſhould be the hand: It is an imperfect and titular gouernment, where there is a cōanding power, without correction, without execution. The meſſage of Deborah finds out Barac the ſonne of Abinoam, in his obſcure ſecrecy, and cals him from a corner of Nepthali, to the honour of this exploit. He is ſent for, not to get the victory, but to take it; not to ouercome, but to kil; to purſue, & not to beare Siſera. Who could not haue done this worke, whereto not much courage, no skill belonged? Yet euen for this, will God haue an inſtrument of his owne choyce: It is is moſt fit that God ſhould ſerue himſelfe where he liſt, of his own, neither is it to be inquired; whom we thinke meet for any employment, but whom God hath called.

Deborah had beene no Propheteſſe, if ſhee durſt haue ſent in her owne name; Her meſſage is from him that ſent her ſelfe, Hath not the Lord God of Iſrael commanded? Baracs anſwere is faithfull, though conditionate; and doth not ſo much intend a refuſall to go without her, as a neceſſary bond of her preſence with him. Who can blame him that he would haue a Propheteſſe in his company? If the man had not been as holy as valiant, he would not haue wiſhed ſuch ſociety. How many thinke it a perpetuall bondage to haue a Prophet of God at their elbow? God had neuer ſent for him ſo farre, if he could haue bin content to goe vp without Debroah; He knew that there was both a bleſſing, and incouragement in that preſence. It is not putting any truſt in the ſucceſſe of thoſe men, that neglect the meſſengers of God.

To preſcribe that to others, which we draw backe from doing our ſelues, is an argument of hollowneſſe and falſity: Barac ſhal ſee that Deborah doth not offer him that cup wherof ſhe dare not begin; without regard of her ſex ſhe marches with him to Mount Tabor, and reioyces to be ſeene of the tenne thouſand of Iſrael. With what ſcorne did Siſera looke at the gleanings of Iſrael? How vnequall did this match ſeeme of ten thouſand Iſraelites againſt his three hundred thouſand foot, ten thouſand horſe nine hundred charets of yron? And now in brauery, hee calls for his troopes, and meanes to kill this handfull of Iſrael with the very ſight of his piked chariots; & onely feared, it would be no victory to cut the throats of ſo few. The faith of Deborah and Barac was not appaled with this world of Aduerſaries, which frō Mount Tabor they ſaw hiding all the vally below them; they knew whom they had beleeued, and how little an Arme of fleſh could doe againſt the God of Hoſts.

Barac went downe againſt Siſera, but it was God that deſtroyed him. The Iſraelites did not this day weild their owne ſwords, leſt they ſhould arrogate any thing; God told them before-hand, it ſhould be his owne act. I heare not of one ſtroke that any Canaanite gaue in this fight; as if they were called hither, onely to ſuffer. And now proud Siſera, after many curſes of the heauineſſe of that yron carriage, is glad to quit his Chariot, and betake himſelfe to his heeles. Who euer yet knew any earthly thing truſted in, without diſappointment? It is wonder if God make vs not at laſt as weary of whatſoeuer hath ſtolne our hearts from him, as euer we were found.

Yet Siſera hopes to haue ſped better then his followers, in ſo ſeaſonable an harbour of Iael. If Heber and Iael had not been great perſons, there had beene no note taken of their Tents; There had beene no league betwixt King Iabin and them: now their greatneſſe makes them knowne, their league makes them truſted. The diſtreſſe of Siſera might haue made him importunate, but Iael begins the courteſie, and exceeds the deſire of her gueſt: He askes water to drinke, ſhe giues him milke; he wiſhes but ſhelter, ſhe makes him a bed; he deſires the protection of her Tent, ſhe couers him with a mantle. And now Siſera pleaſes himſelfe with this happy change, and thinkes how much better it is to be heer, then in that whirling of chariots, in that horror of flight, amongſt thoſe ſhrieks, thoſe wounds, thoſe carcaſſes. Whiles he is in theſe thoughts, his wearineſſe and eaſie repoſall hath brought him a ſleepe. Who would haue looked that in this tumult & danger, euen betwixt the very iawes of death, Siſera ſhould find time to ſleepe? How many worldly harts do ſo in the midſt of their ſpirituall perils?

Now whiles he was dreaming, doubtleſſe, of the claſhing of armors, ratling of chariots, neighing of horſes, the clamor of the conquerd, the furious purſuit of Iſrael, Iael ſeeing his temples ly ſo faire, as if they inuited the naile and hammer, entred into the thought of this noble execution; certainly not without ſome checks of doubt, and pleas of feare: What if I ſtrike him? And yet who am I, that I ſhould dare to thinke of ſuch an act? Is not this Siſera, the famouſeſt captaine of the world, whoſe name hath wont to be fearefull to whole Nations? What if my hand ſhould ſwarue in the ſtroke? What if he ſhould awake, whiles I am liſting vp this inſtrument of death: What if I ſhould bee ſurpriſed by ſome of his followers while the fact is greene and yet bleeding? Can the murder of ſo great a Leader be hid, or vnreuenged? Or if I might hope ſo, yet can my hart allow me to be ſecretly trecherous? Is there not peace bewixt my houſe, and him? Did not I inuite him to my Tent? Doth he not truſt to my friendſhip and hoſpitality? But what doe theſe weake feares, theſe idle fancies of ciuility? If Siſera be in league with vs, yet is hee not at defiance with God? Is he not a Tyrant to Iſrael? Is it for nothing that God hath brought him into my Tent? May I not now find meanes to repay vnto Iſrael all their kindnes to my Grand-father Iethro? Doth not God offer mee this day, the honour to be the Reſcuer of his people? Hath God bidden me ſtrike, and ſhall I hold my hand? No, Siſera, ſleepe now thy laſt, and take here this fatall reward of all thy cruelty and oppreſſion.

He that put this inſtinct into her heart, did put alſo ſtrength into her hand; Hee that guided Siſera to her Tent, guided the naile thorow his temples; which hath made a ſpeedy way for his ſoule thorow thoſe parts, and now hath faſtned his eare ſo cloſe to the earth, as if the body had been liſtening what was become of the ſoule. There lyes now the great terror of Iſrael at the foot of a woman: He that brought ſo many hundred thouſands into the field, hath not now one Page left, either to auert his death, or to accompany it, or bewaile it: He that had vaunted of his yron chariots, is ſlaine by one naile of yron, wanting only this one point of his infelicity, that he knowes not by whoſe hand he periſhed.

GIDEONS Calling.

THe iudgements of God ſtill the further they goe, the ſorer they are; the bondage of Iſrael vnder Iabin was great, but it was freedome in compariſon of the yoke of the Midianites. During the former tyranny, Deborah was permitted to iudge Iſrael vnder a Palme-tree; Vnder this, not ſo much as priuate habitations will be allowed to Iſrael; Then the ſeat of iudgemēt was in ſight of the Sun; now their very dwellings muſt be ſecret vnder the earrh. They that reiected the protection of God, are glad to ſeek to the mountaines for ſhelter; & as they had ſauagely abuſed themſelues, ſo they are faine to creep into dens & caues of the rocks, like wilde creatures for ſauegard: God had ſowne ſpirituall ſeede amongſt them, and they ſuffered their heatheniſh neighbors to pull it vp by the roots; and now, no ſooner can they ſowe their materiall ſeede, but Midianites and Amalekites are ready by force to deſtroy it. As they inwardly dealt with God, ſo God deals outwardly by them; Their eies may tell them what their ſouls haue done: yet that God whoſe mercy is aboue the worſt of our ſins, ſends firſt his Prophet with a meſſage of reproof, & then his Angell with a meſſage of deliuerance. The Iſraelites had ſmarted enough with their ſeruitude, yet God ſends them a ſharpe rebuke: It is a good ſigne whē God chides vs, his round reprehenſions are euer gracious forerunners of mercy: whereas his ſilent conniuence at the wicked, argues deepe and ſecret diſpleaſure: The Prophet made way for the Angell, reproofe for deliuerance, humiliation for comfort.

Gideon was threſhing Wheat by the Wine-preſſe. Yet Iſrael hath both Wheat and Wine, for all the incurſions of their enemies. The worſt eſtate out of hell, hath either ſome comfort, or at leaſt, ſome mitigation; in ſpight of all the malice of the world, God makes ſecret prouiſion for his owne. How ſhould it be, but hee that ownes the earth, & al creatures, ſhould reſerue euer a ſufficiency from forrainers (ſuch the wicked are) for his houſhold? In the worſt of the Midianitiſh tyranny, Gidones field & barn are priuiledged, as his fleece was afterwards from the ſhowre.

Why did Gideon threſh out his corne? To hide it; Not from his neighbours, but his enemies: his Granary might eaſily be more cloſe then his barne. As then, Iſraelites threſhed out their corne, to hide it from the Midianites: but now, Midianites threſh out corne, to hide it from the Iſraelites. Theſe rurall Tyrants of our time, doe not more lay vp corne, then curſes: he that withdraweth corne, the people wil curſe him; yea, God will curſe him, with them, and for them.

What ſhifts nature will make to liue! Oh that we could be ſo carefull to lay vp ſpirituall food for our ſoules, out of the reach of thoſe ſpirituall Midianites, wee could not but liue, in deſpight of all aduerſaries.

The Angels, that haue euer God in their face, and in their thoughts, haue him alſo in their mouthes: The Lord is with thee. But this which appeared vnto Gideon, was the Angell of the Couenant, the Lord of Angels. Whiles he was with Gideon, hee might well ſay, The Lord is with the. He that ſent the Comforter, was alſo the true comforter of his Church: he well knew, how to lay a ſure ground of conſolation, and that the onely remedy of ſorrow, and beginning of true ioy is, The preſence of God. The griefe of the Apoſtles for the expected loſſe of their Maſter, could neuer be cured by any receit but this, of the ſame Angel, Behold, I am with you to the end of the world. What is our glory but the fruition of Gods preſence: The puniſhment of the damned, is a ſeparation from the beatificall face of God; needs muſt therefore his abſence in this life be a great torment to a good haert: and no croſſe can be equiualent to this beginning of heauen in the Elect, The Lord is with thee.

Who can complaine either of ſolitarineſſe, or oppoſition, that hath God with him? With him, not only as a witneſſe, but as a party: Euen wicked men and diuils cannot exclude God, not the barres of hell can ſhut him out: He is with them perforce, but to iudge, to puniſh them: yea, God will be euer with them to their coſt; but to protect, comfort, ſaue, he is with none but his.

Whiles he calls Gideon valiant, he make him ſo. How could he be but valiant, that had God with him? The godleſſe man may be careles, but cannot be other then cowardly. It pleaſes God, to acknowledge his own graces in men, that he may interchãge his own glory, with their comfort; how much more ſhould we confeſſe the graces of one another? An enuious nature, is preiudiciall to God; he is a ſtrange man in whom there is not ſome viſible good; yea, in the Deuils themſelues we may eaſily note ſome commendable parts, of knowledge, ſtrength, agilitie: Let God haue his owne in the worſt creature; yea, let the worſt creature haue that praiſe which God would put vpon it.

Gideon cannot paſſe ouer this ſalutation, as ſome faſhionable complement, but layes hold on that part, which was moſt important; the tenure of all his comfort; and (as not regarding the praiſe of his valour) inquires after that which ſhould be the ground of his valour, the preſence of God: God had ſpoken particularly to him; he expoſtulates for all. It had been poſſible God ſhould be preſent with him, not with the reſt; as hee promiſed to haue been with Moſes, not Iſrael: & yet when God ſaies, The Lord is with thee, he anſweres, Alaſſe Lord, if the Lord be with vs. Gideon cannot conceiue of himſelfe as an exempt perſon; but puts himſelfe among the throng of Iſrael, as one that could not be ſenſible of any particular comfort, while the common caſe of Iſrael laboured. The maine care of a good heart is ſtill for the publike, neither can it enioy it ſelfe, while the Church of God is diſtreſſed. As faith drawes home generalities, ſo charity diffuſes generalities from it ſelfe to all.

Yet the valiant man was here weake, weake in faith, weake in diſcourſe; whileſt he argues Gods abſence by affliction, his preſence by deliuerances, and the vnlikelihood of ſucceſſe by his owne diſability; all groſſe inconſequences: Rather ſhould he haue inferred Gods preſence vpon their correction; for wherſoeuer God chaſtiſes, there he is, yea, there he is in mercy. Nothing more proues vs his, then his ſtripes; he will not beſtow whipping where he loues not. Fond nature thinkes God ſhould not ſuffer the wind to blow vpon his deare ones, becauſe herſelfe makes this vſe of her owne indulgence; but none out of the place of torment, haue ſufferd ſo much as his deareſt childrẽ. He ſaies not we are idolaters; therfore the Lord hath forſakẽ vs, becauſe we haue forſaken him: This ſequell had been as good, as the other was faulty; (The Lord hath deliuered vs vnto the Midianites, therefore he hath forſaken vs:) Sinnes, not afflictions, argue God abſent.

Whileſt Gideon bewrayeth weaknes, God both giues him might, and imployes it; (Goe in this thy might, and ſaue Iſrael.) Who would not haue looked, that God ſhould haue looked angerly on him, and chid him for his vnbeliefe? But he whoſe mercy will not quench the weakeſt fire of grace, though it be but in flax, lookes vpon him with compaſſionate eyes; and to make good his owne Word, giues him that valour he had acknowledged.

Gideon had not yet ſaid, Lord, deliuer Iſrael: much leſſe had he ſaid, Lord, deliuer Iſrael by my hand. The mercy of God preuents the deſire of Gideon: if God ſhould not begin with vs, we ſhould be euer miſerable; if he ſhould not giue vs til we aske, yet who ſhould giue vs to aske; if his Spirit did not worke thoſe holy grones & ſighs in vs, we ſhould neuer make ſute to God. He that commonly giues vs power to craue, ſometimes giues vs without crauing, that the benefit might be ſo much more welcome, by how much leſſe it was expected; & we ſo much more thankful, as he is more forward. When he bids vs ask, it is not for that he needs to be intreated; but that he may make vs more capable of bleſſings by deſiring them: And where he ſees feruent deſires, he ſtaies not for words; and hee that giues ere we aske, how much more will he giue when we aske?

He that hath might enough to deliuer Iſrael, yet hath not might enough to keepe himſelfe from doubting. The ſtrongeſt faith will euer haue ſome touch of infidelitie. And yet this was not ſo much a diſtruſt of the poſſibility of deliuering Iſrael, as an inquirie after the meanes; Whereby ſhall I ſaue Iſrael? The ſalutation of the Angell to Gideon, was as like to Gabriels ſalutation of the bleſſed Virgin, as their anſwers were like: Both Angels brought news of deliuerance, both were anſwered with a queſtion of the meanes of performance; with a report of the difficulties in performing: Ah my Lord, whereby ſhall I ſaue Iſrael! How the good man diſparages himſelfe! It is a great matter (O Lord) that thou ſpeakeſt of, and great actions require mighty Agents: As for me, who am I? My Tribe is none of the greateſt in Iſrael; My Fathers familie is one of the meaneſt in his Tribe, and I the meaneſt in his familie; Pouerty is a ſufficient barre to great enterpriſes.

Whereby ſhall I? Humilitie is both a ſigne of following glory, and a way to it, and an occaſion of it: Bragging and height of ſpirit, will not carry it with God: None haue euer been raiſed by him, put thoſe which haue formerly deiected themſelues: None haue been confounded by him, that haue been abaſed in themſelues. Thereupon it is that he addes; I will therefore be with thee; as if he had anſwered, Hadſt thou not been ſo poore in thy ſelfe, I would not haue wrought by thee. How ſhould God be magnified in his mercies, if wee were not vnworthy? How ſhould hee be ſtrong, if not in our weakneſſe?

All this while, Gideon knew not it was an Angell that ſpake with him; He ſaw a man ſtand before him like a Trauailer, with a ſtaffe in his hand. The vnuſualneſſe of thoſe reuelations in thoſe corrupted times was ſuch, that Gideon might thinke of any thing rather then an Angell: No maruel if ſo ſtrange a promiſe from an vnknown meſſenger found not a perfect aſſent; Faine would hee beleeue, but faine would hee haue good warrant for his faith. In matters of faith we cannot go vpon too ſure grounds. As Moſes therefore being ſent vpon the ſame errand, deſired a ſigne, whereby Iſrael might know, that God ſent him: So Gideon deſires a ſigne from this Bearer, to know that his newes is from God.

Yet the very hope of ſo happy newes, not yet ratified, ſtirres vp in Gideon both ioy and thankfulneſſe. After all the iniurie of the Midianites, he was not ſo poore, but he could beſtow a Kid and cakes vpon the Reporter of ſuch tidings. Thoſe which are rightly affected with the glad newes of our ſpirituall deliuerance, ſtudy to ſhew their louing reſpects to the meſſengers.

The Angell ſtayes for the preparing of Gideons feaſt. Such pleaſure doth God take in the thankfull indeuours of his ſeruants, that he patiently waites vpon the leyſure of our performances. Gideon intended a dinner, the Angell turned it into a ſacrifice. Hee, whoſe meat and drinke it was to doe his Fathers will, calls for the broth and fleſh to be powred out vpon the ſtone; And when Gideon lookt he ſhould haue bleſſed, and eaten, he touches the feaſt with his ſtaffe, & conſumes it with fire from the ſtone, and departed. He did not ſtrike the ſtone with his ſtaffe (for the attrition of two hard bodies would naturally beget fire) but he touched the meat, and brought fire from the ſtone: And now whiles Gideon ſaw and wondred at the ſpirituall act; he loſt the ſight of the Agent.

He that came without intreating, would not haue departed without taking leaue; but that he might increaſe Gideons wonder, and that his wonder might increaſe his faith. His ſalutaion therefore was not ſo ſtrange, as his farewell. Moſes touched the rocke with his ſtaffe, and brought forth water, and yet a man, and yet continued with the Iſraelites. This meſſenger touches the ſtone with his ſtaffe, and brings forth fire, and preſently vaniſhes, that he may approue himſelfe a ſpirit. And now Gideon, when he had gathered vp himſelfe, muſt needs thinke, He that can raiſe fire out of a ſtone, can raiſe courage and power out of my dead breſt; He that by this fire hath conſumed the broth and fleſh, can by the feeble flame of my fortitude conſume Midian.

Gideon did not ſo much doubt before, as now hee feared. Wee that ſhall once liue with, and be like the Angels, in the eſtate of our impotency thinke, wee cannot ſee an Angell, and liue. Gideon was acknowledged for mighty in valour, yet he trembles at the ſight of an Angell. Peter, that durſt draw his ſword vpon Malchus, and all the train of Iudas, yet feares when he thought he had ſeen a ſpirit. Our natural courage cannot beare vs out aginaſt ſpirituall obiects. This Angell was homely and faimiliar, taking vpon him for the time, a reſemblance of that fleſh whereof he would afterwards take the ſubſtance; yet euen the valiant Gideon quakes to haue ſeene him: How awefull and glorious is the God of Angels, when he will be ſeene in the ſtate of heauen!

The Angell that departed for the wonder, yet returnes for the comfort of Gideon; It is not the wont of God to leaue his children in a maze, but he brings them out in the ſame mercy which led them in, & will magnifie his grace in the one, no leſſe then his power in the other.

Now Gideon growes acquainted with God, and interchanges pledges of familiaritie; He builds an Altar to God, and God conferres with him; and (as he vſes where he loues) imployes him. His firſt taske muſt be to deſtroy the god of the Midianites, then the Idolaters themſelues. Whiles Baals Altar and groue ſtood in the hill of Ophrah, Iſrael ſhould in vain hope to preuaile: It is moſt iuſt with God, that iudgement ſhould continue with the ſin, and no leſſe mercy, if it may remoue after it. Wouldſt thou faine be rid of any iudgement? Inquire what falſe Altars and groues thou haſt in thy heart! downe with them firſt.

Firſt muſt Baals Altar be ruined, ere Gods be built, both may not ſtand together; The true God will haue no ſociety with Idols, neither will allow it vs. I do not heare him ſay, That Altar and groue which were abuſed to Baal, conſecrate now to me; but as one whoſe holy ielouſie wil abide no worſhip til there be no idolatry, he firſt commands downe the monuments of ſuperſtition, and then inioynes his own ſeruice; yet the wood of Baals groue muſt be vſed to burn a ſacrifice vnto God: When it was once cut downe, Gods deteſtation, and their danger ceaſed. The good creatures of God that haue beene profaned to Idolatry, may, in a change of their vſe, bee imployed to the holy ſeruice of their Maker.

Though ſome Iſraelites were penitent vnder this humiliation, yet ſtil many of them periſhed in their wonted Idolatry. The very houſhold of Gideons father were ſtill Baalites, and his neighbours of Ophrah were in the ſame ſinne: yea if his father had been free, what did he with Baals groue and Altar? He dares not therefore take his fathers ſeruants, though hee tooke his bullocks, but commands his owne. The Maſter is beſt ſeene in the ſeruants : Gideons ſeruants (amongſt the idolatrous retinue of Ioaſh) are religious, like their Maſter; yet the miſdeuotion of Ioaſh, and the Ophrathites was not obſtante. Ioaſh is eaſily perſwaded by his ſonne, and eaſily perſwades his neighbours, how vnreaſonable it is to plead for ſuch a god, as cannot ſpeake fer himſelfe; to reuenge his cauſe, that could not defend himſelfe. Let Baal plead for himſelf. One example of a reſolute on-ſet in a noted perſon, may doe more good, then a thouſand ſeconds in the proceeding of an action.

Soone are all the Midianites in an vprore to loſe their god; They need not now bee bidden to muſter themſelues for reuenge. He hath no Religion, that can ſuffer an indignite offered to his God.

GIDEONS preparation and victory.

OF all the inſtruments that God vſed in ſo great a worke, I finde none ſo weake as Gideon, who yet (of all othets) was ſtiled valiant: naturall valour may well ſtand with ſpirituall cowardiſe. Before hee knew that he ſpake with God, he might haue iuſt colours for his diſtruſt; but after God had approued his preſence, and almighty power, by fetching fire out of the ſtone, then, to call for a watery ſigne of his promiſed deliuerance, was no other thē to powre water vpon the fire of the Spirit. The former tryal God gaue vnwiſhed; this, vpon Gideons choice and intreaty: The former miracle was ſtrong enough to carry Gideon thorow his firſt exploit of ruinating the idolatrous Groue, and Altar; but now when he ſaw the ſwarme of the Midianites & Amalekites about his eares, he cals for new ayde; and not truſting to his Abiezrites, and his other thouſands of Iſrael, hee runnes to God for a further aſſurance of victory.

The refuge was good, but the manuer of ſeeking it, ſauours of diſtruſt. There is nothing more eaſie then to be valiant when no perill appeareth; but when euils aſſaile vs vpon vnequall termes, it is hard, and commendable, not to be diſmayed. If God had made that proclamation now, which afterwards was cōmanded, to be made by Gideon, Let the timerous depart; I doubt whether Iſrael had not wanted a Guide: yet how willing is the Almighty to ſatiſfie our weake deſires!

What taskes is He content to be ſet by our infirmity? The fleece muſt bee wet, and the ground dry; the ground muſt be wet, and the fleece dry: Both are done; that now Gideon may ſee whether he would make himſelfe hard earth, or yeelding wooll. God could at pleaſure diſtinguiſh betwixt him, and the Midianites, and power downe either mercies or iudgement where he liſts, and that he was ſet on worke by that God which can command all the Elements, and they obey him. Fire, water, Earth, ſerue both him, and (when he will) his.

And now when Gideon had this reciprocall proofe of his inſuing ſucceſſe, he goes on (as he well may) harneſſed with reſolution, and is ſeen in the head of his troupes, and in the face of the Midianites. If we cannot make vp the match with God, when wee haue our owne asking, we are worthy to ſit out.

Gideon had thirty two thouſand ſouldiers at his heeles; the Midianites couered all the valley, like Graſhoppers: and now whileſt the Iſraelites thinke, We are too few; God ſayes, The people are too many. If the Iſraelites muſt haue looked for victory from their fingers, they might well haue ſaid, The Midianites are too many for vs: but that God whoſe thoughts and words are vnlike to mens, ſayes, They are too many for me to giue the Midianites into their hands. If human ſtrength were to be oppoſed, there ſhold haue needed an equality; but now God meant to giue the victory, his care is not how to get it, but how to loſe or blemiſh the glory of it gotten. How ielous God is of his honour! Hee is willing to giue deliuerance to Iſrael, but the praiſe of the deliuerance rance he will keepe to himſelfe;and wil ſhorten the meanes,that he may haue the full meaſure of the glory. And if he will not allow lawfull meanes to ſtand in the light of his honour,how will he indure it to be croſſed ſo much as indirectly:It is leſſe danger to ſteale any thing from God,then his glory.

As a Prince,which if we ſteale,or clip his coyne,may pardon it;but if we go about to rob him of his Crowne,will not be appeaſed. There is nothing that we can giue to God,of whom we receiue all things; that which he is content to part with,hee giues vs;but he will not abide we ſhould take ought from him,which he would reſerue for himſelfe. It is all one with him to ſaue with many,as with few;but he rather chooſes to ſaue by few,that all the victory may redound to himſelf. O God,what art thou the better for our praiſes,to whom,becauſe thou art infinite,nothing can be added?It is for our good that thou wouldſt be magnified of vs;Oh teach vs to receiue the benefit of thy mercifull fauours,and to returne thee the thanks.

Gideons Army muſt be leſſened,Who are ſo fit to be caſhiered as the fearefull?God bids him therefore proclaim licence for all faint harts to leaue the field. An ill inſtrument may ſhame a good worke:God will not glorifie himſelfe by cowards. As the timorous ſhal be without the gates of heauen,ſo ſhal they be without the liſts of Gods field. Although it was not their courage that ſhold ſaue Iſrael,yet without their courage God would not ſerue himſelfe of them. Chriſtianity requires men,for if our ſpirituall difficulties meet not with high ſpirits,in ſteed of whetting our fortitude,they quaile it. Dauids royall Band of Worthies, was the type of the forces of the Church, all valiant men,and able to incounter with thouſands.

Neither muſt we be ſtrong onely,but acquainted with our owne reſolutions, not out of any carnal preſumption,but out of a faithful reliance vpon the ſtrength of God in whom when wee are weake, then we are ſtrong. Oh thou whiteliuer ! doth but a foule word or a frowne ſcarre thee from Chriſt?Doth the loſſe of a little land,or ſiluer diſquiet thee?Doth but the ſight of the Midianites in the vally ſtrike thee?Home then, home to the world; thou art not then for the conquering Band of Chriſt: If thou canſt not reſolue to follow him through infamy, priſons, racks, iybets flames; depart to thine houſe,and ſaue thy life to thy loſſe.

Me thinks now, Iſrael ſhould haue complained of indignity, and haue ſaid, Why ſhouldſt thou thinke,O Gideon,that there can be a cowardly Iſraelite?And if the experience of the power and mercy of God,be not enough to make vs feareleſſe,yet the ſenſe of ſeruitude muſt needs haue made vs reſolute;for who had not rather to be buried dead,then quick?Are we not fain to hide our heads in the caues of the earth,& to make our graues our houſes? Not ſo much as the very light that we can freely inioy; the tyranny of death is but ſhort and eaſie, to this of Midian: and yet what danger can there be of that,ſith thou haſt ſo certainly aſſured vs of Gods promiſe of victory and his miraculous confirmation?No,Gideon,thoſe hearts that haue brought vs hither after thy colours, can as well keepe vs from retiring.

But now,who can but bleſſe himſelfe to finde of two and thirty thouſand Iſraelites, two & twenty thouſand cowards?Yet all theſe in Gideons march made as faire a flouriſh of courage as the boldeſt. Who can truſt the faces of men,that ſees in the Army of Iſrael,aboue two for one timorous? How many make a glorious ſhew in the warfaring Church,which when they ſhal ſee danger of perſecution,ſhal ſhrink from the Standard of God? Hope of ſafetie,examples of neighbours, deſire of praiſe,feare of cenſures,coaction of lawes,fellowſhip of friends,draw many into the field;which ſo ſoone as euer they ſee the Aduerſary,repent of their conditions:&,if they may clenly eſcape, will be gone early from Mount Gilead. Can any man be offended at the number of theſe ſhrinkers, when he ſees but ten thouſand Iſraelites left of two and thirty thouſand in one morning?

Theſe men that would haue been aſhamed to goe away by day, now drop away by night: And if Gideon ſhould haue called any one of them backe, and ſaid, Wilt thou flee?would haue made an excuſe;The darkneſſe is a fit vaile for their paleneſſe, or bluſhing; fearefulneſſe cannot abide the light: None of theſe thouſands of Iſrael but would haue been loth Gideon ſhould haue ſeene his face whiles he ſaid, I am feareful: Very ſhame holds ſome in their ſtation, whoſe hearts are already fled. And if we cannot endure that men ſhould be witneſſes of that feare which we might liue to correct, how ſhall wee abide once to ſhew our feareful heads before that terrible Iudge, when he cals vs forth to the puniſhment of our feare? Oh the vanitie of fooliſh hypocrites, that run vpon the terrors of God, whiles they would auoid the ſhame of men!

How doe we thinke the ſmall remainder of Iſrael looked, when in the next morning-muſter they found themſelues but ten thouſand left? How did they accuſe their timorous Countrimen, that had left but this handfull to encounter the millions of Midian? and yet ſtill, God complaines of too many; and vpon his triall, diſmiſſes nine thouſand ſeuen hundred more. His firſt triall was of the valour of their mindes: his next is of the abilitie of their bodies. Thoſe, which beſides boldnes, are not ſtrong, patient of labour and thirſt, willing to ſtoope, content with a little (ſuch were thoſe that tooke vp water with their hand) are not for the ſelect Band of God. The Lord of Hoſts wil ſerue himſelf of none but able Champions: If he haue therfore ſingled vs into his combate, this very choice argues that he finds that ſtrength in vs, which we can not confeſſe in our ſelues. How can it but cōfort vs in our great trials, that if the Searcher of harts did not find vs fit, he would neuer honour vs with ſo hard an imploimēt?

Now, when there is not ſcarce left one Iſraelite to euery thouſand of the Midianites, it is ſeaſonable with God to ioyne battel. When God hath ſtripped vs of al our earthly confidence, then doth he finde time to giue vs victorie; and not till then, leſt he ſhould be a loſer in our gaine: like as at laſt he vnclothes vs of our body, that he may cloath vs vpon with glory.

If Gideon feared when he had two and thirty thouſand Iſraelites at his heeles, is it any wonder if he feared, when all theſe were ſhrunk into three hundred? Though his confirmation were more, yet his meanes were abated. Why was not Gideon rather the Leader of thoſe two & twenty thouſand runne-awayes, then of theſe three hundred ſouldiers? Oh infinite mercy and forbearance of God, that takes not vantage of ſo ſtrong an infirmitie, but in ſtead of caſting, encourages him! That wiſe prouidence hath prepared a dreame in the head of one Midianite, an interpretation in the mouth of another, and hath brought Gideon to be an auditor of both; and hath made his enemies Prophets of his victorie, incouragers of the attempt, proclaimers of their owne confuſion. A Midianite dreames, a Midianite interprets. Our very dreames many times are not without God; there is a prouidence in our ſleeping fancies: euen the enemies of God may haue viſions, & power to conſtrue them aright. How vſually are wicked men forewarned of their owne deſtruction? To foreknow & not auoid, is but an aggration of iudgement.

When Gideon heard good newes (though from an enemie) hee fell downe and worſhipped. To heare himſelfe but a Barly-cake, troubled him not, when he heard withall, that his rolling downe the hill ſhould breake the Tents of Midian. It matters not how baſe we be thought, ſo wee may be victorious. The ſoule that hath receiued full confirmation from God in the aſſurance of his ſaluation, cannot but bow the knee, and by all geſtures of body tell how it is rauiſhed. I would haue thought, Gideon ſhould rather haue found full confirmation in the promiſe & act of God, then in the dream of the Midianite. Dreames may be full of vncertainty; Gods vndertakings are infallible: well therfore might the miracle of God giue ſtrength to the dream of a Midianite; but what ſtrength could a Pagns dreame giue to the miraculous act of God? yet by this is Gideon throughly ſettled. When we are going, a little thing driues vs on; when we are come neer to the ſhore, the very tide without ſails is enough to put vs into the harbor. We ſhal now heare no more of Gideons doubts, but of his atchieuemēts: And thogh God had promiſed by theſe three hundred to chaſe the Midianites, yet he neglects not wiſe ſtratagems to effect it. To wait for Gods performance in doing nothing, is to abuſe that diuine prouidence, which wil ſo work, that wil not allow vs idle.

Now,

hall, J.

Now, when wee would looke that Gideon ſhould giue charge of whetting their ſwords,and ſharpening their ſpeares,and fitting their Armour, he onely giues order for emptie Pitchers and Lights,and Trumpets. The cracking of theſe pitchers ſhall breake in pieces this Midianitiſh clay:the kindling of theſe lights ſhal extinguiſh the light of Midian:theſe Trumpets ſound no other then a ſoule-peale to all the Hoaſt of Midian: there ſhall need nothing but noiſe and light to confound this innumerable Armie.

And if the pitchers, and brands, and trumpets of Gideon, did ſo daunt and diſmay the proud troopes of Midian and Amaleck, who can wee thinke ſhall be able to ſtand before the laſt terror,wherein the Trumpet of the Archangell ſhall ſound,& the heauens ſhall paſſe away with a noiſe, and the Elements ſhall bee on a flame about our eares?

Any of the weakeſt Iſraelites would haue ſerued to haue broken an empty pitcher,to haue caried a light,& to haue ſounded a trumpet,& to ſtrike a flying aduerſary.Not to the baſeſt vſe will God employ an vnworthy Agent;he will not allow ſo much as a cowardly Torch-bearer.

Thoſe two & twenty thouſand Iſraelites that ſlipt away for feare, when the fearefull Midianites fled,can purſue & kill them,and can follow them at the heels,whom they durſt not look in the face.Our flight giues aduantage to the feebleſt aduerſary, whereas our reſiſtance foileth the greateſt:How much more,if we haue once turned our backes vpon a tentation,ſhal our ſpiritual enemies(which are euer ſtrong)trample vs in the duſt?Reſiſt,and they ſhall flee: ſtand ſtill,and we ſhall ſee the ſaluation of the Lord.

The reuenge of Succoth and Penuel.

GIdeon was of Manaſſeh: Ephraim and he were brothers, ſonnes of Ioſeph: None of all the Tribes of Iſrael fal out with their victorious Leader,but he. The agreement of brothers is rare; by how much nature hath more endeared them, by ſo much are their quarrels more frequent and dangerous.I did not heare the Ephramites offering themſelues into the front of the Armie,before the fight, and now they are ready to fight with Gideon, becauſe they were not called to fight,with Midian: I heare them expoſtulating after it;After the exploit done,cowards are valiant.Their quarrel was,that they were not called:It had been a greater praiſe of their valor to haue gone vnbidden. What need was there to call them, when God complained of multitude, and ſent away thoſe which were called?None ſpeake ſo bigge in the end of the fray,as the fearfulleſt.

Ephraim flies vpon Gideon,whiles the Midianites flie from him;when Gideon ſhould be purſuing his enemies, hee is purſued by brethren, and now is glad to ſpend that wind in pacifying of his own,which ſhould haue been beſtowed in the ſlaughter of a common Aduerſary.It is wonder if Satan ſuffer vs to be quiet at home,whiles we are exerciſed with warres abroad. Had not Gideon learned to ſpeake faire, as well as to ſmite, he had found worke enough from the ſwords of Ioſephs ſonnes:his good words are as victorious as his ſword;his pacification of friends,better then his execution of enemies.

For ought I ſee, the enuie of Iſraelites was more troubleſome to Gideon, then the oppoſition of Midian: Hee hath left the enuie of Ephraim behind him: before him, he findes the enuie of Succoth and Penuel: The one enuies that hee ſhould ouercome without them; the other,that he ſhould ſay, Hee had ouercome. His purſuit leades him to Succoth,there he craues reliefe,and is repelled. Had he ſaid, Come forth and draw your ſword with mee againſt Zeba and Zalmunna, the motion had beene but equall: A common intereſt challenges an vniuerſall aid. Now he ſayes but; Giue morſels of bread to my followers; He is turned off with a ſcorne; Hee askes bread, and they giue him a ſtone. Could he aske a more ſlender recompence of their deliuerance, or a leſſe reward of his victory? Giue morſels of bread. Before this act, all their ſubſtance had bin too ſmall an hier for their freedome from Midian; now when it is done, a morſell of bread is too much: Well might he challenge bread, where he gaue liberty, and life. It is hard, if thoſe which fight the warres of God, may not haue neceſſary reliefe; that whiles the enemy dies by them, they ſhould dye by famine. If they had laboured for God at home in peace, they had been worthy of maintenance, how much more now, that danger is added to their toyle? Euen very Executioners looke for fees: but here were no malefactors, but aduerſaries to be ſlaine; the ſword of power & reuenge was now to be wielded, not of quiet iuſtice. Thoſe that fight for our ſouls againſt ſpirituall powers, challenge bread from vs; and it is ſhameleſſe vnthankfulneſſe to deny it. When Abraham had vanquiſhed the fiue Kings, and deliuered Lot and his family, the King of Salem met him with bread and wine; and now the ſonnes of Abraham, after an equall victory, aske dry bread, and are denied by their brethren: Craftily yet, and vnder pretence of a falſe title, had they acknowledged the victory of Gideon, with what forehead could they haue denied him bread?

Now, I know not whether their faithleſneſſe, or enuy lie in their way; Are the hands of Zeba and Zalmunna in thy hands? There were none of theſe Princes of Succoth and Penuel, but thought themſelues better men then Gideon; That he therefore alone ſhould doe that, which all the Princes of Iſrael durſt not attempt, they hated and ſcorned to heare. It is neuer ſafe to meaſure euents by the power of the inſtrument; nor in the cauſes of God (whoſe calling makes the difference) to meaſure others by our ſelues: There is nothing more dangerous, then in holy buſineſſes to ſtand vpon compariſons, and our owne reputation, ſith it is reaſon God ſhould both chuſe, and bleſſe where he liſts.

To haue queſtioned ſo ſudden a victory, had been pardonable: but to deny it ſcornfully, was vnworthy of Iſraelites. Carnall men thinke that impoſſible to others, which themſelues cannot doe: From hence are their cenſures, hence their exclamations.

Gideon hath vowed a fearefull reuenge, and now performes it; the taunts of his brethren may not ſtay him from the purſuit of the Midianites; Common enmities muſt firſt be oppoſed, domeſticall, at more leyſure. The Princes of Succoth feared the tyranny of the Midianitiſh Kings, but they more feared Gideons victory. What condition hath their enuy drawn them into? that they are ſorry to ſee Gods enemies captiue; that Iſraels freedome muſt bee their death, that the Midianites and they muſt tremble at one and the ſame Reuenger. To ſee themſelues priſoners to Zeba and Zalmunna, had not been ſo fearefull, as to ſee Zeba and Zalmunna priſoners to Gideon: Nothing is more terrible to euill mindes, then to reade their owne condemnation in the happy ſucceſſe of others: hell it ſelfe would want one piece of his torment, if the wicked did not know thoſe whom they contemned, glorious.

I know not whether more to commend Gideons wiſedome and moderation in the proceedings, then his reſolution and iuſtice in the execution of this buſineſſe. I doe not ſee him run furiouſly into the City, and kill the next; His ſword had not been ſo drunken with bloud, that it ſhould know no difference: But he writes down the names of the Princes, and ſingles them forth for reuenge.

When the Leaders of God come to a Iericho, or Ai, their ſlaughter was vnpartiall; not a woman or childe might liue to tell newes; but now that Gideon comes to a Succoth, a City of Iſraelites, the Rulers are called forth to death, the people are frighted with the example, not hurt with the iudgement. To enwrappe the innocent in any vengeance, is a murderous iniuſtice: Indeed where all ioyne in the ſin, all are worthy to meet in the puniſhment. It is like, the Citizens of Succoth could haue been glad to ſuccor Gideon, if their Rulers had not forbidden: they muſt therfore eſcape, whiles their Princes periſh.

I cannot thinke of Gideons reuenge, without horror; That the Rulers of Succoth ſhould haue their fleſh torne from their backs with thornes and briers, that they ſhould bee at once beaten and ſcratcht to death. What a ſpectacle it was to ſee their bare bones looking ſome-where thorow the bloudy ragges of their fleſh and skinne, and euery ſtroke worſe then the laſt, death multiplied by torment! Iuſtice is ſometimes ſo ſeuere, that a tender beholder can ſcarce diſcerne it from cruelty.

I ſee the Midianites fare leſſe ill; the edge of the ſword makes a ſpeedy and eaſie paſſage for their liues, whiles theſe rebellious Iſraelites dye lingringly vnder thornes and bryers; enuying thoſe in their death, whom their life abhorred. Howſoeuer men liue or dye without the pale of the Church, a wicked Iſraelite ſhal be ſure of plagues. How many ſhall vnwiſh themſelues Chriſtians, when Gods reuenges haue found them out?

The place where Iacob wreſtled with God and preuailed, now hath wreſtled againſt God, and takes a fall; they ſee God auenged, which would not beleeue him deliuering.

It was now time for Zeba and Zalmunna to follow thoſe their troops to the graue, whom they had led in the field: Thoſe which the day before were attended with an hundred thirty fiue thouſand followers, haue not ſo much as a Page now left to weep for their death, and haue liued onely to ſee all their friends, and ſome enemies dye for their ſakes.

Who can regard earthly greatneſſe, that ſees one night change two of the greateſt Kings of the World into captiues? It had been both pitty and ſinne, that the Heads of that Midianitiſh tyranny, into which they had drawn ſo many thouſands, ſhould haue eſcaped that death.

And yet, if priuate reuenge had not made Gideon iuſt, I doubt whether they had died; The bloud of his brothers cals for theirs, and awakes his ſword to their execution; He both knew & complained of the Midianitiſh oppreſſion, vnder which Iſrael groned: yet the cruelty offered to all the thouſands of his Fathers ſonnes, had not drawne the bloud of Zeba and Zalmunna, if his owne mothers ſonnes had not bled by their hands.

He that ſlew the Rulers of Succoth & Penuel, and ſpared the people, now hath ſlain the people of Midian, and would haue ſpared their Rulers: but that God which will finde occaſions to winde wicked men into iudgement, will haue them ſlaine in a priuat quarel, which had more deſerued it for the publike; If we may not rather ſay, that Gideon reuenged theſe as a Magiſtrate, not as a brother: For Gouerners, to reſpect their owne ends in publike actions, and to weare the ſword of Iuſtice in their owne ſheath, it is a wrongfull abuſe of authority. The ſlaughter of Gideons brethren was not the greateſt ſinne of the Midianitiſh Kings; this alone ſhall kill them, when the reſt expected an vniuſt remiſſion. How many lewd men hath God payed with ſome one ſinne for all the reſt?

Some that haue gone away with vnnuturally filthineſſe, and capitall thefts, haue clipped off their owne dayes with their coyne; Others, whoſe bloudy murders haue been puniſhed in a mutinous word; Others, whoſe ſuſpected felony hath payd the price of their vnknowne rape. O God, thy iudgements are iuſt, euen when mens are vniuſt!

Gideons young ſonne is bidden to reuenge the death of his Vncles; His ſword had not yet learned the way to bloud, eſpecially of Kings, though in yrons: Deadly executions require ſtrength both of heart and face. How are thoſe aged in euill, that can draw their ſwords vpon the lawfully Anointed of God? Theſe tyrants plead not now for continuance of life, but for the haſt of their death; Fall thou vpon vs. Death is euen accompanied wtih paine, which it is no maruell if we wiſh ſhort: We doe not more affect protraction of an eaſefull life, then ſpeed in our diſſolution; for here euery pang that tends toward death, renews it: To ly an houre vnder death, is tedious, but to be dying a whole day, we thinke aboue the ſtrength of humane patience. Oh, what ſhall we then conceiue of that death, which knowes no end? As this life is no leſſe fraile then the body which it animates; ſo that death is no leſſe eternal, then the ſoule which muſt endure it.

For vs to be dying ſo long as wee now haue leaue to liue, is intolerable; and yet one onely minute of that other tormenting death, is worſe then an age of this. Oh the deſperate infidelitie of careleſſe men, that ſhrinke at the thought of a momentany death, and feare not eternall! This is but a killing of the body: that is a deſtruction of body and ſoule.

Who is ſo worthy to weare the Crowne of Iſrael, as he that wonne the Crowne from Midian? Their vſurpers were gone, now they are headleſſe; It is a doubt whether they were better to haue had no Kings, or Tyrants: They ſue to Gideon to accept of the Kingdome, and are repulſed: There is no greater example of modeſty, then Gideon. When the Angell ſpake to him, he abaſed himſelfe below all Iſrael; when the Ephraimites contended with him, he prefers their gleanings to his vintage, and caſts his honour at their feet: and now when Iſrael proffers him that Kingdome which he had merited, hee refuſes it. Hee that in ouercomming would allow them to cry, The ſword of the Lord, and of Gideon, in gouerning, will haue none but The ſword of the Lord.

That which others plot, and ſue, and ſweare, and bribe for, Dignity and ſuperioritie, he ſeriouſly reiects; wether it were, for that he knew God had not yet called them to a Monarchy; or rather, for that he ſaw the Crowne among thornes? What doe we ambitiouſly affect the command of theſe mole-hils of earth, when wiſe men haue refuſed the proffers of Kingdomes? Why do we not rather labour for that Kingdome which is free from all cares, from all vncertainty?

Yet he that refuſes their Crowne, cals for their earings, although not to enrich himſelfe, but religion. So long had God been a ſtranger to Iſrael, that now ſuperſtition goes currant for deuout worſhip. It were pitty that good intentions ſhould make any man wicked; here they did ſo. Neuer man meant better then Gideon in his rich Ephod; yet this very act ſet all Iſrael on whoring: God had choſen a place, and a ſeruice of his owne. When the wit of man will be ouer-pleaſing God with better deuices then his owne, it turnes to madneſſe, and ends in miſchiefe.

ABIMELECS vſurpation.

GIdeon refuſed the Kingdome of Iſrael when it was offered; his ſeuenty ſons offred not to obtaine that Scepter, which their Fathers victory had deſerued to make hereditary: onely Abimelec, the concubines ſonne, ſues and ambitiouſly plots for it. What could Abimelec ſee in himſelfe, that hee ſhould ouer-looke all his brethren? If hee looke to his father, they were his equals; if to his mother, they were his betters. Thoſe that are moſt vnworthy of honour, are hotteſt in the chaſe of it, whileſt the conſcience of better deſerts bids men ſit ſtill, and ſtay to bee either importuned, or neglected. There can bee no greater ſigne of vnfitneſſe, then vehement ſute. It is hard to ſay, whether there bee more pride, or ignorance in Ambition. I haue noted this difference betwixt ſpirituall and earthly honour, and the Clients of both; wee cannot bee worthy of the one without earneſt proſecution; nor with earneſt proſecution worthy of the other: The violent obtaine heauen; only the meeke are worthy to inherit the earth.

That which an aſpiring heart hath proiected, it will find both argument and meanes to effect. If either bribes or fauour will carry it, the proud man will not ſit out. The Shechemites are fit brokers for Abimlec; That City which once betrayed it ſelfe to vtter depopulation in yeelding to the ſute of Hamor, now betrayes it ſelf, and all Iſrael, in yeelding to the requeſt of Abimelec. By them hath this Vſurper made himſelfe a faire way to the Throne: It was an eaſie queſtion, Whether will yee admit of the ſons of Gideon for your Rulers, or of ſtrangers? If of the ſons of Gideon, whether of all, or one? If of one, whether of your owne fleſh and blood, or of others vnknowne? To caſt off the ſonnes of Gideon for ſtrangers, were vnthankfull: To admit of ſeuentie Kings in one ſmall Countrey, were vnreaſonable; To admit of any other rather then their owne kinſman, were vnnaturall. Gideons ſonnes therefore muſt rule amongſt all Iſrael; One of his ſonnes amongſt thoſe ſeuenty: and who ſhould bee that one but Abimelec? Naturall reſpects are the moſt dangerous corrupters of all elections; What hope can there be of worthy Superiors in any free people, where neereneſſe of blood carries it from fitneſſe of diſpoſition? Whileſt they ſay, He is our brother, they are enemies to themſelues, and Iſrael.

Faire words haue won his brethren; they the Shechemites; the Shechemites furniſh him with money, money with men; His men begin with murder, and now Abimelec raignes alone; Flattery, bribes and blood, are the vſuall ſtaires of the Ambitious: The money of Baal is a fit hier for murderers; that which Idolatry hath gathered, is fitly ſpent vpon Treaſon: One diuell is ready to helpe another in miſchiefe; ſeldome euer is ill-gotten riches better imployed. It is no wonder if he that hath Baal his Idol, now make an Idoll of Honour. There was neuer any man that worſhipped but one Idoll; Woe be to them that lie in the way of the Aſpiring: Though they be brothers, they ſhall bleed; yea, the neerer they are, the more ſure is their ruine. Who would not now thinke that Abimelec ſhould find an hell in his breſt, after ſo barbarous and vnnaturall a maſſacre? and yet behold, he is as ſenſleſſe as the ſtone, vpon which the blood of his ſeuenty brethren was ſpilt. Where Ambition hath poſſeſt it ſelfe throughly of the ſoule, it turnes the heart into ſteele, and make it vncapable of a conſcience; All ſins will eaſily downe with the man that is reſolued to riſe.

Only Iotham fell not at that fatall ſtone with his brethren: It is an hard battel where none eſcapes. He eſcapes, not to reigne, nor to reuenge; but to be a Prophet, and a witneſſe of the vengeance of God vpon the Vſurper, vpon the Abettors; He liues to tell Abimelec that he was but a bramble, a weed rather then a tree. A right bramble indeed, that grew but out of the baſe hedge-row of a concubine, that could not lift vp his head from the earth, vnleſſe he were ſupported by ſome buſh or pale of Shechem, that had laid hold of the fleece of Iſrael, and had drawne blood of all his brethren; and laſtly, that had no ſubſtance in him, but the ſap of vaine-glory, and the pricks of crueltie. It was better then a Kingdome to him, out of his obſcure Beere, to ſee the fire out of his bramble to conſume thoſe trees; The view of Gods reuenge, is ſo much more pleaſing to a good heart, then his owne glory, by how much it is more iuſt and full.

There was neuer ſuch a patterne of vnthankfulnes, as theſe Iſraelites: They which lately thought a Kingdom too ſmall recompence for Gideon and his ſonnes, now think it too much for his ſeed to liue; and take life away from the ſonnes of him, that gaue them both life and libertie. Yet if this had been ſome hundred of yeeres after, when time had worne out the memory of Ierub-baal, it might haue borne a better excuſe. No man can hope to hold pace with Time; The beſt names may not thinke ſcorne to be vnknowne to following generations: but ere their Deliuerer was cold in his coffin, to pay his benefits (which deſerue to be euerlaſting:) with the extirpation of his Poſterity, it was more then ſauage. What can be looked for from Idolaters? If a man haue caſt off his God, he will eaſily caſt off his friends: When religion is once gone, humanity will not ſtay long after.

That which the people were puniſhed afterwards for but deſiring, he enioyes. Now is Abimelec ſeated in the Throne which his father refuſed, and no riuall is ſeene to enuy his peace. But how long will this glory laſt? Stay but three yeeres, and yee ſhall ſee this bramble withered,and burnt. The proſperitie of the wicked is ſhort and fickle; as a ſtolne Crowne (thought it may looke faire) cannot be made of any but brittle ſtuffe. All life is vncertaine;but wickedneſſe ouer-runnes nature.

The euill ſpirit thruſt himſelfe into the plot of Abimelechs vſurpation and murder, and wrought with the Shechemites for both: and now God ſends the euill ſpirit betwixt Abimelec and the Shechemites,to worke the ruine of each other. The firſt could not haue bin without God; but in the ſecond, God challenges a part: Reuenge is his, where the ſinne is ours. It had been pittie that the Shechemites ſhould haue been plagued by any other hand then Abimelecs: They raiſed him vniuſtly to the Throne, they are the firſt that feele the weight of his Scepter. The fooliſh bird limes her ſelfe with that which grew from her owne excretion: Who wonders to ſee the kind Peaſant ſtung with his owne ſnake?

The breach begins at Shechem: his owne Countrey-men flie off from their promiſed allegeance: Though all Iſrael ſhould haue falne off from Abimelec, yet they of Shechem ſhould haue ſtuck cloſe: It was their act, they ought to haue made it good. How ſhould good Princes be honoured, when euen Abimelecs once ſetled,cannot be oppoſed with ſafetie? Now they begin the reuolt to the reſt of Iſrael. Yet if this had been done out of repentance, it had been praiſe-worthy; but to bee done out of a treacherous inconſtancy, was vnworthy of Iſraelites. How could Abimelec hope for fidelitie of them, whom he had made and found Traitors to his fathers blood? No man knowes how to be ſure of him that is vnconſcionable: He that hath been vnfaithfull to one, knowes the way to be perfidious, and is onely fit for his truſt, that is worthy to be deceiued; whereas faithfulneſſe, beſides the preſent good, layes a ground of further aſſurance. The friendſhip that is begun in euill,cannot ſtand; wickednes,both of it owne nature, and through the curſe of God, is euer vnſteady: and though there be not a diſgreement in hell (being but the place of retribution, not of action) yet on earth there is no peace among the wicked;whereas that affection which is knit in God is indiſſoluble.

If the men of Shechem had abandoned their falſe god, with their falſe King, and out of a ſerious remorſe,and deſire of ſatisfaction for their idolatrie and blood,had oppoſed this Tyrant, and preferred Iotham to his Throne, there might haue been both warrant for their quarrell,and hope of ſucceſſe: but now, if Abimelec be a wicked Vſurper, yet the Shechemites are idolatrous Traitors. How could they thinke,that God would rather reuenge Abimelecs bloody intruſion by them, then their treacherie and idolatrie by Abimelec? When the quarrell is betwixt God and Satan, there is no doubt of the iſſue; but when one deuill fights with another, what certaintie is there of the victorie? Though the cauſe of God had been good, yet it had beene ſafe for them to looke to themſelues. The vnworthineſſe of the agent many times curſes a good enterpriſe.

No ſooner is a ſecret diſlike kindled in any people againſt their Gouernours, then there is a Gaal ready to blow the coales; It were a wonder if euer any faction ſhould want an Head; As contrarily,neuer any man was ſo ill,as not to haue ſome fauourers: Abimelec hath a Zebul in the midſt of Shechem;Lightly,all treaſons are betrayed euen with ſome of their own;His intelligence brings the ſword of Abimelec vpon Shechem, who hath now demoliſhed the City,and ſowne it with ſalt. Oh the iuſt ſucceſſions of the reuenges of God! Gideons Ephod is puniſhed with the blood of his ſonnes; the blood of his ſonnes is ſhed by the procurement of the Shechemites: the blood of the Shechemites is ſhed by Abimelec: the blood of Abimelec is ſpilt by a woman. The retaliations of God are ſure and iuſt, and make a more due pedigree, then deſcent of nature.

The purſued Shechemites flie to the houſe of their god Berith; now they are ſafe: that place is at once a fort,and a ſanctuary. Whither ſhould wee flie in our diſtreſſe but to our God? And now this refuge ſhall teach them what a God they haue ſerued: The iealous God whom they had forſaken, hath them now where he would, and reioyces at once to be auenged of their god and them: Had they not made the houſe of Baal their ſhelter, they had not died ſo fearefully. Now, according to the prophecie of Iotham, a fire goes out of the bramble, and conſumes theſe Cedars, and their eternall flames begin in the houſe of their Berith: the confuſion of wicked men, riſes out of the falſe Deities which they haue doted on.

Of all the Conſpirators againſt Gideons ſonnes, only Abimelec yet ſuruiues, and his day is now comming. His ſucceſſe againſt Shechem, hath filled his hart with thoughts of victory; He hath caged vp the inhabitants of Tabez within their tower alſo; & what remaines for them, but the ſame end with their neighbours? And behold, while his hand is buſie in putting fire to the dore of their Tower, which yet was not hie (for then he could not haue diſcerned a woman to be his Executioner) a ſtone from a womans hand ſtrickes his head; His paine in dying, was not ſo much as his indignation to know by whom he died: and rather will he die twice, then a woman ſhall kill him. If God had not knowne his ſtomacke ſo bigge, hee had not vexed him with impotency of his Victor: God finds a time to reckon with wicked men for all the arrerages of their ſins. Our ſinnes are not more our debts to God, then his iudgements are his debts to our ſinnes, which at laſt he will be ſure to pay home. There now lies the greatneſſe of Abimelec; vpon one ſtone had he ſlaine his ſeuenty brethren, and now a ſtone ſlaies him; His head had ſtolne the crowne of Iſrael, and now his head is ſmitten: And what is Abimelec better that he was a King? What difference is there betweene him and any of his ſeuenty brethren whom he murthered, ſaue only in guiltineſſe? They beare but their owne blood; he, the weight of all theirs. How happy a thing is it to liue well! that our death, as it is certaine, ſo may be comfortable: What a vanity is it to inſult in the death of them, whom we muſt follow the ſame way?

The Tyrant hath his payment, and that time which hee ſhould haue beſtowed in calling for mercy to God, and waſhing his ſoule with the laſt teares of contrition, hee vainely ſpends in deprecating an idle reproch; Kill me, that it may not be ſaid, He died by a woman: A fit concluſion for ſuch a life. The expectation of true and endleſſe torment, doth not ſo much vexe him, as the friuolous report of a diſhonour; neither is he ſo much troubled with, Abimelec is frying in hell, as, Abimelec is ſlaine by a woman. So vaine fooles are niggardly of their reputation, and prodigall of their ſoules; Doe wee not ſee them runne wilfully into the field, into the graue, into hell? and all, leſt it ſhould be ſaid, They haue but as much feare as wit.

THE TENTH BOOKE.

IEPTHA.

ISrael, that had now long gone a whoring from God, hath been puniſhed by the regiment of the concubines ſonne, and at laſt ſeekes protection from the ſonne of an harlot: It is no ſmall miſerie to bee obliged vnto the vnworthy. The Concubines ſonne, made ſute to them; They make ſute to the ſonne of the harlot. It was no fault of Ieptha that hee had an ill mother, yet is he branded with the indignitie of his baſtardy; neither would God conceale this blemiſh of nature, which Ieptha could neither auoide nor remedie. God, to ſhew his deteſtation of whordome, reuenges it not onely vpon the actors, but vpon their iſſue: Hence hee hath ſhut out the baſe ſonne from the Congregation of Iſrael, to the tenth generation, that a tranſient euill might haue a durable reproch attending it; and that after the death of the Adulterer, yet his ſhame might liue. But, that God, who iuſtly tyes men to his lawes, will not abide that we ſhould tie him to our lawes, or his owne; Hee can both rectifie and ennoble the blood of Ieptha. That no man ſhould bee too much diſcouraged with the errors of his propagation, euen the baſe ſonne of man may be the lawfully begotten of God; and though he be caſt out from the inheritance of his brethren vpon earth, may be admitted to the Kingdome of Iſrael.

I heare no praiſe of the lawfull iſſue of Gilead; only this miſ-begotten ſonne is commended for his valour, and ſet at the ſterne of Iſrael: The common gifts of God reſpect not the parentage or blood, but are indifferently ſcattered where he pleaſes to let them fall. The choice of the Almighty is not guided by our rules; As in ſpirituall, ſo in earthly things, it is not in him that willeth: If God would haue men glory in theſe outward priuledges, he would beſtow them vpon none but the worthy.

Now, who can be proud of ſtrength or greatneſſe, when hee ſees him that is not ſo honeſt, yet is more valiant, and more aduanced? Had not Ieptha been baſe, he had not been thruſt out; and if hee had not been thruſt out from his brethren, hee had neuer been the Captaine of Iſrael. By contray paſes to ours, it pleaſeth God to come to his owne ends: and how vnuſually doth hee looke the contray way, to that hee moues? No man can meaſure the concluſion of Gods act by his beginning: He that fetches good out of euill, raiſes the glory of men out of their ruine. Men loue to goe the neereſt way, and often faile: God commonly goes about, and in his owne time comes ſurely home.

The Gileadites were not ſo forward to expell Ieptha, as glad to recall him: No Ammonite threatned them when they parted with ſuch an helper: Now whom they caſt out in their peace, they fetch home in their danger and miſery. That God, who neuer gaue ought in vaine, will finde a time to make vſe of any gift that hee hath beſtowed vpon men: The valour of Ieptha ſhall not ruſt in his ſecrecie, but be imployed to the common

common preſeruation of Iſrael. Neceſſitie will driue vs to ſeeke vp all our helps, euen thoſe whom our wantonneſſe hath deſpiſed.

How iuſtly are the ſuits of our need vpbraided with the errors of our proſperitie! The Elders of Gilead now heare of their ancient wrong, and dare not find fault with their exprobration; Did yee not hate mee, and expell mee out of my Fathers houſe? How then come ye now to mee in time of tribulation? The ſame expoſtulation that Ieptha makes with Gilead, God alſo at the ſame time makes with Iſrael; Ye haue forſaken mee, and ſerued other gods; wherefore ſhould I deliuer you any more? Goe and cry vnto the gods whom ye haue ſerued. As wee, ſo God alſo findes it ſeaſonable, to tell his children of their faults, whiles he is whipping them. It is a ſafe and wiſe courſe, to make much of thoſe in our peace, whom we muſt make vſe of in our extremity; elſe it is but iuſt, that wee ſhould be reiected of thoſe, whom wee haue reiected.

Can we looke for any other anſwer from God then this? Did ye not driue me out of your houſes, out of your hearts, in the time of your health and iollity? Did ye not plead the ſtrictneſſe of my charge, and the weight of my yoke? Did not your wilfull ſinnes expell me from your ſoules? What doe you now crouching and creeping to me in the euill day? Surely, O God; it is but iuſtice, if thou be not found of thoſe, which were glad to loſe thee; it is thy mercy, if after many checkes and delayes, thou wilt be found at laſt. Where an act cannot be reuerſed, there is no amends, but confeſſion; and if God himſelf take vp with this ſatisfaction, He that confeſſes, ſhal find mercy; how much more ſhould men hold themſelues wel paid with words of humility, and deprecation?

Iepthaes wiſdome had not been anſwerable to his valour, if hee had not made his match before-hand; He could not but know how treacherouſly Iſrael had dealt with Gideon. We cannot make too ſure worke when we haue to doe with vnfaithfull men: It hath been an old policy to ſerue our ſelues of men; and afrer our aduantage, to turne them vp. He bargaines therefore for his Soueraignty ere hee win it, Shall I bee your Head? Wee are all naturally ambitious, and are ready to buy houour euen with hazard. And if the hope of a troubleſome ſuperioritie incouraged Ieptha to fight againſt the forces of Ammon, what heart ſhould we take in the battels of God againſt ſpirituall wickedneſſes, when the God of Heauen hath ſaid, To him that ouercomes, will I giue power ouer nations, and to ſit with me in my Throne? Oh that we could bend our eyes vp on the recompence of our reward; how willingly ſhould wee march forward againſt theſe mighty Ammonites! Ieptha is noted for his valor, & yet he intreats with Ammon, ere he fights. To make war any other then our laſt remedy, is not courage, but crueltie and raſhnes: And now, when reaſon will not preuaile, he betakes himſelf to his ſword.

As God began the warre with Ieptha, in raiſing vp his heart to that pitch of fortitude; ſo Ieptha beganne his warre at God, in crauing victorie from him, and powring out his vow to him: His hand tooke hold of his ſword; his heart of God: therefore he, whom the old Teſtament ſtiles, valiant, the new, ſtiles faithfull; he who is commended for his ſtrength, dares truſt in none, but the arme of God: If thou wilt giue the mmonites into my hand. If Ieptha had not lookt vpward for his victorie, in vaine had the Gileadites lookt vp to him. This is the diſpoſition of all good hearts; they looke to their ſword or their bow, as ſeruants, not as Patrones; and whileſt they vſe them, truſt to God. If we could doe ſo in all our buſineſſes, we ſhould haue both more ioy in their ſucceſſe, and leſſe diſcomfort in their miſcarriage. It was his zeale to vow: it was his ſin to vow raſhly. Iacob, his forefather, of whom he learned to vow, might haue taught him a better forme; If God will be with me, then ſhal the Lord be my God. It is wel with vowes, when the thing promiſed makes the promiſe good: But when Ieptha ſayes, Whatſoeuer thing commeth out of the doores of my houſe, ſhall be the Lords, or I will offer it for a burnt ſacrifice; his deuotion is blind, and his good affections ouer-runs his iudgement: For what if a dogge, or a ſwine, or an aſſe had met him? where had been the promiſe of his conſecration?

Vowes are as they are made; like vnto Sents, if they be of ill compoſition, nothing offends more; if well tempered, nothing is more pleaſant: Either certainty of euill, or

vncertenty of good, or impoſſibility of performance, makes vows no ſeruice to God. When we vow what we cannot, or what we ought not doe, we mocke God, in ſtead of honouring him: It is a vaine thing for vs to go about to catch God hood-winkt: To conſcience ſhall neuer finde peace in any way, but that which wee ſee before vs, and which we know ſafe, both in the kinde, and circumſtances. There is no comfort in (Peraduenture I may pleaſe God;) What good child will not take part of the parents ioy? If Ieptha returnes with Trophes, it is no maruell if his daughter meete him with Timbrels: Oh that we could be ſo affected with the glorious acts of our heauenly Father! Thou ſubdueſt thine enemies, and mightily deliuereſt thy people, O God; a ſong waiteth for thee in Sion.

Who would haue ſuſpected danger in a dutifull Triumph? Well might Iepthaes daughter haue thought; My ſexe forbade me to doe any thing towards the helpe of my Fathers victory; I can do little, if I cannot applaud it: If nature haue made mee weake, yet not vnthankfull; nothing forbids my ioy to bee as ſtrong as the victors: Though I might not go out with my father to fight, yet I may meet him with gratulations; A Timbrell may become theſe hands which were vnfit for a ſword; This day hath made me the daughter of the head of Iſrael; This day hath made both Iſrael free, my Father a Conquerer, and my ſelfe in him noble: and ſhall my affection make no difference? What muſt my Father needs thinke, if he ſhall finde me ſitting ſullenly at home, whiles all Iſrael ſtriues who ſhall run firſt to bleſſe him with their acclamations? Should I onely be inſenſible of his and the common happineſſe?

And now, behold when ſhe lookes for moſt thankes, her Father anſweres the meaſures of her feet, with the knockings of his breaſt, and weeps at her muſick, and teares his clothes, to looke vpon her whom he beſt loued, and giues no anſwere to her Timbrels, but A laſſe, my daughter, thou art of them that trouble me: Her ioy alone hath changed the day, and loſt the comfort of that victory, which ſhe inioyed to ſee wonne. It fals out often, that thoſe times & occaſions which promiſe moſt contentment, proue moſt dolefull in the iſſue: The heart of this Virgin was neuer lifted vp ſo high as now, neither did any day of her life ſeeme happy but this; and this onely proues the day of her ſolemne and perpetuall mourning: As contrarily the times and euents which we haue moſt diſtruſted, prooue moſt beneficiall. It is good in a faire morning, to thinke of the ſtorme that may riſe ere night, and to inioy both good and euill fearefully Miſerable is that deuotion which troubles vs in the performance; Nothing is more pleaſant then the acts of true piety: Ieptha might wel ſee the wrong of this religion in the diſtaſte of it; yet whiles himſelfe had troubled his daughter, he ſaies, Alaſſe, my daughter, thou art of them that trouble me: She did but her duty: he did what he ſhould not; yet hee would be rid of the blame, though hee cannot of the ſmart. No man is willing to own a ſin; the firſt man ſhifted it from himſelfe to his wife; this, from himſelef to his daughter: He was ready to accuſe another, which only committed it himſelfe. It were happy if we could be as loth to commit ſin, as to acknowledge it.

The inconſideration of this vow was very tough, and ſetled; I haue opened my mouth and cannot goe backe. If there were iuſt cauſe to repent, it was the weakneſſe of his zeale to thinke that a vow could bind him to euill; An vnlawfull vow is ill made, but worſe preformed. It were pitty this conſtancy ſhould light vpon any, but an holy obiect; No loan can make a truer debt, then our vow; which if we pay not in our performance, God will pay vs with iudgement. We haue all opened our mouthes to God in that initiall and ſolemne vow of Chriſtianity; Oh that wee could not goe backe! So much more is our vow obligatory, by how much the thing vowed is more neceſſary.

Why was the ſoule of Ieptha this troubled, but becauſe he ſaw the entaile of his new honor thus ſuddenly cut off? He ſaw the hope of poſterity extinguiſhed, in the virginity of his daughter. It is natural to vs, to affect that perpetuity in our ſucceſſion, which is denied vs in our perſons; Our very bodies would emulate the eternity of the ſoule. And if God haue built any of vs an houſe on earth, as wel as prepared vs an Houſe in heauen,

heauen, it muſt be confeſſed a fauour, worth our thankfulneſſe: but as the perpetuity of our earthly houſes is vncertain; ſo let vs not reſt our hearts vpon that, but make ſure of the Houſe which is eternall in the heauens.

Doubtleſſe, the goodneſſe of the Daughter added to the Fathers ſorrow. Shee was not more louing, then religious; neither is ſhe leſſe willing to bee the Lords, then her fathers: and as prouoking her Father to that which hee thought piety, though to her owne wrong, ſhe ſaies, If thou haſt opened thy mouth vnto the Lord, doe with mee as thou haſt promiſed. Many a daughter would haue diſſwaded her Father with teares, & haue wiſht rather her fathers impiety, then her owne preiudice; Shee ſues for the ſmart of her Fathers vow. How obſequious ſhould children be to the will of their carefull Parents euen in their finall diſpoſition in the world, when they ſee this holy maid willing to abandon the world vpon the raſh vow of a Father! They are the liuing goods of their Parents, and muſt therefore wait vpon the beſtowing of their owners: They miſtake themſelues, which thinke they are their own; If this maid had vowed her ſelfe to God without her Father, it had been in his power to abrogate it; but now that hee vowed her to God without her ſelfe, it ſtands in force. But what ſhall we ſay to thoſe children, whom their Parents vow and care cannot make ſo much as honeſt; that will be no other then godleſſe, in ſpight of their Baptiſme, and education? What, but that they are giuen their Parents for a curſe, and ſhall one day find what it is to be rebellious.

All her deſire is, that ſhe may haue leaue to bewaile that which ſhee muſt be forced to keepe, Virginity: If ſhe had not held it an affliction, there had been no cauſe to bewaile it; it had been no thanke to vndergoe it, if ſhe had not knowne it to be a croſſe, Teares are no argument impatience; we may mourne for that we repine not to beare, How comes that to be a meritorious vertue vnder the Goſpell, which was but a puniſhment vnder the Law? The daughters of Iſrael had been too lauiſh of their teares, if virginity had been abſolutely good: What iniury ſhould it haue been to lament that ſpirituall preferment, which they ſhould rather haue emulated?

While Iepthaes daughter was two moneths in the mountaines, ſhee might haue had good opportunity to eſcape her fathers vow; but as one, whom her obedience tyed as cloſe to her Father, as his vow tyed him to God, ſhe returnes to take vp that burden, which ſhe had bewailed to fore-ſee: If we bee truly dutifull to our Father in heauen, we would not ſlip our necks out of the yoke though we might, nor flie from his commands, though the dore were open.

OF extraordinary perſons, the very birth and conception is extraordinary; God begins his wonders betimes, in thoſe whom he will make wonderfull: There was neuer any of thoſe which were miraculouſly conceiued, whoſe liues were not notable & ſingular. The preſages of the wombe, and the cradle, are commonly anſwered in the life; It is not the vſe of God to caſt away ſtrange beginnings. If Manoahs wife had not been barren, the Angell had not been ſent to her: Afflictions haue this aduantage, that they occaſion God to ſhew that mercy to vs, whereof the proſperous are vncapable; It would not beſeeme a mother to be ſo indulgent to an healthfull child, as to a ſicke. It was to the woman that the Angell appeared, not to the husband; whether for that the reproch of barrenneſſe lay vpon her more heauily, then on the father, or for that the birth of the child ſhould coſt her more deare then her husband; or laſtly, for that the difficulty of this newes was more in her conception, then in his generation: As Satan layes his batteries euer to the weakeſt; ſo contrarily, God addreſſeth his comforts to thoſe hearts that haue moſt need; As, at the firſt, becauſe Eue had moſt reaſon to be deiected, for that her ſin had drawne man into the Tranſgreſſion, therefore the Cordial of God moſt reſpecteth her; The ſeede of the Woman ſhall breake the Serpents head.

As a Phyſitian firſt tells the ſtate of the diſeaſe with his ſymptomes, and then preſcribes; ſo doth the Angell of God firſt tell the wife of Manoah her complaint, then her remedy; Thou art barrẽ: All our afflictions are more noted of that God which ſends them, then of the Patient that ſuffers them: how can it be but leſſe poſſible to indure any thing that he knowes not, than that he inflicteth not? He ſaith to one, Thou art ſicke; to another, Thou art poore; to a third, Thou art defamed; Thou art oppreſſed, to another: That All-ſeeing eye takes notice from heauen of euery mans condition, no leſſe then if he ſhould ſend an Angell to tell vs he knew it; His knowledge compared with his mercy, is the iuſt comfort of all our ſufferings. O God we are many times miſerable, and feele it not; Thou knoweſt euen thoſe ſorrowes which we might haue; Thou knoweſt what thou haſt done: doe what thou wilt.

Thou art barren. Not that the Angell would vpbrayd the poore woman with her affliction; but therefore he names her paine, that the mention of her cure might be ſo much more welcome; Comfort ſhall come vnſeaſonably to that heart, which is not apprehenſiue of his own ſorrow: We muſt firſt know our euils, ere we can quit them. It is the iuſt method of euery true Angell of God, firſt to let vs ſee that whereof either we doe, or ſhould complaine, and then to apply comforts: Like as a good Phyſitian firſt puls down the body, and then raiſes it with cordialls. If we cannot abide to heare of our faults, we are not capable of amendment.

If the Angell had firſt ſaid, Thou ſhalt conceiue, and not premiſed, Thou art barren; I doubt whether ſhee had conceiued faith in her ſoule, of that infant which her body ſhould conceiue; Now his knowledge of her preſent eſtate, makes way for the aſſurance of the future. Thus euer it pleaſes our good God, to leaue a pawne of his fidelity with vs; that we ſhould not diſtruſt him in what he will doe, when we finde him faithfull in that which we ſee done.

It is good reaſon that he which giues the ſonne to the barren mother, ſhould diſpoſe of him, and diet him both in the wombe firſt, and after, in the world. The mother muſt firſt be a Nazarite, that her ſonne may be ſo. Whiles ſhe was barren, ſhee might drinke what ſhee would: but now that ſhee ſhall conceiue a Samſon, her choyce muſt be limited; There is an holy auſterity that euer followes the ſpeciall calling of God: The worldling may take his full ſcope, and deny his backe and belly nothing; but he that hath once conceiued that bleſſed burden, whereof Samſon was a type, muſt be ſtrict and ſeuere to himſelfe; neither his tongue, nor his palat, nor his hand, may run riot: Thoſe pleaſures which ſeemed not vnſeemly for the multitude, are now debarred him. Whe borrow more names of our Sauiour then one; As we are Chriſtians, ſo we are Nazarites; the conſecration of our God is vpon our heads, and therefore our very haire ſhould be holy. Our appetite muſt be curbed, our paſſions moderated, and ſo eſtranged from the world, that in the loſſe of parents, or children, nature may not make vs forget grace. What doth the looſeneſſe of vain men perſwade them that God is not curious, when they ſee him thus preciſely ordering the very diet of his Nazarites? Nature pleads for liberty; religion for reſtraint: not that there is more vncleannes in the grape, then in the fountaine; but that wine findes more vncleanneſſe in vs, then water; and that the high feed is not ſo fit for deuotion, as abſtinence. Who ſees not a ceremony in this command? which yet carries with it this ſubſtance of euerlaſting vſe, that God and the belly will not admit of one ſeruant; that quaffing and cramming is not the way to heauen: A drunken Nazarite is a monſter among men. Wee haue now more ſcope then the ancient: not drinking of wine, but drunkenneſſe with wine is forbidden to the Euangelicall Nazarite; wine, wherein is exceſſe. Oh that euer Chriſtians ſhould quench the Spirit of God, with a liquor of Gods own making! that they ſhould ſuffer their hearts to be drowned with wine, and ſhould ſo liue, as if the practiſe of the Goſpell were quite contrary to the rule of the Law.

Hall, J.

The mother muſt conceiue the onely Giant of Iſrael, and yet muſt drinke but water; neither muſt the child touch any other cup. Neuer wine made ſo ſtrong a Champion as water did here. The power of nouriſhment is not in the creatures, but in their Maker. Daniel and his three companions kept their complexion, with the ſame diet wherwith Samſon got his ſtrength; he that gaue that power to the grape, can giue it to the ſtreame. O God, how iuſtly doe we raiſe our eyes from our tables vnto thee, which canſt make water nouriſh, and wine enfeeble vs!

Samſon had not a better mother, then Manoah had a wife; ſhee hides not the good newes in her owne boſome, but imparts it to her husband: That wife hath learned to make a true vſe of her head, which is euer ready to conſult with him about the meſſages of God. If ſhe were made for his helper, he is much more hers. Thus ſhould good women make amends for their firſt offence; that as Eue no ſooner had receiued an ill motion, but ſhe deliuered it to her husband; ſo they ſhould no ſooner receiue good, then they ſhould impart it.

Manoah (like one which in thoſe lewd times had not loſt his acquaintance with God) ſo ſoone as he heares the newes, fals downe vpon his knees. I doe not heare him call forth and addreſſe his ſeruants to all the coaſts of heauen (as the children of the Prophets did in the ſearch of Elias) to finde out the meſſenger; but I ſee him rather looke ſtraight vp, to that God which ſent him; My Lord, I pray thee let that man of God come againe. As a ſtraight line is the ſhorteſt, the neereſt cut to any bleſſing, is to go by heauen; As we may not ſue to God, and neglect meanes, ſo we muſt ſue to God for thoſe meanes which we ſhall vſe.

When I ſee the ſtrength of Manoahs faith, I maruell not that he had a Samſon to his ſonne; he ſaw not the meſſenger, hee heard not the errand, hee examined not the circumſtances; yet now he takes thought, not whether he ſhall haue a ſonne, but how he ſhall order the ſonne which he muſt haue; and ſues to God, not for the ſonne which as yet he had not, but for the direction of gouerning him, when he ſhould be. Zachariah heard the ſame meſſage, and crauing a ſigne, loſt that voyce wherewith he craued it: Manoah ſeekes no ſigne for the promiſe, but counſell for himſelfe; and yet, that Angel ſpake to Zachary himſelfe, this onely to the wife of Manoah, that, in the Temple like a glorious ſpirit; this, in the houſe, or field, like ſome Prophet, or Traueller; that to a Prieſt, this to a Women. All good men haue not equall meaſures of faith; The bodies of men haue not more differences of ſtature, then their graces: Credulity to men is faulty and dangerous; but in the matters of God, is the greateſt vertue of a Chriſtian; Happy are they that haue not ſeene, yet beleeued: True faith takes all for granted, yea for performed, which is once promiſed.

He that before ſent his Angell vnasked, will much more ſend him againe, vpon intreaty; thoſe heauenly meſſengers are ready both to obey their Maker, and to relieue his children. Neuer any man prayed for direction in his duties to God, and was repulſed: rather will God ſend an Angell from Heauen to inſtruct vs, then our good deſires ſhall be fruſtrate.

Manoah prayed, the Angell appeared againe; not to him, but to his wife. It had beene the ſhorter way to haue come firſt to the man, whoſe prayers procured his preſence: But as Manoah went directly, and immediatly to God, ſo God comes mediately & about to him; and will make her the meanes to beare the meſſage to her husband, who muſt beare him the ſonne: Both the bleſſing and the charge are chiefly meant to her. It was a good care of Manoah, when the Angell had giuen order to his wife alone, for the gouerning of the childs diet, to proffer himſelfe to this charge; How ſhall we order the childe? As both the Parents haue their part in the being of their children, ſo ſhould they haue in their education; it is both vnreaſonable & vnaturall in husbands to caſt this burdē vpon the weaker veſſel alone: it is no reaſō that ſhe which alone hath had the pain of their birth, ſhould haue the pain of their breeding. Though the charge be renued to the wife, yet the ſpeech is directed to the husbād, the act muſt be hers, his muſt be the ouerſight; Let her obſerue all I commanded her. The head muſt ouer-look the body;it is the duty of the husband,to be carefull that the wife doe her duty to God.

As yet, Manoah ſaw nothing but the out-ſide of a man,and therefore offers the Angell an anſwerable entertainment, wherein there is at once Hoſpitality and Thankfulneſſe : No man ſhall bring him good newes from God,and go away vnrecompenced; How forward he is to feaſt him, whom he tooke for a Prophet ! their feet ſhould be ſo much more beautifull, that bring vs newes of ſaluation, by how much their errand is better.

That Manoah might learne to acknowledge God in this man, he ſets off the proffer of his thankfulneſſe from himſelfe,to God; and(as the ſame Angell which appeared to Gideon) turnes his feaſt into a ſacrifice : And now he is Manoahs ſolliciter to better thankes then he offered. How forward the good Angels are to incite vs vnto piety ! Either this was the Sonne himſelfe, which ſaid it was his meate and drinke to doe his Fathers will, or elſe one of his ſpirituall attendance of the ſame diet. Wee can neuer feaſt the Angels better, then with our hearty ſacrifices to God; Why do not we learne this leſſon of them, whom we propound to our ſelues as the patterns of our obedience? We ſhall be once like the Angels in condition, why are wee not in the meane time in our diſpoſitions? If we do not prouoke,and exhort one another to godlineſſe, and do care more for a feaſt,then a ſacrifice,our appetite is not Angelicall,but brutiſh.

It was an honeſt minde in Manoah, whiles he was addreſſing a ſacrifice to God, yet not to neglect his meſſenger; faine would he know whom to honor; True piety is not vnciuill, but whiles it magnifies the author of all bleſſings, is thankfull to the meanes. Secondary cauſes are worthy of regard:neither need it detract any thing frō the praiſe of the agent,to honour the inſtrument. It is not only rudeneſſe, but iniuſtice in thoſe, which can be content to heare good newes from God,with contempt of the bearers.

The Angell will neither take nor giue, but conceales his very name from Manoah. All honeſt motions are not fit to be yeelded to ; good intentions are not alwaies ſufficient grounds of condiſcent. If we doe ſomtimes aske what we know not, it is no maruell if we receiue not what we aske. In ſome caſes, the Angell of God tells his name vnasked,as Gabriel to the Virgin;here, not by intreaty : If it were the Angell of the couenant,he had as yet no name but Iehouah; if a created Angell, he had no commiſſion to tell his name;and a faithfull meſſenger hath no a word beyound his charge: Beſides that, he ſaw it would be of more vſe for Manoah, to know him really, then by words. Oh the bold preſumption of thoſe men, which (as if they had long ſoiourned in heauen, and been acquainted with all the holy Legions of ſpirits) diſcourſe of their orders, of their titles, when this one Angell ſtops the mouth of a better man then they with, Why doſt thou aske after my name,which is ſecret ? Secret things to God; reuealed, to vs and our children. No word can be ſo ſignificant as action; The act of the Angell tells beſt who he was; He did wonderfully : wonderfull therefore was his name. So ſoone as euer the flame of the ſacrifice aſcended, hee mounted vp in the ſmoke of it; that Manoah might ſee the ſacrifice, and the meſſenger belonged both to one God; and might know,both whence to acknowledge the meſſage,and whence to expect the performance.

Gideons Angell vaniſhed at his ſacrifice, but this in the ſacrifice; that Manoah might at once ſee both the confirmation of his promiſe,and the acceptation of his obedience, whiles the Angell of God vouchſafed to perfume himſelfe with that holy ſmoke, and carry the ſent of it vp into heauen. Manoah beleeued before, and craued no ſigne to aſſure him;God voluntarily confirmes it to him aboue his deſire : To him that hath,ſhall be giuen : Where there are beginnings of faith, the mercy of God will adde perfection.

How doe we thinke Manoah and his wife looked to ſee this ſpectacle? They had not ſpirit enough left to looke one vpon another : but inſtead of looking vp cheerefully to heauen,they fall downe to the earth, on their faces; as weake eyes are dazeled with that which ſhould comfort them. This is the infirmity of our nature, to be afflicted with the cauſes of our ioy,to be aſtoniſhed with our confirmations; to conceiue death in that viſion of God, wherein our life and happineſſe conſiſts. If this homely ſight of the Angell did ſo confound good Manoah, what ſhall become of the enemies of God, when they ſhall be brought before the glorious Tribunall of the God of Angels?

I maruell not now, that the Angell appeared both times rather to the wife of Manoah; her faith was the ſtronger of the two. It falls out ſometimes, that the weaker veſſell is fuller, and that of more precious liquor: that wife is no helper, which is not ready to giue ſpirituall comfort to her husband: The reaſon was good, and irrefragable, If the Lord were pleaſed to kill vs, he would not haue receiued a burnt offering from vs. God will not accept gifts, where he intends puniſhment, and profeſſes hatred. The ſacrifice of the wicked, is abomination to the Lord: If we can finde aſſurance of Gods acceptation of our ſacrifices, we may be ſure he loues our perſons. If I incline to wickedneſſe in my heart, the Lord will not heare me; but the Lord hath heard me.

SAMSONS marriage.

OF all the deliuerers of Iſrael, there is none of whom are reported ſo many weakneſſes, or ſo many miracles, as of Samſon. The newes which the Angell told of his conception and education, was not more ſtrange, then the newes of his owne choice; he but ſees a daughter of the Philiſtims, and falls in loue; All this ſtrength begins in infirmity; One maide of the Philiſtims ouercomes that champion, which was giuen to ouercome the Philiſtims: Euen hee that was dieted with water, found heat of vnfit deſires: As his body was ſtrong notwithſtanding that fare, ſo were his paſſions; without the gift of continency, a low ſeed may impaire nature, but not inordination. To follow nothing but the eye in the choice of his wife, was a luſt vnworthy of a Nazarite; This is to make the ſenſe not a Counſeller, but a Tyrant.

Yet was Samſon in this very impotency, dutifull; He did not in the preſumption of his ſtrength rauiſh her forceably; He did not make vp a clandeſtine match without conſulting with his parents, but he makes ſute to them for conſent, Giue me her to wife: As one that could be maſter of his own act, though not of his paſſion; and as one that had learned ſo to be a ſutor, as not to forget himſelfe to be a ſonne. Euen in this deplored ſtate of Iſrael, children durſt not preſume to bee their owne caruers; how much leſſe is this tolerable in a well-guided and Chriſtian Common-wealth? Whoſoeuer now diſpoſe of themſelues without their Parents, they do wilfully vnchild themſelues, and change naturall affection for violent.

It is no maruell of Manoah and his wife were aſtoniſhed at this vneqnall motion of their ſonne; Did not the Angell (thought they) tell vs that this childe ſhould be conſecrated to God; and muſt he begin his youth in vnholy wedlocke? Did not the Angel ſay that our ſonne ſhould begin to ſaue Iſrael from the Philiſtims; and is he now captiued in his affections by a daughter of the Philiſtims? Shall our deliuerance from the Philiſtims begin in an alliance? Haue we beene ſo ſcrupulouſly carefull, that he ſhould eat no vncleane thing, and ſhall we now conſent to an heatheniſh match? Now therefore they grauely indeuour to coole this intemperate heat of his paſſion, with good counſell, as thoſe which well knew the inconueniences of an vnequall yoke; corruption in religion, alienation of affections, diſtraction of thoughts, conniuence at Idolatry, death of zeale, dangerous vnderminings, & laſtly, an vnholy ſeed. Who can blame them, if they were vnwilling to call a Philiſtim, daughter?

I wiſh Manoah could ſpeake ſo loud, that all our Iſraelites might heare him; Is there neuer a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all Gods people, that thou goeſt to take a wife of the vncircumciſed Philiſtims? If religion be any other then a cypher, how dare we not regard it in our moſt important choice? Is ſhe a faire Philiſtim? Why is not this deformity of the ſoule more powerfull to diſſwade vs, then the beauty of the face, or of metall to allure vs? To dote vpon a faire skinne, when we ſee a Philiſtim vnder it, is ſenſuall and brutiſh.

Affection is not more blinde, then deafe. In vaine doe the parents ſeeke to alter a young man, not more ſtrong in body, then in will; Though he cannot defend his deſires, yet he purſues them; Get me her, for ſhe pleaſes me. And although it muſt needs be a weake motion that can plead no reaſon, but appetite; yet the good Parents, ſith they cannot bow the affection of their ſonne with perſwaſion, dare not breake it with violence. As it becomes not children to be forward in their choyce; ſo parents may not be too peremptory in their deniall: It it is not ſafe for children to ouer-run parents in ſetling their affections; nor for parents (where the impediments are not very materiall) to come ſhort of their chidren, when the affections are once ſetled: The one is diſobedience; the other may be tyranny.

I know not whether I may excuſe either Samſon in making this ſute, or his parents in yeelding to it, but a diuine diſpenſation in both: For on the one ſide, whiles the Spirit of God notes, that as yet his parents knew not this was of the Lord, it may ſeeme that he knew it; and is it likely he would know and not impart it? This alone was enough to win, yea to command his parents; It is not mine eye onely, but the counſell of God that leads me to his choice: The way to quarrell with the Philiſtims, is to match wih them; If I follow mine affection, mine affection followes God, in this proiect. Surely, hee that commanded his Prophet afterwards to marry an harlot, may haue appointed his Nazarite to marry with a Philiſtim: On the other ſide, whether it were of Gods permitting, or allowing, I finde not: It might ſo be of God, as all the euill in the City; and then the interpoſition of Gods decree, ſhall be no excuſe of Samſons infirmity. I would rather thinke, that God meant onely to make a Treacle of a Viper; and rather appointed to fetch good out of Samſons euill, then to approue that for good in Samſon, which in it ſelfe was euill.

When Samſon went on wooing, hee might haue made the ſluggards excuſe, There is a Lion in the way: but hee that could not be ſtaid by perſwaſion, will not by feare. A Lion, young, wilde, fierce, hungry, comes roaring vpon him, when he had no weapon but his hand, no fence but his ſtrength; the ſame prouidence that carried him to Timnah, brought the Lyon to him. It hath beene euer the faſhion of God, to exerciſe his Champions with ſome initiatory incounters: Both Samſon and David muſt firſt fight with Lions, then with Philiſtims; & he whoſe type they bore, meets with that roaring Lion of the wilderneſſe, in the very threſhold of his publike charge. The ſame hand that prepared a Lyon for Samſon, hath proportionable matches for euery Chriſtian; God neuer giues ſtrength, but he imployes it: Pouerty meets one like an armed man; Infamy, like ſome furious Maſtiue, comes flying in the face of another; the wilde Bore out of the foreſt, or the bloudy Tyger of perſecution ſets vpon one; the brawling curs of hereticall prauity or contentious neighbourhood, are ready to bait another; and by all theſe meaner aand brutiſh aduerſaries, will God fit vs for greater conflicts: It is a pledge of our future victory ouer the ſpirituall Philiſtims, if we can ſay, My ſoule hath been among Lions. Come forth now, thou weake Chriſtian, and behold this preparatory battell of Samſon; Doſt thou thinke God deales hardly with thee in matching thee ſo hard, and calling thee forth to ſo many frayes? What doſt thou but repine at thine owne glory? How ſhouldſt thou be victorious, without reſiſtance?

If the parents of Samſon had now ſtood behind the hedge and ſeen this incounter, they would haue taken no further care of matching their ſonne with a Philiſtim; For who that ſhould ſee a ſtrong Lion ramping vpon an vnarmed man, would hope for his life and victory? The beaſt came briſtling vp his feareful mane, wafting his raiſed ſtern; his eies ſparkling with fury, his mouth roaring out knels of his laſt paſſage, & breathing death from his noſtrils, & now reioyced at ſo faire a prey. Surely, if the Lion had had no other aduerſary then him whom he ſaw, he had not loſt his hope; but now he could not ſee that his maker was his enemy; The ſpirit of the Lord came vpon Samſon; what is a beaſt in the hand of the creator? He that ſtrook the Lions with the awe of Adam, Noah, & Daniel, ſubdued this rebellious beaſt to Samſon; what maruell is it if Samſon now tore him, as if it had beene a young Kid? If his bones had beene braſſe, and his skinne plates of yron, all had bin one: The right hand of the Lord bringeth mighty things to paſſe.

If that roaring Lion, that goes about continually ſeeking whom he may deuoure, finde vs alone among the vineyards of the Philiſtims, where is our hope? Not in our heeles; he is ſwifter then wee: not in our weapons; we are naturally vnarmed: not in our hands, which are weake and languiſhing; but in the Spirit of that God, by whom we can doe all things: if God fight in vs, who can reſiſt him? There is a ſtronger Lion in vs then that againſt vs.

Samſon was not more valiant then modeſt; he made no words of this great exployt: the greateſt performers euer make the leaſt noyſe; Hee that workes wonders alone, could ſay, See thou tell no man; whereas thoſe, whoſe hands are moſt impotent, are buſieſt of their tongues. Great talkers ſhew that they deſire onely to be thought eminent, whereas the deepeſt waters are leaſt heard.

But, whiles hee concealed this euent from others, hee pondered it in himſelfe; and when hee returned to Timnath, went out of the way to ſee his dead Aduerſary, and could not but recall to himſelfe his danger, and deliuerance; Heere the beaſt met me, thus hee fought, thus I ſlew him. The very dead Lyon taught Samſon thankfulneſſe: there was more honey in this thought then in the carkaſſe. The mercies of God are ill beſtowed vpon vs, if we cannot ſtep aſide to view the monuments of his deliuerances; Dangers may be at once paſt, and forgotten. As Samſon had not found his hony-combe, if he had not turned aſide to ſee his Lion; ſo we ſhall loſe the comfort of Gods benefits, if we doe not renue our perils by meditation.

Leſt any thing ſhould befall Samſon, wherein is not ſome wonder, his Lion doth more amaze him dead, then aliue; For loe, that carkaſſe is made an Hiue; and the bitterneſſe of death, is turned into the ſweetneſſe of honey. The Bee, a nice and dainty creature, builds her cells in an vnſauory carkaſſe; the carkaſſe that promiſed nothing but ſtrength, and annoyance, now offers comfort and refreſhing; and in a ſort, payes Samſon for the wrong offered. Oh the wonderfull goodneſſe of our God, that can change our terrours into pleaſure, and can make the greateſt euils beneficall! Is any man, by his humiliation vnder the hand of God, growne more faithfull, and conſcionable? there is hony out of the Lion. Is any man by his temptation or fall become more circumſpect? there is alſo hony out of the Lion: there is no Samſon, to whom euery Lion doth not yeeld hony: Euery Chriſtan is the better for his euils; yea, Satan himſelfe, in his exerciſe of Gods children, aduantageth them.

Samſon doth not diſdaine theſe ſweets, becauſe he findes them vncleanly layd; His diet was ſtrict, and forbade him any thing that ſauoured of legall impurity; yet hee eates the honey-combe out of the belly of a dead beaſt; good may not be refuſed, becauſe the meanes are accidentally euill; Hony is hony ſtill, though in a dead Lion. Thoſe are leſſe wiſe, and more ſcrupulous then Samſon, which abhorre the graces of God, becauſe they finde them in ill veſſels: One cares not for the Preachers true doctrine, becauſe his life is euill; Another will not take a good receit from the hand of a Phiſician, becauſe he is giuen to vnlawfull ſtudies; A third will not receiue a deſerued contribution from the hands of a Vſurer. It is a weake neglect, not to take the honey, becauſe we hate the Lion: Gods children haue right to their fathers bleſſings, whereſoeuer they finde them.

The match is now made; Samſon (though a Nazarite) hath both a wedding, and a feaſt; God neuer miſliked moderate ſolemnities in the ſeuereſt life; and yet this Bridal-feaſt was long, the ſpace of ſeauen daies. If Samſon had matched with the beſt Iſraelite, this celebration had beene no greater; neither had this perhaps beene ſo long, if the cuſtome of the place had not required it. Now I do not heare him pleade his Nazaritiſme, for a colour of ſingularity: It is both lawfull and fit, in things not prohibited.

bited, to conforme our ſelues to the manners and rites of thoſe with whom we liue.

That Samſon might thinke it an honour to match with the Philiſtims, hee whom before the Lion found alone, is now accompanied with thirty attendants; They called them companions, but they meant them for ſpies. The courtiſies of the world are hollow and thankleſſe; neither doth it euer purpoſe ſo ill, as when it ſhewes fayreſt. None are ſo neere to danger, as thoſe whom it entertaines with ſmiles; whiles it frownes, we know what to truſt to; but the fauours of it are worthy of nothing but feares and ſuſpicion: Open defiance is better then falſe loue.

Auſteritie had not made Samſon vnciuill; he knowes how to entertaine Philiſtims with a formall familiarity: And that his intellectuall parts might be approued anſwerable to his arms, he will firſt try maſteries of wit, and ſet their braines on worke with harmeleſſe thoughts; His riddle ſhall oppoſe them, and a deepe wager ſhall bind the ſolution; Thirty ſhirts, & thirty ſutes of raiment; neither their loſſe, nor their gaine could be much, beſides the victory, being diuided vnto thirty partners: but Samſons muſt needes bee both waies very large, who muſt giue or receiue thirty alone. The ſeuen daies of the feaſt are expiring, and yet they which had bin all this while deuouring of Samſons meat, cannot tell who that eater ſhould be from whence meat ſhould come. In courſe of nature, the ſtrong feeder takes in meat, and ſends out filthines; but, that meat & ſweetnes ſhould come from a deuouring ſtomacke, was beyond their apprehenſion.

And as fooles and dogs vſe to beginne in ieſt, and end in earneſt, ſo did theſe Philiſtims; and therefore they force the Bride to intice her husband to betray himſelfe. Couetouſnes and Pride haue made them impatient of loſſe: and now they threat to fire her, and her fathers houſe, for recompence of their entertainment, rather then they will loſe a ſmall wager to an Iſraelite. Some-what of kinne to theſe ſauage Philiſtims, are thoſe cholericke Gameſters, which if the dice be not their friend, fall out with God, curſe (that which is not) Fortune; ſtrike their fellowes, and are ready to take vengeance vpon themſelues: Thoſe men are vnfit for ſport, that loſe their patience together with their wager.

I doe not wonder that a Philiſtim woman loued her ſelfe and her Fathers family, more then an Iſraelitiſh Bride-grome; and, if ſhe beſtowed teares vpon her husband, for the ranſome of them. Samſon himſelfe taught her this difference, I haue not told it my Father or my mother, and ſhould I tell it thee? If ſhee had not beene as ſhee was, ſhe had neither done this to Samſon, nor heard this from him; Matrimoniall reſpects are dearer then naturall; It was the lawe of him that ordained marriage (before euer Parents were) that Parents ſhould be forſaken, for the husband or wife: But now, Iſraelitiſh Parents are worthy of more intireneſſe, then a wife of the Philiſtims; And yet whom the Lion could not conquer, the teares of a woman haue conquered. Samſon neuer bewraied infirmitie but in vxoriouſneſſe; What aſſurance can there be of him that hath a Philiſtim in his boſome? Adam, the perfecteſt man, Samſon, the ſtrongeſt man, Salomon, the wiſeſt man, were betrayed with the flattery of their helpers. As there is no comfort comfortable to a faithfull yoke-fellow: ſo woe be to him that is matched with a Philiſtim.

It could not but much diſcontent Samſon, to ſee that his aduerſaries had plowed with his Heifer, and that vpon his owne backe; now therefore he payes his wager to their coſt. Aſcalon the Citie of the Philiſtims, is his wardrobe; he fetches thence thirty ſutes, lined with the liues of the owners: He might with as much eaſe haue ſlain theſe thirty companions, which were the authors of this euill; but his promiſe forbade him, whiles he was to clothe their bodies, to vnclothe their ſoules; and that Spirit of God, which ſtird him vp to reuenge, directed him in the choice of the ſubiects. If we wonder to ſee thirty throats cut for their ſutes, we may eaſily know, that this was but the occaſion of that ſlaughter, whereof the cauſe was their oppreſſion & tyrannie. Dauid ſlew 200. Philiſtims for their fore-skins: but the ground of his act was their hoſtilitie. It is iuſt with God to deſtine what enemies he pleaſes, to execution: It is not to be expoſtulated why this man is ſtricken rather then another, when both are Philiſtims.

SAMSONS victory.

I Can no more iuſtifie Samſon in the leauing of his wife, then in the chuſing her: He choſe her, becauſe ſhe pleaſed him, and becauſe ſhe diſpiſed him, he left her. Though her feare made her falſe to him in his Riddle, yet ſhe was true to his bed: That weake trechery was worthy of a checke, not a deſertion. All the paſſions of Samſon were ſtrong, like himſelfe: but (as vehement motions are not laſting) this vehement winde is ſoone allaid; and he is now returning with a Kid, to winne her that had offended him, and to renue that feaſt which ended in her vnkindneſſe. Slight occaſions may not breake the knot of matrimoniall loue; and if any iuſt offence haue ſlackned it on either part, it muſt be faſtned againe by ſpeedy reconciliation.

Now Samſons father in law ſhewes himſelf a Philiſtim, the true parent of her that betraied her husband; for no ſooner is the Bride-groome departed, then he changes his ſonne: What pretence of friendſhip ſoeuer hee made, a true Philiſtim will ſoone bee weary of an Iſraelite. Samſon hath not ſo many dayes liberty to enioy his wedding, as he ſpent in celebrating it: Marriage hath been euer a ſacred Inſtitution, and who but a Philiſtim would ſo eaſily violate it? One of his thirty compaions enioyes his wife, together with his ſute; and now laughs to be a partner of that bed, whereon he was an attendant. The good nature of Samſon, hauing forgotten the firſt wrong, carried him to a proffer of familiarity, and is repulſed; but with a gentle violence; I had thought thou hadſt hated her. Lawfull wedlock may not be diſſolued by imaginations, but by proofs.

Who ſhall ſtay Samſon from his owne wife? Hee that ſlew the Lion in the way of his wooing, and before whom thouſands of the Philiſtims could not ſtand, yet ſuffers himſelfe to be reſiſted by him that was once his father in Law, without any returne of priuate violence.

Great is the force of duty once conceiued, euen to the moſt vnworthy: This thought, I was his ſonne, bindes the hands of Samſon; elſe how eaſily might he, that ſlew thoſe thirty Philiſtims for their ſutes, haue deſtroyed this family for his wife? How vnnaturall are thoſe mouthes, that can curſe the loines from which they are proceeded; and thoſe hands, that dare lift vp themſelues againſt the meanes of their life and being?

I neuer read that Samſon ſlew any but by the motion and aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God: and the diuine wiſdome hath reſerued theſe offenders to another reuenge. Iudgement muſt deſcend from others to them, ſith the wrong proceeded from others, by them. In the very marriage, God fore-ſaw and intended this parting, and in the parting, this puniſhment vpon the Philiſtims. If the Philiſtims had not beene as much enemies to God, as to Samſon; enimies to Iſrael in their oppreſſion, no leſſe then to Samſon in this particular iniury, that purpoſe and execution of reuenge had beene no better then wicked: Now He to whom vengeance belongs, ſets him on worke, and makes the act iuſtice: when he commands, euen very crueltie is obedience.

It was a buſie and troubleſome proiect of Samſon, to vſe the foxes for his reuenge; for not without great labor and many hands could ſo many wilde creatures be got together, neither could the wit of Samſon want other deuices of hoſtility: But he meant to find out ſuch a puniſhment, as might in ſome ſort anſwer the offence, and might imply as much contempt, as treſpaſſe. By wiles, ſeconded with violence, had they wronged Samſon, in extorting his ſecret, and taking away his wife: and what other Embleme could theſe foxes tied together preſent vnto them, then wilineſſe combined by force to worke miſchiefe?

Theſe foxes deſtroy their corne, before he which ſent them deſtroy the perſons. Thoſe iudgements which beginne in outward things, end in the owners: A ſtranger that had beene of neither ſide, would haue ſaid, What pitty it is to ſee good corne thus ſpoiled? If the creature be conſidered apart from the owners, it is good; and therefore if it bee miſ-ſpent, the abuſe reflects vpon the maker of it; but if it be looked vpon, with reſpect to an ill maſter, the beſt vſe of it is to periſh. He therefore that ſlew the Egyptian cattell with murraine, and ſmote their fruit with haileſtones; he that conſumed the Vines of Iſrael with the Palmer-worme, and Caterpiller, and Canker-worme, ſent alſo Foxes by the hand of Samſon, into the fields of the Philiſtims. Their Corne was too good for them to enioy, not too good for the Foxes to burne vp: God had rather his creatures ſhould periſh any way, then ſerue for the luſt of the wicked.

There could not be ſuch ſecrecy in the catching of three hundred foxes, but it might well be knowne who had procured them: Rumor will ſwiftly flie of things not done: but of a thing ſo notoriouſly executed, it is no maruell if Fame be a blab. The mention of the offence drawes in the prouocation: and now the wrong to Samſon is ſcanned and reuenged; Becauſe the fields of the Philiſtims are burned for the wrong done to Samſon by Timnite in his daughter, therefore the Philiſtims burne the Timnite and his daughter. The tying of the fire-brand betweene two foxes, was not ſo witty a policie, as the ſetting of a fire of diſſenſion betwixt the Philiſtims. What need Samſon be his owne executioner, when his enemies will vndertake that charge? There can be no more pleaſing propſect to an Iſraelite, then to ſee the Philiſtims together by the eares.

If the wife of Samſon had not feared the fire for her ſelfe, and her Fathers houſe, ſhee had not betrayed her husband, her husband had not thus plagued the Philiſtims, the Philiſtims had not conſumed her and her father with fire: now ſhee leaps into that flame which ſhee meant to auoid. That euill which the wicked feared, meets them in their flight: How many in a feare of pouerty, ſeeke to gaine vnconſcionably, and die beggers? How many, to ſhunne paine and danger, haue yeelded to euill, and in the long runne haue been met in the teeth with that miſchiefe, which they had hoped to haue left behinde them? How many, in a deſire to eſchue the ſhame of men, haue falne into the confuſion of God? Both good and euill are ſure paymaſters at the laſt.

He that was ſo ſoone pacified towards his wife, could not but haue thought this reuenge more then enough, if he had not rather weilded Gods quarrell then his owne; He knew that God had raiſed him vp on purpoſe, to be a ſcourge to the Philiſtims, whom as yet he had angred more then puniſhed: As if theſe therefore had beene but floriſhes before the fray, he ſtirres vp his courage, and ſtrikes them both hip and thigh, with a mighty plague. That God which can doe nothing imperfectly, where hee begins either mercy or iudgement, will not leaue till he haue happily finiſhed: As it is in his fauours, ſo in his puniſhments; One ſtroke drawes on another.

The Iſraelites were but ſlaues, and the Philiſtims were their maſters: ſo much more indignely therefore muſt they needs take it, to bee thus affronted by one of their owne vaſſals: yet ſhall wee commend the moderation of theſe Pegans. Samſon, being not mortally wronged by one Philiſtim, falls foule vpon the whole Nation; the Philiſtims hainouſly offended by Samſon, doe not fall vpon the whole Tribe of Iudah, but being muſtered together, call to them for ſantisfaction from the perſon offending: the ſame hand of God which wrought Samſon to reuenge, reſtrained them from it, It is no thanke to themſelues that ſometimes wicked men cannot be cruell.

The men of Iudah, are by their feare made friends to their Tyrants, and traytors to their friend; it was in their cauſe that Samſon had ſhed bloud, and yet they conſpire with the Philiſtims, to deſtroy their owne fleſh and bloud. So ſhall the Philiſtims be quit with Iſrael, that as Samſon by Philiſtims reuenged himſelfe of Philiſtims; ſo they an Iſraelite, by the hand of Iſraelites. That which open enemies dare not attempt, they worke by falſe brethren; and theſe are ſo much more perilous, as they are more entire.

It had beene no leſſe eaſie for Samſon to haue ſlaine thoſe thouſands of Iudah that came to binde him, then thoſe other of the Philiſtims that meant to kill him bound: And what if he had ſaid; Are ye turned Traytors to your Deliuerer? your bloud bee vpon your owne heads: But the Spirit of God (without whom he could not kill either beaſt, or man) would neuer ſtirre him vp to kill his brethren, though degenerated into Philiſtims; they haue more power to binde him, then he to kill them: Iſraelitiſh blood was precious to him, that made no more ſcruple of killing a Philiſtim, then a Lion. That bondage and vſury that was allowed to a Iew from a Pagan, might not be exacted from a Iew.

The Philiſtims that had before plowed with Samſons Heifer in the caſe of the Riddle, are now plowing a worſe furrow with an Heifer more his owne. I am aſhamed to heare theſe cowardly Iewes ſay, Knoweſt thou not that the Philiſtims are Lords ouer vs? Why haſt thou done thus vnto vs? We are therefore come to bind thee. Wheras they ſhould haue ſaid; We finde theſe tyrannicall Philiſtims to vſurpe dominion ouer vs; thou haſt happily begun to ſhake off their yoke, and now we are come to ſecond thee with our ſeruice; the valour of ſuch a Captaine ſhall eaſily lead vs forth to liberty; We are ready either to die with thee, or to be freed by thee: A fearefull man can neuer be a true friend; rather then incurre any danger, hee will be falſe to his owne ſoule. Oh cruell mercy of theſe men of Iuda! We will not kill thee, but we will binde thee, and deliuer thee to the hands of the Philiſtims, that they may kill thee. As if it had not beene much worſe to die an ignominious and tormenting death, by the hands of Philiſtims, then to be at once diſpatcht by them, which wiſht either his life ſafe, or his death eaſie.

When Saul was purſued by the Philiſtims vpon the mountaines of Gilboa, he could ſay to his Armour-bearer, Draw forth thy ſword, and kill me, leſt the vncircumciſed come and thruſt mee thorow, and mocke me; and at laſt, would rather fall vpon his owne ſword, then theirs: And yet theſe couſins of Samſon can ſay, We will not kill thee, but we will binde thee, and deliuer thee. It was no excuſe to theſe Iſraelites, that Samſons binding had more hope, then his death; It was more in the extraordinary mercy of God then their will, that he was not tyed with his laſt bonds: Such is the goodneſſe of the Almighty, that he turnes the cruell intentions of wicked men to an aduantage.

Now theſe Iewes that might haue let themſelues looſe from their owne bondage, are binding their Deliuerer, whom yet they knew able to haue reſiſted. In the greateſt ſtrength, there is vſe of patience; There was more fortitude in this ſuffering, then in his former actions; Samſon abides to by tyed by his owne countrymen, that he may haue the glory of freeing himſelfe victoriouſly. Euen ſo, O Sauiour, our better Nazarite, thou which couldſt haue called to thy Father, and haue dad twelue Legions of Angels for thy reſcue, wouldſt be bouud voluntarily, that thou mibgtſt triumph; So the bleſſed Martyrs were racked, and would not be looſed, becauſe they expected a better reſurrection. If we be not as well ready to ſuffer ill, as to do good, wee are not fit for the conſecration of God.

To ſee Samſon thus ſtrongly manicled, and expoſed to their full reuenge, could not but be a glad ſpectacle to theſe Philiſtims; and their ioy was ſo full, that it could not but flie forth of their mouthes in ſhouting and laughter; Whom they ſaw looſe with terror, it is pleaſure to ſee bound. It is the ſport of the ſpirituall Philiſtims, to ſee any of Gods Nazarites fettered with the cords of iniquity; and their Imps are ready to ſay, Aha; ſo would we haue it. But the euent anſwers their falſe ioy, with that clauſe of triumph, Reioyce not ouer me, O mine enemy: though I fall, yet I ſhall riſe again. How ſoone was the countenance of theſe Philiſtims changed, and their ſhouts turned into ſhrickings? The Spirit of the Lord came vpon Samſon: and then, what are cords to the Almighty? His new bonds are as flaxe burnt with fire; and he rouzes vp himſelfe, like that young Lion whom he firſt incountred, and flies vpon thoſe cowardly aduerſaries, who if they had not ſeene his cords, durſt not haue ſeene his face. If they had been ſo many diuels, as men, they could not haue ſtood before that Spirit, which lifted vp the heart and hand of Samſon. Wicked men neuer ſee fairer proſpect, then when they are vpon the very threſhold of deſtruction; Security and Ruine are ſo cloſe bordering vpon each other, that where we ſee the face of the one, we may be ſure the other is at his backe. Thus didſt thou, O bleſſed Sauiour, when thou wert faſtened to the Croſſe, when thou layeſt bound in the graue with the cords of death; thus didſt thou miraculouſly raiſe vp thy ſelfe, vanquiſh thine enemies, and lead captiuity captiue; Thus doe all thy holy ones, when they ſeem moſt forſaken and laid open to the inſultation of the world, finde thy Spirit mighty to their deliuerance, and the diſcomfiture of their malicious aduerſaries.

Thoſe three thouſand Iſraelites were not ſo ill aduiſed, as to come vp into the rocke vnweaponed, to apprehend Samſon; Samſon therefore might haue had his choice of ſwords, or ſpeares, for this skirmiſh with the Philiſtims; yet he leaues all the munition of Iſrael, and finding the new iaw-bone of an Aſſe, takes that vpon his hand, and with that baſe inſtrument of death, ſends a thouſand Philiſtims to their place. All the ſwords and ſhields of the armed Philiſtims cannot reſiſt that contemptible Engine which hath now left a thouſand bodies, as dead as the carcaſe of that beaſt, whoſe bone it was. This victory was not in the weapon, was not in the arme: it was in the Spirit of God, which moued the weapon in the arme. O God, if the meanes be weake, yet thou art ſtrong: Through God we ſhall do great acts; Yea, I can doe all things through him that ſtrentheneth me. Seeſt thou a poore Chriſtian, which by weake counſell hath obtained to ouercome a tentation? there is the Philiſtim vanquiſht with a ſorry iaw-bone.

It is no maruell, if hee were thus admirably ſtrong and victorious, whoſe bodily ſtrength God meant to make a type of the ſpirituall power of Chriſt: And behold, as the three thouſands of Iuda ſtood ſtill gazing with their weapon in their hand, whiles Samſon alone ſubdued the Philiſtims; ſo did men and Angels ſtand looking vpon the glorious atcheiuements of the Sonne of God, who might iuſtly ſay, I haue trod the wine-preſſe alone.

Both the Samſons camplained of thirſt; The ſame God which gaue his Champion victory, gaue him alſo refreſhing; and by the ſame meanes; The ſame bone yeelds him both conqueſt, and life; and is of a weapon of offence, turned into a well of water: He that fetcht water out of the flint for Iſrael, fetches it out of a bone for Samſon. What is not poſſible to the infinite power of that Almighty Creator, that made all things of nothing? He can giue Samſon hony from the mouth of the Lion, and water from the mouth of the Aſſe. Who would not cheerefully depend vpon that God, which can fetch moiſture out of drineſſe, and life out of death?

SAMSONS end.

I Cannot wonder more at Samſons ſtrength then his weakneſſe; Hee that beganne to caſt away his loue vpon a wife of the Philiſtims, goes on to miſ-ſpend himſelfe vpon the harlots of the Philiſtims: He that did not ſo much ouercome the men, as the women ouercome him. His affections blinded him firſt, ere the Philiſtims could doe it: would he elſe, after the effuſion of ſo much of their bloud, haue ſuffered his luſt to carry him within their walls, as one that cared more for his pleaſure, then his life? Oh ſtrange debauchedneſſe, and preſumption of a Nazarite! The Philiſtims are vp in Armes to kill him; he offers himſelfe to their City, to their ſtewes, and dare expoſe his life to one of their harlots, whom he had ſlaughtered. I would haue looked to haue ſeene him betake himſelfe to his ſtronger Rocke, then that of Etam, and by his auſtere deuotion, to ſeeke protection of him, of whom he receiued ſtrength: but now, as if he had forgotten his conſecration, I finde him turned Philiſtim for his bed, and of a Nazarite, ſcarce a man. In vaine doth he nouriſh his haire, whiles he feeds theſe paſſions. How vſually doe vigor of body, and infirmity of minde lodge vnder one roofe? On the contrary, a weariſh outſide is a ſtrong motiue to mortification: Samſons victories haue ſubdued him, and haue made him firſt a ſlaue to lewd deſires, and then to the Philiſtims. I may ſafely ſay, that more veſſels miſcarry with a faire gale, then with a tempeſt.

Yet was not Samſon ſo blinded with luſt, as not at all to looke before him; he foreſaw, the morning would be dangerous, the bed of his fornication therefore could hold him no longer then midnight; then hee riſes, and in a mocke of thoſe ambuſhes which the Azahites laid for him, hee carries away the gates wherein they thought to haue incaged him. If a temptation haue drawne vs aſide, to lie downe to ſinne, it is happy for vs, if wee can ariſe ere wee bee ſurprized with iudgement. Samſon had not left his ſtrength in the bed of an harlot; neither had that God which gaue it him, ſtript him of it with his clothes, when hee laid him downe in vncleanneſſe: His mercy vſes not to take vantage of our vnworthineſſe, but euen when we caſt him off, holds vs faſt. That bountifull hand leaues vs rich of common graces, when we haue miſ-ſpent our better ſtore: Like as our firſt Parents, when they had ſpoiled themſelues of the Image of their Creator, yet were left wealthy of noble faculties of the ſoule.

I finde Samſon come off from his ſinne with ſafety, he runnes away lightly with an heauier weight then the gates of Azzah, the burthen of an ill act. Preſent impunity argues not an abatement of the wickednes of his ſin, or of the diſlike of God: nothing is ſo worthy of pitty, as as ſinners peace: Good is not therefore good, becauſe it proſpers, but becauſe it is commanded: Euill is not euill becauſe it is puniſhed, but becauſe it is forbidden.

If the holy parents of Samſon liued to ſee theſe outrages of their Nazarite, I doubt whether they did not repent them of their ioy, to heare newes of a ſonne. It is a ſhame to ſee how he that might not drinke wine, is drunke with the cup of fornications; His luſt carries him from Azzah, to the plaine of Sorek, and now hath found a Dalilah, that ſhall pay him for all his former vncleanneſſe. Sinne is ſteepe and ſlippery, and if after one fall wee haue found where to ſtand, it is the praiſe, not of our footing, but of the hand of God.

The Princes of the Philiſtims knew already where Samſons weakneſſe lay, though not his ſtrength; and therefore they would entiſe his harlot by gifts, to entiſe him by her dalliance, to betray himſelfe. It is no maruell, if ſhee which would be filthy, would be alſo perfidious. How could Samſon chuſe but thinke, if luſt had not bewitched him, Shee, whoſe body is mercenary to mee, will eaſily ſell me to others; Shee will be falſe, if ſhe will be an harlot? A wide conſcience will ſwallow any ſin: Thoſe that haue once thralled themſelues to a knowne euill, can make no other difference of ſinnes, but their owne loſſe, or aduantage: A lyer will ſteale; a theefe can kill; a cruell man can bee a Traytor; a drunkard can falſifie; wickedneſſe once entertained, can put on any ſhape: Truſt him in nothing, that makes not a conſcience of euery thing.

Was there euer ſuch another motion made to a reaſonable man? Tell me wherein thy great ſtrength lieth, and wherewith thou maieſt be bound to do thee hurt. Who would not haue ſpurned ſuch a ſutor out of doores? What will not impudency aske, or ſtupidity receiue? He that killed the thouſand Philiſtims for comming to binde him, indures this harlot of the Philiſtims to conſult with himſelfe of binding him; and when vpon the triall of a falſe anſwer, he ſaw ſo apparant trechery, yet wilfully bettrayes his life by her, to his enemies: All ſinnes, all paſſions haue power to infatuate a man, but luſt moſt of all. Neuer man that had drunk flagons of wine, had leſſe reaſon, then this Nazarite; Many a one loſes his life: but this caſts it a way; not in hatred of himſelfe, but in loue to a ſtrumpet. Wee wonder that a man could poſſibly be ſo ſottiſh, and yet wee our ſelues by tentation become no leſſe inſenſate; Sinfull pleaſures, lik a common Dalilah lodge in our boſomes: we know they aime at nothing but the death of our ſoule, wee will yeeld to them, and die: Euery willing ſinner is a Samſon, let vs not inueigh againſt his ſenſleſneſſe, but our owne: Nothing is ſo groſſe and vnreaſonable to a well-diſpoſed minde, which tentation will not repreſent fit, and plauſible: No ſoule can out of his owne ſtrength, ſecure himſelfe from that ſinne which he moſt deteſteth.

As an hood-winkt man ſees ſome little glimmering of light, but not enough to guide him; ſo did Samſon, who had reaſon enough left him to make triall of Dalilah, by a crafty miſ-information; but not enough vpon that triall, to diſtruſt and hate her; he had not wit enough to deceiue her thriſe, not enough to keep himſelfe from being deceiued by her. It is not ſo great wiſdome to proue them whom wee diſtruſt, as it is folly to truſt them whom we haue found trecherous: Thrice had he ſeen the Philiſtims in her chamber, ready to ſurprize him, vpon her bonds; and yet will needs be a ſlaue to his Traytor. Warning not taken, is a certaine preſage of deſtruction; and if once neglected it receiue pardon, yet thrice is deſperate.

What man would euer play thus with his owne ruine? His harlot bindes him, and calls in her executioners to cut his throat; he riſes to ſaue his own life, and ſuffers them to carry away theirs, in peace. Where is the courage of Samſon? Where his zeale? He that killed the Philiſtims for their clothes; He that ſlew a thouſand of them in the field at once, in this quarrell, now ſuffers them in his chamber vnreuenged. Whence is this? His hands were ſtrong, but his heart was effeminate; his harlot had diuerted his affection. Whoſoeuer ſlackens the reines to his ſenſuall appetite, ſhall ſoone grow vnfit for the calling of God. Samſon hath broke the green withies, the new ropes, the woofe of his haire, and yet ſtill ſuffers himſelfe fettered with thoſe inuiſible bonds of an harlots loue, and can indure her to ſtay, How canſt thou ſay, I loue thee, when thy heart is not with me? thou haſt mocked me theſe three times: Whereas he ſhould rather haue ſaid to her, How canſt thou challenge any loue from me, that haſt thus thriſe ſought my life? Oh canſt thou thinke my mockes a ſufficient reuenge of this trechery? But contrarily he melts at this fire, and by her importunate inſinuations, is wrought againſt himſelfe. Wearineſſe of ſollicitation hath won ſome to thoſe actions, which at the firſt motion they deſpiſed, like as we ſee ſome ſutors are diſpatcht, not for the equity of the cauſe, but the trouble of the proſecution; becauſe it is more eaſie to yeeld, not more reaſonable. It is more ſafe to keepe our ſelues out of the noyſe of ſuggeſtions, then to ſtand vpon our power of deniall.

Who can pitty the loſſe of that ſtrength which was ſo abuſed? who can pity him the loſſe of his locks, which after ſo many warnings can ſleep in the lappe of Dalilah? It is but iuſt that hee ſhould riſe vp from thence ſhauen and feeble; not a Nazarite, ſcarce a man. If his ſtrength had lyen in his haire, it had beene out of himſelfe; it was not therefore in his locks, it was in his conſecration, whereof that haire was a ſigne. If the razor had come ſooner vpon his head, he had ceaſed to be a Nazarite, and the gift of God had at once ceaſed, with the calling of God; not for the want of that excretion but for the want of obedience. If God withdraw his graces, when he is too much prouoked, who can complaine of his mercy? He that ſleeps in ſin, muſt looke to wake in loſſe, and weakneſſe. Could Samſon thinke, Though I tell her, my ſtrength lies in my haire, yet ſhe will not cut it, or though ſhee doe cut my haire, yet ſhall I not loſe my ſtrength that now he riſes and ſhakes himſelfe in hope of his former vigor? Cuſtome of ſucceſſe makes men confident in their ſinnes, and cauſes them to miſtake an arbitrary tenure for a perpetuity.

His eyes were the firſt offenders, which betrayed him to luſt: and now they are firſt pulled out, and he is ledde a blinde captiue to Azzah, where he was firſt captiued to his luſt. The Azzahites, which lately ſaw him not without terror, running lightly away with their gates at midnight, ſee him now in his own perpetuall night, ſtrugling with his chaines: and that he may not want paine, together with his bondage, he muſt grind in his priſon.

As he paſſed the ſtreet, euery boy among the Philiſtims could throw ſtones at him, euery woman could laugh and ſhout at him; and what one Philiſtim doth not ſay, whiles he laſhes him vnto bloud, There it for my brothers or my kinſman, whom thou ſleweſt: Who can looke to run away with a ſin, when Samſon a Nazarite is thus plaged? This great heart could not haue but broken with indignation, if it had not pacified it ſelfe with the conſcience of the iuſt deſert of all this vengeance.

It is better for Samſon to be blinde in priſon, then to abuſe his eyes in Sorek: yea, I may ſafely ſay, he was more blind when he ſaw licentiouſly, then now that he ſees not. He was a greater ſlaue when he ſerued his affections, then now in grinding for the Philiſtims. The loſſe of his eyes ſhewes him his ſinne; neither could he ſee how ill he had done, till he ſaw not.

Euen yet, ſtill the God of mercy lookt vpon the blindneſſe of Samſon, and in theſe fetters enlargeth his heart from the worſe priſon of his ſinne; his haire grew together with his repentance, and his ſtrength with his haire. Gods mercifull humiliations of his owne, are ſometimes ſo ſeuere, that they ſeeme to differ little from deſertions; yet at the worſt, hee loues vs bleeding: and when we haue ſmarted enough, we ſhall feele it.

What thankfull Idolaters were theſe Philiſtims? They could not but know, that their bribes, and their Delilah, had deliuered Samſon to them; and yet they ſacrifice to their Dagon; and, as thoſe that would bee liberall in caſting fauours vpon a ſenſeleſſe Idoll (of whom they could receiue none) they cry out, Our god hath deliuered our enemy into our hands. Where was their Dagon, when a thouſand of his clyents were ſlaine with an Aſſes iaw? There was more ſtrength in that bone, then in al the makers of this god; and yet theſe vaine Pagans ſay, Our god. It is the quality of Superſtition to miſinterpret all euents, and to feede it ſelfe with the conceit of thoſe fauours, which are ſo farre from being done, that their authors neuer were. Why doe not we learne zeale of Idolaters? And if they be ſo forward in acknowledgement of their deliuerances to a falſe deity; how cheerfully ſhould we aſcribe ours to the true? O God, whatſoeuer be the meanes, thou art the Author of all our ſucceſſe: O that men would praiſe the Lord for his goodneſſe, and tell the wonders that he doth for the ſonnes of men!

No Muſician would ſerue for this feaſt, but Samſon; hee muſt now bee their ſport, which was once their terror; that he might want no ſorrow, ſcorn is added to his miſery: Euery wit and hand playes vpon him; Who is not ready to caſt his bone and his ieſt at ſuch a captiue? So as doubtleſſe he wiſht himſelfe no leſſe deafe, then blind, and that his ſoule might haue gone out with his eyes. Oppreſſion is able to make a wiſe man mad; and the greater the courage is, the more painefull the inſultation.

Now Samſon is puniſhed, ſhall the Philiſtims eſcape? If the iudgement of God begin at his owne, what ſhall become of his enemies? This aduantage ſhall Samſon make of their tyranny, that now death is no puniſhment to him, his ſoule ſhall flie forth in this bitterneſſe, without pain, and that his dying reuenge ſhal be no leſſe ſweet to him then the liberty of his former life. Hee could not but feele God mockt through him, and therefore whiles they are ſcoffing, hee prayes, his ſeriouſneſſe hopes to pay them for all thoſe ieſts. If he could haue beene thus earneſt with God in his proſperity, the Philiſtims had wanted this laughing ſtocke. No deuotion is ſo feruent, as that which ariſes frō extremity; O Lord God, I pray thee think vpon me; O God, I beſeech the ſtrengthe me at this time only. Though Samſons haire were ſhorter, yet he knew, Gods hand was not; as one therefore that had yet eyes enow to ſee him that was inuiſible, and whoſe faith was recouered before his ſtrength, he ſues to that God, which was a party in this indignity, for power to reuenge his wrongs, more then his own: It is zeale that moues him and not malice; his renued faith tels him, that he was deſtined to plague the Philiſtims, and reaſon tels him, that his blindneſſe puts him out of the hope of ſuch another opportunity. Knowing therefore, that this play of the Philiſtims muſt end in his death, he recollects all the forces of his ſoule and body, that his death may be a puniſhment in ſtead of a diſport; and that his ſoule may bee more victorious in the parting, then in the animation: and ſo addreſſes himſelfe both to dye, and kill; as one, whoſe ſoule ſhall not feele his owne diſſolution, whiles it ſhall carry ſo many thouſand Philiſtims with it to the pit. All the acts of Samſon are for wonder, not for imitation.

tion: So didſt thou, O bleſſed Sauiour, our better Samſon, conquer in dying, and triumphing vpon the chariot of the Croſſe, didſt leade captiuity captiue: The law, ſinne, death, hell, had neuer beene vanquiſht, but by thy death: All our life, liberty, and glory ſprings out of thy moſt precious bloud.

Michaes Idolatry.

THe mother of Micha hath loſt her ſiluer, and now ſhe fals to curſing: ſhe did afterwards but change the forme of her god; her ſiluer was her god, ere it did put on the faſhion of an image: elſe ſhe had not ſo much curſed to loſe it, if it had not too much poſſeſſed her in the keeping. A carnall heart cannot forgoe that wherein it delights, without impatience; cannot be impatient, without curſes: whereas the man that hath learned to inioy God, & vſe the world, ſmiles at a ſhipwrack, and pitties a theefe, and cannot curſe, but pray.

Micha had ſo little grace, as to ſteale from his mother; and that out of wantonneſſe, not out of neceſſity, for if ſhe had not beene rich, ſo much could not haue beene ſtolne from her; and now, he hath ſo much grace as to reſtore it; her curſes hath fetcht againe her treaſures: He cannot ſo much loue the money, as he fears her imprecations: Wealth ſeemes too deare, bought with a curſe: Though his fingers were falſe, yet his heart was tender. Many that make not conſcience of committing ſinne, yet make conſcience of facing it: It is well for them, that they are but nouices in euill. Thoſe whom cuſtome hath fleſhed in ſinne, can either deny and forſweare, or excuſe and defend it: their ſeared hearts cannot feele the gnawing of any remorſe; and their forehead hath learned to be as impudent, as their heart is ſenſleſſe.

I ſee no argument of any holineſſe in the mother of Micha: her curſes were ſinne to her ſelfe, yet Micha dares not but feare them. I know not whether the cauſleſſe curſe be more worthy of pity, or deriſion, it hurts the author, not his aduerſary: but the deſerued curſes, that fall euen from vnholy mouthes, are worthy to be feared: How much more ſhould a man hold himſelfe blaſted with the iuſt imprecations of the godly? What mettall are thoſe made of, that can applaud themſelues in the bitter curſes which their oppreſſions haue wrung from the poore, and reioyce in theſe ſignes of their proſperity?

Neither yet was Micha more ſtriken with his mothers curſes, then with the conſcience of ſacriledge: ſo ſoone as he findes there was a purpoſe of deuotion in this treaſure, he dares not conceale it, to the preiudice (as he thought) of God, more then of his mother. What ſhall we ſay to the palate of thoſe men, which as they finde no good relliſh but in ſtolne waters; ſo beſt in thoſe, which are ſtoln from the fountaine of God? How ſoone hath the old woman changed her note? Euen now ſhe paſſed an indefinite curſe vpon her ſonne for ſtealing; and now ſhe bleſſes him abſolutely, for reſtoring Bleſſed be my ſonne of the Lord. She hath forgotten the theft, when ſhe ſees the reſtitution: How much more ſhall the God of mercies be more pleaſed with our confeſſion, then prouoked with our ſinne?

I doubt not but this ſiluer, and this ſuperſtition came out of Egypt, together with the mother of Micha. This hiſtory is not ſo late in time, as in place, for the Tribe of Dan was not yet ſetled in that firſt diuiſion of the promiſed land; ſo as this old woman had ſeen both the Idolatry of Egypt, and the golden Calfe in the wildernes; & no doubt contributed ſome of her earerings to that Deity; & after al the plagues which ſhe ſaw inflicted vpon her brethren, for that Idoll of Horeb, and Baal-Peor, ſhee ſtill reſerues a ſecret loue to ſuperſtition, & now ſhewes it. Where miſ-religion hath once poſſeſſed it ſelfe of the heart, it is very hardly cleanſed out; but (like the plauge) it will hang in the very cloathes, & after long lurking, break forth in an vnexpected infection; and old wood is the apteſt to take this fire: After all the ayring in the deſart, Michaes mother will ſmell of Egypt.

It had bin better the ſiluer had bin ſtolne then thus beſtowed, for now they haue ſo imployed it, that it hath ſtolnn away their hearts from God; and yet, while it is molten into an image, they thinke it dedicated to the Lord. If religion might bee iudged according to the intention, there ſhould ſcarce bee any idolatry in the world. This woman loued her ſiluer enough; & if ſhe had not thought this coſtly piety, worth thanks, ſhe knew which way to haue imployed her ſtocke to aduantage: Euen euill actions, haue oft-times good meanings, and thoſe good meanings are anſwered with euill recompences. Many a one beſtowes their coſt, their labour, their blood, and receiues torment in ſtead of thanks.

Behold a ſuperſtitious ſonne of a ſperſticious mother; She makes a god, and hee harbours it; yea, (as the ſtreame is commonly broader then the head) he exceeds his mother in euill. He hath an houſe of gods, an Ephod, Teraphin; and that he might be complete in his deuotion, he makes his ſonne his Prieſt, and feoffes that ſinne vpon his ſonne, which he receiued from his mother. Thoſe ſinnes which nature conuayes not to vs, we haue by imitation. Euery action and geſture of the Parents, is an example to the child; and the mother, as ſhe is more tender ouer her ſonne, ſo by the power of a reciprocall loue, ſhee can worke moſt vpon his inclination. Whence it is, that in the hiſtory of the Iſraelitiſh Kings, the mothers name is commonly noted: and as ciuilly, ſo alſo, morally, The birth followes the belly. Thoſe ſonnes may bleſſe their ſecond birth, that are deliuered from the ſinnes of their education.

Who cannot but thinke how farre Micha ouer-lookt all his fellow Iſraelites, and thought them profane and godleſſe in compariſon of himſelfe? How did he ſecretly clap himſelfe on the breſt, as the man, whoſe happineſſe it was to ingroſſe Religion from all the Tribes of Iſrael, and little can imagine, that the further he runs, the more out of the way. Can an Iſraelite be thus paganiſh: O Micha! how hath ſuperſtition bewitched thee, that thou canſt not ſee rebellion in euery of theſe actions, yea in euery circumſtance, rebellion? What, more gods then one? An houſe of gods, beſide Gods houſe? An Image of ſiluer to the inuiſible God? An Ephod, and no Prieſt? A Prieſt, beſides the family of Leui? A Prieſt of thine owne begetting, of thine owne conſecration? What monſters doth mans imagination produce, when it is forſaken of God? It is well ſeene there is no King in Iſrael. If God had been their King, his lawes had ruled them. If Moſes or Ioſhua had beene their King, their ſword had awed them. If any other, the courſes of Iſrael could not haue beene ſo headleſſe. Wee are beholden to Gouernment for order, for peace, for religion. Where there is no King, euery one will be a King, yea a God to himſelfe. Wee are worthy of nothing but confuſion, if wee bleſſe not God for authority.

It is no maruell if Leuites wandred for maintenance, while there was no King in Iſrael. The tithes & offrings were their due: if theſe had bin paid, none of the holy Tribe needed to ſhift his ſtation. Euen where Royall power ſeconds the claime of the Leuite, the iniuſtice of men ſhortens his right. What ſhould become of the Leuites, if there were no King? And what of the Church, if no Leuites? No King, therfore no Church. How could the impotent childe liue without a Nurſe? Kings ſhall be thy nurſing Fathers, and Queenes thy nurſes, ſaith God. Nothing more argues the diſorder of any Church, or the decay of Religion, then the forced ſtragling of the Leuites. There is hope of growth, when Micha rides to ſeeke a Leuite; but when the Leuite comes to ſeeke a ſeruice of Micha, it is a ſigne of gaſping deuotion.

Micha was no obſcure man; all Mount Ephraim could not but take notice of his domeſticall gods. This Leuite could not but heare of his diſpoſition, of his miſ-deuotion; yet want of maintenance, no leſſe then conſcience, drawes him on, to the danger of idolatrous patronage. Holineſſe is not tyed to any profeſſion. Happy were it for the Church, if the Clergy could be a priuiledge from lewdnes. When need meets with vnconſcionablenes, all conditions are eaſily ſwallowed, of vnlawfull entrances, of wicked executions: Ten ſhekels, and a ſute of apparell, and his diet, are good wages for a needy Leuite. He that could beſtow 1000. ſhekels vpon his puppets, can afford but ten to his Prieſt: ſo hath he at once a rich Idoll, and a beggerly Prieſt. Whoſoeuer affects to ſerue God good cheape, ſhews, that hee makes God but a ſtale to Mammon.

Yet was Micha a kind Patron, though not liberall: He cals the young Leuit his father, and vſes him as his ſonne; and what he wants in meanes, ſupplies in affection. It were happy, if Chriſtians could imitate the loue of Idolaters, towards them which ſerue at the Altar. Micha made a ſhift with the Prieſthood of his owne ſonne; yet that his heart checkes him in it, appeares both by the change, and his contentment in the change: Now I know that the Lord will be good to me, ſeeing I haue a Leuite to my Prieſt: Therefore whileſt his Prieſt was no Leuite, he ſees there was cauſe why God ſhould not bee good to him. If the Leuite had not come to offer his ſeruice, Michaes ſonne had been a lawfull Prieſt. Many times the conſcience runnes away ſmoothly with an vnwarrantable action, and reſts it ſelf vpon thoſe grounds, which afterward it ſees cauſe to condemne. It is a ſure way therefore to informe our ſelues throughly ere we ſettle our choice, that we be not driuen to reuerſe our acts with late ſhame, and vnprofitable repentance.

Now did Micha begin to ſee ſome little glimpſe of his owne errour: He ſaw his Prieſthood faulty; he ſaw not the faults of his Ephod, of his Images, of his gods: and yet (as if he thought all had been well, when hee had amended one) hee ſayes, Now I know, the Lord will be good to me. The carnall heart pleaſes it ſelfe with an outward formality; and ſo delights to flatter it ſelfe, as that it thinks, if one circumſtance be right, nothing can be amiſſe.

Iſrael was at this time extremely corrupted; yet the ſpies of the Danites had taken notice euen of this young Leuite, and are glad to make vſe of his Prieſthood. If they had but gon vp to Shilo, they might haue conſulted with the Arke of God: but worldly minds are not curious in their holy ſeruices: If they haue a god, an Ephod, a Prieſt, it ſuffices them: They had rather enioy a falſe worſhip with eaſe, then to take paines for the true: Thoſe that are curious in their diet, in their purchaſes, in their attire, in their contracts, yet in Gods buſineſſe are very indifferent.

The author of lies ſometimes ſpeakes truth for an aduantage: and from his mouth, this flatring Leuite ſpeakes what he knew would pleaſe, not what he knew would fall out: The euent anſweres his prediction, and now the ſpies magnifie him to their ſellowes: Michaes Idol is a god, and the Leuite is his Oracle. In matter of iudgement, to be guided onely by the euent, is the way to error; Falſhood ſhall be truth, and Satan an Angel of light, if we follow this rule. Euen very coniectures ſometimes happen right; A Prophet, or Dreamer may giue a true ſigne or wonder, and yet himſelfe ſay, Let vs goe after other gods. A ſmall thing can win credit with weake mindes, which where they haue once ſped, cannot diſtruſt.

The idolatrous Danites are ſo beſotted with this ſucceſſe, that they wil rather ſteal, then want the gods of Micha; and becauſe the gods without the Prieſt can do them leſſe ſeruice, then the Prieſt without the gods, therfore they ſteale the Prieſt with the gods. O miſerable Iſraelites! that could thinke that a god, which could bee ſtolne; that could looke for protection frō that, which could not keep it ſelfe from ſtealing; which was won by their theft, not their deuotion! Could they worſhip thoſe Idols more deuoutly then Micha that made them? And if they could not protect their maker from robbery, how ſhall they protect their theeues? If it had been the holy Arke of the true God, how could they think it would bleſſe their violence, or that it would abide to be trāſlated by rapine & extortion. Now their ſuperſtition hath made them mad vnto a god, they muſt haue him; by what meanes they care not, though they offend the true God by ſtealing a falſe. Sacriledge is fit to be the firſt ſeruice of an Idol. The ſpies of Dan had bin curteouſly entertained by Micha: thus they reward his hoſpitalitie. It is no truſting the honeſty of Idolaters: if they haue once caſt off the true God, whom will they reſpect?

It ſeemes, Leuites did not more want maintenance, then Iſrael wanted Leuites: Here was a Tribe of Iſrael without a ſpirituall guide. The withdrawing of due means, is the way to the vtter deſolation of the Church; Rare offerings make cold Altars. There needed ſmall force to draw this Leuite to change his charge; Hold thy peace, and come, and be our father, and Prieſt; Whether is it better, &c. Here is not patience, but ioy: Hee that was won with ten ſhekels, may be loſt with eleuen: When maintenance and honour cals him, he goes vndriuen; and rather ſteales himſelfe away, then is ſtolne. The Leuite had too many gods, to make cõſcience of pleaſing one: There is nothing more inconſtant, then a Leuite that ſeekes nothing but himſelfe.

Thus the wild-fire of Idolatrie, which lay before couched in the priuate ball of Micha, now flies furiouſly thorow all the Tribe of Dan; who (like to theeues that haue carried away plaguy clothes) haue inſenſibly infected themſelues, and their poſteritie, to death. Hereſie and ſuperſtition haue ſmall beginnings, dangerous proceedings, pernicious concluſions. This contagion is like a canker, which at the firſt is ſcarce viſible, afterward it eates away the fleſh, and conſumes the body.

THE ELEVENTH BOOKE.

The Leuites Concubine.

THere no complaint of a publikely diſordered State, where a Leuite is not at one end of it; either as an agent, or a patient. In the Idolatrie of Micha, and the Danites, a Leuite was an actor: In the violent vncleanneſſe of Gibeah, a Leuite ſuffers. No Tribe ſhall ſooner feele the want of gouernment, then that of Leui.

The Law of God allowed the Leuite a wife; humane conniuence, a Concubine; neither did the Iewiſh concubine differ from a wife, but in ſome outward complements; Both might challenge all the true eſſence of marriage; ſo little was the difference, that the father of the concubine is called the father in law to the Leuite. She whom ill cuſtome had of a wife made a concubine, is now by her luſt, of a concubine made an harlot: Her fornication, together with the change of her bed, hath changed her abode. Perhaps her owne conſcience thruſt her out of doores; perhaps the iuſt ſeuerity of her husband: Diſmiſſion was too eaſie a penalty for that which God had ſentenced with death: She that had deſerued to be abhorred of her husband, ſeekes ſhelter from her Father, Why would her father ſuffer his houſe to be defiled with an adultreſſe, tho out of his owne loynes? Why did he not rather ſay, What? Dooſt thou think to find my houſe an harbor for thy ſin? Whileſt thou wert a wife to thine husband, thou wert a daughter to me; Now, thou art neither; thou art not mine; I gaue thee to thy husband; Thou art not thy husbands, thou haſt betrayed his bed: thy filthineſſe hath made thee thine owne, and thine adulterers: Goe, ſeeke thine entertainement, where thou haſt loſt thine honeſty: Thy lewdneſſe hath brought a neceſſity of ſhame vpon thine abettors; how can I countenance thy perſon, and abandon thy ſinne? I had rather be a iuſt man, then a kind Father; Get thee home therefore to thy husband, craue his forgiueneſſe vpon thy knees, redeeme his loue with thy modeſty and obedience; when his heart is once open to thee, my doores ſhall not be ſhut: In the meane time, know, I can be no Father to an harlot. Indulgence of Parents is the refuge of vanity, the bawd of wickedneſſe, the bane of children. How eaſily is that Theefe induced to ſteale, that knowes his Receiuer! When the lawleſneſſe of youth knowes where to fiind pitty and toleration, what miſchiefe can it forbeare?

By how much better this Leuite was, ſo much more iniurious was the Cncubines ſinne. What husband would not haue ſaid; She is gone, let ſhame and griefe goe with her; I ſhall find one no leſſe pleaſing, and more faithfull: Or if it be not too much mercy in me to yeeld to a returne, let her that hath offended, ſeeke me: What more direct way is there to reſolued looſeneſſe, then to let her ſee I cannot want her? The good nature of this Leuite caſt off all theſe tearmes; and now, after foure moneths abſence, ſends him to ſeeke for her, that had runne away from her fidelitie: And now hee hinkes, She ſinned againſt me; perhaps ſhe hath repented; perhaps, ſhame and feare haue with-held her from returning; perhaps ſhe will be more loyall, for her ſinne: If her importunity ſhould win me, halfe the thankes were loſt; but now, my voluntary offer of fauour ſhall oblige her for euer. Loue procures truer ſeruitude then neceſſity: Mercy becomes well the heart of any man, but moſt of a Leuite. He that had helped to offer ſo many ſacrifices to God for the multitude of euery Iſraelites ſinnes, ſaw how proportionable it was, that man ſhould not hold one ſinne vnpardonable: He had ſerued at the Altar to no purpoſe, if he (whoſe trade was to ſue for mercy) had not at all learned to practiſe it.

And if the reflexion of mercy wrought this in a ſeruant, what ſhall we expect from him, whoſe eſſence is mercy? O God, we doe euery day breake the holy couenant of our loue; We proſtitute our ſelues to euery filthy tentation, and then runne, and hide our ſelues in our fathers houſe, the world. If thou didſt not ſeeke vs vp, we ſhould neuer returne; if thy gracious proffer did not preuent vs, we ſhould be vncapable of forgiueneſſe. It were abundant goodneſſe in thee to receiue vs, when we ſhould intreat thee: but lo, thou intreateſt vs that we would receiue thee. How ſhould wee now adore, and imitate thy mercy, ſith there is more reaſon, wee ſhould ſue to each other, then that thou ſhouldeſt ſue to vs; becauſe we may as well offend, as be offended!

I doe not ſee the womans father make any meanes for reconciliation: but when remiſſion came home to his dores, no man could entertaine it more thankfully. The nature of many men is forward to accept, and negligent to ſue for; they can ſpend ſecret wiſhes vpon that, which ſhall coſt them no indeuour.

Great is the power of loue, which can in a ſort vndoe euils paſt, if not for the act, yet for the remembrance. Where true affection was once conceiued, it is eaſily pieced againe, after the ſtrongeſt interruption. Here needs no tedious recapitulation of wrongs, no importunitie of ſute. The vnkindneſſes are forgotten, their loue is renued; and now the Leuite is not a ſtranger, but a ſonne; By how much more willingly hee came, by ſo much more vnwillingly hee is diſmiſſed. The foure moneths abſence of his daughter is anſwered with foure dayes feaſting. Neither was there ſo much ioy in the former wedding feaſt, as in this; becauſe then he deliuered his daughter intire; now deſperate: then he found a ſonne; but now, that ſon hath found his loſt daughter, and he found both. The recouery of any good, is far more pleaſant then the continuance.

Little doe we know what euill is toward vs. Now did this old man, and this reſtored couple promiſe themſelues all ioy and contentment, after this vnkind ſtorme: and ſaid in themſelues, Now we begin to liue. And now this feaſt, which was meant for their new nuptials; proues her funerall. Euen when wee let our ſelues looſeſt to our pleaſures, the hand of God (thought inuiſibly) is writing bitter things againſt vs. Sith wee are not worthy to know; it is wiſdome to ſuſpect the worſt, while it is leaſt ſeene

Sometimes it fals out, that nothing is more iniurious then courteſie. If this old man had thruſt his ſonne and daughter early out of dores, they had auoided this miſchiefe; now, his louing importunity detaines them to their hurt, and his owne repentance. Such contentment doth ſincere affection find in the preſence of thoſe we loue, that death it ſelfe hath no other name, but departing. The greateſt comfort of our life, is the fruition of friendſhip, the diſſolution whereof, is the greateſt paine of death: As all earthly pleaſures, ſo this of loue, is diſtaſted with a neceſſity of leauing. How worthy is that onely loue to take vp our hearts, which is not open to any danger of interruption; which ſhall out-liue the date euen of faith and hope, and is as eternall as that God, and thoſe bleſſed ſpirits whom we loue? If wee hang neuer ſo importunately vpon one anothers ſleeues, and ſhead floods of teares to ſtop their way, yet wee muſt bee gone hence; no occaſion, no force, ſhall then remoue vs from our fathers houſe.

The Leuite is ſtayed beyond his time by importunitie; the motions whereof are boundleſſe, and infinite; one day drawes on another; neither is there any reaſon of this dayes ſtay, which may not ſerue ſtill for to morrow. His reſolution at laſt breakes thorow all thoſe kind hinderances; rather will he venture a benighting, then an vnneceſſary delay. It is a good hearing that the Leuite makes haſte home: An honeſt mans heart is where his calling is; ſuch a one, when he is abroad, is like a fiſh in the aire; whereinto if it leape for recreation, or neceſſity, yet it ſoone returnes to his owne element. This charge, by how much more ſacred it is, ſo much more attendance it expecteth: Euen a day breakes ſquare with the conſcionable.

The Sunne is ready to lodge before them. His ſeruant aduiſes him to ſhorten his iourney, holding it more fit to truſt an early Inne of the Iebuſites, then to the mercy of the night. And if that counſell had been followed, perhaps they, which found Iebuſites in Iſrael, might haue found Iſralites in Iebus. No wiſe man can hold good counſell diſparaged, by the meanneſſe of the Author: If we be glad to receiue any treaſure from our ſeruant, why not precious admonitions?

It was the zeale of this Leuite that ſhut him out of Iebus; we will not lodge in the City of ſtrangers. The Iebuſites were ſtrangers in religion, not ſtrangers enough in their habitation: The Leuite will not receiue common courteſie from thoſe which ware aliens from God, though home-borne in the heart of Iſrael. It is lawfull enough in tearmes of ciuility to deale with infidels; the earth is the Lords, and we may enioy it in the right of the owner, while we proteſt againſt the wrong of the vſurper; yet the leſſe communion with Gods enemies, the more ſafety. If there were another aire to breathe in frō theirs, another earth to tread vpon, they ſhould haue their owne. Thoſe that affect a familiar intirenes with Iebuſites, in conuerſation, in leagues of amitie, in matrimoniall contracts, bewray either too much boldneſſe, or too little conſcience.

He hath no blood of an Iſraelite, that delights to lodge in Iebus: It was the fault of Iſrael, that an heatheniſh Towne ſtood yet in the nauell of the tribes, and that Iebus was no ſooner turned to Ieruſalem: Their lenity and neglect were guiltie of this neighbourhood, that now no man can paſſe from Bethleem Iuda, to Mount Ephraim, but by the City of the Iebuſites. Seaſonable iuſtice might preuent a thouſand euils which afterwards know no remedy but patience.

The way was not long betwixt Iebus and Gibeah: for the Sun was ſtooping when the Leuite was ouer-againſt the firſt, and is but now declined when he comes to the other. How his heart was lightned, when he was entred into an Iſraelitiſh City! and can thinke of nothing, but hoſpitality, reſt, ſecurity. There is no perfume ſo ſweet to a Traueller, as his owne ſmoake. Both expectation and feare doe commonly diſappoint vs; for ſeldome euer doe we enioy the good we looke for, or ſmart with a feared euill. The opore Leuite could haue found but ſuch entertainmeut with the Iebuſites. Whither are the poſteritie of Beniamin degenerated, that their Gibeah ſhould bee no leſſe wicked then populous? The firſt ſigne of a ſetled godleſneſſe, is, that a Leuite is ſuffered to lye without doores. If God had been in any of their houſes, his ſeruant had not been excluded. Where no reſpect is giuen to Gods meſſengers, there can bee no Religion.

Gibeah was a ſecond Sodome; euen there alſo is another Lot: which is therefore ſo much more hoſpitall to ſtrangers, becauſe himſelfe was a ſtranger. The Oaſt as well as the Leuite is of Mount Ephraim: Each man knowes beſt to commiſerate that euill in others, which himſelfe hath paſſed thorow. All that profeſſe the Name of Chriſt, are Countrymen, and yet ſtrangers here below. How cheerfully ſhould we entertaine each other, when we meet in the Gibeah of this inhoſpitall world?

This good old man of Gibeah came home late from his worke in the fields: The Sunne was ſet ere he gaue ouer; and now, ſeeing this man a ſtranger, an Iſraelite, a Leuite, an Ephraimite, and that in his way to the houſe of God, to take vp his lodging in the ſtreet, hee proffers him the kindneſſe of his houſe-roome. Induſtrious ſpirits are the fitteſt receptacles of all good motions; whereas thoſe which giue themſelues to idle and looſe courſes; doe not care ſo much as for themſelues. I heare of but one man at his work in all Gibeah: the reſt were quaffing and reuelling. That one man ends his worke in a charitable entertainment; the other, end their play in a bruitiſh beaſtlineſſe and violence. Theſe villanies had learned both the actions and the language of the Sodomites: One vncleane deuill was the prompter to both: and this honeſt Ephraimite, had learnt of righteous Lot, both to intreat, and to proffer. As a preplexed Mariner, that in a ſtorme muſt caſt away ſome thing, although precious, ſo this good Oaſt, rather will proſtitute his daughter a virgin, together with the concubine, then this prodigious villany ſhould be offered to a man, much more to a man of God.

The deteſtation of a fouler ſinne draw him to ouer-reach in the motion of a leſſer; which if it had ben accepted, how could he haue eſcaped the partnerſhip of their vncleanneſſe, and the guilt of his daughters rauiſhment? No man can waſh his hands of that ſinne, to which his will hath yeelded. Bodily violence may be inoffenſiue in the pacient; voluntary inclination to euil (though out of feare) can neuer be excuſable: yet behold, this wickedneſſe is too little to ſatisfie theſe monſters.

Who would haue looked for ſo extreme abomination from the loynes of Iacob, the wombe of Rachel, the ſoones of Beniamin? Could the very Iebuſites their neighbors bee euer accuſed of ſuch vnnaturall outrage? I am aſhamed to ſay it, Euen the worſt Pagans were Saints to Iſrael. What auails it that they haue the Ark of God in Shilo, while they haue Sodom in their ſtreets? that the law of God is in their fringes, whilſt the deuil is in their hearts? Nothing but hel it ſelfe can yeeld a worſe creature, then a depraued Iſraelite; the very meanes of his reformation, are the fuell of his wickednes. Yet Lot ſped ſo much better in Sodome, then this Ephraimite did in Gibeah, by how much more holy gueſts he entertained. There the gueſts were Angels; here a ſinfull man. There the gueſts ſaued the Oaſt; here the Oaſt could not ſaue the gueſt from brutiſh violence. Thoſe Sodomites were ſtricken with outward blindnes, and defeated: Theſe Beniamites are onely blinded with luſt, and preuaile. The Leuite comes forth, perhaps his coat ſaued his perſon frō this villany; who now thinks himſelfe well, that he may haue leaue to redeeme his owne diſhonour with his concubines. If he had not loued her dearely, he had neuer ſought her ſo farre, after ſo foule a ſinne: Yet now his hate of that vnnatural wickednes ouercame his loue to her; Shee is expoſed to the furious luſt of barbarous Ruffians, and (which he miſdoubteth not) abuſed to death.

Oh the iuſt and euen courſe which the Almighty Iudge of the world holds in all his retributions! This woman had ſhamed the bed of a Leuite, by her former wantonnes; ſhe had thus farre gone ſmoothly away with her ſinne, her father harbored her, her husband forgaue her, her own heart found no cauſe to complain, becauſe ſhe ſmarted not: now, when the world had forgotten her offence, God cals her to reckoning, and puniſhes her with her owne ſinne. She had voluntarily expoſed her ſelfe to luſt; now is expoſed forceably. Adultery was her ſinne, adultery was her death. What ſmiles ſoeuer wickedneſſe caſts vpon the heart, whileſt it ſollicites; it will owe vs a diſpleaſure, and proue it ſelfe a faithfull Debter.

The Leuite looked to find her humbled with this violence, not murdered; and now, indignation moues him to adde horror to the fact: Had not his heart been raiſed vp with an exces of deſire to make the crime as odious, as it was ſinfull, his action could not be excuſed. Thoſe hāds that might not touch a carkas, now carue the corps of his owne dead wife, into morſels, and ſend theſe tokens to all the Tribes of Iſrael; that when they ſhould ſee theſe gobbets of the body murdered, the more they might deteſt the murderers. Himſelfe puts on cruelty to the dead, that he might draw them to a iuſt reuenge of her death. Actions notoriouſly villanous, may iuſtly countenance to extraordinary means of proſecution. Euery Iſraelite hath a part in a Leuits wrong; No Tribe hath not his ſhare in the carcaſſe, and the reuenge.

The deſolation of BENIAMIN.

THeſe morſels could not chuſe but cut the hearts of Iſrael with horror and compaſſion; horror of the act, and compaſſion of the ſufferer: and now their zeale drawes them together, either for ſatisfaction, or reuenge. Who would not haue looked that the hands of Beniamin ſhould haue beene firſt vpon Gibeah; and that they ſhould haue readily ſent the heads of the offenders, for a ſecond ſeruice after the gobbets of the concubine? But now, in ſtead of puniſhing the ſinne, they patronize the actors; and will rather die in reſiſting iuſtice, then liue and proſper in furthering it.

Surely, Iſrael had one Tribe too many: all Beniamin is turned into Gibeah, the ſons not of Beniamin, but of Belial. The abetting of euill, is worſe then the commiſſion; This may bee vpon infirmity, but that muſt be vpon reſolution: Eaſie puniſhment is too much fauour to ſinne: conniuence is much worſe: but the defence of it (and that vnto bloud) is intolerable. Had not theſe men been both wicked and quarrellous, they had not drawne their ſwords in ſo foule a cauſe. Peaceable diſpoſitions are hardly drawne to fight for innocence, yet theſe Beniaminites (as if they were in loue with villany, and out of charity with God) will be the wilfull Champions of lewdneſſe. How can Gibeah repent them of that wickedneſſe, which all Beniamin will make good, in ſpight of their conſciences? Euen where ſinne is ſuppreſſed, it will riſe; but, where it is incouraged, it inſults and tyrannizes.

It was more iuſt that Iſrael ſhould riſe againſt Beniamin, then that Beniamin ſhould riſe for Gibeah, by how much it is better to puniſh offenders, then to ſhelter the offenders from puniſhing. And yet the wickedneſſe of Beniamin, ſped better for the time then the honeſty of Iſrael. Twiſe was the better part foyled by the leſſe, & worſe; The good cauſe was ſent backe with ſhame: the euill returned with victory, and triumph. O God! their hand was for thee in the fight, and thy hand was with them in their fall; They had not fought for thee, but by thee; neither could they haue miſcarried in the fight, if thou hadſt not fought againſt them; Thou art iuſt and holy in both. The cauſe was thine: the ſin in managing of it, was their owne. They fought in any holy quarrell, but with confidence in themſelues: for, as preſuming of victory, they aske of God, not what ſhould be their ſucceſſe, but who ſhould be their Captaine. Number and innocence made them too ſecure. It was iuſt therefore with God, to let them feele, that euen good zeale cannot beare out preſumption; and that victory lies not in the cauſe, but in the God that ownes it.

Who cannot imagine how much the Beniaminites inſulted in their double field, and day? And now beganne to thinke, God was on their ſide: Thoſe ſwords which had beene taught the way into forty thouſand bodies of their brethren, cannot feare a new encounter. Wicked men cannot ſee their proſperity a piece of their curſe, neither can examine their actions, but the euents. Soone after, they ſhall finde what it was to adde bloud vnto filthineſſe, and that the victory of an euill cauſe, is the way to ruine and confuſion.

I ſhould haue feared leſt this double diſcomfiture ſhould haue made Iſrael either diſtruſtfull, or weary of a good cauſe: but ſtill I finde them no leſſe couragious, with more humility. Now they faſt, and weepe, and ſacrifice: Theſe weapons had beene victorious in their firſt aſſault; Beniamin had neuer beene in dangre of pride for ouercomming, if this humiliation of Iſrael had preuented the fight. It is ſeldome ſeene, but that which we do with feare, proſpereth; whereas confidence in vndertaking, layes euen good endeuours in the duſt.

Wickedneſſe could neuer bragge of any long proſperity, nor complaine of the lacke of paiment: Still God is euen with it at the laſt: Now he paies the Beniaminites both that death which they had lent to the Iſraelites, and that wherein they ſtood indebted to their brotherhood of Gibeah: And now that both are met in death, there is as much difference betwixt thoſe Iſraelites, and theſe Beniaminites, as betwixt Martyrs, and Malefactors. To die in a ſin is a fearefull reuenge of giuing patronage to ſin: The ſword conſumes their bodies, another fire their Cities, whatſoeuer became of their ſoules.

Now might Rachel haue iuſtly wept for her children, becauſe they were not; for behold, the men, women, and children of her wicked Tribe, are cut off; only ſome few ſcattered remainders, ran away from this vengeance, and lurked in caues, and rockes, both for feare, and ſhame: There was no difference, but life, betwixt their brethren and them; the earth couered them both: yet vnto them doth the reuenge of Iſrael ſtretch it ſelf, and vowes to deſtroy, if not their perſons, yet their ſucceſſion; as holding them vnworthy to receiue any comfort by that ſex, to which they had been ſo cruell both in act and maintenance. If the Iſraelites had not held marriage and iſſue a very great bleſſing, they had not thus reuenged themſelues of Beniamin: now they accounted the with-holding of their wiues, a puniſhment ſecond to death. The hope of life in our poſterity, is the next contentment to an enioying of life in our ſelues.

They haue ſworne, and now vpon cold bloud repent them. If the oath were not iuſt, why would they take it? and if it were iuſt, why did they recant it? If the act were iuſtifiable, what needed theſe teares? Euen a iuſt oath may be raſhly taken: not only iniuſtice, but temerity of ſwearing ends in lamentation. In our very ciuill actions, it is a weakneſſe to do that which wee would after reuerſe; but in our affaires with God, to checke our ſelues too late, and to ſteepe our oathes in teares, is a dangerous folly. Hee doth not command vs to take voluntary oathes; he commands vs to keepe them. If wee binde our ſelues to inconuenience, wee may iuſtly complaine of our owne fetters: Oathes doe not onely require iuſtice, but iudgement; wiſe deliberation, no leſſe then equity.

Not conſcience of their fact, but commiſeration of their brethren, led them to this publike repentance. O God, why is this come to paſſe, that this day one Tribe of Iſrael ſhall want? Euen the iuſteſt reuenge of men is capable of pitty. Inſultation in the rigour of Iuſtice, argues cruelty; Charitable mindes are grieued to ſee that done, which they would not wiſh vndone; the ſmart of the offender doth not pleaſe them, which yet are throughly diſpleaſed with the ſinne, and haue giuen their hands to puniſh it. God himſelfe takes no pleaſure in the death of a ſinner, yet loues the puniſhment of ſinne: As a good parent whips his childe, yet weepes himſelfe. There is a meaſure in victory and reuenge, if neuer ſo iuſt; which to exceed, leeſes mercy in the ſuit of Iuſtice.

If there were no fault in their ſeuerity, it needed no excuſe; and if there were a fault, it will admit of no excuſe: yet, as if they meant to ſhift off the ſinne, they expoſtulate with God; O Lord God of Iſrael, why is this come to paſſe this day? God gaue them no command of this rigour; yea he twiſe croſt them in the execution, and now, in that which they intreated of God with tears, they challenge him. It is a dangerous iniuſtice, to lay the burthen of our ſins vpon him, which tempteth no man, nor can bee tempted with euill; whiles we ſhould ſo remoue our ſinne, we double it.

A man that knew not the power of an oath, would wonder at this contrariety in the affections of Iſrael: They are ſory for the ſlaughter of Beniamin; and yet they ſlay thoſe that did not helpe them in the ſlaughter. Their oath cals them to more bloud. The exceſſe of their reuenge vpon Beniamin, may not excuſe the men of Gilead: If euer oath might looke for a diſpenſation, this might plead it; Now, thy dare not but kill the men of Iabeſh Gilead, leſt they ſhould haue left vpon themſelues a greater ſin of ſparing then puniſhing. Iabeſh Gilead came not vp to aid Iſrael, therfore all the inhabitants muſt die. To exempt our ſelues (whether out of ſingularity, or ſtubbornnes) from the common actions of the Church, when we are lawfully called to them, is an offence worthy of iudgement: In the maine quarrels of the Church, neutrals are puniſhed. This execution ſhal make amends for the former, of the ſpoil of IabeſhGilead, ſhal the Beniaminites be ſtored with wiues: that no man may think theſe men ſlaine for their daughters, they plainly dye for their ſinne; and theſe Gileadites might not haue liued, without the periury of Iſrael: and now ſith they muſt dye, it is good to make benefit of neceſſity. I inquire not into the rigour of the oath: If their ſolemne vow did not binde them to kill all of both ſexes in Beniamin, why did they not ſpare their virgins? and if it did ſo binde them, why did they ſpare the virgins of Gilead? Fauours muſt be enlarged in all theſe religious reſtrictions; Where breath may be taken in them, it is not fit nor ſafe they ſhould be ſtraitned.

Foure hundred virgins of Gilead haue loſt parents, and brethren, and kindred, and now finde husbands in lieu of them. And inforced marriage was but a miſerable comfort for ſuch a loſſe: like Wards, or captiues, they are taken, and chuſe not. Theſe ſuffice not; their friendly aduerſaries conſult for more vpon worſe conditions. Into what troubleſome and dangerous ſtraits doe men thurſt themſelues, by either vniuſt, or inconſiderate, vowes?

In the midſt of all this common lawleſneſſe of Iſrael, here was conſcience made on both ſides, of matching with Infidels: The Iſraelites can rather be content their danghters ſhould be ſtollen by their owne, then that the daugters of aliens ſhould be giuen them. Theſe men which had not grace enough to deteſt and puniſh the beaſtlineſſe of their Gileadites, yet are not ſo graceleſſe, as to chuſe them wiues of the Heathen. All but Atheiſts (howſouer they let themſelues looſe) yet in ſome things find themſelues reſtrained, & ſhew to others that they haue a conſcience. If there were not much danger, and much ſin in this vnequall yoke, they would neuer haue perſwaded to ſo heauy an inconuenience: Diſparitie of religion in matrimoniall contracts, hath ſo many miſchiefes, that it is worthy to be redeemed with much preiudice.

They which might not giue their owne daughters to Beniamin, yet giue others whiles they giue leaue to ſteale them. Stollen marriages are both vnnaturall, and full of hazard; for loue (whereof marriage is the knot) cannot be forced: this was rather rape then wedlocke. What vnlikeneſſe (perhaps contrariety) of diſpoſition, what auerſenes of affection, may there be in not only a ſudden, but a forceable meeting? If theſe Beniaminites had not taken liberty of giuing themſelues eaſe by diuorcement, they would often haue found leiſure to rue this ſtollen booty. This act may not be drawn to example; and yet, here was a kinde of indefinite conſent: Both deliberation, and good liking, are little enough for a during eſtate, and that which is once done for euer.

Theſe virgins come vp to the feaſt of the Lord, and now, out of the midſt of their daunces are carried to a double captiuity. How many virgins haue loſt themſelues in daunces? and yet this ſport was not immodeſt, Theſe virgins daunced by themſelues, without the company of them which might moue towards vnchaſtity; for if any men had beene with them, they had found ſo many reſcuers, as they had aſſaulters; now, the expoſing of their weake ſex to this iniury, proues their innocence. Our vſuall daunces are guilty of more ſinne; Wanton geſtures, and vnchaſte touches, lookes, motions, draw the heart to folly: The ambuſhes of euill ſpirits carry away many a ſoule from daunces, to a fearefull deſolation.

It is ſuppoſed, that the parents thus robbed of their daughters, will take it heauily: There cannot be a greater croſſe then the miſcarriage of children: They are not onely the liuing goods, but pieces of their parents; that they ſhould therefore be torne from them by violence, is no leſſe iniury, then the diſmembring of their owne bodies.

NAOMI and RVTH.

BEtwixt the raigne of the Iudges, Iſrael was plagued with tyranny; and whiles ſome of them raigned, with famine. Seldome did that rebellious people want ſomewhat to humble them. One rod is not enough for a ſtubborne childe: The famine muſt needs be great, that makes the inhabitants to runne their countrey. The name of home is ſo ſweet, that we cannot leaue it for a little. Behold, that land, which had wont to flow with milke and hony, now abounds with want and penury, and Bethleem, in ſtead of an houſe of bread, is an houſe of famine. A fruitfull land doth God make barren, for the wickednes of them that dwell therein. The earth beares not for it ſelfe, but for vs; God is not angry with it, but with men. For our ſakes, it was firſt curſed to thornes & thiſtles, after that to moiſture, and ſince that (not ſeldome) to drought; and by all theſe, to barrenneſſe. We may not looke alwaies for plenty. It is a wonder whiles there is ſuch ſuperfluity of wickedneſſe, that our earth is no more ſparing of her fruits.

The whole earth is the Lords, and in him ours. It is lawfull for the owners to change their houſes, at pleaſure. Why ſhould we not make free vſe of any part of our owne poſſeſſions ? Elimelech and his familie moue from Bethleem Iuda vnto Moab. Nothing but neceſſity can diſpenſe with a locall relinquiſhing of Gods Church; Not pleaſure, not profit, not curioſity. Thoſe which are famiſhed out, God calls, yea driues from thence. The Creator and poſſeſſor of the earth, hath not confined any man to his neceſſary deſtruction.

It was lawfull for Elimelech to make vſe of Pagans, and Idolaters, for the ſupply of all needfull helps. There cannot bee a better imployment of Moabites, then to be the treaſurers and purueyors of Gods children: Wherfore ſerue they, but to gather for the true owners ? It is too much niceneſſe in them, which forbeare the benefit they might make of the faculties of profane, or hereticall perſons; They conſider not that they haue more right to the good ſuch men can doe, then they that doe it, and challenge that good for their owne.

But I cannot ſee, how it could be lawfull for his Sons to match with the daughters of Moab. Had theſe men heard how far, and vnder how ſolemne an oath their father Abraham ſent for a wife of his owne tribe, for his ſonne Iſaac ? Had they heard the earneſt charge of holy Iſaac, to the ſonne hee bleſſed, Thou ſhalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan ? Had they forgotten the plagues of Iſrael for but a ſhort conuerſation with the Moabitiſh women ? If they plead remoteneſſe from their own people; Did they not remember how for Iacob walked to Padan-Aram ? Was it further from Moab to Bethleem, then frō Bethleem to Moab ? and if the care of themſelues led them from Bethleem to Moab; ſhould not their care of obedience to God, haue as well carried them backe from Moab to Bethleem ? Yet if their wiues would haue left their idolatrie with their maidenhead; the match had beene more ſafe; but now, euen at the laſt farewell. Naomi can ſay of Orpah; that ſhe is returned to her gods. Theſe men haue ſinned in their choice, and it ſpeeds with them accordingly. Where did euer one of theſe vnequall matches proſper ? The two ſonnes of Elimelech are ſwept away childles in the prime of their age, and in ſtead of their ſeed, they leaue their carcaſſes in Moab, their wiues widdowes, their mother childleſſe, and helpleſſe amongſt Infidels, in that age which moſt needed comfort. How miſerable dee we now finde poore Naomi ? which is left deſtitute of her country, her husband, her children, her friends; and turned looſe, and ſolitary to the mercy of the world : yet euen out of theſe hopeles ruines will God raiſe comfort to his ſeruant. The firſt good newes is, that God hath viſited his people with bread; now therefore, ſince her husband and ſonnes were vnrecouerable, ſhe will try to recouer her countrey,and kinred. If we can haue the ſame conditions in Iudah, that we haue in Moab, we are no Iſraelites if wee returne not. Whiles her husband and ſonnes liued,I heare no motion of retiring home; now theſe her earthly ſtayes are remoued,ſhe thinks preſently of remouing to her country;Neither can we ſo hartily thinke of our home aboue,whiles we are furniſhed with theſe worldly contentments;when God ſtrips vs of them,ſtrait waies our minde is homeward.

Shee that came from Bethleem,vnder the protection of an husband,attended with her ſonnes,ſtored with ſubſtance;reſolues now to meaſure all that way alone.Her aduerſity had ſtript her of all, but a good heart; that remaines with her, and beares vp her head,in the deepeſt of her extremity.True Chriſtian fortitude wades thorow all euills;and though we be vp to the chin,yet keepes firme footing againſt the ſtreame: where this is, the ſex is not diſcerned; neither is the quantity of the euill read in the face. How well doth this courage become Iſraelites,when wee are left comfortleſſe in the midſt of the Moab of this world, to reſolue the contempt of all dangers, in the way to our home? A contrarily,nothing doth more miſ-beſeeme a Chriſtian,that his ſpirits ſhould flagge with his eſtate,and that any difficulty ſhould make him deſpair of attaining his beſt ends.

Goodneſſe is of a winning quality whereſoeuer it is;and euen amongſt Infidels,will make it ſelfe friends. The good diſpoſition of Naomi carries away the hearts of her daughters in law with her;ſo as they are ready to forſake their kinred,their countrey, yea their own mother,for a ſtranger,whoſe affinity died with her ſonnes. Thoſe men are worſe then Infidels,and next to Diuels,that hate the vertues of Gods Saints; and could loue their perſons well,if they were not conſcionable.

How earneſtly doe theſe two daughters of Moab plead for their continuance with Naomi; and how hardly is either of them diſſwaded from partaking of the miſery of her ſociety! There are good natures euen among Infidels,and ſuch as for morall diſpoſition,& ciuill reſpects,cannot be exceeded by the beſt Profeſſors. Who can ſuffer his heart to reſt in thoſe qualities, which are common to them that are without God?

Naomi could not be ſo inſenſible of her owne good,as not to know how much comfort ſhee might reape to the ſolitarineſſe,both of her voyage,and her widdow-hood, by the ſociety of theſe two younger widdows,whoſe affections ſhe had ſo well tried; euen very partnerſhip is a mitigation of euils,yet ſo earneſtly doth ſhe diſſwade them from accompanying her, as that ſhee could not haue ſaid more, if ſhee had thought their preſence irkeſome,and burdenous:Good diſpoſitions loue not to pleaſure themſelues with the diſaduantage of others;& had rather be miſerable alone,then to draw in partners to their ſorrow;for the ſight of anothers calamity doth rather double their owne; & if themſelues were free,would affect them with compaſſion: As contrarily, ill minds care not how many companions they haue in miſery, nor how few conſorts in good;If themſelues miſcarry,they could be content all the world were enwrapped with them in the ſame diſtreſſe.

I maruell not that Orpah is by this ſeaſonable importunity perſwaded to returne; from a mother in law,to a mother in nature; from a toyleſome iourney,to reſt; from ſtrangers,to her kinred;from an hopeleſſe condition,to liklihoods of contentment. A little intreaty wil ſerue to moue nature to be good vnto it ſelfe:Euery one is rather a Naomi to his owne ſoule, to perſwade it to ſtay ſtill, and inioy the delights of Moab, rather then to hazard our entertainment in Bethleem. Wil religion allow me this wild liberty of my actions,this looſe mirth,theſe carnall pleaſures? Can I be a Chriſtian, and not liue ſullenly? None but a regenerate heart can chuſe rather to ſuffer aduerſity with Gods people,then to enioy the the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon.

The one ſiſter takes an vnwilling farewell, and moiſtens her laſt kiſſes with many teares: the other cannot be driuen backe, but repells one intreaty with another; Intreat me not to leaue thee;for whither thou goeſt,I will go,where thou dwelleſt,I wil dwel,thy people ſhall be my people,thy God,my God,where thou dieſt,I wil die,and there wil I be buried.

Ruth ſaw ſo much vpon ten yeeres triall, in Naomi, as was more worth then all Moab; and in compariſon wherof, all worldly reſpects deſerued nothing but contempt: The next degree vnto goodneſſe is the loue of goodnes: He is in a faire way to grace, that can value it; If ſhee had not been already a proſelyte, ſhe could not haue ſet this price vpon Naomies vertue. Loue cannot be ſeparated from a deſire of fruition; In vaine had Ruth proteſted her affection to Naomi, if ſhee could haue turned her out to her iourney alone; Loue to the Saints doth not more argue our intereſt in God, then ſociety argues the truth of our loue.

As ſome tight veſſell that holds out againſt wind and water, ſo did Ruth againſt all the powers of a mothers perſwaſions; The impoſſibility of the comfort of marriage in following her (which drew back her ſiſter in law) cannot moue her. She hears her mother, like a modeſt matrō (cōtrary to the faſhion of theſe times) ſay, I am too old to haue an husband, and yet ſhee thinkes not on the contrary, I am too young to want an husband: It ſhould ſeeme, the Moabites had learned this faſhion of Iſrael, to expect the brothers raiſing of ſeed to the deceaſed; The widowhood & age of Naomi cuts off that hope; neither could Ruth then, dreame of a Boaz that might aduance her; It is no loue that cannot make vs willing to be miſerable for thoſe we affect: The holloweſt heart can be content to follow one that proſpereth: Aduerſity is the only fornace of frendſhip: If loue will not abide both fire and anuile, it is but counterfeit; ſo in our loue to God, we doe but crake and vaunt in vaine, if we cannot be willing to ſuffer for him.

But if any motiue might hope to ſpeed, that which was drawne from example, was moſt likely; Behold thy ſiſter in law is gone backe vnto her people and to her gods; returne thou after her. This one art-leſſe perſwaſion hath preuailed more with the world, then all the places of reaſon: How many millions miſcarry vpon this ground, Thus did my fore-fathers; Thus doe the moſt; I am neither the firſt, nor the laſt! Doe any of the rulers? Wee ſtraight thinke that, either ſafe, or pardonable, for which we can pleade a precedent. This good woman hath more warrant for her reſolution, then anothers practice: The mind can neuer be ſteady, whiles it ſtands vpon others feete, and till it be ſetled vpon ſuch grounds of aſſurance, that it will rather lead, then follow; and can ſay with Ioſhua, whatſoeuer become of the world, I and my houſe will ſerue the Lord.

If Naomi had not beene a perſon of eminent note, no knowledge had beene taken at Bethleem of her returne. Pouerty is euer obſcure; and thoſe that haue little, may goe and come without noiſe. If the ſtreetes of Bethleem had not before vſed to ſay, There goes Naomi; they had not now asked, Is not this Naomi? Shee that had loſt all things, but her name, is willing to part with that alſo; Call mee not Noami, but call mee Marah. Her humility cares little for a glorious name, in a deiected eſtate. Many a one would haue ſet faces vpon their want, and in the bitterneſſe of their condition, haue affected the name of beauty. In all formes of good, there are more that care to ſeeme, then to be: Naomi hates this hypocriſie, & ſince God hath humbled her, deſires not to be reſpected of men. Thoſe wich are truely brought down, make it not dainty that the world ſhould think them ſo; but are ready to be the firſt proclaimers of their owne vileneſſe.

Naomi went full out of Bethleem to preuent want; and now ſhee brings that want home with her, which ſhee deſired to auoid. Our blindneſſe oft-times carries vs into the perils we ſeeke to eſchew: God findes it beſt many times to croſſe the likely proiects of his dereſt children; and to multiply thoſe afflictions, which thy feared ſingle.

Ten yeeres haue turned Naomi into Marah: What aſſurance is there of theſe earthly things, whereof one houre may ſtrip vs? What man can ſay of the yeeres to come, Thus I will be? How iuſtly doe we contemne this vncertainty, and looke vp to thoſe riches that cannot but endure, when heauen and earth are diſſolued?

Boaz and Ruth.

WHiles Elimelech ſhifted to Moab to auoid the famine, Baoz abode ſtill at Bethleem, and continued rich, and powerfull: Hee ſtaid at home, and found that, which Elimelech went to ſeek, and miſſed. The iudgement of famine doth not lightly extend it ſelfe to all: Peſtilence and the ſword ſpare none; but dearth commonly plagueth the meaner ſort, and balketh the mighty. When Boaz his ſtore-houſe was empty, his fields were full, and maintained the name of Bethleem. I do not heare Ruth ſtand vpon the termes of her better education, or wealthy Parentage; but now that God hath called her to want, ſhe ſcorns not to lay her hand vnto all homely ſeruices; and thinks it no diſparagement to finde her bread in other mens fields. There is no harder leſſon to a generous minde, nor that more beſeemes it, then either to beare want, or to preuent it; Baſe ſpirits giue themſelues ouer to idleneſſe, and miſery, and becauſe they are croſſed, will ſullenly periſh. That good woman hath not bin for nothing in the ſchoole of patience; ſhe hath learned obedience to a poore ſtep-mother; ſhe was now a widow paſt reach of any danger of correction; beſides, that penury might ſeem to diſpenſe with awe; Euen children do eaſily learne to contemne the pouerty of their own Parents; Yet hath ſhee inured her ſelfe to obedience, that ſhe will not ſo much as goe forth into the field to gleane, without the leaue of her mother in law, and is no leſſe obſequious to Marah, then ſhe was to Naomi, What ſhall we ſay to thoſe children, that in the maine actions of their life, forget they haue naturall Parents? It is a ſhame to ſee, that in meane families want of ſubſtance cauſeth want of duty; and that children ſhould thinke themſelues priuiledged for vnreuerence; becauſe the Parent is poore. Little do we know, when wee goe forth in the morning, what God meanes to do with vs ere night: There is a prouidence that attends on vs in all our waies, and guides vs inſenſibly to his owne ends; That diuine hand leades Ruth blind-folded to the field of Boaz: That ſhe meetes with his reapers and fals vpon his land amongſt all the fields of Bethleem, it was no praiſe to her electiō but the gracious diſpoſition of him, in whom we moue; His thoughts are aboue ours, and doe ſo order our actions, as we, if we had known, ſhould haue wiſhed. No ſooner is ſhee come into the field, but the reapers are friendly to her, no ſooner is Boaz come into his field, but he inuites her to more bounty then ſhe could haue deſired; now God begins to repay into her boſome, her loue and duty to her mother in law. Reuerence and louing reſpects to parents, neuer yet went away vnrecompenced; God will ſurely raiſe vp friends amongſt ſtrangers to thoſe that haue been officious at home. It was worth Ruthe's iourney from Moab, to meet with ſuch a man as Boaz, whom we find thrifty, religious, charitable; Though he were rich, yet he was not carleſſe; he comes into the field to ouerſee his reapers. Euen the beſt eſtate requires carefull managing of the owner; He wanted not officers to take charge of his husbandry, yet he had rather be his owne witneſſe: After all the truſt of others, the Maſters eye feeds the horſe. The Maſter of this great houſhold of the world giues vs an example of this care, whoſe eye is in euery corner of this his large poſſeſſion; Not ciuility only, but religion binds vs to good husbandry; We are all ſtewards; and what account can wee giue to our Maſter, if we neuer looke after our eſtate? I doubt whether Boaz had bin ſo rich, if he had not bin ſo frugall: Yet was he not more thrifty then religious: Hee comes not to his reapers, but with a bleſſing in his mouth: the Lord be with you, as one that knew, if he were with them, and not the Lord; his preſence could auaile nothing. All the buſineſſe of the family ſpeeds the better, for the Maſters benediction; Thoſe affaires are likely to ſucceed, that take their beginning at God.

Charity was well matched with his religion; without which, good words are but hipocrites: no ſooner doth hee heare the name of the Moabiteſſe, but hee ſeconds the kindnes of his reapers; and ſtill he riſes in his fauours: Firſt, ſhe may gleane in his field; then ſhee may drinke of his veſſels; then ſhee ſhall take her meale with his reapers; and part of it, from his owne hand: laſtly, his work-men muſt let fall ſheaues for her gathering. A Small thing helpes the needy: an handfull of gleanings, a lap-full of parched corne, a draught of the ſeruants bottles, a looſe ſheafe was ſuch a fauour to Ruth, as ſhe thought was aboue all recompence: This was not ſeene in the eſtate of Boaz, which yet makes her for the time, happy. If we may refreſh the ſoule of the poore with the very offals of our eſtate, and not hurt our ſelues, woe be to vs if we doe it not. Our barnes ſhall be as full of curſes as of corne, if we grndge the ſcattered eares of our field to the hands of the needy.

How thankfully doth Ruth take theſe ſmall fauours from Boaz? Perhaps ſome rich iewell in Moab would not haue beene ſo welcome. Euen this was a preſage of her better eſtate. Thoſe which ſhall receiue great bleſſings, are euer thankfull for little; and if poore ſoules be ſo thankfull to vs, for but an handfull, or a ſheafe; how ſhould we bee affected to our God for whole fields full, for full barnes, full garners?

Doubtleſſe, Boaz, hauing taken notice of the good nature, dutifull carriage, and the neere affinity of Ruth, could not but purpoſe ſome greater beneficence, and higher reſpects to her: yet now onwards he fits his kindnes to her condition, and giues her that, which to her meanneſſe ſeemed much, though he thought it little. Thus doth the bounty of our God deale with vs: It is not for want of loue, that he giues vs no greater meaſure of grace, but for want of our fitneſſe and capacity: He hath reſerued greater preferments for vs, when it ſhall be ſeaſonable for vs to receiue them.

Ruth returns home wealthy with her Ephah of barley, and thankfully magnifies the liberality of Boaz, her new benefactor: Naomi repayes his beneficence with her bleſſing; Bleſſed be he of the Lord. If the rich can exchange their almes with the poore for bleſſings, they haue no cauſe to complaine of an ill bargaine. Our gifts cannot bee worth their faithfull prayers; therefore it is better to giue then to receiue; becauſe hee that receiues, hath but a worthles almes; he that giues, receiues an vnualuable bleſſing.

I cannot but admire the modeſty and ſilence of theſe two women: Noami had not ſo much as talked of her kindred in Bethleem, nor till now, had ſhe told Ruth that ſhee had a wealthy kinſman; neither had Ruth inquired of her husbands great alliance; but both ſate down meekly with their own wants, and cared not to know any thing elſe, ſaue that themſelues were poore. Humility is euer the way to honour.

It is a diſcourteſie where we are beholden, to alter our dependancy. Like as men of trade take it ill, if cuſtomers which are in their bookes, goe for their wares to another ſhop. Wiſely doth Naomi aduiſe Ruth not to be ſeen in any other field, whileſt the harueſt laſted. The very taking of their fauours is a contentment to thoſe that haue already well deſerued; and it is quarrell enough that their courteſie is not receiued. How ſhall the God of heauen take it, that whiles he giues and proffers large, wee runne to the world, that can afford vs nothing but vanity and vexation?

Thoſe that can leaſt act, are oft-times the beſt to aduiſe. Good old Naomi ſits ſtill at home, & by her counſell payes Ruth all the loue ſhe owes her. The face of that action to which ſhe directs her, is the worſt piece of it; the heart was ſound. Perhaps, the aſſurance, which long tryall had giuen her of the good gouernment, and firme chaſtity of her daughter in law, together with her perſwaſion of the religious grauity of Boaz, made her thinke that deſigne ſafe, which to others had been perilous, if not deſperate. But beſides that, holding Boaz next of blood to Elimelech, ſhe made account of him, as the lawfull husband of Ruth; ſo as there wanted nothing but a challenge, and conſummation. Nothing was abated but ſome outward ſolemnities, which (though expedient for the ſatisfaction of others; yet were not eſſentiall to mariage: And if there were not theſe colours for a proiect ſo ſuſpitious, it would not follow, that the action were warrantable, becauſe Naomies. Why ſhould her example bee more ſafe in this, then in matching her ſonnes with infidels; then in ſending backe Orpah to her fathers gods? If euery act of an holy perſon ſhould be our rule, we ſhould haue crooked liues: Euery action that is reported, is not ſtraight-waies allowed. Our courſes were very vncertaine if God had not giuen vs rules, whereby wee may examine the examples of the beſt Saints, and as well cenſure, as follow them. Let them that ſtumble at the boldneſſe of Ruth, imitate the cotinence of Boaz.

Theſe times were not delicate. This man (though great in Bethleem) laies him downe to reſt vpon a pallat, in the floore of his barne; when he awakes at midnight, no maruell if he were amazed to finde himſelfe accompanied; yet, though his heart were cheared with wine, the place ſolitary, the night ſilent, the perſon comely, the inuitation plauſible, could hee not be drawn to a raſh act of luſt; His appetite could not get the victory of reaſon, though it had wine and opportunity to helpe it. Herein Boaz ſhewed himſelfe a great maſter of his affections, that he was able to reſiſt a fit tentation. It is no thanke to many, that they are free of ſome euils; perhaps they wanted not will, but conuenience. But if a man, when he is fitted with all helps to his ſin, can repell the plaſure of ſin, out of conſcience; this is true fortitude.

In ſtead of touching her as a wanton, he bleſſes her as a father, incourageth her as a friend, promiſeth her as a kinſman, rewards her as a patrone, and ſends her away laden with hopes, and gifts; no leſſe chaſte, more happy then ſhe came. Oh admirable temperance worthy the progenitor of him, in whoſe lips and heart was no guile.

If Boaz had been the next kinſman, the marriage had needed no protraction, but now that his conſcience told him, that Ruth was the right of another, it had not been more ſenſuality then iniuſtice, to haue touched his kinſwoman. It was not any bodily impotency, but honeſty & conſcience that reſtrained Boaz, for the very next night ſhe conceiued by him; that good man wiſhed his marriage bed holy, and durſt not lie downe in the doubt of a ſinne. Many a man is honeſt out of neceſſity, and affects the praiſe of that, which he could not auoyde; but that mans minde is ſtill an adulterer, in the forced continence of his body. No action can giue vs true comfort, but that which we doe out of the grounds of obedience.

Thoſe which are fearefull of ſinning, are carefull not to be thought to ſinne. Boaz, though he knew himſelfe to be cleare, would not haue occaſion of ſuſpition giuen to others; (Let no man know that a woman came into the floore:) A good heart is no leſſe afraid of a ſcandall, then of a ſinne; whereas thoſe that are reſolued not to make any ſcruple of ſinne, deſpiſe others conſtructions, not caring whom they offend, ſo that they may pleaſe themſelues. That Naomi might ſee, her daughter in law was not ſent back in diſlike, ſhe comes whom laden with corne; Ruth hath gleaned more this night, then in halfe the harueſt. The care of Boaz was, that ſhe ſhould not returne to her mother empty: Loue whereſoeuer it is, cannot be niggardly. Wee meaſure the loue of God by his gifts; How ſhall he abide to ſend vs away empty from thoſe treaſures of goodneſſe!

Boaz is reſtleſſe in the proſecution of this ſuit; and hies him from his threſhing-floore, to the gate, and there conuents the neerer kinſman before the Elders of the City: what was it that made Boaz ſo redy to entertaine, ſo forward to vrge this match? Wealth ſhee had none, not ſo much as bread, but what ſhe gleaned out of the field: Friends ſhe had none, and thoſe ſhe had elſewhere, Moabites: Beauty ſhee could not haue much after that ſcorching in her truall, in her gleanings; Himſelfe tells her what drew his hart to her, (All the City of my people doth know that thou art a vertuous woman) Vertue in whomſoeuer it is found, is a great dowry; and where it meets with an heart that knowes how to value it, is accounted greater riches then all that is hid in the bowels of the earth. The corne heape of Boaz was but chaffe to this, and his money, droſſe.

As a man that had learned to ſquare his actions to the law of God, Boaz proceeds legally with his riuall; and tels him of a parcell of Elimelecs land (which, it is like, vpon his remouall to Moab, he had alienated;) which he (as the next kinſman) might haue power to redeeme; yet ſo, as he muſt purchaſe the wife of the deceaſed with the land. Euery kinſman is not a Boaz, the man could liſten to the land, if it had been free from the clog of a neceſſary marriage; but now hee will rather leaue the land, then take the wife, leſt whiles hee ſhould preſerue Elimelecs inheritance, hee ſhould deſtroy his owne;

hall, J.

owne; for the next ſeed, which he ſhould haue by Ruth, ſhould not be his heire, but his deceaſed kinſmans; How knew he whether God might not by that wife, ſend heires enow for both their eſtates? rather had he therefore incurre a manifeſt iniuſtice, then hazard the danger of his inheritance. The Law of God bound him to raiſe vp ſeed to the next in blood; the care of his inheritance draws him to a neglect of his duty, though with infamy and reproch, and now he had rather his face ſhould be ſpit vpon, and his name ſhould be called, The houſe of him whoſe ſhoo was pulled off, then to reſerue the honour of him, that did his brother right, to his owne preiudice. How many are there that doe ſo ouerloue their iſſue, as that they regard neither ſinne nor ſhame in aduancing it? and that will rather indanger their ſoule, then leeſe their name? It is a woſull inheritance that makes men heires of the vengeance of God.

Boaz is glad to take the aduantage of his refuſall; and holds that ſhoo (which was the ſigne of his tenure) more worth then all the land of Elimelec. And whereas other Wiues purchaſe their husbands, with a large dowry, this man purchaſeth his wife at a deare rate, and thinkes his bargaine happy. All the ſubſtance of the earth, is not worth a vertuous and prudent wife; which Boaz doth now ſo reioyce in, as if he this day only began to be wealthy.

Now is Ruth taken into the houſe of Boaz; ſhe that before had ſaid, ſhe was not like one of his maidens, is now become their miſtreſſe. This day ſhe hath gleaned all the fields and barnes of a rich husband; and (that there might be no want in her happines) by a gracious husband ſhe hath gained an happy ſeed; and hath the honour, aboue all the dames of Iſrael, to be the great grand-mother of a King, of Dauid, of the Meſſiah.

Now is Marah turned backe againe to Naomi; and Orpah, if ſhe heare of this in Moab, cannot but enuy at her ſiſters happineſſe. Oh the ſure and bountifull paiments of the Almighty! Who euer came vnder his wing in vaine? Who euer loſt by truſting him? Who euer forſooke the Moab of this world for the true Iſrael, and did not at laſt reioyce in the change?

ANNA and PENINNA.

ALL cuſtomes, where they are once intertained, are not eaſily diſcharged; Polygamy, beſides carnall delight, might now plead age and example: ſo as euen Elkanah (though a Leuite) is tainted with the ſinne of Lamech; Like as faſhions of attire, which at the firſt were diſliked as vncomely, yet when they are once growne common, are taken vp of the graueſt. Yet this ſinne (as then currant with the time) could not make Elkanah not religious. The Houſe of God in Shilo was duely frequented of him; oftentimes, alone, in his ordinary courſe of attendance; with all his males, thrice a yeere; and once a yeere, with all his family. The continuance of an vnknowne ſinne cannot hinder the vprightneſſe of a mans heart with God; as a man may haue a mole vpon his backe, and yet thinke his ſkinne cleare; the leaſt touch of knowledge or wilfulneſſe marres his ſincerity.

He that by vertue of his place was imployed about the ſacrifices of others, would much leſſe neglect his owne. It is a ſhame for him that teaches Gods people that they ſhould not appeare before the Lord empty, to bring no ſacrifice for himſelfe. If Leuites be profane, who ſhould be religious?

It was the faſhion when they ſacrificed, to feaſt; ſo did Elkanah; the day of his deuotion is the day of his triumph; hee makes great cheere for his whole family, euen for that wife which hee loued leſſe. There is nothing more comely then cheerfulneſſe in the ſeruices of God. What is there in all the world, wherewith the heart of man ſhould be ſo lift vp, as with the conſcience of his dutie done to his Maker?

Whiles we doe ſo, God doth to vs, as our glaſſe, ſmile vpon vs, while we ſmile on him.

Loue will be ſeene by entertainment; Peninna and her children ſhall not complaine of want, but Anna ſhall fine her husbands affection in her portion; as his loue to her was double, ſo was her part; She fared not the worſe, becauſe ſhe was childles, no good husband will diſlike his wife for a fault not of the power of her redneſſe: yea, rather, that which might ſeeme to loſe the loue of her husband, winnes it, her barrenneſſe. The good nature of Elkanah laboured by his deare reſpects, to recompence this affliction; that ſo ſhe might finde no leſſe contentment in the fruit of his hearty loue, then ſhe had grieſe from her owne fruitleſneſſe. It is the property of true mercy, to be moſt fauourable to the weakeſt; Thus doth the gracious ſpouſe of the Chriſtian ſoule pitty the barrenneſſe of his ſeruants. O Sauiour, wee ſhould finde thee ſo indulgent to vs, if we did not complaine of our own vnworthineſſe? Peninna may haue the more children, but barren Anna hath the moſt loue. How much rather could Elkanah haue wiſhed Peninna barren, and Anna fruitfull? but if ſhe ſhould haue had both iſſue, and loue, ſhe had bin proud, and her riuall deſpiſed. God knowes how to diſperſe his fauours ſo, that euery one may haue cauſe both of thankfulneſſe, and humilation; whiles there is no one that hath all, no one but hath ſome. If enuy and contempt were not thus equally tempered, ſome would be ouer-hauty, and other too miſerable; But now, euery man ſees that in himſelf which is worthy of contempt, & matter of emulation in others; and contrarily, ſees what to pity, and diſlike in the moſt eminent, and what to applaud in himſelfe, and out of this contrariety, ariſes a ſweet meane of contentation.

The loue of Elkanah is ſo vnable to free Anna from the wrongs of her riuall, that it procures them rather. The vnfruitfulneſſe of Anna had neuer with ſo much deſpight beene laid in her diſh, if her husbands heart had beene as barren of loue to her. Enuy, though it take aduantage of our weakneſſes, yet is euer raiſed vpon ſome grounds of happineſſe, in them whom it emulates, it is euer an ill effect of a good cauſe: If Aels ſacrifice had not beene accepted, and if the acceptation of his ſacrifice had not beene a bleſſing, no enuy had followed vpon it.

There is no euill of another, wherin it is fit to reioyce, but his enuy, and this is worthy of our ioy and thankfulneſſe, becauſe it ſhewes vs the price of that good, which we had, and valued not. The malignity of enuy is thus well anſwered, when it is made the euill cauſe of a good effect to vs, when God and our ſoules may gaine by anothers ſin. I doe not finde that Anna inſulted vpon Peninna, for the greater meaſure of her husbands loue, as Peninna did vpon her, for her fruitleſneſſe. Thoſe that are truely gracious, know how to receiue the bleſſings of God, without contempt of them that want; and haue learned to be thankfull, without ouerlineſſe.

Enuy, when it is once conceiued in a malicious heart, is like fire in billets of Iuniper, which (they ſay) continues more yeeres then one. Euery yeere was Anna thus vexed with her emulous partner; and troubled, both in her prayers and meales: Amidſt all their feaſtings, ſhe fed on nothing but her teares. Some diſpoſitions are leſſe ſenſible, and more carleſſe of the deſpight and iniuries of others, and can turne ouer vnkinde vſages, with contempt. By how much more tender the heart is, ſo much more deeply is it euer affected with diſcourteſies; As waxe receiues and retaines that impreſſion, which in the hard clay cannot be ſeene; or, as the eye feeles that more, which the skin of the eye-lid could not complaine of: Yet the husband of Anna (as one that knew his duty) labours by his loue, to comfort her againſt theſe diſcontentments, Why weepeſt thou? Am I not better to thee then ten ſons? It is the weakeneſſe of good natures, to giue ſo much aduantage to an enemy; what would malice rather haue, then the vexation of them whom it perſecutes? Wee cannot better pleaſe an aduerſary, then by hurting our ſelues: This is no other, then to humour enuy, to ſerue the turne of thoſe that maligne vs; and to draw on that malice, whereof we are weary; whereas careleſneſſe puts ill will out of countenance; and makes it with-draw it ſelfe in a rage, as that which doth but ſhame the author, without the hurt of the patient. In cauſleſſe wrongs, the beſt remedy is contempt.

She that could not finde comfort in the louing perſwaſions of her husband, ſeeks it in her prayers, ſhe riſes vp hungry from the feaſt, and hies her to the Temple, there ſhe powres out her teares, and ſupplications. Whatſoeuer the complaint be, here is the remedy: There is one vniuerſall receit for all euils, prayer: when all helpes faile vs, this remaines, and whiles we haue an heart, comforts it.

Here was not more bitterneſſe in the ſoule of Anna, then feruency; ſhee did not onely weepe and pray, but vow vnto God. If God will giue her a ſonne, ſhe will giue her ſonne to God backe againe: Euen nature it ſelfe had conſecrated her ſonne to God; for he could not but be borne a Leuite: But if his birth make him a Leuite, her vow ſhall make him a Nazarite, and dedicate his minority to the Taberncale. The way to obtaine any benefit, is to deuote it in our hearts, to the glory of that God, of whom we aske it: By this meanes ſhall God both pleaſure his ſeruant, and honor himſelfe; whereas, if the ſcope of our deſires be carnall, we may be ſure either to faile of our ſuit, or of a bleſſing.

Ely and Anna.

Old Ely ſits on a ſtoole, by one of the poſts of the Tabernacle: Where ſhould the Prieſts of God be but in the Temple? whether for action or for ouer-ſight: Their very preſence keeps Gods Houſe in order, and the preſence of God keepes their hearts in order.

It is oft found, that thoſe which are themſelues conſcionable, are too forward to the cenſuring of others: Good Ely, becauſe he markes the lips of Anna to moue without noiſe, chides her as drunken, and vncharitably miſconſtrues her deuotion. It was a weake ground whereon to build ſo heauy a ſentence. If ſhe had ſpoken too loud, and incomposedly, he might haue had ſome iuſt colour for this conceit; but now to accuſe her ſilence (notwithſtanding all the teares which hee ſaw) of drunkenneſſe, it was a zealous breath of charity.

Some ſpirit would haue been enraged with ſo raſh a cenſure: When anger meets with griefe, both turne into fury: But this good woman had been inured to reproches, and beſides, did well ſee the reproofe aroſe from miſpriſion, and the miſpriſion from zeale; and therefore anſwers meekely, as one that had rather ſatisfie, then expoſtulate; Nay, my Lord but I am a woman troubled in ſpirit. Ely may now learne charitie of Anna: If ſhe had bin in that diſtemper, whereof he accuſed her, his iuſt repoofe had not bin ſo eaſily digeſted. Guiltines is commonlie clamorous, & impatient, whereas innocence is ſilent, and careleſſe of miſ-reports. It is naturall vnto all men to wipe off from their name all aſperſions of euill, but none doe it with ſuch violence, as they which are faultie. It is a ſigne the horſe is galled, that ſtirs too much when he is touched.

She that was cenſured for drunken, cenſures drunkenneſſe more deeplie then her reprouer; Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial. The drunkards ſtile begins in lawleſnes, proceeds in vnprofitablenes, ends in miſery; and all ſhut vp in the denomination of this pedegree, A ſonne of Belial.

If Anna had bin tainted with this ſin, ſhe would haue denied it with more fauour, and haue diſclaimed it with an extenuation; What if I ſhould haue bin merry with wine? yet I might be deuout: If I ſhould haue ouer-ioyed in my ſacrifice to God, one cup of exceſſe had not beene ſo hainous: now her freedome is ſeen in her ſeueritie. Thoſe which haue cleare hearts from any ſinne, proſecute it with rigour; whereas the guilty are euer partiall: their conſcience holds their hands, and tels them that they beat themſelues, whiles they puniſh others.

Now Ely ſees his errour, and recants it; and to make amends for his raſh cenſure, prayes for her. Euen the beſt may erre, but not perſiſt in it: When good natures haue offended, they are vnquiet, till they haue haſtned ſatisfaction: This was within his office, to pray for the diſtreſſed: Wherefore ſerues the Prieſt, but to ſacrifice for the people: and the beſt ſacrifices are the praiers of faith.

She that beganne her prayers with faſting, and heauineſſe, riſes vp from them with cheerefulneſſe and repaſt. It cannot bee ſpoken, how much eaſe and ioy the heart of man findes in hauing vnloaded his cares, and powred out his ſupplications into the eares of God; ſince it is well aſſured, that the ſuit which is faithfully asked, is already granted in heauen. The conſcience may well reſt, when it tels vs, that we haue neglected no meanes of redreſſing our affliction; for then it may reſolue to looke either for amendment, or patience.

The ſacrifice is ended, and now Elkanah and his family riſe vp early to returne vnto Ramah: but they dare not ſet forward, till they haue worſhipped before the Lord. That iourney cannot hope to proſper, that takes not God with it. The way to receiue bleſſings at home, is to be deuout at the Temple.

She that before conceiued faith in her heart, now conceiues a ſonne in her wombe: God will rather worke miracles, then faithfull prayers ſhall returne empty: I do not finde that Peninna asked any ſonne of God, yet ſhe had ſtore; Anna begged hard for this one, and could not till now obtaine him. They which are deareſt to God, doe oftimes with great difficulty worke out thoſe bleſſings, which fall into the mouthes of the careleſſe. That wiſe Diſpoſer of all things knowes it fit to hold vs ſhort of thoſe fauours which we ſue for; whether for the triall of our patience, or the exerciſe of our faith, or the increaſe of our importunity, or the doubling of our obligation.

Thoſe children are moſt like to proue bleſſings, which the parents haue begged of God; and which are no leſſe the fruit of our ſupplications, then of our body. As this childe was the ſonne of his mothers praier; and was conſecrated to God ere his poſſibility of being; ſo now himſelfe ſhall know, both how he came, and whereto he was ordained; and leſt he ſhould forget it, his very name ſhall teach him both; (She called his name Samuel. He cannot ſo much as heare himſelfe named, but he muſt needs remember both the extraordinary mercy of God, in giuing him to a barren mother; and the vow of his mother, in reſtoring him backe to God by her zealous dedication; and by both of them learne holineſſe and obedience. There is no neceſſity of ſignificant names; but we cannot haue too many monitors to put vs in mind of our duty.

It is wont to be the fathers priuiledge to name his childe; but becauſe this was his mothers ſon, begotten more by her praiers, then the ſeed of Elkana. it was but reaſon, ſhe ſhould haue the chiefe hand both in his name, and diſpoſing. It had beene indeed the power of Elkanah, to haue changed both his name, and profeſſion, and to abrogate the vow of his wife; that wiues might know, they were not their own; and that the rib might learne to know the head: But husbands ſhall abuſe their authority, if they ſhall wilfully croſſe the holy purpoſes and religious endeuors of their yoke-fellowes. How much more fit is it for them to cheriſh all good deſires in the weaker veſſels; and as we vſe, when we carry a ſmall light in a winde, to hide it with our lap, or hand, that it may not goe out. If the wife be a Vine, the husband ſhould be an Elme to vphold her in all worthy enterpriſes; elſe ſhe fals to the ground, and proues fruitleſſe.

The yeere is now come about; and Elkanah cals his family to their holy iourney, to goe vp to Ieruſalem, for the anniuerſary ſolemnity of their ſacrifice: Annaes heart is with them, but ſhe hath a good excuſe to ſtay at home, the charge of her Samuel: her ſucceſſe in the Temple, keepes her haply from the Temple; that her deuotion may be doubled, becauſe it was reſpited. God knowes how to diſpence with neceſſities; but if we ſuffer idle and needleſſe occaſions to hold vs from the Tabernacle of God, our hearts are but hollow to Religion.

Now at laſt, when the child was weaned from her hand, ſhee goes vp, and payes her vow, and with it, payes the intereſt of her intermiſſion. Neuer did Anna goe vp with ſo glad an heart to Shilo, as now that ſhee carries God this reaſonable Preſent, which himſelfe gaue to her, and ſhe vowed to him; accompanied with the bounty of other ſacrifiſes, more in number and meaſure, then the law of God required of her; and all this is too little for her God, that ſo mercifully remembred her affliction, and mariculouſly remedied it. Thoſe hearts which are truely thankfull, do no leſſe reioyce in their repayment, then in their receit; and doe as much ſtudy, how to ſhew their humble and feruent affections, for what they haue, as how to compaſſe fauours when they want them; Their debt is their burden, which when they haue diſcharged, they are at eaſe.

If Anna had repented of her vow, and not preſented her ſonne to the Tabernacle, Ely could not haue challenged him; He had only ſeene her lips ſtirre, not hearing the promiſe of her heart. It was enough, that her owne ſoule knew her vow, and God which was greater then it. The obligation of a ſecret vow is no leſſe, then if it had ten thouſand witneſſes.

Old Ely could not chooſe but much reioyce to ſee this fruit of thoſe lips, which he thought moued with wine; & this good proofe, both of the mercifull audience of God, and the thankfull fidelity of his Handmaide; this ſight calls him downe to his knees (He worſhipped the Lord.) Wee are vnprofitable witneſſes of the mercies of God and the graces of men, if wee doe not glorifie him for others ſakes, no leſſe then for our owne.

Ely and Anna grew no better acquainted; neither had he ſo much cauſe to praiſe God for her, as ſhe afterwards for him. For if her owne prayers obtained her firſt child; his bleſſing inriched her with fiue more. If ſhe had not giuen her firſt ſonne to God, ere ſhe had him; I doubt whether ſhee had not beene euer barren; or if ſhee had kept her Samuel at home, whether euer ſhee had conceiued againe; now that piety which ſtripped her of her onely childe for the ſeruice of her God, hath multiplyed the fruit of her wombe, and gaue her fiue for that one, which was ſtill no leſſe hers, becauſe he was Gods. There is no ſo certaine way of increaſe, as to lend, or giue vnto the Owner of all things.

Ely and his Sonnes.

IF the conueyance of grace were naturall, holy Parents would not be ſo ill ſuted with children. What good man would not rather wiſh his loins dry, then fruitfull of wickedneſſe? Now, we can neither traduce goodneſſe, nor chooſe but traduce ſinne. If vertue was as well entailed vpon vs, as ſinne, one might ſerue to checke the other in our children; but now ſince grace is deriued from heauen on whomſoeuer it pleaſes the Giuer, and that euill which ours receiue hereditarily from vs, is multiplied by their own corruption, it can be no wõder that good men haue ill children, it is rather a wõder that any children are not euill. The ſonnes of Ely are as lewd, as himſelfe was holy. If the goodnes of examples, precepts, education, profeſſion, could haue been preſeruatiues from extremity of ſinne, theſe ſons of an holy Father had not been wicked; now, neither parentage, nor breeding, not Prieſthood can keepe the ſonnes of Ely from the ſons of Belial. If our children be good, let vs thanke God for it; this was more then wee could giue them; if euill, they may thanke vs, and themſelues vs, for their birth-ſinne; themſelues, for the improuement of it to that height of wickednes.

If they had not beene ſons of Ely, yet being Prieſts of God, who would not haue hoped their very calling ſhould haue infuſed ſome holineſſe into them? But now euen their white Ephod couers foule ſins; yea rather, if they which ſerue at the Altar degenerate, their wickedneſſe is ſo much more aboue others, as their place is holier. A wicked Prieſt is the worſt creature vpon earth. Who are Diuels, but they which were once Angels of light? Who can ſtumble at the ſins of the Euangelicall Leuites, that ſees ſuch impurity euen before the Arke of God ? That God which promiſed to bee the Leuites portion, had ſet forth the portion of his Miniſters; hee will feaſt them at his own Altar; The breſt and the right ſhoulder of the peace-offring was their morſel: theſe bold and couetous Prieſts vvill rather haue the fleſh-hooke their arbiter, then God; vvhatſoeuer thoſe three teeth faſten vpon, ſhall be for their tooth; they vvere weary of one ioynt, and now their delicacy affects variety; God is not worthy to craue for theſe men, but their owne hands; And this they doe not receiue; but take; and take violently, vnſeaſonably; It had beene fit God ſhould be firſt ſerued, their preſumption will not ſtay his leiſure; ere the fat bee burned, ere the fleſh bee boyled, they ſnatch more then their ſhare from the Altar; as if the God of heauen ſhould wait on their palate; as if the Iſraelites had come thither to ſacrifice to their bellies; and (as commonly a wanton tooth is the harbinger to luxurious wantonnes) they are no ſooner fed, then they neigh after the Dames of Iſrael; holy women aſſemble to the doore of the Tabernacle; theſe varlets tempt them to luſt, that came thither for deuotion; they had wiues of their owne, yet their vnbridled deſires roue after ſtrangers, and feare not to pollute euen that holy place with abominable filthineſſe. O ſinnes, too ſhamefull for men; much more for the ſpirituall guides of Iſrael! Hee that makes himſelfe a ſeruant to his tooth, ſhall eaſily become a ſlaue to all inordinate affections. That Altar which expiated other mens ſinnes, added to the ſinnes of the ſacrificers; Doubtleſſe many a ſoule was the clener for the bloud of the ſacrifices, which they ſhed; whiles their own were more impure; And as the Altar cannot ſanctifie the Prieſt, ſo the vncleanneſſe of the Miniſter cannot pollute the offring; becauſe the vertue thereof is not in the agent, but in the inſtitution; in the repreſentation his ſinne is his owne, the comfort of the Sacrament is from God; Our Clergy is no charter for heauen; Euen thoſe, whoſe trade is deuotion, may at once ſhew the way to heauen by their tongue, and by their foot lead the way to hell. It is neither a coule, nor an Ephod that can priuiledge the ſoule.

The ſinne of theſe men was worthy of contempt, yea perhaps their perſons; but for the people therefore, to abhorre the offerings of the Lord, was to adde their euill vnto the Prieſts; and to offend God, becauſe he was offended; There can no offence be iuſtly taken, euen at men; much leſſe at God for the ſake of men: No mans ſinnes ſhould bring the ſeruice of God into diſlike, this is to make holy things guilty of our profanenes. It is a dangerous ignorance, not to diſtinguiſh bewixt the worke, and the inſtrument; whereupon it oft comes to paſſe, that we fall out with God, becauſe we finde cauſe of offence from men; and giue God iuſt cauſe to abhorre vs, becauſe we abhorre his ſeruice vniuſtly. Although it be true (of great men eſpecially) that they are the laſt that know the euils of their own houſe, yet either it could not be, when all Iſrael rung of the lewdneſſe of Elies ſonnes, that he only ſhould not know it, or if he knew it not, his ignorance cannot be excuſed; for a ſeaſonable reſtraint might haue preuented this extremity of debauchedneſſe. Complaints are long muttered of the great, ere they dare breake forth to open conteſtation: publike accuſations of authority argues intolerable extremities of euill; nothing but age can plead for Ely, that he was not the firſt accuſer of his ſons: now when their enormities came to be the voice of the multitude, he muſt heare it perforce; and doubtleſſe he heard it with griefe enough, but not with anger enough: hee that was the Iudge of Iſrael, ſhould haue vnpartially iudged his owne fleſh and bloud; neuer could he haue offered a more pleaſing ſacrifice, then the depraued bloud of ſo wicked ſonnes. In vaine doe we rebuke thoſe ſins abroad, which we tolerate at home. That man makes himſelfe but ridiculous, that leauing his owne houſe on fire, runs to quench his neighbours.

I heard Ely ſharpe enough to Anna, vpon but a ſuſpicion of ſinne; and now, how milde I finde him to the notorious crimes of his owne: Why doe you ſo, my ſonnes? It is no good report; my ſonnes, doe no more ſo: The caſe is altered with the perſons. If nature may be allowed to ſpeake in iudgement, and to make difference, not of ſinnes, but offenders, the ſentence muſt needs ſauour of partiality, Had theſe men but ſome little ſlackened their duty, or heedleſly omitted ſome rite of the ſacrifice, this cenſure had not

not beene vnfit; but to puniſh the thefts, rapines, ſacriledges, adulteries, inceſts of his ſonnes, with Why doe yee ſo, was no other then to ſhaue that head, which had deſerued cutting off. As it is with ill humours, that a weake doſe doth but ſtirre, and anger them, not purge them out; ſo it fareth with ſinnes: An eaſie reproofe doth but incourage wickedneſſe, and makes it thinke it ſelfe ſo ſlight, as that cenſure importeth: A vehement rebuke to a capitall euill, is but like a ſtrong ſhowre to a ripe field, which layes that corne which were worthy of a ſickle. It is a breach of iuſtice, not to proportionate the puniſhment to the offence: To whip a man for a murder, or to puniſh the purſe for inceſt, or to burne treaſon in the hand, or to award the ſtockes to burglary, is to patronize euill, in ſtead of auenging it: Of the two extremes, rigour is more ſafe for the publike weale, becauſe the ouer-puniſhing of one offender frights many from ſinning. It is better to liue in a common wealth where nothing is lawfull, then where euery thing.

Iudulgent parents are cruell to themſelues, and their poſterity. Ely could not haue deuiſed which way to haue plagued himſelfe, and his houſe ſo much, as by his kindnes to his childrens ſinnes: What variety of iudgements doth he now heare of from the meſſenger of God? First, becauſe his old age (which vſes to be ſubiect to choller) inclined now to miſ-fauour his ſonnes; therefore there ſhall not bee an old man left of his houſe for euer: and becauſe it vexed him not enough to ſee his ſonnes enemies to God in their profeſſion, therefore he ſhall ſee his enemy in the habitation of the Lord; and becauſe himſelfe forbore to take vengeance of his ſons, and eſteemed their life aboue the glory of his Maſter, therefore God will reuenge himſelfe, by killing them both in one day; and becauſe he abuſed his ſoueraignty by conniuence at ſinne, therefore ſhall his houſe be ſtripped of this honour, and ſee it tranſlated to another; and laſtly, becauſe he ſuffered his ſonnes to pleaſe their owne wanton appetite, in taking meat off from Gods trencher, therefore, thoſe which remaine of his houſe, ſhall come to his ſucceſſors, to beg a piece of ſiluer, and a morſell of bread: in a word, becauſe he was partiall to his ſonnes, God ſhall execute all this ſeuerely vpon him and them. I doe not read of any fault Ely had, but indulgence; and which of the notorious offenders were plagued more. Parents need no other meanes to make them miſerable, then ſparing the rod.

Who ſhould be the bearer of theſe fearefull tidings to Ely, but young Samuel, whom himſelf had trained vp? He was now grown paſt his mothers coats, fit for the Meſſage of God. Old Ely rebuked not his young ſons, therefore young Samuel is ſent to rebuke him. I maruell not whiles the Prieſthood was ſo corrupted, if the Word of God were precious, if there were publike viſion; It is not the manner of God to grace the vnworthy; The ordinary miniſtration in the Temple was too much honor for thoſe that robbed the Altar, thogh they had no extraordinary reuelations. Hereupon it was, that God lets old Ely ſleepe (who ſlept in his ſinne) and awakes Samuel, to tell him what he would do with his maſter. He which was wont to be the mouth of God to the people, muſt now receiue the Meſſage of God, from the mouth of another; As great perſons will not ſpeake to thoſe, with whom they are highly offended, but ſend them their checks by others.

The lights of the Temple were now dim, and almoſt ready to giue place to the morning, when God called Samuel; to ſignifie perhaps, that thoſe which ſhould haue beene the lights of Iſrael, burned no leſſe dimly, and were neere their going out, and ſhould be ſucceeded with one, ſo much more lightſome then they, as the Sunne was more bright then the Lampes: God had good leaſure to haue deliuered this meſſage by day, but he meant to make vſe of Samnels miſtaking; and therefore ſo ſpeaks, that Ely may be asked for an anſwer, & perceiue himſelfe both omitted, and cenſured. He that meant to vſe Samuels voice to Ely, imitates the voice of Ely to Samuel; Samuel had ſo accuſtomed himſelfe to obedience, and to anſwer the call of Ely, that lying in the further cels of the Leuites, hee is eaſily raiſed from his ſleep; and euen in the night runnes for his meſſage to him, who was rather to receiue it from him: Thrice is the old man diſquieted with the diligence of his ſeruant; and, though viſions were rare in his daies, yet is

he not ſo vnacquainted with God, as not to attribute that voice to him, which himſelfe heard not. Wherefore like a better Tutor then a parent, hee teaches Samuel what he ſhall anſwer, Speake Lord, for thy ſeruant heareth.

It might haue pleaſed God at the firſt call to haue deliuered his maſſage to Samuel, not expecting the anſwer of a nouice vnſeene in the viſions of a God, yet doth hee rather deferre it till the fourth ſummons, and will not ſpeake till Samuel confeſſed his audience. God loues euer to prepare his ſeruants for his imployments, and will not commit his errands, but to thoſe, whom he addreſſed both by wonder, and attention, and humility.

Ely knew well the gracious faſhion of God, that where he tended a fauour, prorogation could be no hinderance, & therefore after the call of God thrice anſwered with ſilence, he inſtructs Samuel to be ready for the fourth: If Samuels ſilence had been wilfull; I doubt whether hee had been againe ſollicited; now God doth both pitty his error, and requite his diligence by redoubling his name at the laſt.

Samuel had now many yeeres miniſtred before the Lord, but neuer till now heard his voyce; and now heares it with much terror, for the firſt word that hee heares God ſpeake, is threatning, and that of vengeance to his maſter. What were theſe menaces, but ſo many premonitions to himſelfe that ſhould ſucceed Ely? God begins early to ſeaſon their hearts with feare, whom hee meanes to make eminent inſtruments of his glory. It is his mercy to make vs witneſſes of the iudgements of others; that we may be forewarned, ere we haue the occaſions of ſinning.

I doe not heare God bid Samuel deliuer this meſſage to Ely; Hee that was but now made a Prophet, knowes, that the errands of God intend not ſilence; and that God would not haue ſpoken to him of another, if he had meant the newes ſhould be reſerued to himſelfe: Neither yet did he run with open mouth vnto Ely, to tell him this viſion, vnasked. No wiſe man will bee haſty to bring ill tidings to the great; rather doth he ſtay till the importunity of his Maſter ſhould wring it from his vnwillingnes; and then as his concealement ſhewed his loue, ſo his full relation ſhall approue his fidelity. If the heart of Ely had not told him this newes, before God told it Samuel, he had nener been ſo inſtant with Samuel, not to conceale it; His conſcience did well preſage that it concerned himſelfe; Guiltines needs no Prophet to aſſuer it of puniſhment. The mind that is troubled, proiecteth terrible things; and though it cannot ſingle out the iudgement allotted to it, yet it is in a confuſed expectation of ſome grieuous euill. Surely, Ely could not thinke it worſe then it was; The ſentence was fearefull, and ſuch as I wonder, the neck, or the heart of old Ely could hold out the report of; That God ſweares he will iudge Elies houſe; and that with beggery, with death, with deſolation, & that the wickednes of his houſe ſhal not be purged with ſacrifice, or offrings for euer: And yet this which euery Iſraelites eare ſhould tingle to heare of, when it ſhould be done, old Ely heares wtih an vnmoued patience, and humble ſubmiſſion, It is the Lord, let him doe what ſeemeth him good. Oh admirable faith, and more then humane conſtancy and reſolution, worthy of the aged preſident of Shiloh, worthy of an heart ſacrificed to that God, whoſe iuſtice had refuſed to expiate his ſinne by ſacrifice! If Ely haue been an ill father to his ſonnes, yet he is a good ſonne to God, and is ready to kiſſe the very rod he ſhall ſmart withall; It is the Lord, whom I haue euer found holy, and iuſt, and gracious, and he cannot but be himſelfe; Let him do what ſeemeth him good; for whatſoeuer ſeemeth good to him, cannot, but be good; howſoeuer it ſeemes to mee: Euery man can open his hand to God while hee bleſſes; but to expoſe our ſelues willingly to the afflicting hand of our Maker, and to kneele to him whiles he ſcourges vs, is peculiar onely to the faithfull.

If euer a good heart could haue freed a man from temporall puniſhments, Ely muſt needs haue eſcaped: Gods anger was appeaſed by his humble repentãce, but his iuſtice muſt be ſatisfied: Elies ſin and his ſonnes, was in the eye and mouth of all Iſrael; his therefore ſhould haue been much wronged by their impunity. Who would not haue made theſe ſpirituall guides an example of lawleſneſſe and haue ſaid, What care I how I liue, if Elies ſonnes goe away vnpuniſhed? As not the teares of Ely, ſo not the words of Samuel may fall to the ground: We may not meaſure the diſpleaſure of God by his ſtripes; many times, after the remiſſion of the ſin, the very chaſtiſements of the Almighty are deadly: No repentance can aſſure vs that we ſhall not ſmart with outward afflictions; That can preuent the eternall diſpleaſure of God, but ſtill it may bee neceſſarie and good we ſhould be corrected: Our care and ſuit muſt be, that the euils which ſhall not be auerted, may be ſanctified.

If the prediction of theſe euils were fearefull, what ſhall the execution bee? The preſumption of the il-taught Iſraelites ſhall giue occaſion to this iudgement; for being ſmitten before the Philiſtims, they ſend for the Arke into the field. Who gaue them authoritie to command the Ark of God at their pleaſure? Here was no conſulting with the Ark, which they would fetch; no inquiry of Samuel whether they ſhould fetch it; but an heady reſolution of preſumptuous Elders to force God into the field, and to challenge ſucceſſe. If God were not with the Arke, why did they ſend for it, and reioyce in the comming of it? If God were with it, why was not his allowance asked that it ſhould come? How can the people bee good, where the Prieſts are wicked? When the Arke of the Couenant of the Lord of hoſts that dwels between the Cherubins, was brought into the Hoſt (though with meane and wicked attendance) Iſrael doth (as it were) fill the heauen, and ſhake the earth with ſhouts; as if the Arke and victory were no leſſe vnſeparable then they had their ſinnes. Euen the lewdeſt men will be looking for fauour from that God, whom they cared not to diſpleaſe, contrary to the conſcience of their deſeruings. Preſumptiō doth the ſame in wicked mē, which faith doth in the holieſt. Thoſe that regarded not the God of the Arke, thinke themſelues ſafe and happy in the Ark of God: Vaine men are tranſported with a confidence in the out-ſides of religion, not regarding the ſubſtance and ſoule of it, which only can giue them true peace. But rather then God will humour ſuperſtition in Iſraelites, hee will ſuffer his own Arke to fall into the hands of Philiſtims: Rather will he ſeeme to ſlacken his hand of protection, then he will be thought to haue his hands bound by a formall miſconfidence. The ſlaughter of the Iſraelites was no plague to this: It was a greater plague rather to them that ſhould ſuruiue, and behold it. The two ſonnes of Ely, which had helped to corrupt their brethren, die by the hands of the vncircumciſed, and are now too late ſeparated from the Arke of God by Philiſtims, which ſhould haue been before ſeparated by their Father: They had liued formerly to bring Gods Altar into contempt, and now liue to carry his Arke into captiuity: and at laſt, as thoſe that had made vp the meaſure of their wickedneſſe, are ſlaine in their ſinne.

Ill newes doth euer either runne, or flie: The man of Beniamin, which ran from the Hoſt, hath ſoone filled the City with outcries; and Elies eares with the cry of the City. The good old man, after ninety and eight yeers, ſits in the gate, as one that neuer thought himſelfe too aged to do God ſeruice; and heares the newes of Iſraels diſcomfiture, and his ſonnes death, though with ſorrow, yet with patience; but when the meſſenger tels him of the Arke of God taken, he can liue no longer; that word ſtrikes him down backward from his throne, and kils him in the fall: no ſword of a Philiſtim could haue ſlaine him more painefully, neither know I whether his necke or his heart were firſt broken. Oh fearefull iudgement, that euer any Iſraelites eare could tingle withall! The Arke loſt: what good man would wiſh to liue without God? Who can chuſe but thinke he hath liued too long, that hath ouer-liued the Teſtimonies of Gods preſence with his Church? Yea the very daughter in law of Ely, a woman, the wife of a lewd husband; when ſhe was at once trauelling (vpon that tidings) and in that trauel, dying (to make vp the full ſum of Gods iudgement vpon that wicked houſe) as one inſenſible of the death of her father, of her husband, of her ſelf, in cōpariſon of this loſſe, cals her (then vnſeaſonable) ſon Ichabod, & with her laſt breath ſaies, The Glory is departed from Iſrael, the Arke is taken. What cares ſhe for a poſterity, which ſhould want the Arke? what cares ſhe for a ſon, come into the world, of Iſrael, when God was gon from it? and how willingly doth ſhe depart from them, from whom God was departed?

Not outward magnificence,not ſtate,not wealth, not fauour of the mighty, but the preſence of God in his Ordinances,are the glory of Iſrael:the ſubducing whereof is a greater iudgement then deſtruction.

Oh Iſrael,worſe now then no people!a thouſand times more miſerable then Philiſtims:Thoſe Pagans went away triumphing with the Arke of God,and victory;and leaue the remnants of the choſen people to lament,that they once had a God.

Oh cruell and wicked indulgence, that is now found guilty of the death, not only of the Prieſts,and people, but of Religion! Vniuſt mercy can neuer end in leſſe then bloud; and it were well, if only the body ſhould haue cauſe to complaine of that kinde crueltie.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE, MY SINGVLAR GOOD LORD

the Lord Hay, Baron of Saley,

One of his Maieſties moſt Honourable Priuie Councell.

RIGHT HONOVRABLE,

VPon how iuſt reaſon theſe my Contemplations goe forth ſo late after their Fellowes, it were needleſſe to giue account to your Lordſhip, in whoſe traine I had the honour (ſince my laſt) to paſſe both the Sea and the Twede. All my priuate ſtudies haue gladly vayled to the publike ſeruices of my Soueraigne Maſter: No ſooner could I recouer the happineſſe of my quiet thoughts, then I renued this my diuine taske: Wherein I cannot but profeſſe to place ſo much contentment, as that I wiſh not any other meaſure of my life, then it; What is this, other then the exaltation of ISAACS delight, to walke forth into the pleaſant fields of the Scriptures, and to meditate of nothing vnder heauen? Yea, what other then IACOBS ſweet viſion of Angels, climbing vp and downe that ſacred Ladder, which God hath ſet betweene heauen and earth? Yea, (to riſe yet higher) what other then an imitation of holy Moyſes, in this conuerſing with God himſelfe, on the Horeb of both Teſtaments? And if I may call your Lo. forth a little from your great affayres of Court and State, to bleſſe your eyes with this proſpect, how happy ſhall you confeſſe this change of obiects? and how vnwillingly ſhall you obtaine leaue of your thoughts to returne vnto theſe ſublunary imployments? Our laſt Diſcourſe left Gods Arke amongſt the Philiſtims; now we returne to ſee what it doth there, and to fetch it thence: Wherein your Lo. ſhall find the reuenges of God neuer ſo deadly, as when he giues moſt way vnto men; The vaine confidence of wickedneſſe ending in a late repentance: The fearfull plagues of a preſumptuous ſawcineſſe with God, not preuented with the honeſty of good intentions; The mercy of God accepting the ſeruices of an humble faithfulneſſe in a meaner dreſſe. From thence you ſhall ſee the dangerous iſſue of an affected innouation, although to the better; The errors of credultie, and blind affection in the holieſt Gouernours, guilty of the peoples diſcontentment; The ſtubborne headdineſſe of a multitude that once finds the reynes ſlacke in their necks, not capable of any pauſe, but their owne fall; The vntruſty promiſes of a faire outſide, and a plauſible entrance, ſhutting vp in a wofull diſappointment. What doe I foreſtall a Diſcourſe ſo full of choyce; your Lo. ſhall finde euery line vſefull, and ſhall willingly confeſſe that the Story of God can make a man not leſſe wiſe, then good.

Mine humble thankfulneſſe knowes not how to expreſſe it ſelfe otherwiſe, then in theſe kinde of preſents, and in my heartie prayers for the encreaſe of your honour, and happineſſe, which ſhall neuer be wanting from

THE TWELFTH BOOKE.

The Arke and Dagon.

IF men did not miſtake God, they could not ariſe to ſuch height of impiety: The acts of his iuſt iudgement are imputed to impotence; that God would ſend his Arke captiue to the Philiſtims, is ſo conſtrued by them, as if hee could not keepe it: the wife of Phinehas cryed out, that glory was departed from Iſrael; The Philiſtims dare ſay in triumph, that glory is departed from the God of Iſrael: The Arke was not Iſraels, but Gods, this victory reaches higher then to men. Dagon had neuer ſo great a day, ſo many ſacrifices, as now that he ſeemes to take the God of Iſrael priſoner: Where ſhould the captiue be beſtowed, but in the cuſtody of the victor? It is not loue, but inſultation, that lodges the Arke cloſe beſide Dagon. What a ſpectacle was this, to ſee vncircumciſed Philiſtims laying their prophane hands vpon the Teſtimony of Gods preſence? to ſee the glorious Mercy-ſeat vnder the roofe of an Idol? to ſee the two Cherubins ſpreading their wings vnder a falſe god?

Oh the deepe and holy wiſedome of the Almighty, which ouer-reaches all the finite conceits of his creatures, who whiles he ſeemes moſt to neglect himſelfe, fetches about moſt glory to his owne name; He winkes and ſits ſtill on purpoſe, to ſee what men would doe, and is content to ſuffer indignity from his creature, for a time, that he may be euerlaſtingly magnified in his iuſtice, and power: That honour pleaſeth God and men beſt, which is raiſed out of contempt.

The Arke of God was not vſed to ſuch Porters; The Philiſtims carie it vnto Aſhdod, that the victorie of Dagon may bee more glorious: What paines Superſtition puts men vnto, for the triumph of a falſe cauſe? And if prophane Philiſtims can thinke it no toile to carrie the Arke where they ſhould not, what a ſhame is it for vs, if wee doe not gladly attend it where we ſhould? How iuſtly may Gods truth ſcorne the imparitie of our zeale?

If the Iſraelites did put confidence in the Arke, can wee maruell that the Philiſtims did put confidence in that power which (as they thought) had conquered the Arke? The leſſe is euer ſubiect vnto the greater; What could they now thinke but that heauen and earth were theirs? Who ſhall ſtand out againſt them, when the God of Iſrael hath yeelded? Securitie and preſumption attend euer at the threſhold of ruine.

God

hall, J.

God will let them ſleepe in this confidence; in the morning they ſhall find how vainly they haue dreamed. Now they begin to find they haue but gloried in their owne plague, and ouerthrowne nothing but their owne peace. Dagon hath an houſe, when God hath but a Tabernacle; It is no meaſuring of Religion by outward glory: Into this houſe the proud Philiſtims come, the next morning, to congratulate vnto their god, ſo great a captiue, ſuch diuine ſpoiles, and in their early deuotions to fall downe before him, vnder whom the God of Iſrael was fallen: and loe, where they find their god, fallen downe on the ground vpon his face, before him whom they thought both his priſoner and theirs: Their God is forced to doe that, which they ſhould haue done voluntarily; although God caſt downe that dumbe riuall of his, for ſcorne, not for adoration. Oh ye fooliſh Philiſtims, could yee thinke that the ſame houſe will hold God and Dagon? could ye thinke a ſenſeleſſe ſtone, a fit companion and guardian for the liuing God? Had ye laid your Dagon vpon his face, proſtrate before the Arke, yet would not God haue endured the indignity of ſuch a lodging; but now that ye preſume to ſet vp your carued ſtone, equall to his Cherubins, goe reade your folly in the floore of your Temple, and know that hee which caſt your god ſo low, can caſt you lower.

The true God owes a ſhame to thoſe which will be making matches betwixt himſelfe and Belial.

But this perhaps was onely a miſchance, or a neglect of attendance, lay to your hands, O ye Philiſtims, and raiſe vp Dagon into his place: It is a miſerable god that needs helping vp; Had ye not beene more ſenſeleſſe then that ſtone, how could you chooſe but thinke, How ſhall he raiſe vs aboue our enemies, that cannot riſe alone? How ſhall he eſtabliſh vs in the ſtation of our peace, that cannot hold his owne foot? If Dagon did giue the foile vnto the God of Iſrael, what power is it, that hath caſt him vpon his face, in his owne Temple? It is iuſt with God, that thoſe which want grace, ſhall want wit too; it is the power of ſuperſtition, to turne men into thoſe ſtocks and ſtones which they worſhip: They that make them are like vnto them: Doubtleſſe, this firſt fall of Dagon was kept as ſecret, and excuſed as well as it might, and ſerued rather for aſtoniſhment, then conuiction; there was more ſtrangeneſſe then horrour in that accident: That whereas Dagon had wont to ſtand, and the Philiſtims fall downe, now Dagon fell downe, and the Philiſtims ſtood, and muſt become the patrons of their owne god; their god worſhips them vpon his face, and craues more helpe from them, then euer hee could giue: But if their ſottiſhneſſe can digeſt this, all is well.

Dagon is ſet in his place, and now thoſe hands are lift vp to him, which helped to lift him vp; and thoſe faces are proſtrate vnto him, before whom he lay proſtrate. Idolatry and ſuperſtition are not eaſily put out of countenance; but will the iealouſie of the true God put it vp thus? Shall Dagon eſcape with an harmleſſe fall? Surely, if they had let him lye ſtill vpon the pauement, perhaps that inſenſible ſtatue had found no other reuenge; but now, they will be aduancing it to the rood-loft againe, and affront Gods Arke with it, the euent will ſhame them, and let them know, how much God ſcornes a partner, either of his owne making, or theirs.

The morning is fitteſt for deuotion, then doe the Philiſtims flocke to the Temple of their god. What a ſhame is it for vs to come late to ours? Although not ſo much pietie as curioſitie did now haſten their ſpeed, to ſee what reſt their Dagon was allowed to get in his owne roofe; and now behold their kind god is come to meete them in the way: ſome pieces of him ſalute their eyes vpon the threſhold. Dagons head and hands are ouer-runne their fellowes, to tell the Philiſtims how much they were miſtaken in a god.

This ſecond fall breakes the Idol in pieces, and threats the ſame confuſion to the worſhippers of it. Eaſie warnings neglected end euer in deſtruction. The head is for deuiſing, the hand for execution: In theſe two powers of their god, did the Philiſtims chiefly truſt; theſe are therefore laid vnder their feet, vpon the threſhold, that they might afarre off ſee their vanity, and that (if they would) they might ſet their foot on that beſt peece of their god, wherein their heart was ſet.

There was nothing wherein that Idoll reſembled a man, but in his head, and hands, the reſt was but a ſcaly portraiture of a fiſh; God would therefore ſeparate from this ſtone, that part which had mocked man, with the counterfeit of himſelfe, that man might ſee what an vnworthy lumpe he had matched with himſelfe, and ſet vp aboue himſelfe: The iuſt quarrell of God is bent vpon thoſe meanes, and that parcell, which haue dared to rob him of his glory.

How can the Philiſtims now miſſe the ſight of their owne folly? how can they bee but enough conuicted of their mad idolatry, to ſee their god lye broken to morſels, vnder their feet? euery peece whereof proclaimes the power of him that brake it, and the ſtupidity of thoſe that adored it? Who would expect any other iſſue of this act, but to heare the Philiſtims ſay, Wee now ſee how ſuperſtition hath blinded vs? Dagon is no god for vs, our hearts ſhall neuer more reſt vpon a broken ſtatue: That onely true God, which hath beaten ours, ſhall challenge vs by the right of conqueſt: but here was none of this; rather a further degree of their dotage followes vpon this palpable conuiction: They cannot yet ſuſpect that god, whoſe head they may trample vpon, but in ſtead of hating their Dagon, that lay broken vpon their threſhold, they honour the threſhold, on which Dagon lay; and dare not ſet their foot on that place which was hallowed by the broken head and hands of their Deitie: Oh the obſtinacie of Idolatry, which where it hath got hold of the heart, knowes neither to bluſh, nor yeeld, but rather gathers ſtrength from that which might iuſtly confound it. The hand of the Almighty, which moued them not in falling vpon their god, fals now neerer them vpon their perſons, and ſtrikes them in their bodies, which would not feele themſelues ſtricken in their Idoll: Paine ſhall humble them whom ſhame cannot. Thoſe which had entertained the ſecret thoughts of abominable idolatrie within them, are now plagued in the inwardeſt and moſt ſecret part of their bodies, with a loathſome diſeaſe; and now grow weary of themſelues, in ſtead of their idolatry. I doe not heare them acknowledge it was GODS hand, which had ſtricken Dagon their god, till now, they finde themſelues ſtricken: GODS iudgements are the racke of godleſſe men; If one ſtraine make them not confeſſe, let them bee ſtretched but one wrench higher, and they cannot be ſilent. The iuſt auenger of ſinne will not loſe the glory of his executions, but will haue men know from whom they ſmart.

The Emerods were not a diſeaſe beyond the compaſſe of naturall cauſes, neither was it hard for the wiſer ſort, to giue a reaſon of their complaint, yet they aſcribe it to the hand of God: The knowledge and operation of ſecondary cauſes ſhould be no preiudice to the firſt; They are worſe then the Philiſtims, who when they ſee the meanes, doe not acknowledge the firſt Mouer; whoſe actiue and iuſt power is no leſſe ſeene in imploying ordinary agents, then in raiſing vp extraordinarie: neither doth he leſſe ſmite by a common feuer, then a reuenging Angell.

They iudge right of the cauſe, what doe they reſolue for the cure? (Let not the Arke of the God of Iſrael abide with vs) where they ſhould haue ſaid, Let vs caſt out Dagon, that we may pacifie and retaine the God of Iſrael, they determine to thruſt out the Arke of God, that they might peaceably enioy themſelues, and Dagon. Wicked men are vpon all occaſions glad to be rid of God, but they can with no patience, endure to part with their ſinnes, and whiles they are wearie of the hand that puniſheth them, they hold faſt the cauſe of their puniſhment.

Their firſt and onely care is to put away him, who as he hath corrected, ſo can eaſe them. Folly is neuer ſeparated from wickedneſſe.

Their heart told them that they had no right to the Arke. A Councell is called of their Princes and Prieſts. If they had reſolued to ſend it home, they had done wiſely; Now they doe not carry it away, but they carry it about from Ebenezer to Aſhdod, from Aſhdod to Gath, from Gath to Ekron: Their ſtomacke was greater then their conſcience; The Arke was too ſore for them, yet it was too good for Iſrael; and they will rather dye then make Iſrael happy. Their conceit, that the change of ayre could appeaſe the Arke, God vſeth to his owne aduantage; for by this meanes his power is knowne, and his iudgement ſpred ouer all the country of the Philiſtims: What doe theſe men now, but ſend the plague of God to their fellowes? The iuſtice of God can make the ſinnes of men their mutuall executioners; It is the faſhion of wicked men to draw their neighbours into the partnerſhip of their condemnation.

Whereſoeuer the Arke goes, there is deſtruction; The beſt of Gods Ordinances, if they bee not proper to vs, are deadly. The Iſraelites did not more ſhout for ioy, when they ſaw the Arke come to them, then the Ekronites cry out for griefe to ſee it brought amongſt them: Spirituall things are either ſoueraigne, or hurtfull, according to the diſpoſition of the receiuers. The Arke doth either ſaue, or kill, as it is entertained.

At laſt, when the Philiſtims are well wearie of paine and death, they are glad to bee quit of their ſinne; The voyce of the Princes and people is changed to the better (Send away the Arke of the God of Iſrael, and let it returne to his owne place,) God knowes how to bring the ſtubborneſt enemy vpon his knees, and makes him doe that out of feare, which his beſt child would doe out of loue and duty. How miſerable was the eſtate of theſe Philiſtims? Euery man was either dead, or ſicke: thoſe that were left liuing (through their extremite of paine) enuied the dead, and the cry of their whole Cities went vp to heauen. It is happy that God hath ſuch ſtore of plagues and thunderbolts for the wicked: If he had not a fire of iudgement, wherewith the yron hearts of men might bee made flexible, hee would want obedience, and the world peace.

The Arkes reuenge and returne.

IT had wont to bee a ſure rule, Whereſoeuer God is among men, there is the Church: Here onely it failed: The teſtimony of Gods preſence was many moneths amongſt the Philiſtims, for a puniſhment to his owne people, whom hee left; for a curſe to thoſe forrainers which entertained it; Iſrael was ſeuen moneths without GOD: How doe wee thinke faithfull Samuel tooke this abſence? How deſolate and forlorne did the Tabernacle of GOD looke, without the Arke? There were ſtill the Altars of GOD; his Prieſts, Leuites, Tables, Veiles, C*enſers*, with all their legall accouſtrements: Theſe without the Arke, were as the Sunne without light, in the midſt of an Eclipſe: If all theſe had beene taken away, and onely the Arke had beene remaining, the loſſe had beene nothing to this, that the A*rke* ſhould be gone, and they left: For what are all theſe without God, and how all-ſufficient is GOD without theſe? There are times, wherein GOD withdrawes himſelfe from his Church, and ſeemes to leaue her without comfort, without prote*ction*: Sometimes wee ſhall finde Iſrael taken from the Arke, otherwhiles the Arke is taken from Iſrael: In either, there is a ſeparation betwixt the Arke and Iſrael: Heauy times to euery true Iſraelite, yet ſuch as whoſe example may relieue vs in our deſertions: Still was this people, Iſrael; the ſeed of him, that would not bee left of God without a bleſſing; and therefore without the teſtimony of his preſence, was God preſent with them: It were wide with the faithfull, if God were not oftentimes with them, when there is no witneſſe of his preſence.

One act was a mutuall penance to the Iſraelites and Philiſtims, I know not to whether more : Iſrael grieued for the loſſe of that, whoſe preſence grieued the Philiſtims, their paine was therefore no other then voluntary : It is ſtrange, that the Philiſtims would endure ſeuen moneths ſmart with the Arke, ſince they ſaw, that the preſence of the Priſoner would not requite; no nor mitigate to them, one houres miſery : Fooliſh men will be ſtruggling with God, till they be vtterly either breathleſſe or impotent. Their hope was, that time might abate diſpleaſure, euen whiles they perſiſted to offend : The falſe hopes of worldly men coſt them deare; they could not be ſo miſerable, if their owne hearts did not deceiue them with miſ-expectations of impoſſible fauour.

In matters that concerne a God, who is ſo fit to be conſulted with, as the prieſts? The Princes of the Philiſtims had before giuen their voyces, yet nothing is determined, nothing is done without the direction and aſſent of thoſe whom they accounted ſacred : Nature it ſelfe ſends vs in diuine things, to thoſe perſons, whoſe calling is diuine : It is either diſtruſt, or preſumption, or contempt, that caries vs our owne waies in ſpirituall matters, without aduiſing with them, whoſe lips God hath appointed to preſerue knowledge : There cannot but ariſe many difficulties in vs about the Arke of God, whom ſhould wee conſult with but thoſe which haue the Tongue of the Learned.

Doubtleſſe, this queſtion of the Arke did abide much debating : There wanted not faire probabilities on both ſides : A wiſe Philiſtim might well plead; If God had either ſo great care of the Arke, or power to retaine it, how is it become ours? A wiſer then he would reply; If the God of Iſrael had wanted either care or power, Dagon, and we had beene ſtill whole : why doe we thus grone, and dye, all that are but within the Aire of the Arke, if a diuine hand doe not attend it? Their ſmart pleads enough for the diſmiſſion of the Arke : The next demand of their Prieſts and Soothſayers, is, how it ſhould be ſent home : Affliction had made them ſo wiſe, as to know, that euery faſhion of parting with the Arke would not ſatisfie the owner : oftentimes the circumſtance of an action marres the ſubſtance : In diuine matters wee muſt not onely looke, that the body of our ſeruice be ſound, but that the clothes be fit : Nothing hinders, but that ſometimes good aduice may fall from the mouth of wicked men. Theſe ſuperſtitious Prieſts can counſell them not to ſend away the Arke of God emptie, but to giue it a ſinne-offering : They had not liued ſo farre from the ſmoake of the Iewiſh Altars, but that they knew, God was accuſtomed to manifold oblations, and chiefly to thoſe of expiation. No Iſraelite could haue ſaid better : Superſtition is the Ape of true deuotion, and if we looke not to the ground of both, many times it is hard by the very outward acts to diſtinguiſh them : Nature it ſelfe teacheth vs, that God loues a full hand : He that hath beene ſo bountifull to vs, as to giue vs all, lookes for a returne of ſome offering from vs; If we preſent him with nothing but our ſins, how can wee looke to bee accepted? The ſacrifices vnder the Goſpell are ſpirituall, with theſe muſt we come into the preſence of God, if we deſire to carie away remiſſion and fauour.

The Philiſtims knew well, that it were bootleſſe for them to offer, what they liſted, their next ſuit is to be directed in the matter of their oblation; Pagans can teach vs, how vnſafe it is to walke in the wayes of Religion without a guide, yet here their beſt teachers can but gueſſe at their duty, and muſt deuiſe for the people, that, which the people durſt not impoſe vpon themſelues : The golden Emerods, and Miſe, were but coniecturall preſcripts : With what ſecurity may we conſult with them which haue their directions from the mouth and hand of the Almighty?

God ſtrucke the Philiſtims at once in their god, in their bodies, in their land : In their god, by his ruine and diſmembering : In their bodies, by the Emerods : In their land, by the Miſe. That baſe vermine did God ſend among them on purpoſe to ſhame their Dagon and them, that they might ſee, how vnable their god was (which they thought the Victor of the Arke) to ſubdue the leaſt Mouſe, which the true God did create, and command to plague them : This plague vpon the fields, beganne together with that vpon their bodies: it was mentioned, not complained of, till they think of diſmiſſing the Arke: Greater croſſes doe commonly ſwallow vp the leſſe: At leaſt, leſſer euils are either ſilent, or vnheard, while the eare is filled with the clamor of the greater. Their very Princes were puniſhed with the Miſe, as well as with the Emerods; God knowes no perſons in the execution of iudgements; The leaſt and meaneſt of all Gods creatures is ſufficient to be the reuenger of his Creator.

GOD ſent them Miſe, and Emerods of fleſh and blood: they returne him both theſe of gold, to imply, both, that theſe iudgements came out from God, and that they did gladly giue him the glory of that, whereof hee gaue them paine and ſorrow; and that they would willingly buy off their paine with the beſt of their ſubſtance: The proportion betwixt the complaint and ſatisfaction is more precious to him, then the Metall. There was a publike confeſſion in this reſemblance, which is ſo pleaſing vnto God, that he rewards it, euen in wicked men, with a relaxation of outward puniſhment. The number was no leſſe ſignificant, then the forme: Fiue golden Emerods, and Miſe, for the fiue Princes and diuiſions of Philiſtims. As GOD made no difference in puniſhing, ſo they make none in their oblation: The people are compriſed in them, in whom they are vnited, their ſeuerall Princes: They were one with their Prince, their Offering is one with his; as they were Ring-leaders in the ſinne, ſo they muſt be in the ſatisfaction: In a multitude it is euer ſeene, as in a beaſt, that the body followes the head. Of all others, great men had need to looke to their wayes, it is in them, as in figures, one ſtands for a thouſand: One Offering ſerues not all, there muſt bee fiue, according to the fiue heads of the offence. Generalities will not content God; euery man muſt make his ſeuerall peace, if not in himſelfe, yet in his head: Nature taught them a ſhadow of that, the ſubſtance and perfection whereof is taught vs by the grace of the Goſpell; euery ſoule muſt ſatiſfie God, if not in it ſelfe, yet in him, in whom we are both one, and abſolute: we are the body, whereof Chriſt is the head, our ſinne is in our ſelues, our ſatisfaction muſt be in him.

Samuel himſelfe could not haue ſpoken more diuinely, then theſe Prieſts of Dagon; they doe not onely talke of giuing glory to the God of Iſrael, but fall into an holy and graue expoſtulation (wherefore then ſhould ye harden your hearts, as the Ægyptians, and Pharaoh hardned their hearts, when hee wrought wonderfully amongſt them? &c.) They confeſſe a ſupereminent and reuenging hand of God ouer their gods, they parallell their plagues with the Ægyptian, they make vſe of Pharaohs ſin, and iudgement; What could be better ſaid? All Religions haue afforded them that could ſpeake well: Theſe good words left them ſtill both Philiſtims, and ſuperſtitious: How ſhould men be hypocrites, if they had not good tongues? yet (as wickedneſſe can hardly hide it ſelf) theſe holy ſpeeches are not without a tincture of that Idolatry, wherewith the heart was infected: For they profeſſe care not onely of the perſons, and lands of the Philiſtims, but of their gods; (that hee may take his hand from you, and from your gods.) Who would thinke that wiſedome and folly could lodge ſo neere together? that the ſame men ſhould haue care both of the glory of the true God, and preſeruation of the falſe? That they ſhould bee ſo vaine, as to take thought for thoſe gods which they granted to be obnoxious vnto an higher Deitie? Oft times euen one word bewrayeth a whole pack of falſhood, and though Superſtition be a cleanly counterfeit, yet ſome one ſlip of the tongue diſcouers it, as we ſay of deuils, which though they put on faire formes, yet are they knowne by their clouen feet.

What other warrant theſe ſuperſtitious Prieſts had for the maine ſubſtance of their aduice, I know not; ſure I am, the probability of the euent was faire; that two Kine neuer vſed to any yoake, ſhould runne from their Calues (which were newly ſhut vp from them) to draw the Arke home into a contrary way, muſt needs argue an hand aboue Nature: What elſe ſhould ouer-rule bruite creatures to perferre a forced cariage vnto a naturall burden? What ſhould cary them from their owne home, towards the home of the Arke? What elſe ſhould guide an vntamed and vntaught Teame, in as right a path toward Iſrael, as their Teachers could haue gone? What elſe could make very beaſts more wiſe, then their Maſters? There is a ſpeciall prouidence of God, in the very motions of bruit creatures; Neither Philiſtims nor Iſraelites ſaw ought that droue them, yet they ſaw them ſo runne, as thoſe that were led by the Diuine Conduct. The reaſonleſſe creatures alſo doe the will of their Maker; euery act that is done either by them, or to them, makes vp the decree of the Almighty; and if in extraordinary actions and euents his hand is more viſible, yet it is no leſſe certainly preſent in the common.

Little did the Iſraelites of Bethſhemeſh looke for ſuch a ſight whiles they were reaping their Wheat in the Valley, as to ſee the Arke of God come running to them, without a Conuoy; neither can it be ſaid, whether they were more affected with ioy, or with aſtoniſhment; with ioy at the preſence of the Arke, with aſtoniſhment at the Miracle of the tranſportation: Downe went their Sickles, and now euery man runs to reape the comfort of this better harueſt, to meet that Bread of Angels, to ſalute thoſe Cherubims, to welcome that God, whoſe abſence had beene their death: But as it is hard not to ouer-ioy in a ſudden proſperitie, and, to vſe happineſſe is no leſſe difficult, then to forbeare it; Theſe glad Iſraelites cannot ſee but they muſt gaze; they cannot gaze on the glorious out-ſide; but they muſt be (whether out of rude iollity, or curioſitie, or ſuſpition of the purloining ſome of thoſe ſacred implements) prying into the ſecrets of Gods Arke: Nature is too ſubiect to extremities, and is euer either too dull in want, or wanton in fruition: It is no eaſie matter to keepe a meane, whether in good or euill.

Bethſhemeſh was a City of Prieſts, they ſhould haue knowne better how to demeane themſelues towards the Arke; this priuiledge doubled their offence. There was no malice in this curious inquiſition, the ſame eyes that lookt into the Arke, lookt alſo vp to heauen in their Offerings, and the ſame hands that touched it, offered ſacrifice to the God that brought it. Who could expect any thing now but acceptation? who would ſuſpect any danger? It is not a following act of deuotion that can make amends for a former a ſinne: There was a death owing them, immediately vpon their offence, God will take his owne time for the execution; In the meane while, they may ſacrifice, but they cannot ſatisfie, they cannot eſcape. The Kine are ſacrificed, the Cart burnes them that drew it: Here was an offering of prayſe, when they had more need of a treſpaſſe offering; many an heart is lifted vp in a conceit of ioy, when it hath iuſt cauſe of humiliation: God lets them alone with their Sacrifice, but when that is done, he comes ouer them with a backe reckoning for their ſinne: Fifty thouſand and ſeuenty Iſraelites are ſtrucke dead for this vnreuerence to the Arke: A wofull welcome for the Arke of God into the borders of Iſrael. It killed them for looking into it, who thought it their life to ſee it; It dealt blowes, and death on both hands; to Philiſtims, to Iſraelites; to both of them for prophaning it: The one with their Idoll, the other with their eyes. It is a fearefull thing to vſe the holy Ordinances of God with an vnreuerent boldneſſe. Feare and trembling becomes vs in our acceſſe to the Majeſtie of the Almighty: Neither was there more ſtate, then ſecreſie in Gods Arke; ſome things the wiſedome of God deſires to conceale: The vnreuerence of the Iſraelites was no more faulty, then their curioſity; ſecret things to God, things reuealed to vs and to our children.

The remoue of the Arke.

I Heare of the Bethſhemites lamentation, I heare not of their repentance; they complaine of their ſmart, they complaine not of their ſinne; and for ought I can perceiue, ſpeake, as if God were curious, rather then they faulty: (Who is able to ſtand before this holy Lord God, and to whom ſhall he goe from vs?) As if none could pleaſe that God which miſliked them: It is the faſhion of naturall men to iuſtifie themſelues in their owne courſes; if they cannot charge any earthly thing with the blame of their ſuffering, they will caſt it vpon Heauen: That a man pleads himſelfe guilty of his owne wrong, is no common worke of Gods Spirit. Bethſhemeſh bordered too neere vpon the Philiſtims; If theſe men thought the very preſence of the Arke hurtfull, why doe they ſend to their neighbours of Kiriath-iearim, that they might make themſelues miſerable? Where there is a miſconceit of God, it is no maruell if there be a defect of Charity: How cunningly doe they ſend their meſſage to their neighbours? They doe not ſay, the Arke of God is come to vs of it owne accord, leſt the men of Kiriath-iearim ſhould reply, It is come to you, let it ſtay with you: They ſay onely the Philiſtims haue brought it; they tell of the preſence of the Arke, they doe not tell of the ſucceſſe, leſt the example of their iudgement ſhould haue diſcouraged the forwardneſſe of their reliefe: And after all, the offer was plauſible; Come ye downe and take it vp to you; as if the honour had beene too great for themſelues, as if their modeſtie had beene ſuch, that they would not foreſtall and engroſſe happineſſe from the reſt of Iſrael.

It is no boot to teach Nature how to tell her owne tale, ſmart and danger will make a man wittie: He is rarely conſtant, that will not diſſemble for eaſe. It is good to bee ſuſpicious of the euaſions of thoſe which would put off miſerie. Thoſe of Bethſhemeſh were not more craftie then theſe of Keriath-iearim (which was the ground of their boldneſſe) faithfull: So many thouſand Bethſhemites could not bee dead, and no part of the rumour flie to them: they heard how thicke, not onely the Philiſtims, but the bordering Iſraelites fell downe dead before the Arke; yet they durſt aduenture to come, and fetch it, euen from amongſt the carcaſſes of their brethren: They had beene formerly acquainted with the Arke, they knew it was holy, it could not be changeable, and therefore they well conceiued this ſlaughter to ariſe from the vnholineſſe of men, not from the rigour of God, and thereupon can ſeeke comfort in that, which others found deadly: Gods children cannot by any meanes bee diſcouraged from their honour, and loue to his Ordinances: If they ſee thouſands ſtrucke downe to Hell by the Scepter of Gods Kingdome, yet they will kiſſe it vpon their knees, and if their Sauiour be a Rocke of offence, and the occaſion of the fall of millions in Iſrael, they can feed temperately of that, whereof others haue ſurfeited to death, &c.

Bethſhemeſh was a Citie of Prieſts and Leuites: Kiriath-iearim a Citie of Iuda, where we heare but of one Leuite, Abinadab; yet this Citie was more zealous for God, more reuerent and conſcionable in the entertainement of the Arke, then the other. Wee heard of the taking downe of the Arke by the Bethſhemites, when it came miraculouſly to them; we doe not heare of any man ſanctified for the attendance of it, as was done in this ſecond lodging of the Arke: Grace is not tyed either to number, or meanes. It is in ſpirituall matters, as in the eſtate: Small helpes with good thrift enrich vs, when great patrimonies loſe themſelues in the neglect. Shiloh was wont to be the place which was honoured with the preſence of the Arke; Euer ſince the wickedneſſe of Elies Sonnes, that was forlorne, and deſolate, and now Kiriath-iearim ſucceeds into this priuiledge: It did not ſtand with the royall liberty of God, no not vnder the Law, to tie himſelfe vnto places and perſons: Vnworthineſſe was euer a ſufficient cauſe of exchange. It was not yet his time to ſtirre from the Iewes, yet he remoued from one Prouince to another: Leſſe reaſon haue we to thinke, that ſo God will reſide amongſt vs, that none of our prouocations can driue him from vs, &c.

Iſrael, which had found the miſerie of Gods abſence, is now reſolued into teares of contrition, and thankfulneſſe vpon his returne: There is no mention of their lamenting after the Lord, while he was gone, but when he was returned, and ſetled in Kiriath-iearim: The mercies of God draw more teares from his children, then his iudgements doe from his enemies: There is no better ſigne of good nature and grace, then to bee wonne to repentance with kindneſſe: Not to thinke of God, except we be beaten vnto it, is ſeruile: Becauſe God was come againe to Iſrael, therefore Iſrael is returned to God; If God had not come firſt, they had neuer come: If hee, that came to them, had not made them come to him, they had beene euer parted. They were cloyed with God, while he was perpetually reſident with them, now that his abſence had made him dainty, they cleaue to him feruently, and penitently in his returne: This was it, that God meant in his departure, a better welcome at his comming backe.

I heard no newes of Samuel all this while the Arke was gone: Now when the Arke is returned and placed in Kiriath-iearim, I heare him treat with the people. It is not like, he was ſilent in this ſad diſertion of God; but now he takes full aduantage of the profeſſed contrition of Iſrael, to deale with them effectually, for their perfect conuerſion vnto God. It is great wiſedome in ſpirituall matters, to take occaſion by the fore-locke, and to ſtrike while the iron is hot: We may beat long enough at the doore, but till God haue opened, it is no going in, and when he hath opened it is no delaying to enter. The triall of ſincerity is the abandoning of our wonted ſinnes. This Samuel vrgeth (If ye be come againe vnto the Lord with all your heart, put away the ſtrange Gods from among you, and Aſhtaroth:) In vaine had it beene to profeſſe repentance, whilſt they continued in Idolatry; God will neuer acknowledge any conuert, that ſtayes in a knowne ſinne: Graces and Vertues are ſo linckt together, that hee, which hath one, hath all: The partiall conuerſion of men vnto God is but hatefull hypocriſie. How happily effectuall is a word ſpoken in ſeaſon? Samuels exhortation wrought vpon the hearts of Iſrael, and fetcht water out of their eyes, ſuits, and confeſſions, and vowes out of their lips, and their falſe gods out of their hands; yet it was not meerely remorſe but feare alſo, that moued Iſrael to this humble ſubmiſſion.

The Philiſtims ſtood ouer them ſtill, and threatned them with new aſſaults, the memory of their late ſlaughter, and ſpoile, was yet freſh in their minds, ſorrow for the euils paſt, and feare of the future fetcht them downe vpon their knees: It is not more neceſſary for men to bee cheared with hopes, then to bee awed with dangers: where God intends the humiliation of his ſeruants, there ſhall not want meanes of their deiection: It was happy for Iſrael that they had an enemy. Is it poſſible that the Philiſtims after thoſe deadly plagues, which they ſuſtained from the God of Iſrael, ſhould thinke of inuading Iſrael? thoſe that were ſo mated with the preſence of the Arke, that they neuer thought themſelues ſafe, till it was out of ſight, doe they now dare to thruſt themſelues vpon the new reuenge of the Arke? It ſlue them whiles they thought to honor it, and doe they thinke to eſcape, whilſt they reſiſt it? It ſlue them in their owne Coaſts, and do they come to it to ſeeke death? yet behold no ſooner doe the Philiſtims heare, that the Iſraelites are gathered to Mizpeh, but the Princes of the Philiſtims gather themſelues againſt them: No warnings will ſerue obdurate hearts, wicked men are euen ambitious of deſtruction; Iudgements need not to goe finde them out, they runne to meet their bane.

The Philiſtims come vp, and the Iſraelites feare; they that had not the wit to feare, whilſt they were not friends with God, haue not now the grace of fearleſſe-neſſe, when they were reconciled to God: Boldneſſe and Feare are commonly miſplaced in the beſt hearts; when wee ſhould tremble, wee are confident, and when wee ſhould be aſſured, we tremble: Why ſhould Iſrael haue feared, ſince they had made their peace with the God of Hoſts? Nothing ſhould affright thoſe, which are vpright with God. The peace, which Iſrael had made with God, was true, but tender. They durſt not truſt their owne innocency, ſo much as the prayers of Samuel; Ceaſe not to cry to the Lord our God for vs. In temporall things nothing hinders, but we may fare better for other mens faith, then for our owne: It is no ſmall happineſſe to be intereſſed in them which are Fauourites in the Court of Heauen; one faithfull man in theſe occaſions is more worth then millions of the wauering and vncertaine.

A good heart is eaſily wonne to deuotion: Samuel cries, and ſacrificeth to God; he had done ſo, though they had intreated his ſilence, yea his forbearance. Whiles he is offering, the Philiſtims fight with Iſrael, and God fights with the Philiſtims. (The Lord thundred with a great thunder that day vpon the Philiſtims, and ſcattered them:) Samuel fought more vpon his knees, then all Iſrael beſides: The voyce of God anſwered the voyce of Samuel, and ſpeakes confuſion and death to the Philiſtims: How were the proud Philiſtimes dead with feare, ere they dyed, to heare the fearefull thunder claps of an angry God againſt them? to ſee, that Heauen it ſelfe fought againſt them? Hee that ſlue them ſecretly in the reuenges of his Arke, now kils them with open horror in the fields: If preſumption did not make wicked men mad, they would neuer lift their hand againſt the Almighty; what are they in his hands, when hee is diſpoſed to vengeance?

The meeting of SAVL and SAMVEL.

SAMVEL began his acquaintance with God early, and continued it long: He began it in his long Coats, and continued to his gray hayres; (Hee iudged Iſrael all the dayes of his life.) God doth not vſe to put off his old Seruants; their age indeareth them to him the more; If wee bee not vnfaithfull to him, hee cannot be vnconſtant to vs. At laſt his decayed age met with ill partners, his Sonnes for Deputies, and Saul for a King; The wickedneſſe of his Sonnes gaue the occaſion of a change: Perhaps Iſrael had neuer thought of a King, if Samuels Sonnes had not beene vnlike their Father: Who can promiſe himſelfe holy children, when the loynes of a Samuel, and the education in the Temple, yeelded monſters? It is not likely, that good Samuel was faulty in that indulgence, for which his owne mouth had denounced Gods iudgement againſt Hely: yet this holy man ſucceeds Hely in his croſſe, as well as his place, though not in his ſinne; and is afflicted with a wicked ſucceſſion: God will let vs find, that Grace is by gift, not by inheritance.

I feare Samuel was too partiall to nature in the ſurrogation of his Sonnes, I doe not heare of Gods allowance to this act: If this had beene Gods choyce, as well as his, it had beene like to haue receiued more bleſſing. Now all Iſrael haue cauſe to rue, that theſe were the Sonnes of Samuel; for now the queſtion was not of their vertues, but of their blood; not of their worthineſſe, but their birth; euen the beſt heart may bee blinded with affection. Who can maruell at theſe errors of Parents loue, when he that ſo holily iudged Iſrael all his life, miſiudged of his owne Sonnes.

It was Gods ancient purpoſe to raiſe vp a King to his people: How doth hee take occaſion to performe it, but by the vnruly deſires of Iſrael? euen as we ſay of humane proceedings, that ill manners beget good lawes. That, Monarchy is the beſt forme of gouernment, there is no queſtion. Good things may be ill deſired, ſo was this of Iſrael; If an itching deſire of alteration had not poſſeſſed them, why did they not rather ſue for a reformation of their Gouernours, then for a change of gouernment? Were Samuels ſonnes ſo deſperately euill, that there was no poſſibilitie of amendment? Or if they were paſt hope, were there not ſome others to haue ſucceeded the iuſtice of Samuel, no leſſe then theſe did his perſon? What needed Samuel to be thruſt out of place? What needed the ancient forme of adminiſtration to be altered? Hee that raiſed vp their Iudges, would haue found time to raiſe them vp Kings: Their curious, and inconſtant new fanglenes, will not abide to ſtay it, but with an heady importunity labours to ouer haſten the pace of God. Where there is a ſetled courſe of good gouernment (howſoeuer blemiſhed with ſome weakeneſſes) it is not ſafe to be ouer-forward to a change, though it ſhould be to the better. Hee, by whom Kings reigne, ſayes, They haue caſt him away that he ſhould not reigne ouer them becauſe they deſire a King to raigne ouer them: Iudges were his owne inſtitution to his people, as yet Kings were not; after that Kings were ſetled, to deſire the gouernment of Iudges, had bin a much more ſeditious inconſtancy: God hath not appointed to euery time & place thoſe formes, which are ſimply beſt in themſelues, but thoſe, which are beſt to them, vnto whom they are appointed; which we may neither alter, till he begin, nor recall, when he hath altred.

This buſineſſe ſeemed perſonally to concerne Samuel, yet he ſo deales in it not as a partie, not as a Iudge of his owne Caſe, but as a Prophet of God, as a friend of his oppoſite; He prayes to God for aduice, he foretels the ſtate and courſes of their future King. Wilfull men are blind to all dangers, are deafe to all good counſells. Iſrael muſt haue a King though they pay neuer ſo deare for their longing: The vaine affection of conformity to other Nations ouercomes all diſcouragements; there is no readier way to error, then to make others examples the rule of our deſires, or actions. If euery man haue not grounds of his owne, whereon to ſtand, there can be no ſtabilitie in his reſolutions or proceedings.

Since then they chooſe to haue a King, God himſelfe will chooſe and appoint the King which they ſhall haue. The Kingdome ſhall beginne in Beniamin, which was to endure in Iuda: It was no probabilitie or reaſon, this firſt King ſhould proue well, becauſe he was abortiue; their humour of innouation deſerued to be puniſhed with their owne choyce: Kiſh the father of Saul was mighty in eſtate, Saul was mighty in perſon, ouer-looking the reſt of the people in ſtature, no leſſe then he ſhould doe in dignitie: The ſenſes of the Iſraelites could not but be well pleaſed for the time, howſoeuer their hearts were afterwards; when men are carried with outward ſhewes, it is a ſigne that God meanes them a deluſion.

How farre God fetches his purpoſes about! The Aſſes of Kiſh, Sauls father, are ſtrayed away: What is that to the newes of a Kingdome? God layes theſe ſmall accidents for the ground of greater deſignes: The Aſſes muſt be loſt, none but Saul muſt goe with his fathers ſeruant to ſeeke them: Samuel ſhall meet them in the ſearch: Saul ſhall be premoniſhed of his inſuing Royalty; Little can we by the beginning of any action, gueſſe at Gods intention in the concluſion.

Obedience was a fit entrance into Soueraignty: The ſeruice was homely for the ſonne of a great man, yet he refuſeth not to goe, as a fellow to his fathers ſeruant, vpon ſo meane a ſearch: The diſobedient and ſcornefull are good for nothing, they are neither fit to be ſubiects nor gouernours. Kiſh was a great man in his countrey, yet he diſdaineth not to ſend his ſonne Saul vpon a thrifty errand, neither doth Saul plead his diſparagement for a refuſall. Pride and wantonneſſe haue marred our times: Great parents count it a diſreputation to imploy their ſonnes in courſes of frugality; and their pampered children thinke it a ſhame to doe any thing: and ſo beare themſelues, as thoſe that hold it the onely glory to be either idle or wicked.

Neither doth Saul goe faſhionably to worke, but does this ſeruice heartily and painfully, as a man, that deſires rather to effect the command, then pleaſe the Commander: He paſſed from Ephraim to the Land of Shaliſha, from Shaliſha to Salim, from Salim to Iemini, whence his Houſe came; from Iemini to Zuph, not ſo much as ſtaying with any of his kinred ſo long as to vittaile himſelfe: He that was afterward an ill King, approued himſelfe a good Sonne. As there are diuerſitie of relations and offices, ſo there is of diſpoſitions; thoſe, which are excellent in ſome, attaine not to a mediocritie in other: It is no arguing from priuate vertues to publike; from dexteritie in one ſtation, to the reſt: A ſeuerall grace belongs to the particular carriage of euery place whereto we are called, which if we want, the place may well want vs.

hall, J.

There was more praiſe of his obedience in ceaſing to ſeeke, then in ſeeking: hee takes care, leſt his father ſhould take care for him, that whilſt he ſhould ſeeme officious in the leſſe, he might not neglect the greateſt. A blind obedience in ſome caſes doth well, but it doth farre better, when it is led with the eyes of diſcretion; otherwiſe we may more offend in pleaſing, then in diſobeying.

Great is the benefit of a wiſe and religious attendant, ſuch an one puts vs into thoſe duties and actions which are moſt expedient, and leaſt thought of. If Saul had not had a diſcreet Seruant, he had returned but as wiſe as he came; now he is drawne in to conſult with the man of God, and heares more then hee hoped for. Saul was now a ſufficient iourney from his fathers houſe, yet his religious ſeruant in this remoteneſſe, takes knowledge of the place, where the Prophet dwels, and how honourably doth he mention him to his maſter? Behold, in this Citie is a man of God, and he is an honorable man, all that he ſaith commeth to paſſe: Gods Prophets are publike perſons, as their function, ſo their notice concernes euery man: There is no reaſon God ſhould abate any of the reſpect due to his Miniſters vnder the Goſpell: Saint Pauls ſuit is both vniuerſall and euerlaſting; I beſeech you, Brethren, know them that labour amongſt you.

The chiefe praiſe is to be able to giue good aduice; the next is to take it. Saul is eaſily induced to condeſcend: He, whoſe curioſitie led him voluntarily at laſt, to the Witch or Endor, is now led at firſt by good counſell to the man of God; neither is his care in going, leſſe commendable, then his will to goe. For as a man, that had bin catechized not to goe vnto God empty-handed, he askes, What ſhall we bring vnto the man? What haue we? The caſe is well altered in our times: Euery man thinkes what may I keepe backe? There is no gaine ſo ſweet, as of a robbed Altar; yet Gods charge is no leſſe vnder the Goſpel, Let him that is taught, make his Teacher partaker of all. As this faithfull care of Saul was a iuſt preſage of ſucceſſe, more then he looked for, or could expect; ſo the ſacrilegious vnthankfulneſſe of many, bodes that ruine to their ſoule and eſtate, which they could not haue grace to feare.

He that knew the Prophets abode, knew alſo the honour of his place, hee could not but know that Samuel was a mixt perſon; The Iudge of Iſrael, and the Seer: yet both Saul and his Seruant purpoſe to preſent him the fourth part of a ſhekell, to the value of about our fiue pence. They had learned, that thankfulneſſe was not to be meaſured of good men by the weight, but by the will of the Retributor: How much more will God accept the ſmall offerings of his weake Seruants, when he ſees them proceed from great loue?

The very maids of the Citie can giue direction to the Prophet, they had liſtned after the holy affayres, they had heard of the Sacrifice, and could tell of the neceſſitie of Samuels preſence: Thoſe that liue within the Sun-ſhine of Religion, cannot but bee ſomewhat coloured with thoſe beames: Where there is practice and example of piety in the better ſort, there will be a reflection of it vpon the meaneſt: it is no ſmall benefit to liue in religious and holy places, we ſhall be much to blame, if all goodneſſe fall beſide vs: Yea ſo skilfull were theſe Damzels in the faſhions of their publike Sacrifices, that they could inſtruct Saul and his ſeruant, vnasked, how the people would not eate, till Samuel came to bleſſe the Sacrifice. This meeting was not more a Sacrifice, then it was a Feaſt: Theſe two agree well, we haue neuer ſo much cauſe to reioyce in feaſting, as when wee haue duly ſerued our God: The Sacrifice was a feaſt to God, the other to men: The body may eate and drinke with contentment, when the ſoule hath beene firſt fed, and hath firſt feaſted the maker of both: Goe eate thy bread with ioy, and drinke thy drinke with a merry heart, for God now accepteth thy workes. The Sacrifice was before conſecrated, when it was offered to God; but it was not conſecrated to them, till Samuel bleſſed it, his bleſſing made that meate holy to the gueſts, which was formerly hallowed to God: All creatures were made good, and tooke holineſſe from him, which gaue them being: Our ſinne brought that curſe vpon them (which vnleſſe our prayers remoue it) cleaues to them ſtill, ſo as we receiue them not without a curſe. We are not our owne friends except our Prayers helpe to take that away, which our ſinne hath brought, that ſo to the cleane all may bee cleane: It is an vnmannerly godleſſeneſſe, to take Gods creatures without the leaue of their Maker, and well may God withhold his bleſſing from them, which haue not the grace to aske it.

Thoſe gueſts which were ſo religious, that they would not eate their Sacrifice vnbleſſed, might haue bleſſed it themſelues: Euery man might pray, though euery man might not ſacrifice; yet would they not either eate, or bleſſe, whiles they looked for the preſence of a Prophet. Euery Chriſtian may ſanctifie his owne meate, but where thoſe are preſent, that are peculiarly ſanctified to God, this ſeruice is fitteſt for them: It is commendable to teach Children the practice of Thankſgiuing, but the beſt is euer moſt meet to bleſſe our tables, and thoſe eſpecially, whoſe office it is to offer our prayers to God.

Little did Saul thinke, that his comming and his errand was ſo noted of God, as that it was fore-ſignified vnto the Prophet, and now, behold Samuel is told a day before of the man, time, and place of his meeting. The eye of Gods prouidence is no leſſe ouer all our actions, all our motions. We cannot goe any whither without him, he tels all our ſteps; ſince it pleaſeth God therefore to take notice of vs, much more ſhould we take notice of him, and walke with him, in whom we moue. Saul came beſide his expectation to the Prophet, he had no thought of any ſuch purpoſe, till his Seruant made this ſudden motion vnto him of viſiting Samuel, and yet God ſayes to his Prophet, I will ſend thee a man out of the Land of Beniamin. The ouer-ruling hand of the Almighty workes vs inſenſibly, and all our affaires to his owne ſecret determinations; ſo as whiles we thinke to doe our owne wils, we doe his. Our owne intentions we may know, Gods purpoſes we know not; we muſt goe the way that we are called, let him lead vs to what end he pleaſeth; it is our duty to reſigne our ſelues and our wayes to the diſpoſition of God, and patiently and thankfully to await the iſſue of his decrees. The ſame God that fore-ſhewed Saul to Samuel, now points to him (See, this is the man,) and commands the Prophet to anoint him Gouernour ouer Iſrael: He, that told of Saul before he came, knew before he came into the world, what a man, what a King he would be; yet he chooſeth him out, and inioynes his inunction. It is one of the greateſt prayſes of Gods wiſedome, that hee can turne the euill of men to his owne glory. Aduancement is not euer a ſigne of loue either to the man, or to the place. It had beene better for Saul, that his head had beene euer dry: ſome God raiſeth vp in iudgement, that they may fall the more yneaſily; there are no men ſo miſerable, as thoſe that are great and euill.

It ſeemes that Samuel bore no great port in his outſide, for that Saul not diſcerning him, either by his habit, or attendants, comes to him, and askes him for the Seer; yet was Samuel as yet the Iudge of Iſrael, the ſubſtitution of his ſonnes had not diſplaced himſelfe: There is an affable familiaritie that becommeth Greatneſſe; It is not good for eminent perſons to ſtand alwayes vpon the height of their ſtate, but ſo to behaue themſelues, that as their ſociable cariage may not breed contempt, ſo their ouer-highneſſe may not breed a ſeruile fearfulneſſe in their people.

How kindly doth Samuel entertaine and inuite Saul, yet it was he onely that ſhould receiue wrong by the future royalty of Saul? Who would not haue looked that aged Samuel ſhould haue emulated rather the glory of his young riuall, and haue looked churliſhly vpon the man that ſhould rob him of his authority? yet now, as if he came on purpoſe to gratifie him, hee bids him to the feaſt, he honours him with the chiefe ſeat, he reſerues a ſelect morſell for him, he tels him ingenuouſly the newes of his inſuing Soueraignty, (On whom is ſet the deſire of all Iſrael, is it not vpon thee and thy fathers houſe?) Wiſe and holy men, as they are not ambitious of their owne burden, ſo they are not vnwilling to bee eaſed, when God pleaſeth to diſcharge them; neither can they enuy thoſe whom God lifteth aboue their heads: They make an Idoll of honour, that are troubled with their owne freedome, or grudge at the promotion of others.

Doubtleſſe Saul was much amazed with this ſtrange ſalutation, and newes of the Prophet, and how modeſtly doth he put it off, as that, which was neither fit, nor likely; diſparaging his Tribe in reſpect of the reſt of Iſrael, his Fathers Family in reſpect of the Tribe, and himſelfe in reſpect of his Fathers Family; neither did his humility ſtoope below the truth: For, as Beniamin was the youngeſt ſonne of Iſrael, ſo he was now by much, the leaſt Tribe of Iſrael; They had not yet recouered that vniuerſall ſlaughter which they had receiued from the hands of their brethren, whereby a Tribe was almoſt loſt to Iſrael; yet euen out of the remainder of Beniamin doth God chooſe the man, that ſhall command Iſrael; out of the rubbiſh of Beniamin doth God raiſe the Throne. That is not euer the beſt and fatteſt which God chooſeth, but that which God chooſeth is euer the fitteſt; the ſtrength or weakneſſe of meanes is neither ſpur nor bridle to the determinate choices of God, yea rather he holds it the greateſt proofe of his freedome, and omnipotency, to aduance the vnlikelieſt. It was no hollow and fained excuſe, that Saul makes to put off that, which he would faine enioy, and to cauſe honour to follow him the more eagerly: It was the ſincere truth of his humilitie, that ſo deiected him vnder the hand of Gods Prophet. Faire beginnings are no ſound proofe of our proceedings and ending well: How often hath a baſhfull childhood ended in an impudency of youth, a ſtrict entrance in licencious neſſe, early forwardneſſe in Atheiſme? There might be a ciuill meekneſſe in Saul, true grace there was not in him; they that be good, beare more fruit in their age.

Saul had but fiue pence in his purſe to giue the Prophet: The Prophet after much good cheere giues him the Kingdome, he beſtowes the oyle of royall conſecration on his head, the kiſſes of homage vpon his face, and ſends him away rich in thoughts, and expectation; and now leſt his aſtoniſhment ſhould end in diſtruſt, he ſetles his aſſurance, by forewarnings of thoſe euents, which he ſhould finde in his way: Hee tels him whom he ſhall meet, what they ſhall ſay, how himſelfe ſhall be affected; that all theſe, and himſelfe might be ſo many witneſſes of his following coronation; euery word confirmed him. For well might he thinke, He that can foretell me the motions and words of others, cannot faile in mine; eſpecially when (as Samuel had propheciedto him) he found himſelfe to propheſie; his propheſying did enough foretell his Kingdome. No ſooner did Samuel turne his backe from Saul, but God gaue him another heart, lifting vp his thoughts and diſpoſition to the pitch of a King: the calling of God neuer leaues a man vnchanged, neither did God euer imploy any man in his ſeruice, whom he did not enable to the worke he ſet him; eſpecially thoſe whom hee raiſeth vp to the ſupply of his owne place, and the repreſentation of himſelfe. It is no maruell, if Princes excell the vulgar in gifts, no leſſe then in dignity: Their Crownes and their hearts are both in one and the ſame hand; If God did not adde to their powers, as well as their honours, there would be no equality.

The

The Inauguration of SAVL.

GOD hath ſecretly deſtined Saul to the Kingdome; it could not content Iſrael, that Samuel knew this, the lots muſt ſo decide the choyce, as if it had not beene predetermined; That God, which is euer conſtant to his owne decrees, makes the lots to finde him out, whom Samuel had anointed: If once we haue notice of the will of God, wee may bee confident of the iſſue: There is no chance to the Almighty; euen caſuall things are no leſſe neceſſary in their firſt cauſe, then the naturall. So farre did Saul truſt the prediction, and oyle of Samuel, that he hides him among the ſtuffe: Hee knew where the lots would light before they were caſt: This was but a modeſt declination of that honour, which he ſaw muſt come; His very withdrawing ſhewed ſome expectation, why elſe ſhould he haue hid himſelfe, rather then the other Iſraelites? yet could hee not hope his ſubducing himſelfe, could diſappoint the purpoſe of God: Hee well knew, that hee, which found out and deſigned his name amongſt the thouſands of Iſrael, would eaſily finde out his perſon in a Tent: When once we know Gods decree, in vaine ſhall we ſtriue againſt it: Before we know it, it is indifferent for vs to worke to the likelieſt.

I cannot blame Saul for hiding himſelfe from a Kingdome, eſpecially of Iſrael: Honour is heauy, when it comes vpon the beſt tearmes: How ſhould it bee otherwiſe, when all mens cares are caſt vpon one? but moſt of all in a troubled eſtate? No man can put to Sea without danger, but he that lancheth out in a tempeſt, can expect nothing but the hardeſt euent; ſuch was the condition of Iſrael: Their old enemie the Philiſtims were ſtilled with that fearfull thunder of God, as finding what it was to warre againſt the Almighty. There were aduerſaries enough beſides in their borders: It was but an hollow truce, that was betwixt Iſrael and their heatheniſh neighbours; and Nahaſh was now at their gates. Well did Saul know the difference betweene a peacefull gouernment, and the perillous and weariſome tumults of warre. The quieteſt Throne is full of cares, but the perplexed, of dangers. Cares and dangers droue Saul into this corner to hide his head from a Crowne: Theſe made him chuſe rather to lye obſcurely among the baggage of his Tent, then to ſit gloriouſly in the Throne of State. This hiding could doe nothing but ſhew, that both he ſuſpected leſt hee ſhould be choſen, and deſired hee ſhould not be choſen: That God from whom the hils and the rockes could not conceale him, brings him forth to the light, ſo much more longed for, as he was more vnwilling to be ſeene, and more applauded, as he was more longed for.

Now then when Saul is drawne forth in the middeſt of the eager expectation of Iſrael, modeſty and godlineſſe ſhewed themſelues in his face: The preaſe cannot hide him, whom the ſtuffe had hid; As if hee had beene made to bee ſeene, hee ouerlookes all Iſrael in height of ſtature, for preſage of the eminence of his eſtate, (from the ſhoulders vpward was he higher then any of the people.) Iſrael ſees their lots are falne vpon a noted man, one, whoſe perſon ſhewed, he was borne to be a King, and now all the people ſhout for ioy; they haue their longing, and applaud their owne happineſſe, and their Kings honour: How eaſie is it for vs to miſtake our owne eſtates? to reioyce in that which wee ſhall find the iuſt cauſe of our humiliation? The end of a thing is better then the beginning; the ſafeſt way is to reſerue our ioy, till wee haue good proofe of the worthineſſe and fitneſſe of the obiect. What are we the better for hauing a bleſſing, if we know not how to vſe it? The office and obſeruance of a King was vncowth to Iſrael: Samuel therefore informes the people of their mutuall duties, and writes them in a booke, and layes it vp before the Lord; otherwiſe, noueltie might haue beene a warrant for their ignorance, and ignorance for neglect: there are reciprocall reſpects of Princes and people, which if they bee not obſerued, gouernment languiſheth into confuſion; theſe Samuel faithfully teacheth them. Though hee may not be their iudge, yet he will be their Prophet; he will inſtruct, if hee may not rule; yea he will inſtruct him that ſhall rule: There is no King abſolute, but he, that is the King of all gods: Earthly monarchs muſt walk by a rule, which if they tranſgreſſe, they ſhall be accountable to him, that is higher then the higheſt, who hath deputed them. Not out of care of ciuilitie, ſo much as conſcience, muſt euery Samuel labour to keepe euen termes betwixt Kings and Subiects, preſcribing iuſt moderation to the one, to the other obedience and loyalty, which who euer endeauors to trouble, is none of the friends of God, or his Church.

The moſt and beſt applaud their new King, ſome wicked ones deſpiſed him, and ſaid, How ſhall he ſaue vs? It was not the might of his Parents, the goodlineſſe of his perſon, the priuiledge of his lot, the fame of his propheſying, the panegyricke of Samuel, that could ſhield him from contempt, or winne him the hearts of all: There was neuer yet any man, to whom ſome tooke not exceptions; It is not poſſible either to pleaſe or diſpleaſe all men, while ſome men are in loue with vice, as deepely, as others with vertue, and ſome (as ill) diſlike vertue, if not for it ſelfe, yet for contradiction. They well ſaw, Saul choſe not himſelfe, they ſaw him worthy to haue beene choſen, if the Election ſhould haue beene carried by voyces, and thoſe voyces by their eyes; they ſaw him vnwilling to hold, or yeeld, when he was choſen; yet they will enuy him: What fault could they finde in him whom God had choſen? His parentage was equall, his perſon aboue them, his inward parts more aboue them then the outward; Malecontents will rather deuiſe then want cauſes of flying out, and rather then faile, the vniuerſall approbation of others is ground enough of their diſlike. It is a vaine ambition of thoſe, that would be loued of all: The ſpirit of God when he enioynes vs peace withall, he addes, [if it be poſſible] and fauour is more then peace; A mans comfort muſt be in himſelfe, the conſcience of deſeruing well.

The neighbouring Ammonites could not but haue heard of Gods fearfull vengeance vpon the Philiſtims, and yet they will bee taking vp the quarrell againſt Iſrael: Nahaſh comes vp againſt Iabeſh Gilead: Nothing but grace can teach vs to make vſe of others iudgements; wicked men are not moued with ought, that fals beſide them; they truſt nothing but their owne ſmart: What fearfull iudgements doth God execute euery day? reſolute ſinners take no notice of them, and are growne ſo peremptorie, as if God had neuer ſhewed diſlike of their wayes.

The Gileadites were not more baſe, then Nahaſh the Ammonite was cruell: The Gileadites would buy their peace with ſeruility, Nahaſh would ſell them a ſeruile peace for their right eyes. Iephtha the Gileadite did yet ſticke in the ſtomacke of Ammon, and now they thinke their reuenge cannot bee too bloody: It is a wonder, that hee, which would offer ſo mercileſſe a condition to Iſrael, would yeeld to the motion of any delay; Hee meant nothing but ſhame and death to the Iſraelites, yet hee condiſcends to a ſeuen dayes reſpit: Perhaps his confidence made him thus careleſſe. Howſoeuer, it was the reſtraint of God that gaue this breath to Iſrael, and this opportunity to Sauls courage and victorie: The enemies of Gods Church cannot bee ſo malicious as they would, cannot approue themſelues ſo malicious, as they are; God ſo holds them in ſometimes, that a ſtander-by would thinke them fauourable. The newes of Gileads diſtreſſe had ſoone filled and afflicted Iſrael, the people thinke of no remedie but their pittie and teares: Euills are eaſily grieued for, not eaſily redreſſed: Onely Saul is more ſtirred with indignation then ſorrow; That GOD which put into him a ſpirit of propheſie, now puts into him a ſpirit of fortitude: Hee was before appointed to the Throne, not ſetled in the Throne; he followed the beaſts in the field, when he ſhould haue commanded men.

Now as one that would be a King no leſſe by merit, then election, he takes vpon him, and performes the reſcue of Gilead; he aſſembles Iſrael, he leades them, he raiſeth the ſiege, breakes the troopes, cuts the throats of the Ammonites. When God hath any exploit to performe, he raiſeth vp the heart of ſome choſen Inſtrument with heroicall motions for the atchieuement: When all hearts are cold and dead, it is a ſigne of intended deſtruction.

This day hath made Saul a compleat King, and now the thankfull Iſraelites begin to enquire after thoſe diſcontented Mutiners, which had refuſed allegeance vnto ſo worthy a Commander (Bring thoſe men, that we may ſlay them:) This ſedition had deſerued death, though Saul had beene foiled at Gilead; but now his happy victorie whets the people much more to a deſire of this iuſt execution. Saul, to whom the iniurie was done, hinders the reuenge, (There ſhall no man dye this day, for to day the Lord hath ſaued Iſrael) that his fortitude might not goe beyond his mercy. How noble were theſe beginnings of Saul? His Propheſie ſhewed him miraculouſly wiſe, his Battell and Victory no leſſe valiant, the pardon of his Rebels, as mercifull: There was not more power ſhewed in ouercomming the Ammonites, then in ouercomming himſelfe, and the impotent malice of theſe mutinous Iſraelites. Now Iſrael ſees they haue a King, that can both ſhed blood, and ſpare it; that can ſhed the Ammonites blood, and ſpare theirs: His mercy winnes thoſe hearts, whom his valour could not. As in God, ſo in his Deputies, Mercy and Iuſtice ſhould be inſeparable: whereſoeuer theſe two goe aſunder, gouernment followes them into diſtraction, and ends in ruine. If it had beene a wrong offered to Samuel, the forbearance of the reuenge had not beene ſo commendable, although vpon the day of ſo happy a deliuerance, perhaps it had not beene ſeaſonable: A man hath reaſon to be moſt bold with himſelfe; It is no praiſe of Mercy (ſince it is a fault in Iuſtice) to remit another mans ſatisfaction, his owne he may.

Euery one can be a friend to him that proſpereth: By this victory hath Saul as well conquered the obſtinacy of his owne people: Now there is no Iſraelite that reioyceth not in Sauls Kingdome. No ſooner haue they done obiecting to Saul, then Samuel begins to expoſtulate with them: The ſame day wherein they began to bee pleaſed, God ſhewes himſelfe angry: All the paſſages of their proceedings offended him, he deferred to let them know it till now, that the Kingdome was ſetled, and their hearts lifted vp: Now doth God coole their courage and ioy, with a backe reckoning for their forwardneſſe. God will not let his people runne away with the arrerages of their ſinnes, but when they leaſt thinke of it, calls them to an account: All this while was God angry with their reiection of Samuel, yet (as if there had beene nothing but peace) he giues them a victory ouer their enemies, he giues way to their ioy in their election; now hee lets them know, that after their peace-offerings, he hath a quarrell with them. God may bee angry enough with vs, whiles we outwardly proſper: It is the wiſedome of God to take his beſt aduantages; He ſuffers vs to goe on, till wee ſhould come to enioy the fruit of our ſinne, till wee ſeeme paſt the danger, either of conſcience or puniſhment; then (euen when wee begin ginne to be paſt the feeling of our ſinne) we ſhall beginne to feele his diſpleaſure for our ſinnes: This is onely where he loues, where he would both forgiue and reclaime; he hath now to doe with his Iſrael: But where he meanes vtter vengeance, he lets men harden themſelues to a reprobate ſenſleſneſſe, and make vp their owne meaſure without contradiction, as purpoſing to reckon with them but once for euer.

Samuel had diſſwaded them before, he reproues them not, vntill now: If hee had thus bent himſelfe againſt them, ere the ſetling of the election, hee had troubled Iſrael in that, which God tooke occaſion by their ſinne to eſtabliſh; His oppoſition would haue ſauoured of reſpects to himſelfe, whom the wrong of this innouation chiefly concerned: Now therefore when they are ſure of their King, and their King of them, when he hath ſet eauen termes betwixt them mutually, hee lets them ſee, how they were at odds with God: Wee muſt euer diſlike ſinnes, wee may not euer ſhew it: Diſcretion in the choice of ſeaſons for reprouing, is no leſſe commendable and neceſſary, then zeale and faithfulneſſe in reprouing: Good Phiſitians vſe not to euacuate the body in extremities of heat or cold; wiſe Mariners doe not hoiſe ſayles in euery wind.

Firſt doth Samuel beginne to cleare his owne innocence, ere hee dare charge them with their ſinne: He that will caſt a ſtone at an offender, muſt be free himſelfe, otherwiſe he condemnes, and executes himſelfe in another perſon: The conſcience ſtops the mouth of the guilty man, and chokes him with that ſinne, which lyes in his owne breſt, and hauing not come forth by a penitent confeſſion, cannot find the way out in a reproofe; or if he doe reproue, he doth more ſhame himſelfe, then reforme another. He that was the Iudge of Iſrael, would not now iudge himſelfe, but would bee iudged by Iſrael; Whoſe Oxe haue I taken? whoſe Aſſe haue I taken? or to whom haue I done wrong? No doubt, Samuel found himſelfe guilty before God of many priuate infirmities, but for his publike carriage he appeales to men: A mans heart can beſt iudge of himſelfe; others can beſt iudge of his actions. As another mans conſcience and approbation cannot beare vs out before God; ſo cannot our owne before men: For oft times that action is cenſured by the beholders, as wrongfull, wherein we applaud our owne iuſtice. Happy is that man, that can bee acquited by himſelfe in priuate, in publike by others, by God in both; ſtanders by may ſee more: It is very ſafe for a man to looke into himſelfe by others eyes; in vaine ſhall a mans heart abſolue him, that is condemned by his actions.

It was not ſo much the tryall of his cariage, that Samuel appealed for, as his iuſtification, not for his owne comfort, ſo much as their conuiction: His innocence hath not done him ſeruice enough, vnleſſe it ſhame them, and make them confeſſe themſelues faulty. In ſo many yeares wherein Samuel iudged Iſrael, it cannot be, but many thouſand cauſes paſſed his hands, wherein both parties could not poſſibly be pleaſed; yet ſo cleere doth he find his heart, and hands, that he dare make the grieued part iudges of his iudgement: A good conſcience will make a man vndauntedly confident, and dare put him vpon any tryall, where his owne heart ſtrikes him not, it bids him challenge all the world, and take vp all commers: How happy a thing is it for a man to be his owne friend, and patron? Hee needs not to feare forraine broyles, that is at peace at home: Contrarily, hee that hath a falſe and foule heart, lyes at euery mans mercy; liues ſlauiſhly, and is faine to dawbe vp a rotten peace with the baſeſt conditions. Truth is not afraid of any light, and therefore dare ſuffer her wares to be caryed from a dim ſhop-board vnto the ſtreet doore: Perfect gold will be but the purer with trying, whereas falſhood being a worke of darkneſſe, loues darkneſſe, and therefore ſeekes where it may worke cloſeſt.

This very appellation cleared Samuel, but the peoples atteſtation cleared him more: Innocency and vprightneſſe becomes euery man well, but moſt publike perſons, who ſhall be elſe obnoxious to euery offender. The Throne and the Pulpit (of all places) call for holineſſe, not more for example of good, then for liberty of controlling euill: All Magiſtrates ſweare to doe that, which Samuel proteſted hee hath done; if their oath were ſo verified, as Samuels proteſtation, it were a ſhame for the State not to be happy: The ſinnes of our Teachers are the teachers of ſinne; the ſinnes of Gouernours doe both command, and countenance euill: This very acquiting of Samuel was the accuſation of themſelues: For how could it bee but faulty to caſt off a faultleſſe Gouernour? If he had not taken away an Oxe, or an Aſſe from them, why doe they take away his authoritie? They could not haue thus cleared Saul at the end of his raigne; It was iuſt with God, ſince they were wearie of a iuſt Ruler, to puniſh them with an vniuſt.

He that appealed to them for his owne vprightneſſe, durſt not appeale to them for their owne wickedneſſe, but appeales to Heauen from them. Men are commonly flatterers of their owne caſes: It muſt be a ſtrong euidence, that will make a ſinner conuicted in himſelfe: Nature hath ſo many ſhifts to coozen it ſelfe in this ſpirituall verdict, that vnleſſe it be taken in the manner, it will hardly yeeld to a truth; either ſhee will denie the fact, or the fault, or the meaſure; And now in this caſe they might ſeeme to haue ſome faire pretences: For though Samuel was righteous, yet his ſonnes were corrupt. To cut off all excuſes therefore, Samuel appeales to God (the higheſt Iudge) for his ſentence of their ſinne, and dares truſt to a miraculous conuiction. It was now their Wheat Harueſt: the hot and dry ayre of their climate did not wont to afford in that ſeaſon ſo much moiſt vapour, as might raiſe a cloud either for raine, or thunder: He that knew God could, and would doe both theſe, without the helpe of ſecond cauſes, puts the triall vpon this iſſue. Had not Samuel before conſulted with his Maker, and receiued warrant for his act, it had beene preſumption and tempting of God, which was now a noble improuement of faith: Rather then Iſrael ſhall goe cleare away with a ſinne, God will accuſe and araigne them from heauen. No ſooner hath Samuels voyce ceaſed, then Gods voyce begins: Euery cracke of thunder ſpake iudgement againſt the rebellious Iſraelites, and euery drop of raine, a witneſſe of their ſin; and now they found they had diſpleaſed him, which ruleth in the Heauen, by reiecting the man that ruled for him on Earth: The thundering voyce of God, that had lately in their ſight confounded the Philiſtims, they now vnderſtood to ſpeake fearfull things againſt them. No maruell, if now they fell vpon their knees, not to Saul, whom they had choſen, but to Samuel, who being thus caſt off by them, is thus countenanced in Heauen.

SAVLS Sacrifice.

GOD neuer meant the Kingdome ſhould either ſtay long in the Tribe of Beniamin, or remoue ſuddenly from the perſon of Saul; Many yeares did Saul reigne ouer Iſrael; yet God computes him but two yeares a King: That is not accounted of God to be done, which is not lawfully done; when God, which chooſe Saul, reiected him, he was no more a King, but a Tyrant: Iſrael obeyed him ſtill, but God makes no reckoning of him, as his Deputie, but as an Vſurper.

Saul was of good yeares, when hee was aduanced to the Kingdome: His Sonne Ionathan, the firſt yeare of his Fathers Raigne, could lead a thouſand Iſraelites into the field, and giue a foyle to the Philiſtims: And now Iſrael could not thinke themſelues leſſe happy in their Prince, then in their King; Ionathan is the Heyre of his Fathers victorie, as well as of his valour, and his eſtate. The Philiſtims were quiet after thoſe firſt thunder-claps, all the time of Samuels gouernment, now they beginne to ſtirre vnder Saul.

hall, J.

How vtterly is Iſrael diſappointed in their hopes? That ſecuritie and protection, which they promiſed themſelues in the name of a King, they found in a Prophet, failed of in a Warriour. They were more ſafe vnder the mantle, then vnder armes: both enmitie and ſafeguard are from heauen, goodneſſe hath beene euer a ſtronger guard then valour: It is the ſureſt policy alwayes to haue peace with God.

We find by the ſpoyles, that the Philiſtims had ſome battels with Iſrael which are not recorded: After the thunder had ſcared them into a peace, and reſtitution of all the bordering Cities, from Ekron to Gath, they had taken new heart, and ſo beſlaued Iſrael, that they had neither weapon nor Smith left amongſt them, yet euen in this miſerable nakedneſſe of Iſrael, haue they both fought, and ouercome. Now might you haue ſeene the vnarmed Iſraelites marching with their Slings, and Plough-ſtaues, and Hookes, and Forkes, and other inſtruments of their husbandrie, againſt a mighty and well furniſhed enemie, and returning laded both with Armes and Victorie. No Armour is of proofe againſt the Almighty, neither is he vnweaponed, that caries the reuenge of God: There is the ſame diſaduantage in our ſpirituall conflicts; we are turned naked to principalities and powers; whilſt wee goe vnder the conduct of the Prince of our peace, we cannot but be bold and victorious.

Vaine men thinke to ouer-power God with munition and multitude: The Philiſtims are not any way more ſtrong, then in conceit: Thirty thouſand Chariots, ſixe thouſand Horſemen, Footmen like the ſand for number, makes them ſcorne Iſrael no leſſe, then Iſrael feares them. When I ſee the miraculous ſucceſſe, which had bleſſed the Iſraelites, in all their late conflicts with theſe very Philiſtims, with the Ammonites, I cannot but wonder, how they could feare: They, which in the time of their ſinne found God to raiſe ſuch Trophees ouer their enemies, runne now into Caues, and Rockes, and Pits, to hide them from the faces of men, when they found God reconciled, and themſelues penitent. No Iſraelite but hath ſome cowardly blood in him: If we had no feare, faith would haue no maſtery, yet theſe fearfull Iſraelites ſhall cut the throats of thoſe confident Philiſtims: Doubt and reſolution are not meet meaſures of our ſucceſſe: A preſumptuous confidence goes commonly bleeding home, when an humble feare returnes in triumph. Feare driues thoſe Iſraelites, which dare ſhew their heads, out of the Caues vnto Saul, and makes them cling vnto their new King: How troubleſome were the beginnings of Sauls honour? Surely, if that man had not exceeded Iſrael no leſſe in courage, then in ſtature, he had now hid himſelfe in a Caue, which before hid himſelfe among the ſtuffe: But now, though the Iſraelites ranne away from him, yet he ranne not away from them: It was not any doubt of Sauls valour, that put his people to their heeles, it was the abſence of Samuel: If the Prophet had come vp, Iſrael would neuer haue runne away from their King: Whiles they had a Samuel alone, they were neuer well till they had a Saul, now they haue a Saul, they are as farre from contentment, becauſe they want a Samuel; vnleſſe both ioyne together, they think there can be no ſafety. Where the Temporal and Spirituall State combine not together, there can follow nothing but diſtraction in the people: The prophets receiue and deliuer the will of God, Kings execute it: The Prophets are directed by God, the people are directed by their Kings. Where men doe not ſee God before them in his Ordinances, their hearts cannot but faile them, both in their reſpects to their Superiours, and their courage in themſelues. Piety is the Mother of perfect ſubiection: As all authority is deriued from heauen, ſo it is thence eſtabliſhed; Thoſe Gouernours that would command the hearts of men, muſt ſhew them God in their faces.

No Iſraelite can thinke himſelfe ſafe without a Prophet: Saul had giuen them good proofe of his fortitude, in his late victorie ouer the Ammonites, but then Proclamation was made before the fight through all the Country, that euery man ſhould come vp after Saul and Samuel: If Samuel had not beene with Saul, they would rather haue ventured the loſſe of their oxen, then the hazard of themſelues. How much leſſe ſhould we preſume of any ſafety in our ſpiritual combats, when we haue not a Prophet to leade vs? It is all one (ſauing that it ſauours of more contempt) not to haue Gods Seers, and not to vſe them: He can be no true Iſraelite, that is not diſtreſſed with the want of a Samuel.

As one that had learned to beginne his rule in obedience, Saul ſtayes ſeuen dayes in Gilgal, according to the Prophets direction, and ſtill he lookes long for Samuel, which had promiſed his preſence; ſixe dayes he expects, and part of the ſeuenth, yet Samuel is not come: The Philiſtims draw neere, the Iſraelites runne away, Samuel comes not, they muſt fight, God muſt bee ſupplicated, what ſhould Saul doe? rather then God ſhould want a ſacrifice, and the people ſatisfaction, Saul will command that, which he knew Samuel would, if he were preſent, both command, and execute: It is not poſſible (thinkes he) that God ſhould be diſpleaſed with a ſacrifice, he cannot but bee diſpleaſed with indeuotion: Why doe the people runne from me, but for want of meanes to make God ſure? What ſhould Samuel rather wiſh, then that we ſhould be godly? The act ſhall be the ſame, the onely difference ſhall be in the perſon: If Samuel be wanting to vs, we will not be wanting to God; it is but an holy preuention to be deuout vnbidden: Vpon this conceit he commands a ſacrifice; Sauls ſinnes make no great ſhew, yet are they ſtill hainouſly taken, the impiety of them was more hidden, and inward from all eyes, but Gods. If Saul were among the Prophets before, will he now be among the Prieſts? Can there bee any deuotion in diſobedience? O vaine man! What can it auaile thee to ſacrifice to God againſt God? Hypocrites reſt onely in formalities; If the outward act be done, it ſufficeth them, though the ground be diſtruſt, the manner vnreuerence, the cariage preſumption.

What then ſhould Saul haue done? Vpon the truſt of God and Samuel he ſhould haue ſtayed out the laſt houre, and haue ſecretly ſacrificed himſelfe, and his prayers vnto that God, which loues Obedience aboue Sacrifice. Our faith is moſt commendable in the laſt act; It is no praiſe to hold out, vntill wee be hard driuen: Then, when we are forſaken of meanes, to liue by faith in our God, is worthy of a Crowne: God will haue no worſhip of our deuiſing, we may onely doe what he bids vs, not bid what he commands not. Neuer did any true piety ariſe out of the corrupt puddle of mans braine; If it flow not from Heauen, it is odious to Heauen: What was it, that did thus taint the valour of Saul with this weakneſſe, but diſtruſt? Hee ſaw ſome Iſraelites goe, he thought all would goe; he ſaw the Philiſtims come, he ſaw Samuel came not, his diffidence was guilty of his miſdeuotion: There is no ſinne, that hath not his ground from vnbeleefe; This as it was the firſt infection of our pure nature, ſo is the true ſource of all corruption; man could not ſinne, if he diſtruſted not.

The Sacrifice is no ſooner ended, then Samuel is come: and why came he no ſooner? He could not be a Seer, and not know how much hee was lookt for, how troubleſome and dangerous his abſence muſt needs be; He, that could tell Saul, that hee ſhould propheſie, could tell, that he would ſacrifice; yet hee purpoſely forbeares to come, for the tryall of him, that muſt be the Champion of God. Samuel durſt not haue done thus, but by direction from his Maſter: It is the ordinary courſe of God to proue vs by delayes, and to driue to exigents, that we may ſhew what we are: He that anointed Saul, might lawfully from God controll him: There muſt bee diſcretion, there may not be partiality in our cenſures of the greateſt: God makes difference of ſinnes, none of perſons: if we make difference of ſinnes according to perſons, we are vnfaithfull both to God and man. Scarce is Saul warme in his kingdome, when hee hath euen loſt it. Samuels firſt words after the Inauguration, are of Sauls reiection, and the choice and eſtabliſhment of his Succeſſor: It was euer Gods purpoſe to ſettle the Kingdome in Iudah: He that tooke occaſion by the peoples ſinne to raiſe vp Saul in Beniamin, takes occaſion by Sauls ſinne to eſtabliſh the Crowne vpon Dauid. In humane probability the Kingdome was fixed vpon Saul, and his more worthy Sonne: In Gods Decree it did but paſſe through the hands of Beniamin to Iudah. Beſides trouble, how fickle are theſe earthly glories? Saul doubtleſſe lookt vpon Ionathan, as the Inheritor of his Crowne; and behold, ere his peaceable Poſſeſſion, he hath loſt it from himſelfe : Our ſinnes ſtrip vs not of our hopes in heauen onely, but of our earthly bleſſings ; The way to entaile a comfortable proſperity vpon our Seed after vs, is our conſcionable obedience vnto God.

IONATHANS Victory, and SAVLS Oath.

IT is no wonder if Sauls courage were much cooled with the heauy newes of his reiection : After this he ſtayes vnder the Pomgranate tree in Gibeah : He ſtirs not towards the Gariſon of the Philiſtims : As Hope is the mother of Fortitude, ſo nothing doth more breed cowardlineſſe, then deſpaire : Euery thing diſmayes that heart, which God hath put out of protection. Worthy Ionathan (which ſprung from Saul as ſome ſweet Impe growes out of a Crabſtocke) is therefore full of valour, becauſe full of faith : He well knew, that he ſhould haue nothing, but diſcouragements from his fathers feare ; as rather chooſing therefore, to auoid all the blockes that might lye in the way, then to leape ouer them, he departs ſecretly without the diſmiſſion of his Father, or notice of the people ; onely Gods leads him, and his Armour-bearer followes him. O admirable faith of Ionathan, whom neither the ſteepneſſe of Rockes, nor the multitude of enemies can diſſwade from ſo vnlikely an aſſault ! Is it poſſible, that two men, whereof one was weaponleſſe, ſhould dare to thinke of incountring ſo many thouſands ? O Diuine Power of Faith, that in all difficulties and attempts, makes a man more then men, and regards no more armies of men, then ſwarmes of flyes ! There is no reſtraint to the Lord (ſaith he) to ſaue with many, or by few : It was not ſo great newes, that Saul ſhould be amongſt the Prophets, as that ſuch a word ſhould come from the Sonne of Saul.

If his Father had had but ſo much Diuinity, hee had not ſacrificed : The ſtrength of his God, is the ground of his ſtrength in God ; The queſtion is not, what Ionathan can doe, but what God can doe, whoſe power is not in the meanes, but in himſelfe : That mã's faith is well vnderlayed, that vpholds it ſelfe by the Omnipotency of God ; thus the Father of the faithfull built his aſſurance vpon the power of the Almighty. But many things God can doe, which he will not doe ; How knoweſt thou, Ionathan, that God will be as forward, as he is able, to giue thee victory ? For this (ſaith hee) I haue a watch-word from God, out of the mouthes of the Philiſtims : If they ſay, Come vp, we will goe vp ; for God hath deliuered them into our hands : If they ſay, Tarry, till we come to you, we will ſtand ſtill : Ionathan was too wiſe to truſt vnto a caſuall preſage : There might be ſome farre fetcht coniectures of the euent from the word ; We will come to you, was a threat of reſolution ; Come you to vs, was a challenge of feare ; or perhaps, Come vp to vs, was a word of inſultation, from them, that truſted to the inacceſſibleneſſe of the place, and multitudes of men. Inſultation is from pride, pride argued a fall, but faith hath nothing to doe with probabilities, as that, which acknowledgeth no Argument, but demonſtration ; If there had not beene an inſtinct from GOD of this aſſured warrant of ſucceſſe, Ionathan had preſumed, in ſtead of beleeuing, and had tempted that GOD, whom hee profeſſed to glorifie by his truſt.

There can be no faith, where there is no promiſe, and where there is a promiſe, there can be no preſumption : Words are voluntary ; The tongues of the Philiſtims were as free to ſay, Tarry, as Come: That God, in whom our very tongues moue, ouer-ruled them ſo, as now they ſhall ſpeake that word, which ſhall cut their owne throats: They knew no more harme in Come, then Tarry; both were alike ſafe for the ſound, for the ſenſe; but he, that put a ſignification of their ſlaughter in the one, not in the other, did put that word into their mouth, wherby they might inuite their owne deſtruction. The diſpoſition of our words are from the prouidence of the Almighty: God and our hearts haue not alwayes the ſame meaning in our ſpeeches: In thoſe words, which we ſpeake at randome, or out of affectation, God hath a further drift of his owne glory, and perhaps our iudgment. If wicked men ſay, Our tongues are our owne, they could not ſay ſo, but from him, whom they defie in ſaying ſo, and who makes their tongue their executioner.

No ſooner doth Ionathan heare this inuitation, then hee anſwers it: Hee, whoſe hands had learned neuer to faile his heart, puts himſelfe vpon his hands and knees to climbe vp into this danger: the exploit was not more difficult, then the way, the paine of the paſſage was equall to the perill of the enterprize; that his faith might equally triumph ouer both: he doth not ſay, how ſhall I get vp? much leſſe; which way ſhall I get downe againe? but as if the ground were leuell, and the action dangerleſſe, he puts himſelfe into the view of the Philiſtims: Faith is neuer ſo glorious, as when it hath moſt oppoſition, and will not ſee it: Reaſon lookes euer to the meanes, Faith to the end; and in ſtead of conſulting, how to effect, reſolues what ſhall be effected. The way to heauen is more ſteepe more painfull: O God! how perillous a paſſage haſt thou appointed for thy labouring Pilgrims? If difficulties will diſcourage vs, we ſhall but climbe to fall: When we are lifting vp our foot to the laſt ſtep, there are the Philiſtims of death, of temptations, to grapple with; giue vs but faith, and turne vs looſe to the ſpight either of Earth or Hell.

Ionathan is now on the top of the hil, and now, as if hee had an army at his heeles, he flyes vpon the hoſt of the Philiſtims; his hands that might haue beene weary with climbing, are immediately commanded to fight, and deale as many deaths, as blowes, to the amazed enemie: He needs not walke farre for this execution; Himſelfe, and his Armour-bearer in one halfe acres ſpace haue ſlaine twenty Philiſtims. It is not long ſince Ionathan ſmote their Gariſon in the hill of Geba, perhaps, from that time his name and preſence carried terror in it; but ſure if the Philiſtims had not ſeene and felt more then a man in the face and hands of Ionathan, they had not ſo eaſily groueled in death: The blowes and ſhrikes cannot but affect the next, who with a ghaſtly noiſe ranne away from death, and afright their fellowes no leſſe then themſelues are afrighted. The clamour and feare runnes on like fire in a traine, to the very formoſt rankes; Euery man would flye, and thinkes there is ſo much more cauſe of flight, for that his eares apprehend all, his eyes nothing: Each man thinkes his fellow ſtands in his way, and therefore in ſtead of turning vpon him which was the cauſe of their flight, they bend their ſwords vpon thoſe whom they imagine to be the hinderers of their flight; and now a miraculous aſtoniſhment hath made the Philiſtims, Ionathans Champions, and Executioners; He followes, and kils thoſe which helped to kill others: and the more he killed, the more they feared, and fled, and the more they killed each other in the flight: and that feare it ſelfe might preuent Ionathan in killing them, the Earth it ſelfe trembles vnder them. Thus doth God at once ſtrike them with his owne hand, with Ionathans, with theirs, and makes them runne away from life, whiles they would flye from an enemie: Where the Almighty purpoſes deſtruction to any people, hee needs not call in forraigne powers, he needs not any hands or weapons, but their own; He can make vaſt bodies dye no other death, then their owne waight: We cannot bee ſure to be friends among our ſelues, whiles God is our enemie.

The Philiſtims flye faſt, but the newes of their flight ouer-runnes them euen vnto Sauls Pomegranate Tree: The Watchmen diſcerne afarre off, a flight and execution: ſearch is made, Ionathan is found miſſing; Saul will conſult with the Arke: Hypocrites while they haue leiſure, will perhaps be holy: For ſome fits of deuotion they cannot bee bettered. But when the tumult encreaſed, Sauls piety decreaſes: It is now no ſeaſon to talke with a Prieſt; withdraw thine hand Ahaiah, the Ephod muſt giue place to Armes: It is more time to fight then to pray; what needs he Gods guidance, when he ſees his way before him? He that before would needs ſacrifice, ere he fought, will now in the other extreame, fight in a wilfull indeuotion: Worldly minds regard holy duties no further, then may ſtand with their owne carnall purpoſes: Very eaſie occaſions ſhall interrupt them in their religious intentions; like vnto children which if a Bird doe but flye in their way, caſt their eye from their booke.

But if Saul ſerue not God in one kind, he will ſerue him in another, if he honour him not by attending on the Arke, hee will honour him by a vow: His negligence in the one, is recompenced with his zeale in the other. All Iſrael is adiured not to eate any food vntill the euening: Hypocriſie is euer masked with a blind and thankleſſe zeale: To wait vpon the Arke, and to conſult with Gods Prieſt in all caſes of importance, was a direct commandement of God; To eate no food in the purſuit of their enemies was not commanded: Saul leaues that which he was bidden, and does that which he was not required: To eate no food all day was more difficult, then to attend an houre vpon the Arke; The voluntarie ſeruices of Hypocrites are many times more painfull, then the duties enioyned by God.

In what awe did all Iſrael ſtand of the Oath euen of Saul? It was not their owne vow, but Sauls for them; yet comming into the Wood, where they ſaw the Honey dropping; and found the meat as ready as their appetite; they dare not touch that ſuſtenance, and will rather endure famine, and fainting, then an indiſcreet curſe. Doubtleſſe God had brought thoſe Bees thither on purpoſe to try the conſtancy of Iſrael; Iſrael could not but thinke (that which Ionathan ſaid) that the vow was vnaduiſed and iniurious; yet they will rather dye then violate it: How ſacred ſhould wee hold the obligation of our owne vowes in things iuſt and expedient, when the bond of anothers raſh vow is thus indiſſoluble.

There was a double miſchiefe followed vpon Sauls oath, an abatement of the victorie, and eating with the blood: For, on the one ſide, the people were ſo faint that they were more likely to dye, then kill; they could neither runne, nor ſtrike in this emptineſſe; Neither hands nor feet can doe their office, when the ſtomacke is neglected: On the other, an vnmeet forbearance cauſes a rauenous repaſt: Hunger knowes neither choyce, nor order, nor meaſure: The one of theſe was a wrong to Iſrael, the other was a wrong done by Iſrael to God: Sauls zeale was guilty of both: A raſh vow is ſeldome euer free from inconuenience: The heart that hath vnneceſſarily intangled it ſelfe, drawes miſchiefe either vpon it ſelfe or others.

Ionathan was ignorant of his fathers adiuration, he knew no reaſon why he ſhould not refreſh himſelfe in ſo profitable a ſeruice, with a little taſte of Honey vpon his Speare: Full well had he deſerued this vnſought dainty; and now behold his Honey is turned into Gall: if it were ſweet in the mouth, it was bitter in the ſoule; if the eyes of his body were enlightned, the light of Gods countenance was clouded by this act. After he heard of the oath, he pleades iuſtly againſt it, the loſſe of ſo faire an opportunity of reuenge, and the trouble of Iſrael; yet neither his reaſons againſt the Oath, nor his ignorance of the Oath, can excuſe him from a ſinne of ignorance in violating that, which firſt he knew not, and then knew vnreaſonable. Now Sauls leiſure would ſerue him to aske counſell of God; As before Saul would not enquire, ſo now God will not anſwer: Well might Saul haue found ſinnes enow of his owne, whereto to impute this ſilence: He hath grace enough to know that God was offended, and to gueſſe at the cauſe of his offence: Sooner will an Hypocrite find out another mans ſinne then his owne; and now he ſweares more raſhly to puniſh with death, the breach of that, which he had ſworne raſhly: The lots were caſt, and Saul prayes for the deciſion; Ionathan is taken: Euen the prayers of wicked men are ſometimes heard, although in iuſtice, not in mercy: Saul himſelfe was puniſhed not a little, in the fall of this lot vpon Ionathan; Surely Saul ſinned more in making this vow, then Ionathan in breaking it vnwittingly, and now the father ſmarts for the raſhneſſe of his double vow, by the vniuſt ſentence of death vpon ſo worthy a ſonne: God had neuer ſingled out Ionathan by his lot, if he had not beene diſpleaſed with his act: Vowes raſhly made may not be raſhly broken; If the thing we haue vowed be not euill in it ſelfe, or in the effect, we cannot violate it without euill. Ignorance cannot acquite, if it can abate our ſinne. It is like, if Ionathan had heard his fathers adiuration, hee had not tranſgreſſed; his abſence at the time of that Oath, cannot excuſe him from diſpleaſure: What ſhall become of thoſe, which may know the charge of their heauenly Father, and will not? which doe know his charge, and will not keepe it? Affectation of ignorance, and willing diſobedience, is deſperate.

Death was too hard a cenſure for ſuch an vnknowne offence: The cruell piety of Saul will reuenge the breach of his owne charge, ſo as he would be loath God ſhould auenge on himſelfe the breach of his diuine command. If Ionathan had not found better friends then his father, ſo noble a victory had beene recompenced with death; Hee that ſaued Iſrael from the Philiſtims, is ſaued by Iſrael from the hand of his Father: Saul hath ſworne Ionathans death, the people contrarily ſweare his preſeruation; his Kingdome was not yet ſo abſolute, that hee could runne away with ſo vnmercifull a Iuſtice; their Oath that ſauoured of diſobedience preuailed againſt his Oath that ſauoured too ſtrong of cruelty: Neither doubt I, but Saul was ſecretly not diſpleaſed with this louing reſiſtance: So long as his heart was not falſe to his Oath, he could not be ſory that Ionathan ſhould liue.

RIGHT HONOVRABLE:

AFter your long and happy acquaintance with other Courts and Kingdomes, may it pleaſe you to compare with them the eſtate of old Iſrael; You ſhall find the ſame hand ſwaying all Scepters, and you ſhall meet with ſuch a proportion of diſpoſitions, and occurrences, that you will ſay, men are ſtill the ſame, if their names and faces differ: You ſhall find Enuy and Mutability ancient Courtiers: and ſhall confeſſe the Vices of men ſtill aliue, if themſelues dye; You ſhall ſee God ſtill honouring thoſe that honour him, and both reſcuing Innocence, and crowning it. It is not for mee to anticipate your deeper and

SAVL and AGAG.

GOd holds it no derogation from his mercy to beare a quarrell long, where hee hates: Hee, whoſe anger to the veſſels of wrath, is euerlaſting, euen in temporall iudgement reuengeth late: The ſinnes of his owne children are no ſooner done, and repented of, then forgotten; but the malicious ſinnes of his enemies ſticke faſt in an infinite diſpleaſure. (I remember what Amalek did to Iſrael, how they laid wait for them by the way, as they came vp from Ægypt:) Alas, Lord (might Amalek ſay) they were our forefathers, wee neuer knew their faces, no not their names, the fact was ſo farre from our conſent, that it is almoſt paſt the memory of our hiſtories. It is not in the power of time to raze out any of the arerages of God: we may lay vp wrath for our poſteritie: Happy is that childe, whoſe progenitors are in heauen, hee is left an inheritor of bleſſing together with eſtate, whereas wicked anceſtors loſe the thanke of a rich patrimony, by the curſe that attends it: Hee that thinkes becauſe puniſhment is deferd, that God hath forgiuen, or forgot his offence, is vnacquainted with iuſtice, and knowes not, that time makes no difference in eternity.

The Amalekites were wicked Idolaters, and therefore could not want many preſent ſinnes, which deſerued their extirpation. That God, which had taken notice of all their offences, picks out this one noted ſinne of their forefathers, for reuenge: Amongſt all their indignities, this ſhall beare the name of their iudgement: As in legall proceedings with malefactors, one inditement found, giues the ſtile of their condemnation. In the liues of thoſe, which are notoriouſly wicked, God cannot looke beſides a ſinne, yet when he drawes to an execution, he faſtens his ſentence vpon one euill as principall, others as acceſſaries, ſo as at the laſt, one ſinne which perhaps wee make no account of, ſhall pay for all.

The paganiſh Idolatries of the Amalekites could not but bee greater ſinnes to God, then their hard meaſure to Iſrael, yet God ſets this vpon the file, whiles the reſt are not recorded; Their ſuperſtitions might bee of ignorance, this ſinne was of malice: Malicious wickedneſſes of all others, as they are in greateſt oppoſition to the goodneſſe and mercy of God, ſhall be ſure of the paiment of greateſt vengeance. The deteſtation of God may be meaſured by his reuenge (ſlay both man, and woman, both infant, and ſuckling, both Oxe, and Sheepe, Camell, and Aſſe) not themſelues onely, but euery thing that drew life either from them, or for their vſe, muſt dye: When the God of mercy ſpeakes ſuch bloody words, the prouocation muſt needs be vehement: ſinnes of infirmitie doe but mutter; ſpightfull ſinnes cry loud for iudgement in the eares of God: Prepenſed malice in courts of humane iuſtice aggrauates the murther, and ſharpens the ſentence of death.

What then was this ſinne of Amalek, that is called vnto this late reckoning? What? but thir enuious and vnprouoked onſets vpon the backe of Iſrael, this was it, that God tooke ſo to heart, as that hee not onely remembers it now by Samuel, but hee bids Iſrael euer to remember it, by Moſes: Remember how Amalek met thee by the way, and ſmote the hindmoſt of you, all that were feeble behind thee, when thou waſt faint and weary. Beſides this, did Amalek meet Iſrael in a pitcht battaile openly, in Rephidim, for that God payed them in the preſent: The hand of Moſes lifted vp on the Hill, ſlew them in the Valley: He therefore repeats not that quarrell; but the cowardly, and cruell attempts vpon an impotent enemy, ſticke ſtill in the ſtomacke of the Almighty: Oppreſſion and wrong vpon euen termes, are not ſo hainous vnto God, as thoſe, that are vpon manifeſt diſaduantage: In the one, there is an hazard of returne: In the other, there is euer a tyrannous inſultation: God takes ſtill the weaker part, and will be ſure therefore to plague them, which ſeeke to put iniuries on the vnable to reſiſt.

This ſinne of Amalek ſlept all the time of the Iudges, thoſe gouernours were onely for reſcue and defence; now ſo ſoone as Iſrael hath a King, and that King is ſetled in peace, God giues charge to call them to account: It was that, which God had both threatned and ſworne, and now he chooſes out a fit ſeaſon for the execution; As wee vſe to ſay of winter, the iudgements of God doe neuer rot in the Skie, but ſhall fall (if late, yet) ſurely, yet ſeaſonably: There is ſmall comfort in the delay of vengeance, whiles we are ſure it ſhall loſe nothing in the way, by length of protraction.

The Kenites were the off-ſprings of Hobad, or Iethro, father in law to Moſes; the affinitie of him, to whom Iſrael owed their deliuerance, and being, was worthy of reſpect; but it was the mercy of that good and wiſe Midianite ſhewed vnto Iſrael in the wilderneſſe, by his graue aduice, cheerefull gratulation, and aide, which wonne this gratefull forbearance of his poſteritie: He that is not leſſe in mercy, then in iuſtice, as he challenged Amaleks ſinne of their ſucceeding generations, ſo he deriues the recompence of Iethro's kindneſſe, vnto his far-deſcended iſſue: Thoſe, that were vnborne many ages after Iethro's death, receiue life from his duſt, and fauour from his hoſpitalitie; The name of their dead grandfather ſaues them from the common deſtruction of their neighbours. The ſeruices of our loue to Gods children are neuer thankleſſe; when we are dead and rotten, they ſhall liue and procure bleſſings to thoſe, which neuer knew perhaps, nor heard of their progenitors: If we ſow good workes, ſucceſſion ſhall reape them, and we ſhall be happy in making them ſo.

The Kenites dwelt in the borders of Amalek, but in tents, (as did their iſſue the Rechabites) ſo as they might remoue with eaſe: They are warned to ſhift their habitations, leſt they ſhould periſh with ill neighbours: It is the manner of God, firſt to ſeparate, before he iudge, as a good husband weeds his corne, ere it be ripe for the ſickle, and goes to the fanne, ere he goe to the fire. When the Kenites packe vp their fardels, it is time to expect iudgement. Why ſhould not wee imitate God, and ſeparate our ſelues that we may not be iudged? ſeparate, not one Kenite from another, but euery Kenite from among the Amalekites, elſe if we will needs liue with Amalek, we cannot thinke much to dye with him.

The Kenites are no ſooner remoued, then Saul fals vpon the Amalekites: Hee deſtroyes all the people, but ſpares their King: The charge of God was vniuerſall, for man and beaſt: In the corruption of partialitie, lightly the greateſt eſcape: Couetouſneſſe, or miſ-affection are commonly guilty of the impunity of thoſe, which are at once more eminent in dignity, and in offence: It is a ſhamefull hypocriſie to make our commoditie the meaſure and rule of our execution of Gods command, and vnder pretence of godlineſſe to pretend gaine: The vnprofitable vulgar muſt dye; Agag may yeeld a rich ranſome: The leane and feeble cattle, that would but ſpend ſtouer, and die alone, ſhall periſh by the ſword of Iſrael, the beſt may ſtocke the grounds, and furniſh the markets. O hypocrites, did God ſend you for gaine, or for reuenge? Went you to be purueyours, or executioners? If you plead, that all thoſe wealthy herds had beene but loſt, in a ſpeedy death, thinke yee that hee knew not this, which commanded it? Can that be loſt, which is deuoted to the will of the owner, and Creator? Or can yee thinke to gaine any thing by diſobedience? That man can neuer either do well, or fare well, which thinkes, there can be more profit in any thing, then in his obedience to his Maker: Becauſe Saul ſpared the beſt of the men, the people ſpared the beſt of the cattle, each is willing to fauour other in the ſinne. The ſinnes of the great command imitation, and doe as ſeldome goe without attendants as their perſons.

Saul knew well, how much he had done amiſſe, and yet dare meet Samuel, and can ſay, Bleſſed bee thou of the Lord, I haue fulfilled the Commandement of the Lord: His heart knew, that his tongue was as falſe, as his hands had beene; and if his heart had not beene more falſe then either of them, neither of them had beene ſo groſſe in their falſhood: If hypocriſie were not either fooliſh, or impudent, ſhee durſt not ſhew her head to a Seer of God. Could Saul thinke, that Samuel knew of the aſſes that were loſt, and did not know of the oxen and ſheepe, that were ſpared? Could hee foretell his thoughts, when it was, and now not know of his open actions? Much leſſe when we haue to doe with God himſelfe, ſhould diſſimulation preſume either of ſafety or ſecrecie? Can the God that made the heart not know it? Can hee, that comprehends all things, be ſhut out of our cloſe corners? Saul was otherwiſe crafty enough, yet herein his ſimplicitie is palpable: Sinne can beſot euen the wiſeſt man, and there was neuer but folly in wickedneſſe.

No man brags ſo much of holineſſe, as hee that wants it: True obedience is ioyned euer with humilitie, and feare of vnknowne errours; Falſhood is bold, and can ſay, I haue fulfilled the Commandement of the Lord: If Saul had beene truely obſequious and holy, he had made no noyſe of it: A gracious heart is not a blab of his tongue, but reſts and reioyceth ſilently in the conſcience of a ſecret goodneſſe; thoſe veſſels yeeld moſt ſound, that haue the leaſt liquor: Samuel had reaſon to beleeue the ſheepe, and oxen, aboue Saul; their bleating and lowing was a ſufficient conuiction of a denied and outfaced diſobedience: God opened their mouths to accuſe Saul of their life, and his falſhood; but, as ſinne is crafty, and neuer wanted a cloake, wherewith both to hide and decke it ſelfe; euen this very rebellion is holy: Firſt the act, if it were euill, was not mine but the peoples; and ſecondly, their intention makes it good; For theſe Flocks and Herds were preſerued, not for gaine, but for deuotion: What needs this quarrell? If any gaine by this act, it is the Lord thy God: His Altars ſhall ſmoake with theſe ſacrifices; yee, that ſerue at them, ſhall fare ſo much the better; this godly thriftineſſe lookes for thankes rather then cenſure. If Saul had beene in Samuels cloathes, perhaps this anſwere would haue ſatisfied him: Surely, himſelfe ſtands out in it, as that whereto hee dares truſt, and after hee heares of Gods angry reproofe; hee auowes, and doubles his hold of his innocency; as if the Commanders ſhould not anſwer for the knowne ſinnes of the people; as if our intentions could iuſtifie vs to God, againſt God. How much adoe it is to bring ſinners vpon their knees, and to make their tongues accuſe their hands? But it is no halting with the maker of the heart: Hee knew it was couetouſneſſe, and not piety, which was acceſſary to this forbearance; and if it had beene as was pretended, hee knew is was an odious impietie to raiſe deuotion out of diſobedience: Saul ſhall heare and finde, that he hath dealt no leſſe wickedly in ſparing an Agag, then in killing an innocent Iſraelite; in ſparing theſe beaſts for ſacrifice, then in ſacrificing beaſts that had beene vncleane. Why was ſacrifice it ſelfe good, but becauſe it was commanded?

What difference was there betwixt ſlaughter and ſacrifice, but obedience; To ſacrifice diſobediently, is wilfully to mocke God in honouring him.

The reiection of SAVL, and the choice of DAVID.

EVen when Saul had abandoned God in diſobedience, hee would not forgoe Samuel, yea, though hee reproued him; when he had forſaken the ſubſtance, yet hee would maintaine the formalitie; If hee cannot hold the man, he will keepe the pledge of his garment, ſuch was the violence of Sauls deſire, that he will rather rend Samuels coate, then part with his perſon. Little did Saul thinke, that he had in his hand the pawne of his owne reiection, that this act of kinde importunitie ſhould carie in it a preſage of his iudgement, yet ſo it did: This very rending of the coate was a reall propheſie, and did bode no leſſe then the rending of the Kingdome from him, and his poſteritie: Wicked men, whiles they thinke by carnall meanes to make their peace, plunge themſelues deeper into miſery.

Any ſtander by would haue ſaid what a good King is this? how deare is Gods Prophet vnto him? how happy is Iſrael in ſuch a Prince, as thus loues the meſſengers of God? Samuel, that ſaw the bottome of his hollow affection, reiects him, whom God had reiected; he was taught to looke vpon Saul, not as a King, but as an offender, and therefore refuſes with no leſſe vehemency, then Saul intreated: It was one thing, what he might doe, as a ſubiect, another what he muſt doe as a Prophet: Now he knowes not Saul any otherwiſe, then as ſo much the greater treſpaſſer as his place was higher; and therefore he doth no more ſpare his greatneſſe, then the God againſt whom hee ſinned; Neither doth hee countenance that man with his preſence, on whom he ſees God to frowne.

There needs no other Character of hypocriſie, then Saul, in the cariage of this one buſineſſe with Agag and Samuel: Firſt, he obeyes God where there is no gaine in diſobedience; then he ſerues God by halues; and diſobeyes, where the obedience might be loſſe: He giues God of the worſt; he doth that in a colour, which might ſeeme anſwerable to the charge of God: He reſpects perſons in the execution; He giues good words, when his deeds were euill; He proteſts his obedience againſt his conſcience, He faces out his proteſtation againſt a reproofe; When hee ſees no remedy, hee acknowledges the fact, denies the ſinne, yea he iuſtifies the act by a profitable intention; When he can no longer maintaine his innocence, hee caſts the blame from himſelfe vpon the people; He confeſſeth not, till the ſinne be wrung from his mouth; Hee ſeekes his peace out of himſelfe, and relyes more vpon anothers vertue, then his owne penitency; Hee would cloake his guiltineſſe with the holineſſe of anothers preſence; He is more tormented with the danger and damage of his ſinne, then with the offence; He cares to hold in with men, in what termes ſoeuer he ſtands with God; He faſhionably ſerues that God, whom he hath not cared to reconcile by his repentance: No maruell if God caſt him off, whoſe beſt was diſſimulation.

Old Samuel is forced to doe a double execution, and that vpon no leſſe then two Kings: The one vpon Saul, in diuiding the Kingdome from him, who had diuided himſelfe from God; The other vpon Agag, in diuiding him in pieces, whom Saul ſhould haue diuided. Thoſe holy hands were not vſed to ſuch ſacrifices, yet did he neuer ſpill blood more acceptably: If Saul had beene truly penitent, hee had in a deſire of ſatisfaction preuented the hand of Samuel in this ſlaughter; Now hee coldly ſtands ſtill, and ſuffers the weake hands of an aged Prophet to bee imbrued with that blood, which he was commanded to ſhed. If Saul might not ſacrifice in the abſence of Samuel, yet Samuel might kill in the preſence of Saul: He was yet a Iudge of Iſrael all though he ſuſpended the execution: In Sauls neglect, this charge reuerted to him; God loues iuſt executions ſo well, that he will hardly take them ill at any hands.

I doe not find, that the ſlaughter of Agag troubled Samuel; that other act of his ſeueritie vpon Saul, though it drew no blood, yet ſtrucke him in the ſtriking, and fetched teares from his eyes. Good Samuel mourned for him, that had not grace to mourne for himſelfe: No man in all Iſrael might ſeeme to haue ſo much reaſon to reioyce in Sauls ruine, as Samuel, ſince that he knew him raiſed vp in deſpight of his gouernment; yet he mournes more for him, then hee did for his ſonnes, for himſelfe: It grieued him to ſee the plant, which he had ſet in the garden of Iſrael, thus ſoone withered: It is an vnnaturall ſenſeleſneſſe not to be affected with the dangers, with the ſinnes of our Gouernours: God did not blame this ſorrow, but moderated it; How long wilt thou mourne for Saul? It was not the affection he forbade, but the meaſure: In this is the difference betwixt good men and euill, that euill men mourne not for their own ſinnes, good men doe ſo mourne for the ſinnes of others, that they will hardly be taken off.

If Samuel mourne becauſe Saul hath caſt away God by his ſinne, hee muſt ceaſe to mourne, becauſe God hath caſt away Saul from raigning ouer Iſrael, in his iuſt puniſhment: A good heart hath learned to reſt it ſelfe vpon the Iuſtice of Gods Decree, and forgets all earthly reſpects, when it lookes vp to heauen. So did God meane to ſhew his diſpleaſure againſt the perſon of Saul, that hee would ſhew fauour to Iſrael, he will not therefore bereaue them of a King, but change him for a better: Either Saul had ſlandred his people, or elſe they were partners with him in the diſobedience: yet (becauſe it was their Rulers fault, that they were not ouer-ruled) wee doe not heare of their ſmarting, any otherwiſe, then in the ſubiection to ſuch a King, as was not loyall to God: The loſſe of Saul is their gaine; the gouernment of their firſt King was abortiue, no maruell if it held not. Now was the maturitie of that State, and therefore God will bring them forth a kindly Monarchy ſetled where it ſhould: Kings are of Gods prouiding, it is good reaſon he ſhould make choyce of his owne Deputies: but where goodneſſe meets with ſoueraignety, both his right, and his gift are doubled: If Kings were meerely from the earth, what needs a Prophet to be ſeene in the choyce or inauguration? The hand of Samuel doth not now beare the Scepter to rule Iſrael, but it beares the horne for the anointing of him, that muſt rule: Saul was ſent to him, when the time was, to be anointed; but now, he is ſent to anoint Dauid: Then Iſrael ſought a King for themſelues, now God ſeekes a King for Iſrael: The Prophet is therefore directed to the houſe of Iſhai the Bethleemite, the grand-child of Ruth; now is the faithfull loue of that good Moabiteſſe crowned with the honour of a Kingdome, in the ſucceeding generation: God fetcht her out of Moab, to bring a King vnto Iſrael: Whiles Orpah wants bread in her owne Countrey, Ruth is growne a great Lady in Bethleem, and is aduanced to be great Grand-mother to the King of Iſrael. The retributions of God are bountifull; neuer any man forſooke ought for his ſake, and complained of an hard bargaine.

Euen the beſt of Gods Saints want not their imfirmities: Hee that neuer replyed, when hee was ſent to reproue the King, moueth doubts, when hee is bidden to goe, and anoint his ſucceſſor. (How can I goe? If Saul heare it he will kill mee.) Perhaps deſire of full direction drew from him this queſtion, but not without a mixture of diffidence; For the manner of doing it, doth not ſo much trouble him, as the ſucceſſe: It is not to be expected, that the moſt faithfull hearts ſhould bee alwayes in an equall height of reſolution, God doth not chide Samuel, but inſtruct him: Hee, which is Wiſedome it ſelfe, teacheth him to hide his counſels in an honeſt policy: (Take an Heifar with thee, and ſay I am come to doe ſacrifice to the Lord.) This was to ſay true, not to ſay all: Truth may not be croſſed by denials, or equiuocations, it may bee concealed in a diſcreet

ſilence: except in the caſe of an oath, no man is bound to ſpeake all he knowes; we are no onely allowed, but commanded to be innocently Serpentine. There were doubtleſſe Heifars enough in Bethleem, Iſhai had both wealth and deuotion enough to haue beſtowed a Sacrifice vpon God, and his Prophet: But to giue a more perfect colour to his intention, Samuel muſt take an Heifar with him: The act it ſelfe was ſerious and neceſſary: There was no place, no time, wherin it was not fit for a Samuel to offer Peace-offerings vnto God; but when a King ſhould bee anointed, there was no leſſe then neceſſitie in this ſeruice. Thoſe, which muſt repreſent God to the world, ought to be conſecrated to that Maieſtie, whom they reſemble, by publike deuotions: Euery important action requires a Sacrifice to bleſſe it, much more that act, which imports the whole Church, or Common-wealth.

It was great newes to ſee Samuel at Bethleem, hee was no gadder abroad, none but neceſſary occaſions could make him ſtir from Ramath: The Elders of the City therefore, welcome him with trembling, not for that they were afraid of him, but of themſelues; they knew, that gueſt would not come to them for familiarity, ſtreight do they ſuſpect, it was the purpoſe of ſome iudgement, that drew him thither: Commeſt thou peaceably? It is a good thing to ſtand in awe of Gods Meſſengers, and to hold good termes with them vpon al occaſions: The Bethlemites are glad to heare of no other errand, but a Sacrifice, and now muſt they ſanctifie themſelues for ſo ſacred a buſineſſe: We may not preſume to ſacrifice vnto God vnſanctified, this were to marre an holy act, and make our ſelues more prophane, by prophaning that, which ſhould be holy.

All the Citizens ſanctifie themſelues, but Iſhai and his ſonnes were in a ſpeciall faſhion ſanctified by Samuel. This buſineſſe was moſt theirs, and all Iſrael in them; the more God hath to doe with vs, the more holy ſhould we be. With what deſire did Samuel look upon the ſons of Iſhai, that he might ſee the face of the man whom God had choſen? And now, when Eliab the eldeſt ſon came forth, a man of a goodly preſence, whoſe perſon ſeemed fit to ſucceed Saul, he thinkes with himſelfe; This choice is ſoon made, I haue already eſpied the head, on which I muſt ſpend this holy Oile: This is the man, which hath both the priuiledge of nature in his primogeniture, and of outward goodlineſſe in proportion: Surely the Lords Anointed is before him. Euen the holieſt Prophet, when he goes without God, runnes into errour: The beſt iudgment is ſubiect to deceit: It is no truſting to any mortall man, when he ſpeakes of himſelfe: Our eyes can be led by nothing but ſignes and appearances, and thoſe haue commonly in them either a true falſhood, or vncertaine truth.

That which ſhould haue forewarned Samuel, deceiued him; he had ſeene the proofe of a goodly ſtature vnanſwerable to their hopes, and yet his eye erres in the ſhape: He, that iudgeth by the inſide both of our hearts and actions, checks Samuel in this miſconceit: (Looke not on his countenance, nor on the height of his ſtature, becauſe I haue refuſed him; for God ſeeth not as man ſeeth:) The King with whom God meant to ſatisfie the vntimely deſires of Iſrael, was choſen by his ſtature, but the King with whom God meant to pleaſe himſelfe is choſen by the heart. All the ſeuen ſonnes of Iſhai are preſented to the Prophet, no one is omitted whom their father thought capable of any reſpect: If either Samuel or Iſhai ſhould haue choſen, Dauid ſhould neuer haue bin King: His father thought him fit to keepe ſheepe, his brethren fit to rule men; yet euen Dauid (the yongeſt ſonne) is fetcht from the fold, and by the choice of God deſtined to the Throne: Nature, which is commonly partiall to her owne, could not ſuggeſt ought to Iſhai, to make him thinke Dauid worthy to bee remembred in any competition of honour, yet him hath God ſingled out to rule.

God will haue his Wiſedome magnified in the vnlikelihoods of election: Dauids countenance was ingenuous, and beautifull, but if it had promiſed ſo much as Eliabs, or Abinadabs, he had not bin in the fields, whiles his brethren were at the Sacrifice: If we doe altogether follow our eye, and ſuffer our ſelues to bee guided by outward reſpects in our choyce for God or our ſelues, we cannot but goe amiſſe. What doe wee thinke the brethren of Dauid thought, when they ſaw the Oyle powred vpon his head? Surely (as they were enuious enough) they had too much repined, if they had either fully apprehended the purpoſe of the Prophet, or elſe had not thought of ſome improbability in the ſucceſſe: Either they vnderſtood not, or beleeued not, what God would doe with their brother; They ſaw him graced with Gods Spirit aboue his wont, but perhaps foreſaw not, whither it tended: Dauid (as no whit changed in his condition) returnes to his ſheepe with an humble admiration of Gods gracious reſpect to him, caſts himſelfe vpon the wiſe and holy Decree of the Almighty, reſigning himſelfe to the diſpoſition of thoſe hands, which had choſen him; when ſuddenly a Meſſenger is ſent from Saul to call him in all haſte, to that Court, whereof hee ſhall once bee Maſter: The occaſion is no leſſe from God, then the euent.

DAVID called to the Court.

THat the Kingdome is (in the appointment of God) departed from Saul, it is his leaſt loſſe; Now the Spirit of God is alſo departed from him; One ſpirit is no ſooner gone, but another is come; both are from God: Euen the worſt ſpirits haue not onely permiſſion, but commiſſion from Heauen for the infliction of iudgement. He that at firſt could hide himſelfe among the ſtuffe, that he might not be King, is now ſo tranſported with this glory, that he growes paſſionate with the thought of forgoing it: Satan takes vantage of his melancholicke deiection, and turnes this paſſion into frenzy. God will haue euen euill ſpirits worke by meanes; A diſtempered body, and an vnquiet minde are fit grounds for Satans vexation. Sauls Courtiers, as men that were more witty, then religious, aduiſe him to Muſicke: They knew the ſtrength of that skill in allaying the fury of paſſions, in cheering vp the deiected ſpirits of their Maſter: This was done like ſome fond Chirurgian, that when the bone is out of ioynt, layes ſome ſoupling Pulteſſes to the part, for the aſſwaging of the ach, in the meane time not caring to remedy the luxation:

If they had ſaid, Sir, you know this euill comes from that God whom you haue offended, there can be no helpe but in reconcilement; how eaſie is it for the God of Spirits to take off Satan? Labour your peace with him by a ſerious humiliation; make meanes to Samuel to further the atonement; they had beene wiſe Counſellors, diuine Phyſitians; whereas now they doe but skin ouer the ſore, and leaue it rankled at the bottome: The cure muſt euer proceed in the ſame ſteps with the diſeaſe, elſe in vaine ſhall we ſeem to heale; There is no ſafety in the redreſſe of euills, but to ſtrike at the root. Yet ſince it is no better with Saul and his Courtiers, it is well it is no worſe; I doe not heare either the Maſter, or ſeruants ſay, This is an ill ſpirit, ſend for ſome Magitian, that may countermand him: There are forcible Enchantments for theſe ſpirituall vexations; If Samuel will not, there are Witches, that may giue eaſe: But as one, that would rather be ill, then doe worſe, he contents himſelfe to doe that, which was lawfull, if vnſufficient. It is a ſhame to ſay, that he, whom God had reiected for his ſin, was yet a Saint to ſome that ſhould bee Chriſtians, who care not, how much they are beholden to the Deuill in their diſtreſſes, affecting to caſt out Deuills by Beelzebub: In caſes of loſſe, or ſickneſſe, they make Hell their refuge, and ſeeke for patronage, but of an enemy: Here is a fearfull agreement; Satan ſeekes to them in his temptations, they in their conſultations ſeeke to him, and now they haue mutually found each other, if they euer part, it is a miracle.

Dauid had liued obſcurely in his fathers houſe, his onely care and ambition was the welfare of the flocke he tended, and now, whiles his father and his brothers neglected him as fit for nothing but the field, hee is talked of at Court: Some of Sauls followers had beene at Iſhai's houſe, and taken notice of Dauids skill, and now that harpe, which he practiſed for his priuate recreation, ſhall make him of a Shepheard a Courtier: The Muſick, that he meant onely to himſelfe and his ſheepe, brings him before Kings: The Wiſedome of God thought fit to take this occaſion of acquainting Dauid with that Court, which he ſhall once gouerne. It is good, that our education ſhould perfect our children in all thoſe commendable qualities, whereto they are diſpoſed: Little doe we know, what vſe God meanes to make of thoſe faculties, which we know not how to imploy. Where the Almighty purpoſes an aduancement, obſcurity can be no preiudice; ſmall meanes ſhall ſet forward that, which God hath decreed.

Doubtleſſe, old Iſhai noted (not without admiration) the wonderfull accordance of Gods proceedings, that hee, which was ſent for out of the field to bee anointed; ſhould now be ſent for out of the Countrey into the Court, and now hee perceiued, God was making way for the execution of that which he purpoſed; hee attends the iſſue in ſilence, neither ſhall his hand faile to giue furtherance to the proiect of God: Hee therefore ſends his ſonne laden with a Preſent to Saul: The ſame God which called Dauid to the Court, welcomes him thither; His comelineſſe, valour, and skill haue ſoone wonne him fauour in the eyes of Saul. The giuer of all graces hath ſo placed his fauours, that the greateſt enemies of goodneſſe ſhall ſee ſomewhat in the holieſt men, which they ſhall affect, and for which they ſhall honour the perſons of them, whoſe vertues they diſlike; as contrarily the Saints on earth ſee ſomewhat to loue euen in the worſt creatures.

No doubt Dauid ſung to his harpe; his harp was not more ſweet then his ſong was holy: Thoſe Pſalmes alone had beene more powerfull to chaſe the euill ſpirit, then the Muſicke was to calme paſſions; both together gaue eaſe to Saul; and God gaue this effect to both, becauſe he would haue Saul traine vp his Succeſſor: This ſacred Muſick did not more diſpell Satan, then wanton Muſick inuites him: and more cheeres him, then vs: He playes and danceth at a filthy Song, hee ſings at an obſcure dance: Our ſinne is his beſt paſtime, whereas Pſalmes, and Hymnes, and ſpirituall Songs are torment vnto the Tempter, and Muſick to the Angels in Heauen, whoſe trade is to ſing Alleluiahs in the Chore of glory.

DAVID and GOLIAH.

AFter the newes of the Philiſtims Army, I heare no more mention of Sauls frenzy: Whether the noiſe of Warre diuerted thoſe thoughtfull paſſions, or whether God for his peoples ſake tooke off that euill ſpirit; leſt Iſrael might miſcary vnder a franticke Gouernor. Now Dauid hath leiſure to returne to Bethleem: The glory of the Court cannot tranſport him to ambitious vanity; He had rather be his Fathers Shepherd, then Sauls Armourbearer: All the magnificence and ſtate, which hee ſaw, could not put his mouth out of the taſte of a retired ſimplicity; yea rather hee loues his hooke the better, ſince hee ſaw the Court; and now his brethren ſerue Saul in his ſtead. A good heart hath learnt to frame it ſelfe vnto all conditions, and can change eſtates without change of diſpoſition, riſing and falling according to occaſion: The worldly minde can riſe eaſily, but when it is once vp, knowes not how to deſcend either with patience, or ſafety.

Forty dayes together had the Philiſtims and Iſraelites faced each other, they pitched on two hills, one in the ſight of other, nothing but a Valley was betwixt them: Both ſtand vpon defence and aduantage; If they had not meant to fight, they had neuer drawne ſo neere; and if they had beene eager of fight, a Valley could not haue parted them: Actions of hazard require deliberation; not fury but diſcretion muſt be the guide of Warre.

So had Ioſhua deſtroyed the Giantly Anakims out of the Land of Iſrael, that yet ſome were left in Azzah, Gath, and Aſhdod, both to ſhew Iſrael, what Aduerſaries their forefathers found in Canaan, and whom they maſtered; as alſo that God might winne glory to himſelfe by theſe obſequent executions: Of that raze was Goliah, whoſe heart was as high as his head, his ſtrength was anſwerable to his ſtature, his weapons anſwerable to his ſtrength, his pride exceeded all: Becauſe he ſaw his head higher, his armes ſtronger, his ſword and ſpeare bigger, his ſhield heauier then any Iſraelite, hee defies the whole hoſt, and walking betweene the two Armies, braues all Iſrael with a challenge; (Why are ye come out to ſet your battaile in aray? Am not I a Philiſtim? and you ſeruants to Saul? Chooſe you a man for you, and let him come downe to mee: giue mee a man that we may fight together.) Carnall hearts are caried away with preſumption of their owne abilities, and not finding matches to themſelues in outward appearance, inſult ouer the impotency of inferiors; and as thoſe that can ſee no inuiſible oppoſition, promiſe themſelues certainty of ſucceſſe,: Inſolence and ſelfe-confidence argues the heart to be nothing, but a lumpe of proud fleſh.

The firſt challenge of Duell, that euer we finde, came out of the mouth of an vncircumciſed Philiſtim; yet was that in open warre, and tended to the ſauing of many liues, by aduenturing one or two; and whoſoeuer imitateth, nay ſurpaſſeth him in challenge to priuate Duell, in the attempt partaketh of his vncircumciſion, though he ſhould ouercome; and of his manner of puniſhment, if in ſuch priuate combats he caſt away his life. For of all ſuch deſperate prodigals we may ſay, that their heads are cut off by their owne ſword, if not by their owne hand. Wee cannot challenge men, and not challenge God, who iuſtly challengeth to himſelfe both to take vengeance, and to giue ſucceſſe. The more Goliah challenges, and is vnanſwered, the more is he puft vp in the pride of his owne power: And is there none of all Iſrael, that will anſwer this champion otherwiſe then with his heeles? Where is the courage of him that was higher then all Iſrael from the ſhoulders vpward? The time was, when Nahaſh the Ammonite had made that tyrannous demand of the right eyes of the Gileadites, that Saul could aske vnasked, What aileth the people to weepe? and could hew his oxen in peeces to raiſe the ſpirits of Iſrael, and now hee ſtands ſtill, and ſees the hoſt turne their backe, and neuer ſo much as aske, what aileth the people to flye? The time was, when Saul ſlue forty thouſand Philiſtims in one day, and perhaps Goliah was in that diſcomfiture, and now one Philiſtim is ſuffered by him to braue all Iſrael forty dayes. Whence is this difference? The Spirit of God, (the ſpirit of fortitude) was now departed from him: Saul was not more aboue himſelfe, when God was with him, then he is below others, now that he is left of God; Valour is not meerely of nature: Nature is euer like it ſelfe; by this rule, he that is once valiant, ſhould neuer turne coward: But now wee ſee the greateſt ſpirits inconſtant, and thoſe, which haue giuen good proofes of magnanimitie, at other times, haue bewrayed white liuers vnto their owne reproach; He that is the God of hoſts, giues and takes away mens hearts at his pleaſure: Neither is it otherwiſe in our ſpirituall combats, ſometimes the ſame ſoule dare challenge all the powers of darkeneſſe, which otherwhiles giues ground to a temptation; We haue no ſtrength but what is giuen vs, and if the author of all good gifts remit his hand for our humiliation, either wee fight not or are foyled.

Dauid hath now lien long enough cloſe amongſt his flocke in the fields of Bethleem, God ſees a time to ſend him to the pitcht field of Iſrael. Good old Iſhai, that was doubtleſſe ioyfull to thinke, that he had afforded three ſonnes to the warres of his King, is no leſſe carefull of their welfare and prouiſion; and who (amongſt all the reſt of his ſeuen ſonnes) ſhall bee pickt out for this ſeruice, but his youngeſt ſonne Dauid, whoſe former and almoſt worne-out acquaintance in Court, and imployment vnder

Saul ſeemed to fit him beſt for this errand: Earely in the morning is Dauid vpon his way, yet not ſo early, as to leaue his flocke vnprouided: If his fathers cōmand diſmiſſe him, yet will he ſtay, till he haue truſted his ſheepe with a carefull keeper; we cannot be faithfull ſhepherds, if our ſpirituall charge be leſſe deare vnto vs; if when neceſſitie cals vs from our flocks, we depute not thoſe, which are vigilant and conſcionable.

Ere Dauids ſpeede can bring him to the valley of Elah, both the Armies are on foot ready to ioyne: Hee takes not this excuſe to ſtay without, as a man danted with the horror of warre, but leauing his preſent with his ſeruant, he thruſts himſelfe into the thickeſt of the hoſt, and ſalutes his brethren which were now thinking of nothing but killing or dying, when the proud champion of the Philiſtimes comes ſtalking forth before all the troupes, and renewes his inſolent challenge againſt Iſrael: Dauid ſees the man, and heares his defiance, and lookes about him, to ſee what anſwer would be giuen, and when he eſpies nothing but pale faces and backs turned, he wonders, not ſo much, that one man ſhould dare all Iſrael, as that all Iſrael ſhould run from one man: Euen when they flye from Goliah, they talke of the reward, that ſhould be giuen to that encounter and victorie, which they dare not vndertake; ſo thoſe which haue not grace to beleeue, yet can ſay, There is glory laid vp for the faithfull. Euer ſince his anointing, was Dauid poſſeſſed with Gods Spirit, and thereby filled both with courage, and wiſedome: The more ſtrange doth it ſeeme to him, that all Iſrael ſhould bee thus daſtardly: Thoſe that are themſelues eminent in any grace, cannot but wonder at the miſerable defects of others, and the more ſhame they ſee in others imperfections, the more is their zeale in avoyding thoſe errors in themſelues.

Whiles baſe hearts are moued by example, the want of example is encouragement enough for an heroycall mind: Therefore is Dauid ready to vndertake the quarrell, becauſe no man elſe dare doe it: His eyes ſparkled with holy anger, and his heart roſe vp to his mouth, when he heard this proud challenger: (Who is this vncircumciſed Philiſtim, that he ſhould reuile the hoſt of the liuing God?) Euen ſo O Sauiour, when all the generations of men ran away affrighted from the powers of death and darkneſſe, thou alone haſt vndertaken, and confounded them.

Who ſhould offer to daunt the holy courage of Dauid, but his owne brethren? The enuious heart of Eliab conſtrues this forwardneſſe, as his owne diſgrace: Shall I (thinkes hee) bee put downe by this puiſne? ſhall my fathers youngeſt ſonne dare to attempt that, which my ſtomach will not ſerue mee to aduenture? Now therefore he rates Dauid for his preſumption; and in ſtead of anſwering to the recompence of the victory, (which others were ready to giue) hee recompenceth the very inquirie of Dauid with a checke: It was for his brethrens ſake, that Dauid came thither, and yet his very iourney is caſt vpon him by them, for a reproach; Wherefore cam'ſt thou downe hither? and when their bitterneſſe can meet with nothing elſe to ſhame him, his ſheepe are caſt in his teeth: Is it for thee, an idle proud boy, to bee medling with our martiall matters? doth not yonder Champion looke, as if hee were a fit match for thee? what mak'ſt thou of thy ſelfe, or what doeſt thou thinke of vs? ywis it were fitter for thee to bee looking to thy ſheepe, then looking at Goliah; the Wilderneſſe would become thee better then the field: Wherein art thou equall to any man thou ſeeſt, but in arrogancy and preſumption? The paſtures of Bethlem could not hold thee, but thou thoughtſt it a goodly matter to ſee the warres: I know thee, as if I were in thy boſome; This was thy thought, There is no glory to be got among fleeces, I will goe ſeeke it in armes; Now are my brethren winning honour in the troupes of Iſrael, whiles I am baſely tending on ſheepe, why ſhould not I be as forward as the beſt of them? This vanitie would make thee ſtraight of a ſhepherd, a ſouldier, and of a ſouldier, a champion; get thee home, fooliſh ſtripling to thy hooke, and thy harpe; let ſwords and ſpeares alone to thoſe, that know how to vſe them.

It is quarrell enough amongſt many to a good action, that it is not their owne;

there is no enemy ſo ready, or ſo ſpightfull, as the domeſticall : The hatred of brethren is ſo much more, as their blood is neerer : The malice of ſtrangers is ſimple, but of a brother is mixt with enuy : The more vnnaturall any quality is, the more extreame it is ; A cold wind from the South is intolerable : Dauids firſt victory is of himſelfe, next of his brother ; He ouercomes himſelfe in a patient forbearance of his brother, hee ouercomes the malicious rage of his brother with the mildneſſe of his anſwer : If Dauid had wanted ſpirit, hee had not beene troubled with the inſultation of a Philiſtim : If he had a ſpirit to match Goliah, how doth hee ſo calmely receiue the affront of a brother ? What haue I now done? is there not a cauſe? That which would haue ſtirred the choler of another, allayeth his : It was a brother, that wronged him, and that his eldeſt ; neither was it time to quarrell with a brother, whiles the Philiſtims ſwords were drawne, and Goliah was challenging. O that theſe two motiues could induce vs to peace : If we haue iniury in our perſon, in our cauſe, it is from brethren, and the Philiſtims looke on : I am deceiued, if this conqueſt were leſſe glorious, then the following : He is fit to be Gods Champion, that hath learned to be victor of himſelfe.

It is not this ſprinkling of cold water, that can quench the fire of Dauids zeale, but ſtill his courage ſends vp flames of deſire, ſtill hee goes on to inquire, and to proffer : Hee, whom the regard of others enuy can diſmay, ſhall neuer doe ought worthy of enuy : Neuer man vndertooke any exploit of worth, and receiued not ſome diſcouragement in the way : This couragious motion of Dauids was not more ſcorned by his brother, then by the other Iſraelites applauded : The rumour flyes to the eares of the King, that there is a youngman deſirous to encounter the Gyant : Dauid is brought forth : Saul, when he heard of a Champion, that durſt goe into the liſts with Goliah, looked for one as much higher then himſelfe, as hee was taller then the reſt ; hee expected ſome ſterne face, and brawny arme ; young and ruddy Dauid is ſo farre below his thoughts, that he receiues rather contempt, then thankes : His words were ſtout, his perſon was weake : Saul doth not more like his reſolution, then diſtruſt his ability : (Thou art not able to goe againſt this Philiſtim to fight with him ; for thou art a boy, and hee is a man of warre from his youth.) Euen Saul ſeconds Eliab in the conceit of this diſparity, and if Eliab ſpeake out of enuy, Saul ſpeakes out of iudgement ; both iudge (as they were iudged of) by the ſtature : All this cannot weaken that heart, which receiues his ſtrength from faith : Dauids greateſt conflict is with his friends : The ouercomming of their diſſwaſions, that hee might fight, was more worke, then to ouercome his enemy in fighting : Hee muſt firſt iuſtifie his ſtrength to Saul, ere he may proue it vpon Goliah : Valour is neuer made good but by tryall : He pleads the tryall of his puiſſance vpon the Beare and the Lyon, that hee may haue leaue to proue it vpon a worſe beaſt then they ; Thy ſeruant ſlew both the Lyon and the Beare, therefore this vncircumciſed Philiſtim ſhall bee as one of them. Experience of good ſucceſſe is no ſmall comfort to the heart, this giues poſſibility and hope, but no certainty : Two things there were on which Dauid built his confidence, on Goliahs ſinne, and Gods deliuerance, (Seeing he hath rayled on the hoſt of the liuing God : The Lord that deliuered me out of the pawes of the Lion and the Beare, he will deliuer me out of the hand of this Philiſtim.) Well did Dauid know, that if this Philiſtims skin had beene as hard as the braſſe of his ſhield, his ſinne would make it penetrable by euery ſtroke. After all brags of manhood hee is impotent, that hath prouoked God : Whiles other labour for outward fortification, happy and ſafe were we, if wee could labour for innocence : He that hath found God preſent in one extremity, may truſt him in the next : Euery ſenſible fauour of the Almighty, inuites both his gifts and our truſt.

Reſolution thus grounded, makes euen Saul himſelfe confident ; Dauid ſhall haue both his leaue and his bleſſing : If Dauid came to Saul, as a Shepheard, hee ſhall goe toward Goliah as a Warriour : The attire of the King is not too rich for him, that ſhall fight for his King and Country : Little did Saul thinke, that his helmet was now on that head, which ſhould once weare his crowne : Now that Dauid was arrayed in the warlike habit of a King, and girded with his ſword, hee lookt vpon himſelfe, and thought this outſide glorious, but when hee offred to walke, and found that the attire was not ſo ſtrong, as vnweeldy, and that it might be more for ſhow, then vſe, he layes downe theſe accouſtrements of honor, and as caring rather to bee an homely victor, then a glorious ſpoyle, he craues pardon to goe in no clothes, but his owne; hee takes his ſtaffe in ſtead of the ſpeare, his ſhepherds ſcrip in ſtead of his brigandine, and in ſtead of his ſword hee takes his ſling, and in ſtead of darts and iauelins, hee takes fiue ſmooth ſtones out of the brooke : Let Sauls coate be neuer ſo rich, and his armour neuer ſo ſtrong, what is Dauid the better, if they fit him not ? It is not to bee enquired, how excellent any thing is but how proper: Thoſe things which are helpes to ſome may be encombrances to others : An vnmeet good may be as inconuenient, as an accuſtomed euill : If we could wiſh another mans honor, when we feele the weight of his cares, we ſhould be glad to be in our owne coate.

Thoſe that depend vpon the ſtrength of Faith, though they neglect not meanes, yet they are not curious in the proportion of outward meanes to the effect deſired: Where the heart is armed with an aſſured confidence, a ſling and a ſtone are weapons enow; to the vnbeleeuing no helpes are ſufficient : Goliah, though he were preſumptuous enough, yet had one ſhield caried before him, another hee caried on his ſhoulder; neither will his ſword alone content him, but he takes his ſpeare too. Dauids armour is his plaine ſhepheards ruſſet, and the brooke yeelds him his artillery, and hee knowes, there is more ſafety in his cloth, then in the others braſſe; and more danger in his peebles, then the other ſpeare. Faith giues both heart and armes. The inward munition is ſo much more noble, becauſe it is of proofe for both ſoule and body : If we be furniſhed with this, how boldly ſhall we meet with the powers of darkneſſe, and goe away more then conquerors ?

Neither did the quality of Dauids weapons bewray more confidence, then the number : If he will put his life and victory vpon the ſtones of the brooke, why doth he not fill his ſcrip full of them? why will he content himſelfe with fiue? Had he beene furniſhed with ſtore, the aduantage of his nimbleneſſe might haue giuen him hope; If one faile, that yet another might ſpeed : But now this paucity puts the diſpatch to a ſudden hazard, and he hath but fiue ſtones caſt either to death or victory; ſtill the fewer helps, the ſtronger faith : Dauid had an inſtinct from God, that he ſhould ouercome, he had not a particular direction, how he ſhould ouercome. For had he beene at firſt reſolued vpon the ſling and ſtone, he had ſaued the labour of girding his ſword: It ſeemes, whiles they were addreſſing him to the combat, he made account of hand-blowes, now he is purpoſed rather to ſend, then bring death to his aduerſarie : In either, or both, he durſt truſt God with the ſucceſſe, and before-hand (through the conflict) ſaw the victorie : It is ſufficient, that wee know the iſſue of our fight : If our weapons and wards vary according to our occaſion giuen by God, that is nothing to the euent; ſure we are, that if we reſiſt, we ſhall ouercome, and if wee ouercome wee ſhall be crowned.

When Dauid appeared in the liſts to ſo vnequall an aduerſarie, as many eyes were vpon him, ſo in thoſe eyes, diuers affections : The Iſraelites lookt vpon him with pitty and feare, and each man thought; Alas, why is this comely ſtripling ſuffered to caſt away himſelfe vpon ſuch a monſter ? why will they let him goe vnarmed to ſuch an affray ? Why will Saul hazard the honour of Iſrael on ſo vnlikely an head ? The Philiſtims, eſpecially their great Champion, lookt vpon him with ſcorne, diſdaining ſo baſe a combitant; (Am I a dog, that thou com'ſt to me with ſtaues ?) What could bee ſaid more fitly ? Hadſt thou beene any other then a dog (O Goliah) thou hadſt neuer opened thy foule mouth to barke againſt the hoſt of God, and the God of hoſts: If Dauid had thought thee any other then a very dogge, hee had neuer come to thee with a ſtaffe and a ſtone.

The laſt words, that euer the Philiſtim ſhall ſpeake, are curſes, and brags; (Come to me and I will giue thy fleſh vnto the Fowles of the heauen, and the beaſts of the field) Seldome euer was there a good end of oſtentation: Preſumption is at once the preſage, and cauſe of ruine: He is a weake aduerſarie, that can bee killed with words: That man which could not feare the Gyants hand, cannot feare his tongue: If words ſhall firſt encounter, the Philiſtim receiues the firſt foile, and ſhall firſt let in death into his eare, ere it enter into his forehead: (Thou com'ſt to mee with a ſword, and a ſpeare, and a ſhield, but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of Hoſts, the God of the hoſt of Iſrael, whom thou haſt railed vpon: This day ſhall the Lord cloſe thee in my hand, and I ſhall ſmite thee, and take thine head from thee.) Here is another ſtile, not of a boaſter, but of a Prophet: Now ſhall Goliah know, whence to expect his bane, euen from the hands of a reuenging God, that ſhall ſmite him by Dauid, and now ſhall learne too late, what it is to meddle with an enemy, that goes vnder the inuiſible protection of the Almighty. No ſooner hath Dauid ſpoken, then his foot and hand ſecond his tongue: Hee runnes to fight with the Philiſtim: It is a cold courage that ſtands onely vpon defence: As a man, that ſaw no cauſe of feare, and was full of the ambition of victorie, hee flyes vpon that monſter, and with a ſtone out of his bag ſmites him in the forehead: There was no part of Goliah, that was capable of that danger, but the face, and that peice of the face; the reſt was defenced with a brazen wall, which a weake ſling would haue tryed to batter in vaine: what could Goliah feare to ſee an aduerſarie come to him without edge or point? And behold that one part hath God found out for the entrance of death: Hee that could haue cauſed the ſtone to paſſe through the ſhield and breſtplate of Goliah, rather directs the ſtone to that part, whoſe nakedneſſe gaue aduantage: Where there is power or poſſibilitie of nature, God vſes not to worke miracles, but chuſes the way that lyes moſt open to his purpoſes.

The vaſte fore-head was a faire marke, but how eaſily might the ſling haue miſſed it, if there had not beene another hand in this caſt beſides Dauids? Hee that guided Dauid into this field, and raiſed his courage to this combat, guides the ſtone to his end, and lodges it in that ſeat of impudence: There now lyeth the great defier of Iſrael, groueling and grinning in death, and is not ſuffered to deale one blow for his life, and bites the vnwelcome earth for indignation, that hee dyes by the hand of a Shepheard: Earth and Hell ſhare him betwixt them; ſuch is the end of inſolence, and preſumption. O God, what is fleſh and blood to thee, which canſt make a little peebleſtone ſtronger then a Gyant, and when thou wilt, by the weakeſt meanes canſt ſtrew thine enemies in the duſt? Where now are the two ſhields of Goliah, that they did not beare off this ſtroke of death? or wherefore ſerues that Weauers beame, but to ſtrike the earth in falling? or that ſword, but to behead his Maſter? What needed Dauid load himſelfe with an vnneceſſary weapon? one ſword can ſerue both Goliah and him; If Goliah had a man to beare his ſhield, Dauid had Goliah to beare his ſword, wherewith that proud blaſphemous head is ſeuered from his ſhoulders: Nothing more honours God, then the turning of wicked mens forces againſt themſelues: There is none of his enemies, but caries with them their owne deſtruction. Thus didſt thou, O Sonne of Dauid, foyle Satan with his owne weapon, that, whereby he meant deſtruction to thee and vs, vanquiſhed him through thy mighty power, and raiſed thee to that glorious triumph, and ſuper-exaltation, wherein thou art, wherein we ſhall bee with thee.

Ionathans Loue, and Savls Enuy.

BEſides the diſcomfiture of the Philiſtims, Dauids victorie had a double iſſue; Ionathans Loue, and Sauls Enuy, which God ſo mixed, that the one was a remedy of the other: A good ſonne makes amends for a wayward father: How precious was that ſtone that killed ſuchan enemy as Goliah, and purchaſed ſuch a friend as Ionathan? All Sauls Courtiers lookt vpon Dauid, none ſo affected him, none did match him but Ionathan: That true correſpondence, that was both in their faith and valour, hath knit their hearts: If Dauid did ſet vpon a Beare, a Lyon, a Gyant; Ionathan had ſet vpon a whole Hoſt, and preuailed: The ſame Spirit animated both, the ſame Faith incited both, the ſame Hand proſpered both: All Iſrael was not worth this paire of friends, ſo zealouſly confident, ſo happily victorious: Similitude of diſpoſitions and eſtates tyes the ſafeſt knots of affection: A wiſe ſoule hath piercing eyes, and hath quickly diſcerned the likelineſſe of it ſelfe in another; as we doe no ſooner looke into the glaſſe or Water, but face anſwers to face; and where it ſees a perfect reſemblance of it ſelfe, cannot chooſe but loue it with the ſame affection, that it reflects vpon it ſelfe.

No man ſaw Dauid that day, which had ſo much cauſe to diſ-affect him; none in all Iſrael ſhould be a looſer by Dauids ſucceſſe, but Ionathan: Saul was ſure enough ſetled for his time, onely his Succeſſor ſhould forgoe all that, which Dauid ſhould gaine; ſo as none but Dauid ſtands in Ionathans light, and yet all this cannot abate one iot, or dram of his loue: Where God vniteth hearts, carnall reſpects are too weake to diſſeuer them, ſince that, which breakes off affection, muſt needs be ſtronger then that which conioyneth it.

Ionathan doth not deſire to ſmother his loue by concealment, but profeſſes it in his cariage and actions: He puts off the Robe, that was vpon him, and all his garments euen to his Sword, and Bow, and Girdle, and giues them vnto his new friend: It was perhaps not without a miſtery, that Sauls cloths fitted not Dauid, but Ionathans fitted him, and theſe he is as glad to weare, as he was to be diſburthened of the other: that there might be a perfect reſemblance, their bodies are ſuted, as well as their hearts: Now the beholders can ſay, there goes Ionathans other ſelfe; If there bee another body vnder thoſe cloths, there is the ſame ſoule. Now Dauid hath caſt off his ruſſet coate, and his ſcrip, and is a Shepheard no more; he is ſuddenly become both a Courtier, and a Captaine, and a Companion to the Prince; yet himſelfe is not changed with his habit, with his condition: yea rather (as if his wiſedome had reſerued it ſelfe for his exaltation) he ſo manageth a ſudden Greatneſſe, as that he winneth all hearts: Honour ſhewes the man, and if there be any blemiſhes of imperfection, they will bee ſeene in the man, that is inexpectedly lifted aboue his fellowes: He is out of the danger of folly, whom a ſpeedy aduancement leaueth wiſe.

Ionathan loued Dauid, the Souldiers honoured him, the Court fauoured him, the people applauded him, onely Saul ſtomackt him, and therefore hated him, becauſe hee was ſo happy in all beſides himſelfe: It had beene a ſhame for all Iſrael, if they had not magnified their Champion: Sauls owne heart could not but tell him, that they did owe the glory of that day, and the ſafety of himſelfe and Iſrael, vnto the ſling of Dauid, who in one man ſlue all thoſe thouſands at a blow. It was enough for the puiſſant King of Iſrael to follow the chaſe, and to kill them, whom Dauid had put to flight; yet he, that could lend his clothes and his armour to this exploit, cannot abide to part with the honour of it to him, that had earned it ſo dearely: The holy Songs of Dauid had not more quieted his ſpirits before, then now the thankfull Song of the Iſraelitiſh women vexed him: One little Dittie (of Saul hath ſlaine his thouſand; and Dauid his ten thouſand) ſung vnto the Timbrels of Iſrael, fetcht againe that euill ſpirit, which Dauids Muſicke had expelled: Saul needed not the torment of a worſe ſpirit, then Enuie. Oh the vnreaſonableneſſe of this wicked paſſion! The women gaue Saul more, and Dauid leſſe, then he deſerued: For Saul alone could not kill a thouſand, and Dauid in that one act of killing Goliah, ſlue in effect, all the Philiſtims that were ſlaine that day; and yet becauſe they giue more to Dauid then to himſelfe, he that ſhould haue endited, and begun that Song of thankfulneſſe, repines and growes now as mad with enuy, as he was before with griefe: Truth and Iuſtice are no protection againſt Malice; Enuie is blind to all obiects, ſaue other mens happineſſe: If the eyes of men could bee contained within their owne bounds, and not roue forth into compariſons, there could be no place for this vicious affection; but when they haue once taken this lawleſſe ſcope to themſelues, they loſe the knowledge of home, and care onely to bee employed abroad in their owne torment.

Neuer was Sauls breſt ſo fit a lodging for the euill ſpirit, as now, that it is dreſt vp with enuy: It is as impoſſible that Hell ſhould bee free from Deuils, as a malicious heart: Now doth the franticke King of Iſrael renew his old fits, and walkes, and talkes diſtractedly; He was mad with Dauid, and who but Dauid muſt be called to alay his madneſſe? Such as Dauids wiſedome was, hee could but know the termes, wherein he ſtood with Saul; yet in lieu of the harſh and diſcordous notes of his maſters enuy, he returnes pleaſing Muſicke vnto him: He can neuer bee good Courtier, nor good man, that hath not learned to repay, if not iniuries with thankes, yet euill with good. Whiles there was a Harpe in Dauids hand, there was a Speare in Sauls, wherewith he threatens death as the recompence of that ſweet melodie: He ſaid (I will ſmite Dauid through to the wall.) It is well for the innocent, that wicked men cannot keep their owne counſell: God fetcheth their thoughts out of their mouthes, or their countenance for a ſeaſonable preuention, which elſe might proceed to ſecret execution: It was time for Dauid to withdraw himſelfe, his obedience did not tye him to bee the marke of a furious maſter; he might eaſe Saul with his muſicke, with his blood he might not: Twice therefore doth he auoid the Preſence, not the Court, not the Seruice of Saul.

One would haue thought rather, that Dauid ſhould haue beene affraid of Saul, becauſe the Deuill was ſo ſtrong with him, then that Saul ſhould be affraid of Dauid, becauſe the Lord was with him; yet we finde all the feare in Saul of Dauid, none in Dauid of Saul: Hatred and feare are ordinary companions: Dauid had wiſdome and faith to diſpell his feares, Saul had nothing but infidelitie, and deiected, ſelfe-condemned, diſtempred thoughts, which muſt needs nouriſh them; yet Saul could not feare any hurt from Dauid, whom he found ſo loyall and ſeruiceable: He feares onely too much good vnto Dauid; and the enuious feare is much more then the diſtruſtfull: now Dauids preſence begins to be more diſpleaſing, then his muſicke was ſweet; Deſpight it ſelfe had rather preferre him to a remote dignity, then endure him a neerer attendant: This promotion encreaſeth Dauids honour and loue; and this loue and honour aggrauates Sauls hatred and feare.

Sauls madneſſe hath not bereaued him of his craft: for perceiuing how great Dauid was growne in the reputation of Iſrael, he dares not offer any perſonall, or direct violence to him, but hires him into the iawes of a ſuppoſed death, by no leſſe price, then his eldeſt Daughter, (Behold mine eldeſt daughter Merab: her will I giue thee to wife onely be a valiant Sonne to mee, and fight the Lords Battels.) Could euer man ſpeake more graciouſly, more holily? What could bee more graciouſly offered by a King, then his eldeſt Daughter? What care could be more holy then of the Lords battels? yet neuer did Saul intend ſo much miſchiefe to Dauid, or ſo much vnfaithfulneſſe to God, as when he ſpake thus: There is neuer ſo much danger of the falſe-hearted, as when they make the faireſt weather: Sauls Speare bade Dauid be gone, but his plauſible words inuite him to danger : This honour was due to Dauid before, vpon the compact of his victory : yet he, that twice enquired into the reward of that enterprize, before he vndertooke it, neuer demanded it after that atchieuement; neither had Saul the iuſtice to offer it, as a recompence of ſo noble an exploit, but as a ſnare to an enuied victory. Charitie ſuſpects not : Dauid conſtrues that, as an effect and argument of his Maſters loue, which was no other but a child of Enuy, but a plot of miſchiefe; and though he knew his owne deſert, and the iuſtice of his claime to Merab; yet hee in a ſincere humilitie diſparageth himſelfe, and his Parentage with a who am I ?

As it was not the purpoſe of this modeſty in Dauid to reiect, but to ſollicit the profſered fauour of Saul; ſo was it not in the power of this baſhfull humiliation to turne backe the edge of ſo keene an enuy : It helpes not that Dauid makes himſelfe meane, whiles others magnifie his worth : Whatſoeuer the colour was, Saul meant nothing to Dauid but danger and death; and ſince all thoſe Battels will not effect that which hee deſired, himſelfe will not effect that which he promiſed : If hee cannot kill Dauid, he will diſgrace him, Dauids honour, was Sauls diſeaſe : It was not likely therefore, that Saul would adde vnto that honour, whereof he was ſo ſicke already : Merab is giuen to another; neither doe I heare Dauid complaine of ſo manifeſt an iniuſtice : He knew, that the God, whoſe battels he fought, had prouided a due reward of his patience : If Merab faile, God hath a Michal in ſtore for him, ſhe is in loue with Dauid; his comlineſſe and valour haue ſo wonne his heart, that ſhee now emulates the affection of her Brother Ionathan : If ſhe be the yonger Siſter, yet ſhe is more affectionate : Saul is glad of the newes, his Daughter could neuer liue to doe him better ſeruice, then to be a new ſnare to his Aduerſarie : Shee ſhall be therefore ſacrificed to his enuie, and her honeſt and ſincere loue ſhall bee made a bait for her worthy and innocent Husband. (I will giue him her, that ſhee may bee a ſnare vnto him, that the hand of the Philiſtims may be againſt him :) The purpoſe of any fauour is more then the value of it : Euen the greateſt honours may be giuen with an intent of deſtruction: Many a man is raiſed vp for a fall. So forward is Saul in the match, that hee ſends ſpokes-men to ſollicit Dauid to that honour, which hee hopes will prooue the high-way to death : The dowry is ſet; An hundred fore-skins of the Philiſtims; not their heads, but their fore-skins, that this victorie might bee more ignominious; ſtill thinking, why may not one Dauid miſcary, as well as an hundred Philiſtims ? And what doth Sauls enuie all this while, but enhance Dauids zeale, and valour, and glorie ? That good Captaine little imagining that himſelfe was the Philiſtim, whom Saul maligned, ſupererogates of his Maſter, and brings two hundred for one, and returnes home ſafe, and renowned: neither can Saul now fly for ſhame: There is no remedy but Dauid muſt bee a ſonne, where he was a riuall; and Saul muſt feed vpon his owne heart, ſince he cannot ſee Dauids : Gods bleſſing graces equally together with mans malice, neither can they deuiſe, which way to make vs more happy, then by wiſhing vs euill.

MICHALS wyle.

THis aduantage can Saul yet make of Dauids promotion, that as his Aduerſarie is raiſed higher, ſo hee is drawne nearer to the opportunity of death : Now hath his enuie caſt off all ſhame, ſince thoſe craftie plots ſucceed not, hee directly ſubornes Murtherers of his riuall: There is none in all the Court that is not ſet on to bee an Executioner : Ionathan himſelfe is ſollicited to imbrue his hand in the blood of his friend, of his Brother. Saul could not but ſee Ionathans cloathes on Dauids backe; hee could not but know the league of their loue; yet becauſe he knew withall, how much the proſperitie of Dauid would preiudice Ionathan, he hoped to haue found him his ſonne in malice: Thoſe that haue the Iaundis ſee all things yellow; thoſe which are ouergrowne with malicious paſſions, thinke all men like themſelues.

I doe not heare of any reply that Ionathan made to his father when he gaue him that bloody charge; but he waits for a fit time to diſſwade him from ſo cruell an iniuſtice: Wiſedome had taught him to giue way to rage, and in ſo hard an aduenture to craue aid of opportunitie: If we be not carefull to obſerue good moodes when wee deale with the paſſionate, we may exaſperate in ſtead of reforming: Thus did Ionathan, who knowing how much better it is to be a good friend, then an ill ſonne, had not onely diſcloſed that ill counſell, but when he found his father in the fields in a calmer temper, laboured to diuert it: And ſo farre doth the ſeaſonable and pithy Oratory of Ionathan preuaile, that Saul is conuinced of his wrong, and ſweares, as God liues, Dauid ſhall not die; Indeed how could it be otherwiſe, vpon the plea of Dauids innocence, and well-deſeruings? How could Saul ſay he ſhould dye, whom hee could accuſe of nothing but faithfulneſſe? Why ſhould he deſigne him to death, which had giuen life to all Iſrael? Oft-times wicked mens iudgements are forced to yeeld vnto that truth againſt which their affections maintaine a rebellion: Euen the fouleſt hearts doe ſometimes entertaine good motions; like as on the contrary, the holieſt ſoules giue way ſometimes to the ſuggeſtions of euill: The flaſhes of lightning may bee diſcerned in the darkeſt Priſons. But if good thoughts looke into a wicked heart, they ſtay not there as thoſe that like not their lodging, they are ſoone gone; Hardly any thing diſtinguiſhes betwixt good and euill, but continuance: The light that ſhines into an holy heart is conſtant, like that of the Sunne, which keepes due times, and varies not his courſe for any of theſe ſublunary occaſions.

The Philiſtims Warres renue Dauids victory, and Dauids victory renues Sauls enuy, and Sauls enuy renues the plots of Dauids death: Vowes and Oaths are forgotten: That euill ſpirit which vexes Sauls hath found ſo much fauour with him, as to winne him to theſe bloody machinations againſt an innocent; His owne hands ſhall firſt be employed in this execution; The ſpeare, which had twice before threatned death to Dauid, ſhall now once againe goe vpon that meſſage: Wiſe Dauid that knew the danger of an hollow friend, and reconciled enemy, and that found more cauſe to minde Sauls earneſt, then his owne play, giues way by his nimbleneſſe, to that deadly weapon, and reſigning that ſtroke vnto the wall, flyes for his life. No man knowes how to be ſure of an vnconſcionable man; If either goodneſſe, or merit, or affinitie, or reaſons, or oaths could ſecure a man, Dauid had beene ſafe; now if his heeles doe not more befriend him then all theſe, hee is a dead man. No ſooner is hee gone then the meſſengers are ſped after him: It hath bin ſeldome ſeene that wickednes wanted Executioners; Dauids houſe is beſet with Murderers, which watch at all his doores, for the opportunitie of blood: Who can but wonder to ſee how God hath fetcht from the loynes of Saul a remedy for the malice of Sauls heart? His owne children are the onely meanes to croſſe him in the ſinne, and to preſerue his guildleſſe Aduerſarie; Michal hath more then notice of the plot, and with her ſubtill wit countermines her father, for the reſcue of an Husband: Shee taking the benefit of the night lets Dauid downe through a window; Hee is gone, and diſappoints the ambuſhes of Saul. The meſſengers begin to bee impatient in this delay, and now thinke it time to inquire after their Priſoner; She whiles them off, with the excuſe of Dauids ſicknes, (ſo as now her Husband had good leiſure for his eſcape) and layes a Statue in his bed; Saul likes the newes of any euill befalne to Dauid, but fearing he is not ſicke enough, ſends to aide his diſeaſe: The meſſengers returne, and ruſhing into the houſe with their Swords drawne, after ſome harſh words to their imagined charge, ſurprize a ſicke Statue lying with a Pillow vnder his head; and now bluſh to ſee they haue ſpent all their threats vpon a ſenſeleſſe ſtocke, and made themſelues ridiculous, whiles they would be ſeruiceable.

hall, J.

But how ſhall Michal anſwer this mockage vnto her furious father? Hitherto ſhe hath done like D*auids* wife; now ſhe begins to be Sauls Daughter; (He ſaid to mee, Let me goe, or elſe I will kill thee.) Shee whoſe wit had deliuered her Husband from the Sword of her Father, now turnes the edge of her Fathers wrath from her ſelfe to her Husband. His abſence made her preſume of his ſafety: If Michal had not bin of Sauls plot, he had neuer expoſtulated with her in thoſe termes, Why haſt thou let mine enemy eſcape? neither had ſhe framed that anſwer, He ſaid, Let me goe. I doe not find any great ſtore of religion in Michal, for both ſhe had an Image in the houſe; and afterward mocked D*auid* for his deuotion: yet Nature hath taught her to prefer a Husband to a Father; to elude a Father from whom ſhe could not fly, to ſaue an husband, which durſt not but fly from her: The bonds of matrimoniall loue are, and ſhould bee ſtronger then thoſe of nature; Thoſe reſpects are mutuall which God appointed in the firſt inſtitution of Wedlocke; That Husband and Wife ſhould leaue Father and Mother for each others ſake. Treaſon is euer odious; but ſo much more in the Mariage-bed, by how much the obligations are deeper.

As ſhe loued her Husband better then her Father, ſo ſhe loued her ſelfe better then her husband; ſhe ſaued her husband by a wyle, and now ſhee ſaues her ſelfe by a lye; and loſes halfe the thanke of her deliuerance, by an officious ſlander: Her act was good, but ſhe wants courage to maintaine it; and therefore ſeekes to the weake ſhelter of vntruth: Thoſe that doe good offices, not out of conſcience, but good nature or ciuilitie, if they meet an affront of danger, ſeldome come off cleanly, but are ready to catch at all excuſes, though baſe, though iniurious; becauſe their grounds are not ſtrong enough to beare them out in ſuffering for that, which they haue well done.

Whither doth Dauid fly, but to the Sanctuarie of Samuel? He doth not (though he knew himſelfe gracious with the Souldiers) raiſe forces, or take ſome ſtrong Fort, and there ſtand vpon his owne defence; and at defiance with his King: but he gets him to the Colledge of the Prophets; as a man that would ſeeke the peaceable protection of the King of Heauen againſt the vniuſt fury of a King on earth: Onely the wing of God ſhall hide him from that violence.

God intended to make Dauid not a Warriour, and a King onely, but a Prophet too; As the field fitted him for the firſt, and the Court for the ſecond, ſo Naioth ſhall fit him for the third. Doubtleſſe (ſuch was Dauids delight in holy meditations) he neuer ſpent his time ſo contentedly, as when hee was retired to that diuine Academie, and ſo full freedome to enioy God, and to ſatiate himſelfe with heauenly exerciſes: The only doubt is how Samuel can giue harbour to a man fled from the anger of his Prince; wherein, the very perſons of both giue abundant ſatisfaction: for both Samuel knew the councell of God, and durſt doe nothing without it; and Dauid was by Samuel anointed from God: This Vnction was a mutuall Bond: Good reaſon had D*auid* to ſue to him, which had powred the Oyle on his head, for the hiding of that head which he had anointed; and good reaſon had Samuel to hide him, whom God by his meanes had choſen; from him whom God had by his ſentence reiected: beſides, that the cauſe deſerued commiſeration: Here was not a Malefactor running away from Iuſtice, but an innocent auoyding Murder: not a Traitor countenanced againſt his Soueraigne, but the Deliuerer of Iſrael harboured in a Sanctuarie of Prophets till his peace might bee made.

Euen thither doth Saul ſend to apprehend D*auid*: All his rage did not incenſe him againſt Samuel as the Abettor of his Aduerſarie; Such an impreſſion of reuerence had the perſon, and calling of the Prophet left in the minde of Saul, that hee cannot thinke of lifting vp his hand againſt him: The ſame God which did at the firſt put an awe of man in the fierceſt creatures, hath ſtamped in the cruelleſt hearts a reuerent reſpect to his owne image in his Miniſters; ſo as euen they that hate them, doe yet honour them.

Sauls meſſengers came to lay hold on D*auid*, God layes hold on them: No ſooner doe they ſee a company of Prophets buſie in thoſe diuine Exerciſes, vnder the moderation of Samuel, then they are turned from Executioners to Prophets. It is good going vp to Naioth, into the holy Aſſemblies; who knowes how we may be changed beſide our intention? Many a one hath come into Gods Houſe to carpe, or ſcoffe, or ſleepe, or gaze, that hath returned a Conuert.

The ſame heart that was thus diſquieted with Dauids happy ſucceſſe, is now vexed with the holineſſe of his other Seruants. It angers him that Gods Spirit could finde no other time to ſeize vpon his Agents, then when he had ſent them to kill: And now out of an indignation at this diſappointment, himſelfe will goe and bee his owne Seruant; His guilty ſoule findes it ſelfe out of the danger of being thus ſurprized; And behold Saul is no ſooner come within the ſmell of the ſmoke of Naioth, then hee alſo propheſies; The ſame Spirit that, when he went firſt from Samuel, inabled him to propheſie, returnes in the ſame effect now that hee was going (his laſt) vnto Samuel: This was ſuch a grace as might well ſtand with reiection; an extraordinary gift of the ſpirit, but not ſanctifying: Many men haue had their mouthes opened to propheſie vnto others, whoſe hearts haue beene deafe to God; But this (ſuch as it was) was farre from Sauls purpoſe, who in ſtead of expoſtulating with Samuel, falls downe before him; and laying aſide his weapons, and his Robes, of a Tyrant proues (for the time) a Diſciple: All hearts are in the hand of their Maker; how eaſie is it for him that gaue them their being, to frame them to his owne bent? Who can bee afraid of malice, that knowes what hookes God hath in the noſtrils of men and Deuils? What charmes hee hath for the moſt Serpentine hearts?

DAVID and AHIMELECH.

WHO can euer iudge of the Children by the Parents, that knowes Ionathan was the ſon of Saul? There was neuer a falſer heart then Sauls; there was neuer a truer friend then Ionathan; Neither the hope of a Kingdome, nor the frownes of a Father, nor the feare of death can remoue him from his vowed amity: No ſonne could be more officious, and dutifull to a good father; yet he layes downe nature at the foot of grace; and for the preſeruation of his innocent Riuall for the Kingdome, croſſes the bloody deſignes of his owne Parent: Dauid needs no other Counſellor, no other Aduocate, no other Intelligencer then he: It is not in the power of Sauls vnnaturall reproaches, or of his Speare, to make Ionathan any other then a friend, and patron of innocence: Euen after all theſe difficulties, doth Ionathan ſhoot beyond Dauid, that Saul may ſhoot ſhort of him: In vaine are thoſe profeſſions of loue, which are not anſwered with action; He is no true friend that (beſides talke) is not ready both to doe and ſuffer.

Saul is no whit the better for his propheſying; he no ſooner riſes vp from before Samuel, then he purſues Dauid. Wicked men are rather the worſe for thoſe tranſitory good motions they haue receiued. If the Swine be neuer ſo cleane waſhed, ſhee will wallow againe: That we haue good thoughts, it is no thanke to vs; that wee anſwer them not, it is both our ſinne and iudgement.

Dauid hath learned not to truſt theſe fits of deuotion, but flyes from Samuel to Ionathan, from Ionathan to Ahimelech; when he was hunted from the Prophet, he flyes to the Prieſt, as one that knew iuſtice and compaſſion ſhould dwell in thoſe breſts which are conſecrated vnto God.

The Arke and the Tabernacle were then ſeparated; The Arke was at Kiriathiearim, the Tabernacle at Nob; God was preſent with both: Whither ſhould Dauid flye for ſuccour but to the Houſe of that God, which had anointed him?

Abimelech was wont to ſee Dauid attended with the troupes of Iſrael, or with the Gallants of the Court; it ſeemes ſtrange therefore to him, to ſee ſo great a Peere and Champion of Iſrael come alone; Theſe are the alterations to which earthly Greatneſſe is ſubiect; Not many dayes are paſt, ſince no man was honoured at Court but Ionathan and Dauid; now they are both for the time in diſgrace; Now dare not the Kings Sonne in law, Brother to the Prince both in Loue and Mariage, ſhew his head at the Court; nor any of thoſe that bowed to him, dare ſtirre a foote with him; Princes are as the Sunne, and great Subiects are like to Dials, if the Sun ſhine not on the Diall, no man will looke at it.

Euen hee that ouercame the Beare, the Lyon, the Gyant, is ouercome with feare: He that had cut off two hundred fore-skins of the Philiſtims, had not circumciſed his owne heart of the weake paſſions that follow Diſtruſt; Now that hee is hard driuen, he practiſes to helpe himſelfe with an vnwarrantable ſhift: Who can looke to paſſe this Pilgrimage without infirmities when Dauid diſſembleth to Abimelech? A weake mans rules may be better then the beſt mans actions; God lets vs ſee ſome blemiſhes in his holieſt Seruants, that wee may bee neither too highly conceited of fleſh and blood, nor too much deiected when wee haue beene miſcarried into ſinne. Hitherto hath Dauid gone vpright, now he begins to halt with the Prieſt of God; and vnder pretence of Sauls imployment, drawes that fauour from Abimelech, which ſhall afterwards coſt him his head.

What could Abimelech haue thought too deare for Gods Anointed, for Gods Champion? It is not like but that if Dauid had ſincerely opened himſelfe to the Prieſt as he hath done to the Prophet, Abimelech would haue ſeconded Samuel in ſome ſecret and ſafe ſuccour of ſo vniuſt a diſtreſſe, whereas he is now by a falſe colour led to that kindneſſe which ſhall bee preiudiciall to his life: Extremities of euill are commonly inconſiderate; either for that wee haue not leiſure to our thoughts, or perhaps (ſo as we may be perplexed) not thoughts to our leiſure: What would Dauid haue giuen afterwards to haue redeemed this ouer-ſight?

Vnder this pretence he craues a double fauour of Abimelech; The one of bread for his ſuſtenance, the other of a Sword for his defence: There was no bread vnder the hands of the Prieſt but that which was conſecrated to God; and whereof none might taſte but the deuoted Seruants of the Altar; Euen that which was with ſolemne dedication ſet vpon the holy Table before the face of God; a Sacramentall Bread preſented to God with Incenſe, figuring that true Bread that came downe from Heauen; yet euen this Bread might in caſe of neceſſitie become common, and be giuen by Abimelech, and receiued by Dauid and his followers: Our Sauiour himſelfe iuſtifies the act of both; Ceremonies muſt giue place to ſubſtance; God will haue Mercy and not Sacrifice; Charitie is the ſumme and the end of the Law; That muſt bee aymed at in all our actions; wherein it may fall out, that the way to keepe the Law may bee to breake it; the intention may be kept, and the Letter violated; and it may bee a dangerous tranſgreſſion of the Law to obſerue the words, and neglect the ſcope of God; That which would haue diſpenſed with Dauid for the ſubſtance of the act, would haue much more diſpenſed with him for the circumſtance; The touch of their lawfull Wiues had contracted a legall impuritie, not a morall; That could haue beene no ſufficient reaſon why in an vrgent neceſſitie they might not haue partaked of the holy Bread: Abimelech was no perfect Caſuiſt; theſe men might not famiſh, if they were ceremonially impure. But this queſtion bewrayed the care of Abimelech in diſtributing the holy Bread; There might be in theſe men a double incapacitie, the one, as they were Secalars, the other, as vncleane; he ſaw the one muſt be, he feared leſt the other ſhould be; as one that wiſhed as little indiſpoſition (as poſſible might bee) in thoſe which ſhould be fed from Gods Table.

It is ſtrange that Dauid ſhould come to the Prieſt of God for a Sword; Who in all Iſrael was ſo vnlikely to furniſh him with weapons, as a man of Peace, whoſe armour was onely ſpirituall? Doubtleſſe Dauid knew well where Goliahs Sword lay; is the noble relique of Gods victorious deliuerance, dedicated to the ſame God, which won it; at this did that ſuit ayme? None could be ſo fit for Dauid, none could be ſo fit for it as Dauid: Who could haue ſo much right to that Sword, as hee againſt whom it was drawne, and by whom it was taken? There was more in that Sword, then Metall, and forme; Dauid could neuer caſt his eye vpon it, but hee ſaw an vndoubted monument of the mercifull protection of the Almighty; there was therefore more ſtrength in that Sword, then ſharpneſſe; neither was Dauids arme ſo much ſtrengthened by it as his faith; nothing can ouercome him, whiles hee caries with him that aſſured ſigne of victorie: It is good to take all occaſions of renuing the remembrance of Gods mercies to vs, and our obligations to him.

as

Doeg the Maſter of Sauls Herdmen (for he that went to ſeeke his Fathers Aſſes before he was King, hath herds and droues now that he is a King) was now in the Court of the Tabernacle, vpon ſome occaſion of deuotion; Though an Iſraelite in profeſſion, hee was an Edomite no leſſe in heart then in blood; yet hee hath ſome vow vpon him, and not onely comes vp to Gods Houſe, but abides before the Lord: Hypocrites haue equall acceſſe to the publike places, and meanes of Gods Seruice: Euen hee that knowes the heart, yet ſhuts his doores vpon none, how much leſſe ſhould wee dare to exclude any, which can onely iudge of the heart by the face.

Doeg may ſet his foot as far within the Tabernacle, as Dauid; hee ſees the paſſages betwixt him, and Ahimelech, and layes them vp for an aduantage; Whiles he ſhould haue edified himſelfe by thoſe holy ſeruices, he carpes at the prieſt of God, and (after a lewd miſ-interpretation of his actions) of an attendant, prooues an accuſer; To incurre fauour with an vniuſt Maſter, he informes againſt innocent Ahimelech; and makes that his act which was drawne from him by a cunning circumuention: When wee ſee our Auditors before vs, little doe we know with what hearts they are there; nor, what vſe they will make of their pretended deuotion: If many come in ſimplicitie of heart to ſerue their God, ſome others may perhaps come to obſerue their Teachers, and to picke quarrels where none are; Onely God and the iſſue can diſtinguiſh betwixt a Dauid, and a Doeg, when they are both in the Tabernacle. Honeſt Ahimelech could little ſuſpect that he now offered a Sacrifice for his Executioner; yea, for the Murtherer of all his Family: Oh the wiſe and deepe Iudgements of the Almighty! God owed a reuenge to the Houſe of Eli, and now by the delation of Doeg, he takes occaſion to pay it: It was iuſt in God, which in Doeg was moſt vniuſt: Sauls cruelty and the treacherie of Doeg doe not loſe one dram of their guilt by the Counſell of God; neither doth the holy Counſell of God gather any blemiſh by their wickedneſſe; If it had pleaſed God to inflict death vpon them ſooner without any pretence of occaſion, his Iuſtice had beene cleere from all imputations; now if Saul and Doeg bee inſtead of a peſtilence or feuer, who can cauill? The iudgements of God are not open, but are alwayes iuſt; Hee knowes how by one mans ſinne to puniſh the ſinne of another, and by both their ſinnes and puniſhments to glorifie himſelfe. If his word ſleepe, it ſhall not dye; but after long intermiſſions breakes forth in thoſe effects which we had forgotten to looke for, and ceaſed to feare. O Lord, thou art ſure when thou threatneſt, and iuſt when thou iudgeſt; Keepe thou vs from the ſentence of death elſe in vaine ſhall we labour to keepe our ſelues from the execution.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE AND MY SINGVLAR GOOG LORD,

PHILIP

EARLE OF MONGOMERY, ONE OF THE GENTLEMEN OF HIS MAIESTIES Bed-chamber, and Knight of the most Honourable Order of the GARTER.

Right Honourable,

After ſome vnpleaſing intermiſsions, I returne to that taske of Contemplation, wherein onely my ſoule findeth reſt. If in other imployments I haue indeuoured to ſerue God and his Church, yet in none (I muſt confeſſe) with equall contentment. Me thinkes Controuerſie is not right in my way to Heauen; how euer the importunitie of an Aduerſary may force me to fetch it in: If Truth oppreſſed by an erroneous Teacher cry (like a rauiſht Virgin) for my aid, I betray it, if I releeue it not; when I haue done, I returne gladly to theſe paths of Peace. The fauour which my late Polemicall labour hath found (beyond merit) from the Learned, cannot diuert my loue to thoſe wrangling Studies. How earneſtly doth my heart rather wiſh an vniuerſall ceſſation of theſe Armes; that all the Profeſſors of the deare Name of Chriſt might bee taken vp with nothing but holy and peaceable thoughts of Deuotion; the ſweetneſſe whereof hath ſo farre affected mee, that (if I might doe it without danger of miſ-conſtruction) I could beg euen of an Enemie this leaue to bee happy. I haue already giuen account to the World, of ſome expences of my houres this way, and here I bring more; which if ſome Reader may cenſure as poore, none can cenſure as vnprofitable. I am bold to write them vnder your Honorable Name, whereto I am deeply obliged; that I may leaue behind me this meane, but faithfull Teſtimony, of mine humble thankfulneſſe to your Lordſhip, and your moſt honoured and vertuous Ladie. The noble reſpects I haue had from you both, deſerue my Prayers, and beſt ſeruices, which ſhall neuer be wanting to you and yours,

From your Honours ſincerely
deuoted in all true dutie

SAVL in DAVIDS Caue.

IT was the ſtrange lot of Dauid, that thoſe whom hee purſued, preſerued him from thoſe whom he had preſerued; The Philiſtims whom Dauid had newly ſmitten in Keilah, call off Saul from ſmiting Dauid in the Wilderneſſe, when there was but an hillocke betwixt him and death: Wicked purpoſes are eaſily checked, not eaſily broken off. Sauls Sword is ſcarce dry from the blood of the Philiſtims, when it thirſts anew for the blood of Dauid; and now in a renewed chaſe, hunts him dry-foot thorow euery wilderneſſe: The very deſart is too faire a refuge for innocence; The hils and rockes are ſearched in an angry iealouſie; the very wilde Goats of the mountaines were not allowed to bee companions for him, which had no fault but his vertue. Oh the ſeemingly-vnequall diſtribution of theſe earthly things! Cruelty and oppreſſion raignes in a Palace, whiles goodneſſe lurkes among the Rockes and Caues, and thinkes it happineſſe enough to ſteale a life.

Like a dead man, Dauid is faine to be hid vnder the earth, and ſeekes the comfort of protection in darkneſſe: and now the wiſe prouidence of God leades Saul to his enemy without blood; He which before brought them within an hils diſtance without interuiew, brings them now both within one roofe; ſo as that whiles Saul ſeekes Dauid and finds him not, he is found of Dauid vnſought. If Saul had known his own opportunities, how Dauid and his men had interred themſelues, he had ſaued a treble labour, of chaſe, of execution, and buriall; for had he but ſtopt the mouth of that Caue, his enemies had laid themſelues downe in their owne Graues: The Wiſdome of God thinkes fit to hide from euill men, and ſpirits, thoſe meanes and ſeaſons, which might be (if they had beene taken) moſt preiudiciall to his owne: we had beene oft foiled if Satan could but haue knowne our hearts: ſometimes we lie open to euils, and happy it is for vs that he onely knows it, which pitties in ſtead of tempting vs.

It is not long ſince Saul ſaid of Dauid (lodged then in Keilah) God hath deliuered him into mine hands, for he is ſhut in, ſeeing he is come into a citie that hath gates, and bars;

but now contrarily God deliuers Saul (ere he was aware) into the hands of Dauid, and without the helpe of gates and barres, hath incloſed him within the Valley of death: How iuſt is it with God, that thoſe who ſeeke miſchiefe to others, find it to themſelues; and euen whiles they are ſpreading nets are enſnared; Their deliberate plotting of euill, is ſurprized with a ſudden iudgement.

How amazedly muſt Dauid needs looke, when he ſaw Saul enter into the Caue, where himſelfe was? what is this (thinkes he) which God hath done? Is this preſence purpoſed, or caſuall; is Saul here to purſue, or to tempt me? Where ſuddenly the action bewrayes the intent, & tels Dauid that Saul ſought ſecrecy and not him. The ſuperfluitie of his maliciouſneſſe brought him into the Wilderneſſe, the neceſſitie of nature led him into the Caue: Euen thoſe actions wherein we place ſhame, are not exempted from a prouidence. The fingers of Dauids followers itched to ſeaze vpon their Maſters enemy; and that they might not ſeeme led ſo much by faction, as by faith, they vrge Dauid with a promiſe from God; The day is come whereof the Lord ſaid vnto thee, Behold, I will deliuer thine enemy into thine hand, and thou ſhalt doe to him, as it ſhall ſeeme good to thee. This argument ſeemed to carry ſuch command with it, as that Dauid not onely may, but muſt embrew his hands in blood, vnleſſe hee will bee found wanting to God and himſelfe; Thoſe temptations are moſt powerfull, which fetch their force from the pretence of a religious obedience: Whereas thoſe which are raiſed from arbitrary and priuate reſpects, admit of an eaſie diſpenſation.

If there were ſuch a prediction, one clauſe of it was ambiguous; and they take it at the worſt: Thou ſhalt doe to him as ſhall ſeeme good to thee: That might not ſeeme good to him, which ſeemed euill vnto God. There is nothing more dangerous than to make conſtruction of Gods purpoſes out of euentuall appearances. If carnall probabilities might be the rule of our iudgement, what could God ſeeme to intend other than Sauls death in offering him naked into the hands of thoſe whom hee vniuſtly perſecuted? how could Dauids ſouldiers thinke that God had ſent Saul thither on any other errand, then to fetch his bane? and if Saul could haue ſeene his owne danger, he had giuen himſelfe for dead; for his heart guiltie to his owne bloody deſires, could not but haue expected the ſame meaſure which it meant: But wiſe and holy Dauid not tranſported either with miſ-conceit of the euent, or fury of paſſion, or ſolicitation of his followers, dares make no other vſe of this accident then the triall of his loyalty, and the inducement of his peace; It had beene as eaſie for him to cut the throat of Saul as his garment; but now his coat onely ſhall be the worſe, not his perſon; neither doth hee in this maiming of a cloake ſeeke his owne reuenge, but a monument of his innocence. Before Saul rent Samuels garment, now Dauid cutteth Sauls; both were ſignificant; The rending of the one, ſignified the Kingdome torne out of thoſe vnworthy hands; the cutting of the other, that the life of Saul might haue beene as eaſily cut off.

Saul needes no other Monitor of his owne danger, than what he weares. The vpper garment of Saul was layd aſide, while he went to couer his feet; ſo as the cut of the garment did not threaten any touch of the body; yet euen the violence offered to a remote garment ſtrikes the heart of Dauid, which findes a preſent remorſe for harmfully touching that which did once touch the perſon of his Maſter: Tender conſciences are moued to regret at thoſe actions, which ſtrong hearts paſſe ouer with a careleſſe eaſe. It troubled not Saul to ſeeke after the blood of a righteous ſeruant; there is no leſſe difference of conſciences than ſtomacks; ſome ſtomacks will digeſt the hardeſt meates, and turne ouer ſubſtances, not in their nature edible, whiles others ſurfet of the lighteſt food, and complaine euen of dainties: Euery gracious heart is in ſome meaſure ſcrupulous, and findes more ſafety in feare, then in preſumption: And if it be ſo ſtrait as to curbe it ſelfe in from the libertie which it might take in things which are not vnlawfull, how much leſſe will it dare to take ſcope vnto euill? By how much that ſtate is better, where nothing is allowed, then where all things, by ſo much is the ſtrict and timerous conſcience better than the lawleſſe. There is good likelihood of that man which is any way ſcrupulous of his wayes; but he which makes no bones of his actions, is apparently hopeleſſe.

Since Dauids followers pleaded Gods teſtimony to him as a motiue to blood, Dauid appeales the ſame God for his preſeruation from blood: The Lord keepe me from doing that thing to my Maſter the Lords Anointed; and now the good man hath worke enough to defend both himſelfe and his perſecuter; himſelfe, from the importunate neceſſity of doing violence, and his Maſter from ſuffering it. It was not more eaſie to rule his owne hands, then difficult to rule a multitude; Dauids troope conſiſted of Male-contents, all that were in diſtreſſe, in debt, in bitterneſſe of ſoule, were gathered to him: Many if neuer ſo well ordered are hard to command; a few if diſorderly, more hard; many and diſorderly, muſt needs be ſo much the hardeſt of all, that Dauid neuer atchieued any victory like vnto this, wherein hee firſt ouercame himſelfe, then his Souldiers.

And what was the charme, wherewith Dauid allayed thoſe raging ſpirits of his followers? No other but this; Hee is the Anointed of the Lord. That holy Oyle was the Antidote for his blood; Saul did not lend Dauid ſo impearceable an Armour, when hee ſhould encounter Goliah, as Dauid now lent him in this plea of his vnction. Which of all the diſcontented Out-lawes that lurked in that Caue, durſt put forth his hand againſt Saul, when they once heard, He is the Lords Anointed. Such an impreſſion of awe hath the Diuine Prouidence cauſed his Image to make in the hearts of men, as that it makes Traytors cowards; ſo as in ſtead of ſtriking they tremble; How much more lawleſſe then the Out-lawes of Iſrael, are thoſe profeſſed Ring-leaders of Chriſtianity; which teach and practiſe, and incourage, and reward, and canonize the violation of Maieſty? It is not enough for thoſe who are commanders of others to reſraine their owne hands from doing euill, but they muſt carefully preuent the iniquity of their heeles, elſe they ſhall bee iuſtly reputed to doe that by others, which in their owne perſons they auoided; The lawes both of God and man, preſuppoſe vs in ſome ſort anſwerable for our charge: as taking it for granted, that we ſhould not vndertake thoſe reynes, which we cannot mannage.

There was no reaſon Dauid ſhould loſe the thankes of ſo noble a demonſtration of his loyalty; Whereto he truſts ſo much, that he dares call backe the man by whom he was purſued; and make him iudge, whether that fact had not deſerued a life. As his act, ſo his word and geſture imported nothing but humble obedience, neither was there more meekeneſſe then force in that ſeaſonable perſwaſion; Wherein hee lets Saul ſee the error of his credulity, the vniuſt ſlanders of maliciouſneſſe, the opportunity of his reuenge, the proofe of his forbearance, the vndenyable euidence of his innocence; and after a lowly diſparagement of himſelfe, appeales to God for iudgement, for protection.

So liuely and feeling Oratory did Saul find in the lap of his garment, and the lips of Dauid, that it is not in the power of his enuy, or ill nature to hold out any longer: Is this thy voice my ſonne Dauid, and Saul lift vp his voice and wept, and ſaid; Thou art more righteous then I. He, whoſe Harpe had wont to quiet the frenzy of Saul, hath now by his words calmed his fury; ſo that now he ſheds teares in ſtead of blood; and confeſſes his owne wrong, and Dauids integrity; And (as if he were new againe entred into the bounds of Naioth in Ramath) he prayes, and propheſies good to him, whom he maliced for good; The Lord render thee good for that thou haſt done to me this day; for now behold, I know that thou ſhalt be King.

There is no heart made of fleſh, that ſometime or other relents not, euen flint and marble, will in ſome weather ſtand on drops. I cannot thinke theſe teares and proteſtations fained. Doubtleſſe Saul meant as he ſaid, and paſſed through ſenſible fits of good and euill: Let no man thinke himſelfe the better for good motions; the praiſe and benefit of thoſe gueſts is not in the receit, but the retention.

Who, that had ſeene this meeting, could but haue thought that all had beene ſure on Dauids ſide? What can ſecure vs if not Teares, and Prayers, and Oathes?

Doubtleſſe Dauids men which knew themſelues obnoxious to Lawes and Creditors, beganne to thinke of ſome new refuge, as making account this new peeced league would be euerlaſting; they looked when Saul would take Dauid home to the Court, and diſſolue his Army, and recompence that vniuſt perſecution with iuſt honour; when behold in the looſe, Saul goes home, but Dauid and his men goe vp vnto the hold. Wiſe Dauid knowes Saul not to bee more kinde, then vntruſty; and therefore had rather ſeeke ſafety in his hold, then in the hold of a hollow and vnſteddy friendſhip. Here are good words, but no ſecurity, which therefore an experienced man giues the hearing, but ſtands the while vpon his owne guard. No Charity bindes vs to a truſt of thoſe, whom we haue found faithleſſe; Credulity vpon weake grounds after palpable diſappointments, is the Daughter of Folly: A man that is Weather-wiſe, though he finde an abatement of the ſtorme, yet will not ſtirre from vnder his ſhelter whiles he ſees it thicke in the winde. Diſtruſt is the iuſt gaine of vnfaithfulneſſe.

NABAL and ABIGAIL.

IF innocency could haue ſecured from Sauls malice, Dauid had not beene perſecuted; and yet vnder that wicked King, aged Samuel dies in his bed. That there might be no place for Enuy, the good Prophet had retired himſelfe to the Schooles. Yet hee that hated Dauid, for what he ſhould be, did no leſſe hate Samuel for what he had beene. Euen in the midſt of Sauls malignity, there remained in his heart impreſſions of awfulneſſe vnto Samuel: he feared, where hee loued not. The reſtraint of God curbeth the rage of his moſt violent enemies, ſo as they cannot doe their worſt. As good husbands doe not put all their Corne to the Ouen, but ſaue ſome for ſeed, ſo doth God euer in the worſt of perſecutions.

Samuel is dead, Dauid baniſhed, Saul tyrannizeth, Iſrael hath good cauſe to mourn; it is no maruell if this lamentation be vniuerſall. There is no Iſraelite that feeleth not the loſſe of a Samuel. A good Prophet is the common Treaſure, wherein euery gracious ſoule hath a ſhare. That man hath a dry heart, which can part with Gods Prophet without teares.

Nabal was according to his name fooliſh; yet rich and mighty. Earthly poſſeſſions are not alwayes accompanied with wit and grace. Euen the Line of faithfull Caleb will afford an ill-conditioned Nabal. Vertue is not like vnto Lands inheritable. All that is traduced with the ſeed, is either euill, or not good. Let no man bragge with the Iewes, that he hath Abram to his father; God hath raiſed vp of this ſtone a ſon to Caleb.

Abigail (which ſignifieth her fathers ioy) had ſorrow enough to be matched with ſo vnworthy an husband; If her father had meant ſhe ſhould haue had ioy in her ſelfe, or in her life, he had not diſpoſed her to an husband (though rich) yet fond and wicked; It is like he maried her to the wealth, not to the man. Many a child is caſt away vpon riches. Wealth in our matches ſhould be as ſome graines or ſcruples in ballance, ſuperadded to the gold of vertuous qualities, to weigh downe the ſcales; when it is made the ſubſtance of the weight, and good qualities the appendance, there is but one earth poyſed with another; which, whereſoeuer it is done, it is a wonder, if either the children proue not the Parents ſorrow, or the Parents, theirs.

Nabals ſheep-ſhearing was famous; Three thouſand fleeces muſt needs require many hands; neither is any thing more plentifull commonly than a Churles Feaſt: What a world was this, that the noble Champion and Reſcuer of Iſrael, Gods Anointed, is driuen to ſend to a baſe Carle for victuals? It is no meaſuring of men by the depth of the purſe, by outward proſperity. Seruants are oftentimes ſet on horſebacke, whiles Princes goe on foot. Our eſtimation muſt be led by their inward worth, which is not alterable by time, nor diminiſhed with externall conditions.

One ragge of a Dauid is more worth, then the Ward-robes of a thouſand Nabals. Euen the beſt deſeruings may want. No man may bee contemned for his neceſſity; perhaps hee may bee ſo much richer in grace, as hee is poorer in eſtate; neither hath violence or caſualty more impoueriſhed a Dauid, then his pouerty hath enriched him. Hee, whoſe folly hath made himſelfe miſerable, is iuſtly rewarded with neglect; but he that ſuffers for good, deſerues ſo much more honour from others, as his diſtreſſe is more. Our compaſſion or reſpect muſt be ruled, according to the cauſe of anothers miſery.

One good turne requires another; in ſome caſes not hurting is meritorious: Hee that ſhould examine the qualities of Dauids followers, muſt needs grant it worthy of a fee, that Nabals flockes lay vntouched in Carmell; but more, that Dauids Souldiers were Nabals Shepheards; yea, the keepers of his Shepheards, gaue them a iuſt intereſt in that Sheep-ſhearing Feaſt, iuſtly ſhould they haue beene ſet at the vpper end of the Table. That Nabals Sheepe were ſafe, hee might thanke his Shepheards; that his Shepheards were ſafe, he might thanke Dauids Souldiers: It is no ſmall benefit that wee receiue in a ſafe protection; well may wee thinke our ſubſtance due, where we owe our ſelues. Yet this churliſh Nabal doth not onely giue nothing to Dauids Meſſengers, but which is worſe then nothing, ill words; Who is Dauid, or who is the ſonne of Iſhai? There bee many ſeruants now adayes that breake away from their Maſters. Dauid asked him bread, hee giueth him ſtones. All Iſraell knew, and honoured their Deliuerer: yet this Clowne, to ſaue his victuals, will needs make him a man, either of no merits or ill, either an obſcure man or a fugitiue. Nothing is more cheape then good words; theſe Nabal might haue giuen, and beene neuer the poorer: If he had beene reſolued to ſhut his hands in a feare of Sauls reuenge, he might haue ſo tempered his denyall, that the repulſe might haue bin free from offence: But now his foule-mouth doth not onely deny, but reuile. It ſhould haue bin Nabals glory, that his Tribe yeelded ſuch a Succeſſor to the Throne of Iſrael; now in all likelihood, his enuy ſtirs him vp to diſgrace that man, who ſurpaſſed him in honour and vertue, more then he was ſurpaſſed by him in wealth and eaſe; Many a one ſpeaks faire, that meanes ill, but when the mouth ſpeakes foule, it argues a corrupt heart; If with Saint Iames his verball benefactors, we ſay only, Depart in peace, warme your ſelues, fill your bellies, we ſhall anſwer for hypocriticall vncharitableneſſe; but if we rate and curſe thoſe needy ſoules, whom we ought to relieue, we ſhall giue a more fearfull account of a ſauage cruelty in trampling on thoſe whom God hath humbled. If healing with good words be iuſtly puniſhable, what torment is there for thoſe that wound with euill.

Dauid, which had all this while beene in the Schoole of patience, hath now his leſſon to ſeeke: He, who hath happily digeſted all the railing and perſecutions of a wicked Maſter, cannot put off this affront of a Nabal; Nothing can aſſwage his choler, but blood: How ſubiect are the beſt of Gods Saints to weake paſſions, and if we haue the grace to ward an expected blow of temptations, how eaſily are we ſurprized with a ſudden foile?

Wherefore ſerue theſe recorded weakneſſes of holy men, but to ſtrengthen vs againſt the conſcience of our infirmities: Not that we ſhould take courage to imitate them in the euill, whereunto they haue beene miſcaried; But we ſhould take heart to our ſelues, againſt the diſcouragement of our owne euils.

The Wiſedome of GOD hath ſo contriued it, that commonly (in Societies) good is mixed with euill, wicked Nabal hath in his houſe a wiſe and good Seruant, a prua prudent and worthy Wife; That wiſe ſeruant is carefull to aduertiſe his Miſtreſſe of the danger; his prudent Miſtreſſe is carefull to preuent it.

The liues of all his family were now in hazard: ſhee dares not commit this buſineſſe to the fidelity of a meſſenger, but forgetting her ſexe, puts her ſelfe into the errand; Her foot is not ſlow, her hand is not empty; According to the offence ſhee frames her ſatisfaction; Her Husband refuſed to giue, ſhee brings a bountifull gift; Her Husband gaue ill words, ſhee ſweetens them with a meeke and humble deprecation; Her Husband could ſay, Who is Dauid, ſhee fals at his feet; her Husband diſmiſſes Dauids men empty, ſhee brings her Seruants laden with prouiſion; as if it had beene onely meant to eaſe the repelled Meſſengers of the carriage, not to ſcant them of the required beneuolence; No wit, no art could deuiſe a more pithy and powerfull Oratory: As all ſatisfaction, ſo hers begins with a confeſſion; wherein ſhee deeply blameth the folly of her Husband: She could not haue beene a good Wife, if ſhe had not honoured her vnworthy head; If a ſtranger ſhould haue termed him foole in her hearing, hee could not haue gone away in peace: Now to ſaue his life, ſhee is bold to acknowledge his folly: It is a good diſparagement that preſerueth. There is the ſame way to our peace in Heauen; the onely meanes to eſcape iudgement, is to complaine of our owne vileneſſe; ſhee pleadeth her ignorance of the fact, and therein, her freedome from the offence: ſhee humbly craueth acceptation of her preſent, with pardon of the fault; ſhee profeſſeth Dauids honourable acts and merits; ſhe foretels his future ſucceſſe and glory; ſhe layes before him the happy peace of his ſoule, in refraining from innocent blood. Dauids breſt, which could not through the ſeeds of grace, grow to a ſtubbornneſſe in ill reſolutions, cannot but relent with theſe powerfull and ſeaſonable perſwaſions; and now in ſtead of reuenge, he bleſſeth God for ſending Abigail to meet him; hee bleſſeth Abigail for her counſell, hee bleſſeth the counſell for ſo wholſome efficacy, and now reioyceth more in being ouercome with a wiſe and gracious aduice, then he would haue reioyced in a reuengefull victory.

A good heart is eaſily ſtayed from ſinning, and is glad when it findes occaſion to bee croſſed in ill purpoſes; Thoſe ſecret checkes which are raiſed within it ſelfe, doe readily conſpire with all outward retentiues; It neuer yeelded to a wicked motion, without much reluctation, and when it is ouercome, it is but with halfe a conſent; whereas peruerſe and obdurate Sinners, by reaſon they take full delight in euill, and haue already in their conceit ſwallowed the pleaſure of ſinne, abide not to bee reſiſted, running on headdily, in thoſe wicked courſes they haue propounded in ſpight of oppoſition; and if they bee forcibly ſtopped in their way, they grow ſullen and mutinous. Dauid had not onely vowed, but deeply ſworne the death of Nabal, and all his Family, to the very Dogge that lay at his doore; yet now hee prayſeth God, that hath giuen the occaſion and grace to violate it. Wicked Vowes are ill made, but worſe kept. Our tongue cannot tye vs to commit ſin. Good men thinke themſelues happy, that ſince they had not the grace to deny ſinne, yet they had not the opportunity to accompliſh it. If Abigail had ſit ſtill at home, Dauid had ſinned, and ſhee had dyed: Now her diſcreet admonition hath preſerued her from the ſword, and diuerted him from bloud-ſhed. And now, what thankes, what benedictions hath ſhee for this ſeaſonable counſell? How ſhould it encourage vs to admoniſh our brethren; to ſee that if wee preuaile, we haue bleſſings from them; if we preuaile not, we haue yet bleſſings from God, and thankes of our owne hearts.

How neare was Nabal to a miſchiefe, and perceiues it not? Dauid was comming to the foot of the hill to cut his throat, while hee was feaſting in his houſe without feare; Little doe Sinners know, how neare their iollity is to perdition. Many times iudgement is at the threſhold, whiles drunkenneſſe and ſurfet are at the boord. Had he beene any other then a Nabal, he had not ſate downe to feaſt till hee had beene ſure of his peace with Dauid; either not to expect danger, or not to cleare it, was ſottiſh; So fooliſh are carnall men, that giue themſelues ouer to their pleaſures, whiles there are deadly quarrels depending againſt them in Heauen. There is nothing wherein wiſedome is more ſeene, then in the temperate vſe of proſperitie. A Nabal cannot abound, but he muſt be drunke and ſurfet; Exceſſe is a true argument of folly: We vſe to ſay, that when drinke is in, wit is out; but if wit were not out drinke would not be in.

It was no time to aduiſe Nabal, while his reaſon was drowned in a deluge of wine. A beaſt or a ſtone is as capable of good counſell as a Drunkard. Oh that the nobleſt Creature ſhould ſo farre abaſe himſelfe, as for a little liquor to loſe the vſe of thoſe faculties, whereby he is a Man. Thoſe that haue to doe with drinke or phrenzy muſt be glad to watch times; So did Abigail, who the next morning preſents to her Husband, the view of his faults, of his danger; Hee then ſees how neere hee was to death, and felt it not. That worldly minde is ſo apprehenſiue of the death that ſhould haue beene, as that he dyes, to thinke that he had like to haue dyed; Who would thinke a man could be ſo affected with a danger paſt, and yet ſo ſenſeleſſe of a future, yea imminent? He that was yeſter-night as a beaſt, is now as a ſtone; he was then ouer-merry, now dead and lumpiſh; Carnall hearts are euer in extremitie. If they bee once downe, their deiection is deſperate, becauſe they haue no inward comfort, to mitigate their ſorrow. What difference there was betwixt the diſpoſition of David and Nabal? How oft had David beene in the valley of the ſhaddow of death, and feared no euill? Nabal is but once put in minde of a death that might haue beene, and is ſtricken dead.

It is iuſt with God, that they who liue without grace, ſhould die without comfort; neither can we expect better, while wee goe on in our ſinnes. The ſpeech of Abigail ſmote Nabal into a qualme; that tongue had doubtleſſe oft aduiſed him well, and preuailed not; now, occaſions his death, whoſe reformation it could not effect; ſhee meant nothing but his amendment: God meant to make that louing inſtrument the meanes of his reuenge: ſhee ſpeakes, and God ſtrikes; and within tenne dayes, that ſwound ends in death. And now Nabal payes deare for his vncharitable reproach: for his riotous exceſſe: That God, which would not ſuffer David to right himſelfe by his owne Sword, takes the quarrell of his Seruant into his owne hand. David hath now his ends without ſinne; reioycing in the iuſt executions of God, who would neither ſuffer him to ſinne in reuenging, nor ſuffer his Aduerſaries to ſinne vnreuenged.

Our louing God is more angry with the wrongs done to his ſeruants, then themſelues can be, and knowes how to puniſh that iuſtly, which we could not vndertake without wronging God, more then men haue wronged vs. He that ſaith, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, repayes oft-times when we haue forgiuen, when we haue forgotten, and cals to reckoning after our diſcharges: It is dangerous offending any Fauourite of him, whoſe diſpleaſure and reuenge is euerlaſting.

How farre God lookes beyond our purpoſes? Abigail came onely to pleade for an ill Husband; and now God makes this iourney a preparation for a better: So that in one act, ſhe preſerued an ill Husband, and wonne a good one for the future: David well remembers her comely perſon, her wiſe ſpeeches, her gracefull carriage; and now, when modeſtie found it ſeaſonable, hee ſends to ſue her which had beene his Suppliant: ſhe intreated for her Husband, David treats with her for his Wife; her requeſt was to eſcape his Sword, hee wiſheth her to his bed; It was a faire ſuite to change a David for a Nabal; to become Davids Queene, in ſtead of Nabals Drudge; ſhee that learned humilitie vnder ſo hard a Tutor, abaſeth her ſelfe no leſſe when David offers to aduance her; (Let thine hand-mayde bee a Seruant to waſh the feete of the Seruants of my LORD.) None are ſo fit to bee great, as thoſe that can ſtoope loweſt: How could David bee more happy in a Wife; hee findes at once Pietie, Wiſedome, Humilitie, Faithfulneſſe, Wealth, Beautie? How could Abigail bee more happie in an Husband, then in the Prophet, the Champion, the Annointed of God? Thoſe Marriages were well made, wherein Vertues are matched, and Happineſſe is mutuall.

DAVID and ACHISH.

GOod motions that fall into wicked hearts are like ſome ſparkes that fall from the flint and ſteele, into wet tinder; lightſome for the time, but ſoone out. After Sauls teares and proteſtations, yet he is now againe, in the wilderneſſe with three thouſand men to hunt after innocent Dauid: How inuincible is the charity and loyalty of an honeſt heart? The ſame hand that ſpared Saul in the caue, ſpares him ſleeping in the field; The ſame hand that cut away the lap of his Maſters garment, carried away his Speare; that Speare, which might as well haue carried away the life of the owner, is onely borne away for a proofe of the fidelitie of the bearer. Still Saul is ſtrong, but Dauid victorious, and triumphs ouer the malice of his perſecutor; Yet ſtill the victor flieth from him whom he hath ouercome. A man that ſees, how farre Saul was tranſported with his rancorous enuy, cannot but ſay, that he was neuer more mad than when he was ſober; For euen after he had ſaid (Bleſſed art thou my ſonne Dauid, thou ſhalt doe great things and alſo preuaile;) yet ſtill he purſues him, whom he graunts aſſured to preuaile; what is this but to reſolue to loſe his labour in ſinning, and in ſpight of himſelfe to offend? How ſhamefull is our inequalitie of diſpoſition to good? We know we cannot miſſe of the reward of wel-doing, and yet doe it not; whiles wicked men caſt away their indeauours vpon thoſe euill proiects, whereof they are ſure to faile, ſinne blindes the eyes and hardens the heart, and thruſts men into wilfull miſchiefes, how euer dangerous, how euer impoſſible; and neuer leaues them till it haue brought them to vtter confuſion.

The ouer-long continuance of a tentation, may eaſily wearie the beſt patience: and may attaine that by protraction, which it could neuer doe by violence; Dauid himſelfe at laſt beginnes to bend vnder this triall; and reſolues ſo to flie from Saul, as he runnes from the Church of God; and whiles he will avoid the malice of his Maſter, ioynes himſelfe with Gods enemies. The greateſt Saints vpon earth, are not alwayes vpon the ſame pitch of ſpirituall ſtrength; Hee that ſometimes ſaid (I will not be afraid of ten thouſands, now ſayes, I ſhall periſh one day by the hand of Saul.) Hee had woont to conſult with God, now hee ſayes thus in his owne heart. How many euident experiments had Dauid of God deliuerances; how certaine and cleere predictions of his future Kingdome; how infallible earneſt was the holy Oyle, wherewith hee was annointed, of the Crowne of Iſrael? And yet (Dauid ſaid in his heart, I will now periſh one day by the hand of Saul:) The beſt faith is but like the twy-light, mixed with ſome degrees of darkneſſe, and infidelity; We doe vtterly miſreckon the greateſt earthly holineſſe, if we exempt it from infirmities; It is not long ſince Dauid told Saul, that thoſe wicked enemies of his, which caſt him out from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord, did as good as bid him; Goe ſerue other gods, yet now is hee gone from the inheritance of God, into the Land of the Philiſtims; That Saul might ſeeke him no more, he hides himſelfe out of the liſts of the Church, where a good man would not looke for him: Once before had Dauid fled to this Achiſh, when he was glad to ſcrabble on the doores, and let his ſpittle fall vpon his beard, in a ſemblance of madneſſe, that hee might eſcape; yet now in a ſemblance of friendſhip, is hee returned to ſaue that life, which hee was in danger to haue loſt in Iſrael. Goliah the Champion of the Philiſtims, whom Dauid ſlew, was of Gath; yet Dauid dwels with Achiſh King of the Philiſtims in Gath, euen amongſt them whoſe fore-skins he had preſented to Saul, by two hundreds at once, doth Dauid chuſe to reſide for ſafety: Howſoeuer it was a weakneſſe in Dauid, thus by his league of amity to ſtrengthen the enemies of God, yet doth not God take aduantage of it for his ouerthrow, but giues him protection, euen where his preſence offended; and giues him fauour where himſelfe bore iuſt hatred; Oh the infinite patience and mercy of our God, who doth good to vs for our euill, and in the very act of our prouocation vpholdeth, yea, bleſſeth vs with preſeruation!

COVLD Saul haue rightly conſidered it, hee had found it no ſmall loſſe and impayring to his Kingdome, that ſo valiant a Captaine, attended with ſixe hundred able Souldiers, and their Families, ſhould forſake his Land, and ioyne with his enemies; yet he is not quiet till he haue abandoned his owne ſtrength: The world hath none ſo great enemy to a wicked man, as himſelfe, his hands cannot be held from his own miſchiefe; hee will needs make his friends, enemies; his enemies, victors; himſelfe miſerable.

DAVID was too wiſe, to caſt himſelfe into the hand of a Philiſtim King without aſſurance; What aſſurance could hee haue but promiſes? Thoſe, Dauid had from Saul abundantly, and truſted them not; Hee dares truſt the fidelitie of a Pagan; hee dares not truſt the vowes of a King of Iſrael: There may bee fidelitie without the Church, and falſhood within: It neede not be any newes to finde ſome Turkes true, and ſome Chriſtians faithleſſe.

EVEN vnwiſe men are taught by experience, how much more they, who haue wit to learne without it? Dauid had well found, what it was to liue in a Court; Hee therefore, whom enuie droue from the Court of Iſrael, voluntarily declines the Philiſtim Court; and ſues for a Countrey-habitation; It had not beene poſſible for ſo noted a ſtranger, after ſo much Philiſtim-blood ſhed, to liue long in ſuch an eminency, amongſt the preaſe of thoſe, whoſe ſonnes, or brothers, or fathers, or allies, hee had ſlaughtered, without ſome perillous machination of his ruine: therefore hee makes ſuite for an early remoue: (For why ſhould thy ſeruant dwell in the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome with thee?) Thoſe that would ſtand ſure, muſt not affect too much height, or conſpicuitie: The tall Cedars are moſt ſubiect to windes and lightnings, whiles the ſhrubs of the Valleyes ſtand vnmooued; Much greatneſſe doth but make a fairer marke for euill: There is true firmneſſe and ſafety in mediocritie.

How rarely is it ſeene, that a man loſeth by his modeſtie? The change fell out well to Dauid of Ziklag, for Gath; Now hee hath a Citie of his owne; All Iſrael, where he was annointed, afforded him not ſo much poſſeſſion: Now the Citie which was anciently aſſigned to Iudah, returnes to the iuſt Owner: and is by this meanes entayled to to the Crowne of Dauids Succeſſors. Beſides that, now might Dauid liue out of the ſight, and hearing of the Philiſtim Idolatries, and enioy God no leſſe in the wals of a Philiſtim-Citie, than in an Iſraelitiſh wildernes; withal, an happy oportunitie was now opened to his friends of Iſrael, to reſort vnto his ayde; the heads of the thouſands that were of Manaſſeh, and many valiant Captaines of the other Tribes, fell dayly to him, and raiſed his ſix hundred followers to an armie, like the hoſt of God. The deſerts of Iſrael could neuer haue yeelded Dauid ſo great an aduantage: That God whoſe the earth is, makes roome for his owne euery-where; and oft-times prouideth them a forraine home, more kindly then the natiue: It is no matter for change of our ſoyle, ſo we change not our God; If we can euery-where acknowledge him, he will no where bee wanting to vs.

IT was not for Gods Champion to be idle; no ſooner is hee free from Sauls ſword, then he beginnes an offenſiue warre againſt the Amalekites, Girzites, Geſhurites: He knew theſe Nations branded by God to deſtruction: neither could his increaſing Army bee maintained with a little: By one act therefore, hee both reuenges for God, and prouides for his Hoſt. Had it not beene for that olde quarrell, which God had with his people, Dauid could not be excuſed from a bloody crueltie, in killing whole Countries, onely for the benefit of the ſpoyle: now his Souldiers were at once, Gods Executioners, and their owne Forragers. The interuention of a command from the Almighty, alters the ſtate of any act; and makes that worthy of praiſe, which elſe were no better then damnable. It is now Iuſtice, which were otherwiſe Murder; The will of God is the rule of good; what neede we enqure into other reaſons, of any act or determination, when we heare it comes from Heauen?

How many hundred yeares, had this brood of Canaanites liued ſecurely in their Country; ſince God commanded them to bee rooted out, and now promiſed themſelues the certaineſt peace? The Philiſtims were their friends if not their LORDS; The Iſraelites had their hands full, neither did they know any grudge betwixt them and their Neighbours, when ſuddenly the Sword of Dauid cuts them off, and leaues none aliue to tell the newes.

THERE is no ſafetie in protraction; with men, delay cauſeth forgetfulneſſe, or abates the force of anger; as all violent motions are weakeſt at the furtheſt; but with him, to whom all times are preſent, what can bee gayned by prorogation? Alas, what can it preuaile any of the curſed ſeed of Canaan, that they haue made a truce with Heauen, and a league with Hell? Their day is comming, and is not the further off, becauſe they expect it not.

MISERABLE were the ſtraites of Dauid; while he was driuen, not only to maintaine his Armie by ſpoyle, but to colour his ſpoyle by a ſinfull diſſimulation; Hee tels Achiſh, that he had beene rouing againſt the South of Iudah, and the South of the Ierahmelites, and the South of the Kenites, either falſly, or doubtfully, ſo as hee meant to deceiue him, vnder whom hee liued, and by whom hee was truſted: If Achiſh were a Philiſtim, yet he was Dauids friend, yea his Patron; and if hee had beene neither, it had not becomne Dauid to bee falſe. The infirmities of Gods children neuer appeare, but in their extremities. It is hard for the beſt man, to ſay, how farre hee will be tempted. If a man will put himſelfe among Philiſtims, he cannot promiſe to come forth innocent.

How eaſily doe we beleeue that which we wiſh? The more credit Achiſh giues vnto Dauid, the more ſinne it was to deceiue him; and now the conceit of this ingagement, procures him a further ſeruice. The Philiſtims are aſſembled to fight with Iſrael; Achiſh dares truſt Dauid on his ſide; yea to keepe his head for euer; neither can Dauid doe any leſſe then promiſe his aid againſt his owne fleſh: Neuer was Dauid, in all his life, driuen to ſo hard an exigent: neuer was he ſo extremely perplexed; For what ſhould hee doe now? To fight with Achiſh, hee was tyed by promiſe, by merit; Not to fight againſt Iſrael, he was tyed by his calling, by his vnction: Not to fight for Achiſh, were to bee vnthankefull; To fight againſt Iſrael, were to be vnnaturall; Oh what an inward battle muſt Dauid needs haue in his breſt, when hee thinkes of this battle of Iſrael, and the Philiſtims! How doth he wiſh now that hee had rather ſtood to the hazard of Sauls perſecution, then to haue put himſelfe vpon the fauour of Achiſh; Hee muſt fight on one ſide, and on whether ſide ſoeuer he ſhould fight, hee could not auoyd to bee treacherous; a condition worſe then death, to an honeſt heart; which way he would haue reſolued, if it had comne to the execution, who can know, ſince himſelfe was doubtfull? either courſe had beene no better then deſperate. How could the Iſraelites euer haue receiued him for their King, who in the open field, had fought againſt them? And contrarily, if hee would haue fought againſt his friend, for his enemy; againſt Achiſh for Saul; hee was now inuironed with iealous Philiſtims; and might rather looke for the puniſhment of his Treaſon, then the glory of a Victorie.

HIS heart had led him into theſe ſtraits; the Lord finds way to leade him out: The ſuggeſtions of his enemies doe herein befriend him: The Princes of the Philiſtims (whether of enuie, or ſuſpition) plead for Dauids diſmiſſion, (Send this fellow backe, that he may goe againe to his place, which thou haſt appointed him: and let him not goe downe to the battle, leſt hee be an aduerſarie to vs.) No Aduocate could haue ſaid more, himſelfe durſt not haue ſaid ſo much. Oh the wiſdome and goodneſſe of our God, that can raiſe vp an Aduerſary to deliuer out of thoſe euils, which our friends cannot; That by the ſword of an enemie, can let out that Apoſtume, which no Phyſician could tell how to cure: It would be wide with vs ſometimes, if it were not for others malice.

There could not bee a more iuſt queſtion, than this of the Philiſtim Princes, What doe theſe Hebrewes here? An Iſraelite is out of his element, when hee is in an Armie of Philiſtims: The true ſeruants of God are in their due places, when they are in oppoſition to his enemies. Profeſſion of hoſtilitie becomes them better than leagues of amity.

Yet Achiſh likes Dauids conuerſation and preſence ſo well, that hee profeſſeth himſelfe pleaſed with him, as with an Angell of God; How ſtrange is it to heare, that a Philiſtim ſhould delight in that holy man, whom an Iſraelite abhorres, and ſhould bee loth to be quit of Dauid, whom Saul hath expelled? Termes of ciuilitie be equally open to all religions, to all profeſſions: The common graces of Gods children, are able to attract loue from the moſt obſtinate enemies of goodneſſe; If we affect them for byreſpects of Valour, Wiſedome, Diſcourſe, Wit, it is their praiſe, not ours; But if for diuine Grace and Religion, it is our prayſe with theirs.

Such now was Dauids condition, that he muſt plead for that hee feared, and argue againſt that which he deſired: (What haue I done? & what haſt thou found in thy ſeruant, that I may not goe, and fight againſt the enemies of my Lord the King?) Neuer any newes could be more cordiall to him than this, of his diſmiſſion; yet muſt he ſeeme to ſtriue againſt it, with an importunate profeſſion of his forwardneſſe to that act, which hee moſt deteſted.

One degree of Diſſimulation drawes on another; thoſe which haue once giuen way to a faulty courſe, cannot eaſily, either ſtop or turne backe; but are in a ſort forced to ſecond their ill beginnings, with worſe proceedings. It is a dangerous and miſerable thing, to caſt our ſelues into thoſe actions, which draw with them a neceſſitie, either of offending, or miſcarriage.

SAVL and the Witch of Endor.

EVen the worſt men may ſometimes make head againſt ſome ſinnes. Saul hath expelled the Sorcerers out of the Land of Iſrael; and hath forbidden Magick vpon paine of death. Hee that had no care to expell Satan out of his owne heart, yet will ſeeme to driue him out of his Kingdome. That wee ſee wicked men oppoſe themſelues to ſome ſinnes, there is neither maruell, nor comfort in it: No doubt Satan made ſport at this Edict of Saul; what cares he to be baniſhed in Sorcery, whiles he is entertayned in malice? He knew and found Saul his, whiles he reſiſted; and ſmiled to yeeld thus farre vnto his Vaſſall: If we quit not all ſinnes, hee will bee content wee ſhould either abandon or perſecute ſome.

Where is no place for holy feare, there will bee place for the ſeruile; The graceleſſe heart of Saul was aſtonied at the Philiſtims; yet was neuer moued at the frownes of that God whoſe anger ſent them, nor of thoſe ſinnes of his which procured them. Thoſe that cannot feare for loue, ſhall tremble for feare: and how much better is awe than terror? preuention than confuſion? There is nothing more lamentable than to ſee a man laugh when he ſhould feare; God ſhall laugh when ſuch an ones feare commeth.

Extremitie of diſtreſſe, will ſend euen the prophaneſt man to God; like as

hall, J.

the drowning man, reacheth out his hand to that bough, which he contemned whiles he ſtood ſafe on the banke: Saul now asketh counſell of the Lord; whoſe Prophet hee hated, whoſe Prieſts he ſlue, whoſe Anointed hee perſecutes; Had Saul conſulted with God when he ſhould, this euill had not beene; but now, if this euill had not beene; he had not conſulted with God; The thanke of this Act is due, not to him, but to his affliction; A forced piety is thankleſſe, vnprofitable; God will not anſwer him neither by Dreames, nor by Vrim, nor by Prophets. Why ſhould God anſwer that man by Dreames, who had reſiſted him waking? Why ſhould hee anſwer him by Vrim, that had ſlaine his Prieſts? Why ſhould hee anſwer him by Prophets, who hated the Father of the Prophets, rebelled againſt the word of the Prophets?

It is an vnreaſonable vnequality to hope to find God at our command, when wee would not be at his; To looke that God ſhould regard our voice in trouble, when we would not regard his in peace.

Vnto what mad ſhifts are men driuen by deſpayre? If God will not anſwer, Satan ſhall; (Saul ſaid to his ſeruants, Seeke mee a man that hath a familiar ſpirit.) If Saul had not knowne this courſe Deuilliſh, why did hee decree to baniſh it, to mulct it with death? yet now againſt the ſtreame of his conſcience, hee will ſeeke to thoſe whom hee had condemned; There needs no other iudge of Sauls act then himſelfe; had he not before oppoſed this ſinne, he had not ſo hainouſly ſinned in committing it; There cannot bee a more fearfull ſigne of an heart giuen vp to a reprobate ſenſe, then to caſt it ſelfe wilfully into thoſe ſinnes, which it hath proclaimed to deteſt The declinations to euill are many times inſenſible, but when it breakes forth into ſuch apparent effects, euen others eyes may diſcerne it; What was Saul the better to fore-know the iſſue of his approaching battell? If this conſultation could haue ſtrengthned him againſt his enemies, or promoted his victory, there might haue beene ſome colour for ſo foule an act; Now, what could hee gaine, but the ſatisfying of his bootleſſe curioſity, in fore-ſeeing that, which hee ſhould not bee able to auoid?

Fooliſh men giue away their ſoules for nothing; The itch of impertinent and vnprofitable knowledge, hath beene the hereditary diſeaſe of the ſons of Adam & Eue; How many haue periſhed to know that which hath procured their periſhing? How ambitious ſhould wee bee to know thoſe things, the knowledge whereof is eternall Life!

Many a lewd office are they put to which ſerue wicked maſters; One while Sauls ſeruants are ſet to kill innocent Dauid; another while to ſhed the blood of Gods Prieſts; and now they muſt goe ſeek for a Witch: It is no ſmall happineſſe to attend them, from whom we may receiue precepts and examples of vertue.

Had Saul beene good, hee had needed no diſguiſe; Honeſt actions neuer ſhame the doers; Now that hee goeth about a ſinfull buſineſſe, hee changeth himſelfe; hee ſeekes the ſhelter of the night, hee takes but two followers with him; It is true, that if Saul had come in the port of a King, the Witch had as much diſſembled her condition, as now hee diſſembleth his; yet it was not onely deſire to ſpeed, but guiltineſſe that thus altered his habit; ſuch is the power of conſcience, that euen thoſe who are moſt affected to euill, yet are aſhamed to be thought ſuch as they deſire to be.

Saul needed another face to fit that tongue, which ſhould ſay, (Coniecture to me by the familiar ſpirit, and bring me vp whom I ſhall name vnto thee;) An obdurate heart can giue way to any thing.

NOTVVITHSTANDING the peremptory edict of Saul, there are ſtill Witches in Iſrael; neither good Lawes, nor carefull executions can purge the Church from Malefactors; There will ſtill be ſome that will ieopard their heads vpon the groſſeſt ſinnes; No Garden can be ſo curiouſly tended, that there ſhould not bee one Weed left in it; Yet ſo farre can good Statutes, and due inflictions of puniſhments vpon offenders, preuaile; that miſchieuous perſons are glad to pull in their heads, and dare not doe ill, but in diſguiſe and darkneſſe. It is no ſmall aduantage of iuſtice, that it affrights ſinne, if it cannot be expelled; As contrarily wofull is the condition of that place, where is a publike profeſſion of wickedneſſe.

The Witch was no leſſe crafty then wicked; ſhee had before (as is like) bribed Officers to eſcape inditement, lurke in ſecrecy; and now ſhee will not worke her feates without ſecuritie; her ſuſpition proiects the worſt; (Wherefore ſeekeſt thou to take mee in a ſnare, to cauſe me to die?) Oh vaine Sorcereſſe, that could be wary to auoid the puniſhment of Saul, careleſſe to auoid the iudgement of God; Could wee fore-thinke what our ſinne would coſt vs, wee durſt not, but be innocent: This is a good and ſeaſonable anſwer for vs, to make vnto Satan, when hee ſollicites vs to euill (wherefore ſeekeſt thou to take me in a ſnare, to cauſe me to dye?) Nothing is more ſure then this intention in the tempter, then this euent in the iſſue; Oh that we could but ſo much feare the eternall paines, as we doe the temporarie, and be but ſo carefull to ſaue our ſoules from torment, as our bodies.

No ſooner hath Saul ſworne her ſafetie, then ſhee addreſſeth her to her Sorcery; Hope of impunitie drawes on ſinne with boldneſſe; were it not for the deluſions of falſe promiſes, Satan ſhould haue no Clients. Could Saul be ſo ignorant, as to thinke that Magicke had power ouer Gods deceaſed Saints to raiſe them vp; yea, to call them downe from their reſt? Time was, when Saul was among the Prophets; And yet now, that he is in the impure lodge of Diuels, how ſenſeleſſe hee is, to ſay, Bring me vp Samuel? It is no rare thing, to loſe euen our wit and iudgement together with graces; How inſtly are they giuen to ſottiſhneſſe, that haue giuen themſelues ouer to ſinne?

The Sorcereſſe (it ſeemes) exerciſing her coniurations in a roome apart, is informed by her Familiar, who it was that ſet her on worke; ſhee can therefore finde time, in the midſt of her Exorciſmes, to binde the aſſurance of her owne ſafety, by expoſtulation, (She cryed with a loud voyce, why haſt thou deceiued me, for thou art Saul,) The very name of Saul was an accuſation; Yet is he ſo farre from ſtriking his breſt, that doubting leſt this feare of the Witch, ſhould interrupt the deſired worke, hee encourages her, whom hee ſhould haue condemned; (Be not afraid;) Hee that had more cauſe to feare, for his owne ſake, in an expectation of iuſt iudgement, cheeres vp her, that feared nothing but himſelfe; How ill doth it become vs to giue that counſell to others, whereof wee haue more neede and vſe in our owne perſons!

As one that had more care to ſatisfie his owne curioſitie, then her ſuſpition, he askes, (what ſaweſt thou?) Who would not haue looked, that Sauls haire ſhould haue ſtared on his head, to heare of a ſpirit raiſed? His ſinne hath ſo hardened him, that hee rather pleaſes himſelfe in it, which hath nothing in it but horror; So farre is Satan content to deſcend to the ſeruice of his ſeruants, that hee will approue his fained obedience to their very outward ſenſes; What forme is ſo glorious, that hee either cannot or dare not vndertake? Here Gods aſcend out of the Earth; Elſe-where Satan transformes him into an Angell of light; What wonder is it, that his wicked Inſtruments appeare like Saints in their hypocriticall diſſimulation? if we will be iudging by the appearance, wee ſhall be ſure to erre: No eye could diſtinguiſh betwixt the true Samuel, and a falſe ſpirit; Saul, who was well worthy to bee deceiued, ſeeing thoſe gray hayres, and that Mantle, inclines himſelfe to the ground, and bowes himſelfe; He that would not worſhip God in Samuel aliue, now worſhip Samuel in Satan; and no maruell; Satan was now become his refuge in ſtead of God; his vrim was darkneſſe, his Prophet a Ghoſt: Euery one that conſults with Satan, worſhips him, though hee bow not, neither doth that euill ſpirit deſire any other reuerence, then to bee ſought vnto.

How cunningly doth Satan reſemble, not onely the habit and geſture, but the language of Samuel, Wherefore haſt thou diſquieted me, and wherefore doeſt thou aske of me, ſeeing the Lord is gone from thee,& is thine enemy? Nothing is more pleaſing to that euill one, then to be ſolicited, yet in the perſon of Samuel, hee can ſay, Why haſt thou diſquieted mee? Had not the Lord beene gone from Saul, he had neuer comne to the Deuillish Oracle of Endor, and yet the counterfetting ſpirit can ſay; Why doſt thou aske of me, ſeeing the Lord is gone from thee? Satan cares not how little he is knowne to be himſelfe; he loues to paſſe vnder any forme, rather then his owne.

The more holy the perſon is, the more carefully doth Satan act him, that by his ſtale hee may enſnare vs. In euery motion it is good to try the ſpirits, whether they be of God; Good words are no meanes to diſtinguiſh a Prophet from a Deuill; Samuel himſelfe, whiles hee was aliue, could not haue ſpoken more grauely, more ſeuerely, more diuinely, then this euill ghoſt, For the Lord will rent thy Kingdome out of thy hand, and giue it thy neighbour Dauid, becauſe thou obeyedſt not the voyce of the Lord, nor executedſt his fierce wrath vpon the Amalekites, therefore hath the Lord done this vnto thee this day: When the Deuill himſelfe puts on grauitie and religion, who can maruell at the hypocriſie of men? Well may lewd men bee good Preachers, when Satan himſelfe can play the Prophet; Where are thoſe Ignorants, that can thinke charitably of charmes and ſpells, becauſe they finde nothing in them, but good words? What Prophet could ſpeake better words, then this Deuill in Samuels Mantle? Neither is there at any time ſo much danger of that euill ſpirit, as when hee ſpeakes beſt.

I could wonder to heare Satan preach thus prophetically, If I did not know, that as hee was once a good Angell, ſo hee can ſtill act what he was; Whiles Saul was in conſultation of ſparing Agag, wee ſhall neuer finde that Satan would lay any blocke in his way? Yea then hee was a prompt Orator, to induce him into that ſinne; now that it is paſt and gone, hee can lade Saul with fearefull denunciations of iudgement; Till wee haue ſinned, Satan is a paraſite; when wee haue ſinned; hee is a Tyrant: What cares hee to flatter any more, when he hath what he would? Now his onely worke is to terrifie, and confound, that he may enioy what he hath wonne; How much better is it ſeruing that Maſter, who when we are moſt deiected with the conſcience of euill, heartens vs with inward comfort, and ſpeakes peace to the ſoule in the midſt of tumult.

Ziklag ſpoyled and reuenged.

HAd not the King of the Philiſtims ſent Dauid away early, his Wiues, and his people and ſubſtance, which he left at Ziklag, had beene vtterly loſt; Now Achiſh did not more pleaſure Dauid in his entertainment, then in his diſmiſſion. Saul was not Dauids enemy more in the perſecution of his perſon, then in the forbearance of Gods enemies; Behold, thus late doth Dauid feele the ſmart of Sauls ſinne, in ſparing the Amalekites: who, if Gods ſentence had beene duly executed, had not now ſuruiued, to annoy this parcell of Iſrael.

As in ſpirituall reſpects our ſinnes are alwayes hurtfull to our ſelues, ſo in temporall oft-times preiudiciall to poſteritie; A wicked man deſerues ill of thoſe, hee neuer liued to ſee.

I cannot maruell at the Amalekites aſſault made vpon the Iſraelites of Ziklag: I cannot but maruell at their clemencie: how iuſt it was, that while Dauid would giue aid to the enemies of the Church, againſt Iſrael, the enemies of the Church ſhould riſe againſt Dauid, in his peculiar charge of Iſrael: But whilſt Dauid rouing againſt the Amalekites, not many dayes before, left neither man nor woman aliue, how ſtrange is it, that the Amalekites inuading and ſurprizing Ziklag (in reuenge) kill neither man nor woman? Shall wee ſay that mercy is fled from the breſts of Iſraelites, and reſts in Heathens? Or ſhall we rather aſcribe this to the gracious reſtraint of God, who hauing deſigned Amalek to the ſlaughter of Iſrael, and not Iſrael to the ſlaughter of Amalek, moued the hand of Iſrael, and held the hands of Amalek; This was that alone, that made the Heathens take vp with an vn-bloody reuenge; burning onely the walls, and leading away the perſons. Iſrael croſſed the reuealed will of God in ſparing Amalek; Amalek fulfils the ſecret will of God in ſparing Iſrael.

It was ſtill the lot of Amalek, to take Iſrael at all aduantages; vpon their firſt comming out of Egypt, when they were weary, weake, and vnarmed, then did Amalek aſſault them; And now, when one part of Iſrael was in the field againſt the Philiſtims, another was gone with the Philiſtims againſt Iſrael; the Amalekites ſet vpon the Coaſts of both; and goe away laded with the ſpoile: No other is to be expected of our ſpirituall Aduerſaries, who are euer readieſt to aſſayle, when we are the vnreadieſt to defend.

It was a wofull ſpectacle for Dauid and his Souldiers, vpon their returne to finde ruines and aſhes in ſtead of houſes, and in ſtead of their Families, ſolitude; Their City was vaniſhed into ſmoke, their houſholds into captiuity; neither could they know whom to accuſe, or where to enquire for redreſſe; whiles they made account that their home ſhould recompence their tedious iourny with comfort, the miſerable deſolation of their home doubles the diſcomfort of their iourney; what remained there but teares and lamentations? They lifted vp their voices, and wept, till they could weepe no more. Here was plenty of nothing but miſery and ſorrow. The heart of euery Iſraelite was brim full of griefe; Dauids ranne ouer; for beſides that his croſſe was the ſame with theirs, all theirs was his alone; each man lookt on his fellow as a partner of affliction, but euery one lookt vpon Dauid as the cauſe of all their affliction; and (as common diſpleaſure is neuer but fruitfull of renenge) they all agree to ſtone him as the Author of their vndoing, whom they followed all this while, as the hopefull meanes of their aduaneements.

Now Dauids loſſe is his leaſt griefe; neither (as if euery thing had conſpired to torment him) can hee looke beſides the aggrauation of his ſorrow and danger; Saul and his Souldiers had hunted him out of Iſrael; the Philiſtim Courtiers had hunted him from the fauour of Achiſh; the Amalekites ſpoyled him in Ziklag; yet all theſe are eaſie aduerſaries in compariſon of his owne; his owne followers are ſo farre from pittying his participation of the loſſe, that they are ready to kill him, becauſe they are miſerable with him. Oh the many and grieuous perplexities of the man after Gods owne heart! If all his traine had ioyned their beſt helpes for the mitigation of his griefe, their Cordials had beene too weake, but now the vexation that ariſes from their fury and malice, drowneth the ſenſe of their loſſe, and were enough to diſtract the moſt reſolute heart; why ſhould it be ſtrange to vs, that we meet with hard trialls, when we ſee the deare Anointed of God thus plunged into euils?

What ſhould the diſtreſſed ſonne of Iſhai now doe? Whither ſhould he thinke to turne him? to goe backe to Iſrael he durſt not; to goe to Achiſh he might not; to abide amongſt thoſe waſte heapes he could not; or if there might haue beene harbour in thoſe burnt wals, yet there could be no ſafety to remaine with thoſe mutinous ſpirits. (But Dauid comforted himſelfe in the Lord his God;) oh happy and ſure refuge of a faithfull ſoule! The earth yeelded him nothing, but matter of diſconſolation, and heauineſſe; he lifts his eyes aboue the hils, whence commeth his ſaluation; It is no maruell that God remembreth Dauid in all his troubles, ſince Dauid in all his troubles did thus remember his God; he knew that though no mortall eye of reaſon, or ſenſe could diſcerne any euaſion from theſe intricate euils, yet that the eye of diuine Prouidence had diſcried it long before; and that though no humane power could make way for his ſafety, yet that the ouer-ruling hand of his God, could doe it with eaſe; His experience had aſſured him of the fidelity of his Guardian in Heauen; and therefore he comforted himſelfe in the Lord his God.

In vaine is comfort expected from God, if we conſult not with him. Abiathar the Prieſt is called for; Dauid was not in the Court of Achiſh, without the Prieſt by his ſide; nor the Prieſt without the Ephod: Had theſe beene left behind in Ziklag, they had bin miſcaried with the reſt, and Dauid had now bin hopeleſſe. How well it ſucceeds to the Great, when they take God with them in his Miniſters, in his Ordinances? As contrarily, when theſe are layd by, as ſuperfluous, there can bee nothing but vncertainty of ſucceſſe, or certainty of miſchiefe. The preſence of the Prieſt and Ephod, would haue little auailed him without their vſe; by them he askes counſell of the Lord in theſe ſtraits. The mouth and eares of God, which were ſhut vnto Saul, are open vnto Dauid; no ſooner can he aske, then he receiues anſwer; and the anſwer that he receiues is full of courage and comfort: (Follow, for thou ſhalt ſurely outtake them, and recouer all.) That God of truth, neuer diſappointed any mans truſt. Dauid now findes, that the eye which waited vpon God was not ſent away weeping.

Dauid therefore, and his men, are now vpon their march after the Amalekites: It is no lingring when God bids vs goe: They which had promiſed reſt to their weary limbes, after their returne from Achiſh, in their harbour of Ziklag, are glad to forget their hopes, and to put their ſtiffe ioynts vnto a new taske of motion: It is no maruell, if two hundred of them were ſo ouer-tyred with their former toyle, that they were not able to paſſe ouer the Riuer Beſor. Dauid was a true type of Chriſt. Wee follow him in theſe holy Warres, againſt the ſpitituall Amalekites; All of vs are not of an equall ſtrength; Some are caried by the vigour of their faith, through all difficulties; Others, after long preſſure, are ready to languiſh in the way: Our Leader is not more ſtrong then pittifull; neither doth he ſcornfully caſheere thoſe, whoſe deſires are hearty, whiles their abilities are vnanſwerable: How much more ſhould our charity pardon the infirmities of our brethren, and allow them to ſit by the ſtuffe, who cannot endure the march?

The ſame Prouidence which appointed Dauid to follow the Amalekites, had alſo ordered an Egyptian to be caſt behind them. This caſt Seruant, whom his cruell Maſter had left to faintneſſe and famine, ſhall be vſed as the meanes of the recouery of the Iſraelites loſſe, and of the reuenge of the Amalekites. Had not his Maſter neglected him, all theſe Rouers of Amalek had gone away with their life and booty: It is not ſafe to deſpiſe the meaneſt vaſſall vpon earth. There is a mercy and care due to the moſt deſpicable peece of all humanity; wherein we cannot be wanting without the offence, without the puniſhment of God.

Charity diſtinguiſheth an Iſraelite from an Amalekite. Dauids followers are ſtrangers to this Egyptian; an Amalekite was his maſter; His Maſter leaues him to die (in the field) of ſickneſſe and hunger, theſe ſtrangers relieued him: and ere they know, whether they might by him receiue any light in their purſuit, they refreſh his dying ſpirits with Bread and Water, with Figges and Raiſins; Neither can the haſte of their way be any hindrance to their compaſſion: He hath no Iſraelitiſh blood in him, that is vtterly mercileſſe; Perhaps yet Dauids followers might alſo, in the hope of ſome intelligence, ſhew kindneſſe to this forelorne Egyptian. Worldly wiſedome teacheth vs, to ſow ſmall courteſies, where we may reape large Harueſts of recompence: No ſooner are his ſpirits recalled, then he requites his food with information. I cannot blame the Egyptian, that he was ſo eaſily induced to deſcry theſe vnkind Amalekites, to mercifull Iſraelites; thoſe that gaue him ouer vnto death, to the reſtorers of his life; much leſſe, that ere he would deſcry them, he requires an oath of ſecurity, from ſo bad a maſter; Well doth he match death with ſuch a ſeruitude: Wonderfull is the Prouidence of God, euen ouer thoſe, which are not in the neereſt bonds, his owne. Three dayes, and three nights, had this poore Egyptian Slaue lyen ſicke and hunger-ſtarued in the fields, and lookes for nothing but death, when God ſends him ſuccour from the hands of thoſe Iſraelites, whom he had helped to ſpoile, though not ſo much for his ſake, as for Iſraels, is this heatheniſh Stragler preſerued.

It pleaſes God to extend his common fauours to all his creatures; but in miraculous preſeruations, he hath ſtill wont to haue reſpect to his owne. By this meanes therefore, are the Iſraelites brought to the ſight of their late ſpoylers; whom they find ſcattered abroad, vpon all the earth, eating and drinking, and dancing in triumph, for the great prey they had taken.

It was three dayes at leaſt, ſince this gainfull forraging of Amalek; and now, ſeeing no feare of any purſuer, and promiſing themſelues ſafety, in ſo great and vntraced a diſtance, they make themſelues merry with ſo rich and eaſie a victory; and now ſuddenly, when they began to thinke of enioying the beauty and wealth they had gotten; the ſword of Dauid was vpon their throats. Deſtruction is neuer neerer, then when ſecurity hath chaſed away feare. With how ſad faces and hearts, had the Wiues of Dauid, and the other Captiues of Iſrael, looked vpon the triumphall Reuels of Amalek; and what a change, doe we thinke, appeared in them, when they ſaw their happy and valiant Reſcuers, flying in vpon their inſolent Victors, and making the death of the Amalekites, the ranſome of their captiuity: They mourned euen now at the dances of Amalek; now in the ſhriekes and death of Amalek, they ſhout and reioyce: The mercy of our God forgets not to enterchange our ſorrowes with ioy, and the ioy of the wicked with ſorrow.

The Amalekites haue paid a deare loane for the goods of Iſrael, which they now reſtore with their owne liues; and now their ſpoyle hath made Dauid richer then he expected: that booty which they had ſwept from all other parts accrewed to him.

Thoſe Iſraelites that could not goe on to fight for their ſhare, are comne to meet their brethren with gratulation. How partiall are we wont to be vnto our owne cauſes? Euen very Iſraelites will be ready to fall out for matter of profit: where ſelfe-loue hath bred a quarrell, euery man is ſubiect to flatter his owne caſe. It ſeemed plauſible, and but iuſt to the actors in this reſcue, that thoſe which had taken no part in the paine and hazard of the iourney, ſhould receiue no part of the commodity. It was fauour enough for them to recouer their wiues and children, though they ſhared not in the goods. Wiſe and holy Dauid (whoſe prayſe was no leſſe, to ouercome his owne in time of peace, then his enemies in warre) cals his contending followers from Law to equity, and ſo orders the matter, that ſince the Plaintifes were detained not by will, but by neceſſity, and ſince their forced ſtay was vſefull in guarding the ſtuffe, they ſhould partake equally of the prey with their fellowes. A ſentence well beſeeming the iuſtice of Gods Anointed. Thoſe that repreſent God vpon earth, ſhould reſemble him in their proceeding. It is the iuſt mercy of our God, to meaſure vs by our wils, not by our abilities; to recompence vs graciouſly, according to the truth of our deſires, and endeauours; and to account that performed by vs, which he onely letteth vs from performing. It were wide with vs, if ſometimes purpoſe did not ſupply actions. Whiles our heart faulteth not, we that through ſpirituall ſickneſſe are faine to abide by the ſtuffe, ſhall ſhare both in grace and glory with the Victors.

The death of SAVL.

THe Witch of Endor had halfe ſlaine Saul before the Battell: it is iuſt that they who conſult with Deuils, ſhould go away with diſcomfort: He hath eaten his laſt bread, at the hand of a Sorcereſſe: and now neceſſity drawes him into that field, where hee ſees nothing but deſpaire. Had not Saul beleeued the ill newes of the counterfeit Samuel, he had not beene ſtrucke downe on the ground with words: Now his beleefe made him deſperate; Thoſe actions which are not ſuſtained by hope, muſt needs languiſh: and are onely promoted by outward compulſion: Whiles the mind is vncertaine of ſucceſſe, it relieues it ſelfe with the poſſibilities of good: in doubts there is a comfortable mixture: but when it is aſſured of the worſt euent, it is vtterly diſcouraged and deiected. It hath therefore pleaſed the wiſedome of God to hide from wicked men, his determination of their finall eſtate, that their remainders of hope, may hearten them to good.

In all likelihood one ſelfe-ſame day, ſaw Dauid a victor ouer the Amalekites, and Saul diſcomfited by the Philiſtims; How ſhould it be otherwiſe? Dauid conſulted with God, and preuailed; Saul with the Witch of Endor, and periſheth. The end is commonly anſwerable to the way; It is an idle iniuſtice when we doe ill to looke to ſpeed well. The ſlaughter of Saul and his ſonnes, was not in the firſt Scene of this Tragicall field, that was rather reſerued by God, for the laſt act, that Sauls meaſure might bee full: God is long ere he ſtrikes, but when he doth, it is to purpoſe; Firſt, Iſrael flees and falls downe wounded in Mount Gilboa; They had their part in Sauls ſinne; they were actors in Dauids perſecution: Iuſtly therefore doe they ſuffer with him, whom they had ſeconded in offence. As it is hard to be good vnder an euill Prince, ſo it is as rare not to be enwrapped in his iudgements: It was no ſmall addition to the anguiſh of Sauls death, to ſee his ſonnes dead, to ſee his people fleeing, and ſlaine before him; They had ſinned in their King, and in them is their King puniſhed. The reſt were not ſo worthy of pitty; but whoſe heart would it not touch to ſee Ionathan, the good ſon of a wicked father, inuolued in the common deſtruction? Death is not partiall: All diſpoſitions, all merits are alike to it; if valour, if holineſſe, if ſincerity of heart could haue beene any defence againſt mortality, Ionathan had ſuruiued: Now by their wounds and death, no man can diſcerne which is Ionathan; The ſoule onely findes the difference, which the body admitteth not; Death is the common gate both to Heauen and Hell; we all paſſe that, ere our turning to either hand: The ſword of the Philiſtims fetcheth Ionathan through it with his fellowes: no ſooner is his foot ouer that threſhold, then God conducteth him to glory: The beſt cannot be happy but through their diſſolution; Now therefore hath Ionathan no cauſe of complaint, hee is by the rude and cruell hand of a Philiſtim, but remoued to a better Kingdome then he leaues to his brother; and at once is his death both a temporall affliction to the ſonne of Saul, and an entrance of glory to the friend of Dauid.

The Philiſtim-archers ſhot at randome: God directs their arrowes into the bodie of Saul: Leſt the diſcomfiture of his people, and the ſlaughter of his ſonnes ſhould not be griefe enough to him, hee feeles himſelfe wounded, and ſees nothing before him but horror and death; and now as a man forſaken of all hopes, hee begs of his Armour-bearer that deaths-blow, which elſe he muſt (to the doubling of his indignation) receiue from a Philiſtim. Hee begges this bloodie fauour of his ſeruant, and is denyed: Such an awfulneſſe hath God placed in Soueraignty, that no intreaty, no extremitie, can moue the hand againſt it: What metall are thoſe men made of, that can ſuggeſt or reſolue, and attempt the violation of Maieſtie? Wicked men care more for the ſhame of the World, then the danger of their ſoule: Deſperate Saul will now ſupply his Armor-bearer; and as a man that bore armes againſt himſelfe, he falls vpon his owne Sword. What if he had dyed by the weapon of a Philiſtim? So did his ſonne Ionathan, and loſt no glory: Theſe conceits of diſreputation preuaile with carnall hearts aboue all ſpirituall reſpects: There is no greater murderer then vain-glory: Nothing more argues an heart voyd of grace, then to be tranſported by idle popularitie into actions preiudiciall to the Soule.

Euill examples, eſpecially of the great, neuer eſcaped imitation; the Armor-bearer of Saul followes his maſter: and dares doe that to himſelfe, which to his King hee durſt not: as if their owne Swords had beene more familiar executioners, they yeelded vnto them, what they grudged to their purſuers. From the beginning was Saul euer his owne enemy, neither did any hands hurt him but his owne: and now his death is ſutable to his life: his owne hand payes him the reward of all his wickedneſſe. The end of hypocrites, and enuious men is commonly fearefull: Now is the blood of Gods Prieſts, which Saul ſhed, and of Dauid, which hee would haue ſhed, required, and requited. The euill ſpirit had ſayd the euening before, To morrow thou ſhalt bee with mee: and now Saul haſteth to make the Deuill no Lier: rather then faile, he giues himſelfe his owne Mittimus: Oh the wofull extremities of a deſpairing ſoule, plunging him euer into a greater miſchiefe to auoyd the leſſe! He might haue beene a patient in anothers violence, and faultleſſe; now whiles hee will needs act the Philiſtims part vpon himſelfe, he liued and dyed a Murderer; The caſe is deadly, when the Priſoner breakes the Iayle, and will not ſtay for his deliuery: and though we may not paſſe ſentence vpon ſuch a ſoule, yet vpon the fact we may: the ſoule may poſſibly repent in the parting, the act is haynous, and ſuch as without repentance, kils the ſoule.

It was the next day, ere the Philiſtims knew how much they were victors; then finding the dead corpes of Saul and his ſonnes, they begin their triumphs: The head of King Saul is cut off in lieu of Goliahs, and now all their Idoll temples ring of their ſucceſſe: Fooliſh Philiſtims, if they had not beene more beholding to Sauls ſins, then their gods, they had neuer carried away the honour of thoſe Trophees: In ſtead of magnifying the iuſtice of the true God, who puniſhed Saul with deſerued death, they magnifie the power of the falſe: Superſtition is extremely iniurous to God: It is no better then Theft, to aſcribe vnto the ſecond cauſes that honour which is due vnto the firſt: but to giue Gods glory to thoſe things which neither act, nor are, it is the higheſt degree of ſpirituall robbery.

Saul was none of the beſt Kings: yet ſo impatient are his ſubiects of the indignity offred to his dead corps, that they will rather leaue their owne bones amongſt the Philiſtims, then the carcaſſe of Saul. Such a cloſe relation there is betwixt a Prince and Subiect, that the diſhonour of either is inſeparable from both: How willingly ſhould wee bee to hazard our bodies or ſubſtance for the vindication either of the perſon, or name of a good King, whiles hee liues to the benefit of our protection: It is an vniuſt ingratitude in thoſe men, which can endure the diſgrace of them, vnder whoſe ſhelter they liue; but how vnnaturall is the villany of thoſe Miſcreants, that can bee content to bee actors in the capitall wrongs offered to ſoueraigne authoritie?

It were a wonder, if after the death of a Prince, there ſhould want ſome Picke-thanke, to inſinuate himſelfe into his Succeſſor: An Amalekite youngman rides poſte to Ziklag, to finde out Dauid, whom euen common rumour had notified for the annointed Heire to the Kingdome of Iſrael; to bee the firſt Meſſenger of that newes, which he thought could bee no other then acceptable; the death of Saul: and that the tidings might bee ſo much more meritorious, hee addes to the report, what he thinkes might carrie the greateſt retribution: In hope of reward, or honour, the man is content to bely himſelfe to Dauid: It was not the Speare, but the Sword of

hall, J.

Saul, that was the inſtrument of his death: neither could this ſtranger finde Saul, but dying, ſince the Armour-bearer of Saul ſaw him dead, ere he offered that violence to himſelfe: The hand of this Amalekite therefore was not guiltie, his tongue was: Had not this Meſſenger meaſured Dauids foote by his owne Laſt, hee had forborne this peece of the newes; and not hoped to aduantage himſelfe by this falſhood: Now hee thinkes; The tidings of a Kingdome cannot but pleaſe: None but Saul and Ionathan ſtood in Dauids way: Hee cannot chuſe, but like to heare of their remouall: Eſpecially, ſince Saul did ſo tyrannouſly perſecute his innocence. If I ſhall onely report the fact done by another, I ſhall goe away but with the recompence of a luckie Poſt; whereas, if I take vpon mee the action, I am the man, to whom Dauid is beholden for the Kingdome: hee cannot but honour and requite mee, as the Authour of his deliuerance and happineſſe. Worldly mindes think no man can bee of any other, then their owne dyet; and becauſe they find the reſpects of ſelfe-loue, and priuate profit, ſo ſtrongly preuailing with themſelues, they cannot conceiue, how theſe ſhould be capable of a repulſe from others.

How much was this Amalekite mocked of his hopes: whiles hee imagined, that Dauid would now triumph, and feaſt in the aſſured expectation of the Kingdome, and Poſſeſſion of the Crowne of Iſrael, he findes him renting his clothes, and wringing his hands, and weeping, and mourning: as if all his comfort had bin dead with Saul and Ionathan: and yet perhaps hee thought: This ſorrow of Dauid is but faſhionable, ſuch as great heires make ſhew of in the fatall day they haue longed for; Theſe teares will be ſoone dry; the ſight of a Crowne will ſoone breed a ſucceſſion of other paſſions: But this errour is ſoone corrected: For when Dauid had entertayned this Bearer, with a ſad faſt all the day, hee cals him forth in the euening to execution: (How waſt thou not afraid (ſaith he) to put forth thine hand to deſtroy the Annointed of the Lord?) Doubtleſſe, the Amalekite made many faire pleas for himſelfe, out of the grounds of his owne report: Alas, Saul was before falne vpon his owne Speare. It was but mercie to kill him, that was halfe dead, that hee might dye the ſhorter: Beſides, his entreaty and importunate prayers, mooued mee to haſten him, through thoſe painefull gates of death: had I ſtricken him as an enemy, I had deſerued the blow I had giuen; now I lent him the hand of a friend: why am I puniſhed for obeying the voyce of a King? and for perfiting what himſelfe begun, and could not finiſh: And if neither his owne wound, nor mine, had diſpatched him, the Philiſtims were at his heeles, ready to doe this ſame act with inſultation, which I did in fauour: and if my hand had not preuented them, where had beene the Crowne of Iſrael, which I now haue here preſented to thee: I could haue deliuered that to King Achiſh, and haue beene rewarded with honour: let me not dye for an act well meant to thee, how euer conſtrued by thee: But no pretence can make his owne tale not deadly: (Thy blood be vpon thine owne head, for thine owne mouth hath teſtified againſt thee, ſaying, I haue ſlaine the Lords Annointed.) It is a iuſt ſuppoſition, that euery man is ſo great a Fauourer of himſelfe, that he will not miſ-report his owne actions, nor ſay the worſt of himſelfe: In matter of confeſſion, men may without iniury be taken at their words: If he did it, his fact was capitall; If he did it not, his lye: It is pitty any other recompence ſhould befall thoſe falſe Flatterers, that can be content to father a ſinne, to get thankes. Euery drop of royall blood is ſacred: For a man to ſay that he hath ſhed it, is mortall. Of how farre different ſpirits from this of Dauid, are thoſe men, which ſuborne the death of Princes, and celebrate and canonize the Murtherers! Into their ſecret let not my ſoule come, my glory, be thou not ioyned to their Aſſembly.

Abner and Ioab.

HOw mercifull and ſeaſonable are the prouiſions of God? Ziklag was now nothing but ruines and aſhes: Dauid might returne to the ſoile where it ſtood, to the roofes and wals he could not: No ſooner is he diſappointed of that harbour, then God prouides him Cities of Hebron: Saul ſhall die to giue him elbow-roome: Now doth Dauid finde the comfort that his extremitie ſought in the Lord his God: Now are his clouds for a time paſſed ouer: and the Sunne breakes glorioſly forth: Dauid ſhall raigne after his ſufferings. So, ſhall we, if we endure to the end, finde a Crowne of Righteouſneſſe, which the Lord the righteous Iudge, ſhall giue vs at that day: But though Dauid well knew that his head was long before anointed, and had heard Saul himſelfe confidently auouching his Succeſſion: yet he will not ſtirre from the heaps of Ziklag till he haue conſulted with the Lord: It did not content him, that he had Gods warrant for the Kingdome, but he muſt haue his inſtructions for the taking poſſeſſion of it: How ſafe and happy is the man that is reſolued to do nothing without God? Neither will generalities of direction be ſufficient; euen particular circumſtances muſt looke for a word: ſtill is God a Pillar of fire, and cloud to the eye of euery Iſraelite: neither may there be any motion or ſtay but from him; That action cannot but ſucceed, which proceeds vpon ſo ſure a warrant.

God ſends him to Hebron a City of Iudah: Neither will Dauid goe vp thither alone, but he takes with him all his men with their whole houſholds: they ſhall take ſuch part as himſelfe: As they had ſhared with him in his miſery, ſo they ſhall now in his proſperity: Neither doth he take aduantage of their late mutinie (which was yet freſh and greene) to caſhire thoſe vnthankfull, and vngracious followers, but pardoning their ſecret rebellions, hee makes them partakers of his good ſucceſſe. Thus doth our heauenly Leader (whom Dauid prefigured) take vs to raigne with him who haue ſuffered with him: paſſing by our manifold infirmities, as if they had not bin, hee remoueth vs from the Land of our baniſhment, and the aſhes of our forlorne Ziklag, to the Hebron of our Peace and glory: The expectation of this day muſt (as it did with Dauids Souldiers) digeſt all our ſorrowes.

Neuer any calling of God was ſo conſpicuous, as not to finde ſome Oppoſites: What Iſraelite did not know D*auid* appointed by God to the ſucceſſion of the Kingdome? Euen the Amalekite, could carry the Crowne to him as the true Owner: yet there want not an Abner to reſiſt him, and the Title of an Iſhboſheth to colour his reſiſtance: If any of Sauls houſe could haue made challenge to the Crowne, it ſhould haue beene Mephiboſheth the ſonne of Ionathan: Who, it ſeemes had too much of his Fathers blood to be a Competitor with D*auid*: the queſtion is not, who may claime the moſt right, but who may beſt ſerue the faction; Neither was Iſhboſheth any other thē Abners Stale: Saul could not haue a fitter Courtier: whether in the imitation of his Maſters enuy, or the ambition of ruling vnder a borrowed name, he ſtrongly oppoſed D*auid*: there are thoſe who ſtriue againſt their owne hearts, to make a ſide, with whom conſcience is oppreſſed by affection: An ill quarrell once vndertaken ſhall be maintained, although with blood: Now, not ſo much the blood of Saul, as the ingagement of Abner makes the Warre. The ſonnes of Zeruiah ſtand faſt to D*auid*: It is much, how a man placeth his firſt intereſt: If Abner had been in Ioabs room, when Sauls diſpleaſure droue D*auid* from the Court, or Ioab in Abners, theſe actions, theſe euents had beene changed with the perſons: It was the only happineſſe of Ioab that he fell on the better ſide.

Both the Commanders vnder Dauid and Iſhboſheth were equally cruell: both are ſo inured to blood, that they make but a ſport of killing. Cuſtome makes ſinne ſo familiar, that the horror of it, is to ſome turned into pleaſure. (Come let the young men play before vs.) ABNER is the Challenger, and ſpeeds thereafter: for though in the matches of Duell both ſides miſcarried, yet in the following conflict, Abner and his men are beaten: By the ſucceſſe of thoſe ſingle Combats no man knowes the better of the cauſe: Both ſides periſh, to ſhew, how little God liked either the offer, or the acceptation of ſuch a tryall; but when both did their beſt, God puniſheth the wrong part with diſcomfiture.

Oh, the miſery of ciuill diſſention! Iſrael and Iudah were brethren? One carried the name of the Father, the other of the Sonne: Iudah was but a branch of Iſrael, Iſrael was the roote of Iudah: yet Iſrael and Iudah muſt fight, and kill each other; onely vpon the quarrell of an ill Leaders ambition. The ſpeed of Aſahel was not greater then his courage: It was a minde fit for one of Dauids Worthies, to ſtrike at the head, to match himſelfe with the beſt: He was both ſwift and ſtrong: but the race is not to the ſwift, nor the battle to the ſtrong: If hee had gone neuer ſo ſlowly, he might haue ouertaken death: now hee runnes to fetch it. So little luſt had Abner to ſhed the blood of a ſonne of Zeruiah, that hee twice aduiſes him to retreate from purſuing his owne perill: Aſahels cauſe was ſo much better as Abners ſucceſſe: Many a one miſcarries in the raſh proſecution of a good quarrell, when the Abettors of the worſt part goe away with victory. Heate of zeale, ſometimes in the vndiſcreete purſuit of a iuſt Aduerſarie, prooues mortall to the agent, preiudiciall to the ſeruice.

ABNER, whiles hee kils, yet hee flyes, and runnes away from his owne death, whiles he inflicts it vpon another: Dauids followers had the better of the field and day; The Sunne, as vnwilling to ſee any more Iſraelitiſh blood ſhed by brethren, hath withdrawne himſelfe: and now both parts hauing got the aduantage of an hill vnder them, haue ſafe conuenience of parley: Abner beginnes, and perſwades Ioab to ſurceaſe the fight (Shall the ſword deuoure for euer? Knoweſt thou not, that it will bee bitterneſſe in the end? How long ſhall it bee, ere thou bid the people returne from following their brethren?) It was his fault, that the ſword deuoured at all: and why was not the beginning of a ciuill Warre bitterneſſe? Why did hee call forth the people to skirmiſh, and inuite them to death? Had Abner beene on the winning hand, this motion had beene thanke-worthy: It is a noble diſpoſition in a Victor, to call for a ceſſation of Armes: whereas neceſſitie wrings this ſuite from the ouermaſtered. There cannot be a greater prayſe, to a valiant and wiſe Commander, then a propenſion to all iuſt termes of peace: For warre as it is ſometimes neceſſary, ſo it is alwayes euill; and if fighting haue any other end propoſed beſides peace, it prooues murder. Abner ſhall finde himſelfe no leſſe ouercome, by Ioab in clemencie, then power; Hee ſayes not, I will not ſo eaſily leaue the aduantage of my victory: ſince the Dice of warre runne on my ſide, I will follow the chace of my good ſucceſſe: Thou ſhouldeſt haue conſidered of this before thy prouocation: It is now too late, to moue vnto forbearance: But, as a man that meant to approue himſelfe equally free from cowardiſe, in the beginning of the conflict, and from crueltie in the end; hee profeſſeth his forwardneſſe, to entertaine any pretence of ſheathing vp the ſwords of Iſrael; and ſweares to Abner, that if it had not beene for his proud irritation, the people had in the morning before ceaſed from that bloody purſuite of their brethren. As it becomes publike perſons to bee louers of peace, ſo they muſt ſhew it vpon all good occaſions: letting paſſe no opportunitie of making ſpare of blood.

Iſhboſheth was (it ſeemes) a man of no great ſpirits, for being no leſſe then fortie yeares old, when his father went into his laſt field againſt the Philiſtims, hee was content to ſtay at home; Abner hath put ambition into him; and hath eaſily raiſed him to the head of a faction, againſt the annointed Prince of Gods people. If this vſurped Crowne of Sauls Sonne, had any worth or glory in it, he cannot but ac-acknowledge, to owe it all vnto Abner; yet how forward is vnthankfull Iſhboſheth to receiue a falſe ſuggeſtion againſt his chiefe Abettor: (Wherefore haſt thou gone in, to my fathers Concubine?) Hee that made no conſcience of an vniuſt claime to the Crowne, and a maintenance of it with blood, yet ſeemes ſcrupulous of a leſſe ſinne, that carried in it the colour of a diſgrace; The touch of her, who had beene honoured by his fathers bed, ſeemed an intolerable preſumption, and ſuch as could not bee ſeuered from his owne diſhonour: Selfe-loue ſometimes borrowes the face of honeſt zeale. Thoſe, who out of true grounds diſlike ſinnes, doe hate them all indifferently, according to their haynouſneſſe; Hypocrites are partiall in their deteſtation, bewraying euer moſt bitterneſſe againſt thoſe offences, which may moſt preiudice their perſons and reputations.

It is as dangerous as vniuſt for Princes, to giue both their eares and their heart to miſgrounded rumours of their innocent followers: This wrong hath ſtript Iſhboſheth of the Kingdome: Abner in the meane time cannot be excuſed from a trecherous inconſtancy: If Sauls ſonne had no true Title to the Crowne, why did he maintaine it? If he had, why did he forſake the cauſe and perſon? Had Abner out of remorſe, for furthering a falſe claime, taken off his hand, I know not wherein he could be blamed, except for not doing it ſooner: But now to withdraw his profeſſed allegeance, vpon a priuate reuenge, was to take a lewd leaue of an ill action: If Iſhboſheth were his lawfull Prince, no iniury could warrant a reuolt: Euen betwixt priuate perſons, a returne of wrongs is both vncharitable, and vniuſt, how euer this goe currant for the common iuſtice of the World: how much more ſhould we learne from a ſupreme hand, to take hard meaſures with thankes? It had beene Abners duty, to haue giuen his King a peaceable and humble ſatisfaction, and not to flye out in a ſnuffe. If the ſpirit of the Ruler riſe vp againſt thee, leaue not thy place, for yeelding pacifieth great offences: now, his impatient falling, although to the right ſide, makes him no better then traiterouſly honeſt.

So ſoone as Abner hath entertained a reſolution of his rebellion, he perſwades the Elders of Iſrael to accompany him in the change: and whence doth he fetch his maine motiue but from the Oracle of God? (The Lord hath ſpoken of David, ſaying, By the hand of my ſeruant David, will I ſaue my people Iſrael, out of the hand of the Philiſtims, and out of the hand of all their enemies;) Abner knew this full well before, yet then was well content to ſmother a knowne truth for his owne turne, and now the publication of it may ſerue for his aduantage, he wins the heart of Iſrael, by ſhewing Gods Charter for him, whom he had ſo long oppoſed: Hypocrites make vſe of God for their owne purpoſes; and care onely to make diuine authoritie a colour for their owne deſignes; No man euer heard Abner godly till now: neither had he beene ſo at this time, if he had not intended a reuengefull departure from Iſhboſheth: Nothing is more odious, then to make Religion a ſtalking horſe to Policy.

Who can but glorifie God in his iuſtice, when he ſees the bitter end of this trecherous diſſimulation? Dauid may vpon conſiderations of State, entertaine his new Gueſt with a Feaſt; and well might he ſeeme to deſerue a welcome, that vndertakes to bring all Iſrael to the league and homage of Dauid: but God neuer meant to vſe ſo vnworthy meanes, for ſo good a worke. Ioab returnes from purſuing a troupe, and finding Abner diſmiſſed in peace and expectation of beneficiall returne, followes him, and whether out of enuy, at a new riuall of honour, or out of the reuenge of Aſahel, he repayes him both diſſimulation and death. God doth moſt iuſtly by Ioab, that which Ioab did for himſelfe moſt vniuſtly: I know not (ſetting the quarrell aſide) whether we can worthily blame Abner for the death of Aſahel, who would needs after faire warnings runne himſelfe vpon Abners Speare: yet this fact ſhall procure his paiment for worſe. Now is Iſhboſheths wrong reuenged by an enemy; we may not alwayes meaſure the Iuſtice of Gods proceedings, by preſent occaſions: He needs not make vs acquainted, or aske vs leaue when he will call for the arrerages of forgotten ſinnes.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE, MY VERY GOOD LORD, WILLIAM LORD BVRLEIGH,

All Grace and Happineſſe.

RIGHT HONOVRABLE,

There are but two Bookes wherein wee can reade God; The one is his Word, his Workes the other: This is the bigger Volume, that the more exquiſite. The Characters of this are more large, but dim; of that, ſmaller, but clearer. Philoſopher haue turned ouer this, and erred; That, Diuines and ſtudious Christians, not without full and certaine information. In the Works of God we ſee the ſhadow, or footſteps of the Creator, in his Word we ſee the face of God in a glaſſe. Happineſſe conſiſts in the Viſion of that infinite Maieſtie: and if we be perfectly happy aboue in ſeeing him face to face, our happineſſe is well forward below, in ſeeing the liuely repreſentation of his face in the glaſſe of the Scriptures. We cannot ſpend our eyes too much vpon this Obiect: For me, the more I ſee, the more I am amazed, the more I am rauiſhed with this glorious beautie. With the honeſt Lepers I cannot be content to enioy this happy ſight alone: there is but one way to euery mans felicity. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip to take part with many your Peeres, in theſe my weake, but not vnprofitable Contemplations; which ſhall hold themſelues not a little graced with your Honourable Name; Whereto, together with your right Noble and moſt Worthy Lady, I haue gladly deuoted my ſelfe, to be

THE FIFTEENTH BOOKE.

Vzzah, and the Arke remoued.

THe houſe of Saul is quiet, the Philiſtims beaten, victory can not end better then in deuotion; Dauid is no ſooner ſetled in his houſe at Ieruſalem, then he fetcheth God to be his gueſt there; the thouſands of Iſrael goe now in an holy march, to bring vp the Arke of God, to the place of his reſt: The tumults of Warre afforded no opportunitie of this ſeruice; onely peace is a friend to Religion, neither is peace euer our friend, but when it is a ſeruant of Pietie: The vſe of War is not more pernicious to the body, then the abuſe of peace is to the ſoule; Alas, the Riot bred of our long eaſe, rather driues the Arke of God from vs; ſo the ſtill ſedentary life, is ſubiect to diſeaſes, and ſtanding waters putrifie. It may be iuſt with God, to take away the bleſſing which wee doe ſo much abuſe, and to ſcoure off our ruſt with bloody Warre, &c.

The Arke of God had now many yeeres, reſted in the obſcure lodge of Abinadab, without the honour of a Tabernacle. Dauid will not endure himſelfe glorious, and the Arke of God contemptible; his firſt care is to prouide a fit roome for God, in the head of the Tribes, in his owne City. The chiefe care of good Princes, muſt bee the aduancement of Religion; What ſhould the Deputies of God rather doe, than honour him whom they repreſent? It was no good that Iſrael could learne of Philiſtims; Thoſe Pagans had ſent the Arke backe in a new Cart; the Iſraelites ſaw God bleſſed that conduct, and now they practiſe it at home: But that which God will take from Philiſtims, hee will not brooke from Iſrael: Aliens from God are no fit patterns for children: Diuine inſtitution had made this a carriage for the Leuites, not for oxen: Neither ſhould thoſe ſonnes of Abinadab haue driuen the Cart, but carried that ſacred burden. Gods buſineſſes muſt be done after his owne formes, which if we doe with the beſt intentions alter, we preſume.

It is long ſince Iſrael ſaw ſo fayre a day as this, wherein they went in this holy Triumph to fetch the Arke of God; Now their Warlike Trumpets are turned into Harps and Timbrils; and their hands in ſtead of weilding the Sword and Speare, ſtrike vpon thoſe muſicall ſtrings whereby they might expreſſe the ioy of their hearts: Here was no noyſe but of mirth, no motion but pleaſant: Oh happy Iſrael that had a God to reioyce in, that had this occaſion of reioycing in their God, and an heart that embraced this occaſion. There is nothing but this wherein wee may not ioy immoderately, vnſeaſonably; this ſpirituall ioy can neuer bee either out of time, or out of meaſure: Let him that reioyceth, reioyce in the Lord. But now when the Iſraelites were in the midſt of this Angel-like iollitie, their hearts lifted vp, their hands playing, their feet mouing, their tongues ſinging and ſhouting, God ſees good to ſtrike them into a ſudden dumpe by the death of Vzzah: They are ſcarce ſet into the tune, when God marres their Muſicke, by a fearefull iudgement; and changes their mirth into aſtoniſhment, and confuſion; There could not bee a more excellent worke then this they were about; there could not be more chearefull hearts in the performing of it, yet will the moſt holy God rather daſh all this ſolemne ſeruice, then endure an act of preſumption or infidelitie. Abinadab had beene the faithfull Hoſt of Gods Arke for the ſpace of twenty yeeres: euen in the midſt of the terrors of Iſrael, who were iuſtly affrighted with the vengeance inflicted vpon Beth-ſhemeſh, did hee giue habour vnto it; Yet euen the ſonne of Abinadab is ſtricken dead, in the firſt departing of that bleſſed gueſt: The Sanctitie of the Parent cannot beare out the ſinne of his Sonne: The Holy one of Iſrael will be ſanctified in all that come neere him: He will be ſerued like himſelfe.

What then was the ſinne of Vzzah? What was the capitall crime, for which hee ſo fearefully periſhed? That the Arke of God was committed to the Cart, it was not his deuice onely, but the common act of many; That it was not carried on the ſhoulders of Leuites, was no leſſe the fault of Ahio, and the reſt of their Brethren; onely Vzzah is ſtricken: The reſt ſinned in negligence, he in preſumption; the Arke of God ſhakes with the agitation of that carriage; hee puts forth his hand to hold it ſteddie: Humane iudgement would haue found herein nothing haynous: God ſees not with the eyes of men; None but the Prieſts ſhould haue dared to touch the Arke; It was enough for the Leuites to touch the barres that carried it: An vnwarranted hand cannot ſo lightly touch the Arke, but he ſtrikes the God that dwels in it: No maruell if God ſtrike that man with death, that ſtrikes him with Preſumption; There was wel-neere the ſame quarrell againſt the thouſands of Beth-ſhemeſh, and againſt Vzzah; They dyed for looking into the Arke, hee for touching it; leſt Iſrael ſhould grow into a contemptuous familiaritie with this Teſtimonie of Gods preſence, he will hold them in awe with Iudgements: The reuenging hand of the Almighty, that vpon the returne of the Arke ſtayed at the houſe of Abinadab, vpon the remoue of the Arke beginnes there againe: Where are thoſe that thinke God will take vp with a careleſſe and ſlubbred ſeruice? Hee whoſe infinite mercie vſes to paſſe by our ſinnes of infirmitie, puniſheth yet ſeuerely our bold faults: If we cannot doe any thing in the degrees that hee requireth; yet wee muſt learne to doe all things in the forme that he requireth; Doubtleſſe Vzzah meant no otherwiſe then well in putting forth his hand to ſtay the Arke; Hee knew the ſacred Vtenſils that were in it, the Pot of Manna, the Tables of the Law, the Rod of Aaron, which might bee wronged by that ouer-rough motion: to theſe he offers his aide, and is ſtricken dead: The beſt intention cannot excuſe; much leſſe warrant vs in vnlawfull actions: where we doe ought in faith, it pleaſeth our good God to winke at, and pitty our weakeneſſes; but if we dare to preſent God with the wel-meant ſeruices of our owne making, we runne into the indignation of God; There is nothing more dangerous then to be our owne caruers in matter of Deuotion.

I maruell not if the countenance of Dauid were ſuddenly changed, to ſee the pale face of death in one of the chiefe Actors in this holy Proceſſion: Hee that had found God ſo fauourable to him in actions of leſſe worth, is troubled to ſee this ſucceſſe of a buſineſſe ſo heartily directed vnto his God; and now he beginnes to looke thorow Vzzah at himſelfe, and to ſay, (How ſhall the Arke of the Lord come to mee?) Then onely ſhall wee make a right vſe of the iudgements of God vpon others, when we ſhall feare them in our ſelues, and finding our ſinnes at leaſt equall, ſhall tremble at the expectation of the ſame deſerued puniſhments, God intends not onely reuenge in his execution, but reformation; As good Princes regard not ſo much the ſmart of the euill paſt, as the preuention of the future; which is neuer attained but when wee make applications of Gods hand: and draw common cauſes out of Gods particular proceedings.

I doe not heare Dauid ſay; Surely, this man is guiltie of ſome ſecret ſinne, that the World knowes not, God hath met with him, there is no danger to vs, why ſhould I be diſcouraged to ſee God iuſt? we may go on ſafely and proſper: But here his foot ſtaies, and his hand fals from his Inſtrument, and his tongue is ready to taxe his owne vnworthineſſe, (How ſhall the Arke of the Lord come vnto me?) That heart is carnall and proud, that thinkes any man worſe then himſelfe; Dauids feare ſtayes his progreſſe: Perhaps he might haue proceeded with good ſucceſſe, but he dares not venture, where he ſees ſuch a deadly checke: It is better to be too fearefull, then too forward in thoſe affaires, which doe immediately concerne God; As it is not good to refraine from holy buſineſſes, ſo it is worſe to doe them ill; Awfulneſſe is a ſafe Interpreter of Gods ſecret actions, and a wiſe guide of ours.

This euent hath holpen Obed-Edom to a gueſt he lookt not for, God ſhall now ſoiourne in the houſe of him, in whoſe heart hee dwelt before by a ſtrong faith: elſe the man durſt not haue vndertaken to receiue that dreadfull Arke, which Dauid himſelfe feared to harbour; Oh the courage of an honeſt and faithfull heart! Obed-Edom knew well enough what ſlaughter the Arke had made amongſt the Philiſtims, and after that amongſt the Bethſhemites, and now he ſaw Vzzah lye dead before him, yet doth he not make any ſcruple of entertaining it, neither doth he ſay, My Neighbour Abinadab was a carefull and religious hoſt to the Arke, and is now payed with the blood of his ſonne: how ſhall I hope to ſpeed better? but he opens his doores with a bold cheerefulneſſe, and notwithſtanding all thoſe terrors, bids God welcome: Nothing can make God not amiable to his owne; Euen his very iuſtice is louely: Holy men know how to reioice in the Lord with trembling, and can feare without diſcouragement.

The GOD of heauen will not receiue any thing from men on free coſt: hee will pay liberally for his lodging, a plentifull bleſſing vpon Obed-Edom, and all his houſehould. It was an honour to that zealous Gittite, that the Arke could come vnder his roofe; yet God rewards that honour with benediction: Neuer man was a loſer by true godlineſſe. The houſe of Obed-Edom cannot this while want obſeruation: the eyes of Dauid, and all Iſrael were neuer off from it, to ſee how it fared with this entertainment. And now, when they finde nothing, but a gracious acceptation and ſenſible bleſſing, the good King of Iſrael takes new heart, and haſtens to fetch the Arke into his royall Citie. The view of Gods fauours vpon the Godly, is no ſmall encouragement to confidence and obedience: Doubtleſſe, Obed-Edom was not free from ſome weakeneſſes; If the Lord ſhould haue taken the aduantage of Iudgement againſt him, what Iſraelites had not beene diſheartened from attending the Arke? Now Dauid and Iſrael was not more affrighted with the vengeance vpon Vzzah, then encouraged by the bleſſing of Obed-Edom: The wiſe God doth ſo order his iuſt and mercifull proceedings, that the awfulneſſe of men may bee tempered with loue. Now the ſweete ſinger of Iſrael reuiues his holy Muſicke, and addes both more ſpirit and more pompe to ſo deuout a buſineſſe: I did not before heare of Trumpets, nor dancing, nor ſhouting, nor ſacrifice, nor the linnen Ephod: The ſenſe of Gods paſſed diſpleaſure, doubles our care to pleaſe him, and our ioy in his recouered approbation: we neuer make ſo much of our health, as after ſickneſſe, nor neuer are ſo officious to our friend, as after an vnkindneſſe. In the firſt ſetting out of the Arke, Dauids feare was at leaſt an equall match to his ioy; therefore after the firſt ſixe paces hee offered a ſacrifice, both to pacifie God, and thanke him: but now when they ſaw no ſigne of diſlike, they did more freely let themſelues looſe to a fearleſſe ioy; and the body ſtroue to expreſſe the holy affection of the ſoule; there was no limme, no part that did not profeſſe their mirth by motion, no noiſe of voice, or inſtrument wanted to aſſiſt their ſpirituall iollity; Dauid led the way, dancing with all his might in his linnen Ephod: Vzzah was ſtill in his eye, hee durſt not vſurpe vpon a garment of Prieſts, but will borrow their colour to grace the ſolemnitie, though hee dare not the faſhion: White was euer the colour of ioy, and Linnen was light for vſe, therefore he couers his Princely Robes with white linnen, and meanes to honour himſelfe by his conformitie to Gods Miniſters. Thoſe that thinke there is diſgrace in the Ephod, are farre from the ſpirit of the man after Gods owne heart: Neither can there be a greater argument of a foule ſoule, then a diſlike of the glorious calling of God: Barren Mical hath too many ſonnes that ſcorne the holy habit and exerciſes: ſhe lookes through her window, and ſeeing the attyre and geſtures of her deuout husband, deſpiſeth him in her heart, neyther can ſhee conceale her contempt, but like Sauls Daughter caſt it proudly in his face (Oh how glorious was the King of Iſrael this day; which was vncouered this day in the eyes of the Maidens of his ſeruants, as a foole vncouereth himſelfe.) Worldly hearts can ſee nothing in actions of zeale but folly and madneſſe: Pietie hath no reliſh to their palate but diſtaſtfull.

Davids heart did neuer ſwell ſo much at any reproch, as this of his Wife; his loue was for the time loſt in his anger; and as a man impatient of no affront ſo much as in the way of his deuotion, hee returnes a bitter checke to his Mical; (It was before the Lord, which choſe me rather than thy Father, and all his houſe, &c.) Had not Mical twitted her Husband with the ſhame of his zeale, ſhee had not heard of the ſhamefull reiection of her father; now ſince ſhee will bee forgetting, whoſe Wife ſhe was, ſhee ſhall be put in mind whoſe Daughter ſhe was. Contumelies that are caſt vpon vs in the cauſes of God, may ſafely be repaied: If we be meale-mouthed in the ſcornes of Religion, we are not patient, but zealeleſſe: Here we may not forbeare her, that lyes in our boſome. If David had not loued Mical dearely, he had neuer ſtood vpon thoſe points with Abner; He knew that if Abner came to him the kingdome of Iſrael would accompany him, and yet hee ſends him the charge of not ſeeing his face, except hee brought Mical, Sauls Daughter with him; as if he would not regard the Crowne of Iſrael, whiles he wanted that Wife of his: Yet here he takes her vp roundly, as if ſhee had beene an enemy, not a partner of his bed. All relations are aloofe off, in compariſon of that betwixt God, and the ſoule; He that loues Father, or Mother, or Wife, or Childe, better then me (ſaith our Sauiour) is not worthy of me. Euen the higheſt delights of our hearts muſt be trampled vpon, when they will ſtand out in riuality with God. Oh happy reſolution of the royall Prophet, and Propheticall King of Iſrael, (I will be yet more vile then thus, and will be low in mine owne ſight:) he knew this very abaſement Heroicall; and that the onely way to true glory, is, not to be aſhamed of our loweſt humiliation vnto God: Well might he promiſe himſelfe honour from thoſe, whoſe contempt ſhe had threatned; The hearts of men are not their owne, hee that made them, ouer-rules them, and inclines them to an honourable conceit of thoſe that honour their Maker; So as holy men haue oft times inward reuerence, euen where they haue outward indignities. Dauid came to bleſſe his houſe, Mical brings a curſe vpon her ſelfe: Her ſcornes ſhall make her childleſſe to the day of her death; Barrenneſſe was held in thoſe times none of the leaſt iudgements; God doth ſo reuenge Dauids quarrell vpon Mical, that her ſudden diſgrace, ſhall be recompenced with perpetuall: She ſhall not be held worthy to beare a ſonne, to him whom ſhe vniuſtly contemned; How iuſt is it with God to prouide whips for the backs of ſcorners? It is no maruell if thoſe that mocke at goodneſſe, be plagued with continuall fruitleſneſſe.

Me-

MEPHIBOSHETH and ZIBA.

SO ſoone as euer Dauid can but breathe himſelfe from the publike cares, hee caſts backe his thoughts to the deare remembrance of his Ionathan. Sauls ſeruant is likely to giue him the beſt intelligence of Sauls ſonnes; The queſtion is therefore moued to Ziba, Remaineth there none of the houſe of Saul? and leſt ſuſpition might conceale the remainders of an emulous line, in feare of reuenge intended, he addes: On whom I may ſhew the mercy of God for Ionathans ſake? O friendſhip worthy of the Monuments of Eternity, fit only to requite him, whoſe loue was more then the loue of women: Hee doth not ſay, Is there any of the houſe of Ionathan, but of Saul; that for his friends ſake hee may ſhew fauour to the Poſteritie of his Perſecutor. Ionathans loue could not bee greater then Sauls malice, which alſo ſuruiued long in his iſſue; from whom Dauid found a buſie and ſtubborne riualitie for the Crowne of Iſrael: yet as one that gladly buried all the hoſtilitie of Sauls houſe in Ionathans graue, he askes, Is there any man left of Sauls houſe, that I may ſhew him mercy for Ionathans ſake? It is true loue, that ouerliuing the perſon of a friend, will bee inherited of his ſeede; but to loue the poſteritie of an enemy in a friend, it is the miracle of friendſhip: The formall amitie of the World is confined to a face: or to the poſſibility of recompence, languiſhing in the diſabilitie, and dying in the deceaſe of the party affected: That loue was euer falſe, that is not euer conſtant, and the moſt operatiue, when it cannot be either knowne or requited.

To cut off all vnquiet competion for the Kingdome of Iſrael, the prouidence of God had ſo ordered, that there is none left of the houſe of Saul (beſides the ſonnes of his Concubines) ſaue onely young and lame Mephiboſheth: ſo young, that he was but fiue yeares of age, when Dauid entred vpon the Gouernment of Iſrael; ſo lame, that if his age had fitted, his impotence had made him vnfit for the Throne. Mephiboſheth was not borne a Creeple, it was an heedleſſe Nurſe that made him ſo: She hearing of the death of Saul and Ionathan, made ſuch haſt to flee, that her young Maſter was lamed with the fall: Ywis there needed no ſuch ſpeed to runne away from Dauid; whoſe loue purſues the hidden ſonne of his brother Ionathan: How often doth our ignorant miſtaking, cauſe vs to runne from our beſt friends, and to catch knockes and maimes of them that profeſſe our protection?

MEPHIBOSHETH could not come otherwiſe then fearfully, into the preſence of Dauid, whom he knew ſo long, ſo ſpitefully oppoſed by the houſe of Saul: he could not be ignorant, that the faſhion of the World is to build their owne ſecuritie vpon the blood of the oppoſite faction, neither to thinke themſelues ſafe, whiles any branch remaines ſpringing out of that root of their emulation: Seaſonably doth Dauid therefore firſt, expell all thoſe vniuſt doubts, ere hee adminiſter his further cordials; (Feare not, for I will ſurely ſhew thee kindneſſe, for Ionathan thy fathers ſake, and will reſtore thee all the fields of Saul thy father, and thou ſhalt eate bread at my table continually.)

Dauid can ſee neither Sauls blood, nor lame legs in Mephiboſheth, whiles he ſees in him the features of his friend Ionathan; how much leſſe ſhall the God of mercies regard our infirmities, or the corrupt blood of our ſinfull Progenitors, whiles hee beholds vs in the face of his Sonne, in whom he is well pleaſed.

Fauours are wont ſo much more to affect vs, as they are leſſe expected by vs; Mephiboſheth as ouer-ioyed with ſo comfortable a word, and confounded in himſelfe at the remembrance of the contrary deſeruings of his Family, bowes himſelfe to the earth, and ſayes (What is thy ſeruant, that thou ſhouldſt looke vpon ſuch a dead Dog as I am?) I finde no defect of wit (though of limmes) in Mephiboſheth, hee knew himſelfe the Grand-child of the King of Iſrael, the ſonne of Ionathan, the lawfull heire of both, yet in regard of his owne impotencie, and the treſpaſſe and reiection of his houſe, hee thus abaſeth himſelfe vnto Dauid; Humiliation is a right vſe of God affliction; What if he were borne great? If the ſinne of his Grand-father hath loſt his eſtate, and the hand of his Nurſe hath deformed and diſabled his perſon, hee now forgets what hee was, and cals himſelfe worſe then hee is, A dogge: Yet a liuing Dogge, is better then a dead Lion; there is dignity and comfort in life, Mephiboſheth is therefore a dead dogge vnto Dauid. It is not for vs to nouriſh the ſame ſpirits in our aduerſe eſtate, that we found in our higheſt proſperitie; What vſe haue wee made of Gods hand, if wee bee not the lower with our fall? God intends we ſhould carrie our croſſe, not make a fire of it to warme vs; It is no bearing vp our ſailes in a tempeſt. Good Dauid cannot diſ-eſteeme Mephiboſheth euer the more for diſparaging himſelfe: hee loues and honours this humilitie, in the Sonne of Ionathan; There is no more certaine way to glory and aduancement, then a lowly deiection of our ſelues: Hee that made himſelfe a Dogge, and therefore fit onely to lye vnder the table, yea a dead Dogge, and therefore fit onely for the ditch, is rayſed vp to the table of a King; his ſeate ſhall be honourable, yea, royall, his fare delicious, his attendance noble. How much more will our gracious God lift vp our heads, vnto true honour before men and Angels, if wee can bee ſincerely humbled in his ſight? if wee miſcall our ſelues in the meanneſſe of our conceits to him, hee giues vs a new name, and ſets vs at the Table of his glorie; It is contrarie with GOD and men; if they reckon of vs as wee ſet our ſelues, hee values vs according to our abaſements. Like a Prince truly munificent and faithfull, Dauid promiſes and performes at once; Ziba Sauls ſeruant hath the charge giuen him, of the execution of that royall word; Hee ſhall bee the Bayliffe of this great Husbandry of his Maſter MEPHIBOSHETH; The Land of Saul, how euer forfeited, ſhall know no other Maſter then Sauls Grand-childe; As yet, Sauls ſeruant had ſped better then his ſonne: I reade of twentie ſeruants of Ziba, none of Mephiboſheth; Earthly poſſeſſions doe not alwayes admit of equall diuiſions; The Wheele is now turned vp; Mephiboſheth is a Prince, Zeba is his Officer; I cannot but pitie the condition of this good ſonne of Ionathan; Into ill hands did honeſt Mephiboſheth fall, firſt, of careleſſe Nurſe, then of a trecherous ſeruant; Shee maymed his bodie, hee would haue ouerthrowne his eſtate; After ſome yeeres of eye-ſeruice to Mephiboſheth, wicked Ziba intends to giue him a worſe fall then his Nurſe. Neuer any Court was free from Detractors; from Delators, who if they ſee a man to be a Creeple, that hee cannot goe to ſpeake for himſelfe, will bee telling Tales of him, in the eares of the great; ſuch an one was this perfidious Ziba; who taking the opportunitie of Dauids flight from his ſonne Abſolom, followes him with a faire preſent, and a falſe Tale, accuſing his impotent Maſter of a foule and trayterous ingratitude; labouring to treade vpon his lame Lord to rayſe himſelfe to honour: True-hearted Mephiboſheth had as good a will as the beſt; if he could haue commanded legs, hee had not beene left behind Dauid: now that he cannot goe with him; hee will not bee well without him, and therefore puts himſelfe to a wilfull and ſullen penance, for the abſence and danger of his King; hee will not ſo much as put on cleane clothes for the time, as hee that could not haue any ioy in himſelfe, for the want of his Lord Dauid: Vnconſcionable Miſcreants care not how they collogue, whom they ſlander for a priuate aduantage; Lewd Ziba comes with a Gift in his hand, and a ſmooth Tale in his mouth; Oh Sir, you thought you had a Ionathan at home, but you will finde a Saul; It were pitie but he ſhould be ſet at your Table, that would ſit in your Throne; you thought Sauls Land would haue contented Mephiboſheth, but hee would haue all yours; though hee bee lame, yet hee would be climbing: would you haue thought that this Creeple could be plotting for your Kingdome, now that you are but gone aſide? Iſhboſheth will neuer dye while Mephiboſheth liues: How did he now forget his impotence, and raiſed vp his ſpirits in hope of a day; and durſt ſay, that now the time was come, wherein the Crowne ſhould reuert to Sauls true Heire. Oh Viper: if a Serpent bite in ſecret when he is not charmed, no better is a Slanderer; Honeſt Mephiboſheth in good manners made a dead dog of himſelfe, when Dauid offered him the fauour of his board; but Ziba would make him a very Dog indeed, an ill natur'd Cur, that when Dauid did thus kindly feed him at his owne table, would not onely bite his fingers, but flye at his throat.

But what ſhall we ſay to this? Neither earthly Soueraignty, nor holineſſe can exempt men from humane infirmity. Wiſe and good Dauid hath now but one eare; and that miſ-led with credulity: His charity in beleeuing Ziba, makes him vncharitable in diſtruſting, in cenſuring Mephiboſheth. The detractor hath not onely ſudden credit giuen him, but Sauls Land; Ionathans Son hath loſt (vnheard) that inheritance which was giuen him vnſought. Heare-ſay is no ſafe ground of any iudgement; Ziba ſlaunders, Dauid beleeues, Mephiboſheth ſuffers.

Lyes ſhall not alwayes proſper, God will not abide the truth to be euer oppreſſed; At laſt Ionathans lame Sonne ſhall be found as ſound in heart, as lame in his body; He whoſe ſoule was like his Father Ionathans ſoule, whoſe body was like to his Grandfather Sauls ſoule, meets Dauid (as it is high time) vpon his returne; beſtirs his tongue to diſcharge himſelfe of ſo foule a ſlander; The more horrible the crime had beene, the more villanous was the vniuſt ſuggeſtion of it, and the more neceſſary was a iuſt Apology; Sweetly therefore, and yet paſſionately doth he labour to greaten Dauids fauours to him; his owne obligations and vileneſſe; ſhewing himſelfe more affected with his wrong, then with his loſſe; welcomming Dauid home with a thankfull neglect of himſelfe, as not caring that Ziba had his ſubſtance, now that he had his King. Dauid is ſatisfied, Mephiboſheth reſtored to fauour and lands; here are two kind hearts well met. Dauid is full of ſatisfaction from Mephiboſheth; Mephiboſheth runnes ouer with ioy in D*auid*: Dauid, like a gracious King, giues Mephiboſheth (as before) Sauls Lands to halues with Ziba; Mephiboſheth, like a King, giues all to Ziba for ioy that God had giuen him D*auid*: All had beene well, if Ziba had fared worſe: Pardon me O holy and glorious ſoule of a Prophet, of a King, after Gods owne heart, I muſt needs blame thee for mercy: A fault that the beſt and moſt generous natures are moſt ſubiect to. It is pitty that ſo good a thing ſhould doe hurt; yet we finde that the beſt, miſuſed is moſt dangerous: Who ſhould bee the patterne of Kings but the King of God? Mercy is the goodlieſt Flower in his Crowne, much more in theirs, but with a difference: Gods mercy is infinite, theirs limited: he ſayes, I will haue mercy on whom I will: they muſt ſay, I will haue mercy on whom I ſhould. And yet he, for all his infinite mercy, hath veſſels of wrath, ſo muſt they; of whom his Iuſtice hath ſaid, Thine eye ſhall not ſpare them: A good man is pittifull to his beaſt, ſhall hee therefore make much of Toades and Snakes? Oh that Ziba ſhould goe away with any poſſeſſion, ſaue of ſhame and ſorrow; that he ſhould be coupled with a Mephiboſheth in a partnerſhip of Eſtates: Oh that Dauid had changed the word a little.

A diuiſion was due here indeed; but of Ziba's eares from his head, or his head from his ſhoulders, for going about ſo maliciouſly, to diuide D*auid* from the Sonne of Ionathan: An Eye for an Eye, was Gods Rule; If that had beene true, which Ziba ſuggeſted againſt Mephiboſheth, he had beene worthy to loſe his head with his Lands; being falſe, it had beene but reaſon, Ziba ſhould haue changed heads with Mephiboſheth: Had not holy D*auid* himſelfe beene ſo ſtung with the venemous tongues, that he cryes out in the bitterneſſe of his ſoule, What reward ſhall be giuen thee, O thou falſe tongue? euen ſharpe Arrowes with hot burning coales; He that was ſo ſenſible of himſelfe in Doegs wrong, doth he feele ſo little of Mephiboſheth in Zibaes? Are theſe the Arrowes of Dauids Quiuer; are theſe his hot burning coales (Thou and Ziba diuide?) Hee that had ſaid, their tongue is a ſharpe ſword, now that the ſword of iuſt reuenge is in his hand, is this the blow he giues, D*iuide the poſſeſſion?* I know not whether, exceſſe, or want of mercy may proue moſt dangerous in the great; the one diſcourages good intentions with feare; the other may encourage wicked practices through preſumption; Thoſe that are in eminent place muſt learne the mid-way betwixt both; ſo pardoning faults, that they may not prouoke them; ſo puniſhing them, that they may not diſhearten vertuous and well-meant actions; they muſt learne to ſing that abſolute Ditty (whereof Dauid had here forgotten one part) of Mercy and Iudgement.

HANVN and DAVIDS Ambaſſadours.

IT is not the meaning of Religion, to make men vnciuill: If the King of Ammon were heatheniſh, yet his kindneſſe may be acknowledged, may be returned by the King of Iſrael. I ſay not, but that perhaps Dauid might maintain too ſtrait a league with that forbidden Nation; A little friendſhip is enough to an Idolater; but euen the ſauage Canibals may receiue an anſwer of outward courteſie: If a very dogge fawne vpon vs, we ſtroake him on the head, and clap him on the ſide; much leſſe is the common band of humanity vntyed by Grace: Diſparity in ſpirituall Profeſſions, is no warrant for Ingratitude: He therefore whoſe good nature proclaimed to ſhew mercy to any branch of Sauls Houſe, for Ionathans ſake, will now alſo ſhew kindneſſe to Hanun, for the ſake of Nahaſh his father.

It was the ſame Nahaſh that offered the cruell condition to the men of Iabeſh Gilead, of thruſting out their right eyes for the admiſſion into his couenant. Hee that was thus bloody in his Deſignes againſt Iſrael, yet was kinde to Dauid; perhaps for no cauſe ſo much as Sauls oppoſition; And yet euen this fauour is held worthy both of memory, and retribution: Where we haue the Acts of courteſie, it is not neceſſary wee ſhould enter into a ſtrict examination of the grounds of it; whiles the benefit is ours, let the intention be their owne; What euer the hearts of men are, wee muſt looke at their hands, and repay, not what they meant, but what they did.

Nahaſh is dead, Dauid ſends Ambaſſadors to condole his loſſe, and to comfort his Sonne Hanun. No Ammonite but is ſadly affected with the death of a father, though it gaine him a Kingdome: Euen Eſau could ſay, the dayes of mourning for my Father will come; No earthly aduantage can fill vp the gap of nature: Thoſe children are worſe then Ammonites, that can thinke either gaine, or liberty, worthy to counteruaile a parents loſſe.

Carnall men are wont to meaſure anothers foot by their owne Laſt; their owne falſhood makes them vniuſtly ſuſpicious of others. The Princes of Ammon, becauſe they are guilty to their owne hollowneſſe and doubleneſſe of heart, are ready ſo to iudge of Dauid and his Meſſengers, (Thinkeſt thou that Dauid doth honour thy Father, that hee hath ſent comforters vnto thee? Hath not Dauid rather ſent his owne ſeruants to thee, to ſearch the City, and to ſpye it out, to ouerthrow it?) It is hard for a wicked heart to thinke well of any other; becauſe it can thinke none better then it ſelfe, and knowes it ſelfe euill: The freer a man is from vice himſelfe, the more charitable he vſes to bee vnto others.

Whatſoeuer Dauid was particularly in his owne perſon, it was ground enough of preiudice, that he was an Iſraelite; It was an hereditarie and deepe ſetled hatred, that the Ammonites had conceiued againſt their brethren of Iſrael: neither can they forget that ſhamefull and fearefull foyle, which they receiued from the reſcuers of Iabeſh Gilead; and now ſtill doe they ſtomach at the name of Iſrael; Malice once conceiued in worldly hearts, is not eaſily extinguiſhed, but vpon all occaſions, is readie to breake forth into a flame of reuengefull actions.

Nothing can bee more dangerous, then for young Princes to meete with ill Counſell in the entrance of their Gouernment; for both then are they moſt prone to take it, and moſt difficultly recouered from it; if we be ſet out of our way in the beginning of our iourney, we wander all the day; How happy is that State, where both the Counſellours are faithfull, to giue onely good aduice; and the King wiſe to diſcerne good aduice from euill: the young King of Ammon is eaſily drawne to beleeue his Peeres, and to miſtruſt the meſſengers; and hauing now in his conceit turned them into ſpyes, entertaines them with a ſcornfull diſgrace; hee ſhaues off one halfe of their beards, and cuts off one halfe of their garments; expoſing them to the diriſion of all the beholders. The Iſraelites were forbidden either a ſhauen beard; or a ſhort garment; in deſpight, perhaps, of their Law theſe Embaſſadours are ſent away with both: certainly in a deſpight of their Maſter, and a ſcorne of their perſons.

King Dauid is not a little ſenſible of the abuſe of his Meſſengers, and of himſelfe in them; Firſt, therefore hee deſires to hide their ſhame, then to reuenge it. Man hath but a double ornament of bodie, the one of nature, the other of Art; The naturall ornament is the hayre, the artificiall is apparrell; Dauid Meſſengers are deformed in both; The one is eaſily ſupplyed by a new ſuit, the other can onely be ſupplied out of the Ward-robe of time; Tarrie at Iericho till your beards bee growne. How eaſily had this deformitie beene remoued, if as Hanun had ſhauen one ſide of their faces, ſo they had ſhauen the other; what had this beene but to reſemble their yonger age, or that other ſexe, in neither of which, doe we vſe to place any imagination of vnbeſeeming; neither did there want ſome of their neighbour Nations, whoſe faces age it ſelfe had not wont to couer with this ſhade of hayre: But ſo reſpectiue is good Dauid, and his wiſe Senatours, of their Countrie-formes; that they ſhall by appointment rather tarie abroad, till time haue wrought their conformitie, then varie from the receiued faſhions of their owne people. Alas, into what a licentious varietie of ſtrange diſguiſes are we falne? The glorie of Attire is ſought in nouelitie, in miſhapenneſſe, in monſtrouſneſſe: there is much latitude, much libertie in the vſe of theſe indifferent things; but becauſe wee are free, wee may not runne wilde: and neuer thinke wee haue ſcope euough, vnleſſe we out-runne modeſtie.

It is lawfull for publike perſons, to feele their owne indignities, and to endeauour their reuenge. Now Dauid ſends all the hoſt of the mightie men to puniſh Ammon, for ſo foule an abuſe; Thoſe that receiued the Meſſengers of his loue with ſcorne and inſolencie, ſhall now bee ſeuerely ſaluted with the Meſſengers of his wrath. It is iuſt both with God and men, that they, who know not how to take fauours aright, ſhould ſmart with iudgments. Kindneſſe repulſed, breakes foorth into indignation, how much more when it is repayde with an iniurious affront?

Dauid cannot but feele his owne cheekes ſhauen, and his owne Coate cut, in his Embaſſadours; they did but carie his perſon to Hanun; neither can hee therefore but appropriate to himſelfe the kindneſſe, or iniurie offered vnto them: He that did ſo take to heart the cutting off but the lap of King Sauls Garment, when it was layd aſide from him, how muſt he needes be affected with this diſdainefull haluing of his haire and Robes, in the perſon of his deputies? The name of Embaſſadours hath beene euer ſacred, and by the vniuerſall Law of Nations, hath carried in it ſufficient protection, from all publike wrongs, neither hath it beene euer violated, without a reuenge. Oh God, what ſhall wee ſay to thoſe notorious contempts which are dayly caſt vpon thy ſpirituall Meſſengers? Is it poſſible thou ſhouldſt not feele them, thou ſhouldſt not auenge them? Wee are made a gaſing ſtocke to the world, to Angels and to men, we are deſpiſed and trodden downe in the duſt; who hath beleeued our report, and to whom is the Arme of the Lord reuealed?

How obſtinate are wicked men in their peruerſe reſolutions. Theſe fooliſh Ammonites had rather hire Syrians to maintaine a Warre againſt Iſrael in ſo foule a quarrell, beſides the hazard of their owne liues, then confeſſe the errour of their iealous miſconſtruction.

It is one of the mad principles of wickedneſſe, that it is a weakneſſe to relent, and rather to Die then yeeld; Euen ill cauſes once vndertaken, muſt be vpheld although with blood; whereas the gracious heart finding his owne miſtaking, doth not onely remit of an vngrounded diſpleaſure, but ſtudies to be reuenged of it ſelfe; and to giue ſatisfaction to the offended.

The mercenarie Syrians are drawne to venture their liues for a fee; twentie thouſand of them are hyred into the field againſt Iſrael; Fond Pagans that know not the value of a man; their blood coſt them nothing, & they care not to ſell it good cheape; How can we thinke thoſe men haue Soules, that eſteeme a little white earth aboue themſelues? That neuer inquire into the Iuſtice of the quarrell, but the rate of the pay, that can rifle for drammes of ſiluer, in the bowels of their owne fleſh, and either kill or die for a dayes wages.

Ioab the wiſe Generall of Iſrael ſoone findes, where the ſtrength of the battle lay, and ſo marſhals his troupes, that the choyce of his men ſhould encounter the vantgard of the Syrians. His brother Abiſhai leades the reſt againſt the children of Ammon; with this couenant of mutual aſſiſtance, (If the Syrians be too ſtrong for me, then thou ſhalt helpe mee; but if the children of Ammon be too ſtrong for thee, then will I come and helpe thee;) It is an happy thing, when the Captaines of Gods people ioyne together as brethren, and lend their hand to the ayd of each other againſt the common aduerſarie. Concord in defence, or aſſault, is the way to victorie; as contrarily the diuiſion of the Leaders is the ouerthrow of the Armie.

Set aſide ſome particular actions, Ioab was a worthy Captaine, both for wiſdome and valour. Who could either exhort or reſolue better then he, (Bee of good courage, and let vs play the men, for our people, and for the Cities of our God; and the Lord doe that which ſeemeth him good?) It is not either priuate glory or profit that whets his fortitude, but the reſpect to the cauſe of God and his people; that Souldier can neuer anſwere it to God, that ſtrikes not more as a Iuſticer, then as an enemie; Neither doth he content himſelfe, with his owne courage, but hee animates others. The tongue of a Commander fights more then his hand; it is enough for priuate men to exerciſe what life and limmes they haue, a good Leader muſt out of his owne abundance, put life and ſpirits into all others; If a Lyon leade ſheepe into the field, there is hope of victorie: Laſtly, when he hath done his beſt, hee reſolues to depend vpon God for the iſſue: not truſting to his ſword, or his bow, but to the prouidence of the Almightie for ſucceſſe; as a man religiouſly awfull, and awfully confident, whiles there ſhould be no want in their owne indeauours: he knew well that the race was not to the ſwift, nor the battle to the ſtrong, therefore hee lookes vp aboue the hils whence commeth his ſaluation. All valour is cowardiſe to that which is built vpon Religion.

I maruell not to ſee Ioab victorious, while hee is thus godly; The Syrians flee before him, like flockes of ſheepe, the Ammonites follow them; The two ſonnes of Zeruiah haue nothing to doe but to purſue and execute; The throates of the Ammonites are cut, for cutting the Beards and Coates of the Iſraelitiſh meſſengers; Neither doth this reuenge end in the field; Rabba the royall Citie of Ammon is ſtrongly beleagured by Ioab; The Citie of waters (after wel-neere a yeares ſiege) yeeldeth: the reſt can no longer hold; Now Ioab, as one that deſireth more to approue himſelfe, a loyall and a carefull ſubiect, then a happy Generall, ſends to his Maſter Dauid that hee ſhould come perſonally, and encampe againſt the Citie, and take it; Leſt (ſaith hee) I take it, and it be called after my name. Oh noble and imitable fidelitie of a dutifull Seruant, that prefers his Lord to himſelfe, and is ſo farre from ſtealing honour from his Maſters deſerts, that he willingly remits of his owne, to adde vnto his. The Warre was not his; he was onely imployed by his Soueraigne; The ſame perſon that was wronged in the Ambaſſadours, reuengeth by his Souldiers; The prayſe of the act ſhall (like Fountaine Water) returne to the Sea, whence it originally came; To ſeeke a mans owne glory is not glory. Alas, how many are there, who being ſent to ſue for God, wooe for themſelues. Oh God, it is a fearefull thing to robbe thee of that which is deareſt to thee, Glory; which as thou wilt not giue to any Creature, ſo much leſſe wilt thou endure that any Creature ſhould filtch it from thee, and giue it to himſelfe: Haue thou the honour of all our actions, who giueſt a being to our actions and vs, and in both haſt moſt iuſtly regarded thine owne prayſe.

DAVID with BATHSHEBA and VRIAH.

WIth what vnwillingneſſe, with what feare, doe I ſtill looke vpon the miſcariage of the man after Gods owne heart? O holy Prophet, who can promiſe himſelfe alwayes to ſtand, when hee ſees thee falne, and maymed in the fall? Who can aſſure himſelfe of an immunitie from the fouleſt ſinnes, when he ſees thee offending ſo haynouſly, ſo bloodily? Let prophane eyes behold thee contentedly, as a paterne, as an excuſe of ſinning; I ſhall neuer looke vpon thee but through teares, as a wofull ſpectacle of humane infirmitie.

Whiles Ioab and all Iſrael were buſie in the Warre againſt Ammon, in the ſiege of Rabbah, Satan findes time to lay ſiege to the ſecure heart of Dauid; Who euer found Dauid thus tempted, thus foyled in the dayes of his buſie Warres? Now onely doe I ſee the King of Iſrael, riſing from his bed in the euening; The time was, when he roſe vp in the morning to his early deuotions; when he brake his nightly reſt with publike cares, with the buſineſſe of State; all that while he was innocent, he was holy; but now that he wallowes in the bed of idleneſſe, he is fit to inuite a tentation. The induſtrious man hath no leiſure to ſinne. The idle hath neuer leiſure nor power to auoide ſinne; Exerciſe is not more wholſome for the bodie, then for the Soule, the remiſſion whereof breeds matter of diſeaſe in both: The water that hath beene heated: ſooneſt freezeth; the moſt actiue ſpirit ſooneſt tyreth with ſlacking; The Earth ſtands ſtill, and is all dregges; the Heauens euer moue, and are pure. We haue no reaſon to complaine of the aſſiduitie of worke; the toyle of action is anſwered by the benefit; If wee did leſſe, we ſhould ſuffer more; Satan like an idle companion, if hee finde vs buſie, flyes backe and ſees it no time to entertayne vayne purpoſes with vs; We cannot pleaſe him better then by caſting away our worke, to hold chat with him; wee cannot yeeld ſo farre and be guiltleſſe.

Euen Dauids eyes haue no ſooner the ſleepe rubbed out of them, then they roue to wanton proſpects; Hee walkes vpon his roofe, and ſees Bathſheba waſhing her ſelfe; inquires after her, ſends for her, ſollicits her to vncleanneſſe. The ſame ſpirit that ſhut vp his eyes in an vnſeaſonable ſleepe, opens them vpon an intiſing obiect; whiles ſinne hath ſuch a Solliciter, it cannot want either meanes, or opportunitie: I cannot thinke Bathſheba could bee ſo immodeſt, as to waſh her ſelfe openly, eſpecially from her naturall vncleanneſſe; Luſt is quick-ſighted; Dauid hath eſpied her, where ſhee could eſpie no beholder : His eyes recoyle vpon his heart, and haue ſmitten him with ſinfull deſire.

There can bee no ſafety to that Soule, where the ſenſes are let looſe. Hee can neuer keepe his couenant with God, that makes not a couenant with his eyes : It is an idle preſumption to thinke the outward man may be free, whiles the inward is ſafe : He is more then a man, whoſe heart is not led by his eyes, hee is no regenerate man, whoſe eyes are not reſtrained by his heart.

Oh Bathſheba, how wert thou waſhed from thine vncleanneſſe, when thou yeeldedſt to goe into an adulterous bed? neuer wert thou ſo foule, as now when thou wert new waſhed; The worſt of Nature, is cleanlineſſe, to the beſt of ſinne: thou hadſt beene cleane if thou hadſt not waſhed; yet for thee, I know how to plead infirmity of ſexe; and the importunitie of a King; But what ſhall I ſay for thee, O thou royall Prophet, and Propheticall King of Iſrael; where ſhall I finde ought to extenuate that crime, for which God himſelfe hath noted thee? Did not thine holy Profeſſion teach thee to abhorre ſuch a ſinne more then death? Was not thy Iuſtice woont to puniſh this ſinne with no leſſe then death? Did not thy very calling call thee to a protection and preſeruation of Iuſtice, of Chaſtitie in thy ſubiects? Didſt thou want ſtore of Wiues of thine owne? wert thou reſtrayned from taking more? Was there no beautie in Iſrael, but in a Subiects Marriage-bed? Wert thou ouer-come by the vehement ſollicitations of an Adultereſſe? Wert thou not the Tempter, the Proſecutor of this vncleanneſſe? I ſhould accuſe thee deeply, if thou hadſt not accuſed thy ſelfe; Nothing wanted to greaten thy ſinne, or our wonder, and feare. O God, whither doe wee goe if thou ſtay vs not? Who euer amongſt the millions of thy Seruants could finde himſelfe furniſhed with ſtronger preſeruatiues againſt ſinne? Againſt whom could ſuch a ſinne finde leſſe pretence of preuayling? Oh keepe thou vs that preſumptuous ſinnes preuayle not ouer vs; So onely ſhall we be free from great offences.

The Suites of Kings are Imperatiue; Ambition did now proue a Bawd to Luſt. Bathſheba yeeldeth to offend God, to diſhonour her Husband, to clog and wound her owne Soule, to abuſe her bodie: Diſhoneſtie growes bold, when it is countenanced with greatneſſe. Eminent perſons had need be carefull of their demaunds; they ſinne by authoritie, that are ſollicited by the mightie.

Had Bathſheba beene mindfull of her Matrimoniall fidelitie, perhaps, Dauid had beene ſoone checked in his inordinate deſire; her facilitie furthers the ſinne. The firſt motioner of euill is moſt faultie, but as in quarrels, ſo in offences, the ſecond blow (which is the conſent) makes the fray. Good Ioſeph was moued to folly by his great and beautifull Miſtris, this fire fell vpon wet Tinder, and therefore ſoone went out.

Sinne is not acted alone; if but one partie bee wiſe, both eſcape. It is no excuſe to ſay I was tempted, though by the great, though by the holy and learned; Almoſt all ſinners are miſſe-led by that transformed Angell of light; The action is that wee muſt regard, not the perſon; Let the mouer be neuer ſo glorious, if he ſtirre vs to euill, he muſt be entertained with defiance.

The GOD that knowes how to rayſe good out of euill, bleſſes an adulterous copulation with that encreaſe, which he denyes to the chaſt imbracements of honeſt Wedlocke: Bathſheba hath conceiued by Dauid; and now at once conceiues a ſorrow and care how to ſmother the ſhame of her Conception; He that did the fact, muſt hide it.

Oh Dauid where is thy Repentance? Where is thy tenderneſſe and compunction of heart? Where are thoſe holy Meditations, which had woont to take vp thy Soule? Alas, in ſtead of clearing thy ſinne, thou laboureſt to cloke it; and ſpendeſt thoſe thoughts in the concealing of thy wickedneſſe, which thou ſhouldeſt rather haue beſtowed in preuenting it: The beſt of Gods Children may not onely bee drenched in the waues of ſinne, but lye in them for the time, and perhaps ſinke twice to the bottome; what hypocrite could haue done worſe, then ſtudie how to couer the face of his ſinne from the eyes of men, whiles hee regarded not the ſting of ſinne in his Soule?

As there are ſome Acts, wherein the Hypocrite is a Saint, ſo there are ſome, wherein the greateſt Saint vpon Earth may be an Hypocrite; Saul did thus goe about to colour his ſinne, and is curſed; The Veſſels of Mercie and Wrath, are not euer diſtinguiſhable by their actions. Hee makes the difference that will haue mercie on whom he will, and whom he will, he hardeneth.

It is rare and hard to commit a ſingle ſinne; Dauid hath abuſed the Wife of Vriah, now hee would abuſe his perſon in cauſing him to father a falſe ſeede: That worthy Hittite is ſent for from the Wars; and now after ſome cunning, and farre fetcht Queſtions, is diſmiſſed to his houſe, not without a preſent of fauour; Dauid could not but imagine, that the beautie of his Bathſheba, muſt needs bee attractiue enough to an Husband, whom long abſence in Warres, had with-held all that while from ſo pleaſing a Bed; neyther could hee thinke, that ſince that face, and thoſe breſts had power to allure himſelfe to an vnlawfull luſt, it could be poſſible, that Vriah ſhould not bee inuited by them, to an allowed and warrantable fruition.

That Dauids heart might now the rather ſtrike him, in comparing the chaſte reſolutions of his Seruant, with his owne light incontinence; good Vriah ſleepes at the doore of the Kings Palace, making choyce of a ſtonie Pillow, vnder the Canopie of Heauen, rather then the delicate Bed of her, whom hee thought as honeſt, as he knew faire. The Arke (ſaith hee) and Iſrael, and Iudah, dwell in Tents, and my Lord Ioab, and the Seruants of my Lord, abide in the open Fields; ſhall I then goe into my houſe to eate, and drinke, and lye with my Wife? by thy life, and by the life of thy ſoule, I will not doe this thing.

Who can but bee aſtoniſhed at this change, to ſee a Souldier auſtere, and a Prophet wanton? And how doth that Souldiers auſteritie, ſhame the Prophets wantonneſſe? Oh zealous, and mortified Soule, worthy of a more faithfull Wife, of a more iuſt Maſter, how didſt thou ouer-looke all baſe ſenſualitie, and hatedſt to bee happy alone? Warre and Luſt had wont to be reputed friends; thy breſt is not more full of courage then chaſtitie, and is ſo farre from wandring after forbidden pleaſures, that it refuſeth lawfull.

There is a time to laugh, and a time to mourne; a time to embrace, and a time to bee farre from embracing; euen the beſt actions are not alwayes ſeaſonable, much leſſe the indifferent: Hee that euer takes libertie to doe what hee may, ſhall offend no leſſe, then hee that ſometimes takes libertie to doe what hee may not.

If any thing, the Arke of GOD is fitteſt to leade our times; according as that is eyther diſtreſſed, or proſpereth, ſhould wee frame our mirth or mourning. To dwell in ſeeled Houſes, whiles the Temple lyes waſte, is the ground of Gods iuſt quarrell.

How ſhall wee ſing a Song of the Lord in a ſtrange Land; If I forget thee, O Ieruſalem, let my right hand forget her cunning, If I doe not remember thee, let my tongue cleaue to the roofe of my mouth; yea, if I preferre not Hieruſalem to my chiefe ioy.

As euery man is a limme of the Communitie, ſo muſt hee bee affected with the eſtate of the vniuerſall bodie, whether healthfull, or languiſhing; It did not more aggrauate Dauids ſinne, that whiles the Arke and Iſrael was in hazard and diſtreſſe, hee could finde time to looſe the reines to wanton deſires, and actions, then it magnifies the religious zeale of Vriah, that he abandons comfort, till he ſee the Arke and Iſrael victorious.

Common dangers, or calamities muſt (like the rapt motion) carrie our hearts

contrary to the wayes of our priuate occaſions. Hee that cannot bee moued with words, ſhall bee tried with Wine: Vriah had equally proteſted againſt feaſting at home, and ſociety with his wife; To the one, the authority of a King forceth him abroad, in hope that the exceſſe thereof ſhall force him to the other: It is like, that holy Captaine intended onely to yeeld ſo much obedience, as might conſiſt with his courſe of auſterity. But Wine is a mocker, when it goes plauſibly in, no man can imagine how it will rage and tyrannize; he that receiues that Traytor within his gates, ſhall too late complaine of ſurprizall. Like vnto that ill ſpirit, it inſinuates ſweetly, but in the end, it bites like a Serpent, and hurts like a Cockatrice. Euen good Vriah is made drunke; the holieſt ſoule may be ouer-taken; it is hard gaineſaying, where a King beginnes an health to a ſubiect; Where, oh where, will this wickedneſſe end? Dauid will now procure the ſinne of another, to hide his owne; Vriahs drunkenneſſe is more Dauids offence, then his. It is weakely yeelded to of the one, which was wilfully intended of the other. The one was as the Sinner, the other as the Tempter.

Had not Dauid knowne, that Wine was an inducement to Luſt, hee had ſpared thoſe ſuperfluous Cups. Experience had taught him, that the eye debauched with Wine, will looke vpon ſtrange women: The Drunkard may bee any thing, ſaue good. Yet in this the ayme failed; Grace is ſtronger then Wine: Whiles that with-holds, in vaine ſhall the fury of the Grape attempt to carry Vriah to his owne Bed. Sober Dauid is now worſe then drunken Vriah. Had not the King of Iſrael beene more intoxicate with ſinne, then Vriah with drinke, he had not in a ſober intemperance climbed vp into that Bed, which the drunken temperance of Vriah refuſed.

If Dauid had beene but himſelfe, how had he loued, how had he honoured this honeſt and religious zeale, in his ſo faithfull Seruant; whom now hee cruelly ſeekes to reward with death? That fact which Wine cannot hide, the Sword ſhall; Vriah ſhall beare his owne Mittimus vnto Ioab; Put ye Vriah in the fore-front of the ſtrength of the Battell, and recule backe from him, that he may be ſmitten, and dye. What is becomne of thee, O thou good ſpirit, that hadſt wont to guide thy choſen Seruant in his former wayes? Is not this the man, whom we lately ſaw ſo heart ſmitten, for but cutting off the lap of the Garment of a wicked Maſter, that is now thus lauiſh of the blood of a gracious and wel-deſeruing Seruant? Could it be likely, that ſo worthy a Captaine could fall alone? Could Dauid haue expiated this ſinne with his owne blood, it had beene but well ſpent; but to couer his ſinne with the innocent blood of others, was a crime aboue aſtoniſhment.

Oh the deepe deceitfulneſſe of ſinne; If the Deuill ſhould haue comne to Dauid in the moſt louely forme of Bathſheba her ſelfe, and at the firſt ſhould haue directly, and in plaine termes, ſolicited him to murder his beſt Seruant; I doubt not but he would haue ſpat ſcorne in that face, on which he ſhould otherwiſe haue doted; now, by many cunning windings, Satan riſes vp to that tentation, and preuailes: that ſhall be done for a colour of guiltineſſe, whereof the ſoule would haue hated to be immediately guilty: Euen thoſe, that finde a iuſt horror, in leaping downe from ſome high Tower, yet may bee perſwaded to deſcend by ſtayres to the bottome. Hee knowes not where hee ſhall ſtay, that hath willingly ſlipt into a knowne wickedneſſe.

How many doth an eminent offender draw with him into euill? It could not bee, but that diuers of the Attendants both of Dauid and Bathſheba muſt be conſcious to that adultery: Great mens ſinnes are ſeldome ſecret; And now Ioab muſt be fetcht in, as acceſſary to the murder: How muſt this example needs harden Ioab againſt the conſcience of Abners blood? Whiles he cannot but thinke, Dauid cannot auenge that in me, which he acteth himſelfe.

Honour is pretended to poore Vriah, death is meant. This man was one of the Worthies of Dauid; their courage ſought glory in the difficulteſt exploits. That reputation had neuer beene purchaſed without attempts of equall danger; Had not the Leader and Followers of Vriah beene more treacherous, then his Enemies were ſtrong, he had come off with Victory; Now he was not the firſt or laſt that periſhed by his friends. Dauid hath forgotten, that himſelfe was in like ſort betrayed in his Maſters intention, vpon the dowrie of the Philiſtims fore-skins. I feare to aske, Who euer noted ſo foule a plot in Dauids reiected Predeceſſor; Vriah muſt be the Meſſenger of his owne death, Ioab muſt be a Traytor to his friend, the hoſt of God muſt ſhamefully turne their backes vpon the Ammonites; all that Iſraelitiſh blood muſt bee ſhed, that murder muſt be ſeconded with diſſimulation, and all this to hide one adultery. O God, thou hadſt neuer ſuffered ſo deare a Fauourite of thine to fall ſo fearefully, if thou hadſt not meant to make him an vniuerſall example to Mankind: of not preſuming, of not deſpayring: How can we preſume of not ſinning, or deſpaire for ſinning, when we finde ſo great a Saint thus fallen, thus riſen.

NATHAN and DAVID.

YEt Bathſheba mourned for the death of that Husband, whom ſhe had beene drawne to diſhonour: How could ſhee beſtow teares enough vpon that Funerall, whereof her ſinne was the cauſe? If ſhee had but a ſuſpition of the plot of his death, the Fountaines of her eyes could not yeeld water enough to waſh off her Husbands blood; Her ſinnes was more worthy of ſorrow, then her loſſe. If this griefe had beene right placed, the hope of hiding her ſhame and the ambition to bee a Queene had not ſo ſoone mitigated it; neyther had ſhee vpon any tearmes beene drawne into the Bed of her husbands murtherer. Euery gleame of earthly comfort can dry vp the teares of worldly ſorrow. Bathſheba hath ſoone loſt her griefe at the Court; The remembrance of an Husband is buried in the ioylitie and ſtate of a Princeſſe. Dauid ſecurely enioyes his ill-purchaſed loue, and is content to exchange the conſcience of his ſinne, for the ſenſe of his pleaſure. But the iuſt and holy God will not put it vp ſo: hee that hates ſinne ſo much the more, as the offender is more deare to him, will let Dauid feele the bruiſe of his fall. If Gods beſt Children haue beene ſometimes ſuffered to ſleepe in a ſinne, at laſt he hath awakened them in a fright.

Dauid was a Prophet of God, and yet he hath not onely ſtept into thoſe foule ſinnes, but ſoiournes with them; If any profeſſion or ſtate of life could haue priuiledged from ſinne; the Angels had not ſinned in Heauen, nor man in Paradiſe. Nathan the Prophet is ſent to the Prophet Dauid, for reproofe, for conuiction; Had it beene any other mans caſe, none could haue beene more quick-ſighted then the Princely Prophet; in his owne hee is ſo blinde, that God is faine to lend him others eyes. Euen the Phiſician himſelfe when hee is ſicke, ſends for the counſell of thoſe whom his health did mutually ayd with aduice. Let no man thinke himſelfe too good to learne: Teachers themſelues may bee taught that in their owne particular, which in a generalitie they haue often taught others; It is not onely ignorance that is to be remoued, but miſ-affection.

Who can preſcribe a iuſt period to the beſt mans repentance? About tenne moneths are paſſed ſince Dauids ſinne: in all which time I finde no newes of any ſerious compunction; It could not bee but ſome glances of remorſe muſt needs haue paſſed thorough his Soule long ere this; but a due and ſolemne contrition was not heard of till Nathans meſſage, and perhaps had beene further adiourned, if that Monitor had beene longer deferred; Alas, what long and dead ſleepes may the holyeſt Soule take in fearefull ſinnes: Were it not for thy mercie, O God, the beſt of vs ſhould end our ſprituall Lethargie in ſleepe of death.

It might haue pleaſed God as eaſily to haue ſent Nathan to checke Dauid in his firſt purpoſe of ſinning; So had his eyes beene reſtrained, Bathſheba honeſt, Vriah aliue with honour; now the wiſdome of the Almightie knew how to winne more glorie by the permiſſion of ſo foule an euill, then by the preuention; yea, hee knew how by the permiſſion of one ſinne, to preuent millions, how many thouſand had ſinned in a vaine preſumption on their owne ſtrength, if Dauid had not thus offended; how many thouſand had deſpaired in the conſcience of their owne weakneſſes, if theſe horrible ſinnes had not receiued forgiueneſſe? It is happy for all times, that wee haue ſo holy a Sinner, ſo ſinfull a penitent. It matters not how bitter the Pill is, but how well wrapped; ſo cunningly hath Nathan conueied this doſe, that it begins to worke ere it be taſted: there is no one thing wherein is more vſe of wiſdome, then the due contriuing of reprehenſion, which in a diſcreet deliuerie helps the diſeaſe, in an vnwiſe, deſtroyes Nature.

Had not Nathan beene vſed to the poſſeſſion of Dauids eare, this complaint had beene ſuſpected. It well beſeemes a King to take information by a Prophet. Whiles wiſe Nathan was querulouſly diſcourſing of the cruell rich man, that had forceably taken away the onely Lambe of his poore Neighbour, how willingly doth Dauid liſten to the Storie, and how ſharply (euen aboue Law) doth he cenſure the fact? (As the Lord liueth, the man that hath done this thing ſhall ſurely dye.) Full little did he think that he had pronounced ſentence againſt himſelfe; It had not beene ſo heauie if hee had knowne on whom it ſhould haue light; Wee haue open eares and quicke tongues to the vices of others; How ſeuere Iuſticers wee can bee to our very owne crimes in others perſons? How flattering Paraſites to anothers crime in our ſelues? The life of doctrine is in application; Nathan might haue bin long enough in his narration, in his inuectiue, ere Dauid would haue bin touched with his owne guiltineſſe: but now that the Prophet brings the Word home to his boſome, hee cannot but be affected. Wee may take pleaſure, to heare men ſpeake in the Clouds, wee neuer take profit till wee finde a proprietie in the exhortation, or reproofe; There was not more cunning in the Parable then courage in the application (Thou art the man.) If Dauid be a King, he may not looke, not to heare of his faults; Gods meſſages may be no other then vnpartiall. It is a treacherous flatterie in diuine errands to regard greatneſſe: If Prophets muſt bee mannerly in the forme, yet in the matter of reproofe, reſolute: The words are not their owne; They are but the Heralds of the King of Heauen, Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael.

How thunder-ſtricken doe we thinke Dauid did now ſtand? How did the change of his colour bewray the confuſion in his Soule; whiles his conſcience ſayd the ſame within, which the Prophet ſounded in his eare? And now leaſt ought ſhould bee wanting to his humiliation, all Gods former fauours ſhall be laid before his eyes, by way of exprobration: He is worthy to be vpbrayded with mercies, that hath abuſed mercies vnto wantonneſſe; whiles we doe well, God giues and ſayes nothing; when we doe ill, hee layes his benefits in our diſh, and caſts them in our teeth, that our ſhame may be ſo much the more, by how much our obligations haue bin greater. The bleſſings of God in our vnworthy cariage proue but the aggrauations of ſinne, and additions to iudgement.

I ſee all Gods Children falling into ſinne, ſome of them lying in ſinne; none of them maintayning their ſinne; Dauid cannot haue the heart, or the face to ſtand out againſt the meſſage of God, but now as a man confounded, and condemned in himſelfe, he cryes out in the bitterneſſe of a wounded Soule; (I haue ſinned againſt the Lord.) It was a ſhort word, but paſſionate; and ſuch as came from the bottome of a contrite heart; The greateſt griefes are not moſt verball: Saul confeſſed his ſinne more largely, leſſe effectually; God cares not for phraſes, but for affections. The firſt piece of our amends to God for ſinning, is the acknowlegement of ſinne; He can doe little that in a iuſt offence cannot accuſe himſelfe. If wee cannot bee ſo good as we would, it is reaſon wee ſhould doe God ſo much right, as to ſay, how euill we are. And why was not this done ſooner? It is ſtrange to ſee how eaſily ſin gets into the heart, how hardly it gets out of the mouth; Is it becauſe ſinne, like vnto Satan, where it hath got poſſeſſion is deſirous to hold it; and knowes that it is fully eiected by a free confeſſion? or, becauſe in a guiltineſſe of deformitie, it hides it ſelfe in the breſt where it is once entertained, and hates the light? or becauſe the tongue is ſo fee'd with ſelfe-loue, that it is loath to bee drawne vnto any verdict againſt the heart or hands? or, is it out of an idle miſpriſion of ſhame, which whiles it ſhould be placed in offending, is miſplaced in diſcloſing of our offence?

Howeuer, ſure I am, that God hath neede euen of rackes to draw out confeſſions; and ſcarce in death it ſelfe, are we wrought to a diſcouery of our errors.

There is no one thing, wherein our folly ſhewes it ſelfe more then in theſe hurtfull concealements: Contrary to the proceedings of humane Iuſtice, it is with God, Confeſſe and liue; no ſooner can Dauid ſay, I haue ſinned, then Nathan interres; The Lord alſo hath put away thy ſinne. He that hides his ſins ſhall not proſper, but he that confeſſeth and forſaketh them, ſhall finde mercie. Who would not accuſe himſelfe to be acquitted of God; O God, who would not tell his wickedneſſe to thee, that knoweſt it better then his owne heart, that his heart may bee eaſed of that wickedneſſe, which being not told, killeth? Since we haue ſinned, why ſhould wee bee niggardly of that action, wherein we may at once giue glory to thee, and reliefe to our ſoules?

Dauid had ſworne in a zeale of Iuſtice, that the rich Oppreſſor, for but taking his poore Neighbours Lambe, ſhould dye the death: God, by Nathan, is more fauourable to Dauid, then to take him at his word: Thou ſhalt not dye: O the marueilous power of repentance: Beſides adultery, Dauid had ſhed the blood of innocent Vriah: The ſtrict Law was Eye for Eye, Tooth for Tooth, Hee that ſmiteth with the Sword, ſhall periſh with the Sword: Yet as if a penitent confeſſion had diſpenſed with the rigour of Iuſtice, now God ſayes Thou ſhalt not dye. Dauid was the voice of the Law, awarding death vnto ſinne: Nathan was the voyce of the Goſpell, awarding life vnto the repentance for ſinne. Whatſoeuer the ſore bee, neuer any ſoule applyed this remedie, and dyed, neuer any ſoule eſcaped death, that applyed it not.

Dauid himſelfe ſhall not dye for this fact: but his miſ-begotten childe ſhall dye for him; He that ſaid, The Lord hath put away thy ſinne, yet ſayd alſo, The Sword ſhall not depart from thine houſe.

The ſame mouth, with one breath, pronounces the ſentence both of abſolution, and death, Abſolution to the Perſon, Death to the Iſſue. Pardon may well ſtand with temporall afflictions. Where God hath forgiuen, though he doth not puniſh, yet hee may chaſtiſe, and that vnto blood; neither doth hee alwayes forbeare correction, where he remits reuenge. So long as he ſmites vs not as an angry Iudge, wee may indure to ſmart from him, as a louing Father.

Yet euen this Rod did Dauid deprecate with teares: How faine would hee ſhake off ſo eaſie a loade? The Childe is ſtricken; the Father faſts and prayes, and weepes, and lyes all night vpon the Earth, and abhorres the noyſe of comfort: That Childe, which was the fruit and monument of his odious adultery, whom hee could neuer haue looked vpon, without recognition of his ſinne: in whoſe face hee could not but haue ſtill read the records of his owne ſhame, is thus mourned for, thus ſued for; It is eaſie to obſerue that good man ouer-paſſionately affected to his Children. Who would not haue thought, that Dauid might haue held himſelfe well appayd, that his ſoule eſcaped an eternall death, his bodie a violent: though God ſhould puniſh his ſinne, in that Childe, in whom he ſinned: yet euen againſt this croſſe hee bends his Prayers, as if nothing had beene forgiuen him: There is no Childe that would be ſcourged if he might eſcape for crying: No affliction is for the time other than grieuous; neither is therefore yeelded vnto, without ſome kinde of reluctation. Farre yet was it from the heart of Dauid, to make any oppoſition to the will of God; he ſued, he ſtruggled not; There is no impatience in intreaties; Hee well knew, that the threats of temporall euils, ran commonly with a ſecret condition; and therefore might perhaps be auoided by humble importunitie: if any meanes vnder Heauen can auert iudgements, it is our Prayers.

God could not chuſe, but like well the boldneſſe of Dauids faith, who after the apprehenſion of ſo heauy a diſpleaſure, is ſo far from doubting of the forgiueneſſe of his ſin, that he dares become a Sutor vnto God for his ſicke childe. Sinne doth not make vs more ſtrange, then Faith confident.

But, it is not in the power of the ſtrongeſt Faith, to preſerue vs from all afflictions; After all Dauids prayers and teares, the Childe muſt dye. The carefull ſeruants dare but whiſper this ſad newes: They who had found their Maſter ſo auerſe from the motion of comfort, in the ſickneſſe of the Childe, feared him vncapable of comfort in his death.

Suſpition is quick-witted; Euery occaſion makes vs miſdoubt that euent, which wee feare; This ſecrecie proclaimes, that which they were ſo loath to vtter, Dauid perceiues his Childe dead, and now he riſes vp from the Earth whereon hee lay, and waſhes himſelfe, and changeth his apparell, and goes firſt into Gods Houſe to worſhip, and into his owne to eate; now hee refuſes no comfort, who before would take none; The iſſue of things doth more fully ſhew the will of God, then the prediction; God neuer did any thing, but what hee would; hee hath ſometimes foretold that for tryall, which his ſecret will intended not; he would foretell it, hee would not effect it, becauſe hee would therefore foretell it, that hee might not effect it; His predictions of outward euils are not alwayes abſolute, his actions are; Dauid well ſees by the euent, what the Decree of God was, concerning his Childe; which now he could not ſtriue againſt, without a vayne impatience; Till we know the determinations of the Almightie, it is free for vs to ſtriue in our prayers, to ſtriue with him, not againſt him; when once wee know them, it is our dutie to ſit downe in a ſilent contentation.

(Whiles the Childe was yet aliue, I faſted and wept, for I ſaid, who can tell whether the Lord will be gracious to me, that the Childe may liue; but now he is dead, Wherefore ſhould I faſt? Can I bring him backe againe?)

The griefe that goes before an euill for remedie, can hardly bee too much, but that which followes an euill, paſt remedie, cannot be too little: Euen in the ſaddeſt accident, Death, wee may yeeld ſomething to nature, nothing to impatience: immoderation of ſorrow, for loſſes paſt hope of recouery, is more ſullen, then vſefull; our ſtomacke may be bewrayed by it, not our wiſdome.

AMNON and TAMAR.

IT is not poſsible, that any word of God ſhould fall to the ground: Dauid is not more ſure of forgiueneſſe, then ſmart: Three maine ſins paſſed him in this buſineſſe of Vriah; Adultery, Murder, Diſsimulation: for all which, he receiues preſent payment; for Adultery, in the deflowring of his Daughter Thamar; for Murder in the killing of his Sonne Amnon; for Diſsimulation in the contriuing of both. Yet all this was but the beginning of euils. Where the Father of the Family brings ſinne home to the houſe, it is not eaſily ſwept out: Vnlawfull Luſt propagates it ſelfe by example; How iuſtly is Dauid ſcourged by the ſinne of his Sonnes, whom his Act taught to offend?

Maacha was the Daughter of an Heatheniſh King; By her, had Dauid that beautifull, but vnhappy Iſſue, Abſolom, and his no leſſe faire Siſter, Thamar: Perhaps, thus late doth Dauid feele the puniſhment of that vnfit choyce: I ſhould haue maruelled, if ſo holy a man had not found croſſes in ſo vnequall a match, either in his perſon, or at leaſt in his ſeed.

Beauty, if it be not well diſciplin'd, proues not a Friend, but a Traytor, three of Dauids Children are vndone by it at once; What elſe was guilty of Amnons inceſtuous loue, Tamars rauiſhment, Abſoloms pride? It is a bleſſing to be fayre, yet ſuch a bleſſing, as if the ſoule anſwer not to the face, may leade to a curſe; How commonly haue we ſeene the fouleſt ſoule dwell fayreſt? It was no fault of Tamars, that ſhe was beautifull; the Candle offends not in burning, the fooliſh flye offends in ſcorching it ſelfe in the flame; yet it is no ſmall miſery to become a tentation vnto another, and to be made but the occaſion of others ruine. Amnon is loue-ſicke of his ſiſter Tamar, and languiſhes of that vnnaturall heat. Whither will not wanton luſt carrie the inordinate mindes of pampered and vngouerned youth; None but his halfe ſiſter, will pleaſe the eyes of the young Prince of Iſrael: Ordinary pleaſures will not content thoſe whom the conceit of greatneſſe, youth, and eaſe, haue let looſe to their appetite.

Perhaps, yet this vnkindly flame, might in time, haue gone out alone, had not there beene a Ionadab, to blow theſe coales with ill counſell. It were ſtrange if great Princes ſhould want ſome Paraſiticall Followers, that are ready to feed their ill humours. Why art thou, the Kings Sonne, ſo leane from day to day? As if it were vnworthy the Heire of a King, to ſuffer either Law, or Conſcience, to ſtand in the way of his deſires: Whereas wiſe Princes know well, that their places giue them no priuiledge of ſinning: but call them in rather to ſo much more ſtrictneſſe, as their example may be more preiudiciall.

Ionadab was the Couſin German of Amnon: Ill aduice is ſo much more dangerous as the intereſt of the giuer in more; Had he beene a true friend, hee had bent all the forces of his diſſwaſion, againſt the wicked motions of that ſinfull luſt; and had ſhewed the Prince of Iſrael how much thoſe lewd deſires prouoked God, and blemiſhed himſelfe; and had lent his hand to ſtrangle them in their firſt conception. There cannot be a more worthy improuement of friendſhip, then in a feruent oppoſition to the ſinnes of them, whom we profeſſe to loue: No enemy can be ſo mortall to great Princes, as thoſe officious Clients, whoſe flattery ſoothes them vp in wickedneſſe: Theſe are Traytors to the Soule, and by a pleaſing violence kill the beſt part eternally.

How ready at hand is an euill ſuggeſtion? Good counſell is like vnto Wel-water, that muſt be drawne vp with a Pumpe, or Bucket; Ill counſell is like to Conduit-water; which if the cocke be but turned, runnes out alone; Ionadab hath ſoone proiected how Amnon ſhall accompliſh his lawleſſe purpoſe. The way muſt be to faine himſelfe ſicke in body, whoſe minde was ſicke of luſt; and vnder this pretence to procure the preſence of her, who had wounded, and onely might cure him.

The dayly increaſing languor, and leaneneſſe, and paleneſſe of loue-ſicke Amnon might well giue colour to a Kerchiefe, and a pallet. Now is it ſoone told Dauid that his eldeſt Sonne is caſt vpon his ſicke bed; there needs no ſuite for his viſitation; The carefull Father haſtens to his Bed-ſide, not without doubts and feares: He that was lately ſo afflicted with the ſickneſſe of a Childe that ſcarce liued to ſee the light, how ſenſible muſt we needs thinke hee would bee, of the indiſpoſition of his firſt-borne Sonne, in the prime of his age and hopes? It is not giuen to any Prophet to fore-ſee all things, Happie had it beene for Dauid, if Amnon had beene truly ſicke, and ſicke vnto death; yet who could haue perſwaded this paſſionate Father to haue beene content with this ſucceſſion of loſſes, this earely loſſe of his Succeſſor: How glad is he to heare, that his Daughter Tamars skill might bee likely to fit the dyet of ſo deare a patient. Conceit is wont to rule much both in ſickneſſe and in the cure. Tamar is ſent by her Father to the houſe of Amnon; Her hand onely muſt dreſſe that Diſh, which may pleaſe the nice Palate of her ſicke Brother. Euen the Children of Kings, in thoſe homelyer Tymes, did not ſcorne to put their fingers, to ſome workes of huſwifry: (Shee tooke floure and did knead it, and did make Cakes in his ſight, and did bake the Cakes and tooke a Pan, and powred them out before him.) Had ſhee not beene ſometimes vſed to ſuch domeſtique employments, ſhee had beene now to ſeeke; neither had this beene required of her, but vpon the knowledge of her skill: Shee doth not plead the impayring of her beautie by the ſcorching of the fire; nor thinkes her hand too daintie for ſuch meane Seruices, but ſettles to the worke, as one that had rather regard the neceſſities of her Brother, then her owne ſtate: Onely pride and idleneſſe haue baniſht honeſt and thrifty diligence, out of the houſes of the great.

This was not yet the Diſh that Amnon longed for. It was the Cooke, and not the Cates which that wanton eye affected. Vnlawfull Acts ſeeke for ſecrecie; The companie is diſmiſſed, Tamar onely ſtayes; Good meaning ſuſpects nothing, Whiles ſhe preſents the meate ſhe had prepared, to her ſicke Brother, her ſelfe is made a prey to his outragious Luſt. The modeſt Virgin intreates, and perſwades in vaine; ſhee layes before him the ſinne, the ſhame, the danger of the fact; and ſince none of theſe can preuayle, faine would winne time by the ſuggeſting of vnpoſſible hopes; Nothing but violence can ſtay a reſolued ſinner; What hee cannot by intreaty, hee will haue by force. If the Deuill were not more ſtrong in men, then nature, they would neuer ſeeke pleaſure in violence. Amnon hath no ſooner fulfilled his beaſtly deſires, then he hates Tamar more then he loued her. Inordinate luſt neuer ends but in diſcontentment; Loſſe of ſpirits, and remorſe of ſoule make the remembrance of that Act tedious, whoſe expectation promiſed delight. If wee could ſee the backe of ſinfull pleaſures, ere we behold their face, our hearts could not but bee fore-ſtalled with a iuſt deteſtation. Bruitiſh Amnon, it was thy ſelfe whom thou ſhouldeſt haue hated for this villany; not thine innocent ſiſter; Both of you lay together, onely one committed inceſt: What was ſhe but a patient in that impotent fury of luſt? How vniuſtly doe carnall men miſ-place their affections? No man can ſay whether that loue, or this hatred were more vnreaſonable: Fraud drew Tamar into the houſe of Amnon, force entertained her within, and droue her out. Faine would ſhee haue hid her ſhame where it was wrought, and may not bee allowed it: That roofe vnder which, ſhe came with honour, and in obedience and loue, may not bee lent her for the time as a ſhelter of her ignominy. Neuer any ſauage could bee more barbarous: Sechem had rauiſhed Dinah, his offence did not make her odious; his affection ſo continued, that he is willing rather to draw blood of himſelfe and his people, then forgoe her whom hee had abuſed; Amnon in one houre is in the exceſſe of loue and hate; and is ſicke of her, for whom he was ſicke: Shee that lately kept the keyes of his heart, is now lockt out of his doores. Vnruly paſſions runne euer into extremities, and are then beſt appayed, when they are furtheſt off from reaſon and moderation.

What could Amnon thinke, would bee the euent of ſo foule a fact, which as hee had not the grace to preuent, ſo hee hath not the care to conceale? If hee lookt not ſo high as Heauen, what could he imagine would follow hereupon, but the diſpleaſure of a Father, the danger of Law, the indignation of a Brother, the ſhame and outcryes of the World; All which he might haue hoped to auoid by ſecreſie, and plauſible courſes of ſatiſfaction. It is the iuſt iudgement of God vpon preſumptuous offenders, that they loſe their wit, together with their honeſtie; and are either ſo blinded, that they cannot fore-ſee the iſſue of their actions, or ſo beſotted that they doe not regard it.

Poore Tamar can but bewaile that which ſhe could not keep, her Virginitie, not loſt, but torne from her by a cruell violence: She rends her Princely Robe, and layd aſhes on her head, and laments the ſhame of anothers ſinne; and liues more deſolate then a widdow, in the houſe of her brother Abſalom.

In the meane time, what a corroſiue muſt this newes needes be to the heart of good Dauid, whoſe fatherly command had out of loue, caſt his Daughter into the iawes of this Lion? What an inſolent affront, muſt he needs conſtrue this, to be offred by a Sonne to a Father; that the Father ſhould be made the Pandar of his owne Daughter to his Sonne? He that lay vpon the ground weeping for, but the ſickneſſe of an Infant, How vexed do we thinke he was with the villanie of his Heyre, with the rauiſhment of his Daughter, both of them worſe then many deaths? What reuenge can he thinke of, for ſo haynous a crime leſſe then death; and what leſſe then death is it to him, to thinke of a reuenge? Rape was by the Law of God, capitall, how much more, when it is ſeconded with inceſt? Anger was not puniſhment enough for ſo high an offence; Yet this is all that I heare of, from ſo indulgent a Father, ſauing that he makes vp the reſt with ſorrow, puniſhing his Sonnes out-rage in himſelfe; The better natur'd, and more gracious a man is, the more ſubiect he is to the danger of an ouer-remiſſeneſſe, and the exceſſe of fauour and mercie: The milde iniuſtice is no leſſe perillous to the Commonwealth, then the cruell.

If Dauid (perhaps out of the conſcience of his owne late offence) will not puniſh this fact, his ſonne Abſalom ſhall: not out of any care of Iuſtice, but in a deſire of reuenge. Two whole yeares, hath this ſlye Courtier ſmotherd his indignation, and fained kindneſſe; elſe his inuitation of Amnon in ſpeciall, had beene ſuſpected. Euen gallant Abſalom was a great Sheep-maſter; The brauery and magnificence of a Courtier, muſt be built vpon the grounds of frugalitie; Dauid himſelfe is bidden to this bloody Sheepe-ſhearing; It was no otherwiſe meant, but that the Fathers eyes ſhould be the witneſſes, of the Tragicall execution of one Sonne by another; Onely Dauids loue kept him from that horrible ſpectacle. Hee is carefull not to be chargeable to that Sonne, who cares not to ouercharge his Fathers ſtomacke with a Feaſt of Blood.

Amnon hath ſo quite forgot his ſinne, that he dares goe to feaſt in that Houſe where Tamar was mourning; and ſuſpects not the kindneſſe of him, whom he had deſerued, of a Brother to make an enemy; nothing is more vnſafe to be truſted, then the faire lookes of a feſtred heart: Where true Charitie or iuſt ſatisfaction, haue not wrought a ſound reconciliation, malice doth but lurke for the opportunitie of an aduantage.

It was not for nothing that Abſalom deferred his reuenge; which is now ſo much more exquiſite, as it is longer protracted: What could bee more fearefull, then when Amnons heart was merrie with Wine, to be ſuddenly ſtriken with death? As if this execution had beene no leſſe intended to the Soule, then to the bodie; How wickedly ſoeuer this was done by Abſalom, yet how iuſt was it with God, that he, who in two yeares impunity would finde no leiſure of repentance, ſhould now receiue a puniſhment without poſſibilitie of Repentance?

O God, thou art righteous to reckon for thoſe ſinnes, which humane partialitie or negligence hath omitted, and while thou puniſheſt ſinne with ſinne, to puniſh ſinne with death; If either Dauid had called Amnon to account for this villany, or Amnon had called himſelfe, the reuenge had not beene ſo deſperate; Happie is the man that by an vnfained Repentance acquits his ſoule from his knowne euils, and improues the dayes of his peace to the preuention of future vengeance; which if it bee not done, the hand of God ſhall as ſurely ouer-take vs in iudgement, as the hand of Satan hath ouertaken vs in miſcarriage vnto ſinne.

Absaloms Returne and Conſpiracie.

ONE Act of iniuſtice drawes on another; The ininſtice of Dauid, in not puniſhing the rape of Amnon, procures the iniuſtice of Abſalom, in puniſhing Amnon with Murder: That which the Father ſhould haue iuſtly reuenged, and did not; the Sonne reuenges vniuſtly. The rape of a Siſter was no leſſe worthy of death then the Murder of a Brother; Yea, this latter ſinne was therefore the leſſe, becauſe that Brother was worthy of death, though by another hand; whereas that Siſter was guiltie of nothing but modeſt beautie: yet he that knew this Rape paſſed ouer (whole two yeares) with impunitie, dares not truſt the mercie of a Father, in the pardon of his Murder; but for three yeares hides his head in the Court of his Grand-father, the King of Geſhur. Doubtleſſe, that Heatheniſh Prince gaue him a Kind welcome, for ſo meritorious a reuenge of the diſhonour done to his owne Loynes.

No man can tell, how Abſalom ſhould haue ſped from the hands of his otherwiſe ouer-indulgent Father, if he had beene apprehended in the heat of the fact. Euen the largeſt loue may be ouer-ſtrained, and may giue a fall in the breaking; Theſe fearefull effects of linity, might perhaps haue whetted the ſeuerity of Dauid to ſhut vp theſe outrages in blood; Now this diſpleaſure was weakned with age: Time and thoughts haue digeſted this hard morſell; Dauids heart told him, that his hands had a ſhare in this offence; that Abſalom did but giue that ſtroke, which himſelfe had wrongfully forborn; that the vnrecouerable loſſe of one Sonne, would be but wofully relieued with the loſſe of another; Hee therefore, that in the newes of the deceaſed Infant could change his clothes, and waſh himſelfe, and cheere vp his ſpirits, with the reſolution of, I ſhall goe to him, he ſhall not returne to me, comforts himſelfe concerning Amnon; and begins to long for Abſalom.

Those three yeares baniſhment ſeemed not ſo much a puniſhment to the Son, as to the Father; Now Dauid beginnes to forgiue himſelfe; yet out of his wiſdome, ſo inclines to fauour, that he conceales it; and yet ſo conceales it, that it may be deſcryed by a cunning eye; If he had caſt out no glances of affection, there had beene no hopes for his Abſalom: If he had made profeſſion of loue after ſo foule an Act, there had beene no ſafety for others; now he lets fall ſo much ſecret grace, as may both hold vp Abſalom in the life of his hopes, and not hearten the preſumption of others.

Good Eyes ſee light thorow the ſmalleſt chinke; The wit of Ioab hath ſoone diſcerned Dauids reſerued affection; and knowes how to ſerue him in that which hee would, and would not accompliſh: and now deuiſes how to bring into the light, that birth of Deſire, whereof he knew Dauid was both bigge, and aſhamed. A woman of Tekoah, (that Sex hath beene euer held more apt for wiles) is ſuborned to perſonate a mourner, and to ſay that, by way of Parable, which in playne termes would haue ſounded too harſhly; and now whiles ſhee lamentably layes forth the loſſe and danger of her Sonnes, ſhe ſhewes Dauid his owne; and whiles ſhee mooues compaſſion to her pretended Iſſue, ſhe winnes Dauid to a pittie of himſelfe, and a fauourable ſentence for Abſalom. We loue our ſelues better then others, but we ſee others better then our ſelues; who ſo would perfectly know his owne caſe, let him view it in anothers perſon.

Parables ſped well with Dauid; One drew him to repent of his owne ſinne; another, to remit Abſaloms puniſhment; And now, as glad to heare this Plea, and willing to be perſwaded vnto that, which if he durſt, hee would haue ſought for, he gratifies Ioab with the grant of that ſuit, which Ioab more gratified him in ſuing for Goe bring againe the young man Abſalom.

How glad is Ioab, that hee hath light vpon one Act, for which the Sun, both ſetting and riſing, ſhould ſhine vpon him? and now he ſpeeds to Geſhur, to fetch backe Abſalom to Ieruſalem: hee may bring the long baniſhed Prince to the Citie; but to the Court he may not bring him. (Let him turne to his owne houſe, and let him not ſee my face.)

The good King hath ſo ſmarted with mercie; that now hee is reſolued vpon auſteritie; and will relent but by degrees; It is enough for Abſalom that hee liues, and may now breathe his natiue ayre; Dauids face is no obiect of the eyes of Murtherers: What a Dearling this Sonne was to his Father, appeares in that, after an vnnaturall and barbarous rebellion, paſſionate Dauid wiſhes to haue changed liues with him; yet now, whiles his bowels yearned, his brow frowned; The face may not bee ſeene, where the heart is ſet.

The beſt of Gods Saints may bee blinded with affection; but when they ſhall once ſee their errors, they are carefull to correct them. Wherefore ſerues the power of Grace, but to ſubdue the inſolencies of nature? It is the wiſedome of Parents, as to hide their hearts from their beſt children, ſo to hide their countenances from the vngracious: Fleſhly reſpects may not abate their rigour to the ill deſeruing. For the Childe to ſee all his Fathers loue, it is enough to make him wanton, and of wanton, wicked: For a wicked Child, to ſee any of his Fathers loue, it emboldens him in euill, and drawes on others.

Abſaloms houſe is made his Priſon; Iuſtly is he confined to the place which hee had ſtayned with blood. Two yeares doth hee liue in Ieruſalem, without the happineſſe of his Fathers ſight; It was enough for Dauid and him, to ſee the ſmoke of each others Chimnies. In the meane time, how impatient is Abſalom of this abſence? Hee ſends for Ioab, the Soliciter of his returne; So hard an hand, doth wiſe and holy Dauid carry ouer his reduced Sonne, that his friendly Interceſſor, Ioab, dares not viſit him.

Hee, that afterwards kindled that ſeditious fire ouer all Iſrael, ſets fire now on the field of Ioab; whom loue cannot draw to him, feare and anger ſhall; Continued diſpleaſure hath made Abſalom deſperate; Fiue yeares are paſſed ſince he ſaw the face of his Father; and now is he no leſſe wearie of his life, then of this delay; (Wherefore am I come downe from Geſhur? It had beene better for mee, to haue beene there ſtill: Now therefore let mee ſee the Kings face, and if there bee any iniquitie in me, let him kill mee.) Either baniſhment, or death, ſeemed as tollerable to him, as the debarring of his Fathers ſight.

What a torment ſhall it be to the wicked, to be ſhut out for euer, from the preſence of a God, without all poſſible hopes of recouery? This was but a Father of the fleſh, by whom, if Abſalom liued at firſt, yet in him he liued not, yea, not without him onely, but againſt him that Sonne found he could liue; God is the Father of Spirits, in whom we ſo liue; that without him can be no life, no being; to bee euer excluded from him, in whom we liue and are, what can it bee but an eternall dying, an eternall periſhing? If in thy preſence, O God, be the fulneſſe of ioy, in thine abſence, muſt needs bee the fulneſſe of horror and torment; Hide not thy face from vs, O Lord, but ſhew vs the light of thy countenance, that we may liue, and praiſe thee.

Euen the fire of Ioabs field, warmed the heart of Dauid, whiles it gaue him proofe of the heat of Abſaloms filiall affection. As a man therefore inwardly weary of ſo long diſpleaſure, at laſt he receiues Abſalom to his ſight, to his fauour; and ſeales his pardon with a kiſſe: Naturall Parents, know not how to retayne an euerlaſting anger towards the fruit of their loynes; How much leſſe ſhall the GOD of mercies, be vnreconcileably diſpleaſed with his owne; and ſuffer his wrath to burne like fire that cannot be quenched? Hee will not alwayes chide, neither will hee keepe his anger for euer; His wrath endureth but a moment, in his fauour is life; weeping ping may endure for a Night, but ioy commeth in the Morning.

Abſalom is now as great, as faire; Beautie and Greatneſſe make him proud; Pride workes his ruine; Great ſpirits will not reſt content with a moderate proſperity: Ere two yeares be runne out, Abſalom runnes out into a deſperate plot of rebellion; None but his owne Father was aboue him in Iſrael; None was ſo likely, in humane exſpectation, to ſucceede his Father; If his ambition could but haue contayned it ſelfe for a few yeares, (as Dauid was now neere his period) dutifull carriage might haue procured, that by ſucceſſion, which now he ſought by force. An aſpiring minde is euer impatient, and holds Time it ſelfe an enemy, if it thruſt it ſelfe importunately betwixt the hopes and fruition: Ambition is neuer but in trauell, and can finde no intermiſſion of painefull throwes, till ſhee haue brought forth her abortiue Deſires: How happie were we, if our affectation could be ſo eager of ſpirituall and heauenly promotions; Oh that my Soule could finde it ſelfe ſo reſtleſſe, till it feele the weight of that Crowne of Glorie.

Outward pompe, and vnwonted ſhewes of Magnificence, are wont much to affect the light mindes of the vulgar. Abſalom therefore to the incomparable comelineſſe of his perſon, addes the vnuſuall ſtate of a more then Princely Equipage. His Charets rattle, and his Horſes trample proudly in the Streetes; Fiftie Foot-men run before their glittering Maſter: Ieruſalem rings of their glorious Prince; and is readie to adore theſe continuall Triumphs of Peace. Exceſſe and Noueltie, of expenſiue Brauery and Oſtentation in publike perſons, giues iuſt cauſe to ſuſpect either vanitie, or a plot; True-hearted Dauid can miſdoubt nothing in him, to whom he had both giuen life, and forgiuen this. Loue conſtrued all this, as meant to the honour of a Fathers Court, to the expreſſion of ioy and thankfulneſſe for his reconcilement: The eyes and tongues of men are thus taken vp: Now hath Abſalom laid ſnares for their hearts alſo: He riſes early, and ſtands beſide the way of the gate: Ambition is no niggard of her paines; ſeldome euer is good meaning ſo induſtrious; The more he ſhined in Beautie and Royall Attendance, ſo much more glory it was to neglect himſelfe, and to preferre the care of Iuſtice to his owne eaſe: Neither is Abſalom more painfull then plauſible; his eare is open to all Plaintiues, all Petitioners: there is no cauſe which hee flatters not, See, thy matters are good and right; his hand flatters euery commer with a ſalutation, his lips with a kiſſe. All men, all matters are ſoothed ſauing the ſtate and gouernement; the cenſure of that is no leſſe deepe, then the applauſe of all others, (There is none deputed of the King to heare thee.) What inſinuations could bee more powerfull; No Muſicke can bee ſo ſweet to the eares of the vnſtable multitude, as to heare well of themſelues, ill of their Gouernours: Abſalom needs not to wiſh himſelfe vpon the Bench: Euery man ſayes, Oh, what a curious Prince is Abſalom? What a iuſt and carefull Ruler would Abſalom be? How happie were we, if we might be iudg'd by Abſalom? Thoſe qualities which are wont ſingle to grace others, haue conſpired to meete in Abſalom; Goodlineſſe of Perſon, Magnificence of State, gracious Affabilitie, vnwearied Diligence, Humilitie in Greatneſſe, feeling Pittie, loue of Iuſtice, care of the Common-wealth; The World hath not ſo compleat a Prince as Abſalom: Thus the hearts of the people are not won, but ſtolne by a cloſſe Traytor from their lawfully Annointed Soueraigne. Ouer-fayre ſhewes are a iuſt Argument of vnſoundneſſe; no naturall Face hath ſo cleere a White and Redde, as the painted: Nothing wants now but a cloake of Religion, to perfect the Treachery of that vngracious Sonne, who carried Peace in his Name, Warre, in his heart: and how eaſily is that put on? Abſalom hath an holy Vow to be paid in Hebron: The deuout man had made it long ſince, whiles hee was exiled in Syria, and now he haſts to performe it, (If the Lord ſhall bring me backe againe to Ieruſalem, then will I ſerue the Lord;) wicked Hypocrites, care not to play with God, that they may mocke men. The more deformed any act is, the fayrer Viſor it ſtill ſeeketh.

How glad is the good old King, that he is bleſſed with ſo Godly a Sonne; whom hee diſmiſſeth laden with his cauſeleſſe bleſſings: What truſt is there in fleſh and blood, when Dauid is not ſafe from his owne Loynes? The Conſpiracie is now fully forged, there lacked nothing but this gilt of Pietie to winne fauour and value in all eyes; and now it is a wonder, that but two hundred honeſt Citizens goe vp with Abſalom from Ieruſalem: The true-hearted lye moſt open to Credulitie: How eaſie it is to beguile harmeleſſe intentions? The name of Dauids Sonne carries them againſt the Father of Abſalom, and now theſe ſimple Iſraelites, are vnwittingly made loyall Rebels. Their hearts are free from a plot, and they meane nothing, but fidelitie in the attendance of a Traytor. How many thouſands are thus ignorantly miſled into the traine of Errour; Their ſimplicity is as worthy of pitty, as their miſguidance of indignation. Thoſe that will ſuffer themſelues to be carryed with ſemblances of truth and Faithfulneſſe, muſt needs be as farre from ſafety, as innocence.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE AND TRVLY NOBLE LORD,

FRANCIS Lord RVSSEL, Baron of Thornhaugh, all increaſe of Honour and Happineſſe.

Right Honourable:

YOu ſhall not need to impute it to any other reaſon beſides your vertues, that I haue preſumed to ſhroud this peece of my Labours vnder your Noble Patronage. The world hath taken iuſt notice how much the Goſpell is graced by your reall profeſsion; whom neither Honour hath made ouerlie, nor wealth lauiſh, nor charge miſerable, nor greatneſſe licentious. Goe on happily in theſe ſafe and gainfull ſteps of goodneſſe; and ſtill honour the God that hath honoured you; In the meane time, accept from my vnworthy hands theſe poore Meditations, more hie for their ſubiect, then meane for their author: Wherein Shimeies curſes ſhall teach you how vnable either greatneſſe, or innocence is to beare off the blowes of ill tongues; and how baſenes euer molds it ſelfe according to the aduantage of times. Achitophels depth compared with his end ſhall ſhew how witleſſe and inſenſate craft is, when it ſtriues againſt honeſtie; and how iuſtly are they forſaken of their reaſon, that haue abandoned

God; The blood of Abſalom and Sheba proclaime the ineuitable reuenge of rebellion, which neyther in woods nor walls can finde ſafety. The late famine of Iſrael for the forgotten violence offered to the Gibeonites, ſhewes what note God takes of our oathes, and what ſure vengeance of their violation: Dauids muſter ſeconded with the plague of Iſrael teaches, how highly God may be offended with ſinnes of the leaſt appearance, how ſeuere to his owne, how mercifull in that ſeuerity. If theſe my thoughts ſhall be approued beneficiall to any ſoule, I am rich. I ſhall vow my prayers to their ſucceſſe; and to the happineſſe of your honourable Family, both in the root and branches; Whereto I am in all humble Duty deuoted.

SHIMEI curſing.

WIth an heauy heart, and a couered head, and a weeping eye, and bare feet, is Dauid gone away from Hieruſalem; neuer did hee with more ioy come vp to his City, then now hee left it with ſorrow: how could he doe otherwiſe, whom the inſurrection of his owne Sonne droue out from his houſe, from his throne, from the Arke of God? and now, when the depth of this griefe deſerued nothing but compaſſion, the foule mouth of Shimei entertaines Dauid with curſes: There is no ſmall crueltie in the picking out of a time for miſchiefe; That word would ſcarce gall at one ſeaſon, which at another killeth. The ſame ſhaft flying with the winde pierces deepe, which againſt it, can hardly find ſtrength to ſticke vpright. The valour, and iuſtice of children condemnes it for iniuriouſly cowardly to ſtrike their aduerſarie when he is once downe. It is the murder of the tongue to inſult vpon thoſe, whom God hath humbled, and to draw blood of that backe, which is yet blew from the hand of the Almighty. If Shimei had not preſumed vpon Dauids deiection, he durſt not haue beene thus bold; now he that perhaps durſt not haue lookt at one of thoſe Worthies ſingle, defies them all at once, and doth both caſt, and ſpeake ſtones againſt Dauid, and all his army. The malice of baſe ſpirits ſometimes caries them further, then the courage of the valiant.

In all the time of Dauids proſperity, we heard no newes of Shimei; his ſilence and colourable obedience made him paſſe for a great ſubiect, yet all that while was his heart vnſound and trayterous. Peace and good ſucceſſe hides many a falſe heart; (like as the Snow-drift couers an heape of dung) which once melting away deſcryes the rottenneſſe that lay within: Honour and welfare are but flattering glaſſes of mens affections: aduerſity will not deceiue vs, but will make a true report as of our owne powers, ſo of the diſpoſition of others.

He that ſmiled on Dauid in his throne, curſeth him in his flight: if there be any quarrels, any exceptions to be taken againſt a man, let him look to haue them layd in his diſh when he fares the hardeſt. This practice haue wicked men learnt of their maſter, to take the vtmoſt aduantages of our afflictions; Hee that ſuffers had need to be double armed, both againſt paine, and cenſure.

Euery word of Shimei was a ſlaunder; Hee that tooke Sauls ſpeare from his head, and repented to haue but cut the lap of his garment, is reproched as a man of blood.

The man after Gods owne heart is branded for a man of Belial. He that was ſent for out of the fields to be anointed, is taxed for an vſurper: If Dauids hands were ſtained with blood, yet not of Sauls Houſe; It was his ſeruant, not his maſter that bled by him; yet is the blood of the Lords anointed caſt in Dauids teeth, by the ſpight of a falſe tongue. Did we not ſee Dauid (after all the proofes of his humble loyaltie) ſhedding the blood of that Amalekite who did but ſay he ſhed Sauls? Did wee not heare him lament paſſionately for the death of ſo ill a maſter, chiding the mountaines of Gilboa on which he fell; and angerly wiſhing that no dew might fall where that blood was poured out; and charged the daughters of Iſrael to weepe ouer Saul, who had clothed them in ſcarlet? Did we not heare and ſee him inquiring for any remainder of the Houſe of Saul, that he might ſhew him the kindneſſe of God? Did wee not ſee him honouring lame Mephiboſheth with a princely ſeat at his owne table? Did we not ſee him reuenging the blood of his riuall Iſhboſheth, vpon the heads of Rechab and Baanah? What could any liuing man haue done more to wipe off theſe bloody aſperſions? Yet is not a Shimei aſhamed to charge innocent Dauid with all the blood of the Houſe of Saul.

How is it likely this clamorous wretch had ſecretly traduced the name of Dauid, all the time of his gouernment, that dares thus accuſe him to his face, before all the mighty men of Iſrael, who were witneſſes of the contrary? The greater the perſon is, the more open doe his actions lie to miſ-interpretation, and cenſure. Euery tongue ſpeakes partially according to the intereſt he hath in the cauſe, or the patient. It is not poſſible that eminent perſons ſhould be free from imputations; Innocence can no more protect them, then power.

If the patience of Dauid can digeſt this indignity, his traine cannot; their fingers could not but itch to returne iron for ſtones. If Shimei raile on Dauid, Abiſhai railes on Shimei, Shimei is of Sauls Family, Abiſhai of Dauids; each ſpeakes for his owne: Abiſhai moſt iuſtly bends his tongue againſt Shimei, as Shimei againſt Dauid moſt vniuſtly: Had Shimei beene any other then a dog, he had neuer ſo rudely barked at an harmleſſe paſſenger; neither could he deſerue leſſe then the loſſe of that head, which had vttered ſuch blaſphemies againſt Gods anointed: The zeale of Abiſhai both but plead for iuſtice, and is checked; What haue I to doe with you ye ſonnes of Zeruiah? Dauid ſaid not ſo much to his reuiler, as to his abettor: He well ſaw that a reuenge was iuſt, but not ſeaſonable; he found the preſent a fit time to ſuffer wrongs, not to right them: hee therefore giues way rather meekely to his owne humiliation, then to the puniſhment of another: There are ſeaſons wherein lawfull motions are not fit to bee cheriſhed; Anger doth not become a mourner; One paſſion at once is enough for the ſoule. Vnaduiſed zeale may be more preiudiciall, then a cold remiſneſſe.

What if the Lord for the correction of his ſeruant, haue ſaid vnto Shimei, Curſe Dauid; yet is Shimeies curſe no leſſe worthy of Abiſhaies ſword; the ſinne of Shimeies curſe was his owne, the ſmart of the curſe was Gods; God wils that as Dauids chaſtiſement, which hee hates as Shimeies wickedneſſe; That lewd tongue moued from God, it moued lewdly from Satan. Wicked men are neuer the freer from guilt, or puniſhment, for that hand which the holy God hath in their offenſiue actions; Yet Dauid can ſay, Let him alone, and let him curſe, for the Lord hath bidden him; as meaning to giue a reaſon of his owne patience, rather then Shimeies impunitie: The iſſue ſhewed how well Dauid could diſtinguiſh betwixt the act of God, and of a traitor; how hee could both kiſſe the rod, and burne it: There can be none ſo ſtrong motiue of our meeke ſubmiſſion to euils, as the acknowledgement of their originall; Hee that can ſee the hand of God ſtriking him by the hand or tongue of an enemy, ſhall more awe the firſt mouer of his harme, then maligne the inſtrument. Euen whiles Dauid laments the rebellion of his ſonne, he gaines by it; and makes that the argrment of his patience, which was the exerciſe of it. Behold, my ſon which came forth of my bowels ſeeketh my life; how much more now may this Beniamite doe it? The wickedneſſe of an Abſalom may rob his father of comfort, but ſhall helpe to adde to his fathers goodneſſe: It is the aduantage of great croſſes, that they ſwallow vp the leſſe; One mans ſin cannot be excuſed by anothers, the leſſer by the greater; If Abſalom be a traytor, Shimei may not curſe and rebell: But the paſſion conceiued from the indignity of a ſtranger may be abated by the harder meaſure of our owne; If we can therefore ſuffer becauſe we haue ſuffered, we haue profited by our affliction. A weake heart faints with euery addition of ſucceeding trouble; the ſtrong recollects it ſelfe, and is growne ſo skilfull that it beares off one miſchiefe with another.

It is not either the vnnaturall inſurrection of Abſalom, nor the vniuſt curſes of Shimei, that can put Dauid quite out of heart; It may be that the Lord will looke on mine affliction, and will requite good for his curſing, this day. So well was Dauid acquainted with the proceedings of God, that hee knew cheriſhing was euer wont to follow ſtripes; after vehement euacuation, cordials; after a darke night, the cleare light of the morning: Hope therefore doth not only vphold, but cheare vp his heart, in the midſt of his ſorrow; If we can looke beyond the cloud of our affliction, and ſee the Sun ſhine of comfort on the other ſide of it, we cannot bee ſo diſcouraged with the preſence of euill, as heartned with the iſſue; As on the contrary, let a man be neuer ſo merry within, and ſee paine and miſery waiting for him at the doore, his expectation of euill ſhall eaſily daunt all the ſenſe of his pleaſure; the retributions of temporall fauours goe but by peraduentures; It may be the Lord will looke on mine affliction; of eternall, are certaine and infallible: If we ſuffer, we ſhall raigne; why ſhould not the aſſurance of raigning make vs triumph in ſuffering?

Dauids patience drawes on the inſolence of Shimei. Euill natures grow preſumptuous vpon forbearance: In good diſpoſitions, iniury vnanſwered growes weary of it ſelfe, and dyes in a voluntary remorſe; but in thoſe dogged ſtomackes, which are onely capable of the reſtraints of feare, the ſilent digeſtion of a former wrong prouokes a ſecond; Mercy had need to bee guided with wiſedome, leſt it proue cruell to it ſelfe.

Oh the baſe minds of inconſtant Time-ſeruers! Stay but a while, till the wheele be a little turned, you ſhall ſee humble Shimei fall downe on his face before Dauid, in his returne ouer Iordan; now his ſubmiſſion ſhall equall his former rudeneſſe; his praiers ſhall requite his curſes, his teares make amends for his ſtones, Let not my Lord impute iniquitie vnto me; neither doe thou remember that which thy ſeruant did peruerſly, the day that my Lord the King went out of Ieruſalem, that the King ſhould take it to heart; for thy ſeruant doth know that I haue ſinned; Falſe-hearted Shimei, had Abſalom proſpered, thou hadſt not ſinned, thou hadſt not repented; then hadſt thou bragged of thine inſultation ouer his miſeries, whoſe pardon thou now beggeſt with teares. The changes of worldly mindes are thankleſſe, ſince they are neither wrought out of conſcience nor loue, but onely by a ſlauiſh feare of a iuſt puniſhment.

Dauid could ſay no more to teſtifie his ſorrow (for his hainous ſinnes againſt God) to Nathan, then Shimei ſayes of himſelfe to Dauid; whereto may be added the aduantage of a voluntary confeſſion in this offender, which in Dauid was extorted by the reproofe of a Prophet: yet is Dauids confeſſion ſeriouſly penitent, Shimeis craftily hypocriticall: Thoſe alterations are iuſtly ſuſpected, which are ſhaped according to the times and outward occaſions: the true penitent lookes onely at God, and his ſinne, and is changed when all other things are themſelues.

Great offences had need of anſwerable ſatisfactions; As Shimei was the onely man of the houſe of Beniamin that came forth and curſed Dauid in his flight, ſo is hee the firſt man (euen before thoſe of the Houſe of Ioſeph, though nearer in ſituation) that comes to meet Dauid in his returne with prayers and gratulation: Notorious offenders may not thinke to ſit downe with the taske of ordinary ſeruices; The retributions of their obedience muſt be proportionable to their crimes.

ACHITOPHEL.

SO ſoone as Dauid heard of Achitophels hand in that conſpiracie, hee fals to his prayers, O Lord, I pray thee turne the counſell of Achitophel into fooliſhneſſe; The knowne wiſedome of his reuolted counſellor made him a dangerous and dreadfull aduerſary : Great parts miſ-imployed cannot but poue moſt miſchieuous : when wickedneſſe is armed with wit, and power, none but a God can defeat it ; when we are matched with a ſtrong and ſubtle enmity, it is high time (if euer) to be deuout; If the bounty of God haue thought good to furniſh his creatures with powers to warre againſt himſelfe, his wiſedome knowes how to turne the abuſe of thoſe powers to the ſhame of the owners, and the glory of the giuer.

Oh the policy of this Machiauell of Iſrael, no leſſe deepe then hell it ſelfe: Goe in to thy fathers concubines, which he hath left to keepe the houſe; and when all Iſrael ſhall heare that thou art abhorred of thy father, the hands of all that are with thee ſhall be ſtrong The firſt care muſt be to ſecure the faction : There can be no ſafety in ſiding with a doubtfull rebell : if Abſalom be a traytor, yet he is a Sonne; Nature may returne to it ſelfe ; Abſalom may relent, Dauid may remit; where then are we that haue helpt to promote the conſpiracie: the danger is ours, whiles this breach may bee peeced; There is no way but to ingage Abſalom in ſome further act, vncapable of forgiueneſſe; Beſides the throne, let him violate the bed of his Father; vnto his treaſon let him adde an inceſt, no leſſe vnnaturall; now ſhall the world ſee that Abſalom neither hopes nor cares for the reconciliation of a father; Our quarrell can neuer haue any ſafe end but victory; the hope whereof depends vpon the reſolution of our followers; they cannot bee reſolute, but vpon the vnpardonable wickedneſſe of their Leader : Neither can this villany be ſhamefull enough, if it be ſecret. The cloſeneſſe of euill argues feare, or modeſty; neither of which can beſeeme him that would be a ſucceſſefull traytor : Set vp a Tent on the top of the houſe, and let all Iſrael be witneſſes of thy ſinne, and thy Fathers ſhame : Ordinary crimes are for vulgar offenders; Let Abſalom ſinne eminently; and doe that which may make the world at once to bluſh, and wonder.

Who would euer haue thought that Achitophel had liued at Court, at the Counſell-table of a Dauid? Who would thinke that mouth had euer ſpoken well ? Yet had hee beene no other then as the Oracle of God to the religious Court of Iſrael; euen whiles he was not wiſe enough to be good : Policy and grace are not alwayes lodged vnder one roofe : This man whiles he was one of Dauids deepe Counſellors, was one of Dauids fooles that ſaid in their hearts, There is no God; elſe hee could not haue hoped to make good an euill with worſe, to build the ſucceſſe of treaſon vpon inceſt.

Prophane hearts doe ſo contriue the plots of their wickedneſſe, as if there were no ouer-ruling power to croſſe their deſignes, or to reuenge them : Hee that ſits in heauen laughes them to ſcorne, and ſo farre giues way to their ſinnes, as their ſinnes may proue plagues vnto themſelues.

Theſe two Sonnes of Dauid met with peſtilent counſell; Amnon is aduiſed to inceſt with his ſiſter; Abſalom is aduiſed to inceſt with his fathers Concubines : That by Ionadab, this by Achitophel : Both preuaile. It is as eaſie at leaſt to take ill counſell, as to giue it : Proneneſſe to villany in the great, cannot want eyther proiecters to deuiſe, or paraſites to execute the moſt odious ſinnes.

The Tent is ſpred (leſt it ſhould not be conſpicuous enough) on the top of the houſe. The act is done, in the ſight of all Iſrael : The filthineſſe of the ſinne was not ſo great, as the impudency of the manner. When the Prophet Nathan came with that heauy meſſage of reproofe, and menace to Dauid, after his ſinne with Bathſheba, hee could ſay from God, Behold I will raiſe vp euill againſt thee, out of thine owne houſe, and will take thy wiues before thine eyes, and giue them vnto thy neighbour, and he ſhall lie with thy wiues in the ſight of this Sunne: For thou didſt it ſecretly, but I will doe this thing before all Iſrael, and before this Sunne. The counſell of Achitophel, and the luſt of Abſalom, haue fulfilled the iudgement of God. Oh the wiſedome of the Almightie, that can vſe the worſt of euils, well; and moſt iuſtly make the ſinnes of men his executioners!

It was the ſinne of Reuben that he defiled his fathers bed; yet not in the ſame height of lewdneſſe: what Reuben did in a youthfull wantonneſſe, Abſalom did in a malicious deſpight: Reuben ſinned with one, Abſalom with ten; Reuben ſecretly, Abſalom in the open eyes of heauen and earth; yet old Iacob could ſay of Reuben, Thou ſhalt not excell; thy dignity is gone,; whiles Achitophel ſayes to Abſalom, Thy dignity ſhall ariſe from inceſt; Climbe vp to thy Fathers bed, if thou wilt ſit in his throne; If Achitophel were a politician, Iacob was a Prophet; if the one ſpake from carnall ſenſe, the other from diuine reuelation. Certainly to ſinne is not the way to proſper; what euer vaine fooles promiſe to themſelues, there is no wiſdome, nor vnderſtanding, nor counſell againſt the Lord.

After the rebellion is ſecured for continuance, the next care is that it may end in victory; this alſo hath the working head of Achitophel proiected. Wit & experience told him, that in theſe caſes of aſſault, celeritie vſes to bring forth the happieſt diſpatch: whereas protraction is no ſmall aduantage to the defendant. Let me (ſaith he) chooſe out now twelue thouſand men, and I will vp, and follow after Dauid this night; and I will come vpon him while he is weare and weak-handed. No aduice could be more pernitious: For, beſides the wearineſſe and vnreadineſſe of Dauid, and his army, the ſpirits of that worthy Leader were daunted, and deiected with ſorrow, and offered way to the violence of a ſudden aſſault. The field had beene halfe won ere any blow ſtriken. Achitophel could not haue beene reputed ſo wiſe, if he had not learned the due proportion betwixt actions and times: He that obſerueth euery winde ſhall neuer ſow; but hee that obſerues no winde at all, ſhall neuer reape.

The likelieſt deuices doe not alwayes ſucceed; The God that had appointed to eſtabliſh Dauids throne, and determined Salomon to his ſucceſſion, findes meanes to croſſe the plot of Achitophel by a leſſe probable aduice: Huſhai was not ſent backe for nothing: where God hath in his ſecret will decreed any euent, hee inclines the wills of men to approue that which may promote his owne purpoſes: Neither had Huſhai ſo deepe an head: neither was his counſell ſo ſure, as that of Achitophel, yet his tongue ſhall refell Achitophel, and diuert Abſalom: The pretences were fayrer, though the grounds were vnſound: Firſt, to ſweeten his oppoſition, he yeelds the prayſe of wiſdome to his aduerſary in all other counſels, that he may haue leaue to deny it in this: His very contradiction in the preſent inſinuates a generall allowance. Then, he ſuggeſts certaine apparent truths concerning Dauids valour, and skill, to giue countenance to the inferẽces of his improbabilities. Laſtly, he cunningly feeds the proud humor of Abſalom, in magnifying the power and extent of his commands, and ends in the glorious boaſts of his fore-promiſed victory; As it is with faces, ſo with counſell, that is faire that pleaſeth. He that giues the vttrance to words, giues alſo their ſpeed: Fauour both of ſpeech and men is not euer according to deſert, but according to fore-ordination: The tongue of Huſhai, & the heart of Abſalom is guided by a power aboue their owne; Huſhai ſhall therefore preuaile with Abſalom, that the treaſon of Abſalom may not preuaile; Hee that worketh all in all things, ſo diſpoſeth of wicked men and ſpirits, that whiles they doe moſt oppoſe his reuealed will, they execute his ſecret, and whiles they thinke moſt to pleaſe, they ouerthrow themſelues.

When Abſalom firſt met Huſhai returned to Hieruſalem, hee vpbraided him pleaſantly with the ſcoffe of his profeſſed friendſhip to Dauid; Is this thy kindneſſe to thy friend? Sometimes there is more truth in the mouth then in the heart, more in ieſt then in earneſt; Huſhai was a friend, his ſtay was his kindnes; and now he hath done that for which he was left at Hieruſalem, diſappointed Achitophel, preſerued Dauid;

Neither

Hall, J.

Neither did his kindneſſe to his friend reſt here, but (as one that was iuſtly iealous of him with whom he was allowed to temporize) he miſtruſts the approbation of Abſalom; and not daring to put the life of his Maſter vpon ſuch an hazard, he giues charge to Zadok and Abiathar, of this intelligence vnto Dauid: we cannot bee too ſuſpicious when we haue to doe with thoſe that are faithleſſe: We cannot be too curious of the ſafety of good Princes.

Huſhai feares not to deſcry the ſecrets of Abſaloms counſell; to betray a traytor is no other then a commendable worke: Zadok and Abiathar are faſt within the gates of Ieruſalem; their ſonnes lay purpoſely abroad in the fields; this meſſage that concerned no leſſe then the life of Dauid, and the whole kingdome of Iſrael, muſt bee truſted with a Maid: Sometimes it pleaſeth the wiſedome of God, who hath the variety of heauen and earth before him, to ſingle out weake inſtruments for great ſeruices: and they ſhall ſerue his turne, as well as the beſt: No councellor of State could haue made this diſpatch more effectually: Ionathan and Ahimaaz are ſent, deſcried, purſued, preſerued: The fidelitie of a Maid inſtructed them in their meſſage, the ſuttlety of a woman ſaued their liues. At the Well of Rogel they receiued their meſſage, in the Well of Bahurim was their life ſaued: The ſudden wit of woman hath choked the mouth of her Well with dryed corne, that it might not bewray the meſſengers: and now Dauid heares ſafely of his danger, and preuents it: and though weary with trauell, and laden with ſorrow, he muſt ſpend the night in his remoue. Gods promiſes of his deliuerance, and the confirmation of his kingdome may not make him neglect the means of his ſafety: If he be faithfull, we may not be careleſſe; ſince our diligence and care are appointed for the factors of that diuine prouidence; The acts of God muſt abate nothing of ours; rather muſt we labour, by doing that which he requireth, to further that which he decreeth.

There are thoſe that haue great wits for the publike, none for themſelues: Such was Achitophel, who whiles he had powers to gouerne a State, could not tell how to rule his owne paſſions: Neuer till now doe we finde his counſell balked, neither was it now reiected as ill, onely Huſhaies was allowed for better: he can liue no longer now that he is beaten at his owne weapon: this alone is cauſe enough to ſaddle his Aſſe, and to goe home, and put the haltar about his owne necke. Pride cauſes men both to miſinterpret diſgraces, and to ouer-rate them: Now is Dauids prayer heard, Achitophels counſell is turned into fooliſhneſſe: Deſperate Achitophel, what if thou bee not the wiſeſt man of all Iſrael? Euen thoſe that haue not attained to the hieſt pitch of wiſedome, haue found contentment in a mediocritie: what if thy counſell were deſpiſed? A wiſe man knowes to liue happily in ſpight of an vniuſt contempt: what madneſſe is this, to reuenge another mans reputation vpon thy ſelfe? And whiles thou ſtriueſt for the higheſt roome of wiſedome, to runne into the groſſeſt extremitie of folly? Worldly wiſedome is no protection from ſhame and ruine. How eaſily may a man, though naturally wiſe, be made weary of life? A little paine, a little ſhame, a little loſſe, a ſmall affront can ſoone rob a man of all comfort, and cauſe his owne hands to rob him of himſelfe: If there bee not higher reſpects then the world can yeeld, to maintaine vs in being, it ſhould be a miracle if indignation did not kill more then diſeaſe: now, that God, by whoſe appointment we liue here, for his moſt wiſe and holy purpoſes, hath found meanes to make life ſweet, and death terrible.

What a mixture doe we finde here of wiſedome and madneſſe? Achitophel will needs hang himſelfe, there is madneſſe; Hee will yet ſet his houſe in order; there is an act of wiſedome: And could it be poſſible that hee, who was ſo wiſe as to ſet his houſe in order, ſhould be ſo mad as to hang himſelfe? That hee ſhould bee carefull to order his houſe, who regarded not to order his impotent paſſions? That hee ſhould care for his houſe, who cared not for either body or ſoule? How vaine it is for a man to be wiſe, if he be not wiſe in God? How prepoſterous are the cares of idle worldlings, that preferre all other things to themſelues, and whiles they looke at what they haue in their cofers, forget what they haue in their breaſts?

The death of ABSALOM.

THE ſame God that raiſed enmity to Dauid from his owne loynes, procured him fauour from forainers; Strangers ſhall relieue him, whom his owne ſonne perſecutes; Here is not a loſſe, but an exchange of loue: Had Abſalom beene a ſonne of Ammon, and Shobi a ſonne of Dauid, Dauid had found no cauſe of complaint: If God take with one hand, he giues with another: whiles that diuine bounty ſerues vs in, good meat, though not in our owne diſhes, we haue good reaſon to be thankefull. No ſooner is Dauid come to Mehanaim, then Barzillai, Machir, and Shobi refreſh him with prouiſions. Who euer ſaw any childe of God left vtterly deſtitute? Whoſoeuer bee the meſſenger of our aide, we know whence he comes; Heauen ſhall want power, and earth meanes, before any of the houſhold of faith ſhall want maintenance.

Hee that formerly was forced to imploy his armes for his defence againſt a tyrannous father in law, muſt now bucle them on againſt an vnnaturall ſonne: Now therefore he muſters his men, and ordaines his Commanders, and marſhalls his troupes; and, ſince their loyall importunitie will not allow the hazard of his perſon, he at once incourages them by his eye, and reſtraines them with his tongue, Deale gently with the young man Abſalom, for my ſake: How vnreaſonably fauorable are the warres of a father? O holy Dauid, what meanes this ill-placed loue, this vniuſt mercy? Deale gently with a Traytor? but of all traitors with a Sonne? of all ſonnes with an Abſalom, the graceleſſe dareling of ſo good a father; and all this for my ſake, whoſe Crowne, whoſe blood he hunts after? For whoſe ſake ſhould Abſalom be purſued, if he muſt be forborne for thine? He was ſtill courteous to thy followers, affable to ſutors, plauſible to all Iſrael, onely to thee hee is cruell: Wherefore are thoſe armes if the cauſe of the quarrell muſt be a motiue of mercie? Yet thou ſayeſt deale gently with the young man Abſalom, for my ſake: Euen in the holieſt Parents nature may bee guilty of an iniurious tenderneſſe, of a bloody indulgence.

Or, whether ſhall wee not rather thinke this was done in type of that vnmeaſurable mercy of the true King, and redeemer of Iſrael, who prayed for his perſecutors, for his murderers; and euen whiles they were at once ſcorning and killing him, could ſay, Father forgiue them, for they know not what they doe? If wee bee ſonnes, we are vngracious, we are rebellious, yet ſtill is our heauenly Father thus compaſſionately regardfull of vs: Dauid was not ſure of the ſucceſſe; there was great inequalitie in the number; Abſaloms forces were more them double to his; It might haue come to the contrary iſſue, that Dauid ſhould haue beene forced to ſay, Deale gently with the Father of Abſalom; but, in a ſuppoſition of that victory, which onely the goodneſſe of his cauſe bade him hope for, hee ſaith, Deale gently with the young man Abſalom. As for vs, we are neuer but vnder mercie; our God needes no aduantages to ſweepe vs from the earth, any moment, yet hee continues that life, and thoſe powers to vs, whereby wee prouoke him, and bids his Angels deale kindely with vs, and beare vs in their armes, whiles wee lift vp our hands, and bend our tongues againſt heauen. O mercie paſt the comprehenſion of all finite ſpirits, and onely to bee conceiued by him whoſe it is: Neuer more reſembled by any earthly affection then by this of his Deputy and Type, Deale gently with the young man Abſalom, for my ſake.

The battell is ioyned; Danids followers are but an handfull to Abſaloms. How eaſily may the fickle multitude bee tranſported to the wrong ſide? What they wanted in abettors, is ſupplied in the cauſe. Vnnaturall ambition drawes the ſword of Abſalom, Dauids, a neceſſary and a iuſt defence. They that in ſimplicitie of heart followed Abſalom, cannot in malice of heart, perſecute the father of Abſalom: with what courage could any Iſraelite draw his ſword againſt a Dauid? or on the other ſide, who can want courage to fight for a righteous Soueraigne, and father, againſt the conſpiracie of a wicked ſon? The God of Hoſts, with whom it is all one to ſaue with many or with few, takes part with iuſtice, and lets Iſrael feele what it is to beare armes for a traiterous vſurper. The ſword deuours twenty thouſand of them, and the wood deuoures more then the ſword; It muſt needs be a very vniuerſall rebellion, wherein ſo many periſhed; What vertue or merits can aſſure the hearts of the vulgar, when ſo gracious a Prince findes ſo many reuolters? Let no man looke to proſper by rebellion; the very thickets, and ſtakes, and pits, and wild beaſts of the wood ſhall conſpire to the puniſhment of traytors; Amongſt the reſt, ſee how a fatall Oke hath ſingled out the ringleader of this hatefull inſurrection; and will at once ſerue for his hangman and gallowes; by one of thoſe ſpreading armes ſnatching him away to ſpeedy execution. Abſalom was comely, and hee knew it well enough; His haire was no ſmall peece of his beauty, nor matter of his pride: It was his wont to cut it once a yeere; not for that it was too long, but too heauy; his heart could haue borne it longer, if his neck had not complained; And now the iuſtice of God had platted an haltar of thoſe locks: Thoſe treſſes had formerly hanged looſely diſheueld on his ſhoulders, now he hangs by thē; He had wont to weigh his haire, and was proud to finde it ſo heauy; now his hayre poiſeth the weight of his body, and makes his burden his torment: It is no maruell if his owne haire turn'd traytor to him, who durſt riſe vp againſt his father. That part which is miſuſed by man to ſinne, is commonly imployed by God to reuenge; The reuenge that it worketh for God, makes amends for the offence, whereto it is drawne againſt God; The very beaſt whereon Abſalom ſat, as weary to beare ſo vnnaturall a burden, reſignes ouer his lode to the tree of Iuſtice; There hangs Abſalom betweene heauen and earth, as one that was hated, and abandoned both of earth and heauen: As if God meant to preſcribe this puniſhment for Traytors, Abſalom, Achitophel, and Iudas dye all one death: So let them periſh that dare lift vp their hand againſt Gods anointed.

The honeſt ſouldier ſees Abſalom hanging in the Oke, and dares not touch him; his hands were held with the charge of Dauid, Beware that none touch the young man Abſalom; Ioab, vpon that intelligence, ſees him, and ſmites him, with no leſſe then three darts; What the ſouldier forbore in obedience, the Captaine doth in zeale: not fearing to preferre his Soueraignes ſafety, to his command; and more tendring the life of a King, and peace of his Countrey, then the weake affection of a father; I dare not ſit Iudge betwixt this zeale and that obedience, betwixt the Captaine and the Souldier; the one was a good ſubiect, the other a good Patriot: the one loued the King, the other loued Dauid; and out of loue diſobeyed; the one meant as well as the other ſped: As if God meant to fulfill the charge of his Anointed, without any blame of his ſubiects, it pleaſed him to execute that immediate reuenge vpon the rebell, which would haue diſpatcht him without hand, or dart: only the Mule and the Oke conſpired to this execution; but that death would have required more leaſure, then it was ſafe for Iſrael to giue; and ſtill life would giue hope of reſcue; to cut off all feares, Ioab lends the Oke three darts to helpe forward ſo needfull a worke of Iuſtice: All Iſrael did not afford ſo firme a friend to Abſalom, as Ioab had beene; who but Ioab had ſuborned the wittie widow of Tekoah, to ſue for the recalling of Abſalom, from his three yeeres exile? Who but he went to fetch him from Geſhur to Ieruſalem? Who but he fetcht him from his houſe at Ieruſalem (whereto hee had beene two yeeres confined) to the face, to the lips of Dauid? Yet now he that was his ſollicitor for the Kings fauor, is his executioner againſt the Kings charge: With honeſt hearts all reſpects either of blood or friendſhip ceaſe in the caſe of Treaſon; well hath Ioab forgotten himſelfe to bee friend to him who had forgotten himſelfe to bee a ſonne. Euen ciuilly, the King is our common father, our Countrey our common mother; Nature hath no priuate relations which ſhould not gladly giue place to theſe; He is neither father, nor ſonne, nor brother, nor friend, that conſpires againſt the common parent: Well doth he who ſpake parables for his Maſters ſonne, now ſpeake darts to his Kings enemy; and pierces that heart which was falſe to ſo good a father: Thoſe darts are ſeconded by Ioabs followers; each man tries his weapon vpon ſo faire a marke. One death is not enough for Abſalom; he is at once hanged, ſhot, mangled, ſtoned: Iuſtly was he lift vp to the Oke, who had lift vp himſelfe againſt his father, and ſoueraigne; Iuſtly is hee pierced with darts, who had pierced his fathers heart with ſo many ſorrowes; Iuſtly is he mangled, who hath diſmembred and diuided all Iſrael; Iuſtly is he ſtoned, who had not onely curſed, but purſued his owne parent.

Now Ioab ſounds the retrait; and cals off his eager troupes from execution: howeuer he knew what his rebellious Countrymen had deſerued in following an Abſalom; Wiſe Commanders know how to put a difference betwixt the heads of a faction, and the miſ-guided multitude; and can pity the one, whiles they take reuenge on the other.

So did Abſalom eſteeme himſelfe, that hee thought it would bee a wrong to the world, to want the memoriall of ſo goodly a perſon. God had denied him ſons; How iuſt it was that he ſhould want a ſonne, who had robd his father of a ſonne, who would haue robd himſelfe of a father, his father of a Kingdome? It had beene pity ſo poyſonous a plant ſhould haue beene fruitfull; His pride ſhall ſupply nature, he reares vp a ſtately pillar in the Kings dale, and calls it by his owne name, that hee might liue in dead ſtones, who could not ſuruiue in liuing iſſue: and now, behold this curious pile ends in a rude heape, which ſpeakes no language but the ſhame of that carcaſſe which it couers: Here this ye glorious fooles, that care not to perpetuate any memory of your ſelues to the world, but of ill-deſeruing greatneſſe; the beſt of this affectation is vanity: the worſt infamy and diſhonour: whereas the memoriall of the iuſt ſhall bee bleſſed: and if his humilitie ſhall refuſe an Epitaph, and choſe to hide himſelfe vnder the bare earth, God himſelfe ſhall ingraue his name vpon the pillar of eternity.

There now lyes Abſalom in the pit, vnder a thouſand graue-ſtones, in euery of which is written his euerlaſting reproach: well might this heape ouer-liue that pillar, for when that ceaſed to be a pillar it began to be an heape, neither will it ceaſe to bee a monument of Abſaloms ſhame, whiles there are ſtones to bee found vpon earth: Euen at this day very Pagans and Pilgrimes that paſſe that way, caſt each man a ſtone vnto that heape, and are wont to ſay in a ſolemne execration, Curſed bee the paricide Abſalom, and curſed bee all vniuſt perſecutors of their parents, for euer: Faſten your eyes vpon this wofull ſpectacle, O all yee rebellious and vngracious children, which riſe vp againſt the loynes and thighes from which yee fell: and know that it is the leaſt part of your puniſhment, that your carcaſſes rot in the earth, and your name in ignominie: theſe doe but ſhaddow out thoſe eternall ſufferings, of your ſoules, for your foule and vnnaturall diſobedience.

Abſalom is ſped, who ſhall report it to his father? Surely Ioab was not ſo much afraid of the fact, as of the meſſage: There are buſie ſpirits that loue to cary newes, though thankleſſe, though purpoſeleſſe: ſuch was Abimaaz, the ſonne of Zadock, who importunately thruſt himſelfe into this ſeruice: wiſe Ioab, who well ſaw, how vnwelcome tydings muſt be the burthen of the firſt poſt, diſſwades him in vaine: hee knew Dauid too well to imploy a friend to that errād. An Ethiopian ſeruant was a fitter bearer of ſuch a meſſage, then the ſon of the Prieſt. The entertainment of the perſon doth ſo follow the quality of the newes, that Dauid could argue a far off, He is a good man he commeth with good tydings. Oh how welcome deſerue thoſe meſſengers to bee that bring vs the glad tydings of ſaluation, that aſſure vs of the foyle of all ſpirituall enemies, and tell vs of nothing but victories, and Crownes, and Kingdomes; If wee thinke not their feet beautifull, our hearts are foule with infidelitie, and ſecure worldlineſſe.

So wiſe is Abimaaz growne by Ioabs intimation, that though he out-went Cuſhi in his pace, he ſuffers Cuſhi to out-goe him in his tale, cunningly ſuppreſſing that part, which he knew muſt be both neceſſarily deliuered, and vnpleaſingly receiued.

As our care is wont to be where our loue is; Dauids firſt word is not, how fares the Hoſt, but how fares the young man Abſalom: Like a wiſe and faithfull meſſenger, Cuſhi anſwers by honeſt inſinuation, The enemies of my Lord the King, and all that riſe againſt thee to doe thee hurt, be as that young man is; implying both what was done, and, why Dauid ſhould approue it being done; How is the good King thunder-ſtrooke, with that word of his Black-more? who, as if he were at once bereaued of all comfort, and cared not to liue, but in the name of Abſalom, goes and weepes and cryes out, O my ſon Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon Abſalom, Would God I had dyed for thee; O Abſalom my ſon, my ſon. What is this we heare? that hee whoſe life Iſrael valued at ten thouſand of theirs, ſhould be exchanged with a taytors? that a good King whoſe life was ſought, ſhould wiſh to lay it downe for the preſeruation of his murtherer? The beſt men haue not wont to be the leaſt paſſionate; But what ſhall we ſay to that loue of thine, O Sauiour, who haſt ſaid of vs wreched traytors, not, Would God I had dyed for you; But I will dye, I doe dye, I haue dyed for you; Oh loue, like thy ſelfe, infinite, incomprehenſible, whereat the Angels of Heauen ſtand yet amazed; wherewith thy Saints are rauiſhed, Turne away thine eyes from mee, for they ouercome mee; Oh thou that dwelleſt in the Gardens, the companions hearken to thy voyce: cauſe vs to heare it; that we may in our meaſure anſwer thy loue, aud enioy it for euer.

SHEBAES Rebellion.

IT was the doome which God paſſed vpon the man after his owne heart by the mouth of Nathan, that the ſword ſhould neuer depart from his houſe, for the blood of Vriah: After that wound healed by remiſſion, yet this ſcarce remaines; Abſalom is no ſooner caſt downe into the pit, then Sheba the ſon of Bichri is vp in armes; If Dauid be not plagued, yet he ſhall bee corrected; Firſt by the rod of a ſonne, then of a ſubiect: He had lift vp his hand againſt a faithfull ſubiect, now a faithleſſe dares to lift vp his hand againſt him. Malice like ſome hereditary ſickneſſe runs in a blood: Saul and Shimei, and Sheba were all of an houſe: That ancient grudge was not yet dead: The fire of the houſe of Iemini was but raked vp, neuer throughly out; and now, that which did but ſmoake in Shimei, flames in Sheba: Although euen through this chaſtiſement it is not hard to diſcerne a Type of that perpetuall ſucceſſion of enmity, which ſhould be raiſed againſt the true King of Iſrael. O Son of Dauid, when didſt thou euer want enemies? How wert thou deſigned by thine eternall Father, for a ſigne that ſhould be ſpoken againſt? How did the Gentiles rage, and the people imagine vaine things? The Kings of the earth aſſembled, and the Rulers came together againſt thee? Yea, how doe the ſubiects of thine owne kingdome daily conſpire againſt thee? Euen now whiles thou enioyeſt peace, and glory at thy Fathers right hand, as ſoone ſhalt thou want friends, as enemies vpon earth.

No eye of any traytor could eſpie a iuſt quarrell in the gouernment of Dauid, yet Sheba blowes the trumpet of rebellion; and whiles Iſrael and Iudah are ſtriuing who ſhould haue the greateſt part in their re-eſtabliſhed Soueraigne, hee ſticks not to ſay, We haue no part in Dauid, neither haue wee inheritance in the ſon of Iſhai; and whiles he ſayes, Euery man to his tents O Iſrael, hee calls euery man to his owne; So in proclaiming a libertie from a iuſt and loyall ſubiection, he inuites Iſrael to the bondage of an vſurper.

That a Lewd Conſpirator ſhould breathe Treaſon, it is no wonder; but is it not wonder and ſhame, that vpon euery mutinous blaſt, Iſrael ſhould turne Traytor to Gods anointed? It was their late expoſtulation with Dauid, why their brethren the men of Iudah ſhould haue ſtolne him from them; now might Dauid more iuſtly expoſtulate, why a rebell of their brethren ſhould haue ſtolne them from him: As nothing is more vnſtable then the multitude, ſo nothing is more ſubiect to diſtaſtes, then Soueraignty; for as weake mindes ſeeke pleaſure in change, ſo euery light conceit of irritation ſeemes ſufficient colour of change: Such as the falſe diſpoſitions of the vulgar are, loue cannot bee ſecuritie enough for Princes, without the awfulneſſe of power; What hold can there be of popularitie, when the ſame hands that euen now fought for Dauid to be all theirs, now fight againſt him, vnder the ſonne of Bichri, as none of theirs? As Bees when they are once vp in a ſwarme, are ready to light vpon euery bow, ſo the Iſraelites, being ſtirred by the late commotion of Abſalom, are apt to follow euery Sheba: It is vnſafe for any State, that the multitude ſhould once know the way to an inſurrection; the leaſt track in this kinde is eaſily made a path, Yet, if Iſrael rebell, Iudah continues faithfull; neither ſhall the ſonne of Dauid euer be left deſtitute of ſome true ſubiects in the worſt of Apoſtaſies: Hee that could command all hearts, will euer bee followed by ſome; God had rather glorifie himſelfe by a remnant.

Great Commanders muſt haue actiue thoughts: Dauid is not ſo taken vp with the embroiled affaires of his ſtate, as not to intend domeſticke iuſtice: His ten concubines, which were ſhameleſly defiled by his inceſtuous ſon, are condemned to ward, and widowhood. Had not that conſtupration beene partly violent, their puniſhment had not been ſo eaſie; had it not alſo beene partly voluntary, they had not beene ſo much puniſhed: But how much ſo euer the act did partake of either force, or will, iuſtly are they ſequeſtred from Dauids bed: Abſalom was not more vnnaturall in his rebellion, then in his luſt: If now Dauid ſhould haue returned to his owne bed, hee had ſeconded the inceſt: How much more worthy of ſeparation are they, who haue ſtayned the mariage-bed with their wilfull ſinne?

Amaſa was one of the witneſſes, and abettors of Abſaloms filthineſſe, yet is he (out of policie) receiued to fauour and imployment, whiles the concubines ſuffer: Great men yeeld many times to thoſe things, out of reaſons of ſtate, which if they were priuate perſons could not be eaſily put ouer: It is no ſmall wiſedome to ingage a new reconciled friend, that he may be confirmed by his owne act: Therefore is Amaſa commanded to leauie the forces of Iudah: Ioab after many great merits and atchieuements lies ruſting in neglect: he that was ſo intire with Dauid as to bee of his counſell for Vriahs blood; and ſo firme to Dauid as to lead all his battels againſt the houſe of Sauls, the Ammonites, the Aramites, Abſalom, is now caſhierd, & muſt yeeld his place to a ſtranger, late an enemy: Who knowes not that this ſonne of Zeruiah had ſhed the blood of war in peace? But if the blood of Abſalom had not bin louder then the blood of Abner, I feare this change had not beene; Now Ioab ſmarteth for a loyall diſobedience; How ſlippery are the ſtations of earthly honors, and ſubiect to continuall mutabilitie? Happy are they who are in fauour with him, in whom there is no ſhaddow of change.

Where men are commonly moſt ambitious to pleaſe with their firſt imployments, Amaſa ſlackens his pace; The leaſt delay in matters of rebellion is perillous, may be irrecouerable; The ſons of Zeruiah are not ſullen, Abiſhai is ſent, Ioab goes vnſent to the purſuit of Sheba. Amaſa was in their way; whom no quarrell but their enuy had made of a brother an enemy: Had the heart of Amaſa beene priuy to any cauſe of grudge, he had ſuſpected the Kiſſe of Ioab; now his innocent eyes looke to the lips, not to the hand of his ſecret enemy: The lips were ſmooth, Art thou in health my brother? the hand was bloody, which ſmote him vnder the fift ribbe; That vnhappy hand knew well this way vnto death; which with one wound hath let out the ſoules of two great Captaines, Abner and Amaſa; both they were ſmitten by Ioab, both vnder the fift ribbe, both vnder a pretence of friendſhip. There is no enmity ſo dangerous as that which comes masked with loue; Open hoſtilitie cals vs to our guard; but there is no fence againſt a truſted trecherie: Wee need not bee bidden to auoyde an enemy, but who would runne away from a friend? Thus ſpiritually deales the world with our ſoules; it kiſſes vs, and ſtabs vs at once: If it did not embrace vs with one hand, it could not murther vs with the other; Onely God deliuer vs from the danger of our truſt, and we ſhall be ſafe.

Ioab is gone, and leaues Amaſa wallowing in blood; That ſpectacle cannot but ſtay all paſſengers: The death of great perſons drawes euer many eyes: Each man ſayes, Is not this my Lord Amaſa? Wherefore doe wee goe to fight, whiles our Generall lyes in the duſt? What a ſad preſage is this of our owne miſcariage; The wit of Ioabs followers hath therefore ſoone both remoued Amaſa out of the way, and couered him, not regarding ſo much the loſſe, as the eye-ſore of Iſrael. Thus wicked Politicks care not ſo much for the commiſſion of villany, as for the notice: Smothered euils are as not done; If oppreſſions, if murder, if treaſons may be hid from view, the obdured heart of the offender complaines not of remorſe.

Bloody Ioab, with what face, with what heart canſt thou purſue a Traytor to thy King, whiles thy ſelfe art ſo foule a Traytor to thy friend, to thy cozen-german, and (in ſo vnſeaſonable a ſlaughter) to thy Soueraigne, whoſe cauſe thou profeſſeſt to reuenge? If Amaſa were now in an act of loyaltie, iuſtly (on Gods part) payd for the arerages of his late rebellion, yet that it ſhould bee done by thy hand, then and thus, it was flagitiouſly cruell: Yet, behold Ioab runs away ſecurely with the fact, haſting to plague that in another, whereof himſelfe was no leſſe guiltie; So vaſt are the gorges of ſome conſciences, that they can ſwallow the greateſt crimes, and find no ſtraine in the paſſage.

It is poſſible for a man to be faithfull to ſome one perſon, and perfidious to al others; I doe not finde Ioab other then firme and loyall to Dauid, in the midſt of all his priuate falſhoods, whoſe iuſt quarrell he purſues againſt Sheba, through all the Tribes of Iſrael. None of all the ſtrong Forts of reuolted Iſrael can hide the Rebell from the zeale of his reuenge: The City of Abel lends harbour to that conſpirator; whom all Iſrael would, and cannot protect; Ioab caſts vp a Mount againſt it, and hauing inuironed it with a ſiege, begins to worke vpon the wall; and now, after long chaſe, is in hand to dig out that Vermin, which had earthed himſelfe in this borough of Bethmaachah. Had not the City beene ſtrong and populous, Sheba had not caſt himſelfe for ſuccor within thoſe wals; yet of all the inhabitants, I ſee not any one man moue for the preſeruation of their whole body: Onely a woman vndertakes to treat with Ioab, for their ſafety: Theſe men whoſe ſpirits were great enough to maintaine a Traytor againſt a mighty King, ſcorne not to giue way to the wiſdome of a matron; There is no reaſon that ſexe ſhould diſparage, where the vertue and merit is no leſſe then maſculine: Surely the ſoule acknowledgeth no ſex, neither is varied according to the outward frame; How oft haue we knowne female hearts in the breaſts of Men, and contrarily manly powers in the weaker veſſels? It is iniurious to meaſure the act by the perſon, and not rather to eſteeme the perſon for the act.

She, with no leſſe prudence then courage challengeth Ioab for the violence of his aſſault; and layes to him that law which he could not bee an Iſraelite, and diſauow; the Law of the God of peace, whoſe charge it was, that when they ſhould come neere to a City to fight againſt it, they ſhould offer it peace; and if this tender muſt be made to forainers, how much more to brethren? So as they muſt inquire of Abel, ere they battered it: War is the extreame act of vindicatiue iuſtice; neither doth God euer approue it for any other then a deſperate remedy, and if it haue any other end then peace, it turnes into publike murder: It is therefore an inhumane crueltie to ſhed blood, where we haue not profered faire conditions of peace: The refuſall whereof is iuſtly puniſhed with the ſword of reuenge.

Ioab was a man of blood, yet when the wiſe woman of Abel charged him with going about to deſtroy a mother in Iſrael; and ſwallowing vp the inheritance of the Lord, with what vehemency doth hee deprecate that challenge, God forbid, God forbid it mee, that I ſhould deuoure, or deſtroy it; Although that City with the reſt had engaged it ſelfe in Shebaes ſedition, yet how zealouſly doth Ioab remoue from himſelfe the ſuſpition of an intended vaſtation? How fearefull ſhall their anſwer be, who vpon the quarrell of their owne ambition haue not ſpared to waſte whole Tribes of the Iſrael of God? It was not the faſhion of Dauids Captaines to aſſault any City ere they ſummond it; here they did: There bee ſome things that in the very fact carie their owne conuiction. So did Abel in the entertaining, and abetting a knowne conſpirator; Ioab challenges them for the offence, and requires no other ſatisfaction then the head of Sheba: This Matron had not deſerued the name of Wiſe, and faithfull in Iſrael, if ſhe had not both apprehended the iuſtice of the condition, and commended it to her Citizens; whom ſhe hath eaſily perſwaded to ſpare their owne heads, in not ſparing a Traytors: It had beene pity thoſe wals ſhould haue ſtood if they had beene to hye to throw a Traitors head ouer.

Spiritually, the caſe is ours: Euery mans breſt is as a City incloſed: Euery ſinne is a Trator, that lurkes within thoſe walls; God calls to vs for Shebaes head; neyther hath hee any quarrell to our perſon, but for our ſinne: If wee loue the head of our Traytor, aboue the life of our Soule, we ſhall iuſtly periſh in the vengeance: wee cannot be more willing to part with our ſinne, then our mercifull God is to withdraw his iudgements.

Now is Ioab returned with ſucceſſe, and hopes by Shebaes head to pay the price of Amaſaes blood: Dauid hates the murder, entertaines the man, defers the reuenge; Ioab had made himſelfe ſo great, ſo neceſſary, that Dauid may neither miſſe nor puniſh him: Policie led the King to conniue at that which his heart abhorred; I dare not commend that wiſedome which holds the hands of Princes from doing Iuſtice. Great men haue euer held it a point of worldly ſtate, not alwayes to pay where they haue beene conſcious to a debt of either fauour, or puniſhment; but to make Time their ſeruant for both: Salomon ſhall once defray the arrerages of his father: In the meane time Ioab commands and proſpers; and Dauid is faine to ſmile on that face, whereon he hath in his ſecret deſtination written the characters of Death.

The Gibeonites reuenged.

THE raigne of Dauid was moſt troubleſome towards the ſhutting vp; wherein both warre and famine conſpire to afflict him: Almoſt forty yeares had hee ſate in the throne of Iſrael, with competency, if not abundance of all things; now at laſt are his people viſited with a long dearth; we are not at firſt ſenſible of common euils: Three yeeres drought and ſcarcitie are gone ouer ere Dauid conſults with God, concerning the occaſion of the iudgement, now he found it high time to ſeeke the face of the Lord; The continuance of an affliction ſends vs to God, and cals vpon vs to aske for a reckoning; Whereas like men ſtrucken in their ſleepe, a ſudden blow cannot make vs to finde our ſelues; but rather aſtoniſheth, then teacheth vs.

Dauid was himſelfe a Prophet of God, yet had not the Lord all this while acquainted him with the grounds of his proceedings againſt Iſrael; this ſecret was hid from him, till hee conſulted with the Vrim; Ordinarie meanes ſhall reueale that to him, which no viſion had deſcried: And if God will haue Prophets to haue recourſe vnto the Prieſts, for the notice of his will, how much more muſt the people? Euen thoſe that are inwardeſt with God muſt haue vſe of the Ephod.

Iuſtly it is preſuppoſed by Dauid that there was neuer iudgement from God, where hath not beene a prouocation from men; therefore when he ſees the plague, he inquires for the ſinne. Neuer man ſmarted cauſeleſly from the hand of diuine iuſtice; Oh that when we ſuffer, we could aske what wee haue done, and could guide our repentance to the root of our euils.

That God whoſe counſels are ſecret, euen where his actions are open, will not bee cloſe to his Prophet, to his Prieſt: without inquirie we ſhall know nothing; vpon inquirie nothing ſhall be concealed from vs, that is fit for vs to know.

Who can chooſe but wonder at once, both at Dauids ſlackneſſe in conſulting with God, and Gods ſpeed in anſwering ſo ſlow a demand? He that ſo well knew the way to Gods Oracle, ſuffers Iſrael to be three yeares pinched with famine, ere hee askes why they ſuffer; Euen the beſt hearts may be ouertaken with dulneſſe in holy duties; But oh the maruellous mercy of God, that takes not the aduantage of our weakneſſes. Dauids queſtion is not more ſlow, then his anſwer is ſpeedy, It is for Saul, and for his bloody houſe, becauſe he ſlew the Gibeonites. Iſrael was full of ſinnes, beſides thoſe of Sauls houſe; Sauls houſe was full of ſinnes, beſides thoſe of blood: Much blood was ſhed by them, beſides that of the Gibeonites; yet the iuſtice of God ſingles out this one ſinne of violence offered to the Gibeonites (contrary to the league made by Ioſhua, ſome foure hundred yeeres before) for the occaſion of this late vengeance. Where the cauſes of offence are infinite, it is iuſt with God to pitch vpon ſome; it is mercifull not to puniſh for all: Welneer forty yeares are paſt betwixt the commiſſion of the ſinne, and the reckoning for it. It is a vaine hope that is rayſed from the delay of iudgement: No time can be any preiudice to the ancient of dayes: When wee haue forgotten our ſins, when the world hath forgotten vs, he ſues vs afreſh for our arerages. The ſlaughter of the Gibeonites was the ſinne not of the preſent, but rather the former generation; and now poſteritie payes for their forefathers: Euen we men hold it not vniuſt to ſue the heires and executors of our debtors; Eternall payments God vſes onely to require of the perſon, temporary oft-times of ſucceſſion.

As Saul was higher by the head and ſhoulders then the reſt of Iſrael, both in ſtature and dignitie, ſo were his ſinnes more conſpicuous then thoſe of the vulgar. The eminence of the perſon makes the offence more remarkable to the eyes both of God and men.

Neyther Saul nor Iſraell were faultleſſe in other kindes, yet God fixes the eye of his reuenge vpon the maſſacre of the Gibeonites. Euery ſinne hath a tongue, but that of blood ouer-cryes and drownes the reſt. Hee who is Mercy it ſelfe abhorres crueltie in his creature aboue all other inordinateneſſe; That holy ſoule which was heauy preſſed with the weight of an hainous adultery, yet cryes out, Deliuer me from blood, O God, the God of my ſaluation, and my tongue ſhall ſing ioyfully of thy righteouſneſſe.

If God would take account of blood, hee might haue entered the action vpon the blood of Vriah ſpilt by Dauid; or (if hee would rather inſiſt in Sauls houſe) vpon the blood of Abimelech the Prieſt, and fourſcore and fiue perſons that did weare a linnen Ephod; but it pleaſed the wiſedome and iuſtice of the Almighty rather to call for the blood of the Gibeonites, though drudges of Iſrael, and a remnant of Amorites. Why this? There was a periury attending vpon this ſlaughter; It was an ancient Oath wherein the Princes of the congregation had bound themſelues (vpon Ioſhua's league) to the Gibeonites, that they would ſuffer them to liue; an oath extorted by fraud, but ſolemne, by no leſſe name, then the Lord God of Iſrael; Saul will now thus late, either not acknowledge it, or not keepe it: out of his zeale therefore to the children of Iſrael, and Iudah, he roots out ſome of the Gibeonites, whether in a zeale of reuenge of their firſt impoſture, or in a zeale of inlarging the poſſeſſions of Iſrael, or in a zeale of executing Gods charge vpon the brood of Canaanites, he that ſpared Agag whom he ſhould haue ſmitten, ſmites the Gibeonites whom he ſhould haue ſpared: Zeale and good intention is no excuſe, much leſſe a warrant for euill: God holds it an high indignity that his name ſhould be ſworne by, and violated. Length of time cannot diſpenſe with our oathes, with our vowes: The vowes and oathes of others may binde vs, how much more our owne!

There was a famine in Iſrael; a naturall man would haue aſcribed it vnto the drought; and that drought perhaps to ſome conſtellations; Dauid knowes to looke higher; and ſees a diuine hand ſcourging Iſrael for ſome great offence; and ouer-ruling thoſe ſecond cauſes to his moſt iuſt executions. Euen the moſt quick-ſighted worldling is pore-blind to ſpirituall obiects; and the weakeſt eyes of the regenerate pierce the heauens, and eſpie God in all earthly occurrences.

So well was Dauid acquainted with Gods proceedings, that he knew the remouall of the iudgement muſt begin at the ſatisfaction of the wronged. At once therefore doth he pray vnto God, and treat with the Gibeonites; What ſhall I doe for you, and wherewith ſhall I make the atonement, that I may bleſſe the inheritance of the Lord? In vaine ſhould Dauid (though a Prophet) bleſſe Iſrael; if the Gibeonites did not bleſſe them: Iniuries done vs on earth giue vs power in heauen; The oppreſſor is in no mans mercy but his whom he hath trampled vpon.

Little did the Gibeonites thinke that God had ſo taken to heart their wrongs, that for their ſakes all Iſrael ſhould ſuffer. Euen when wee thinke not of it, is the righteous Iudge auenging our vnrighteous vexations; Our hard meaſures cannot bee hid from him, his returnes are hid from vs; It is ſufficient for vs, that God can be no more neglectiue, then ignorant of our ſufferings. It is now in the power of theſe deſpiſed Hiuites to make their owne termes with Iſrael; Neither Siluer, nor Gold will ſauour with them towards their ſatisfaction; nothing can expiate the blood of their fathers, but the blood of ſeuen ſonnes of their deceaſed perſecutor; Here was no other then a iuſt retaliation; Saul had puniſhed in them the offence of their predeceſſors; they will now reuenge Sauls ſinne in his children. The meaſure we mete vnto others, is with much equitie re-meaſured vnto our ſelues. Euery death would not content them, of Sauls ſonnes, but a curſed and ignominious, hanging on the Tree; Neither would that death content them vnleſſe their owne hands might bee the executioners; Neither would any place ſerue for the execution but Gibeah, the Court of Saul; neither would they doe any of this for the wreaking of their own fury, but for the appeaſing of Gods wrath, We will hang them vp vnto the Lord in Gibeah of Saul.

Dauid might not refuſe the condition: Hee muſt deliuer, they muſt execute: Hee chooſes out ſeuen of the ſonnes, and grand-children of Saul; That houſe had raiſed long an vniuſt perſecution againſt Dauid, now God payes it vpon anothers ſcore. Dauids loue and oath to Ionathan, preſerues lame Mephiboſheth: How much more ſhall the Father of all mercies doe good vnto the children of the faithfull, for the couenant made with their Parents?

The fiue ſonnes of Adriel the Meholathite, Dauids ancient riuall in his firſt loue which were borne to him by Merab, Sauls Daughter, and brought vp by her barren ſiſter Michol the wife of Dauid, are yeelded vp to death; Merab was after a promiſe of marriage to Dauid, vniuſtly giuen away by Saul, to Adriel; Michol ſeemes to abet the match in breeding the children; now in one act (not of Dauids ſeeking) the wrong is thus late auenged vpon Saul, Adriel, Merab, Michol, the children: It is a dangerous matter to offer iniurie to any of Gods faithfull ones; If their meekneſſe haue eaſily remitted it, their God will not paſſe it ouer without a ſeuere retribution.

Theſe fiue, together with two ſonnes of Rizpah, Sauls Concubin, are hanged vp at once before the Lord; yea and before the eyes of the World; No place but an Hill will ſerue for this execution; The acts of iuſtice as they are intended for example, ſo they ſhould be done in that eminent faſhion that may make them both moſt inſtructiue, and moſt terrifying; Vnwarrantable courſes of priuate reuenge ſeeke to hide their heads in ſecreſie; The beautifull face of Iuſtice both affects the light, and becomes it.

It was the generall charge of Gods Law that no corps ſhould remaine all night vpon the gibbet; The Almighty hath power to diſpenſe with his owne command; ſo doubtleſſe he did in this extraordinarie caſe; theſe carcaſſes did not defile, but expiate. Sorrowfull Rizpah ſpreads her a Tent of Sackcloth vpon the Rocke, for a ſad attendance vpon thoſe ſonnes of her wombe; Death might bereaue her of them, not them of her loue; This ſpectacle was not more grieuous to her, then pleaſing to God, and happy to Iſrael. Now the clouds drop fatneſſe, and the earth runs forth into plenty. The Gibeonites art ſatisfied, God reconciled, Iſrael relieued.

How bleſſed a thing it is for any Nation that iuſtice is vnpartially executed euen vpon the mighty. A few drops of blood haue procured large ſhowers from Heauen. A few carcaſſes are a rich compoſt to the earth; The drought and dearth remoue away with the breath of thoſe pledges of the offender: Iudgements cannot tyrannize where iuſtice raignes: as contrarily, there can be no peace where blood cryes vnheard, vnregarded.

The numbring of the people.

ISrael was growne wanton and mutinous: God puls them downe firſt by the ſword, then by famine, now by peſtilence: Oh the wondrous, & yet iuſt wayes of the Almightie! Becauſe Iſrael hath ſinned, therefore Dauid ſhall ſinne, that Iſrael may be puniſhed: Becauſe God is angry with Iſrael, therefore Dauid ſhall anger him more, and ſtrike himſelfe in Iſrael, and Iſrael through himſelfe.

The ſpirit of God elſewhere aſcribes this motion to Satan, which here it attributes to God: Both had their hand in the worke; God by permiſſion, Satan by ſuggeſtion; God as a Iudge, Satan as an enemy: God as in a iuſt puniſhment for ſinne; Satan as in an act of ſinne: God in a wiſe ordination of it to good; Satan in a malicious intent of confuſion. Thus at once God moued, and Satan moued: Neither is it any excuſe to Satan or Dauid, that God moued: neither is it any blemiſh to God, that Satan moued: The rulers ſinne is a puniſhment to a wicked people: though they had many ſinnes of their owne, whereon God might haue grounded a Iudgment, yet as before he had puniſht them with dearth for Sauls ſinne, ſo now hee will not puniſh them with plague, but for Dauids ſinne: If God were not angry with a people, hee would not giue vp their gouernous to ſuch euils as whereby he is prouoked to vengeance; and if their gouernours be thus giuen vp, the people cannot be ſafe: The body drownes not whiles the head is aboue the water; when that once ſinkes, death is neere: Iuſtly therefore are we charged to make prayers and ſupplications, as for all, ſo eſpecially for thoſe that are in eminent authoritie; when we pray for our ſelues, we pray not alwayes for them, but we cannot pray for them, and not pray for our ſelues; the publique weale is not compriſed in the priuate, but the priuate in the publique.

What then was Dauids ſinne? He will needs haue Iſrael and Iudah numbred: Surely there is no malignity in numbers; Neither is it vnfit for a Prince to know his owne ſtrength; this is not the firſt time that Iſrael hath gone vnder a reckoning: The act offends not, but the miſ-affection; The ſame thing had bin commendably done out of a Princely prouidence, which now through the curioſitie, pride, miſ-confidence of the doer, proues hainouſly vicious; Thoſe actions which are in themſelues indifferent, receiue either their life, or their bane from the intentions of the agent: Moſes numbreth the people with thankes, Dauid with diſpleaſure: Thoſe ſinnes which carie the ſmootheſt foreheads, and haue the moſt honeſt apperances, may more prouoke the wrath of God, then thoſe which beare the moſt abomination in their faces. How many thouſand wickedneſſes paſſed through the hands of Iſrael, which wee men would rather haue branded out for iudgement, then this of Dauids? The righteous Iudge of the world cenſures ſinnes, not by their ill lookes, but by their foule hearts.

Who can but wonder to ſee Ioab the Saint, and Dauid the treſpaſſer? No Prophet could ſpeake better then that man of blood; The Lord thy God increaſe the people an hundred fold more then they be, and that the eyes of my Lord the King may ſee it; but why doth my Lord the King deſire this thing? There is no man ſo lewd as not to be ſomtimes in good moods, as not to diſlike ſome euill: contrarily no man on earth can be ſo holy, as not ſometimes to ouerlaſh: It were pittie that either Ioab or Dauid ſhould be tryed by euery act; How commonly haue we ſeene thoſe men ready to giue good aduice to others for the auoiding of ſome ſins, who in more groſſe outrages haue not had grace to counſell their owne hearts? The ſame man that had deſerued death from Dauid for his treacherous crueltie, diſſwades Dauid from an act that caried but a ſuſpition of euill; It is not ſo much to be regarded who it is that admoniſheth vs, as what hee brings; Good counſell is neuer the worſe for the foule cariage; there are ſome diſhes that we may eate euen from ſluttiſh hands.

The purpoſe of ſinne in a faithfull man is odious, much more the reſolution: Notwithſtanding Ioabs diſcreet admonition Dauid will hold on his courſe; and will know the number of the people, onely that he may know it; Ioab and the Captaines addreſſe themſelues to the worke: In things which are not in themſelues euill, it is not for ſubiects to diſpute but to obey; That which authority may ſinne in commanding, is done of the inferiour, not with ſafety onely, but with praiſe. Nine moneths and twenty dayes is this generall muſter in hand; at laſt the number is brought in: Iſrael is found eight hundred thouſand ſtrong, Iudah fiue hundred thouſand; the ordinary companies which ſerued by courſe for the roiall guard (foure and twenty thouſand each moneth) needed not be reckoned; the addition of them with their ſeuerall Captaines raiſes the ſumme of Iſrael to the rate of eleuen hundred thouſand. A power able to puffe vp a carnall heart; but how can an heart that is more then fleſh truſt to an arme of fleſh? Oh holy Dauid whither hath a glorious vanity tranſported thee? Thou which once didſt ſing ſo ſweetly, Put not your truſt in Princes, nor in the ſonne of man, for there is no helpe in him. His breath departeth, and hee returneth to his earth, then his thoughts periſh. Bleſſed is he that hath the God of Iacob for his helpe, whoſe hope is in the Lord his God; How canſt thou now ſtoope to ſo vnſafe and vnworthy a confidence?

As ſome ſtomackfull horſe that will not be ſtopt in his career with the ſharpeſt bit; but runnes on headily till he come to ſome wall, or ditch, and there ſtands ſtill and trembles; ſo did Dauid; All the diſſwaſions of Ioab could not reſtraine him from his intended courſe; almoſt ten moneths doth hee runne on impetuouſly, in a way of his owne, rough and dangerous, at laſt his heart ſmites him; the conſcience of his offence, and the feare of iudgement haue fetcht him vpon his knees, O Lord I haue ſinned exceedingly in that I haue done; therefore now, Lord, I beſeech thee take away the treſpaſſe of thy ſeruant, for I haue done very fooliſhly. It is poſſible for a ſinne not to bait onely, but to ſoiourne in the holieſt ſoule: but though it ſoiourne there as a ſtranger, it ſhall not dwell there as an owner; the renewed heart after ſome rouings of errour will once (ere ouerlong) returne home to it ſelfe, and fall out with that ill guide, wherewith it was miſled, and with it ſelfe for being miſled; and now it is reſolued into teares, and breaths forth nothing but ſighs, and confeſſions and deprecations.

Here needed no Nathan by a parabolicall circumlocution to fetch in Dauid to a ſight and acknowledgment of his ſinne; the heart of the penitent ſupplyed the Prophet; no others tongue could ſmite him ſo deepe as his owne thoughts: But though his reines chaſtiſed him in the night, yet his Seer ſcourges him in the morning, Thus ſaith the Lord, I offer thee three things, chooſe thee which of them I ſhall doe vnto thee. But what ſhall we ſay to this? When vpon the Prophets reproofe for an adultery cloked with murder, Dauid did but ſay, I haue ſinned, it was preſently returned, God hath put away thy ſinne; neither did any ſmart follow, but the death of a miſ-begotten infant; & now when hee voluntarily reproued himſelfe for but a needleſſe muſter, and ſought for pardon vnbiddē with great humiliation, God ſends him the three terrible ſcourges, Famine, Sword, or Peſtilence; that he may chooſe with which of them he had rather to bleed, he ſhall haue the fauour of an election, not of a remiſſion. God is more angred with a ſpirituall, and immediate affront offered to his Maieſtie, in our pride, and falſe confidence in earthly things, then with a fleſhly crime though hainouſly ſeconded.

It was an hard and woefull choiſe; of three yeeres famine added to three fore-paſt; or of three moneths flight from the ſword of an enemy, or three dayes peſtilence; The Almighty that had fore-determined his iudgement, referres it to Dauids will as fully, as if it were vtterly vndetermined; God hath reſolued, yet Dauid may chooſe; That infinite wiſdome hath foreſeene the very will of his creature; which whiles it freely inclines it ſelfe to what it had rather, vnwittingly wils that which was fore-appointed in heauen.

We doe well beleeue thee, O Dauid, that thou wert in a wonderfull ſtrait; this very libertie is no other then fetters; Thou needſt not haue famine, thou needſt not haue the ſword, thou needſt not haue peſtilence; one of them thou muſt haue; There is miſery in all, there is miſery in any; thou and thy people can dye but once; and once they muſt dye, either by famine, warre, or peſtilence. Oh God, how vainely doe we hope to paſſe ouer our ſinnes with impunity, when all the fauour that Dauid and Iſrael can receiue is to chooſe their bane?

Yet behold, neither ſinnes, nor threats, nor feares can bereaue a true penitent of his faith, Let vs fall now into the hands of the Lord, for his mercies are great. There can be no euill of puniſhment wherein God hath not an hand; their could be no famine, no ſword without him, but ſome euils are more immediate from a diuine ſtroke; ſuch was that plague into which Dauid is vnwillingly willing to fall: He had his choyce of dayes, months, yeares in the ſame number; and though the ſhortneſſe of time prefixed to the threatned peſtilence might ſeeme to offer ſome aduantage for the leading of his election, yet God meant (and Dauid knew it) herein to proportion the difference of time to the violence of the plague; neither ſhould any fewer periſh by ſo few dayes peſtilence, then by ſo many yeares famine: The wealthieſt might auoid the dearth, the ſwifteſt might runne away from the ſword; no man could promiſe himſelfe ſafety from that peſtilence: In likelihood Gods Angell would rather ſtrike the moſt guilty; How euer therefore Dauid might well looke to be inwrapped in the common deſtruction; yet he rather chooſeth to fall into that mercy which hee had abuſed, and to ſuffer from that iuſtice which he had prouoked; Let vs now fall into the hands of the Lord.

Humble confeſſions, and deuout penance cannot alwayes auert temporall iudgements; Gods Angell is abroad, and within that ſhort compaſſe of time ſweepes away ſeuenty thouſand Iſraelites; Dauid was proud of the number of his ſubiects, now they are abated; that he may ſee cauſe of humiliation in the matter of his glory; In what we haue offended, we commonly ſmart: Theſe thouſands of Iſrael were not ſo innocent, that they ſhould onely periſh for Dauids ſinne: Their ſinnes were the motiues both of this ſinne, and puniſhment; beſides the reſpect of Dauids offence, they die for themſelues.

It was no ordinarie peſtilence that was thus ſuddenly and vniuerſally mortall; Common eyes ſaw the botch, and the markes, ſaw not the Angell, Dauids clearer ſight hath eſpyed him (after that killing peragration through the Tribes of Iſrael) ſhaking his ſword ouer Ieruſalem, and houering ouer Mount Sion; and now hee who doubtleſſe had ſpent thoſe three diſmall dayes in the ſaddeſt contrition, humbly caſts himſelfe downe at the feet of the auenger, and layes himſelfe ready for the fatall ſtroke of iuſtice; It was more terrour that God intended in the viſible ſhape of his Angell, and deeper humiliation; and what hee meant he wrought; Neuer ſoule could be more deiected, more anguiſhed with the ſenſe of a iudgement; in the bitterneſſe whereof hee cryes out, Behold I haue ſinned, yea I haue done wickedly; But theſe Sheepe what haue they done? Let thine hand, I pray thee, be againſt me, and againſt my fathers houſe. The better any man is, the more ſenſible he is of his owne wretchedneſſe: Many of thoſe Sheepe were Wolues to Dauid; What had they done? They had done that which was the occaſion of Dauids ſinne, and the cauſe of their owne puniſhment; But that gracious penitent knew his owne ſinne, he knew not theirs; and therefore can ſay, I haue ſinned, What haue they done? It is ſafe accuſing, where we may bee boldeſt, and are beſt acquainted our ſelues.

Oh the admirable charitie of Dauid, that would haue ingroſſed the plague to himſelfe, and his houſe, from the reſt of Iſrael; and ſues to interpoſe himſelfe betwixt his people and the vengeance; He that had put himſelfe vpon the pawes of the Beare, and Lyon, for the reſcue of his Sheepe, will now caſt himſelfe vpon the ſword of the Angell, for the preſeruation of Iſrael: There was hope in thoſe conflicts, in this yeeldance there could be nothing but death. Thus didſt thou, O ſonne of Dauid, the true and great Shepheard of thy Church, offer thy ſelfe to death for them who had their hands in thy blood; who both procured thy death and deſerued their owne. Here he offered himſelfe that had ſinned for thoſe whom he profeſſed to haue not done euill; thou that didſt no ſinne, vouchſafedſt to offer thy ſelfe for vs that were all ſinne; Hee offered and eſcaped, thou offeredſt, and diedſt; and by thy death we liue, and are freed from euerlaſting deſtruction.

But O Father of all mercies, how little pleaſure doeſt thou take in the blood of ſinners? it was thine owne pitie that inhibited the Deſtroyer: Ere Dauid could ſee the Angell thou hadſt reſtrayned him; It is ſufficient, hold now thy hand: If thy compaſſion did not both withhold and abridge thy iudgements, what place were there for vs out of hell?

How eaſie and iuſt had it beene for God to haue made the ſhutting vp of that third euening red with blood? his goodneſſe repents of the ſlaughter; and cals for that Sacrifice wherewith he will be appeaſed: An Altar muſt be built in the threſhing floore of Araunah the Iebuſite; Lo, in that very Hill where the Angell held the ſword of Abraham from killing his Sonne, doth God now hold the Sword of the Angel from killing his people; Vpon this very ground ſhall the Temple after, ſtand; here ſhall be the holy Altar, which ſhall ſend vp the acceptable oblations of Gods people in ſucceeding generations.

O God, what was the threſhing-floore of a Iebuſite to thee aboue all other ſoiles? What vertue, what mirit was in this earth? As in places, ſo in perſons, it is not to be heeded what they are, but what thou wilt; That is worthieſt which thou pleaſeſt to accept.

Rich and bountifull Araunah is ready to meete Dauid in ſo holy a motion; and munificently offers his Sion for the place, his Oxen for the Sacrifice, his Carts, & Ploughs, and other Vtenſils of his Husbandry for the wood: Two franke hearts are well met; Dauid would buy, Araunah would giue; The Iebuſite would not ſell, Dauid will not take: Since it was for God, and to Dauid, Araunah is loth to bargaine: Since it was for God, Dauid wiſheth to pay deare, I will not offer burnt-offerings to the Lord my God, of that which doth coſt me nothing: Heroicall ſpirits doe well become eminent perſons; He that knew it was better to giue then to receiue, would not receiue but giue: There can be no deuotion in a niggardly heart: As vnto dainty palates, ſo to the Godly ſoule, that taſts ſweeteſt, that coſts moſt: Nothing is deare enough for the Creator of all things. It is an heartleſſe piety of thoſe baſe-minded Chriſtians, that care onely to ſerue God good cheape.

TO MY WORTHILY MVCH HONOVRED FRIEND, SIR HENRY MILDMAY Knight, Maſter of the Iewell-houſe;

All Grace and Peace.

SIR,

Beſides all priuate obligations, your very name challengeth from mee all due ſeruices of loue, and honour; If I haue receiued mercy to beare any fruit, next vnder heauen, I may thanke the ſtocke wherein I was ymped; which was ſet by no other then the happy hand of your Right Honorable Grandfather; How haue I ſo long forborne the publike Teſtimony of my iuſt gratulations, and thankfull reſpects to ſo true an heyre of his noble Vertues. Pardon me that I pay this debt ſo late; and accept of this parcell of my well-meant labours: wherein you ſhall ſee Salomon both in his riſing and ſetting; his riſing hopefull and glorious, his declination fearfull: You ſhall ſee the proofes of his earely graces; of mercy, in ſparing Adonijah, and Abiathar; of iuſtice, in puniſhing that riuall of his, with Ioab, and Shimei : of wiſedome, in his award betwixt the two Harlots, and the adminiſtration of his Court, and State: of pietie, in building and hallowing the Temple; all daſhed in his fall, repayred in his repentance. I haue no cauſe to miſdoubt eyther the acceptation or vſe of theſe mine high pitched thoughts: which, together with your ſelfe, and your worthy and vertuous Lady, I humbly commend to the care and bleſsing of the Higheſt; who am bound by your worth and merits to be euer

Yours ſyncerely and thankfully deuoted in all obſeruance,

IOS. HALL.

THE SEVENTEENTH BOOKE.

ADONIJAH Defeated.

DAVID had not ſo carefully husbanded his yeeres, as to maintaine a vigorous age; he was therfore what through warres, what with ſorrowes, what with ſickneſſe, decrepit betimes; By that time hee was Seuentie yeeres old, his naturall heat was ſo waſted, that his clothes could not warme him; how many haue wee knowne of more ſtrength, at more age? The holieſt ſoule dwels not in an impregnable fort; If the reuenging Angel ſpared Dauid, yet age and death will not ſpare him; Neither his new altar, nor his coſtly ſacrifice can bee of force againſt decay of nature; Nothing but death can preuent the weakeneſſes of age.

None can blame a people if when they haue a good King, they are deſirous to hold him; Dauids ſeruants and ſubiects haue commended vnto his bed a fayre young Virgin; not for the heat of luſt, but of life; that by this meanes they might make an outward ſupply of fuell for that vitall fire which was well-neere extinguiſhed with age.

As it is in the market, or the ſtage, ſo it is in our life; One goes in, another comes out, when Dauid was withering, Adonijah was in his bloſſome; That ſonne, as hee was next to Abſalom both in the beautie of his body, and the time of his birth, ſo was he too like him in practice; He alſo taking aduantage of his fathers infirmitie, will bee caruing himſelfe of the Kingdome of Iſrael; That he might no whit vary from his patterne, he gets him alſo Chariots and Horſmen, and fifty men to runne before him: Theſe two Abſalom and Adonijah were the darlings of their father; Their father had not diſpleaſed them from their childhood, therefore they both diſpleaſed him in his age; Thoſe children had need to bee very gracious, that are not marred with pampering; It is more then God owes vs, if we receiue comfort in thoſe children whom wee haue ouer-loued; The indulgence of parents at laſt payes them home in croſſes.

It is true that Adonijah was Dauids eldeſt ſon now remaining, and therefore might ſeeme to challenge the iuſteſt title to the Crowne; But the Kingdome of Iſrael (in ſo late an erection) had not yet knowne the right of ſucceſſion: God himſelfe that had ordayned the gouernment, was as yet the immediate elector; He fetcht Saul from among the ſtuffe, and Dauid from the Sheepfold; and had now appointed Salomon from the ferule, to the Scepter.

And if Adonijah (which is vnlike) had not knowne this, yet it had beene his part to haue taken his father with him in this claime of his ſucceſſion; and not ſo to preuent a brother, that he ſhould ſhoulder out a father; and not ſo violently to preoccupate the throne, that he ſhould rather be a rebell, then an heire.

As Abſalom, ſo Adonijah wants not furtherers in this vſurpation, whether ſpirituall, or temporall; Ioab the Generall, and Abiathar the Prieſt giue both counſell, and aid to ſo vnſeaſonable a challenge; Theſe two had beene firme to Dauid in all his troubles, in all inſurrections; yet now finding him faſtened to the bed of age, and death, they ſhew themſelues thus ſlipperie in the looſe: Outward happineſſe and friendſhip are not knowne till our laſt act; in the impotencie of either our reuenge or recompence, it will eaſily appeare who loued vs for our ſelues, who for their owne ends.

Had not Adonijah knowne that Salomon was deſigned to the kingdome both by God, and Dauid, hee had neuer inuited all the reſt of the Kings ſonnes, his brethren, and left out Salomon; who was otherwiſe the moſt vnlikely to haue beene his riuall in his honour; all the reſt were elder then hee; and might therefore haue had more pretence for their competition; Doubtleſſe the Court of Iſrael could not but know, that immediately vpon the birth of Salomon, God ſent him by Nathan the Prophet, a name and meſſage of loue; neither was it for nothing that God called him Iedidiah; and fore-promiſed him the honor of building an houſe to his Name; and (in returne of ſo glorious a ſeruice) the eſtabliſhment of the throne of his Kingdome ouer Iſrael for euer: Notwithſtanding all which, Adonijah backed by the ſtrength of a Ioab, and the grauitie of an Abiathar, will vnderworke Salomon, and iuſtle into the not-yet-vacant ſeat of his father Dauid. Vaine men, whiles like proud and yet brittle clay, they will bee knocking their ſides againſt the ſolid, and eternall decree of God, breake themſelues in peeces.

I doe not finde that Adonijah ſent any meſſage of threats or vnkindneſſe to Zadock the Prieſt, or Nathan the Prophet, or Benaiah the ſonne of Iehoiada, and the other Worthies; onely he inuited them not to his feaſt with the Kings ſonnes, and ſeruants; Sometimes a very omiſſion is an affront, and a menace. They well knew that ſince they were not called as gueſts, they were counted as enemies; Ceremonies of courteſie, though they bee in themſelues ſlieght, and arbitrarie, yet the neglect of them in ſome caſes may vndergoe a dangerous conſtruction.

Nathan was the man by whom God had ſent that errand of grace to Dauid, concerning Salomon, aſſuring him both to raigne, and proſper; yet now when Adonijahs plot was thus on foot, he doth not ſit ſtill and depend vpon the iſſue of Gods decree, but he beſtirres him in the buſineſſe, and conſults with Bathſheba how at once to ſaue their liues, and to aduance Salomon, and defeat Adonijah; Gods pre-determination includes the meanes as well as the end; the ſame prouidence that had ordained a Crowne to Salomon, a repulſe to Adonijah, preſeruation to Bathſheba and Nathan, had fore-appointed the wiſe and induſtrious indeauours of the Prophet to bring about his iuſt, and holy purpoſes; If wee would not haue God wanting to vs, wee muſt not bee wanting to our ſelues: Euen when we know what God hath meant to vs, wee may not be negligent.

The Prophets of God did not look for reuelation in all their affayres, in ſomethings they were left to the counſell of their owne hearts; the policie of Nathan was of vſe as well as his prophecie: that alone hath turned the ſtreame into the right channell: Nothing could be more wiſely contriued then the ſending in of Bathſheba to Dauid, with ſo ſeaſonable and forceable an expoſtulation, and the ſeconding of hers with his owne.

Though luſt were dead in Dauid, yet the reſpects of his old matrimoniall loue liued ſtill; the very preſence of Bathſheba pleaded ſtrongly; but her ſpeech more; the time was, when his affection offended in exceſſe towards her being then anothers, he cannot now neglect her being his owne; and if either his age, or the remorſe of his old offence ſhould haue ſet him off, yet ſhee knew his oath was ſure; My Lord thou ſwareſt by the Lord thy God vnto thine handmaid, ſaying, Aſſuredly Salomon thy ſonne ſhall raigne after me, and he ſhall ſit vpon my throne; His word had beene firme, but his oath was inuiolable; wee are engaged if wee haue promiſed, but if we haue ſworne, wee are bound.

Neither heauen nor earth hath any gieues for that man that can ſhake off the fetters of an oath; for he cares not for that God whom hee dares inuoke to a falſhood; and he that cares not for God will not care for man.

Ere Bathſheba can bee ouer the threſhold, Nathan (vpon compact) is knocking at the doore. Gods Prophet was neuer but welcome to the bed-chamber of King Dauid: In a ſeeming ſtrangeneſſe hee fals vpon the ſame ſuit, vpon the ſame complaint with Bathſheba: Honeſt policies doe not miſ-become the holieſt Prophets; Shee might ſeeme to ſpeake as a woman, as a mother, out of paſſion; the word of a Prophet could not be miſ-doubted: He therefore that had formerly brought to Dauid that chiding and bloody meſſage concerning Bathſheba, comes now to Dauid, to ſue for the life and honour of Bathſheba; and he that was ſent from God (to Dauid) to bring the newes of a gracious promiſe of fauour vnto Salomon, comes now to challenge the execution of it from the hands of a father; and hee whoſe place freed him from ſuſpition of a faction, complaines of the inſolent demeanure and proclamation of Adonijah; what he began with an humble obeyſance, ſhutting vp in a lowly and louing expoſtulation, Is this thing done by my Lord the King, and thou haſt not ſhewed thy ſeruant who ſhould ſit on the Throne of my Lord the King after him? As Nathan was of Gods Counſell vnto Dauid, ſo was he of Dauids Counſell both to God, and the State; As God therefore vpon all occaſions told Nathan what he meant to doe with Dauid, ſo had Dauid wont to tell Nathan what he meant to doe in his holy and moſt important ciuill affaires. There are caſes wherein it is not vnfit for Gods Prophets to meddle with matters of State: It is no diſparagement to religious Princes to impart their counſels vnto them, who can requite them with the counſels of God.

That wood which a ſingle iron could not riue, is ſoone ſplitted with a double wedge; The ſeaſonable importunitie of Bathſheba and Nathan, thus ſeconding each other, hath ſo wrought vpon Dauid, that now his loue to Adonijah giues place to indignation, nature to an holy fidelitie; and now he renewes his ancient oath to Bathſheba with a paſſionate ſolemnitie: As the Lord liueth, who hath redeemed my ſoule out of all aduerſitie, euen as I ſware vnto thee by the Lord God of Iſrael, ſaying, Aſſuredly Salomon thy ſonne ſhall raigne after mee, and he ſhall ſit vpon my throne in my ſtead; ſo will I certainly doe this day: In the decay of Dauids bodie I finde not his intellectiue powers any whit impaired: As one therefore that from his bed could with a perfect (if weake) hand ſtere the gouernment of Iſrael; hee giues wiſe and full directions for the inauguration of Salomon; Zadock the Prieſt, and Nathan the Prophet, and Benaiah the Captaine receiue his graue and Princely charge for the cariage of that ſo weightie a buſineſſe. They are commanded to take with them the royall guard, to ſet Salomon vpon his fathers Mule, to carie him downe in ſtate to Gihon, to anoint him with the holy oyle of the Tabernacle, to ſound the trumpets and prolaime him in the ſtreets, to bring him backe with triumph and magnificence to the Court, and to ſet him in the royall Throne with all the due ceremonies of Coronation.

How pleaſing was this command to them who in Salomons glory ſaw their owne ſafety? Benaiah applauds it, and not fearing a fathers enuie, in Dauids preſence wiſheth Salomons throne exalted aboue his; The people are rauiſhed with the ioy of ſo hopefull a ſucceſſion; and breake the earth, and fill the heauen with the noyſe of their Muſicke and ſhouting.

Salomons gueſts had now at laſt better cheare then Adonijahs, whoſe feaſt (as all wicked mens) ended in horror; no ſooner are their bellies full of meat, then their eares are full of the ſound of thoſe trumpets, which at once proclaime Salomons triumph, and their confuſion; Euer after the meale is ended comes the reckoning; God could as eaſily haue preuented this iollitie as marred it: But hee willingly ſuffers vaine men to pleaſe themſelues for the time in the conceited ſucceſſe of their owne proiects, that afterwards their diſappointment may be ſo much the more grieuous; No doubt, at this feaſt there was many a health drunken to Adonijah, many a confident boaſt of their proſpering deſigne; many a ſcorne of the deſpiſed faction of Salomon; & now for their laſt diſh is ſerued vp aſtoniſhment, and fearefull expectation of a iuſt reuenge. Ionathan the ſonne of Abiathar the Prieſt, brings the newes of Salomons ſolemne and ioyfull enthronization; now all hearts are cold, all faces pale; and euery man hath but life enough to runne away; How ſuddenly is this brauing troupe diſperſed? Adonijah their new Prince flyes to the hornes of the Altar, as diſtruſting all hopes of life, ſaue the Sanctity of the place, and the mercy of his riuall.

So doth the wiſe and iuſt God befoole proud and inſolent ſinners in thoſe ſecret plots, wherein they hope to vndermine the true ſonne of Dauid, the Prince of Peace; he ſuffers them to lay their heads together, and to feaſt themſelues in a iocund ſecuritie, and promiſe of ſucceſſe; at laſt, when they are at the height of their ioyes, and hopes, he confounds all their deuices, and layes them open to the ſcorne of the world, and to the anguiſh of their owne guilty hearts.

DAVIDS end, and SALOMONS beginning.

IT well became Salomon to begin his Raigne in peace. Adonijah receiues pardon vpon his good behauiour, and findes the Throne of Salomon, as ſafe as the Altar. Dauid liues to ſee a wiſe ſonne warme in his ſeat; and now he that had yeelded to ſucceſſion, yeelds to nature. Many good counſels had Dauid giuen his Heire; now hee ſummes them vp in his end. Dying words are wont to bee weightieſt; The Soule when it is entring into glory breathes nothing but diuine. I goe the way of all the earth: How well is that Princely heart content to ſubſcribe to the conditions of humane mortalitie; as one that knew Soueraigntie doth not reach to the affayres of nature? Though a King, hee neither expects, nor deſires an immunitie from diſſolution; making not account to goe in any other then the common track, to the vniuerſall home of mankind, the houſe of age? Whither ſhould earth but to earth? and why ſhould we grudge to doe that, which all doe? Be thou ſtrong therfore, and ſhew thy ſelfe a man; Euen when his ſpirit was going out, hee puts ſpirit into his Sonne; Age puts life into youth, and the dying animates the vigorous. He had well found that ſtrength was requiſite to gouernment, that he had need to be no leſſe then a man that ſhould rule ouer men; If greatneſſe ſhould neuer receiue any oppoſition, yet thoſe worlds of cares, and buſineſſes that attend the chayre of State, are able to ouer-lay any meane powers. A weake man may obey, none but the ſtrong can gouerne. Graceleſſe courage were but the whetſtone of tyranny; Take heede therefore to the charge of the Lord thy God, to walke in his wayes, and to keepe his Statutes. The beſt legacie that Dauid bequeathes to his heire, is the care of pietie; himſelfe had found the ſweeteneſſe of a good conſcience, and now he commends it to his ſucceſſor. If there bee any thing that in our deſires of the proſperous condition of our children, takes place of goodneſſe, our hearts are not vpright. Here was the father a King, charging the King his ſonne to keepe the Statures tutes of the King of Kings; as one that knew greatneſſe could neither exempt from obedience, nor priuiledge ſinne; as one that knew the laſt deuiation in the greateſt and higheſt Orbe, is both moſt ſenſible, and moſt dangerous: Neither would he haue his ſonne to looke for any proſperity, ſaue onely from well-doing: That happineſſe is built vpon ſand or Ice, which is raiſed vpon any foundation beſides vertue. If Salomon were wiſe, Dauid was good; and if old Salomon had well remembred the counſell of old Dauid, he had not ſo foully miſ-caried.

After the precepts of pietie, follow thoſe of iuſtice, diſtributing in a due recompence, as reuenge to Ioab and Shimei, ſo fauour to the houſe of Barzillai. The bloodineſſe of Ioab had laien long vpon Dauids heart; the hideous noyſe of thoſe treacherous murders, as it had pierced heauen, ſo it ſtill filled the eares of Dauid; He could abhorre the villanie, though hee could not reuenge it; What hee cannot pay, hee will owe, and approue himſelfe at laſt a faithfull debtor: Now he will defray it by the hand of Salomon. The ſlaughter was of Abner, and Amaſa, Dauid appropriates it; Thou knoweſt what Ioab did to me: The Soueraigne is ſmitten in the Subiect; Neither is it other then iuſt, that the arraignment of meane malefactors runs in the ſtyle of wrong to the Kings Crowne and dignitie. How much more doſt thou, O Sonne of Dauid, take to thy ſelfe thoſe inſolencies which are done to thy pooreſt ſubiects, ſeruants, ſonnes, members here vpon earth? No Saul can touch a Chriſtian here below, but thou feeleſt it in heauen, and complaineſt.

But what ſhall we thinke of this? Dauid was a man of Warre, Salomon a King of Peace; yet Dauid referrs this reuenge to Salomon: How iuſt it was that he who ſhed the blood of warre in peace, and put the blood of war vpon his girdle that was about his loynes, ſhould haue his blood ſhed in peace, by a Prince of peace; Peace is fitteſt to rectifie the out-rages of Warre: Or whether is not this done in type of that diuine adminiſtration, wherein thou, O Father of heauen, haſt committed all iudgement vnto thine eternall Sonne? Thou who couldſt immediately either plague, or abſolue ſinners, wilt doe neither but by the hand of a Mediator.

Salomon learned betimes what his ripeneſſe taught afterwards, Take away the wicked from the King, and his Throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed in righteouſneſſe; Cruell Ioab, and malicious Shimei, muſt be therefore vpon the firſt opportunity remoued, The one lay open to preſent iuſtice, for abetting the conſpiracy of Adonijah; neither needes the help of time for a new aduantage; The other went vnder the protection of an oath from Dauid, and therefore muſt be fetcht in vpon a new challenge. The hoare head of both muſt bee brought to the graue with blood, elſe Dauids head could not bee brought to his graue in peace: Due puniſhment of malefactors is the debt of authority: If that holy King haue runne into arerages; yet as one that hates and feares to breake the banke, hee giues order to his pay-maſter; It ſhall be defrayed, if not by him, yet for him.

Generous natures cannot be vnthankfull: Barzillai had ſhewed Dauid ſome kindneſſe in his extremity; and now the good man will haue poſterity to inherite the thanks. How much more bountifull is the Father of mercies, in the remuneration of our poore vnworthy ſeruices? Euen ſucceſſions of generations ſhall fare the better for one good parent.

The dying words and thoughts of the man after Gods owne heart did not confine themſelues to the ſtraites of theſe particular charges, but inlarged themſelues to the care of Gods publike ſeruice; As good men are beſt at laſt, Dauid did neuer ſo buſily, and carefully marſhall the affaires of God, as when he was fixed to the bed of his age and death. Then did he lode his ſonne Salomon with the charge of building the houſe of God; then did hee lay before the eyes of his ſonne the modell and patterne of that whole ſacred worke, whereof if Salomon bare the name, yet Dauid no leſſe merits it: He now giues the platforme of the Courts, and buildings; Hee giues the gold and ſiluer for that holy vſe; an hundred thouſand talents of gold, a thouſand thouſand talents of ſiluer; beſides braſſe and yron paſſing weight; Hee weighes out thoſe precious metalls for their ſeuerall deſignements; Euery future veſſell is laid out already in his poiſe, if not in his forme; Hee excites the Princes of Iſrael to their aſſiſtance, in ſo high a worke; He takes notice of their bountifull offerings; He numbers vp the Leuites for the publique ſeruices, and ſets them their taskes. Hee appoints the Singers, and other Muſitians to their ſtations; the Porters to the Gates that ſhould be; And now when he hath ſet all things in a deſired order, and forwardneſſe, he ſhuts vp with a zealous bleſſing of his Salomon, and his people, and ſleepes with his fathers. Oh bleſſed ſoule, how quiet a poſſeſſion haſt thou now taken (after ſo many tumults) of a better Crowne! Thou that haſt prepared all things for the houſe of thy God, how happily art thou now welcomed to that houſe of his, not made with hands, eternall in the heauens! Who now ſhall enuie vnto good Princes the honour of ouerſeeing the buſineſſes of God, and his Church; when Dauid was thus punctuall in theſe diuine prouiſions? What feare can bee of vſurpation where they haue ſo glorious a precedent?

Now is Salomon the ſecond time crowned King of Iſrael, and now in his owne right (as formerly in his fathers) ſits peaceably vpon the Throne of the Lord; His awe and power come on faſter then his yeeres; Enuie and ambition where it is once kindled, may ſooner be hid in the aſhes, then quite put out; Adonijah yet hangs after his old hopes; He remembers how ſweet he found the name of a King; and now hath laid a new plot for the ſetting vp of his crackt title: He would make the bed a ſtep to the throne: His old complices are ſure enough: His part would gather much ſtrength, if he might inioy Abiſhag the relect of his father, to wife; If it were not the Iewiſh faſhion (as is pretended) that a Kings widow ſhould mary none but a King, yet certainly the power both of the alliance, and friendſhip of a Queene muſt needes not a little aduance his purpoſe: The crafty riuall dare not either moue the ſuit to Salomon, or effect the mariage without him; but would cunningly vndermine the ſonne by the ſuit of that mother, whoſe ſuit had vndermined him. The weaker veſſells are commonly vſed in the moſt dangerous ſuggeſtions of euill.

Bathſheba was ſo wiſe a woman that ſome of her counſels are canonized for diuine, yet ſhe ſaw not the depth of this drift of Adonijah; therefore ſhe both entertaines the ſuit, and moues it: But what euer were the intent of the ſuitor, could ſhe chooſe but ſee the vnlawfulneſſe of ſo inceſtuous a match? It is not long ſince ſhee ſaw her late husband Dauid abominating the bed of thoſe his Concubines, that had beene touched by his ſonne Abſalom; and can ſhe hold it lawfull that his ſonne Adonijah ſhould climb vp to the bed of his fathers wife? Sometimes euen the beſt eyes are dimme and diſcerne not thoſe things which are obuious to weaker ſights: Or whether did not Bathſheba well ſee the fouleneſſe of the ſuit, and yet in compaſſion of Adonijahs late repulſe (wherein ſhe was the chiefe agent) and in a deſire to make him amends for the leſſe of the Kingdome, ſhe yeelds euen thus to gratifie him. It is an iniurious weakeneſſe to bee drawne vpon any by-reſpects to the furtherance of faulty ſuits, of vnlawfull actions.

No ſooner doth Bathſheba come in place, then Salomon her ſoone riſes from his chaire of State and meets her and bowes to her, and ſets her on his right hand; as not ſo remembring himſelfe to be a King, that he ſhould forget he was a ſonne. No outward dignity can take away the rights and obligations of nature; Had Bathſheba beene as meane as Salomon was mighty, ſhe had caried away this honor from a gracious ſonne: Yet for all theſe due complements Bathſheba goes away with a deniall; Reuerence ſhe ſhall haue, ſhe ſhall not haue a condeſcent.

In the acts of Magiſtracie, all regards of naturall relations muſt giue way; That which ſhe propounded as a ſmall requeſt, is now, after a generall and confuſed ingagement reiected as vnreaſonable. It were pity wee ſhould bee heard in all our ſuits. Bathſheba makes a petition againſt herſelfe, and knowes it not; her ſafetie and life depends vpon Salomons raign, yet ſhe vnwittingly moues for the aduancement of Adonijah.

Salomon was too dutifull to checke his mother, and too wiſe to yeeld to her: In vnfit ſupplications wee are moſt heard when we are repelled. Thus doth our God many times anſwer our prayers with mercifull deniall*s*: and moſt bleſſeth vs in croſſing our deſires.

Wiſe Salomon doth not find himſelfe perplexed with the ſcruple of his promiſe; he that had ſaid Aske on, for I will not ſay thee nay, can now ſware, God doe ſo to mee, and more alſo, if Adonijah haue not ſpoken this word againſt his owne life. His promiſe was according to his ſuppoſition; his ſuppoſition was of no other then of a ſuit, honeſt, reaſonable, expedient; now he holds himſelfe free from that grant, wherein there was at once both ſin and danger, No man can be intangled with generall words againſt his owne iuſt and honeſt intentions.

The policies of wicked men befoole them at laſt; this interceſſion hath vndone Adonijah, and in ſtead of the Throne haſtens his graue: The ſword of Benaiah puts an end to that dangerous riuality. Ioab and Abiathar ſtill held Champerty with Adonijah, Their hand was both in his claime of the Kingdome, and in the ſuit of Abiſhag; There are crimes wherein there are no acceſſories, ſuch is this of treaſon. Abiathar may thanke his burden that he liues; Had he not borne the Arke of the Lord before Dauid, he had not now caried his head vpon his ſhoulders; Had he not been afflicted with Dauid, he had periſhed with Adonijah; now though he were, in his owne merit, a man of death, yet he ſhall ſuruiue his partners, Get thee to Anathoth vnto thine owne fields. The Prieſthood of Abiathar, as it aggrauated his crime, ſo it ſhall preſerue his life: Such honor haue good Princes giuen to the Miniſters of the Sanctuarie, that their very coat hath beene defence enough againſt the ſword of iuſtice, how much more ſhould it be of proofe againſt the contempt of baſe perſons?

Beſides his function, reſpect is had to his ſufferings, The father and brethren of Abiathar where ſlaine for Dauids ſake, therefore for Dauids ſake Abiathar (though worthy of death) ſhall liue; He had beene now a dead man, if he had not beene formerly afflicted; Thus doth our good God deale with vs; by the rod he preuents the ſword, and therefore will not condemne vs for our ſins, becauſe we haue ſuffered. If Abiathar doe not forfait his life, yet his office he ſhall, he muſt change Ieruſalem for Anathoth, and the Prieſthood for a retired priuacie. It was fourſcore yeares agoe ſince the ſentence of iudgement was denounced againſt the houſe of Eli; now doth it come to execution; This iuſt quarrell againſt Abiathar (the laſt of that line) ſhall make good the threatned iudgement: The wickedneſſe of Elies houſe was neither purged by ſacrifice, nor obliterated by time: If God pay ſlowly, yet he payes ſure: Delay of moſt certaine puniſhment is neither any hindrance to his iuſtice, nor any comfort to our miſeries.

The Execution of IOAB, and SHIMEI.

ABiathar ſhall liue though he ſerue not; It is in the power of Princes to remit (at leaſt) thoſe puniſhments which attend the breach of humane Lawes; good reaſon they ſhould haue power to diſpence with the wrongs done to their owne perſons. The newes of Adonijahs death, and Abiathars remouall cannot but affright Ioab; who now runnes to Gibeon, and takes ſanctuary in the Tabernacle of God; all his hope of defence is in the hornes of the Altar. Fond Ioab, hadſt thou formerly ſought for counſell from the Tabernacle, thou hadſt not now needed to ſeeke to it for refuge; if thy deuotions had not beene wanting to that Altar, thou hadſt not needed it for a ſhelter: It is the faſhion of our fooliſh preſumption to looke for protection, where wee haue not cared to yeeld obedience.

Euen a Ioab clings faſt to Gods Altar in his extremity, which in his ruffe and welfare he regarded not; The worſt men would be glad to make vſe of Gods ordinances, for their aduantage; Neceſſity will driue the moſt profane and lawleſſe man to God; But what doe theſe bloody hands touching the holy Altar of God? Miſerable Ioab, what helpe canſt thou expect from that ſacred pile: Thoſe hornes that were ſprinkled with the blood of beaſts, abhorre to be touched by the blood of men, that Altar was for the expiation of ſin by blood, not for the protection of the ſin of blood. If Adonijah fled thither and eſcaped, it is murder that perſues thee more then conſpiracie; God hath no ſanctuary for a wilfull Homicide.

Yet ſuch reſpect doth Benaiah giue to that holy place, that his ſword is vnwilling to touch him that touches the Altar: Thoſe hornes ſhall put off death from the time; and giue protraction of the execution though not preſeruation of life; How ſweet is life euen to thoſe who haue been prodigall of the blood of others, that Ioab ſhifts thus to hold it but ſome few houres? Benaiah returnes with Ioabs anſwer, in ſtead of his head; Nay, but I will dy here; as not daring to vnſheath his ſword againſt a man ſheltered in Gods tabernacle, without a new commiſſion. Yong Salomon is ſo well acquainted with the Law of God, in ſuch a caſe, that he ſticks not at the ſentence: he knew that God had enacted, If a man came preſumptuouſly vpon his neighbour, to ſlay him with guile, thou ſhalt take him from mine Altar, that he may die: He knew Ioabs murders had not been more preſumptuous, the guilfull, and therefore he ſends Benaiah to take away the offender, both from God, and men, from the Altar, and the world.

No ſubiect had merited more then Ioab; When proclamation was made in Iſrael, that who euer ſhould ſmite the Iebuſites firſt, he ſhould be the Chiefe and Captaine; Ioab was the man; When Dauid built ſome part of Ieruſalem, Ioab built the reſt; ſo as Ieruſalem owes it ſelfe to Ioab, both for recouery, and reparation; No man held ſo cloſe to Dauid; no man was more intent to the weale of Iſrael, none ſo ſucceſſefull in victories; yet now is he cald to reckon for his old ſinnes, and muſt repay blood to Amaſa, and Abner: It is not in the power of all our deſerts to buy off one ſinne, either with God or man: where life is ſo deepely forfaited, it admits of no redemption.

The honeſt ſimplicity of thoſe times knew not of any infamy in the execution of iuſtice. Benaiah, who was the great Marſhall vnder Salomon, thinkes not his fingers defiled with that fatall ſtroke. It is a fooliſh niceneſſe to put more ſhame in the doing of iuſtice, then in the violating of it.

In one act Salomon hath approued himſelfe both a good Magiſtrate, and a good ſonne, fulfilling at once the will of a father and the charge of God; concluding vpon this iuſt execution, that, vpon Dauid, and vpon his ſeed, and vpon his houſe, and vpon his Throne, there ſhall be peace for euer from the Lord; and inferring, that without this there could haue beene no peace.

Blood is a reſtleſſe ſuitor, and will not leaue clamoring for iudgement, till the mouth bee ſtopped with reuenge. In this caſe fauour to the offender is cruelty to the fauourer.

Now hath Ioab paid all his arerages by the ſword of Benaiah; there is no ſuit againſt his corps; that hath the honor of a buriall fit for a Peere of Iſrael, for the neere cozen to the King. Death puts an end to all quarrells; Salomon ſtrikes off the ſkore, when God is ſatisfied; The reuenge that ſuruiues death and will not be ſhut vp in the Coffin, is barbarous, and vnbeſeeming true Iſraelites.

Onely Shimei remaines vpon the file; his courſe is next, yet ſo, as that it ſhall be in his owne liberty to haſten his end; Vpon Dauids remiſſion, Shimei dwels ſecurely in Bahurim, a town of the Tribe of Beniamin; Doubtleſſe, when he ſaw ſo round iuſtice done vpon Adonijah, and Ioab, his guilty heart could not think Salomons meſſage portended ought but his execution; and now he cannot but be well pleaſed with ſo eaſie conditions, of dwelling at Ieruſalem, and not paſſing ouer the brooke Kidron; What more delightful place could he chooſe to liue in, the that city, which was the glory to the whole earth? What more pleaſing bounds could he wiſh then the ſweet bankes of Kidron & Ieruſalem could be no priſon to him, whiles it was a Paradiſe to his betters;

and if he had a deſire to take freſh ayre, hee had the ſpace of ſix furlongs to walke from the city to the brooke, Hee could not complaine to bee ſo delectably confined; And beſides, thrice euery yeere he might bee ſure to ſee all his friends without ſtirring his foot.

Wiſe Salomon whiles he cared to ſeeme not too ſeuere an exactor of that, which his father had remitted; prudently laies inſenſible twigs for ſo foule an offender; Beſides the old grudge, no doubt Salomon ſaw cauſe to ſuſpect the fidelitie of Shimei; as a man who was euer knowne to be hollow to the houſe of Dauid; the obſcuritie of a Countrylife would eaſily afford him more ſafe opportunities of ſecret miſchiefe; Many eyes ſhall watch him in the citie; he cannot looke out vnſeene, he cannot whiſper vnheard: Vpon no other termes ſhall hee enioy his life, which the leaſt ſtraying ſhall forfait.

Shimei feeles no paine in this reſtraint; How many Nobles of Iſrael doe that for pleaſure, which he doth vpon command? Three yeers hath he liued within compaſſe; limited both by Salomons charge and his owne oath: It was ſtill in his power (notwithſtanding Dauids Caueat) to haue laid downe his hoare-head in the graue, without blood: The iuſt God infatuates thoſe whom he meanes to plague: Two of Shimeies ſeruants are fled to Gath; and now hee ſaddles his Aſſe and is gone to fetch them backe; Either (he thinkes) this word of Salomon is forgotten, or in the multitude of greater affayres, not heeded; or this ſo ſmall an occurrence will not come to his eare: Couetouſneſſe and preſumption of impunitie are the deſtruction of many a ſoule; Shimei ſeekes his ſeruants, and loſes himſelfe; How many are there who crie out of this folly, and yet imitate it: Theſe earthly things either are our ſeruants or ſhould be; how commonly doe we ſee men run out of the bounds, ſet by Gods Law, to hunt after them, till their ſoules incurre a fearefull iudgment?

Princes haue thouſands of eies & eares! If Shimei will for more ſecreſie ſaddle his own Aſſe, and take (as is like) the benefit of night, for his paſſage; his iourney cannot be hid from Salomon; How warie had thoſe men need to be which are obnoxious? Without delay is Shimei complained of, conuented, charged with violation both of the oath of God, and the iniunction of Salomon; and that all theſe might appeare to be but an occaſion of that puniſhment, whoſe cauſe was more remote, now is all that old venome laid before him, which his malice had long ſince ſpit at Gods anointed: Thou knoweſt all the wickedneſſe, whereto thine heart is priuie, that thou didſt to Dauid my father.

Had this old tallie beene ſtriken off; yet could not Shimei haue pleaded ought for his life: For, had he ſayd, Let not my Lord the King be thus mortally diſpleaſed for ſo ſmall an offence: Who euer died for paſſing ouer Kidron? What man is the worſe for my harmeleſſe iourney? It had ſoone been returned; If the act be ſmall, yet the circumſtances are deadly: The Commands of Soueraigne authoritie make the ſleighteſt duties weighty; If the iourney be harmeleſſe, yet not the diſobedience: It is not for ſubiects to poyſe the Princes charge in the ſcales of their weake conſtructions; but they muſt ſuppoſe it euer to be of ſuch importance, as is pretended by the Commander. Beſides the precept, here was a mutuall adiuration; Shimei ſwore not to goe; Salomon ſwore his death if he went; the one oath muſt be reuenged, the other muſt be kept: If Shimei were falſe in offending, Salomon will be iuſt in puniſhing. Now therefore, that which Abiſhai the ſonne of Zeruiah wiſhed to haue done in the greeneneſſe of the wound, and was repelled; after long feſtering Benaiah is commanded to doe: The ſtones that Shimei threw at Dauid ſtrucke not ſo deepe, as Benaiahs ſword; The tongue that curſed the Lords anointed hath paid the head to boot. Vengeance againſt rebels may ſleepe, it cannot die: A ſure, if late, iudgement attends thoſe that dare lift vp either the hand or tongue againſt the ſacred perſons of Gods Vice-gerents. How much leſſe will the God of heauen ſuffer vnreuenged the inſolencies, and blaſphemies againſt his owne diuine Maieſtie? It is a fearefull word, hee ſhould not be iuſt, if hee ſhould hold theſe guiltleſſe.

SALOMONS Choyce, with his iudgement vpon the two Harlots.

AFter ſo many meſſages and proofes of grace, Salomon begins doubtfully both for his match, and for his deuotion: If Pharaohs daughter were not a Proſelyte, his earely choyce was (beſides vnwarrantable) dangerous: The high places not onely ſtood, but were frequented, both by the people, and King; I doe not finde David climbing vp thoſe miſ-hallowed hills, in an affection of the varietie of Altars; Salomon doth ſo, and yet loues the Lord, and is loued of God againe: Such is the mercy of our God, that he will not ſuffer our well meant weakneſſes to bereaue vs of his fauours: he rather pities, then plagues vs for the infirmities of vpright hearts.

Gibeon was well worthy to be the chiefe, yea the onely high place; There was the allowed Altar of God, there was the Tabernacle, though (as then) ſeuered from the Arke, thither did yong Salomon goe vp; and, as deſiring to begin his raigne with God, there he offers no leſſe then a thouſand ſacrifices.

Salomon worſhips God by day; God appeares to Salomon by night; Well may we looke to enioy God, when we haue ſerued him; The night cannot but bee happie whoſe day hath beene holy.

It was no vnuſuall courſe with God to reueale himſelfe vnto his ſeruants by dreams; So did he here to Salomon; who ſaw more with his eyes ſhut, then euer they could ſee open, euen him that was inuiſible: The good King had offred vnto God a thouſand burnt ſacrifices, and now God offered him his option, Aske what I ſhall giue thee: He whoſe the beaſts are on a thouſand mountaines graciouſly accepts a ſmall returne of his owne. It ſtands not with the munificence of a bountifull God to bee indebted to his creature, we cannot giue him ought vnrecompenſed: There is no way wherein we can be ſo liberall to our ſelues, as by giuing to the poſſeſſor of all things. And art thou ſtill, O God, leſſe free vnto vs thy meaner ſeruants vnder the Goſpell? Haſt thou not ſaid, Whatſoeuer ye ſhall aske the Father in my name, it ſhall bee giuen you? Onely giue vs grace not to be wanting vnto thee, and we know thou canſt not ſuffer any thing to be wanting vnto vs.

The night followes the temper of the day; and the heart ſo vſeth to ſleepe, as it wakes: Had not the thoughts of Salomon beene intent vpon wiſdome by day, he had not made it his ſuit in his dreame: There needs no leiſure of deliberation: The heart was ſo fore-ſtalled with the loue, and admiration of wiſdome, that not abiding the leaſt motion of a competition, it faſtens on that grace it had longed for: Giue vnto thy ſeruant an vnderſtanding heart, to iudge thy people. Had not Salomon beene wiſe before, he had not knowne the worth of wiſdome, he had not preferred it in his deſires; The dung-hill cockes of the World cannot know the price of this pearle; thoſe that haue it, know that all other excellencies are but traſh, and rubbiſh vnto it. Salomon was a great King, and ſaw that he had power enough, but withall, hee found that royaltie, without wiſdome, was no other then eminent diſhonour; There is no trade of life whereto there belongs not a peculiar wiſdome; without which there is nothing but a tedious vnprofitableneſſe; much more to the higheſt, and buſieſt vocation, the regiment of men: As God hath no reaſon to giue his beſt fauours vnasked; ſo hath hee no will to with-hold them where they are asked.

He that in his cradle had the title of Beloued of God, is now beloued more in the throne for the loue & deſire of wiſdom; this ſoile could neuer haue borne this fruit alone; Salo- mon could not ſo much as haue dreamed of wiſdome, if God had not put it into him; and now God takes the ſuit ſo well, as if he were beholden to his creature for wiſhing the beſt to it ſelfe: and becauſe Salomon hath asked what he ſhould, hee ſhall now receiue both what he asked, and what he asked not: Riches and honour ſhall bee giuen him into the match. So doth God loue a good choyce, that he recompences it with ouer-giuing: Could we but firſt ſeeke the Kingdome of God and his righteouſneſſe, all theſe earthly things ſhould bee ſuper-added to vs; Had Salomon made wealth his boone, he had failed both of riches and wiſdome; now he askes the beſt, and ſpeeds of all; They are in a faire way of happineſſe that can pray well; It was no diſ-comfort to Salomon, that he awaked and found it a dreame; for he knew this dreame was diuine, and oracular; and he already found in his firſt waking, the reall performance of what was promiſed him ſleeping: Such illumination did he ſenſibly finde in all the roomes of his heart, as if God had now giuen him a new ſoule: No maruell if Salomon now returning from the Tabernacle to the Arke, teſtified his ioy and thankfulneſſe by burnt-offerings, and peace offerings, and publique feaſtings; The heart that hath found in it ſelfe the liuely teſtimonies of Gods preſence, and fauour, cannot conteyne it ſelfe from outward expreſſions.

God likes not to haue his gifts lie dead where hee hath confered them; Iſrael ſhall ſoone witneſſe they haue a King enlightened from heauen; in whom wiſdome did not ſtay for heires; did not admit of any parallel in his predeceſſors; The all-wiſe God will finde occaſions to draw forth thoſe graces to vſe, and light, which hee had beſtowed on man. Two Harlots come before young Salomon with a difficult plea; It is not like the Princes eare was the firſt that heard this complaint; there was a ſubordinate courſe of iuſtice for the determination of theſe meaner incidences: the hardneſſe of this deciſion brought the matter, through all the benches of inferior iudicature, to the Tribunall of Salomon; The very Iſraelitiſh Harlots were not ſo vnnaturall as ſome now adayes that counterfait honeſty; Theſe ſtriue for the fruit of their wombe, ours to put thē off; One ſon is yet aliue, two mothers contend for him. The children were alike for feature, for age; the mothers were alike for reputation: here can be no euidence from others eyes; Whethers now is the liuing Child, and whethers is the dead? Had Salomon gone about to wring forth the truth by tortures, he had perhaps plagued the innocent, and added paine to the miſery of her loſſe; the weaker had been guilty, and the more able to heare, had carried away both the child and the victorie: The countenance of either of the mothers bewrayed an equalitie of paſſion; Sorrow poſſeſſed the one, for the ſonne ſhe had loſt; and the other, for the ſonne ſhee was in danger to leeſe: Both were equally peremptory, and importunate in their claime; It is in vaine to thinke that the true part can bee diſcerned by the vehemence of their challenge: Falſhood is oft-times more clamorous then truth; No witneſſes can bee produced; They two dwelt apart vnder one roofe: and if ſome neighbours haue ſeene the children at their birth, and circumciſion, yet how little difference, how much change is there in the fauour of infants? how doth death alter more confirmed lines?

The impoſſibilitie of proofe makes the guiltie more confident, more impudent; the true mother pleads that her child was taken away at midnight by the other; but in her ſleepe; ſhe ſaw it not, ſhee felt it not; and if all her ſenſes could habe witneſſed it, yet, here was but the affirmation of the one, againſt the deniall of the other, which in perſons alike credible doe but counterpoiſe. What is there now to leade the Iudge, ſince there is nothing either in the act, or circumſtances, or perſons, or plea, or euidence that might ſway the ſentence? Salomon well ſaw that when all outward proofes failed, there was an inward affection, which if it could be fetcht out, would certainely bewray the true mother; hee knew ſorrow might more eaſily bee diſſembled then naturall loue; both ſorrowed for their owne; both could not loue, one, as theirs: To draw forth then this true proofe of motherhood, Salomon calls for a ſword: Doubtleſſe, ſome of the wiſer hearers ſmiled vpon each other; and thought in themſelues, What, will the young King cut th[illegible]e knottie cauſes in peeces? Will he diuide iuſtice with edge tooles? will hee ſmite at hazard before conuiction? The actions of wiſe Princes are ridles to vulgar constructions; neither is it for the ſhallow capacities of the multitude to fadome the deepe proiects of Soueraigne authoritie: That ſword which had ſerued of execution, ſhall now ſerue for triall; Diuide yee the liuing child in twaine, and giue the one halfe to the one, and the other halfe to the other; Oh diuine oracle of iuſtice, commanding that which it would not haue done, that it might find out that which could not be diſcouered; Neither God, nor his Deputies may bee ſo taken at their words, as if they alwayes intended their commands for action, and not ſometimes for probation.

This ſword hath already pierced the breſt of the true mother; and diuided her heart with feare, and griefe at ſo killing a ſentence: There needes no other racke to diſcouer nature; and now ſhe thinks, woe is me that came for iuſtice, and am anſwered with cruelty; Diuide ye the liuing child? Alas, what hath that poore infant offended that it ſuruiues, and is ſued for? How much leſſe miſerable had I beene, that my childe had beene ſmothered in my ſleepe, then mangled before mine eyes? If a dead carkaſſe could haue ſatisfied me, I needed not to haue complained: What a wofull condition am I falne into, who am accuſed to haue beene the death of my ſuppoſed childe already, and now ſhall be the death of my owne? If there were no loſſe of my childe, yet how can I endure this torment of mine owne bowels? How can I liue to ſee this part of my ſelfe ſprawling vnder that bloody ſword? And whiles ſhe thinkes thus, ſhe ſues to that ſuſpected mercy of her iuſt Iudge, Oh my Lord, giue her the liuing childe, and ſlay him not: as thinking, if he liue, he ſhall but change a mother; if he die, his mother loſeth a ſon; Whiles he liues, it ſhall be my comfort that I haue a ſon, though I may not call him ſo: dying, he periſheth to both; it is better he ſhould liue to a wrong mother, then to neither: Contrarily her enuious competitor, as holding her ſelfe well ſatisfied that her neighbour ſhould be as childleſſe, as her ſelfe, can ſay, Let it be neither mine, nor thine, but diuide it; Well might Salomon, and euery hearer conclude, that either ſhe was no mother, or a monſter, that could be content with the murder of her childe; and that if ſhe could haue been the true mother, and yet haue deſired the blood of her infant, ſhee had beene as worthy to be ſtript of her childe for ſo foule vnnaturalneſſe, as the other had beene worthy to enioy him for her honeſt compaſſion. Not more iuſtly then wiſely therefore doth Salomon trace the true mother by the footeſteps of loue, and pity; and adiudgeth the child to thoſe bowels that had yearned at his danger.

Euen in morality it is thus alſo: Truth as it is one, ſo it loues intireneſſe; falſhood, diuiſion: Satan that hath no right to the heart, would be content with a peece of it: God that made it all, will haue either the whole, or none: The erroneous Church ſtriues with the true, for the liuing childe of ſauing doctrine; each claimes it for her owne: Hereſie conſcious of her owne iniuſtice, could be content to goe away with a leg, or an arme of ſound principles, as hoping to make vp the reſt with her owne mixtures: Truth cannot abide to part with a ioynt and will rather endure to leeſe all by violence, then a peece through a willing conniuency.

The Temple.

IT is a weake and iniurious cenſure that taxeth Salomons ſlackneſſe in founding the houſe of God: Great bodies muſt haue but ſlow motions; Hee was wiſe that ſaid, the matters muſt be all prepared without, ere we build within: And if Dauid haue laid ready a great part of the metals and timber, yet many a tree muſt be felled and ſquared, and many a ſtone hewne and poliſhed, ere this foundation could be laid; neither could thoſe large Cedars be cut, ſawne, ſeaſoned in one yeare; Foure yeares are ſoone gone in ſo vaſt a preparation: Dauid had not beene ſo intire a friend to Hiram, if Hiram had not beene a friend to God; Salomons wiſdome hath taught him to make vſe of ſo good a neighbour, of a fathers friend; he knew that the Tyrians skill was not giuen them for nothing; Not Iewes onely, but Gentiles muſt haue their hand in building the Temple of God; Onely Iewes medled with the Tabernacle, but the Temple is not built without the aide of Gentiles; They, together with vs, make vp the Church of God.

Euen Pagans haue their Arts from heauen; how iuſtly may we improue their graces to the ſeruice of the God of Heauen; if there be a Tyrian that can worke more curiouſly in gold, in ſiluer, in braſſe, in iron, in purple, and blew ſilke, then an Iſraelite, why ſhould not hee be imployed about the Temple? Their heatheniſme is their own; their skill is their Makers: Many a one workes for the Church of God, that yet hath no part in it.

Salomon raiſes a tribute for the worke; not of mony, but of men: Thirty thouſand Iſraelites are leauied for the ſeruice; yet not continuedly, but with intermiſſion, their labour is more generous, and leſſe preſſing: it is enough if they keep their courſes one moneth in Lebanon, two at home; ſo as euer ten thouſand worke, whiles twentie thouſand breathe. So fauourable is God to his creature, that he requires vs not to be ouer toyled in the workes of his owne ſeruice. Due reſpirations are requiſite in the holieſt acts. The maine ſtreſſe of the worke lyes vpon Proſelytes; whoſe both number, and paines was herein more then the Natiues: An hundred and fifty thouſand of them are imployed in bearing burthens, in hewing ſtones; beſides their three thouſand three hundred ouer-ſeers: Now were the deſpiſed Gibeonites of good vſe, and in vaine doth Iſrael wiſh that the zeale of Saul had not robbed them of ſo ſeruiceable druges.

There is no man ſo meane but may bee ſome way vſefull to the Houſe of God; Thoſe that cannot worke in gold, and ſiluer, and ſilke, yet may cut and hew; and thoſe that can doe neither, yet may cary burdens: Euen the ſeruices that are more homely, are not leſſe neceſſarie: Who can diſ-hearten himſelfe in the conſcience of his owne inſufficiency, when he ſees God can as well ſerue himſelfe of his labour, as of his skill.

The Temple is framed in Lebanon, and ſet vp in Sion; Neither hammer nor axe was heard in that holy ſtructure; There was nothing but noiſe in Lebanon, nothing in Sion but ſilence and peace. What euer tumults are abroad, it is fit there ſhould bee all quietneſſe and ſweet concord in the Church; Oh God, that the axes of ſchiſme, or the hammers of furious contentions ſhould bee heard within thy Sanctuary! Thine houſe is not built with blowes, with blowes it is beaten downe: Oh knit the hearts of thy ſeruants together in the vnity of the ſpirit, and the bond of peace; that we may minde and ſpeake the ſame things, that thou who art the God of peace, maiſt take pleaſure to dwell vnder the quite-roofe of our hearts.

Now is the foundation laid, and the wals riſing of that glorious fabricke, which all Nations admired, and all times haue celebrated; Euen thoſe ſtones which were laid in the Baſe of the building were not ragged and rude, but hewne and coſtly: the part that lyes couered with earth from the eyes of all beholders, is no leſſe precious, then thoſe that are moſt conſpicuous: God is not all for the eye, he pleaſeth himſelfe with the hidden value of the liuing ſtones of his ſpirituall Temple; How many noble graces of his ſeruants haue beene buried in obſcuritie; not deſcerned ſo much as by their owne eyes? which yet as hee gaue, ſo hee crowneth: Hypocrites regard nothing but ſhew; God nothing but truth.

The matter of ſo goodly a frame ſtriues with the proportion, whether ſhall more excell: Here was nothing but white Marble without; nothing but Cedar and Gold within: vpon the Hill of Sion ſtands that glittering and ſnowy pile, which both inuiteth and dazeleth the eyes of paſſengers a farre off; ſo much more precious within;

as Cedar is better then ſtone, gold then Cedar; No baſe thing goes to the making vp of Gods Houſe: If Satan may haue a dwelling, he cares not though he patch it vp of the rubbiſh of ſtone, or rotten ſticks, or droſſe of metals: God will admit of nothing that is not pure and exquiſite; His Church conſiſts of none but the faithfull, his habitation is in no heart but the gratious.

The faſhion was no other then that of the Tabernacle; onely this was more coſtly, more large, more fixed; God was the ſame that dwelt in both, hee varied not; the ſame myſterie was in both; Onely it was fit there ſhould be a proportion betwixt the worke and the builder: The Tabernacle was erected in a popular eſtate, the Temple in a Monarchy; it was fit this ſhould ſauour of the munificence of a King, as that of the zeale of a multitude; That was erected in the flitting condition of Iſrael in the deſert: this, in their ſetled reſidence in the promiſed Land: it was fit therefore that ſhould bee framed for motion, this for reſt. Both of them were diſtinguiſhed into three remarkable diuiſions, whereof each was more noble, more reſerued then other.

But what doe we bend our eyes vpon ſtone, and wood, and metals? God would neuer haue taken pleaſure in theſe dead materials for their owne ſakes, if they had not had a further intendment: Me thinkes I ſee foure Temples in this one. It is but one in matter, as the God that dwels in it is but one: three yet more in reſemblance: according to the diuiſion of them in whom it pleaſes God to inhabite: For where euer God dwels, there is his Temple; Oh God, thou vouchſafeſt to dwell in the beleeuing heart; as we thy ſilly creatures haue our being in thee, ſo thou the Creator of heauen & earth haſt thy dwelling in vs. The heauen of heauens is not able to containe thee and yet thou diſdaineſt not to dwel in the ſtrait lodgings of our renewed ſoule. So then, becauſe Gods children are many, and thoſe many diuided in reſpect of themſelues, though vnited in their head, therefore this Temple which is but one in collection as God is one, is manifold in the diſtribution, as the Saints are many; each man bearing about him a little ſhrine of this infinite Maieſtie: And for that the moſt generall diuiſion of the Saints is in their place and eſtate; ſome ſtrugling, and toyling in this earthly warfare, others triumphing in heauenly glory; therefore hath God two other, more vniuerſall Temples; One the Church of his Saints on earth; the other, the higheſt heauen of his Saints glorified. In all theſe, O God, thou dwelleſt for euer, and this materiall houſe of thine is a cleare repreſentation of theſe three ſpirituall; Elſe what were a temple made with hands vnto the Gods of ſpirits? And though one of theſe was a true type of all, yet how are they all exceeded each by other? This of ſtone, though moſt rich and coſtly, yet what is it to the liuing Temple of the holy Ghoſt, which is our body? What is the Temple of this body of ours, to the Temple of Chriſts body which is his Church? And what is the Temple of Gods Church on earth, to that which triumpheth gloriouſly in heauen?

How eaſily doe wee ſee all theſe in this one viſible Temple: which as it had three diſtinctions of roomes; the Porch, the Holy-place, the Holy of Holies, ſo is each of them anſwered ſpiritually: In the Porch wee finde the regenerate ſoule entring into the bleſſed ſociety of the Church: In the holy place, the Communion of the true viſible Church on earth, ſelected from the world: In the Holy of Holies (whereinto the high-Prieſt entred once a yeare) the glorious heauen, into which our true high-Prieſt, Chriſt Ieſus, entred once for all to make an atonement betwixt God, and man. In all theſe what a meet correſpondence there is both in proportion, matter, ſituation?

In proportion; The ſame rule that skilfull caruers obſerue in the cutting out of the perfect ſtatue of a man, that the height bee thrice the breadth, and the breadth one third of the hight, was likewiſe duely obſerued in the fabricke of the Temple; whoſe length was double to the height, and treble to the breadth, as being ſixty cubits long, thirty high, ano twenty broad; How exquiſite a ſymmetry haſt thou ordained (O God) betwixt the faithfull heart, and thy Church on earth, with that in heauen: how accurate in each of theſe, in all their powers and parts compared with other; So hath God ordered the beleeuing ſoule that it hath neither too much ſhortneſſe of grace, nor too much height of conceit, nor too much breadth of paſſion; So hath he ordered his viſible Church, that there is a neceſſarie inequalitie, without any diſproportion; an height of gouernment, a length of extent, a breadth of iuriſdiction duely anſwerable to each other; So hath he ordered his triumphant Church aboue, that it hath a length of eternitie, anſwered with an height of perfection, and a breadth of incomprehenſible glory.

In matter; All was here of the beſt; The wood was precious, ſweet, laſting: The ſtone beautifull, coſtly, inſenſible of age; The gold pure and glittering: So are the graces of Gods children, excellent in their nature, deare in their acceptation, eternall in their vſe: So are the ordinances of God in his Church, holy, comfortable, irrefragable. So is the perfection of his glorified Saints incomparable, vnconceiuable.

In ſituation; the outer parts were here more common, the inner more holy, and peculiarly reſerued: I finde one Court of the Temple open to the vncleane, to the vncircumciſed: Within that, another, open onely to the Iſraelites; and of them, to the cleane; within that, yet another, proper onely to the Prieſts and Leuites; where was the Brazen Altar for ſacrifice, and the Brazen ſea for waſhings: The eyes of the Laitie might follow their oblations in hither, their feet might not.

Yet more, in the couered roomes of the Temple, there is, whither the Prieſts onely may enter, not the Leuites; there is, whither the high Prieſt onely may enter, not his brethren.

It is thus in euery renewed man, the indiuiduall temple of God; the outward parts are allowed common to God and the world; the inwardeſt and ſecreteſt, which is the heart, is reſerued onely for the God that made it. It is thus in the Church viſible, the falſe and foule-hearted hypocrite hath acceſſe to the holy ordinances of God, and treads in his Courts; onely the true Chriſtian hath intire and priuate conuerſation with the holy One of Iſrael: He only is admitted into the Holy of Holies, and enters within the glorious vaile of heauen.

If from the wals we looke vnto the furniture: What is the Altar whereon our ſacrifices of prayer and praiſes are offered to the Almightie but a contrite heart? What the golden Candleſtickes, but the illumined vnderſtanding, wherein the light of the knowledge of God, and his diuine will ſhineth for euer? What the Tables of Shewbread, but the ſanctified memory, which keepeth the bread of life continually? Yea, if we ſhall preſume ſo farre as to enter into the very cloſet of Gods Oracle; Euen there, O God, doe we finde our vnworthy hearts ſo honoured by thee, that they are made thy very Arke, wherein thy Royall law, and the pot of thy heauenly Manna is kept for euer; and from whoſe propitiatorie, ſhaded with the wings of thy glorious Angels, thou giueſt thy gracious Teſtimonies of thy good ſpirit, witneſſing with ours, that we are the children of thee the liuing God.

Behold, if Salomon built a Temple vnto thee, thou haſt built a Temple vnto thy ſelfe in vs? We are not onely through thy grace liuing ſtones in thy Temple, but liuing Temples in thy Sion: Oh doe thou euer dwell in this thine houſe; and in this thy houſe let vs euer ſerue thee: Wherefore elſe haſt thou a Temple, but for thy preſence with vs, and for our worſhipping of thee? The time was, when, as thy people, ſo thy ſelfe, didſt lodge in flitting Tents, euer ſhifting, euer mouing; thence thou thoughteſt beſt to ſoiourne both in Shilo; and the roofe of Obed-Edom; After that, thou condeſcendedſt to ſettle thine abode with men, and wouldeſt dwell in an houſe of thine owne, at thy Ieruſalem. So didſt thou in the beginning lodge with our firſt Parents in a Tent; Soiourne with Iſrael vnder the lawe; and now makeſt a conſtant reſidence vnder the Goſpell, in the hearts of thy choſen children; from whence thou wilt remoue no more; they ſhall remoue from the world, from themſelues, thou ſhalt not remoue from them.

Whereſoeuer thou art, O God, thou art worthy of adoration; Since thou euer wilt dwell in vs, be thou euer worſhipped in vs: Let the Altars of our cleane-hearts ſend vp euer to thee the ſweetly perfumed ſmoakes of our holy meditations and faithfull prayers, and cheerefull thanks-giuings: Let the pure lights of our faith, and godly conuerſation ſhine euer before thee, and men, and neuer be put out: let the bread of life ſtand euer ready vpon the pure, and precious tables of our hearts. Locke vp thy Law, and thy Manna within vs; and ſpeake comfortably to vs from thy Mercy-ſeat. Suffer nothing to enter in hither that is vncleane: Sanctifie vs vnto thy ſelfe, and be thou ſanctified in vs.

SALOMON, and the Queene of Sheba.

GOd hath no vſe of the darke lanternes of ſecret, and reſerued perfections; Wee our ſelues doe not light vp Candles to put them vnder buſhels. The great lights whether of heauen or earth, are not intended to obſcuritie; but as to giue light vnto others, ſo to bee ſeene themſelues; Dan and Beerſheba were too ſtrait bounds for the fame of Salomon; which now hath flowne ouer all lands and ſeas, and raiſed the world to an admiration of his more then humane wiſdome. Euen ſo, O thou euerlaſting King of Peace, thy Name is great among the Gentiles; There is no ſpeech nor language where the report of thee is not heard; The ſound of thee is gone forth through all the earth; Thy name is an ointment powred out, therefore the virgins loue thee.

No doubt many from all coaſts came to learne and wonder; none with ſo much note as this noble daughter of Cham: Who her ſelfe deſerues the next wonder to him whom ſhe came to heare, and admire; That a woman, a Princeſſe, a rich and great Queene, ſhould trauell from the remoteſt South, from Saba, a region famous for the greateſt delicacies of nature, to learne wiſdome, is a matchleſſe example. Wee know Merchants that venture to either Indies for wealth; Others wee know daily to croſſe the ſeas for wanton curioſitie. Some few Philoſophers we haue knowne to haue gone farre from learning, and amongſt Princes it is no vnuſuall thing to ſend their Embaſſadors to farre diſtant kingdomes, for tranſaction of buſineſſes either of State, or commerce; but that a royall Lady ſhould in perſon vndertake and ouercome ſo tedious a iourney, onely to obſerue, and inquire into the myſteries of nature, art, religion, is a thing paſt both parallel, and imitation; Why doe we thinke any labour great, or any way long, to heare a greater then Salomon? How iuſtly ſhall the Queene of the South riſe vp in iudgement, and condemne vs, who may heare wiſdome crying in our ſtreets, and neglect her?

Certainly ſo wealthy a Queene, and ſo great a louer of wiſdome could not want great ſchollers at home; them ſhe had firſt oppoſed with her enigmaticall demands; and now finding her ſelfe vnſatisfied, ſhe takes her ſelfe to this Oracle of God; It is a good thing to doubt, better to be reſolued: The minde that neuer doubts ſhall learne nothing; the minde that euer doubts ſhall neuer profit by learning: Our doubts onely ſerue to ſtirre vs vp to ſeeke truth; Our reſolutions ſettle vs in the truth wee haue found. There were no pleaſure in reſolutions if we had not beene formerly troubled with doubts; There were nothing but diſcomfort and diſquietneſſe in doubts, if it were not for the hope of reſolution: It is not ſafe to ſuffer doubts to dwell too long vpon the heart; there may be good vſe of them as paſſengers, dangerous as inmates: Happy are we if we can finde a Salomon to remoue them.

Fame as it is alwayes a blab, ſo oft-times a lyer. The wiſe Princeſſe found cauſe to diſtruſt ſo vncertaine an informer: whoſe reports are ſtill either doubtfull, or fabulous; and like winds, or ſtreames, increaſe in paſſing: If very great things were not ſpoken of Salomon, fame ſhould haue wronged him; and if but iuſt rumours were ſpread of his wiſedome, there needed much credulitie to beleeue them. This great Queene would not ſuffer her ſelfe to be lead by the eares; but comes in perſon to examine the truth of forraine relations. How much more vnſafe is it in the moſt important buſineſſes of our ſoules, to truſt the opinions and reports of others? Thoſe eares and eyes are ill beſtowed that doe not ſerue to chooſe and iudge for their owners.

When we come to a rich treaſure, we need not bee bidden to carry away what wee are able. This wiſe Lady as ſhe came farre for knowledge, ſo finding the plenty of this veine, ſhe would not depart without her full lode: there was nothing wherein ſhee would leaue her ſelfe vnſatisfied: ſhee know that ſhe could not euery day meet with a Salomon; and therefore ſhe makes her beſt vſe of ſo learned a Maſter: Now ſhee empties her heart of all her doubts, and fils it with inſtruction. It is not good neglecting the opportunities of furniſhing our ſoules with profitable, with ſauing knowledge. There is much wiſedome in mouing a queſtion well, though there bee more in aſſoiling it: What vſe doe we make of Salomons Teacher, if ſitting at the feet of Chriſt we leaue our hearts either ignorant, or perplexed?

As if the errand of this wealthy Queene had beene to buy wiſedome, ſhee came with her Camels laden with gold, and precious ſtones, and rich odours: Though to a mighty King ſhe will not come to ſchoole empty-handed: If ſhe came to fetch an inualuable treaſure, ſhe finds it reaſon to giue thankes vnto him that kept it. As hee is a foole that hath a price in his hand to get wiſedome, and wants an heart: So is hee vnthankfull that hath an heart to get wiſedome, and hath no price in his hand; A price, not counteruailable to what hee ſeekes, but retributorie to him of whom hee ſeekes. How ſhamefull is it to come alwayes with cloſe hands to them that teach vs the great myſteries of ſaluation.

Expectation is no better then a kinde enemy to good deſerts: Wee leeſe thoſe obiects which we ouer-looke. Many had beene admired if they had not beene ouer-much befriended by fame; who now in our iudgement are caſt as much below their ranke, as they were fore-imagined aboue it. This diſaduantage had wiſe Salomon with this ſtranger; whom rumour had bid to looke for incredible excellencies; yet ſo wonderfull were the graces of Salomon, that they ouercame the higheſt expectation, and the liberalleſt beliefe: So as when ſhe ſaw the architecture of his buildings, the prouiſions of his tables, the order of his attendants, the religion of his ſacrifices, ſhe confeſſed both her vniuſt incredulitie in not beleeuing the report of his wiſedome, and the iniurie of report, in vnderſtanding it. I beleeued not the words till I came, and mine eyes had ſeene it, and loe the one halfe was not told mee. Her eyes were more ſure informers then her eares. She did not ſo much heare as ſee Salomons wiſedome in theſe reall effects: His anſwers did not ſo much demonſtrate it, as his prudent gouernment. There are ſome whoſe ſpeeches are witty, whiles their cariage is weake, whoſe deeds are incongruities, whiles their words are Apothegms. It is not worth the name of wiſedome that may bee heard onely, and not ſeene: Good diſcourſe is but the froth of wiſedome; the pure and ſolid ſubſtance of it is in well-framed actions; if wee know theſe things, happy are we if we doe them.

And if this great perſon admired the wiſedome, and buildings, the domeſticke order of Salomon, and chiefly his ſtately aſcent into the Houſe of the Lord; how ſhould our ſoules be taken vp with wonder at thee, O thou true ſonne of Dauid, and Prince of euerlaſting peace, who receiuedſt the ſpirit not by meaſure? who haſt built this glorious houſe, not made with hands, euen the heauen of heauens? whoſe infinite prouidence hath ſweetly diſpoſed of all the family of thy creatures, both in heauen and earth; and who laſtly didſt aſcend vp on high, and ledſt captiuity captiue, and gaueſt gifts to men?

So well had this ſtudious Ladie profited by the Lectures of that exquiſite Maſter, that now ſhee enuies, ſhee magnifies none but them who may liue within the ayre of Salomons wiſedome: Happy are thy men, and happy are thy ſeruants, which ſtand continually before thee, and that heare thy wiſedome. As if ſhee could haue beene content to haue changed her Throne for the footſtoole of Salomon. It is not eaſie to conceiue how great a bleſſing it is to liue vnder thoſe lips, which doe both preſerue knowledge, and vtter it: If we were not glutted with good counſell, wee ſhould finde no reliſh in any worldly contentment in compariſon thereof: But, hee that is full deſpiſeth an hony-combe.

Salomon

She, whom her owne experience had taught how happy a thing it is to haue a skilfull Pilote ſitting at the ſterne of the State, bleſſeth Iſrael for Salomon, bleſſeth GOD for Iſrael, bleſſeth Salomon and Iſrael mutually in each other; Bleſſed bee the Lord thy God which delighted in thee, to ſet thee on the Throne of Iſrael. Becauſe the Lord loued Iſrael for euer, therefore made hee thee King to doe iudgment and iuſtice. It was not more Salomons aduancement to be King of Iſrael, then it was the aduancement of Iſrael to be gouerned by a Salomon. There is no earthly proofe of Gods loue to any Nation comparable to the ſubſtitution of a wiſe and pious gouernour: to him wee owe our peace, our life, and which is deſeruedly dearer, the life of our ſoules, the Goſpell. But, oh God how much haſt thou loued thine Iſrael for euer, in that thou haſt ſet ouer it that righteous Branch of Ieſſe, whoſe name is Wonderfull, Counſellor, the mighty God, the euerlaſting Father, the Prince of Peace: In whoſe dayes Iudah ſhall be ſaued, and Iſrael ſhall dwell ſafely? Sing O heauen, and reioyce O earth, and breake forth into ſinging, O mountaines, for God hath comforted his people, and will haue euerlaſting mercy vpon his afflicted.

The Queene of Sheba did not bring her gold and precious ſtones to looke on, or to re-carie, but to giue to a wealthier then her ſelfe. She giues therefore to Salomon an hundred and twenty talents of gold, beſides coſtly ſtones and odours. Hee that made ſiluer in Hieruſalem as ſtones, is yet richly preſented on all hands. The riuers ſtill runne into the Sea; To him that hath ſhall bee giuen: How ſhould wee bring vnto thee, O thou King of Heauen, the pureſt gold of thine owne graces, the ſweeteſt odours of our obediences? Was not this withall a type of that homage which ſhould be done vnto thee, O Sauiour, by the heads of the Nations? The Kings of Tarſhiſh and the Iles bring preſents; the Kings of Sheba and Saba bring gifts; yea all Kings ſhall worſhip thee, all Nations ſhall ſerue thee. They cannot enrich themſelues but by giuing vnto thee.

It could not ſtand with Salomons magnificence to receiue rich courteſies without a returne: The greater the perſon was, the greater was the obligation of requitall; The gifts of meane perſons are taken but as tributes of duty; it is diſhonourable to take from equals, and not to retribute: there was not therefore more freedome in her gift, then in her receit: Her owne will was the meaſure of both; She gaue what ſhe would, ſhee receiued whatſoeuer ſhee would aske; And ſhee had little profited by Salomons ſchoole, if ſhe had not learned to aske the beſt: Shee returnes therefore more richly laden then ſhe came: ſhe gaue to Salomon as a thankfull Client of wiſedome; Salomon returnes to her as a munificent Patrone, according to the liberalitie of a King: We ſhall be ſure to be gainers by whatſoeuer we giue vnto thee, O thou God of wiſedome and peace: Oh that we could come from the remote regions of our infidelitie, and worldlineſſe, to learne wiſedome of thee, who both teacheſt and giueſt it abundantly, without vpbraiding, without grudging; and could bring with vs the poore preſents of our faithfull deſires, and ſincere ſeruices: how wouldeſt thou receiue vs with a gracious acceptation, and ſend vs away laden with preſent comfort, with eternall glory?

SALOMONS defection.

SInce the firſt man Adam, the world hath not yeelded either ſo great an example of wiſedome, or ſo fearefull an example of apoſtaſie as Salomon: What humane knowledge Adam had in the perfection of nature by creation, Salomon had by infuſion; both fully, both from one fountaine: If Adam called all creatures by their names, Salomon ſpake from the Cedars or Lebanon, to the moſſe that ſprings out of the wall; and beſides theſe vegetables, there was no Beaſt, nor Fowle, nor Fiſh, nor creeping thing that eſcaped his diſcourſe. Both fell, both fell by one meanes; as Adam, ſo might Salomon haue ſaid; The woman deceiued me: It is true indeed, that Adam fell as all; Salomon as one; yet ſo as that this one is the patterne of the frailtie of all. If knowledge could haue giuen an immunity from ſinne, both had ſtood: Affections are thoſe feet of the ſoule, on which it either ſtands, or fals; Salomon loued many out-landiſh women: I wonder not if the wiſe King miſ-caried; Euery word hath bane enough for a man: Women, many women, outlandiſh, idolatrous, and thoſe not onely had, but doted on; Sexe, multitude, nation, condition, all conſpired to the ruine of a Salomon: If one woman vndid all mankind, what maruell is it if many women vndid one? yet had thoſe many beene the daughters of Iſrael, they had tempted him onely to luſt; not to miſdeuotion; now they were of thoſe Nations, whereof the Lord had ſaid to the Children of Iſrael, Goe not ye into them, nor let them come in to you, for ſurely they will turne your hearts after their gods; to them did Salomon ioyne in loue; who can maruell if they diſioyned his heart from God? Satan hath found this bait to take ſo well, that he neuer changed it ſince he crept into Paradiſe. How many haue we knowne whoſe heads haue beene broken with their owne rib?

In the firſt world the ſonnes of God ſaw the daughters of men, and tooke them wiues of all they liked; they multiplied not children, but iniquities: Balaam knew well if the dames of Moab could make the Iſraelites wantons, they ſhould ſoone make them Idolaters: All lyes open where the couenant is not both made with the eye, and kept.

It was the charge of God to the Kings of Iſrael before they were, that they ſhould not multiply Wiues. Salomon hath gone beyond the ſtakes of the law, and now is readie to leeſe himſelfe amongſt a thouſand bedfellowes: Who ſo layes the reines in the necke of his carnall appetite, cannot promiſe where he will reſt. Oh Salomon, where was thy wiſedome, whiles thine affections runne away with thee into ſo wilde a voluptuouſneſſe? What bootes it thee to diſcourſe of all things; whiles thou miſ-knoweſt thy ſelfe? The perfections of ſpeculation doe not argue the inward powers of ſelfe-gouernment; The eye may be cleare whiles the hand is palſied. It is not ſo much to be heeded how the ſoule is informed, as how it is diſciplined; The light of knowledge doth well, but the due order of the affections doth better: Neuer any meere man ſince the firſt, knew ſo much as Salomon, many that haue knowne leſſe haue had more command of themſelues: A competent eſtate well husbanded, is better then a vaſt patrimony neglected.

There can be no ſafety to that ſoule where is not a ſtrait curbe vpon our deſires: If our luſts be not held vnder as ſlaues, they will rule as tyrants. Nothing can preuent the extremitie of our miſ-cariage but early and ſtrong denials of our concupiſcence: Had Salomon done thus, delicacie and lawleſſe greatneſſe had not led him into theſe bogs of intemperance.

The wayes of youth are ſteepe and ſlipperie, wherein as it is eaſie to fall, ſo it is commonly relieued with pitie; but the wanton inordinations of age are not more vnſeaſonable then odious; yet behold Salomons yonger yeares were ſtudious, and innocent, his ouer-haſtened age was licencious and miſgouerned; For, when Salomon was old, his wiues turned away his heart after other gods: If any age can ſecure vs from the danger of a ſpirituall fall, it is our laſt; and if any mans old-age might ſecure him, it was Salomons; the beloued of God, the Oracle, the miracle of wiſedome, who would haue looked but that the bloſſomes of ſo hopefull a ſpring, ſhould haue yeelded a goodly and pleaſant fruit, in the Autumne of age? yet behold euen Salomons old age vicious. There is no time wherein we can be ſafe, whiles we carie this body of ſin about vs: Youth is impetuous, mid-age ſtubborne, old age weake, all dangerous: Say not now; The fury of my youthfull flaſhes is ouer, I ſhall henceforth finde my heart calme and impregnable; whiles thou ſeeſt old Salomon doting vpon his Concubines, yea vpon their Idolatry.

It is no preſuming vpon time, or meanes, or ſtrength: how many haue begunne and proceeded well, who yet haue ſhamed themſelues in their laſt ſtage? If God vphold vs not, we cannot ſtand: If God vphold vs we cannot fal; when we are at the ſtrongeſt, it is the beſt to bee weake in our ſelues; and when at our weakeſt, ſtrong in him, in whom we can doe all things.

I cannot yet thinke ſo hard of Salomon, that he would proiect his perſon to Aſhteroth the goddeſſe of the Sidonians, or Milchom the Idol of the Ammonites, or Chemoſh the abomination of Moab: Hee that knew all things from the ſhrub of the Cedar, could not be ignorant that theſe ſtatues were but ſtocks, and ſtones, or metals, and the powers reſembled by them, Deuils. It is not like he could be ſo inſenſate to adore ſuch Deities; but ſo farre was the vxorious King blinded with affection, that hee gaue not paſſage onely to the Idolatry of his heatheniſh wiues, but furtherance.

So did he dote vpon their perſons, that he humoured them in their ſinnes: Their act is therefore his, becauſe his eyes winkt at it; his hand aduanced it: Hee that built a Temple to the liuing God, for himſelfe and Iſrael in Sion, built a Temple to Chemoſh in the mount of Scandall, for his Miſtreſſes of Moab, in the very face of Gods Houſe: No hill about Ieruſalem was free from a Chappell of Deuils: Each of his dames had their Puppets, their Altars their Incenſe; Becauſe Salomon feeds them in their ſuperſtition, he drawes the ſinne home to himſelfe, and is branded for what he ſhould haue forbidden. Euen our very permiſsion appropriates crimes to vs: Wee need no more guiltineſſe of any ſinne, then our willing toleration.

Who can but yearne, and feare to ſee the woefull wracke of ſo rich and goodly a veſſell: O Salomon, wert not thou hee whoſe yonger yeares God honoured with a meſſage and ſtile of loue? To whom God twice appeared; and in a gracious viſion renewed the Couenant of his fauour? Whom he ſingled out from all the generation of men to bee the founder of that glorious Temple which was no leſſe cleerely the Type of heauen, then thou wert of Chriſt the Sonne of the euerliuing God? Wert not thou that deep Sea of wiſedome which God ordained to ſend forth riuers and fountaines of all diuine, and humane knowledge to all Nations, to all ages? Wert not thou one of thoſe ſelect Secretaries, whoſe hand it pleaſed the Almighty to imploy in three pieces of the diuine monuments of ſacred Scriptures? Which of vs dares euer hope to aſpire vnto thy graces? Which of vs can promiſe to ſecure our ſelues from thy ruines? We fall, O God, we fall to the loweſt hell, if thou preuent vs not, if thou ſuſtaine vs not; Vphold thou me according to thy Word that I may liue, and let me not bee aſhamed of my hope. Order my ſteps in thy word, and let not any iniquitie haue dominion ouer me. All our weakneſſe is in our ſelues, all our ſtrength is in thee. O God bee thou ſtrong in our weakeneſſe, that our weake knees may bee euer ſteddy in thy ſtrength.

But in the midſt of the horror of this ſpectacle (able to affright all the ſonnes of men) behold ſome glimpſe of comfort: was it of Salomon that Dauid his father propheſied; Though he fall, he ſhall not bee vtterly caſt downe; for the Lord vpholdeth him with his hand? If ſenſible grace, yet ſinall mercy was not taken from that beloued of God; It the hardeſt of this winter, the ſap was gone downe to the root, though it ſhewed not in the branches: Euen whiles Salomon remoued, that word ſtood faſt, Hee ſhall be my ſonne, and I will be his Father. He that foreſaw his ſinne, threatned and limited his correction, If he breake my ſtatutes, and keepe not my commandements, then will I viſit his tranſgreſsion with a rod, and his iniquitie with ſtripes; Neuertheleſſe my louing kindneſſe will I not vtterly take from him, nor ſuffer my faithfulneſſe to faile; My Couenant will I not breake; nor alter the thing that is gone out of my mouth; Behold the fauour of God doth not depend vpon Salomons obedience: If Salomon ſhall ſuffer his faithfulneſſe to faile towards his God; God will not requite him with the failing of his faithfulneſſe to Salomon; If Salomon breake his Couenant with God; God will not breake his Couenant with the father of Salomon, with the ſonne of Dauid: He ſhall ſmart, hee ſhall not periſh. Oh gracious word of the God of all mercies, able to giue ſtrength to the languiſhing, comfort to the deſpairing, to the dying, life. Whatſoeuer wee are, thou wilt be ſtill thy ſelfe, O holy One of Iſrael, true to thy Couenant, conſtant to thy Decree; The ſinnes of thy choſen can neither fruſtrate thy counſell, nor out-ſtrip thy mercies.

Now I ſee Salomon of a wanton louer, a graue Preacher of mortification; I ſee him quenching thoſe inordinate flames with the teares of his repentance. Me thinks I heare him ſighing deepely betwixt euery word of that his ſolemne penance, which he would needs enioyne himſelfe before all the world. I haue applyed my heart to know the wickedneſſe of folly, euen the fooliſhneſſe of madneſſe; and I finde more bitter then death the woman whoſe heart is as nets and ſnares; and her hands as bands: Who ſo pleaſeth God ſhall be deliuered from her, but the ſinner ſhall be taken by her.

Salomon was taken as a ſinner, deliuered as a penitent. His ſoule eſcaped as a bird out of the ſnare of the fowlers; the ſnare was broken, and he deliuered: It is good for vs that he was both taken, and diliuered; Taken, that wee might not preſume; and that we might not deſpaire, deliuered. He ſinned, that we might not ſinne; hee recouered, that we may not ſinke vnder our ſinne.

But, oh the iuſtice of God inſeparable from his mercy; Salomons ſinne ſhall not eſcape the rod of men; Rather then ſo wiſe an offender ſhall want enemies, God ſhall raiſe vp three aduerſaries vnto Salomon; Hadad the Edomite, Bezon the King of Aram, Ieroboam the ſonne of Nebat; whereof two were foraine, one domeſticall: Nothing but loue and peace ſounded in the name of Salomon; nothing elſe was found in his raigne, whiles hee held in good tearmes with his God: But when once hee fell foule with his Maker, all things began to be troubled. There are whips laid vp againſt the time of Salomons fore-ſeene offence, which are now brought forth for his correction: On purpoſe was Hadad the ſonne of the King of Edom hid in a corner of Egypt from the ſword of Dauid and Ioab, that he might be reſerued for a ſcourge to the exorbitant ſonne of Dauid: God would haue vs make account that our peace ends with our innocence: The ſame ſinne that ſets debate betwixt God and vs, armes the creatures againſt vs; It were pitie wee ſhould be at any quiet whiles wee are falne out with the God of peace.

[illegible] chastisement was quite diuerse to the man [illegible] [illegible] sinnes, whiles Salomon repented, that was [illegible] [illegible] Father. He that so saw his sinne, therefore [illegible] If he breake my statutes, and keepe not my commandements, then will I visit [illegible] transgression with a rod, and his iniquitie with stripes. Neuerthelesse my [illegible] I not vtterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulnesse to faile. My Couenant [illegible] breake, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. [illegible] not depend vpon Salomons obedience. If Salomon [illegible] towards his God, God will not requite him with [illegible]. If Salomon breake his Couenant with God, God will not [illegible] with the [illegible] of Salomon, with the sonne of Dauid. He [illegible] Oh gracious word of the God of all mercies, able to giue life to [illegible] comfort to the despairing, to the dying, life. What [illegible] but that thy selfe, O holy One of Israel, art [illegible] constant to thy [illegible]. The sinnes of thy chosen can neither frustrate thy counsell, nor [illegible]

Now I see Salomon of a wanton louer, a graue Preacher of mortification [illegible] quenching those inordinate flames with the teares of his repentance [illegible] bewailing deeply betwixt euery word of that his solitarie sermon, which [illegible] would needs conuey in his name before all the world. I haue applyed my heart to know [illegible] of folly, euen the foolishnesse of madnesse; and I finde more bitter then death the [illegible] whose heart is as nets and snares, and her hands as bands: [illegible] shall be deliuered from her, but the sinner shall be taken by her.

Salomon was taken as a sinner, deliuered as a penitent; his soule escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers; the snare was broken, and he deliuered. [illegible] vs that he was both taken, and deliuered. Taken, that we might not presume; [illegible] that we might not despaire, deliuered. He sinned, that we might not sinne; he recouered, that we may not sinke vnder our sinne.

But oh the iustice of God inseparable from his mercy! Salomons sinne shall not escape the rod of men; Rather then so wise an offender shall want enemies, God shall raise vp three aduersaries vnto Salomon; Hadad the Edomite, Rezon the King of Syria, Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, whereof two were forraine, one domesticall. Nothing but loue and peace sounded in the name of Salomon, nothing else was found in his raigne, whiles hee held in good tearmes with his God; but when once hee fell foule with his Maker, all things began to be troubled. There are whips laid vp against the time of Salomons fore-seene offence, which are now brought forth for his correction. On purpose was Hadad the sonne of the King of Edom hid in a corner of Egypt from the sword of Dauid and Ioab, that he might be reserued for a scourge to the [illegible] sonne of Dauid: God would haue vs make account that our peace ends with our innocence: The same sinne that sets debate betwixt God and vs, armes the creatures against vs; It were pitie wee should be at any quiet whiles wee are falne out with the God of peace.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE IAMES LORD HAYE, BARON OF SALEY, Viſcount Doncaſter, Earle of Carlile, one of the Lords of his Maieſties moſt Honourable Priuie Councell.

Right Honourable:

I Cannot but thus gratulate to you your happy return from your many & noble imployments; which haue made you ſome yeares a ſtranger at home, and ſo renowned abroad, that all the better parts of Europe know and honour your name, no leſſe, then if you had beene borne theirs: Neyther is any of them ſo ſauage, as not to ſay, when they heare mention of your worth, that Vertue is a thouſand Eſcuchions.

If now your ſhort breathing-time may allow your Lordſhip the freedome of quiet and holy thoughts, caſt your eyes vpon Iſrael and Judah, vpon the Kings and Prophets of both, in ſuch beneficiall variety as prophane Hiſtory ſhall promiſe in vaine. Your Lordſhip ſhall ſee Rehoboam following Salomon in nothing but his ſeat, and his fall, as much more wilfull then his father, as leſſe wiſe; all head, no heart; loſing thoſe ten Tribes with a churliſh breath, whom he would (and might not) recouer with blood. Ieroboam as crafty, as wicked; plotting a reuolt, creating a religion to his ſtate, marring Iſraelites to make ſubiects, branded in his name, ſmitten in his hand, in his loynes. You ſhall ſee a faithfull meſſenger of God, after miraculous proofe of his courage, fidelitie, power, good nature, paying deare for a little circumſtance of credulous diſobedience; The Lyon is ſent to call for his blood, as the price of his forbidden harbour: You ſhall ſee the blinde Prophet deſcrying the diſguiſe of a Queene, the iudgement of the King, the remouall of a Prince, too good for Ieroboams heire. You ſhall ſee the right ſtocke of royall ſucceſſion flouriſhing in Aſa, whiles that true heire of Dauid (though not without ſome blemiſhes of infirmity) inherits a perfect heart; purges his Kingdome of Sodomy, of Idolatry, not balking ſinne, euen where he honoured nature. You ſhall ſee the wonder of Prophets, Elijah, opening and ſhutting heauen, as his priuate cheſt; catored for by the Rauens, nor leſſe miraculouſly catoring for the Sareptan, conteſting with Ahab, confronting the Baalites, ſpeaking both fire and water (from heauen) in one euening; meekly lacquaying his Soueraigne, weakly flying from Iezebel, fed ſupernaturally by Angels, hid in the rocke of Horeb, confirmed by thoſe dreadfull apparitions, that had confounded ſome other; caſting his mantle vpon his homely ſucceſſor, and by the touch of that garment, turning him from a ploughman, to a Prophet. But what doe I with-hold your Lordſhip in the bare heads of this inſuing diſcourſe? In all theſe your piercing eyes ſhall eaſily ſee beyond mine, and make my thoughts but a ſtation for a further diſcouery. Your Lordſhips obſeruation hath ſtudyed men, more then bookes; here it ſhall ſtudy God, more then men; That of bookes hath made you full, that of men, iudicious, this of God ſhall make you holy, and happy: Hitherto ſhall euer tend the wiſhes and indeuours of

in all faithfull obſeruance,

IOS. HALL.

REHOBOAM.

WHO would not but haue looked that ſeuen hundred wiues, and three hundred concubines, ſhould haue furniſhed Salomons Palace with choyce of heires, and haue peopled Iſrael with royall iſſue? and now behold; Salomon hath by all theſe but one Sonne; and him by an Ammoniteſſe: Many a poore man hath an houſe-full of children by one wife; whiles this great King hath but one ſonne by many houſe-fulls of wiues: Fertilitie is not from the meanes, but from the author: It was for Salomon that Dauid ſung of old; Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord; and the fruit of the wombe is his reward: How oft doth God deny this heritage of heyres, where he giues the largeſt heritage of lands; and giues moſt of theſe liuing poſſeſſions, where he giues leaſt of the dead? that his bleſſings may be acknowledged free vnto both; entailed vpon neither.

As the greateſt perſons cannot giue themſelues children, ſo the wiſeſt cannot giue their children wiſedome: Was it not of Rehoboam that Salomon ſaid; I hated all my labour which I had taken vnder the Sunne; becauſe I ſhould leaue it vnto the man that ſhall bee after me; and who knoweth whether he ſhall be a wiſe man or a foole: Yet he ſhall rule ouer all my labour, wherein I haue laboured, and ſhewed my ſelfe wiſe vnder the Sunne? All Iſrael found that Salomons wit was not propagated: Many a foole hath had a wiſer ſonne, then this wiſeſt father: Amongſt many ſonnes it it no newes to finde ſome one defectiue: Salomon hath but one ſonne, and he no miracle of wiſedome: God giues purpoſely ſo eminent an inſtance, to teach men to looke vp to heauen, both for heires and graces.

Salomon was both the King of Iſrael, and the father of Rehoboam, when he was ſcarce out of his childhood; Rehoboam enters into the Kingdome at a ripe age; yet Salomon was the man, and Rehoboam the child: Age is no iuſt meaſure of wiſdome: There are beardleſſe ſages, and gray-headed children: Not the ancient are wiſe, but the wiſe is ancient: Iſrael wanted not for thouſands that were wiſer then Rehoboam: Yet becauſe they knew him to bee the ſonne of Salomon, no man makes queſtion of his gouernement: In the caſe of ſucceſſion into Kingdomes we may not looke into the qualities of the perſon, but into the right. So ſecure is Salomon of the peoples fidelity to Dauids ſeed, that he followes not his fathers example in ſetting his ſonne by him, in his owne throne; here was no danger of a riualitie to enforce it; no eminency in the ſonne to merit it; It ſufficeth him to know that no bond can bee ſurer then the naturall allegeance of ſubiects: I doe not finde that the following Kings ſtood vpon the confirmation of their people; but as thoſe that knew the way to their throne, aſcended thoſe ſteps without aid; As yet the ſoueraignty of Dauids houſe was greene, and vnſetled; Iſrael therefore doth not now come to attend Rehoboam, but Rehoboam goes vp to meet Iſrael. They come not to his Ieruſalem, but he goes to their Shechem: To Shechem were all Iſrael come to make him King; If loyaltie drew them together, why not rather to Ieruſalem? there the maieſtie of his fathers Temple, the magnificence of his palace, the very ſtones in thoſe walls, (beſides the ſtrength of his Guard) had pleaded ſtrongly for their ſubiection; Shechem had beene many wayes fatall, was euery way incommodious: It is an infinite helpe or diſaduantage that ariſes from circumſtances; the very place puts Iſrael in minde of a rebellion: There Abimelec had raiſed vp his treacherous vſurpation ouer, and againſt his brethren: There Gaol againſt Abimelec: There was Ioſeph ſold by his brethren: As if the very ſoile had beene ſtained with perfidiouſneſſe. The time is no leſſe ill choſen; Rehoboam had ill counſell ere he bewrayed it: For had he ſpeedily called vp Iſrael, before Ieroboam could haue beene ſent for out of Egypt, he had found the way cleere: A little delay may leeſe a great deale of opportunity: What ſhall we ſay of both, but that miſery is led in by infatuation.

Had not Iſrael beene ſomewhat prediſpoſed to a mutiny, they had neuer ſent into Egypt for ſuch a ſpokeſman as Ieroboam; a fugitiue, a traytor to Salomon; long had that crafty conſpirator lurked in a forraine Court: The alliances of Princes, are not euer neceſſary bonds of friendſhip: The bother in law of Salomon harbours this ſnake in his boſome, and giues that heat, which is repayed with a ſting to the poſteritie of ſo neere an allye: And now Salomons death calls him backe to his natiue ſoile. That Iſrael would entertaine a rebell, it was an ill ſigne: worſe yet that they would countenance him; worſt of all that they would imploy him: Nothing doth more bewray euill intentions, then the choyce of vicious Agents: Thoſe that meane well will not hazard either the ſucceſſe, or credit of their actions vpon offenſiue inſtruments: None but the ſluttiſh will wipe their faces with foule clothes. Vpright hearts would haue ſaid, as Dauid did to God, ſo to his anointed: Doe not I hate them that hate thee? Yea I hate them with a perfect hatred. Ieroboams head had been a fit preſent to haue been tendered vnto their new King: and now in ſtead thereof they tender themſelues to Ieroboam, as the head of their faction.

Had not Rehoboam wanted ſpirits, he had firſt (after Salomons example) done iuſtice to his fathers traytor, and then haue treated of mercy towards his ſubiects: The people ſoone found the weakneſſe of their new Soueraigne, elſe they durſt not haue ſpoken to him by ſo obnoxious a tongue: Thy father made our yoke grieuous, make thou it lighter and wee will ſerue thee; Doubtleſſe the craftie head of Ieroboam was in this ſuit, which his mouth vttered in the name of Iſrael; Nothing could haue beene more ſubtill: It ſeemed a promiſe, it was a threat; that which ſeemed a ſupplication was a complaint: humilitie was but a vaile for diſcontentment; One hand held a paper, the other a ſword: Had they ſaid, Free vs from Tributes, the capitulation had beene groſſe, and ſtrongly ſauouring of ſedition: now they ſay Eaſe vs, they profeſſe his power to impoſe, and their willingneſſe to yeeld; onely crauing fauour in the weight of the impoſition: If Rehoboam yeeld, he blemiſheth his father: If he denie, he indangers his Kingdome: His wilfulneſſe ſhall ſeeme worthily to abandon his ſcepter, if he ſticke at ſo reaſonable a ſuit: Surely Iſrael came with a purpoſe to cauill: Ieroboam had ſecretly troubled theſe waters, that he might fiſh more gainfully: One malecontent is enough to imbroile a whole Kingdome.

How harſhly muſt it needs ſound in the eares of Rehoboam, that the firſt word hee heares from his people, is a querulous challenge of his fathers gouernment: Thy father made our yoke grieuous: For ought I ſee, the ſuggeſtion was not more ſpightfull then vniuſt: where was the weight of this yoke, the toile of theſe ſeruices? Here were none of the turmoiles of warre; no traynings, marchings, encampings, entrenchings, watchings, minings, ſieges, fortifications; none of that tedious world of worke that attends hoſtilitie; Salomon had not his name for nought: All was calme during that long raigne: And if they had payed deare for their peace, they had no cauſe to complaine of an hard match; The warlike times of Saul and Dauid had exhauſted their blood together with their ſubſtance; what ingratitude was this to cry out of eaſe? Yea but that peace brought forth coſtly and laborious buildings: Gods houſe, and the Kings, the walls of Ieruſalem, Hazor, Megiddo, and Gezer, the Cities of ſtore, the cities of defence, could not riſe without many a ſhoulder: True, but not of any Iſraelites; The remainders of Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hiuites, and Iebuſites, were put to all the drudgery of theſe great workes; the taskes of Iſrael were eaſie, and ingenuous; free from ſeruilitie, free from painfulneſſe. But the charge was theirs, whoſe-ſoeuer was the labour: The diet of ſo endleſſe a retinue, the attendance of his Seraglio, the purueyance for his forty thouſand ſtables, the coſt of his ſacrifices, muſt needs weigh heauy; Certainly, if it had layne on none but his owne; But wherefore went Salomons Nauy euery three yeares to Ophir? to what vſe ſerued the ſix hundred theeſcore and ſix Talents of Gold, that came in one yeare to his Exchequer? Wherefore ſerued the large tributes of forraine nations? How did he make ſiluer to be in Ieruſalem as ſtones if the exactions were ſo preſſiue? The multitude is euer prone to picke quarrels with their Gouernors; and whom they feared aliue, to cenſure dead; The benefits of ſo quiet and happie a raigne are paſt ouer in ſilence; the grieuances are recounted with clamor: Who can hope that merit or greatneſſe can ſhield him from obloquie, when Salomon is traduced to his owne loynes?

The propoſition of Iſrael puts Rehoboam to a deliberation; Depart yee for three daies; then come againe to me: I heare no other word of his that argued wiſdome; Not to giue ſudden reſolutions in caſes of importance was a point that might well beſeeme the ſon of Salomon: I wonder that he who had ſo much wit as to call for leiſure in his anſwer, ſhould ſhew ſo little wit in the improuing of that leiſure, in the returne of that anſwer: Who cannot but hope well to ſee the grey heads of Salomons ſecret Counſell called to Rehoboams Cabinet? As Counſellors, as ancient, as Salomons, they cannot chooſe but ſee the beſt the ſafeſt courſe for their new Soueraigne: They had learned of their old Maſter, that a ſoft anſwer appeaſeth wrath; wiſely therefore doe they aduiſe him, If thou wilt be a ſeruant to this people this day; and ſpeake good words to them, they will be thy ſeruants for euer: It was an eaſie condition; with one mouthfull of a breath to purchaſe an euerlaſting homage: with one gentle motion of his tongue, to binde all peoples hearts to his allegeance for euer. Yet (as if the motion had beene vnfit) a new Counſell Table is called: well might this people ſay; What will not Rehoboam grudge vs, if he thinke much to giue good words for a Kingdome. There is not more wiſedome in taking varietie of aduice, where the matter is doubtfull, then folly, when it is plaine: The young heads are conſulted; This very change argues weakeneſſe; Some reaſon might bee pleaded for paſſing from the younger Counſell to the aged; none, for the contrary: Age brings experience; and, it is a ſhame, if with the ancient be not wiſdome: Youth is commonly raſh, heady, inſolent, vngouerned, wedded to will, led by humour, a rebell to reaſon, a ſubiect to paſſion, fitter to execute then to aduiſe: Greene wood is euer ſhrinking and warping, whereas the well-ſeaſoning holds a conſtant firmneſſe: Many a life, many a ſoule, many a floriſhing ſtate hath beene ruined by vndiſciplined Monitors: Such were theſe of Rehoboam; whoſe great ſtomach tells them that this conditionating of Subiects, was no other then an affront to their new maſter, and ſuggeſts to them, how vnfit it is for Maieſtie to brooke ſo ſaucy a treaty: how requiſite and Princely, to cruſh this preſumption in the egge: As ſcorning therefore to bee braued by the baſe Vulgar, they put words of greatneſſe, and terror in their new Prince, My little finger ſhall bee thicker then my fathers loynes; My father made your yoake heauy, I will adde to your yoake; My father hath chaſtiſed you with whips, I will chaſtiſe you with Scorpions. The very words haue ſtings, Now muſt Iſrael needes thinke, How cruell will this mans hands bee, when hee thus drawes blood with his tongue? Men are not wont to ſpeake out their worſt: who can endure the hopes of him that promiſeth tyranny? There can be no good vſe of an indefinite profeſſion of rigour and ſeuerity; Feare is an vnſafe guardian of any ſtate, much leſſe of an vnſetled. Which was yet worſe, not the ſins of Iſrael were threatned, nor their purſes, but their perſons; neither had they deſired a remiſſion of iuſtice, but of exactions; and now, they heare of nothing but burthens, and ſcourges, and Scorpions.

Here was a prince and people well met; I doe not find them ſenſible of ought, ſaue their owne profit; They doe not ſay, Religion was corrupted in the ſhutting vp of thy fathers dayes; Idolatry found the free fauour of Prieſts, and Temples, and Sacrifices: Begin thy raigne with God; purge the Church, demoliſh thoſe piles of abomination: abandon thoſe Idol-mongers, reſtore deuotion to her puritie: They are all for their penny, for their eaſe: Hee on the other ſide, is all for his will, for an imperious Soueraigntie; without any regard either of their reformation or ſatisfaction: They were worthy of load that cared for nothing but their backs; and the worthy of ſuch ſubiects, who profeſſed to affect their miſery and torment.

Who would not but haue looked any whither for the cauſe of this euill, rather then to heauen? yet, the holy God challenges it to himſelfe: The cauſe was from the Lord, that he might performe his ſaying by Abijah, the Shilonite to Ieroboam: As ſinne is a puniſhment of ſinne, it is a part of iuſtice: The holy One of Iſrael doth not abhorre to vſe euen the groſſeſt ſinnes to his owne iuſt purpoſes; whiles our wils are free to our owne choice, his decrees are as neceſſary, as iuſt; Iſrael had forſaken the Lord, and worſhiped Aſhtaroth, the goddeſſe of the Zidonians, and Chemoſh, and Milchom: God owes them and Salomon a whipping; The frowardneſſe of Rehoboam ſhall pay it them; I ſee Ieroboams plot, the peoples inſolence, the young mens miſaduice, the Princes vnreaſonable auſteritie, meeting together (through the wiſe Prouidence of the Almighty) vnwittingly to accompliſh his moſt iuſt decree: All theſe might haue done otherwiſe for any force that was offered to their will; all would no more doe otherwiſe, then if there had beene no predetermination in heauen; that God may be magnified in his wiſedome, and iuſtice, whiles man wittingly periſheth in his folly.

That three dayes expectation had warmed theſe ſmoking Iſraelites, and made them ready for a combuſtion: vpon ſo peremptory a reſolution of rigour, the flame burſts out, which all the waters of the Well of Bethlehem could neuer quench: The furious multitude flies out into a deſperate reuolt; What portion haue wee in Dauid, neither haue wee inheritance in the ſonne of Ieſſe: To your Tents O Iſrael; now, ſee to thine owne houſe Dauid.

How durſt theſe ſeditious mouthes mention Dauid in defiance? One would haue thought that very name had beene able to haue tempered their furie, and to haue contained them within the limits of obedience: It was the father of Rehoboam, and the ſonne of Dauid that had led Iſrael into Idolatry: Salomon hath drawne contempt vpon his father, and vpon the ſonne: If Iſrael haue caſt off their God, is it maruell that they ſhake off his annointed? Irreligion is the way to diſobedience: There can bee no true ſubiection but out of conſcience: They cannot make conſcience of ciuill duties, who make none of diuine.

In vaine ſhall Rehoboam hope to preuaile by his Officer, when himſelfe is reiected: The perſons of Princes carry in them characters of Maieſty; when their preſence workes not, how ſhould that meſſage? If Adoram ſollicit the people too late with good word, they anſwer him with ſtones. Nothing is more vntractable and violent, then an inraged multitude; It was time for Rehoboam to betake himſelfe to his Charet; hee ſaw thoſe ſtones were throwne at him, in his Adoram: As the meſſenger ſuffers for his maſter, ſo the maſter ſuffers in his meſſenger: Had Rehoboam beene in Adoram clothes, this death had beene his: Onely flight can deliuer him from thoſe that might haue beene ſubiects: Ieruſalem muſt bee his refuge againſt the conſpiracie of Shechem.

Bleſſed bee GOD for lawfull gouernment: Euen a mutinous body cannot want an head: If the rebellious Iſraelites haue caſt off their true Soueraigne, they muſt chooſe a falſe: Ieroboam the ſonne of Nebat muſt be the man: He had need bee skilfull, and ſit ſure, that ſhall backe the horſe which hath caſt his Rider: Iſrael could not haue any where met with more craft and courage, then they found in this Leader.

Rehoboam returnes to Ieruſalem lighter by a crowne then he went forth; Iudah and Beniamin ſticke ſtill faſt to their loyaltie: the example of a generall rebellion cannot make them vnfaithfull to the houſe of Dauid: God will euer reſerue a remnant free from the common contagion: Thoſe tribes, to approue their valour, no leſſe then their fidelitie, will fight againſt their brethren, for their Prince; and will hazard their liues to reduce the crowne to the ſonne of Salomon: An hundred and fourеſcore thouſand of them are vp in armes, ready to force Iſrael to their denied ſubiection: No noiſe ſounded on both parts but military; no man thought of any thing but blood; when ſuddenly God ſends his Prophet to forbid the battle: Shemaiah comes with a meſſage of ceſſation: Ye ſhall not goe vp, nor fight againſt your brethren, the children of Iſrael, returne euery man to his houſe, for this thing is from me, ſaith the Lord: The word of one ſilly Prophet diſmiſſes theſe mighty armies: He that would not lay downe the threats of his rigour, vpon the aduice of his ancient Counſellors, will lay downe his ſword, vpon the word of a Seer: Shall wee enuie, or ſhame to ſee how much the Prophets of the Old Teſtament could doe; how little thoſe of the new? If our commiſſion be no leſſe from the ſame God, the difference of ſucceſſe cannot goe away vnreuenged.

There was yet ſome grace in Rehoboam, that hee would not ſpurne againſt that which God challenged as his owne worke: Some Godleſſe Ruffian would haue ſaid; whoſoeuer is the Author, I will be reuenged on the inſtruments: Rehoboam hath learned this leſſon of his Grandfather, I held my peace becauſe thou Lord haſt done it: If hee might ſtriue with the multitude, hee knew it was no ſtriuing with his Maker: quietly therefore doth he lay downe his armes, not daring after that prohibition to ſeeke the recouery of his kingdome by blood.

Where Gods purpoſes are hid from vs, wee muſt take the faireſt wayes of all lawfull remedies; but where God hath reuealed his determinations, wee muſt ſit downe in an humble ſubmiſſion; our ſtruggling may aggrauate, cannot redreſſe our miſeries.

IEROBOAM.

AS there was no publike and vniuerſall conflict betwixt the ten Tribes, and the two, ſo no peace: Either King found reaſon to fortifie the borders of his owne territories: Sechem was worthy to bee deare to Ieroboam; a Citie as of old ſeaſoned with many treaſons, ſo now auſpicious to his new vſurpation. The ciuill defection was ſoone followed by the ſpirituall: As there are neare reſpects betwixt God, and his anointed, ſo there is great affinitie betwixt treaſon and idolatry: there is a connexion betwixt, Feare God, and Honour the King; and no leſſe betwixt the neglects of both: In vaine ſhall a man looke for faith in a miſ-religious heart.

Next to Achitophel, I doe not find that Iſrael yeelded a craftier head then Ieroboams, ſo hath hee plotted this conſpiracie, that (what euer fall) there is no place for a challenge; not his owne intruſion, but Iſraels Election hath raiſed him to their Throne: neither is his cunning leſſe in holding a ſtolne Scepter: Thus he thinkes in himſelfe: If Iſrael haue made me their King; it is but a pang of diſcontentment; theſe violent thoughts will not laſt alwayes : ſudden fits haue commonly ſudden recoueries; their returne to their loyaltie ſhall forfeit my head together with my Crowne: They cannot returne to God, and hold off from their lawfull Soueraigne? They cannot returne to Ieruſalem, and keepe off from God, from their loyaltie: Thrice a yeere will their deuotion call them vp thither; beſides the exigence of their frequent vowes : How can they be mine, whiles that glorious Temple is in their eye; whiles the magnificence of the royall Palace of Dauid and Salomon, ſhall admoniſh them of their natiue allegeance: whiles (beſides the ſollicitation of their brethren) the Prieſts and Leuites ſhall preach to them the neceſſitie of their due obedience, and the abomination of their ſacrifices in their wilfull diſobedience; whiles they ſhall (by their preſence) put themſelues vpon the mercy, or iuſtice of their lawfull, and forſaken Prince : Either therefore I muſt diuert them from Ieruſalem, or elſe I cannot liue and reigne. It is no diuerting them by a direct reſtraint; ſuch prohibition would both endanger their vtter diſtaſte, and whet their deſire to more eagerneſſe : I may change Religion, I may not inhibit it; ſo the people haue a God, it ſufficeth them; they ſhall haue ſo much formalitie as may content them : their zeale is not ſo ſharpe, but they can be well pleaſed with eaſe : I will profer them both a more compendious, and more plauſible worſhip: Ieruſalem ſhall be ſupplied within mine owne borders : naturally men loue to ſee the obiects of their deuotion : I will therefore feed their eyes with two golden repreſentations of their God, nearer home; and what can bee more proper then thoſe, which Aaron deuiſed of old to humour Iſrael.

Vpon this peſtilent ground, Ieroboam ſets vp two calues in Dan and Bethel, and perſwades the people; It is too much for you to goe vp to Ieruſalem, behold thy Gods O Iſrael, which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt. Oh the miſchiefe that comes of wicked infidelitie : It was Gods Prophet that had rent Ieroboams garment into twelue pieces, and had giuen ten of them to him; in token of his ſharing the tenne Tribes; who with the ſame breath alſo told him that the cauſe of this diſtraction was their Idolatry: Yet now will he inſtitute an Idolatrous ſeruice for the holding together of them, whom their Idolatry had rent from their true Soueraigne to him : Hee ſayes not; God hath promiſed me this Kingdome, God hath conferd it, God ſhall finde meanes to maintaine his owne act; I will obey him, let him diſpoſe of mee : The God of Iſrael is wiſe and powerfull enough, to fetch about his owne deſignes: But, (as if the deuices of men were ſtronger then Gods prouidence, and ordination) he will be working out his owne ends by prophane policies : Ieroboam being borne an Iſraelite, and bred in the Court of a Salomon, could not but know the expreſſe charge of God againſt the making of Images, againſt the erecting of any riuall altars, to that of Ieruſalem; yet now that he ſees both theſe may auaile much to the aduancing of his ambitious proiect, he ſets vp thoſe Images, thoſe Altars : Wicked men care not to make bold with God in caſes of their owne commoditie: If the Lawes of their Maker lye in the way of their profit or promotion, they either ſpurne them out, or tread vpon them at pleaſure : Aſpiring mindes will know no God but honour. Iſrael ſoiourned in Egypt, and brought home a golden calfe : Ieroboam ſoiournes there, and brought home two; It is hard to dwell in Egypt vntainted; not to ſauour of the ſinnes of the place we liue in, is no leſſe ſtrange, then for wholeſome liquor tunned vp in a muſty veſſell, not to ſmell of the caſk: The beſt body may be infected in a contagious ayre : Let him beware of Egypt that would be free from Idolatry.

No ſooner are Ieroboams calues vp, then Iſrael is downe on their knees : their worſhip followes immediately vpon the erection : How eaſily is the vnſtable vulgar caried into whatſoeuer religion of authoritie? The weather-cocke will looke which way ſoeuer the winde blowes : It is no maruell if his Subiects bee bruitiſh, who hath made a calfe his god.

Euery acceſſary to ſinne is filthy, but the firſt authors of ſinne are abominable: How is Ieroboam branded in euery of theſe ſacred leaues? How doe all ages ring of his fact, with the accent of diſhonour, and indignation : Ieroboam the ſonne of Nebat, that made Iſrael to ſinne? It was a ſhame for Iſrael that it could bee made to ſinne by a Ieroboam: but, O curſed name of Ieroboam that would draw Iſrael to ſinne; The followers and abettors of euill are worthy of torment, but no hell is too deepe for the leaders of publique wickedneſſe.

Religion is cloathed with many requiſite circumſtances: As a new King would haue a new god; ſo that new God muſt haue new Temples, Altars, Seruices, Prieſts, Solemnities: All theſe hath Ieroboam inſtituted: all theſe hath he caſt in the ſame mold with his golden calues: Falſe deuotion doth not more croſſe, then imitate the true. Satan is no leſſe a counterfet then an enemy of God: He knowes it more eaſie to adulterate religion, then to aboliſh it.

That which God ordained for the auoidance of Idolatry, is made the occaſion of it; a limitation of his holy ſeruices to Ieruſalem: How miſchieuouſly doe wicked men peruert the wholeſome inſtitutions of God to their ſinne, to their bane!

Ieroboam could not be ignorant how fearfully this very act was reuenged vpon Iſrael, in the Wilderneſſe; yet he dares renew it in Dan and Bethel: No example of iudgement can affright wilfull offenders.

It is not the metall that makes their gods, but the worſhip; the ſacrifices. What ſacrifices could there be without Prieſts? No religion could euer want ſacred Maſters of Diuine ceremonies: Gods Clergy was ſelect and honourable; branches of the holy ſtemme of Aaron; Ieroboam rakes vp his Prieſts out of the channell of the multitude; all Tribes, all perſons were good enough for his ſpurious deuotion; Leaden Prieſts are well fitted to golden Deities. Religion receiues either much honour, or blemiſh, by the qualitie of thoſe that ſerue at her Altars: Wee are not worthy to profeſſe our ſelues ſeruants of the True God, if wee doe not hold his ſeruice worthy of the beſt.

Ieroboams Calues muſt haue ſacrifices, muſt haue ſolemne feſtiuities; though in a day, and moneth of his owne deuiſing: In vaine ſhall we pretend to worſhip a god, if we grudge him the iuſt dayes, and rites of his worſhip.

It is ſtrange that hee who thought the dregs of the vulgar good enough for that Prieſthood, would grace thoſe gods by acting their Prieſt himſelfe: and yet behold where the new King of Iſrael ſtands before his new Altar, with a Scepter in one hand, and a Cenſer in the other, ready to ſacrifice to his new gods; when the man of God comes from Iuda, with a meſſage of iudgement: Oh deſperate condition of Iſrael, that was ſo farre gone with impiety, that it yeelded not one faithfull monitor to Ieroboam: The time was, that the erecting of but a new altar (for memory, for monument) on the other ſide of Iordan, bred a challenge to the Tribes of Reuben, Gan, and Manaſſes; and had coſt much Iſraelitiſh blood, if the quarrelled Tribes had not giuen a ſeaſonable and pious ſatisfaction; and now, lo, how the ſtronger ſtomach of degenerated Iſrael can digeſt new Altars, new Temples, new Gods: What a difference there is betwixt a Church and Kingdome newly breathing from affliction, and ſetled vpon the lees of a miſ-vſed peace?

But oh the patience, and mercy of our long-ſuffering God, that will not ſtrike a very Ieroboam vnwarned: Iudgement houers ouer the heads of ſinners, ere it light: if Iſrael afford not a bold reprouer of Ieroboam, Iuda ſhall: When the King of Iſrael is in all the height both of his State, and ſuperſtition, honouring his ſolemne day with his richeſt deuotion, ſteps forth a Prophet of God, and interrupts that glorious ſeruice, with a loud inclamation of iudgement. Doubtleſſe the man wanted not wit to know what diſpleaſure, what danger muſt needs follow ſo vnwelcome a meſſage: yet dares hee (vpon the commiſſion of God) doe this affront to an Idolatrous King, in the middeſt of all his awfull magnificence. The Prophets of God goe vpon many a thankleſſe errand: Hee is no meſſenger for God that either knowes, or feares the faces of men.

It was the Altar, not the perſon of Ieroboam, which the Prophet thus threatens; Yet not the ſtones are ſtricken, but the founder; in both their apprehenſions: So deare as the deuices of our owne braine to vs : as if they were incorporated into our ſelues; There is no oppoſition whereof we are ſo ſenſible, as that of religion.

That the royall Altar ſhould be thus polluted by dead mens bones, and the blood of the Prieſts, was not more vnpleaſing, then that all this ſhould be done by a childe of the houſe of Dauid; for Ieroboam well ſaw that the throne and the altar muſt ſtand, or fall together; that a ſonne of Dauid could not haue ſuch power ouer the Altar, without an vtter ſubuerſion of the gouernment, of the ſucceſſion; therefore is he thus galled with this comminatory prediction : The rebellious people who had ſaid, What portion haue we in Dauid, heare now, that Dauid will perforce haue a portion in them: and might well ſee, what beaſts they had made themſelues, in worſhipping the image of a beaſt; and ſacrificing to ſuch a God, as could not preſerue his owne Altar from violation and ruine.

All this while I doe not ſee this zealous Prophet laying his hand to the demolition of this Idolatrous Altar; or threatning a knife to the Author of this deprauation of religion; Onely his tongue ſmites both; not with foule, but ſharpe words, of menace, not of reproach : It was for Ioſias a King, to ſhed the blood of thoſe ſacrificers, to deface thoſe Altars: Prophets are for the tongue, Princes for the hand; Prophets muſt onely denounce iudgement : Princes execute.

Future things are preſent to the Eternall : It was ſome two hundred and ſixty years, ere this prophecy ſhould be fulfilled; yet the man of God ſpeaks of it as now in acting; What are ſome Centuries of yeares to the Ancient of dayes ? How ſlow, and yet how ſure is the pace of Gods reuenge ? It is not in the power of time to fruſtrate Gods determinations; There is no leſſe iuſtice, nor ſeueritie in a delayed puniſhment.

What a perfect Record there is of all names in the roll of Heauen; before they be, after they are paſt ? what euer ſeeming contingency there is in their impoſition, yet they fall vnder the certainty of a decree, and are better knowne in heauen, ere they be, then on earth whiles they are. He that knowes what names wee ſhall haue, before we or the world haue a being, doth not oft reueale this peece of his knowledge to his creature; here he doth, naming the man that ſhould be two hundred yeeres after; for more aſſurance of the euent, that Iſrael may ſay, this man ſpeakes from a God who knowes what ſhall be : There cannot bee a more ſure euidence of a true Godhead, then the foreknowledge of thoſe things, whoſe cauſes haue yet no hope of being; But becauſe the proofe of this prediction was not more certaine, then remote; a preſent demonſtration ſhall conuince the future; The Altar ſhall rend in peeces, the aſhes ſhall be ſcattered : How amazedly muſt the ſeduced Iſraelites needes looke vpon this miracle; and why doe they not thinke with themſelues; whiles theſe ſtones rend, why are our hearts whole ? Of what an ouer-ruling power is the God whom wee haue forſaken, that can thus teare the Altars of his corriualls ? How ſhall wee ſtand before his vengeance, when the very ſtones breake at the word of his Prophet ? Perhaps, ſome beholders were thus affected : but Ieroboam, whom it moſt concerned, in ſtead of bowing his knees for humiliation, ſtretcheth forth his hand for reuenge, and cryes, Lay hold on him. Reſolute wickedneſſe is impatient of a reproofe, and in ſtead of yeelding to the voyce of God, rebelleth : Iuſt and diſcreet reprehenſion doth not more reforme ſome ſinners, then exaſperate others.

How eaſie it is for God to coole the courage of proud Ieroboam ? The hand which his rage ſtretches out, dryes vp, and cannot be pulled backe againe : and now ſtands the King of Iſrael like ſome anticke ſtatue, in a poſture of impotent endeuour; ſo diſabled to the hurt of the Prophet, that hee cannot command that peece of himſelfe; What are the great potentates of the world, in the powerfull hand of the Almighty ? Tyrants cannot be ſo harmefull as they are malicious.

The ſtrongeſt heart may be brought downe with affliction; Now the ſtout ſtomach of Ieroboam is fallen to an humble deprecation, Intreat now the face of the Lord thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may bee reſtored mee againe. It muſt needs bee a great ſtreight that could driue a proud heart to begge mercy, where he bent his perſecution: ſo doth Ieroboam, holding it no ſcorne to be beholden to an enemy: In extremities, the worſt men can be content to ſue for fauour, where they haue ſpent their malice.

It well becomes the Prophets of God to be mercifull: I doe not ſee this Seer to ſtand vpon termes of exprobration, and ouerly conteſtations with Ieroboam, to ſay, Thine intentions to me were cruell; Had thine hand preuailed, I ſhould haue ſued to thee in vaine: Continue euer a ſpectacle of the fearfull iuſtice of thy Maker, whom thou haſt prouoked by thine Idolatry, whom thou wouldeſt haue ſmitten in my perſecution: but hee meekely ſues for Ieroboams releaſe: and (that God might abundantly magnifie both his power and mercy) is heard and anſwered with ſucceſſe: We doe no whit ſauour of heauen, if we haue not learned to doe good for euill.

When both winde and Sunne, the blaſts of iudgement, and the beames of fauour met together to worke vpon Ieroboam, who would not looke that hee ſhould haue caſt off this cumbrous, and miſ-beſeeming cloake of his Idolatry; and haue ſaid, Lord thou haſt ſtricken mee in iuſtice, thou haſt healed mee in mercy; I will prouoke thee no more. This hand which thou haſt reſtored ſhall bee conſecrated to thee in pulling downe theſe bold abominations: Yet now, behold hee goes on in his old courſes, and, as if God had neither done him good nor euill, liues, and dies idolatrous: No ſtone is more hard or inſenſate then a ſinfull heart: The changes of iudgement and mercy doe but obdure it, in ſtead of meltings.

The ſeduced Prophet.

IEroboams hand is amended, his ſoule is not; that continues ſtill dry, and inflexible; Yet whiles hee is vnthankfull to the Author of his recouery, he is thankfull to the inſtrument: he kindely inuites the Prophet, whom he had threatned, and will remunerate him whom hee endeuoured to puniſh: The worſt men may be ſenſible of bodily fauours: Ciuill reſpects may well ſtand with graceleſſeneſſe: Many a one would be liberall of their purſes, if they might be allowed to be niggardly of their obedience.

As God, ſo his Prophet cares not for theſe waſte courteſies, where hee ſees maine duties neglected: More piety would haue done well, with leſſe complement: The man of God returnes a blunt and peremptory deniall to ſo bounteous an offer: If thou wilt giue me halfe thine houſe, I will not goe in with thee, neither will I eate bread or drinke water in this place. Kindneſſe is more ſafely done to an Idolater, then taken from him; that which is done to him obligeth him, that which is taken from him obligeth vs: his obligation to vs may be occaſion of his good, our obligation to him may occaſion our hurt; the ſureſt way is to keepe aloofe from the infectiouſly wicked.

The Prophet is not vnciuill, to reiect the fauour of a Prince without ſome reaſon: He yeelds no reaſon of his refuſall but the command of his God: God hath charged him, Eate no bread, nor drinke no water, nor turne againe by the ſame way that thou cameſt: It is not for a Prophet to plead humane, or carnall grounds for the actions of his function: He may not moue but vpon a diuine warrant: would this Seer haue look't with the eyes of fleſh and blood, hee might haue found many arguments of his yeeldance. He is a King that inuites me; his reward, by enriching mee, may benefit many: and who knowes how much my further conuerſation may preuaile to reforme him? how can he be but well prepared for good counſell by a miraculous cure? how gainefully ſhould my receit of a temporall courteſie be exchanged with a ſpirituall to him : All Iſrael will follow him either into Idolatry, or reformation; which way can be deuiſed of doing ſo great ſeruice to God and the Church, as by reclaiming him: what can yeeld ſo great likelihood of his reclamation, as the opportunitie of my further entireneſſe with him? But the Prophet dares not argue caſes, where hee had a command; what euer become of Ieroboam, and Iſrael, God muſt bee obeyed; Neither profit, nor hopes may carie vs croſſe to the word of our Maker. How ſafe had this Seer beene, if he had kept him euer vpon this ſure ward; which he no ſooner leaues, then he miſcaries.

So deeply doth God deteſt Idolatry, that he forbids his Prophet to eate the bread, to drinke the water of a people infected with this ſinne; yea to tread in thoſe very ſteps which their feet haue touched. If this inhibition were perſonall, yet the grounds of it are common. No peſtilence ſhould bee more ſhunned then the conuerſation of the miſ-religious, or openly ſcandalous : It is no thanke to vs if their familiarity doe not enſeoffe vs of their wickedneſſe.

I know not what to thinke of an old Prophet that dwels in Bethel, within the ayre of Ieroboams Idol, within the noyſe of his ſacrifices; that liues where the man of God dares not eate; that permitted his ſonnes to bee preſent at that Idolatrous ſeruice : If he were a Prophet of God, what did he now in Bethel? why did hee winke at the ſin of Ieroboam? what needed a Seer to come out of Iuda, for the reproofe of that ſinne, which was acted vnder his noſe? why did he lye? why did his family partake with Idolaters? If hee were not a Prophet of God; how had he true viſions, how had he true meſſages from God: why did he ſecond the menacing word of that Prophet, whom he ſeduced? why did he deſire that his owne bones might be honoured with his Sepulcher? Doubtleſſe he was a Prophet of God, but corrupt, reſtie, vicious : Prophecie doth not alwayes preſuppoſe ſanctification; many a one hath had viſions from God, who ſhall neuer enioy the viſion of God. A very Balaam in his extaſies, hath ſo cleare a Reuelation of the Meſſiah to come, as ſcarce euer any of the holieſt Prophets; yea, his very Aſſe hath both her mouth miraculouſly opened, and her eyes; to ſee and notifie that Angell, which was hid from her Maſter : Yea, Satan himſelfe ſometimes receiues notice from God of his future actions, which elſe that euill Spirit could neither foretell, nor foreſee. Theſe kinds of graces are both rare, and common : rare, in that they are ſeldome giuen to any : common, in that they are indifferently giuen to the euill, and to the good : A little holineſſe is worth much illumination.

Whether out of enuy, to heare that ſaid by the Seer of Iuda, which he either knew not or ſmothered; to heare that done by another, which hee could not haue effected, and could not chooſe but admire : or whether out of deſire to make tryall of the fidelitie of ſo powerfull a Meſſenger, the old Prophet haſtens to ouertake, to recall that man of God, who had ſo defied his Bethel; whom he finds ſitting faint and weary vnder an Oake, in the way; taking the benefit of that ſhade which hee hated to receiue from thoſe contagious groues that he had left behinde him : His habit eaſily bewrayed him, to a man of his owne trade : neither doth his tongue ſpare to profeſſe himſelfe. The old Prophet of Bethel inuites him to a returne, to a repaſt : and is anſwered with the ſame words, wherewith Ieroboams offer was repelled; The man of God varies not a ſyllable from his meſſage : It concernes vs to take good heed of our charge, when we goe on Gods errand. A deniall doth but inuite the importunate; what he cannot doe by entreatie, the old man tries to doe by perſwaſion, I am a Prophet alſo as thou art, and an Angell ſpake to me, by the word of the Lord, ſaying, Bring him backe with thee into thine houſe, that he may eat bread, and drinke water : There is no tentation ſo dangerous, as that which comes ſhrouded vnder a vaile of holineſſe, and pretends authoritie of God himſelfe : Ieroboam threatens, the Prophet ſtands vndanted; Ieroboam fawnes, and promiſes, the Prophet holds conſtant, now comes a gray-headed Seer, and pleads a counter-meſſage from God, the Prophet yeelds, and tranſgreſſes. Satan may affright vs as a fiend, but he ſeduces vs as an Angell of light.

Who would haue lookt for a lyer vnder hoary haires, and an holy mantle? who would not haue truſted that grauity, when there was no colour of any gaine in the vntruth? Nothing is ſo apt to deceiue as the faireſt ſemblances, as the ſweeteſt words. We cannot erre if we beleeue not the ſpeech for the perſon, but the perſon for the ſpeech: Well might this man of God thinke, an aged man, a Prophet, an old Prophet, wil not (ſure) bely God vnto a Prophet; No man will forge a lie, but for an aduantage; What can this man gaine by this match, but the entertainment of an vnprofitable gueſt: Perhaps though God would not allow mee to feaſt with Ieroboam, yet pitying my faintneſſe, he may allow me to eate with a Prophet: Perhaps now that I haue approued my fidelity in refuſing the bread of Bethel, God thinks good to ſend me a gracious releaſe of that ſtrict charge: Why ſhould I thinke that Gods reuelations are not as free to others, as to me? and if this Prophet haue receiued a countermand from an Angell of God, how ſhall I not diſobey God, if I doe not follow him?

Vpon this ground he returnes with this deceitfull hoſt, & when the meat was now in his mouth, receiues the true meſſage of death, from the ſame lips that brought him the falſe meſſage of his inuitation; Thus ſaith the Lord, for as much as thou haſt diſobeyed the mouth of the Lord, & haſt not kept the commandement of the Lord thy God, but cameſt backe and haſt eaten bread, and drunke water in the place forbidden thee, thy carkaſſe ſhal not come to the Sepulcher of thy fathers. Oh wofull Prophet, when hee lookes on his hoſt he ſees his executioner, whiles he is feeding of his body, he heares of his carkaſſe; at the table, he heares of his denied Sepulcher; and all this, for eating and drinking where he was forbidden by God, though bidden as from God: The violation of the leaſt charge of a God is mortall: No pretences can warrant the tranſgreſſion of a diuine command: A word from God is pleaded on both ſides: The one was receiued immediately from God, the other related mediately by man: One the Prophet was ſure of, the other was queſtionable: A ſure word of God may not bee left for an vncertaine: An expreſſe charge of the Almighty admitteth not of any checke: His will is but one, as himſelfe is; and therefore it is out of the danger of contradiction.

Me thinkes I ſee the man of God change countenance at this ſharpe ſauce of his pleaſing morſels; his face before-hand is died with the paleneſſe of death: me thinkes I heare him vrging many vnkind expoſtulations with his iniurious hoſt; who yet diſmiſſes him better prouided for the eaſe of his iourny, then he found him. Perhaps, this officiouſneſſe was out of deſire to make ſome amends for this late ſeducement. It is a poore recompence when he hath betrayed his life, and wronged the ſoule, to caſt ſome courteſies vpon the body.

This old Bethelite that had taken paines to come, and fetch the man of God into ſin, will not now goe backe with him to accompany his departure: Doubtleſſe hee was afraid to be inwrapped in the iudgement, which hee ſaw hanged ouer that obnoxious head: Thus the miſchieuous guides of wickedneſſe leaue a man, when they haue led him to his bane; as familiar Deuils forſake their Witches, when they haue brought them once into fetters.

The man of God returnes alone, carefull (no doubt) and penſiue for his offence, when a Lion out of the wood meets him, aſſaults him, kils him: Oh the iuſt and ſeuere iudgements of the Almighty, who hath brought this fierce beaſt out of his wild ranges, into the high way, to be the executioner of his offending ſeruant: Doubtleſſe this Prophet was a man of great holineſſe, of ſingular fidelity, elſe he durſt not haue been Gods Herald to carie a meſſage of defiance to Ieroboam, King of Iſrael, in the midſt of all his royall magnificence; yet now, for varying from but a circumſtance of Gods command (though vpon the ſuggeſtion of a diuine warrant) is giuen for a prey to the Lion: Our intereſt in God, is ſo farre from excuſing our ſinne, that it aggrauates it; Of all others the ſinne of a Prophet ſhall not paſſe vnreuenged.

The very wild beaſts are led by a prouidence; Their wiſe and powerfull Creator knowes how to ſerue himſelfe of them. The Lions guard one Prophet, kill another, according to the commiſſion receiued from their Maker: What ſinner can hope to eſcape vnpuniſhed, when euery creature of God is ready to be an auenger of euill?

The beaſts of the field were made to ſerue vs, we to ſerue our Creator: When we forſake our homage to him that made vs, it is no maruell if the beaſts forget their duty to vs, and deale with vs not as Maſters, but as rebels: When an holy man abuyes ſo dearely ſuch a ſlight frailty, of a credulous miſtaking, what ſhall become of our hainous and preſumptuous ſinnes?

I cannot thinke but this Prophet died in the fauour of God, though by the teeth of the Lion; His life was forfeited for example, his ſoule was ſafe: Yea his very carkaſſe was left though torne, yet faire after thoſe deadly graſpes; as if God had ſaid, I will onely take thy breath from thee, as the penalty of thy diſobedience, a Lion ſhall doe that which an apoplexie, or feuer might doe: I owe thee no further reuenge then may be ſatisfied with thy blood.

Violent euents doe not alwaies argue the anger of God; Euen death it ſelfe is, to his ſeruants, a fatherly caſtigation.

But oh the vnſearchable wayes of the Almighty! The man of God ſinnes, and dies ſpeedily: the lying Prophet that ſeduced him, ſuruiues; Yea wicked Ieroboam enioyes his Idolatry, and treads vpon the graue of his reprouer: There is neither fauour in the delay of ſtripes, nor diſpleaſure in the haſte; Rather whom God loues, he chaſtiſes, as ſharply, ſo ſpeedily; whiles the reſt proſper to condemnation: Euen the rod of a louing father may draw blood: How much happier is it for vs that wee die now, to liue for euer, then that we liue a while, to die euer?

Had this Lion ſet vpon the Prophet for hunger, why did hee not deuoure as well as kill him? Why did he not rather kill the beaſt then the man? ſince we know the nature of the Lion ſuch, that he is not wont to aſſaile man, ſaue in the extreme want of other prey. Certainly the ſame power that imployed thoſe fangs, reſtrained them, that the world might ſee, it was not appetite that prouoked the beaſt to this violence, but the ouer-ruling command of God: Euen ſo, O Lord, thy powerfull hand is ouer that roaring Lion, that goes about continually, ſeeking whom hee may deuoure? thine hand with-holds him, that though he may ſhed the blood of thine elect, yet he cannot hurt their ſoules; and whiles he doth thoſe things which thou permitteſt, and ordereſt to thy iuſt ends, yet he cannot doe leſſer things, which he deſireth, and thou permitteſt not.

The fierce beaſt ſtands by the carkaſſe; as to auow his owne act, and to tell who ſent him: ſo to preſerue that body, which he hath ſlaine: Oh wonderfull worke of God, the Executioner is turned Guardian; and (as the Officer of the higheſt) commands all other creatures to ſtand aloofe from his charge: and commands the fearfull Aſſe, that brought this burthen thither, not to ſtirre thence, but ſtand ready preſt, to recarie it to the Sepulcher: and now, when he hath ſufficiently witneſſed to all paſſengers, that this act was not done vpon his own hunger, but vpon the quarrell of his Maker, he deliuers vp his charge to that old Prophet; who was no leſſe guilty of this blood then himſelfe.

This old Seducer hath ſo much truth, as both to giue a right Commentary vpon Gods intention, in this act, for the terrour of the diſobedient, and to giue his voice to the certaintie of that future iudgement, which his late gueſt had threatned to Iſrael: (ſometimes it pleaſeth the wiſedome of God to expreſſe and iuſtifie himſelfe euen by the tongues of faulty Inſtruments.) Withall, he hath ſo much faith and courage, as to fetch that carkaſſe from the Lion; ſo much pitty and compaſſion, as to weepe for the man of God, to interre him in his owne Sepulcher; ſo much loue, as to wiſh himſelfe ioyned in death, to that body, which he had haſtened vnto death: It is hard to finde a man abſolutely wicked: Some grace will bewray it ſelfe in the moſt forſaken breſts.

It is a cruell courteſie to kill a man, and then to helpe him to his graue; to betray a man with our breath and then to bedew him with our teares: The Prophet had needed no ſuch friend, if hee had not met with ſuch an enemy: The mercies of the wicked are cruell.

IEROBOAMS Wiſe.

IT is no meaſuring of Gods fauour by the line of outward welfare: Ieroboam the idolatrous vſurper of Iſrael proſpers better, then the true heires of Dauid; Hee liues to ſee three ſucceſſions in the throne of Iudah; Thus the Iuy liues, when the Oake is dead. Yet could not that miſ-gotten crown of his, keepe his head alwaies from aching: He hath his croſſes too: God whips ſometimes more then his owne: His enemies ſmart from him, as well as his children: his children in loue, his enemies in iudgment: Not ſimply the rod argues loue, but the temper of the hand, that weelds it, and the backe that feeles it: Firſt Ieroboams hand was ſtriken, now his Sonne: Abijah the eldeſt, the beſt ſonne of Ieroboam, is ſmitten with ſickneſſe: As children are but the pieces of their Parents in another skin, ſo Parents are no leſſe ſtriken in their children, then in their naturall lims; Ieroboam doth not more feele his arme, then his ſonne: not wicked men onely, but beaſts may haue naturall affections: It is no thanke to any creature, to loue his owne.

Nature wrought in Ieroboam, not grace: He is enough troubled with his ſons diſeaſe, no whit bettered: I would haue heard him ſay; God followes me with his afflictions, it is for mine impietie: what other meaſure can I expect from his iuſtice? Whiles mine Idols ſtand, how can I looke that my houſe ſhould proſper? I will turne from my wickednes, O God, turne thou from thy wrath; Theſe thoughts were too good for that obdured heart: his ſon is ſick, he is ſorowfull; but (as an amazed man ſeeks to goe forth at the wrong doore) his diſtraction ſends him to a falſe help: He thinks not of God, he thinks of his Prophet: He thinkes of the Prophet that had foretold him he ſhould be a King; he thinkes not of the God of that Prophet who made him a King: It is the property of a carnall heart to confine both his Obligations, and his hopes to the meanes, neglecting the Author of good. Vaine is the reſpect that is giuen to the ſeruant, where the Maſter is contemned.

Extremity drawes Ieroboams thoughts to the Prophet; whom elſe hee had not cared to remember. The King of Iſrael had Diuines enough of his owne: Elſe, he muſt needs haue thought them miſerable gods that were not worth a Prophet: And beſides, there was an old Prophet (if he yet ſuruiued) dwelling within the ſmoak of his Palace, whoſe viſions had beene too well approued: why would Ieroboam ſends ſo farre to an Abijah? Certainly, his heart deſpiſed thoſe baſe prieſts of his high places; neither could he truſt either to the gods, or the Clergie of his own making: His conſcience reſts vpon the fidelitie of that man, whoſe doctrine hee had forſaken: How did this Idolater ſtriue againſt his owne heart, whiles hee inwardly deſpiſed thoſe, whom he profeſſed to honour; and inwardly honoured them, whom hee profeſſed to deſpiſe? Wicked breſts are falſe to themſelues; neither truſting to their owne choyce, nor making choyce of that, which they may dare to truſt. They will ſet a good face vpon their ſecretly vnpleaſing ſinnes, and had rather bee ſelfe-condemned, then wiſe and penitent: As for that old Seer, it is like Ieroboam knew his skill, but doubted of his ſinceritie; that man was too much his neighbour to be good: Abijahs truth had beene tryed in a caſe of his owne: Hee whoſe word was found iuſt in the prediction of his Kingdome, was well worthy of credit in the newes of his ſonne: Experience is a great encouragement of our truſt: It is a good matter to be faithfull; this loadſtone of our fidelity ſhall draw to vs euen hearts of iron, & hold them to our reliance: As contrarily deceit doth both argue, and make a bankrupt; who can truſt where he is diſappointed? O God, ſo oft, ſo euer, haue we found thee true in all thy promiſes, in all thy performances, that if we doe not ſeeke thee, if wee doe not truſt thee in the ſequell, wee are worthy of our loſſe, worthy of thy deſertions.

Yet I do not ſee that Ieroboam ſends to the Prophet for his aide, but for intelligence: Curioſity is guilty of this meſſage, and not deuotion; hee cals not for the prayers, not for the benediction of that holy man, but for meere information of the euent. He well ſaw what the prayers of a Prophet could doe: That which cured his hand, might it not haue cured his ſonne? Yet he that ſaid to a man of God, Intreat the face of the Lord thy God, that he may reſtore my hand: ſayes not now in his meſſage to Abijah, Intreat thy God to reſtore my Sonne: Sinne makes ſuch a ſtrangeneſſe betwixt God and man, that the guilty heart either thinkes not of ſuing to God or feares it: What a poore contentment it was to foreknow that euill which hee could not auoid, and whoſe notice could but haſten his miſery? Yet, thus fond is our reſtleſſe curioſity, that it ſeekes eaſe in the drawing on of torment: He is worthy of ſorrow that will not ſtay till it comes to him, but goes to fetch it.

Whom doth Ieroboam ſend on this meſſage, but his wife, & how but diſguiſed? Why her, and why thus? Neither durſt he truſt this errand with another, nor with her in her own forme: It was a ſecret that Ieroboam ſends to a Prophet of God; none might know it but his owne boſome, and ſhe that lay in it; if this had bin noiſed in Iſrael, the example had been dangerous: Who would not haue ſaid, the King is glad to leaue his counterfet deities: and ſeeke to the true: Why ſhould we adhere to them whom he forſakes? As the meſſage muſt not be knowne to the people: ſo ſhee that beares it muſt not be knowne to the Prophet, her name, her habit muſt be changed: ſhee muſt put off her robes, and put on a ruſſet coat; ſhe muſt put off the Queene, and put on the peaſant: in ſtead of her Scepter, ſhe muſt take vp a basket, and goe a masked pilgrimage to Shiloh: Oh the fondnes of vaine men that thinke to iuggle with the Almighty, & to hide their counſels from that all-ſeeing eye! If this change of habit were neceſſary at Bethel, yet what needs it at Shiloh; though ſhe would hide her face from her ſubiects, yet why ſhould ſhe not pull off her muffler, and ſhew her ſelfe to the Prophet? Certainly, what policy began, guiltineſſe muſt continue: Well might ſhe thinke, there can bee no good anſwer expected of the wife of Ieroboam; my preſence will doe no leſſe, then ſolicit a reproofe: No Prophet can ſpeake well to the conſort of a founder of Idolatry; I may perhaps heare good as another, though as my ſelfe I can looke for nothing, but tydings of euill: Wicked hearts know they deſerue ill at Gods hands, and therefore they doe all they can to auoyd the eyes of his diſpleaſed iuſtice, and if they cannot doe it by colours of diſſimulation, they will doe it by imploration of ſhelter; they ſhall ſay to the Rocks, Fall on vs, and couer vs.

But oh the groſſe folly mixt with the craft of wickedneſſe! could Ieroboam thinke that the Prophet could know the euent of his ſons diſeaſe, & did he thinke that he could not know the diſguiſe of his Wife? the one was preſent, the other future; this was but wrapt in a clout, that euent was wrapt vp in the counſell of God. Yet this politike head preſumes that the greater ſhall be reuealed, where the leſſer ſhall bee hid: There was neuer wicked man that was not infatuate, and in nothing more then in thoſe things wherein he hoped moſt to tranſcend the reach of others.

Abijah ſhunning the iniquity of the times, was retired to a ſolitary corner of Shiloh; no place could be too priuate for an honeſt Prophet, in ſo extreame deprauedneſſe: Yet euen there doth the King of Iſrael take notice of his recluſion, and ſend his wife to that poore cell, laden with preſents; preſents that diſſembled their bearer: had ſhe offered iewels, or gold, her greatneſſe had bin ſuſpected: now ſhe brings loaues and cracknels, and honey, her hand anſwers her backe: She giues as ſhe ſeemes, not as ſhe is: Something ſhe muſt giue, euen when ſhe acts the pooreſt client.

The Prophets of God were not wont to haue empty viſitations: they who hated bribes, yet refuſed not tokens of gratitude: Yea the God of heauen who neither needs our goods, nor is capable of our gratifications, yet would haue no man to come to him gift-leſſe: Woe to thoſe ſacrilegious hands, that in ſtead of bringing to the Prophets carie from them.

Ieroboam was a bad man, yet, as he had a towardly ſon, ſo he had an obedient wife; elſe ſhe had not wanted excuſes to turne off both the iourney, and the diſguiſe; againſt the diſguiſe ſhee had pleaded the vnbeſeemingneſſe for her perſon and ſtate; againſt the iourney, the perils of ſo long and ſolitary a walke; perhaps a Lion might be in the way; the Lion that tore the Prophet in peices; perhaps robbers; or if not they, perhaps her chaſtity might be in danger: an vnguarded ſolitarineſſe in the weaker ſexe might bee a prouocation to ſome forced vncleanneſſe: ſhe caſts off all theſe ſhifting proiections of feare, according to the will of her husband, ſhe changes her raiment, ſhe ſets vpon the iourney, and ouercomes it: What needed this diſguiſe to an old Prophet whoſe dim eyes were ſet with age? All cloathes, all faces were alike to a blind Seer: The viſions of Abijah were inward; neither was his bodily ſight more dusky, then the eyes of his minde were cleare & piercing: It was not the common light of men whereby hee ſaw, but diuine illumination; things abſent, things future, were no leſſe obuious to thoſe ſpirituall beames, then preſent things are to vs: Ere the quick eyes of that great Lady can diſcerne him, he hath eſpied her; and ſo ſoone as he heares the ſound of her feete, ſhee heares from him the ſound of her name, Come in thou Wife of Ieroboam: How GOD laughtes in heauen at the friuolous fetches of crafty politicians, and when they thinke themſelues moſt ſure, ſhames them with a detection, with a defeat? What an idleneſſe it is for fooliſh Hypocrites to hope they can dance in a net vnſeene of heauen?

Neuer before was this Queene troubled to heare of her ſelfe; now ſhee is: her very name ſtrucke her with aſtoniſhment; and prepares her for the aſſured horrour of following iudgements, I am ſent to thee with heauy tydings; Goe tell Ieroboam: Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael. Could this Lady leſſe wonder at the mercy of this ſtile of God, then tremble at the ſequel of his iuſtice? Lo Iſrael hath forſakẽ God, yet God ſtil ownes Iſrael. Iſrael had gone a whoring, yet God hath not diuorced her: Oh the infinit goodnes of our long-ſuffering God, whom our fouleſt ſins cannot rob of his compaſſions.

By how much dearer Iſrael was to God, ſo much more odious is Ieroboam that hath marred Iſrael: Terrible is that vengeance which God thunders againſt him by his Prophet whoſe paſſionate meſſage vpbraids him with his promotions, chargeth him with his ſinnes, and laſtly denounceth his iudgements: No mouth was fitter to caſt this royalty in the teeth of Ieroboam, then that, by which it was firſt foretold, fore-promiſed; Euery circumſtance of the aduancement aggrauates the ſin, I exalted thee: Thou couldeſt not riſe to honour alone, I exalted thee from among the people: not from the Peeres; thy ranke was but common, before this riſe: I exalted thee from among the people to be a Prince; ſubordinate height was not enough for thee, no ſeat would ſerue thee but a throne; Yea to be a Prince of my people Iſrael: No Nation was for thee, but my choſen one; none but my royall inheritance: Neither did I rayſe thee into a vacant throne, a forlorne and forſaken Principalitie might be thankleſſe: but I rent the Kingdome away from another for thy ſake, yea from what other but the grandchild of Dauid? out of his hands did I wreſt the Scepter, to giue it into thine: Oh what high fauours doth God ſometimes caſt away vpon vnworthy ſubiects? How doe his abuſed bounties double both their ſinne and iudgement.

The ſinnes of this Prince were no leſſe eminent then his obligations, therefore his iudgements ſhall bee no leſſe eminent then his ſinnes: How bitterly doth GOD expreſſe that, which ſhall be more bitter in the execution: Behold, I will bring euill vpon the houſe of Ieroboam, and will cut off from Ieroboam, him that piſſeth againſt the wall; and him that is ſhut vp, and left in Iſrael, and will take away the remnant of the houſe of Ieroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone: Him that dieth of Ieroboam in the City ſhall the dogs eate, and him that dyeth in the field, ſhall the fowles of the ayre eat: Oh heauy loade that this diſguiſed Princeſſe muſt carie to her Husband; but becauſe theſe euils, though grieuous, yet might be remote, therefore for a preſent hanſell of vengeance, ſhe is diſmiſſed with the ſad tydings, of the death of her ſonne; When thy feet enter into the City, the Childe ſhall dye: It is heauy newes for a mother that ſhee muſt leeſe her ſonne, but worſe yet that ſhee may not ſee him; In theſe caſes of our finall departures, our preſence giues ſome mitigation to our griefe: might ſhee but haue cloſed the eyes, and haue receiued the laſt breath of her dying ſonne, the loſſe had bin more tolerable; I know not how our perſonall farewell eaſes our heart euen whiles it increaſes our paſſion; but now ſhe ſhall no more ſee, nor bee ſeene of her Abijah: She ſhall no ſooner be in the City, then hee ſhall bee out of the world: Yet, more to perfect her ſorrow, ſhee heares that in him alone there is found ſome good; the reſt of her iſſue, are graceleſſe; ſhe muſt leeſe the good, and hold the graceleſſe; he ſhall die to afflict her, they ſhall liue to afflict her.

Yet what a mixture is here of ſeuerity and fauour in one act? fauour to the ſonne, ſeuerity to the father: Seuerity to the father, that he muſt leeſe ſuch a ſonne, fauour to the ſonne that he ſhall be taken from ſuch a father: Ieroboam is wicked, and therefore he ſhall not enioy an Abijah; Abijah hath ſome good things, therefore hee ſhall be remoued from the danger of the deprauation of Ieroboam: Sometimes God ſtrikes in fauour, but more often forbeares out of ſeuerity: The beſt are fitteſt for heauen; the earth is fitteſt for the worſt; this is the region of ſinne, and miſery, that of immortality: It is no argument of diſ-fauour to be taken early from a well-led life; as not of approbation to age in ſinne.

As the ſoule of Abijah is fauoured in the remouall, ſo is his body with a buriall; hee ſhall haue alone both teares and tombe; all the reſt of his brethen ſhall haue no graue but dogs and fowles; no ſorrow but for their life: Though the carkaſſe be inſenſible of any poſition, yet honeſt Sepulture is a bleſſing: It is fit the body ſhould bee duely reſpected on earth, whoſe ſoule is glorious in heauen.

Asa.

THe two houſes of Iuda, and Iſrael, grow vp now together in an ambitious riualitie; this ſplitted plant branches out ſo ſeuerally, as if it had forgotten that euer it was ioyned in the root: The throne of David oft changeth the poſſeſſors; & more complaineth of their iniquity, then their remoue: Abijam inherits the ſins of his father Rehoboam, no leſſe then his Crown: and ſo ſpends his three yeares, as if he had beene no whit of kin to his grandfathers vertues. It is no newes that grace is not traduced, whiles vice it: Therefore is his reigne ſhort becauſe it was wicked: It was a ſad caſe when both the Kings of Iudah and Iſraell (though enemies) yet conſpired in ſinne: Rehoboam (like his father Salomon) began gratiouſly, but fell to Idolatry: as he followed his father, ſo his ſonne, ſo his people followed him. Oh, what a face of a Church was here, when Iſrael worſhipped Ieroboams calues, when Iudah built them high places, and Images, and groues on euery high Hill, and vnder euery greene tree: On both hands GOD is forſaken, his Temple neglected, his worſhip adulterate: and this, not for ſome ſhort brunt, but during the ſuceſſion of two Kings: For, after the firſt three yeares Rehoboam changed his fathers Religion (as his ſhields) from gold to braſſe; the reſt of his ſeuenteene yeares were ledde in impietie: His ſonne Abijam trod in the ſame mierie ſteps, and Iudah with them both: If there were any (doubtleſſe there were ſome) faithfull hearts, yet remaining in both Kingdomes, during theſe heauy times, what a corroſiue it muſt needs haue beene to them, to ſee ſo deplored and miſerable a deprauation.

There was no viſible Church vpon earth, but here; and this what a one? Oh GOD, how low doeſt thou ſometimes ſuffer thine owne flocke to bee driuen? What woefull wanes, and eclipſes haſt thou ordayned for this heauenly body? Yet at laſt, an Aſa ſhall ariſe from the loynes, from the graue of Abijam: hee ſhall reuiue David & reforme Iudah: The gloomy times of corruption ſhall not laſt alwaies: The light of truth and peace ſhall at length breake out, and bleſſe the ſad hearts of the righteous.

It is a wonder how Aſa ſhould bee good, of the ſeed of Abijam, of the ſoyle of Maachah, both wicked, both Idolatrous; God would haue vs ſee that grace is from heauen, neither needes the helpes of theſe earthly conueiances: Should not the children of good parents ſometimes be euill, and the children of euill parents, good; vertue would ſeeme naturall, and the giuer would leeſe his thankes: Thus we haue ſeene a fayre flower ſpring out of dung; and a well-fruited tree riſe out of a ſowre ſtocke: Education hath no leſſe power to corrupt, then nature; It is therefore the iuſt prayſe of Aſa that being trained vp vnder an Idolatrous Maachah, hee maintained his piety; As contrarily, it is a ſhame for thoſe that haue beene bred vp in the precepts and examples of vertue and Godlineſſe, to fall off to lewdneſſe, or ſuperſtition: There are foure principall monuments of Aſaes vertue, as ſo many rich ſtones in his Diadem: He tooke away Sodomie, and Idols out of Iudah; Who cannot wonder more that he found them there, then that he remoued them? What a ſtrange incongruitie is this; Sodom in Ieruſalem? Idols in Iudah? Surely debauched profeſſion proues deſperate; Admit the Idols, yee cannot doubt of the Sodomy; If they haue changed the glory of the vncorruptible God, into an Image, made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and foure-footed beaſts, and creeping things, it is no maruell, if God giue them vp to vncleanneſſe through the luſts of their owne hearts, to diſhonour their owne bodies, betweene themſelues; If they changed the truth of God into a lye, and worſhipped and ſerued the creature more then the Creator, who is bleſſed for euer, no maruell, if God giue them to vile affections, to change the naturall vſe into that which is againſt nature; burning in luſt one towards another, men with men working that which is vnſeemly.

Contrarily, admit the Sodomy, yee cannot doubt of the Idols; vnnaturall beaſtlineſſe in manners, is puniſhed iuſtly with a ſottiſh dotage in religion; bodily pollution with ſpirituall: How ſhould the ſoule care to bee chaſte, that keepes a ſtewes in the body? Aſa begins with the baniſhment of both; ſcouring Iudah of this double vncleanneſſe: In vaine ſhould he haue hoped to reſtore God to his Kingdome, whiles theſe abominations inhabited it; It is iuſtly the maine care of worthy, and religious Princes, to cleare their Coaſts of the fouleſt ſinnes: Oh the vnpartiall zeale of Aſa; There were Idols that challenged a prerogatiue of fauour; The Idols that his father had made, all theſe he defaces; the name of a father cannot protect an Idoll: The duty to his Parent cannot winne him to a liking, to a forbearance of his miſdeuotion: Yea, ſo much the more doth the heart of Aſa riſe againſt theſe puppets, for that they were the ſinne, the ſhame of his father: Did there want (thinke we) ſome Courtier of his Fathers retinue, to ſay: Sir, fauour the memory of him that begot you; you cannot demoliſh theſe ſtatues, without the diſhonour of their Erector: Hide your diſlike at the leaſt; It will bee your glory to lay your finger vpon this blot of your fathers reputation: If you liſt not to allow his act, yet winke at it: The godly zeale of Aſa turnes the deafe eare to theſe monitors, and lets them ſee, that he doth not more honor a father, then hate an Idol; No deareneſſe of perſon ſhould take off the edge of our deteſtation of the ſinne. Nature is worthy of forgetfulneſſe, and contempt, in oppoſition to the God of Nature: Vpon the ſame ground, as hee remoued the Idols of his father Abijam, ſo for Idols he remoued his Grand-mother Maachah; ſhee would not bee remoued from her obſcene Idols, ſhe is therefore remoued from the ſtation of her honour: That Princeſſe had aged both in her regency, and ſuperſtition: Vnder her rod was Aſa brought vp; and ſchooled in the rudiments of her Idolatry; whom ſhe could not infect, ſhe hoped to ouer-awe; ſo, as if Aſa will not follow her gods, yet ſhe preſumes that ſhee may retaine her owne: Doubtleſſe, no meanes were neglected for her reclamation; none would preuaile: Religious Aſa gathers vp himſelfe, and begins to remember that he is a King, though a ſonne: that ſhee, though a mother yet is a ſubiect: that her eminence could not but countenance Idolatry, that her greatneſſe ſuppreſſed religion: which hee ſhould in vaine hope to reforme, whiles her ſuperſtition ſwayed: forgeting therefore the challenges of nature, the awe of infancy, the cuſtome of reuerence, hee ſtrips her of that command, which hee ſaw preiudiciall to his Maker; All reſpects of fleſh and blood muſt be trampled on, for God: Could that long-ſetled Idolatry want abettors? Queſtionleſſe, ſome or other would ſay; This was the religion of your father Abijam, this of your Grand-father Rehoboam, this of the latter dayes of your wiſe and great Grand-father Salomon, this of your Grand-mother Maachah, this of your great Grand-mother Naamah; why ſhould it not be yours? Why ſhould you ſuſpect either the wiſedome, or piety, or ſaluation of ſo many Predeceſſors? Good Aſa had learned to contemne preſcription againſt a direct law: He had the grace to know it was no meaſuring truth by ſo moderne antiquity; his eyes ſcorning to looke ſo low, raiſe vp themſelues to the vncorrupt times of Salomon, to Dauid, to Samuel, to the Iudges, to Ieſhua, to Moſes, to the Patriarkes, to Noah, to the religious founders of the firſt world, to the firſt father of mankinde; to Paradiſe, to Heauen: In compariſon of theſe, Maachahs God cannot ouerlooke yeſterday; the ancienteſt error is but a nouice, to Truth; And if neuer any example could be pleaded for purity of religion; it is enough that the precept is expreſs: Hee knew what God ſayd in Sinai, and wrote in the Tables: Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelfe any grauen image, nor any ſimilitude; Thou ſhalt not bow downe to them nor worſhip them: If all the world had beene an Idolater, euer ſince that word was giuen, hee knew how little that precedent could auaile for diſobedience: Practice muſt bee corrected by law, and not the law yeeld to practice: Maachah therefore goes downe from her ſeat; her Idols from their groue; ſhee to retiredneſſe, they to the fire, and from thence to the water: Wofull deities that could both burne, and drowne.

Neither did the zeale of Aſa more magnifie it ſelfe in theſe priuatiue acts of weeding out the corruptions of Religion, then in the poſitiue acts of an holy plantation; In the falling of thoſe Idolatrous ſhrines, the Temple of God flouriſhes; That doth he furniſh with thoſe ſacred treaſures, which were dedicated by himſelfe, by his Progenitors; Like the true ſonne of Dauid, hee would not ſerue God coſt-free: Rehoboam turned Salomons gold into braſſe: Aſa turnes Rehoboams braſſe into gold: Some of theſe veſſels (it ſeemes) Abijam (Aſaes father) had dedicated to God; but after his vow, inquired; yea with-held them: Aſa, like a good ſonne, payes his fathers debts, and his owne. It is a good ſigne of a well-meant deuotion, when wee can abide it chargeable; as contrarily in the affaires of God a niggardly hand argues a cold, and hollow heart.

All theſe were noble and excellent acts, the extirpation of Sodomie, the demolition of Idols, the remouall of Maachah, the bounteous contribution to the Temple; but that which giues true life vnto all theſe, is a ſound root: Aſaes heart was perfect with the Lord all his dayes; No leſſe laudable workes then theſe haue proceeded from Hypocriſie; which whiles they haue caried away applauſe from men, haue loſt their thankes with God: All Aſaes gold was but droſſe to his pure intentions.

But oh what great, and many infirmities may conſiſt with vprightneſſe? what allayes of imperfection will there be found in the moſt refined ſoule? Foure no ſmall faults are found in true-hearted Aſa: Firſt the high-places ſtood ſtill, vnremoued; What high-places? There were ſome dedicated to the worſhip of falſe gods; theſe Aſa tooke away: There were ſome miſdeuoted to the worſhip of the true God; theſe hee lets ſtand; There was groſſe Idolatry in the former; there was a weake wil-worſhip in the latter; whiles hee oppoſes impiety, hee winkes at miſtakings, yet euen the varietie of altars was forbidden by an expreſſe charge from God, who had confined his ſeruice to the Temple: With one breath doth God report both theſe; The high places were not remoued, yet neuertheleſſe Aſaes heart was perfit. God will not ſee weakeneſſes, where he ſees truth: How pleaſing a thing is ſinceritie, that in fauour thereof the mercy of our iuſt God digeſts many an errour: Oh God, let our hearts goe vpright, through our feet ſlide, the fall cannot (through thy grace) be deadly; how euer it may ſhame or paine vs.

2 Beſides, to confront his riuall of Iſrael, Baaſha, this religious King of Iudah fetches in Benhadad the King of Syria into Gods inheritance, vpon too deare a rate; the breach of his league, the expilation of the Temple. All the wealth wherewith Aſa had endowed the Houſe of the Lord, was little enough to hire an Edomite, to betray his fideltie, and to inuade Iſrael: Leagues may bee made with Infidels; not at ſuch a price, vpon ſuch tearmes; There can bee no warrant for a wilfull ſubornation of perfidiouſneſſe: In theſe caſes of outward things, the mercy of God diſpenceth with our true neceſſities, not with the affected: O Aſa where was thy piety, whiles thou robbeſt God, to corrupt an Infidell for the ſlaughter of Iſraelites? O Princes, where is your pietie, whiles yee hire Turkes to the ſlaughter of Chriſtians? to the ſpoile of Gods Church?

3 Yet (which was worſe) Aſa doth not onely imploy the Syrian, but relies on him, relies not on God; A confidence leſſe ſinfull coſt his Grand-father Dauid deare: And when Hanani Gods Seer, the Herald of heauen, came to denounce warre againſt him for theſe ſinnes, Aſa in ſtead of penitence, breakes into choler: Fury ſparkles in thoſe eyes, which ſhould haue guſhed out with water; Thoſe lips that ſhould haue call'd for mercy, command reuenge; How ill doe theſe two agree, The heart of Dauid, the tongue of Ieroboam? That holy Grand-father of his would not haue done ſo; when Gods meſſenger reproued him for ſinne, hee condemned it, and himſelfe for it; I ſee his teares, I doe not heare his threats: It ill becomes a faithfull heart to rage, where it ſhould ſorrow; and in ſtead of ſubmiſſion, to perſecute: Sometimes no difference appeares betwixt a ſonne of Dauid, and the ſonne of Nebat: Any man may doe ill, but to defend it, to outface it, is for rebels; yet euen vpright Aſa impriſons the Prophet, and cruſheth his gainſayers. It were pitie that the beſt man ſhould bee iudged by euery of his actions, and not by all; The courſe of our life muſt either allow or condemne vs, not theſe ſudden eruptions.

4 As the Life, ſo the Death-bed of Aſa wanted not infirmities; Long and proſperous had his reigne beene; now after forty yeares health and happineſſe, hee that impriſoned the Prophet, is impriſoned in his bed; There is more paine in thoſe fetters which God put vpon Aſa, then thoſe which Aſa puts vpon Hanani: And now, behold, hee that in his warre ſeekes to Benhadad, not to God, in his ſickneſſe ſeekes not to God, but to Phyſitians: Wee cannot eaſily put vpon God a greater wrong, then the alienation of our truſt: Earthly meanes are for vſe, not for confidence; We may, wee muſt imploy them; we may not rely vpon them: Well may God challenge our truſt, as his peculiar, which if wee caſt vpon any creature, wee deifie it: Whence haue herbes, and drugges, and Phyſitians, their being, and efficacie, but from that diuine hand? No maruell then if Aſaes gout ſtrucke to his heart, and his feet caried him to his graue, ſince his heart was miſcaried for the cure of his feet, to an iniurious miſ-confidence in the meanes, with neglect of his Maker.

ELIJAH with the SAREPTAN.

WHo ſhould be match't with Moſes in the hill of Tabor, but Elijah? Surely next after Moſes, there was neuer any Prophet of the old Teſtament more glorious then hee: None more glorious, none more obſcure; The other Prophets are not mentioned without the name of their Parent, for the mutuall honour both of the father, and the ſonne; Elijah, (as if he had beene a ſonne of the earth) come forth with the bare mention of the place of his birth; Meanneſſe of deſcent is no blocke in Gods way to the moſt honourable vocations; It matters not whoſe ſonne he be whom God will grace with his ſeruice: In the greateſt honours that humane nature is capable of, God forgets our parents: As when we ſhall be raiſed vp to a glorious life, there ſhall be no reſpect had to the loines whence we came; ſo it is proportionally in theſe ſpirituall aduancements.

Theſe times were fit for an Elijah; an Elijah was fit for them; The eminenteſt Prophet is reſerued for the corrupteſt age; Iſrael had neuer ſuch a King as Ahab, for impiety; neuer ſo miraculous a Prophet, as Elijah; This Elijah is addreſſed to this Ahab; The God of Spirits knowes how to proportion men to the occaſions; and to raiſe vp to himſelfe ſuch witneſſes, as may be moſt able to conuince the world: A milde Moſes was for the low eſtate of afflicted Iſrael; milde of ſpirit, but mighty in wonders; milde of ſpirit, becauſe he had to doe with a perſecuted, and yet a techy and peruerſe people; mighty in wonders, becauſe he had to doe with a Pharaoh. A graue and holy Samuel was for the quiet conſiſtence of Iſrael; A fierie-ſpirited Elijah was for the deſperateſt declination of Iſrael: and if in the late times of the depraued condition of his Church, God haue raiſed vp ſome ſpirits that haue beene more warme, and ſtirring, then thoſe of common mould, wee cannot cenſure the choyce, when we ſee the ſeruice.

The firſt word that we heare from Elijah, is an oath, and a threat to Ahab, to Iſrael: As the Lord God of Iſrael liueth, before whom I ſtand, there ſhall not be dew, nor raine, theſe yeares but according to my word: Hee comes in like a Tempeſt, who went out in a whirl-wind; Doubtleſſe he had ſpoken faire, and peaceable inuitations to Iſrael (though wee heare them not;) This was but the ſtorme which followed his repulſe, their obſtinacy; After many ſolicitations, and warnings, Iſrael is ſtricken by the ſame tongue that had prayed for it; Elijah dares auouch theſe iudgements to their head, to Ahab: I doe not ſo much wonder at the boldneſſe of Elijah, as at his power; Yea, who ſees his power, can no whit wonder at his boldneſſe: How could hee bee but bold to the face of a man, who was thus powerfull with God? As if God had lent him the keyes of heauen to ſhut it vp, and open it at pleaſure; hee can ſay, There ſhall be neither dew, nor raine, theſe yeares but according to my word; Oh God, how farre it hath pleaſed thee to communicate thy ſelfe to a weake man? What Angell could euer ſay thus? Thy hand, O Lord, is not ſhortned; Why art thou not thus maruellous in the miniſters of thy Goſpell? Is it for that their miracles were ours? Is it for that thou wouldſt haue vs liue by faith, not by ſenſe? Is it for that our taske is more ſpirituall, and therefore more abſtracted from bodily helpes? we cannot command the Sunne with Ioſhua, nor the Thunder with Samuel, nor the Raine with Elijah; It ſhall content vs if we can fixe the Sunne of righteouſneſſe in the ſoule, if wee can thunder out the iudgements of God againſt ſinne, if wee can water the earthen hearts of men with the former, and latter raine of heauenly doctrine.

Elijahs mantle cannot make him forget his fleſh; whiles he knowes himſelfe a Prophet, he remembers to be a man; hee doth not therefore arrogate his power, as his owne, but publiſheth it as his maſters; This reſtraint muſt be according to his word; and that word was from an higher mouth, then his; He ſpake from him by whom he ſware; whoſe word was ſure as his life; and therefore he durſt ſay, As the Lord liueth, there ſhall be no raine: Man onely can denounce what God will execute; which when it is once reuealed, can no more faile, then the Almighty himſelfe.

He that had this intereſt and power in heauen, what needed he flee from an earthly purſuit? Could his prayers reſtraine the clouds, and not hold the hands of fleſh and blood? Yet behold Elijahs muſt flee from Ahab, and hide him by the brooke Cherith; The wiſedome of God doth not thinke fit ſo to make a beaten path of miracles; at that hee will not walke beſide it; Hee will haue our owne indeuours concurre to our preſeruation; Elijah wanted neither courage of heart, nor ſtrength of hand, and yet he muſt truſt to his feet for ſafety; How much more lawfull is it for our impotency to flee from perſecution? Euen that God ſends him to hide his head, who could as eaſily haue protected, as nouriſhed him: Hee that wilfully ſtands ſtill to latch dangers, tempteth God in ſtead of truſting him.

The Prophet muſt be gone; not without order taken for his purueyance; Oh the ſtrange Cators for Elijah, I haue commanded the Rauens to feed thee there; I know not whether had beene more miraculous, to preſerue him without meat, or to prouide meat by ſuch mouthes: The Rauen, a deuouring and rauenous fowle, that vſes to ſnatch away meat for others, brings it to him: Hee that could haue fed Elijah by Angels, will feed him by Rauens; There was then in Iſrael an hoſpitall Obadiah, that kept a ſecret Table in two ſeuerall caues, for an hundred Prophets of God; There were ſeuen thouſand faithfull Iſraelites (in ſpight of the Diuell) who had neuer bowed knee to Baal; Doubtleſſe, any of theſe would haue had a trencher ready for Elijah, and haue thought himſelfe happy to haue defrauded his owne maw, for ſo noble a Prophet; God rather choſes to make vſe of the moſt vnlikely fowles of the ayre, then their bounty; that hee might giue both to his Prophet, and vs a pregnant proofe of his abſolute command ouer all his creatures, and winne our truſt in all extremities. Who can make queſtion of the prouiſions of God, when he ſees the very Rauens ſhall forget their owne hunger, and puruey for Elijah? Oh God, thou that prouideſt meat for the fowles of the ayre, wilt make the fowles of the ayre prouide meat for man, rather then his dependance on thee ſhall be diſappointed; Oh let not our faith be wanting to thee, thy care can neuer be wanting to vs.

Elijah might haue liued for the time with bread and water; neither had his fare been worſe then his fellowes in the caues of Obadiah; but the munificence of God will haue his meales better furniſhed; The Rauens ſhall bring him both bread, and fleſh, twice in the day; It is not for a perſecuted Prophet to long after delicates; God giues order of competency, not for wantonneſſe; Not out of the daintie compoſitions in Iezebels kitchin, not out of the pleaſant Wines in her celler; would God prouide for Elijah, but the Rauens ſhall bring him plaine, and homely victualls, and the riuer ſhall affoord him drinke; If we haue wherewith to ſuſtaine nature (though not to pamper it) we owe thankes to the giuer; Thoſe of Gods family may not be curious, not diſdainfull: Ill doth it become a ſeruant of the higheſt, to be a ſlaue to his palate. Doubtleſſe, one bit from the mouth of the Rauen was more pleaſing to Elijah, then a whole Table-full of Ahab: Nothing is more comfortable to Gods children, then to ſee the ſenſible demonſtrations of the diuine care, and prouidence.

The brook Cherith cannot laſt alwaies; that ſtream ſhall not for Elijahs ſake be exempted from the vniuerſall exſiccation; Yea the Prophet himſelfe feeles the ſmart of this drought, which hee had denounced; It is no vnuſuall thing with God to ſuffer his owne deare children to be inwrapped in the common calamities of offenders: He makes difference in the vſe, and iſſue of their ſtripes, not in the infliction; The corne is cut downe with the weeds, but to a better purpoſe.

When the brooke failes, God hath a Zarephath for Elijah; In ſtead of the Rauens, a Widow ſhall there feed him; yea her ſelfe by him: Who can enough wonder at the pitch of this ſelectiue prouidence of the Almighty; Zarephath was a towne of Sidon, and therefore without the pale of the Church; Pouerty was the beſt of this Widow, ſhe was a Pagan by birth, heatheniſhly ſuperſtitious by inſtitution; Many Widowes were in Iſrael in the daies of Elijah when the heauen was ſhut vp three yeares, and ſix moneths, when great famine was throughout all the Land, but vnto none of them was Elias ſent, ſaue vnto this Sarepta, a City of Sidon, vnto a woman that was a Widow; He that firſt fed the Prophet by the mouth of vncleane fowles, will now feed him by the hand of an heatheniſh Hoſteſſe; His onely command ſanctifies thoſe creatures which by a generall charge were legally impure.

There were other birds beſides Rauens, other Widowes beſides this Sareptan; none but the Rauens, none but the Sareptan ſhall nouriſh Elijah. Gods choice is not led in the ſtring of humane reaſons, his holy will is the guide, and the ground of all his elections. It is not in him that wils, nor in him that runnes, but in God that ſhewes mercy.

The Prophet followes the call of his God; the ſame hand that brought him to the gate of Sarepta, led alſo this poore widow out of her doores, ſhee ſhall then goe to ſeeke her ſtickes, when ſhee ſhall bee found of Elijah; ſhee thought of her hearth, ſhe thought not of a Prophet; when the man of God cals to her, Fetch me a little water (I pray thee) in a veſſell, that I may drinke. It was no eaſie ſuit in ſo droughtie a ſeaſon; and yet, at the firſt ſight, the Prophet dares ſecond it with a greater; Bring me a morſell of bread in thine hand; That long drought had made euery drop, euery crum precious; yet the Prophet is emboldened by the charge of God to call for both water and bread; He had found the Rauens ſo officious, that he cannot make doubt of the Sareptan: She ſticks not at the water, ſhe would not ſticke at the bread, if neceſſitie had not preſſed her: As the Lord thy God liueth, I haue not a cake, but an handfull of meale in a barrell, and a little oyle in a cruſe, and behold I am gathering two ſtickes, that I may goe in and dreſſe it for me and my ſon, that we may eat it and dye.

If ſhe knew not the man, how did ſhee know his God? and if ſhee knew not the God of Elijah, how did ſhee ſweare by him? Certainely though ſhee were without the bounds of Iſrael, yet ſhe was within the borders; ſo much ſhee had gained by her neighbourhood, to know an Iſraelite, a Prophet by his habit; to know the onely liuing God was the God of the Prophet, the God of Iſrael; and if this had not beene, it is no maruell if the widow knew Elijah, ſince the Rauens knew him. It was high time for the Prophet to viſit the Sareptan; poore ſoule, ſhee was now making her laſt meale, after one meane morſell ſhe was yeelding her ſelfe ouer to death. How opportunely hath God prouided ſuccours to our diſtreſſes? It is his glory to helpe at a pinch, to begin where we haue giuen ouer: that our reliefe might be ſo much the more welcome, by how much it is leſſe look't for.

But oh, what a tryall is this of the faith of a weake Proſelyte, if ſhee were ſo much; Feare not, goe doe as thou haſt ſaid, but make me thereof a little cake firſt, and bring it to me, and after make for thee, and thy ſonne. For, thus ſaith the God of Iſrael, The barrell of meale ſhall not waſte, nor the cruſe of oyle faile till the day that God ſend raine vpon the earth: She muſt goe ſpend vpon a ſtranger part of that little ſhe hath, in hope of more which ſhe hath not, which ſhe may haue; ſhe muſt part with her preſent food, which ſhe ſaw, in truſt of future which ſhe could not ſee; ſhe muſt rob her ſenſe in the exerciſe of her beleef, & ſhorten her life in being, vpon the hope of a protractiō of it, in promiſe; ſhe muſt beleeue God will miraculouſly increaſe what ſhee hath yeelded to conſume; ſhe muſt firſt feed the ſtranger with her laſt victuals, and then after her ſelfe, and her ſonne: Some ſharpe dame would haue ſhaken vp the Prophet, and haue ſent him away with an angry repulſe: Bold Iſraelite, there is no reaſon in this requeſt, wert thou a friend, or a brother, with what face couldeſt thou require to pull my laſt bit out of my mouth? Had I ſuperfluitie of prouiſion, thou mighteſt hope for this effect of my charitie; now, that I haue but one morſell for my ſelfe, and my ſonne, this is an iniurious importunitie; what can induce thee to thinke thy life (an vnknowne traueller) ſhould be more deare to me, then my ſons, then my owne? How vnciuill is this motion that I ſhould firſt make prouiſion for thee, in this dying extremitie? It had bin too much to haue begged my laſt ſcraps; Thou telleſt me the meale ſhall not waſte, nor the oile faile; how ſhall I beleeue thee? Let me ſee that done, before thou eateſt; In vaine ſhould I challenge thee when the remainder of my poore ſtore is conſumed; If thou canſt ſo eaſily multiply victuals, how is it that thou wanteſt? Doe that before-hand, which thou promiſeſt ſhall be afterwards performed, there will be no neede of my little. But this good Sareptan was wrought by God not to miſtruſt a Prophet; ſhe will doe what he bids, and hope for what he promiſes; ſhe will liue by faith rather then by ſenſe, and giue away the preſent, in the confidence of a future remuneration; firſt, ſhe bakes Elijahs cake, then her owne; not grudging to ſee her laſt morſels goe downe anothers throat, whiles herſelfe was famiſhing. How hard precepts doth God lay where he intends bountie; Had not God meant her preſeruation, he had ſuffred her to eat her laſt cake alone, without any interpellation; now the mercy of the Almighty purpoſing as well this miraculous fauour to her, as to his Prophet, requires of her this taske, which fleſh and blood would haue thought vnreaſonable. So we are wont to put hard queſtions to thoſe ſchollers, whom wee would promote to higher formes. So in all atchieuements the difficulty of the enterpriſe makes way for the glory of the actor.

Happy was it for this widow, that ſhee did not ſhut her hand to the man of God; that ſhe was no niggard of her laſt handfull; Neuer corne or oliue did ſo increaſe in growing, as here in conſuming; This barrell, this cruſe of hers had no bottome; the barrell of meale waſted not, the cruſe of oyle failed not; Behold, not getting, not ſauing, is the way to abundance, but giuing. The mercy of God crownes our beneficence with the bleſſing of ſtore; who can feare want by a mercifull liberality, when he ſees the Sareptan had famiſhed, if ſhe had not giuen, and by giuing abounded? With what thankfull deuotion muſt this woman euery day needs look vpon her barrell, and cruſe, wherein ſhee ſaw the mercy of God renewed to her continually? Doubtleſſe her ſoule was no leſſe fed by faith, then her body with this ſupernaturall prouiſion. How welcome a gueſt muſt Elijah needs be to this widow, that gaue her life and her ſonnes to her, for his board? yea, that in that wofull famine gaue her and her ſonne their board for his houſe-roome.

The dearth thus ouercome, the mother lookes hopefully vpon her onely ſonne, promiſing her ſelfe much ioy in his life and proſperity, when an vnexpected ſickneſſe ſurpriſeth him, and doth that which the famine but threatned: When can we hold our ſelues ſecure from euills? No ſooner is one of theſe Sergeants compounded withall, then wee are arreſted by another.

How ready we are to miſtake the grounds of our afflictions, and to caſt them vpon falſe cauſes; The paſſionate mother cannot find whither to impute the death of her ſon, but to the preſence of Elijah: to whom ſhe comes diſtracted with perplexitie, not without an vnkinde challenge of him, from whom ſhee had receiued both that life ſhee had loſt, and that ſhe had; What haue I to do with thee, O thou man of God; Art thou come to me to call my ſin to remembrance, and to ſlay my ſonne?

As if her ſon could not haue died if Elijah had not been her gueſt; when as her ſon had dyed, but for him; why ſhould ſhee thinke that the Prophet had ſaued him from the famine, to kill him with ſickneſſe? As if God had not been free in his actions; and muſt needes ſtrike by the ſame hands, by which he preſerued; Shee had the grace to know that her affliction was for her ſinne; yet was ſo vnwiſe, to imagine the arerages of her iniquities had not bin called for, if Elijah had not been the remembrancer; He who had appeaſed God towards her, is ſuſpected to haue incenſed him; This wrongfull miſconſtruction was enough to moue any patience; Elijah was of an hot ſpirit; yet his holineſſe kept him from fury; This challenge rather increaſed the zeale of his prayer, then ſtirred his choller to the offendent: Hee takes the dead child out of his mothers boſome, and layes him vpon his owne bed, and cries vnto the Lord; Oh Lord my God, haſt thou brought euill alſo vpon the Widow with whom I ſoiourne, by ſlaying her ſonne? In ſtead of chiding the Sareptan, out of the feruency of his ſoule, he humbly expoſtulates with his God: His onely remedy is in his prayer; that which ſhut heauen for raine, muſt open it for life. Euery word inforceth; Firſt he pleads his intereſt in God, Oh Lord my God; then the quality of the patient; a Widow, and therefore, both moſt diſtreſſed with the loſſe, and moſt peculiar to the charge of the Almighty. Then, his intereſt, as in God, ſo in this patient; with whom I ſoiourne: as if the ſtroke were giuen to himiſelfe, through her ſides: and laſtly, the quality of the puniſhment, By ſlaying her ſon, the onely comfort of her life; and in all theſe implying the ſcandall, that muſt needes ariſe from this euent, where euer it ſhould be noyſed, to the name of his God, to his owne; when it ſhould be ſaid; Loe how Elijahs entertainment is rewarded; Surely the Prophet is either impotent, or vnthankfull.

Neither doth his tongue moue thus only; Thrice doth hee ſtretch himſelfe vpon the dead body; as if he could wiſh to infuſe of his owne life into the child; and ſo often cals to his God for the reſtitution of that ſoule: What can Elijah aske to be denyed? The Lord heard the voice of the Prophet, the ſoule of the child came into him againe, and he reuiued: What miracle is impoſſible to faithfull prayers! There cannot bee more difference betwixt Elijahs deuotion, and ours, then betwixt ſupernaturall and ordinary acts; If he therefore obtained miraculous fauours by his prayers, do we doubt of thoſe which are within the ſphere of nature, and vſe? What could we want, if wee did not ſlacke to ply heauen with our prayers?

Certainly Elijah had not beene premoniſhed of this ſudden ſickneſſe, and death of the child; He who knew the remote affaires of the world, might not know what God would doe within his owne roofe; The greateſt Prophet muſt content himſelfe with ſo much of Gods counſell, as he will pleaſe to reueale; and he will ſometimes reueale the great ſecrets, and conceale the leſſe, to make good both his owne liberty, and mans humiliation. So much more vnexpected as the ſtroke was, ſo much more welcome is the cure; How ioyfully doth the man of God take the reuiued child into his armes and preſent him to his mother? How doth his heart leape within him, at this proofe of Gods fauour to him, mercy to the widow, power to the childe.

What life and ioy did now ſhew it ſelfe in the face of that amazed mother, when ſhe ſaw againe the eyes of her ſonne fixed vpon hers; when ſhee felt his fleſh warm, his motions vitall? Now ſhe can ſay to Elijah; By this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth; Did ſhe not til now know this? Had ſhe not ſaid before, What haue I to doe with thee O thou man of God? Were not her cruſe, and her barrel ſufficient proofes of his diuine commiſſion? Doubtleſſe what her meale and oyle had aſſured her of, the death of her ſonne made her to doubt; and now reuiuing did re-aſcertaine. Euen the ſtrongeſt faith ſometimes ſtaggereth, and needeth new acts of heauenly ſupportation; the end of miracles is confirmation of truth; It ſeemes, had this widowes ſonne continued dead, her beleefe had beene buried in his graue: notwithſtanding her meale and her oile, her ſoule had languiſhed: The mercy of God is faine to prouide new helpes for our infirmities, and graciouſly condeſcends to our owne tearmes, that hee may worke out our faith and ſaluation.

Elijah

ELIJAH with the Baalites.

THree yeares and an halfe, did Iſrael lye gaſping vnder a parching drought, and miſerable famine: No creature was ſo odious to them, as Elijah, to whom they aſcribed all their miſery: Me thinkes I heare how they railed on, and curſed the Prophet: How much enuy muſt the ſeruants of God vndergoe for their maſter? Nothing but the tongue was Elijahs, the hand was Gods; the Prophet did but ſay what God would doe: I doe not ſee them fall out with their ſins, that had deſerued the iudgement, but with the meſſenger that denounced it; Baal had no fewer ſeruants then if there had beene both raine, and plenty: Elijah ſafely ſpends this ſtorme vnder the lee of Sarepta: Some three yeares hath he lien cloſe in that obſcure corner, and liued vpon the barrell, and cruſe which he had multiplied: At laſt, God cals him forth, Goe ſhew thy ſelfe to Ahab, and I will ſend raine vpon the earth; no raine muſt fall till Elijah were ſeene of Ahab; Hee caried away the clouds with him, he muſt bring them againe: The King, the people of Iſrael, ſhall bee witneſſes that God will make good the word, the oath of his Prophet: Should the raine haue falne in Elijahs abſence, who could haue knowne it was by his procurement? God holds the credit of his meſſengers precious, and neglects nothing that may grace them in the eyes of the world; Not the neceſſity of ſeuen thouſand religious Iſraelites could cracke the word of one Elijah; There is nothing wherein God is more tender, then in approuing the varacity of himſelfe in his miniſters.

Lewd Ahab hath an holy Steward: As his name was, ſo was he, a ſeruant of God, whiles his Maſter was a ſlaue to Baal. Hee that reſerued ſeuen thouſand in the Kingdome of Iſrael, hath reſerued an Obadiah in the Court of Iſrael; and, by him, hath reſerued them: Neither is it likely there had been ſo many free hearts in the countrey, if Religion had not beene ſecretly backed in the Court: It is a great happineſſe when God giues fauour, and honour to the Vertuous. Elijah did not lie more cloſe in Sarepta, then Obadiah did in the Court: Hee could not haue done ſo much ſeruice to the Church, if he had not beene as ſecret, as good; Policy and religion doe as well together, as they doe ill aſunder: The Doue without the Serpent is eaſily caught; the ſerpent without the Doue ſtings deadly; Religion without policy is too ſimple to be ſafe: Policy, without religion, is too ſubtle to be good; Their match makes themſelues ſecure, and many happy.

Oh degenerated eſtate of Iſrael, any thing was now lawfull there ſauing piety: It is well if Gods Prophets can find an hole to hide their heads in: They muſt needes bee hard driuen when fifty of them are faine to croud together into one caue; There they had both ſhade and repaſt: Good Obadiah hazards his owne life to preſerue theirs; and ſpends himſelfe in that extreame dearth, vpon their neceſſary diet; Bread and water was more now, then otherwhiles wine, and delicates; Whether ſhall wee wonder more at the mercy of God in reſeruing an hundred Prophets, or in thus ſuſtaining them being reſerued; When did God euer leaue his Iſrael vnfurniſhed of ſome Prophets? When did he leaue his Prophets vnprouided of ſome Obadiah? How worthy art thou, O Lord, to be truſted with thine owne charge? whiles there are men vpon earth, or birds in the ayre, or Angels in heauen, thy meſſengers cannot want prouiſion.

Goodneſſe caries away truſt, where it cannot haue imitation. Ahab diuides with Obadiah the ſuruey of the whole land; They two ſet their owne eyes on worke, for the ſearch of water, of paſture, to preſerue the horſes, and mules aliue: Oh the poore and vaine cares of Ahab: He caſts to kill the Prophet, to ſaue the cattle; he neuer ſeekes to ſaue his owne ſoule, to deſtroy Idolatry; he takes thought for graſſe, none for mercy: Carnall hearts are euer either grouelling on the earth, or deluing into it; no more regarding God, or their ſoules, then if they either were not, or were worthleſſe.

Elijah heares of the progreſſe, and offers himſelfe to the view of them both; Here was wiſedome in this courage: Firſt, he preſents himſelfe to Obadiah, ere hee will bee ſeene of Ahab; that Ahab might vpon the report of ſo diſcreet an informer, digeſt the expectation of his meeting: Then he takes the opportunity of Ahabs preſence, when he might be ſure Iezebel was away.

Obadiah meets the Prophet, knowes him, and (as if he had ſeene God in him) fals on his face to him, whom he knew his maſter perſecuted: Though a great Peere, hee had learned to honor a Prophet. No reſpect was too much for the preſident of that ſacred colledge: To the poore boarder of the Sareptan, here was no leſſe, then a proſtration; and My Lord Elijah, from the great High Steward of Iſrael: Thoſe that are truly gracious cannot be niggardly of their obſeruances to the meſſengers of God.

Elijah receiues the reuerence, returnes a charge: Goe tell my Lord, behold Elijah is here: Obadiah finds this lode too heauy; neither is he more ſtriken with the boldneſſe, then with the vnkindneſſe of this command: boldneſſe in reſpect of Elijah; vnkindneſſe in reſpect of himſelfe: For, thus he thinkes, If Elijah doe come to Ahab, he dyes: If he doe not come, I die: If it bee knowne that I met him, and brought him not, it is death: If I ſay that hee will come voluntarily, and God ſhall alter his intentions, it is death: How vnhappy a man am I, that muſt be either Elijahs executioner, or my owne: were Ahabs diſpleaſure but ſmoaking, I might hope to quēch it, but now that the flame of it hath broken forth to the notice, to the ſearch of all the Kingdomes and Nations round about, it may conſume me, I cannot extinguiſh it: This meſſage were for an enemy of Elijah; for a client of Baal: As for me, I haue well approued my true deuotion to God, my loue to his Prophets: What haue I done, that I ſhould be ſingled out either to kill Elijah, or to be killed for him? Many an hard plunge muſt that man needs be driuen to, who would hold his conſcience together with the ſeruice, and fauour of a Tyrant: It is an happy thing to ſerue a iuſt maſter; there is no danger, no ſtrayne in ſuch obedience.

But, when the Prophet bindes his reſolution with an oath, and cleares the heart of Obadiah from all feares, from all ſuſpitions, the good man dares bee the meſſenger of that, which he ſaw was decreed in heauen: Doubtleſſe Ahab ſtartled to heare of Elijah comming to meet him; as one that did not more hate, then feare the Prophet. Well might he thinke, thus long, thus far haue I ſought Elijah, Elijah would not come to ſeeke me, but vnder a ſure guard, and with ſome ſtrange commiſſion: His courſe mantle hath the aduantage of my robe and Scepter: if I can command a peece of the earth, I ſee hee can command heauen. The edge of his reuenge is taken off with a doubtfull expectation of the iſſue: and now when Elijah offers himſelfe to the eyes of Ahab, He who durſt not ſtrike, yet durſt challenge the Prophet, Art thou hee that troubleth Iſrael? Ieroboams hand was ſtill in Ahabs thoughts; he holds it not ſo ſafe to ſmite, as to expoſtulate: He, that was the head of Iſrael, ſpeakes out that which was in the heart of all his people, that Elijah was the cauſe of all their ſorrow: Alas, what hath the righteous Prophet done? He taxed their ſin, he foretold the iudgement; he deſerued it not, he inflicted it not; yet he ſmarts, and they are guilty: As if ſome fond people ſhould accuſe the Herald or the Trumpet as the cauſe of their warre; or as if ſome ignorant peaſant, when he ſees his fowles bathing to his pond, ſhould cry out of them, as the cauſes of foule weather.

Oh the heroycall Spirit of Elijah! he ſtands alone amids all the traine of Ahab, and dares not onely repell this charge, but retort it: I haue not troubled Iſrael, but thou and thy fathers houſe, in that yee haue forſaken the Commandements of the Lord, and thou haſt followed Baalim. No earthly glory can daunt him, who hath the cleare and heartning viſions of God: This holy Seer diſcernes the true cauſe of our ſufferings, to be our ſinnes: Fooliſh men are plagued for their offences; and it is no ſmall part of their plague that they ſee it not; The onely common diſturber of men, Families, Cities, Kingdomes, Worlds, is ſinne; There is no ſuch traitor to any ſtate, as the wilfully wicked; The quieteſt and moſt plauſible offender is ſecretly ſeditious, and ſtirreth quarrels in heauen.

The true meſſengers of God cary authority euen where they are maligned; Elijah doth at once reproue the King, and require of him the improuement of his power, in gathering all Iſrael to Carmel, in fetching thither all the Prophets of Baal. Baal was rich in Iſrael, whiles God was poore; Whiles God hath but one hundred Prophets, hid cloſely in Obadiahs caues, Baal hath eight hundred and fifty; foure hundred and fifty diſperſed ouer the villages and townes of Iſrael, foure hundred at the Court; Gods Prophets are glad of bread and water, whiles the foure hundred Trencher-Prophets of Iezebel feede on her dainties: They lurke in caues, whiles theſe Lord it in the pleaſanteſt groues. Outward proſperity is a falſe note of truth: All theſe with all Iſrael, doth Elijah require Ahab to ſummon vnto Carmel. It is in the power of Kings to command the Aſſembly of the Prophets; the Prophet ſues to the Prince for the indiction of this Synode: They are iniurious to Soueraigntie who arrogate this power to none but ſpirituall hands. How is it that Ahab is as ready to performe this charge, as Elijahs to moue it? I dare anſwer for his heart, that it was not drawne with loue: Was it out of the ſenſe of one iudgement, and feare of another? hee ſmarted with the dearth and drought, and well thinkes Elijah would not be ſo round with him, for nothing: Was it out of an expectation of ſome miraculous exploit which the Prophet would doe in the ſight of all Iſrael? Or, was it out of the ouer-ruling power of the Almighty; The heart of Kings is in the hand of God, and he turnes it which way ſoeuer he pleaſeth.

Iſrael is met together, Elijah rates them, not ſo much for their ſuperſtition, as for their vnſetledneſſe, and irreſolution: One Iſraelite ſerues God, another Baal; yea the ſame Iſraelite perhaps ſerues both God and Baal. How long halt yee betweene two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him: Nothing is more odious to God then a prophane neutralitie in maine oppoſitions of religion: To goe vpright in a wrong way, is a leſſe eye-ſore to God, then to halt betwixt right & wrong; The ſpirit wiſheth that the Laodicean were either hot or cold; either temper would be better borne, then neither, then both: In reconcileable differences nothing is more ſafe then indifferency both of practice and opinion; but in caſes of ſo neceſſary hoſtility, as betwixt God, and Baal, hee that is on neither ſide is the deadlieſt enemy to both: Leſſe hatefull are they to God that ſerue him not at all, then they that ſerue him with a riuall.

Whether out of guiltineſſe, or feare, or vncertainty, Iſrael is ſilent; yet whiles their mouth was ſhut, their eyes were open: It was a faire motion of Elijah; I am onely remaining a Prophet of the Lord, Baals Prophets are foure hundred and fifty: Let them chooſe one bullocke, let me chooſe another; Their deuotion ſhall be combined, mine ſingle: The God that conſumes the ſacrifice by fire from heauen, let him be God: Iſrael cannot but approue it; the Prophets of Baal cannot refuſe it; they had the appearance of the aduantage, in their number, in the fauour of King and people. Oh ſtrange diſputation, wherein the argument which muſt be vſed is fire; the place whence it muſt bee fetcht, heauen; the mood and figure, deuotion; the concluſion, death to the ouercomne.

Had not Elijah, by diuine inſtinct, beene aſſured of the euent, he durſt not haue put religion vpon ſuch hazard: That God commanded him this triall, who meant confuſion to the authors of Idolatry, victory to the truth: His power ſhall be approued both by fire and by water: firſt by fire, then by water: There was no leſſe terror in the fire, then mercy in the raine: It was fit they ſhould be firſt humbled by his terrors, that they might be made capable of his mercy: and by both, might be wonne to repentance. Thus ſtill the feares of the law make way for the influences of grace, neither doe thoſe ſweete and heauenly dewes deſcend vpon the ſoule, till way bee made for them by the terrible flaſhes of the law.

Iuſtly doth Elijah vrge this triall: Gods ſacrifices were vſed to none but heauenly fires; whereas the baſe and earthly religion of the heathen contented it ſelfe with groſſe and naturall flames.

The Prophets of Baal durſt not (though with faint and guilty hearts) but imbrace the condition; they dreſſe their bullocke, and lay it ready vpon the wood; and ſend out their cryes to Baal from morning vntill mid-day; O Baal heare vs: What a yelling was here, of foure hundred and fifty throats, tearing the skies for an anſwer? What leaping was here vpon the altar, as if they would haue climbed vp to fetch that fire, which would not come downe alone? Mount Carmel might giue an Eccho to their voyce, heauen gaue none; In vaine doe they roare out, and wearie themſelues in imploring a dumbe a deafe deitie; Graue and auſtere Elijah holds it not too light to flout their zealous deuotion; he laughes at their teares and playes vpon their earneſt; Cry aloud, for he is a God, either he is talking, or he is purſuing, or hee is trauelling, or he is ſleeping, and muſt be awaked.

Scornes and taunts are the beſt anſwers for ſerious Idolatry; Holineſſe will beare vs out in diſdainfull ſcoffes, and bitterneſſe againſt will ſuperſtition; No leſſe in the indignation at theſe inſulting frumps, then zeale of their owne ſafety, and reputation, doe theſe Idolatrous Prophets now rend their throats with inclamations, and that they may aſſure the beholders, they were not in ieſt, they cut and ſlaſh themſelues, with kniues, and lancers, and ſolicit the fire with their blood; How much paynfulneſſe there is in miſ-religion? I doe not finde that the true God euer required or accepted the ſelfe-tortures of his ſeruants; Hee loues true inward mortification of our corruptions, he loues the ſubduing of our ſpirituall inſurrections, by due exerciſes of ſeuere reſtraint; hee takes no pleaſure in our blood, in our carcaſſes: They miſtake God that thinke to pleaſe him by deſtroying that nature, which hee hath made; and meaſure truth by rigour of outward extremities; Elijah drew no blood of himſelfe, the Prieſts of Baal did: How faine would the Deuill (whom theſe Idolaters adored) haue anſwered the ſuit of his ſuppliants? What would that ambitious ſpirit haue giuen, that as he was caſt downe from heauen like lightning, ſo now he might haue falne downe in that forme vpon his altar?

God forbids it: All the powers of darkneſſe can no more ſhew one flaſh of fire in the ayre, then auoyd the vnquenchable fire in hell: How eaſie were it for the power of the Almighty to cut ſhort all the tyrannicall vſurpations of that wicked one; if his wiſedome and iuſtice did not finde the permiſſion thereof vſefull to his holy purpoſes.

Theſe Idolaters now towards euening, grew ſo much more vehement, as they were more hopeleſſe; and at laſt when neither their ſhrikes, nor their wounds, nor their mad motions could preuaile, they ſit downe hoarſe and wearie; tormenting themſelues afreſh with their deſpayres, and with the feares of bitter ſucceſſe of their aduerſarie; when Elijah cals the people to him, (the witneſſes of his ſincere proceedings) and taking the opportunitie both of the time, (the iuſt houre of the euening ſacrifice) and of the place, a ruined altar of God, now by him repaired, conuinces Iſrael with his miracle, and more cuts theſe Baalites with enuy, then they had cut themſelues their lancers.

Oh holy Prophet why didſt thou not ſaue this labor? what needed theſe vnſeaſonable reparations? Was there not an altar, was there not a ſacrifice ready prepared to thine hand? that which the Prophets of Baal had addreſſed, ſtood ſtill waiting for that fire from thee, which the founders threatned in vaine: the ſtones were not more impure, either for their touch, or their intentions: yet ſuch was thy deteſtation of Idolatry, that thou abhorredſt to meddle with ought, which their wickedneſſe had defiled: Euen that altar, whoſe ruines thou didſt thus repaire, was miſ-erected though to the name of the True God; yet didſt thou finde it better to make vp the breaches of that altar, which was miſ-conſecrated to the ſeruice of thy God, then to make vſe of that pile, which was idolatrouſly deuoted to a falſe god: It cannot be but ſafe to keepe aloofe from participation with Idolaters, euen in thoſe things which not onely in nature, but in vſe are vncleane.

Elijah layes twelue ſtones in his repayred altar, according to the number of the Tribes of the ſonnes of Iacob: Alas, ten of theſe were peruerted to Baal: The Prophet regards not their preſent Apoſtacie; hee regards the ancient couenant, that was made with their father Iſrael; he regards their firſt ſtation, to which he would reduce them: he knew that the vnworthineſſe of Iſrael could not make God forgetfull: he would by this monument put Iſrael in minde of their owne degeneration, and forgetfulneſſe. He employes thoſe many hands for the making a large trench round about the altar; and cauſes it to be filled with thoſe precious remainders of water, which the people would haue grudged to their owne mouthes; neither would eaſily haue parted with, but (as thoſe that poure down a pailefull into a drie pump) in the hope of fetching more. The altar, the trench is full: A barrell full is poured out for each of the Tribes, that euery Tribe might be afterwards repleniſhed. Ahab and Iſrael are no leſſe full of expectation; and now, when Gods appointed houre of the euening ſacrifice was come, Elijah comes confidently to his altar, and looking vp into heauen, ſayes, Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael, Let it be knowne this day, that thou art God in Iſrael, and that I am thy Seruant, and that I haue done all theſe things at thy word: Heare mee, O Lord heare me, that this people may know that thou art the Lord God, & that thou haſt turned their hearts backe againe.

The Baalites prayers were not more tedeous, then Elijahs was ſhort; and yet more pithy then ſhort; charging God with the care of his couenant, of his truth, of his glory. It was Elijah that ſpake loud; Oh ſtrong cryes of faith, that pierce the heauens, and irreſiſtibly make their way to the throne of grace: Iſrael ſhall well ſee that Elijahs God whom they haue forſaken, is neither talking, nor purſuing, nor trauelling, nor ſleeping: Inſtantly, the fire of the Lord fals frō heauen, & conſumes the burnt ſacrifice, the wood, the ſtones, the duſt, & licks vp the water that was in the trench: With what terror muſt Ahab and Iſrael needs ſee this fire rolling downe out of the skie, and alighting with ſuch fury ſo neere their heads; heads no leſſe fit for this flame then the ſacrifice of Elijah: Well might they haue thought, How eaſily might this fire haue dilated it ſelfe, and haue conſumed our bodies, as well as the wood and ſtone, and haue lickt vp our blood, as well as that water? I know not whether they had the grace to acknowledge the mercy of God, they could doe no leſſe then confeſſe his power, The Lord is God, The Lord is God.

The iron was now hot with this heauenly fire; Elijah ſtayes not till it coole againe, but ſtrikes immediately: Take the Prophets of Baal, let not one of them eſcape. This wager was for life: Had they preuailed in procuring this fire, and Elijah failed of effect; his head had been forfeited vnto them: now in the contrary ſucceſſe, theirs are loſt to him. Let no man complaine that thoſe holy hands were bloody: This ſacrifice was no leſſe pleaſing to God, then that other. Both the man and the act were extraordinarie, and led by a peculiar inſtinct: Neither doth the Prophet this without the aſſent of the ſupreme Magiſtrate; who was now ſo affected with this miraculous worke, that hee could not in the heat of that conuiction, but allow the iuſtice of ſuch ſentence. Farre be it from vs to accuſe Gods commands or executions of crueltie: It was the ancient and peremptory charge of God, that the authors of Idolatry and ſeduction ſhould dye the death; no eye, no hand might ſpare them: The Prophet doth but moue the performance of that Law, which Iſrael could not without ſinne haue omitted: It is a mercifull and thanke-worthy ſeuerity to rid the world of the Ring-leaders of wickedneſſe.

ELIJAH running before AHAB, Flying from IEZEBEL.

I Heare no newes of the foure hundred Prophets of the Groues: They lie cloſe vnder the wing of IeZebel vnder their pleaſing ſhades: neither will be ſuffered to vndergoe the danger of this triall; the carkeiſes of their fellowes helpe to fill vp the halfe-dry channell of Kiſhon: Iuſtice is no ſooner done, then Ahab heares newes of mercie from Elijah: Get thee vp, eate and drinke, for there is a ſound of abundance of raine: Their meeting was not more harſh, then their parting was friendly: It ſeemes Ahab had ſpent all that day faſting in an eager attendance of thoſe conflicting Prophets: It muſt needes bee late, ere the execution could be done: Elijahs part began not till the euening: So farre muſt the King of Iſrael bee from taking thought for the maſſacre of thoſe foure hundred and fifty Baalites, that now, hee may goe eate his bread with ioy, and drinke his wine with a chearefull heart: for God accepteth this worke, and teſtifies it in the noyſe of much raine: Euery drop of that Idolatrous blood was anſwered with a ſhowre of raine, with a ſtreame of water, and plenty poured downe in euery ſhowre: A ſenſible bleſſing followes the vnpartiall ſtroakes of ſeuere iuſtice: Nothing is more cruell then an vniuſt pitie.

No eares but Elijahs could as yet perceiue a ſound of raine; the clouds were not yet gathered, the vapours were not yet riſen, yet Elijah heares that which ſhall bee: Thoſe that are of Gods Counſell can diſcerne either fauours or iudgements afarre off; the ſlacke apprehenſions of carnall hearts make them hard to beleeue that, as future, which the quick and refined ſenſes of the faithfull receiue as preſent.

Ahab goes vp to his repaſt; Elijah goes vp to his prayers: That day had bin painfull to him, the vehemencie of his ſpirit drawes him to a neglect of his body: The holy man climbes vp to the top of Carmel, that now he may talke with his God alone: neither is he ſooner aſcended, then he caſts himſelfe downe vpon the earth: He bowes his knees to God, and bowes his face downe to his knees: by this humble poſture acknowledging his awfull reſpects to that Maieſtie which he implored: We cannot proſtrate our bodies, or ſoules, too low to that infinitely glorious Deity, who is the Creator of both.

His thoughts were more high then his body was low: what hee ſaid wee know not, we know that what he ſaid opened the heauens, that for three yeares and an halfe had bin ſhut vp: God had ſaid before, I will ſend raine vpon the earth; yet Elijah muſt pray for what God did promiſe; The promiſes of the Almighty do not diſcharge our prayers, but ſuppoſe them; he will doe what he vndertakes, but we muſt ſue for that which we would haue him doe: Our petitions are included in the decrees, in the ingagements of God.

The prophet had newly ſeene and cauſed the fire to deſcend immediately out of heauen, he doth not looke the water ſhould doe ſo; he knew that the raine muſt come from the clouds, and that the clouds muſt ariſe from vapours, and thoſe vapours from the Sea, thence doth he expect them: But as not willing that the thoughts of his fixed deuotion ſhould be diſtracted, he doth not goe himſelfe, onely ſends his ſeruant to bring him the newes of his ſucceſſe: At the firſt ſight nothing appeares: Seuen times muſt he walke to that proſpect; and not till his laſt view can diſcerne ought: All that while is the Prophet in his prayers, neither is any whit danted with that delay: Hope holds vp the head of our holy deſires, and perſeuerance crownes it: If we receiue not an anſwer to our ſuits at the ſixth motion, wee may not bee out of countenance, but muſt try the ſeuenth: At laſt, a little cloud ariſes out of the Sea, of an handbreadth: So many, ſo feruent prayers cannot but pull water out of heauen as well as fire: Thoſe ſights reflect vpon the earth, and from the earth reflect vpon heauen, from heauen rebound vpon the Sea, and raiſe vapours vp thence to heauen againe: If we finde that our prayers are heard for the ſubſtance, wee may not cauill at the quantitie: Euen an hand-broad cloud contents Elijah, and fils his heart full of ioy and thankfulneſſe: He knew well this meteor was not at the biggeſt, it was newly borne of the wombe of the waters, and in ſome minutes of age muſt grow to a large ſtature: ſtay but a while, and Heauen is couered with it: From how ſmall beginnings haue greater matters riſen? It is no otherwiſe in all the gracious proceedings of God with the ſoule, ſcarce ſenſible are thoſe firſt workes of his ſpirit in the heart, which grow vp at laſt to the wonder of men, and applauſe of Angels.

Well did Elijah know that God who is perfection it ſelfe, would not defile his hand with an inchoate and ſcanted fauour, as one therefore that fore-ſaw the face of heauen ouer-ſpread with this cloudy ſpot, hee ſends to Ahab to haſten his Chariot, that the raine ſtop him not: It is long ſince Ahab feared this let; neuer was the newes of a danger more welcome: Doubtleſſe the King of Iſrael whiles hee was at his diet, lookt long for Elijahs promiſed ſhowers; where is the raine whoſe ſound the Prophet heard? how is it that his eares were ſo much quicker then our eyes? Wee ſaw his fire to our terrour, how gladly would we ſee his Waters? When now the ſeruant of Elijah brings him newes from heauen, that the clouds were ſetting forward, and (if hee haſtened not) would bee before him: The winde ariſes, the clouds gather, the sky thickens; Ahab betakes him to his Charet; Elijah girds vp his loynes, and runnes before him: Surely the Prophet could not want the offer of more eaſe in his paſſage; but he will be for the time Ahabs lacquey, that the King and all Iſrael may ſee his humilitie no leſſe then his power, and may confeſſe that the glory of thoſe miracles hath not made him inſolent. Hee knew that his very ſight was monitory; neither could Ahabs minde be beſide the miraculous workes of God, whiles his eye was vpon Elijah: neither could the Kings heart be otherwiſe then well-affected towards the Prophet, whiles hee ſaw that himſelfe, and all Iſrael, had receiued a new Life by his procurement. But what newes was here for Iezebel? Certainly Ahab minced nothing of the report of all thoſe aſtoniſhing accidents: If but to ſalue vp his owne honour, in the death of thoſe Baalites, hee made the beſt of Elijahs merits; hee told of his challenge, conflict, victory, of the fire that fell downe from heauen, of the conuiction of Iſrael, of the vnauoidable execution of the Prophets, of the prediction and fall of thoſe happy ſhowers, and laſtly of Elijahs officious attendance. Who would not haue expected that Iezebel ſhould haue ſaid; It is no ſtriuing, no dallying with the Almighty: No reaſonable creature can doubt, after ſo prodigious a diciſion; GOD hath wonne vs from Heauen, he muſt poſſeſſe vs: Iuſtly are our ſeducers periſhed; None but the GOD that can command fire and water ſhall be ours; There is no Prophet but his: But ſhee contrarily, in ſtead of relenting, rageth; and ſends a meſſage of death to Elijah, So let the gods doe to mee, and more alſo; if I make not thy life, as the life of one of them by to morrow about this time: Neither ſcourges, nor fauours can worke any thing with the obſtinately wicked; All euill hearts are not equally diſ-affected to good: Ahab and Iezebel were both bad enough, yet Ahab yeelds to that worke of GOD, which Iezebel ſtubbornely oppoſeth: Ahab melts with that water, with that fire, wherewith Iezebel is hardened: Ahab was baſhfully, Iezebel audaciouſly impious. The weaker ſexe is euer commonly ſtronger in paſſion; and more vehemently carried with the ſway of their deſires, whether to good or euill: Shee ſweares, and ſtamps at that whereat ſhe ſhould haue trembled. She ſweares by thoſe gods of hers, which were not able to ſaue their Prophets, that ſhe will kill the Prophet of God, who had ſcorned her gods, and ſlaine her Prophets.

Hall, J.

It is well that Iezebel could not keepe counſell: Her threat preſerued him whom ſhee had meant to kill: The wiſedome and power of God could haue found euaſions for his Prophet, in her greateſt ſecreſie: but now, he needs no other meanes of reſcue, but her owne lips: She is no leſſe vayne, then the gods ſhee ſweares by: In ſpight of her fury, and her oath, and her gods, Elijah ſhall liue: At once ſhall ſhe finde her ſelfe fruſtrate, and forſworne: She is now ready to bite her tongue, to eate her heart for anger, at the diſappointment of her cruell Vow. It were no liuing for godly men, if the hands of Tyrants were allowed to bee as bloody as their hearts. Men and Deuils are vnder the reſtraint of the Almighty; neither are their deſignes more lauiſh, then their executions ſhort.

Holy Elijah flees for his life; wee heare not of the command of God, but wee would willingly preſuppoſe it: So diuine a Prophet ſhould doe nothing without God: His heeles were no new refuge; As no where ſafe within the tenne Tribes, hee flees to Beerſheba, in the Territories of Iudah; as not there ſafe, from the machinations of Iezebel, hee flees alone (one dayes iourney) into the wilderneſſe; there hee ſits him downe vnder a Iuniper tree, and (as wearie of life, no leſſe then of his way) wiſhes to riſe no more. It is enough now, O Lord, take away my life, for I am not better then my fathers: O ſtrange and vncouth mutation! What is this wee heare? Elijah fainting and giuing vp? that heroicall ſpirit deiected, and proſtrate? Hee that durſt ſay to Ahabs face, It is thou, and thy fathers houſe that troubleth Iſrael; hee that could raiſe the dead, open and ſhut the Heauens, fetch downe both fire, and water with his prayers; hee that durſt chide and conteſt with all Iſrael, that durſt kill the foure hundred and fifty Baalites, with the ſword; doth hee ſhrinke at the frownes and threats of a woman? doth hee wiſh to bee rid of his life becauſe he feared to loſe it? Who can expect an vndaunted conſtancie from fleſh and blood, when Elijah failes? The ſtrongeſt and holieſt Saint vpon earth is ſubiect to ſome qualmes of feare, and infirmitie: To bee alwayes and vnchangeably good, is proper onely to the glorious Spirits in heauen: Thus the wiſe and holy God will haue his power perfitted in our weakeneſſe: It is in vaine for vs, whiles wee carrie this fleſh about vs, to hope for ſo exact health, as not to be caſt downe ſometimes with fits of ſpirituall diſtemper. It is no new thing for holy men to wiſh for death: Who can either maruell at, or blame the deſire of aduantage? For the weary traueller to long for reſt, the priſoner for libertie, the baniſhed for home, it is ſo naturall, that the contrary diſpoſition were monſtrous: The benefit of the change is a iuſt motiue to our appetition; but to call for death, out of a ſatietie of life, out of an impatience of ſuffering, is a weakeneſſe vnbeſeeming a Saint: It is not enough, O Elijah; God hath more worke yet for thee: thy God hath more honoured thee, then thy fathers, and thou ſhalt liue to honour him.

Toyle and ſorrow haue lulled the Prophet aſleepe, vnder his Iuniper tree; that wholeſome ſhade was well choſen, for his repoſe: whiles death was called for, the couzen of death comes vnbidden: The Angell of God waits on him in that hard lodging: no wilderneſſe is too ſollitarie for the attendance of thoſe bleſſed ſpirits: As hee is guarded, ſo is hee awaked by that Meſſenger of GOD, and ſtirred vp from his reſt, to his repaſt; whiles hee ſlept, his breakefaſt is made ready for him, by thoſe ſpirituall hands; There was a cake baked on the coales, and a cruſe of water at his head: Oh the neuer-ceaſing care and prouidence of the Almightie, not to be barred by any place, by any condition; when meanes are wanting to vs, when wee are wanting to our ſelues, when to GOD, euen then doth he follow vs, with his mercie, and caſt fauours vpon vs, beyond, againſt expectation: What varietie of purueyance doth he make for his ſeruant? One while the Rauens, then the Sareptan, now the Angell ſhall be his Cator; none of them without a miracle. Thoſe other prouided for him waking, this ſleeping: O GOD, the eye of thy prouidence is not dimmer, the hand of thy power is not ſhorter; onely teach thou vs to ſerue thee, to truſt thee.

Needs muſt the Prophet eate, and drinke, and ſleepe with much comfort, whiles hee ſaw that he had ſuch a guardian, attendant, purueiour; and now the ſecond time is he raiſed, by that happy touch, to his meale, and his way: Ariſe, and eate, becauſe the iourney is too great for thee. What needed hee to trauell further, ſith that diuine power could as well protect him in the Wilderneſſe, as in Horeb? what needed hee to eate, ſince he that meant to ſuſtaine him forty dayes with one meale, might as well haue ſuſteined him without it? God is a moſt free Agent, neither will he be tied to the tearmes of humane regularities: It is enough that hee knowes and approues the reaſons of his owne choyce, and commands: once in forty dayes and nights ſhall Elijah eate, to teach vs what GOD can doe with little meanes: and but once, to teach vs what hee can doe without meanes: once ſhall the Prophet eate, Man liues by bread; and but once, Man liues not by bread onely, but by euery word that proceeds out of the mouth of God: Moſes, Elijah, our Sauiour faſted each of them forty dayes, and forty nights: the three great faſters met gloriouſly in Tabor: I doe not find where God euer honoured any man for feaſting: It is abſtinence, not fulneſſe, that makes a man capable of heauenly viſions, of diuine glory.

The iourney was not of it ſelfe ſo long; the Prophet tooke thoſe wayes, thoſe houres which his heart gaue him: In the very ſame Mount where Moſes firſt ſaw God, ſhall Elijah ſee him: one and the ſame caue (as is very probable) was the receptacle to both: It could not bee but a great confirmation of Elijah, to renue the ſight of thoſe ſenſible monuments of Gods fauour, and protection, to his faithfull predeceſſor. Moſes came to ſee God in the Buſh of Horeb: God came to finde Elijah in the Caue of Horeb: What doeſt thou here, Elijah? The place was directed by a prouidence, not by a command: Hee is hid ſure enough from Iezebel: hee cannot bee hid from the all-ſeeing eye of God. Whither ſhall I goe from thy Spirit? or Whither ſhall I flye from thy preſence? If I aſcend vp into Heauen, thou art there; If I make my bed in Hell, behold thou art there: If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the vtmoſt parts of the Sea, euen there ſhall thine hand finde me, and thy right hand ſhall hold mee: Twice hath God propounded the ſame queſtion to Elijah: Once in the heart once in the mouth of the Caue: Twice doth the Prophet anſwer, in the ſame words: Had the firſt anſwer ſatisfied, the queſtion had not beene re-demanded. Now, that ſullen anſwer which Elijah gaue in the darkneſſe of the Caue is challenged into the Light, not without an awfull preface. The Lord firſt paſſeth by him with the terrible demonſtrations of his power. A great & ſtrong wind rent the Mountaines, and brake the Rocks in pieces: Thy tearing blaſt was from God, God was not in it: So was he in it as in his other extraordinary workes; not ſo in it, as by it to impart himſelfe to Elijah: it was the Vſhier not the cariage of GOD: After the winde came an Earthquake, more fearfull then it: That did but moue the ayre, this the earth; that beat vpon ſome prominences of earth, this ſhooke it from the Center. After the earth-quake came a fire more fearfull then either. The other affected the eare, the feeling: but this lets in horrour into the Soule, by the eye, the quickeſt and and moſt apprehenſiue of the ſenſes. Elijah ſhall ſee Gods mighty power in the earth, aire, fire, before hee heare him in the ſoft voyce: all theſe are but boiſtrous harbingers of a meeke, and ſtill word: In that God was; Behold, in that gentle and mild breath there was omnipotencie; there was but powerfulneſſe in thoſe fierce repreſentations: There is not alwayes the greateſt efficacie where is the greateſt noiſe: God loues to make way for himſelfe by terrour, but hee conuayes himſelfe to vs in ſweetneſſe: It is happy for vs if after the guſts and flaſhes of the Law, we haue haue heard the ſoft voice of Euangelicall mercy.

In this very mount, with the ſame horrour God had deliuered his Law to Moſes and Iſrael: It is no maruell if Elijah wrapt his face in his mantle: His Obedience drawes him forth to the mouth of the Caue, his ſeare ſtill hides his head: Had there not beene much courage in the Prophets faith, hee had ſtood out theſe affrightfull fore-runners of the diuine preſence, though with his face couered: The very Angels doe no leſſe, before that all-glorious Maieſtie then vaile themſelues with their wings: Farre be it from vs once to thinke of that infinite, and omnipotent Deitie, without an humble awfulneſſe.

Feare changes not the tenour of Elijahs anſwer: Hee hath not left one word behinde him in the Caue: I haue beene very iealous for the Lord God of Hoſts, becauſe the children of Iſrael haue forſaken thy Couenant, throwne downe thine Altars, and ſlaine thy Prophets with the ſword, and I, euen I onely, am left, and they ſeeke my life to take it away. I heare not a direct anſwer from the Prophet to the demand of GOD: then hee had ſaid, I runne away from the threats of Iezebel, and here I hide my head from her malicious purſuit: His guiltineſſe would not let him ſpeake out all: Hee had rather ſay, I haue beene iealous for the Lord God of Hoſts, then, I was fearefull of Iezebel: Wee are all willing to make the beſt of our owne caſe: but what hee wants of his owne accuſation, hee ſpends vpon the complaint of Iſrael. Neither doth he more bemone himſelfe, then exclaime againſt them, as Apoſtates from Gods Couenant, Violaters of his Altars, murtherers of his Prophets: It muſt needs be a deſperate condition of Iſrael, that driues Elijah to indite them before the throne of God: That tongue of his was vſed to plead for them, to ſue for their pardon, it could not be but a forceable wickedneſſe, that makes it their accuſer. Thoſe Idolatrous Iſraelites were well forward to reformation: The fire and raine from heauen at the prayers of Elijah had wonne them to a ſcorne of Baal; onely the violence of Iezebel turned the ſtreame, and now they are re-ſetled in impietie, and perſecute him for an enemy, whom they almoſt adored for a benefactor; otherwiſe, Elijah had not complained of what they had beene: Who would thinke it? Iezebel can doe more then Elijah: No miracle is ſo preualent with the vulgar, as the ſway of authoritie, whether to good, or euill.

Thou art deceiued, O Elijah; thou art not left alone; neither is all Iſrael tainted: GOD hath children and Prophets in Iſrael, though thou ſee them not; Thoſe cleere eyes of the Seer diſcerne not the ſecret ſtorie of GOD: they lookt not into Obadiahs Caues, they lookt not into the cloſets of the religious Iſraelites; hee that ſees the heart, can ſay, I haue left mee ſeuen thouſand in Iſrael, all the knees which haue not bowed to Baal, and euery mouth which hath not kiſſed him: According to the faſhion of the wealthy, God pleaſeth himſelfe in hidden treaſures; it is enough that his owne eyes behold his riches: Neuer did hee, neuer will hee leaue himſelfe vnfurniſhed with holy clients, in the midſt of the fouleſt deprauations of his Church: The ſight of his faithfull ones hath ſometimes beene loſt, neuer the being: Doe your worſt, O yee Gates of Hell, God will haue his owne: Hee that could haue more, will haue ſome: that foundation is ſure, God knoweth who are his.

It was a true cordiall for Elijahs ſolitarineſſe, that hee had ſeuen thouſand inuiſible abettors; neither is it a ſmall comfort to our weakneſſe to haue companions in good: for the wickedneſſe of Iſrael God hath another receit; the oyle of royall, and propheticall vnction; Elijah muſt anoint Hazael King of Syria, Iehu King of Iſrael; Eliſha for his ſucceſſor: All theſe ſhall reuenge the quarrels of God, and him; one ſhall begin, the other ſhall proſecute, the third ſhall pefect the vengeance vpon Iſrael.

A Prophet ſhall auenge the wrongs done to a Prophet: Eliſha is found, not in his ſtudy, but, in the field; not with a booke in his hand, but a plough: His father Shaphat was a rich farmer in Abel-Meholah, himſelfe was a good huſband not trained vp in the ſchooles of the Prophets, but, in the thrifty trade of tillage: and behold, this was the man whom God will picke out of all Iſrael for a Prophet; God ſeeth not as man ſeeth: Neither doth he chooſe men before they are fit, but therefore he fits them, becauſe he hath choſen them; his call is aboue all earthly inſtitution.

I heare not of ought that Elijah ſayd: Onely hee caſt his cloake vpon Eliſha in the paſſage: That Mantle, that act was vocall; Together with this ſigne, Gods inſtinct teacheth this amazed ſonne of Shaphat that hee was deſigned to an higher worke, to breake vp the fallow grounds of Iſrael, by his Propheticall function: Hee findes a ſtrange vertue in that Robe; and (as if his heart were changed with that habit) forgets his teme, and runnes after Elijah; and ſues for the leaue of a farewell to his Parents, ere hee had any but a dumbe command to follow: The ſecret call of God offers an inward force to the heart, and inſenſibly drawes vs beyond the power of our reſiſtance: Grace is no enemy to good nature: well may the reſpects to our earthly Parents ſtand with our duties to our Father in heauen. I doe not ſee Eliſha wring his hands and deplore his condition, that hee ſhall leaue the world, and follow a Prophet, but for the ioy of that change, hee makes a feaſt: thoſe Oxen, thoſe vtenſils of husbandry whereon his former labours had beene beſtowed, ſhall now be gladly deuoted to the celebration of that happy day, wherein hee is honoured with ſo bleſſed an imployment. If with deſire; if with cheerfulneſſe wee doe not enter into the workes of our heauenly Maſter, they are not like to proſper in our hands: Hee is not worthy of this ſpirituall ſtation, who holds not the ſeruice of God his higheſt, his richeſt preferment.

TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE EDWARD LORD DENNY, BARON OF Waltham, my bountifull and dearely honoured Patron.

Right Honourable:

NOne can challenge ſo much right in theſe Meditations, as your Lordſhip, vnder whoſe happy ſhade they receiued their firſt conception: Vnder this Iuniper of yours, haue I (not driuen by force, but drawne by pleaſure) ſlept thus long, ſweetly, ſafely; and haue receiued theſe Angelicall touches: How iuſtly may your Lordſhip claime the fruits of your owne fauours? Your carefull ſtudies in the booke of God, are fit to be exemplary; which haue ſo inriched you, that your Teacher ſhall gaine. In this reach of diuine thoughts, you ſhall ſee Benhadads inſolence taken downe by Ahabs victory, an humble (though Idolatrous) Iſraelite carrying it from an inſulting Pagan: You ſhall ſee in Ahab the impotent paſsions of greatneſſe; in Naboth, bleeding honeſtie; in Iezebel bloody hypocriſie, cruell craft; plotting from hell, pretending from heauen: You ſhall ſee the wofull ſucceſſe of an vniuſt mercy; Ahab forfaiting what hee gaue, killed by him whom he ſhould haue killed: you ſhall ſee reſolute Michaiah oppoſing the mercenary Synode of Prophets, a beaten victor, an impriſoned freeman: You ſhall ſee Ahaziah falling through his grate; Elijah climbing vp his Mount, mounting vp to his glory; fetching fire from heauen, fetcht by a fiery charet to heauen. Eliſha the heire of his mantle, of his ſpirit, no leſſe maruellous in his beneficences, in his reuenges. What doe I foretell all? Me thinkes I feele my ſelfe now too like an Italian hoſt, thus to meet your Lordſhip on the way, and to promiſe beforehand your fare and entertainment: Let it pleaſe your Lordſhip rather to ſee and allow your cheare: Indeed the feaſt is Gods, and not mine, wherein ſtore ſtriues with delicacie: If my cookery hurt it not, it is enough: Through your hands I commend it to the world, as I doe your Lordſhip, and my Honourable good Ladie, to the gracious protection of the Almighty, iuſtly vowing my ſelfe

Your Lordſhips in all faithfull obſeruance for euer to command,

AHAB and BENHADAD.

THere is nothing more dangerous for any ſtate, then to call in forraigne powers, for the ſuppreſſion of an home-bred enemie; the remedy hath oft in this caſe, proued worſe then the diſeaſe. Aſa King of Iudah implores the ayde of Benhadad, the Syrian, againſt Baaſha King of Iſrael. That ſtranger hath good colour to ſet his foot in ſome out-skirt-townes of Iſrael; and now theſe ſerue him but for the handſell of more; Such ſweetneſſe doth that Edomite find in the ſoile of Iſrael, that his ambition will not take vp with leſſe then all; He that entred as a Friend, will proceed as a Conqueror; and now aimes at no leſſe then Samaria it ſelfe, the heart, the head of the ten Tribes: There was no cauſe to hope for better ſucceſſe of ſo perfidious a League with an Infidell: Who can looke for other then warre when he ſees Ahab and Iezebel in the Throne, Iſrael in the groues and temples of Baalim? The ambition of Benhadad was not ſo much guilty of this warre, as the Idolatry of that wicked nation; How can they expect peace from earth, who doe wilfully fight againſt heauen? Rather will the God of Hoſts arme the brute, the ſenſeleſſe creatures againſt Iſrael, then he will ſuffer their defiance vnreuenged. Ahab and Benhadad are well matched, an Idolatrous Iſraelite, with a paganiſh Idumæan; well may God plague each with other, who meanes vengeance to them both. Ahab finds himſelfe hard preſſed with the ſiege; and therefore is glad to enter into treaties of peace; Benhadad knowes his owne ſtrength; and offers inſolent conditions, Thy ſiluer and thy gold is mine, thy wiues alſo and thy children, euen the goodlieſt are mine. It is a fearefull thing to be in the mercy of an enemy; In caſe of hoſtility might will carue for it ſelfe: Ahab now after the diuiſion of Iudah, was but halfe a King; Benhadad had two and thirty Kings to attend him; What equality was in this oppoſition? Wiſely doth Ahab therefore, as a reed in a tempeſt, ſtoop to this violent charge of ſo potent an enemy: My Lord, O King, according to thy ſaying I am thine, and all that I haue: It is not for the ouer-powred to capitulate; Weakneſſe may not argue but yeeld. Tyranny is but drawne on by ſubmiſſion; and where it finds feare, and deiection, inſulteth. Benhadad not content with the ſoueraigntie of Ahabs goods, cals for the poſſeſſion; Ahab had offred the Dominion, with reſeruation of his ſubordinate intereſt: he will be a tributary, ſo he may be an owner: Benhadad imperiouſly beſides the command, cals for the propriety; and ſuffers not the King of Iſrael to inioy thoſe things at all, which he would inioy but vnder the fauour of that predominancie. Ouer-ſtrained ſubiection turnes deſperate, if conditions bee impoſed worſe then death, there needes no long diſputation of the remedy; The Elders of Iſrael (whoſe ſhare was proportionably in this dainger) hearten Ahab to a deniall: which yet comes out ſo fearefully, as that it appeares rather extorted by the peremptory indignation of the people, then proceeding out of any generoſity of his Spirit: Neither doth he ſay, I will not, but, I may not. The proud Syrian (who would haue taken it in foule ſcorne to bee denied, though he had ſent for all the heads of Iſrael) ſnuffes vp the wind like a wilde Aſſe in the Wilderneſſe, and brags, and threats, and ſweares, The gods doe ſo to me, and more alſo, if the duſt of Samaria ſhall ſuffice for handfulls for all the people that follow me: Not the men, not the goods onely of Samaria ſhall bee caried away captiue, but the very earth whereon it ſtands; and this, with how much eaſe? No Souldier ſhall need to bee charged with more then an handfull, to make a valley where the mother City of Iſrael once ſtood: Oh vaine boaſter! In whom I know not whether pride or folly be more eminent: Victorie is to bee atchieued, not to bee ſworne; future euents are no matter of an oath; Thy gods (if they had beene) might haue beene called as witneſſes of thy intentions, not of that ſucceſſe, whereof thou wouldeſt be the Author without them: Thy gods can doe nothing to thee, nothing for thee, nothing for themſelues; all thine Aramites ſhall not cary away one corne of ſand out of Iſrael, except it bee vpon the ſoles of their feet, in their ſhamefull flight; It is well, if they can cary backe thoſe skins that they brought thither: Let not him that girdeth on his harneſſe boaſt himſelfe as he that putteth it off: There is no cauſe to feare that man that truſtes in himſelfe? Man may caſt the dice of war, but the diſpoſition of them is of the Lord.

Ahab was lewd, but Benhadad was inſolent; If therefore Ahab ſhall be ſcourged with the rod of Benhadads feare; Benhadad ſhall bee ſmitten with the ſword of Ahabs reuenge; Of all things God will not endure a preſumptuous, and ſelfe-confident vaunter; after Elijahs flight and complaint, yet a Prophet is addreſſed to Ahab; Thus ſaith the Lord, Haſt thou ſeene all this great multitude? behold I will deliuer it into thine hand, this day, and thou ſhalt know that I am the Lord? Who can wonder enough at this vnweariable mercy of God? After the fire and raine fetcht miraculouſly from Heauen, Ahab had promiſed much, performed nothing, yet againe will God bleſſe and ſolicit him with victory; One of thoſe Prophets whom hee perſecuted to death ſhall comfort his deiection with the newes of deliuerance and triumph: Had this great worke beene wrought without premonition; either chance, or Baal, or the golden calues had caried away the thanks: Before hand therefore ſhall Ahab know both the Author and the meanes of his victory; God for the Author, the two hundred thirty two yong men of the Princes for the meanes; What are theſe for the Vant-gard, and ſeuen thouſand Iſraelites for the maine battell, againſt the troupes of three & thirty Kings, and as many centuries of Syrians, as Iſrael had ſingle ſouldiers? An equality of number had taken away the wonder of the euent; but now, the God of hoaſts will be confeſſed in this iſſue, not the valor of men; How indifferent it is with thee, O Lord, to ſaue by many, or by few; to deſtroy many or few? A world is no more to thee then a man; how eaſie is it for thee to enable vs to be more then Conquerors ouer Principalities and Powers: to ſubdue ſpirituall wickedneſſes to fleſh and blood? Through thee we can doe great things, yea we can doe all things through thee that ſtrengtheneſt vs; Let not vs want faith, we are ſure there can bee no want in thy power or mercy.

There was nothing in Benhadads pauilions but drink, and ſurfet, and iollity; as if wine ſhould make way for blood; Security is the certain vſher of deſtruction: we neuer haue ſo much cauſe to feare as when we feare nothing. This handfull of Iſrael dares look out (vpon the Prophets aſſurance) to the vaſt hoſt of Benhadad: It is enough for that proud pagan to ſit ſtill, and command amongſt his cups: To defile their fingers with the blood of ſo few, ſeemed no maſtery; that act would bee inglorious on the part of the Victors: More eaſily might they bring in three heads of dead enemies then one aliue: Imperiouſly enough therefore doth this boaſter out of his chaire of ſtate and eaſe, command, Whether they be come out for peace, take them aliue; or whether they be come out for warre, take them aliue; There needs no more, but, Take them, this field is won with a word. Oh the vaine and ignorant preſumptions of wretched men that will be reckoning without, againſt their Maker.

Euery Iſraelite kills his man, the Syrians flee, and cannot runne away from death: Benhadad and his Kings, are more beholden to their horſes, then to their gods, or themſelues for life and ſafetie, elſe they had beene either taken or ſlaine, by thoſe, whom they commanded to be taken.

How eaſie is it for him that made the heart, to fill it with terror, and conſternation, euen where no feare is? Thoſe whom God hath deſtined to ſlaughter, hee will ſmite, neyther needs hee any other enemy or executioner, then what he findes in their owne boſome: Wee are not the maſters of our owne courage, or feares; both are put into vs by that ouer-ruling power that created vs. Stay now, O ſtay, thou great King of Syria, and take with thee thoſe forgotten handfulls of the duſt of Iſrael: Thy gods will doe ſo to thee, and more alſo, if thy followers returne without their vowed burden: Learne now of the deſpiſed King of Iſrael, from henceforth not to ſound the triumph before the battell; not to boaſt thy ſelfe in the girding on of thy harneſſe, as in the putting off.

I heare not of eyther the publike thankſgiuing, or amendment of Ahab. Neyther danger nor victory can change him from himſelfe: Benhadad and he, though enemies, agree in vnrepentance; the one is no more moued with mercy, then the other with iudgement: Neyther is God any changeling in his proceedings towards both; his iudgement ſhall ſtill follow the Syrian, his mercy Iſrael: Mercy, both in fore-warning, and redeliuering Ahab; Iudgement, in ouerthrowing Benhadad. The Prophet of God comes againe, and both foretels the intended re-encounter of the Syrian, and aduiſes the care, and preparation of Iſrael: Goe ſtrengthen thy ſelfe, and marke, and ſee what thou doeſt; for, at the returne of the yeare, the King of Syria will come vp againſt thee: God purpoſeth the deliuerance of Iſrael, yet may not they neglect their fortifications; The mercifull intentions of God towards them may not make them careleſſe; The induſtry and courage of the Iſraelites fall within the decree of their victory; Security is the bane of good ſucceſſe; It is no contemning of a foyled enemie; the ſhame of a former diſgrace and miſcariage, whets his valor, and ſharpens it to reuenge: No power is ſo dreadfull, as that which is recollected from an ouerthrow.

The hoſtility againſt the Iſrael of God may ſleepe, but will hardly die. If the Aramites ſit ſtill, it is but till they be fully ready for an aſſault; Time will ſhew that their ceſſation was onely for their aduantage; neither is it otherwiſe with our ſpirituall aduerſaries: ſometimes their onſets are intermitted; they tempt not alwaies, they alwaies hate vs: their forbearance is not out of fauour, but attendance of opportunitie; happy are wee, if out of a ſuſpicion of their ſilence, we can as buſily prepare for their reſiſtance, as they doe for our impugnation.

As it is a ſhame to bee beaten, ſo yet the ſhame is leſſe, by how much the victor is greater; to mitigate the griefe, and indignation of Benhadads foile, his paraſites aſcribe it to gods, not to men; an humane power could no more haue vanquiſh't him then a diuine power could by him be reſiſted; Their gods are gods of the hils; Ignorant Syrians, that name gods, and confine them; varying their deities according to ſituations; They ſaw that Samaria (whence they were repelled) ſtood vpon the hill of Shemer? They ſaw the Temple of Ieruſalem ſtood vpon mount Sion; they knew it vſuall with the Iſraelites to ſacrifice in their high places, and perhaps they had heard of Elijahs altar, vpon mount Carmel; and now they ſottiſhly meaſure the effects of the power, by the place of the worſhip; as if he that was omnipotent on the hill, were impotent in the Valley; What doltiſh conceits doth blinde Paganiſme frame to it ſelfe of a Godhead? As they haue many gods, ſo finite; euery region, euery hill, euery dale, euery ſtreame hath their ſeuerall gods, and each ſo knowes his owne bounds, that he dares not offer to incroach vpon the other; or, if he doe, abuyes it with loſſe: Who would thinke that ſo groſſe blockiſhneſſe ſhould finde harbour in a reaſonable ſoule? A man doth not alter with his ſtation; He that wreſtled ſtrongly vpon the hill, loſeth not his force in the plaine; all places finde him alike actiue, alike valorous; yet theſe barbarous Aramites ſhame not to imagine that of God, which they would bluſh to affirme of their owne champions. Superſtition infatuates the heart out of meaſure; neither is there any fancy ſo abſurd or monſtrous, which credulous infidelity is not ready to entertaine with applauſe.

In how high ſcorne doth God take it to bee thus baſely vnder valued by rude heathen? This very miſ-opinion concerning the God of Iſrael ſhall coſt the Syrians a ſhamefull, and perfect deſtruction; They may call a Counſell of War, and lay their heads together, and change their Kings into Captaines, and their hills into valleyes, but they ſhall finde more graues in the plaines, then in the mountaines; This very miſ-priſon of God ſhall make Ahab (though he were more lewd) victorious; An hundred thouſand Syrians ſhall fall in one day, by thoſe few hands of Iſrael; And a dead wall in Aphek (to whoſe ſhelter they fled) ſhall reuenge God vpon the reſt that remained; The ſtones in the wall ſhall rather turne executioners, then a blaſphemous Aramite ſhall eſcape vnreuenged. So much doth the iealous God hate to be robd of his glory, euen by ignorant Pagans, whoſe tongues might ſeeme no ſlander. That proud head of Benhadad, that ſpoke ſuch big words of the duſt of Iſrael, and ſwore by his gods, that hee would kill and conquer, is now glad to hide it ſelfe in a blinde hole of Aphek; and now in ſtead of queſtioning the power of the God of Iſrael, is glad to heare of the mercy of the Kings of Iſrael; Behold, now, wee haue heard that the Kings of the houſe of Iſrael are mercifull Kings; Let vs, I pray thee, put ſackcloth on our loines, and ropes on our heads, and goe out to the King of Iſrael, peraduenture he will ſaue thy life.

There can bee no more powerfull attractiue of humble ſubmiſſion, then the intimation and conceit of mercy; Wee doe at once feare, and hate the inexorable; This is it, O Lord, that allures vs to thy throne of grace, the knowledge of the grace of that throne; with thee is mercy and plentious redemption; thine hand is open before our mouthes, before our hearts; If we did not ſee thee ſmile vpon ſuiters, we durſt not preſſe to thy footſtoole; Behold now we know that the King of heauen, the God of Iſrael, is a mercifull God; Let vs put ſackcloth vpon our loynes, and ſtrew aſhes vpon our heads, and goe meet the Lord God of Iſrael, that he may ſaue our ſoules.

How well doth this habit become inſolent, and blaſphemous Benhadad and his followers? a rope, and ſackcloth? A rope for a Crowne, ſackcloth for a robe; Neither is there leſſe change in the tongue, Thy ſeruant Benhadad ſaith, I pray thee let mee liue. Euen now the King of Iſrael ſaid to Benhadad, My Lord O King, I am thine: Tell my Lord the King, all that thou didſt ſend for to thy ſeruant, I will doe: Now Benhadad ſends to the King of Iſrael, Thy ſeruant Benhadad ſaid, I pray thee let me liue: Hee that was erewhile a Lord and King, is now a ſeruant; and he that was a ſeruant to the king of Syria, is now his Lord: he that would blow away all Iſrael in duſt, is now glad to beg for his owne life at the doore of a deſpiſed enemy; no courage is ſo haughty, which the God of hoſts cannot eaſily bring vnder; what are mē or deuils in thoſe almighty hāds?

The greater the deiection was, the ſtronger was the motiue of commiſeration; That haltar pleaded for life, and that plea for but a life, ſtirred the bowels for fauour: How readily did Ahab ſee in Benhadads ſudden miſery the image of the inſtability of all humane things? and relents at the view of ſo deepe and paſſionate a ſubmiſſion. Had not Benhadad ſaid, Thy ſeruant, Ahab had neuer ſaid, My brother; ſeldome euer was there loſſe in humility; How much leſſe can we feare diſparagement, in the annihilating of our ſelues, before that infinite Maieſtie? The drowning man ſnatches at euery twig; It is no maruell if the meſſengers of Benhadad cacht haſtilie at that laſt of grace, and hold it faſt, Thy brother Benhadad; Fauours are wont to draw on each other: Kindneſſes breed on themſelues: neither need wee any other perſwaſion to beneficence, then from our owne acts. Ahab cals for the King of Syria, ſets him in his owne Charet; treats with him of an eaſie (yet firme) league, giues him both his life, and his Kingdome. Neither is the Crowne of Syria ſooner loſt, then recouered; Onely hee that came a free Prince, returnes tributarie: Onely his traine is clipt too ſhort for his wings; an hundred twentie ſeuen thouſand Syrians are abated of his Guard, homeward. Blaſphemy hath eſcaped too well, Ahab hath at once peace with Benhadad, warre with God; God proclaimes it by his Herald, one of the ſoones of the Prophets; not yet in his owne forme, but diſguiſed, both in faſhion, and complaint; It was a ſtrange ſuit of a Prophet, Smite me I pray thee; Many a Prophet was ſmitten, and would not; neuer any but this wiſhed to be ſmitten; The reſt of his fellowes were glad to ſay, Saue mee; this onely ſayes, Smite me; His honeſt neighbour, out of loue and reuerence, forbeares to ſtrike; There are too many (thinkes hee) that ſmite the Prophets, though I refraine; What wrong haſt thou done that I ſhould repay with blowes? Hadſt thou ſued for a fauour, I could not haue denyed thee, now thou ſueſt for thine hurt, the deniall is a fauour; Thus he thought; but Charitie cannot excuſe diſobedience; Had the man of God called for blowes, (vpon his owne head) the refuſall had beene iuſt and thanke-worthy; but now that he ſayes, In the Word of the Lord, Smite me, this kindneſſe is deadly: Becauſe thou haſt not obeyed the voyce of the Lord, behold, aſſoone as thou art departed from me a Lyon ſhall ſlay thee; It is not for vs to examine the charges of the Almighty; Be they neuer ſo harſh, or improbable, (if they bee once knowne for his) there is no way but obedience, or death. Not to ſmite a Prophet, when God commands, is no leſſe ſinne, then to ſmite a Prophet, when God forbids; It is the diuine precept or prohibiton, that either makes or aggrauates an euill; And if the Iſraelite bee thus reuenged, that ſmote not a Prophet, what ſhall become of Ahab that ſmote not Benhadad? Euery man is not thus indulgent; an eaſie requeſt will gaine blowes to a Prophet from the next hand; yea, and a wound in ſmiting. I know not whether it were an harder taſke for the Prophet to require a wound, then for a well-meaning Iſraelite to giue it; Both muſt bee done; The Prophet hath what hee would, what hee muſt will, a ſight of his owne blood: and now diſguiſed herewith, and with aſhes vpon his face, hee way-lays the King of Iſrael, and ſadly complaines of himſelfe in a reall parable, for diſmiſſing a Syrian priſoner deliuered to his hands, vpon no leſſe charge then his life; and ſoone receiues ſentence of death, from his owne mouth: Well was that wound beſtowed that ſtrucke Ahabs ſoule through the fleſh of the Prophet: The diſguiſe is remoued: The King ſees not a ſouldier, but a Seer, and now finds that he hath vnawares paſſed ſentence vpon himſelfe. There needs no other doome then from the lips of the offender: Thus ſaith the Lord, Becauſe thou haſt let goe out of thy hand, a man whom I appointed to vtter deſtruction, therefore thy life ſhall goe for his life, and thy people for his people: Had not Ahab knowne the will of God concerning Benhadad, that had beene mercy to an enemy, which was now cruelty to himſelfe, to Iſrael: His eares had heard of the blaſphemies of that wicked tongue this His eyes had ſeene God goe before him, in the example of that reuenge; No Prince can ſtrike ſo deepe into his ſtate, as in not ſtriking: In priuate fauour there may bee publike vnmecifulneſſe.

AHAB, and NABOTH.

NAboth had a faire Vineyard; It had beene better for him to haue had none; His vineyard yeelded him the bitter Grapes of death. Many a one hath beene ſold to death by his lands and goods; wealth hath beene a ſnare, as to the ſoule, ſo to the life; Why doe wee call thoſe goods, which are many times the bane of the owner? Naboths vineyard lay neere to the Court of Iezebel; It had beene better for him, it had beene planted in the wilderneſſe; Doubtleſſe, this vicinity made it more commodious to the poſſeſſor; but more enuious and vnſafe: It was now the perpetuall obiect of an euill eye, and ſtirred thoſe deſires, which could neither be well denyed, nor ſatisfied: Eminency is ſtill ioyned wich perill, obſcuritie with peace: There can bee no worſe annoyance to an inheritance, then the greatneſſe of an euill neighbourhood: Naboths vines ſtood too neere the ſmoake of Iezebels chimneys: to much within the proſpect of Ahabs window; Now lately had the King of Iſrael beene twice victorious ouer the Syrians; no ſooner is he returned home then hee is ouercome with euill deſires; The ſoyle hee gaue was not worſe then that hee tooke: There is more true glory in the conqueſt of our luſts, then in all bloody Trophees; In vaine ſhall Ahab boaſt of ſubduing a forraine enemy, whiles he is ſubdued by a domeſticke enemy within his owne breſt; Opportunity and Conuenience is guilty of many a theft: Had not this ground line ſo faire, Ahab had not beene tempted: His eye lets in this euill gueſt into the ſoule, which now dares come forth at the mouth; Giue mee thy vineyard, that I may haue it for a garden of herbes, becauſe it is neere to my houſe, and I will giue thee a better vineyard for it, or if it ſeeme good to thee, I will giue thee the worth of it in money; Yet had Ahab ſo much ciuility, and iuſtice, that he would not wring Naboths patrimony out of his hand by force, but requires it vpon a faire compoſition, whether of price, or of exchange: His gouernment was vicious, not tyrannicall; Proprietie of goods was inuiolably maintained by him; No leſſe was Naboth allowed to claime a right in his vineyard, then Ahab in his palace; This wee owe to lawfull Soueraignty to call ought our owne, and well worthy is this priuiledge to be repaid with all humble and loyall reſpects. The motion of Ahab (had it beene to any other then an Iſraelite) had beene as iuſt, equall, reaſonable, as the repulſe had beene rude, churliſh, inhumane. It is fit that Princes ſhould receiue due ſatisfaction in the iuſt demands, not onely of their neceſſities, but conuenience, and pleaſure; well may they challenge this retribution to the benefit of our common peace and protection; If there bee any ſweetneſſe in our vineyards, any ſtrength in our fields, we may thanke their ſcepters; Iuſtly may they expect from vs the commoditie, the delight of their habitation; and if we gladly yeeld not to their full elbow-roome, both of ſite and prouiſion, we can be no other then ingratefull; Yet dares not Naboth giue any other anſwer to ſo plauſible a motion, then, The Lord forbid it me, that I ſhould giue thee the inheritance of my Fathers: The honeſt Iſraelite ſaw violence in this ingenuity; There are no ſtronger commands, then the requeſts of the great; It is well that Ahab well not wreſt away this patrimomy, it is not well that he deſired it; The land was not ſo much ſtood vpon, as the law; One earth might be as good as another, and money equiualent to eyther: The Lord had forbidden to alien their inheritance: Naboth did not feare loſſe, but ſinne: What Naboth might not lawfully doe, Ahab might not lawfully require: It pleaſed God to bee very punctuall, and cautelous, both in the diſtinction, and preſeruation of the intireneſſe of theſe Iewiſh inheritances: Nothing but extreme neceſſitie might warrant a ſale of land, and that, but for a time; if not ſooner, yet at the Iubile, it muſt reuert to the firſt owner: It was not without a comfortable ſignification, that whoſoeuer had once his part in the land of Promiſe, could neuer loſe it; Certainly Ahab could not but know this diuine reſtriction, yet doubts not to ſay, Giue me thy vineyard; The vnconſcionable will know no other law but their profit, their pleaſure. A lawleſſe greatneſſe hates all limitations, and abides not to heare men ſhould need any other warrant but will.

Naboth dares not be thus tractable; How gladly would he be quit of his inheritance, if God would acquit him from the ſinne? Not out of wilfulneſſe, but obedience, doth this faithfull Iſraelite hold off from this demand of his Soueraign; not daring to pleaſe an earthly King with offending the heauenly: When Princes command lawfull things, God commands by them; when vnlawfull, they command againſt God; paſſiue obedience we muſt giue, actiue we may not; wee follow then as ſubordinate, not as oppoſite to the higheſt.

Who cannot but ſee and pity the ſtraites of honeſt Naboth: Ahab requires what God forbids; he muſt fall out either with his God, or his King: Conſcience caries him againſt policy; and he reſolues not to ſinne, that he might be gracious. For a world he may not giue his vineyard: Thoſe who are themſelues godleſſe, thinke the holy care of others but idly ſcrupulous: The King of Iſrael could not chuſe but ſee that onely Gods prohibition lay in the way of his deſignes, not the ſtomacke of a froward ſubiect; yet he goes away into his houſe heauy and diſpleaſed; and caſts himſelfe downe vpon his bed, turnes away his face, and refuſes his meat; Hee hath taken a ſurfet of Naboths grapes which marres his appetite, and threatens his life: How ill can great hearts endure to bee croſſed, though vpon the moſt reaſonable and iuſt grounds: Ahabs place call'd him to the Guardianſhip of Gods Law, and now his heart is ready to breake, that this parcell of that Law may not bee broken: No maruell if hee made not dainty to tranſgreſſe a locall ſtatute of God, who did ſo ſhamefully violate the eternall Law of both Tables.

I know not whether the ſpleen, or the gall of Ahab be more affected; Whether more of anger, or griefe, I cannot ſay; but ſick he is & keepes his bed, and balkes his meat, as if he ſhould die of no other death, thē the ſalads that he would haue had: O the impotēt paſſion and inſatiable deſires of Couetouſneſſe! Ahab is Lord & King of all the territories of Iſrael; Naboth is the owner of one poore Vineyard; Ahab cannot inioy Iſrael, if Naboth inioy his Vineyard; Beſides Samaria, Ahab was the great Lord Paramount of Damaſcus and all Syria, the victor of him that was attended with two and thirty Kings; Naboth was a plaine townſman of Iezreel, the good husband of a little Vineyard; Whether is the wealthier? I doe not heare Naboth wiſh for any thing of Ahabs, I heare Ahab wiſhing (not without indignation of a repulſe) for ſomwhat from Naboth: Riches & pouerty, is no more in the heart then in the hand; He is wealthy that is contented, he is poore that wanteth more: Oh rich Naboth that careſt not for all the large poſſeſſions of Ahab, ſo thou maiſt bee the Lord of thine owne Vineyard; Oh miſerable Ahab, that careſt not for thine owne poſſeſſions whiles thou mayeſt not be the Lord of Naboths Vineyard.

He that cauſed the diſeaſe ſends him a Phyſitian; Satan knew of old how to make vſe of ſuch helpers; Iezebel comes to Ahabs bed-ſide, and caſts cold water in his face, and puts into him ſpirits of her owne extracting. Doſt thou now gouerne the Kingdome of Iſrael? Ariſe, eat bread, and let thine heart be merry; I will giue thee the Vineyard of Naboth. Ahab wanted neither wit, nor wickedneſſe; Yet is he in both, a very nouice to this Zidonian dame. There needs no other Deuill, then Iezebel, whether to proiect euill, or to worke it: She chides the puſillanimity of her deiected husband, and perſwades him his rule cannot bee free, vnleſſe it be licentious, that there ſhould bee no bounds for ſoueraignetie, but will: Already hath ſhee contriued to haue by fraud and force, what was denied to intreaty; Nothing needs but the name, but the ſeale of Ahab: let her alone with the reſt: How preſent are the wits of the weaker ſex for the deuiſing of wickedneſſe? She frames a letter in Ahabs name, to the Senatours of Iezreel, wherein ſhee requires them to proclaime a faſt, to ſuborne two falſe witneſſes againſt Naboth, to charge him with blaſphemy againſt God & the King, to ſtone him to death; A ready payment for a rich Vineyard: Whoſe indignation riſeth not to heare Iezebel name a faſt? The great contemners of the moſt important Lawes of God, yet can be content to make vſe of ſome diuine, both ſtatutes, and cuſtomes, for their owne aduantage: She knew the Iſraelites had ſo much remainder of grace, as to hold blaſphemy worthy of death; She knew their manner was to expiate thoſe crying ſinnes with publike humiliation: She knew that two Witneſſes at leaſt muſt caſt the offender; all theſe ſhe vrges to her own purpoſe; There is no miſchiefe ſo deuilliſh, as that which is cloked with piety: Simulation of holineſſe doubleth a villany; This murder had not been halfe ſo foule, if it had not bin thus masked with a religious obſeruation; Beſides deuotion, what a faire pretence of legality is here? Blaſphemy againſt God and his anointed may not paſſe vnreuenged; The offender is conuented before the ſad and ſeuere bench of Magiſtracy; the iuſtice of Iſrael allowes not to condemne an abſent, an vnheard malefactor; Witneſſes come forth, and agree in the intimation of the crime; the Iudges rend their garments, and ſtrike their breſts as grieued, not more for the ſin, then the puniſhment; their very countenance muſt ſay, Naboth ſhould not die, if his offence did not force our iuſtice, and now, he is no good ſubiect, no true Iſraelite, that hath not a ſtone for Naboth.

Iezebel knew well to whom ſhe wrote; Had not thoſe letters falne vpon the times of a wofull degeneration of Iſrael, they had receiued no leſſe ſtrong denials from the Elders, then Ahab had from Naboth; God forbid that the Senate of Iezreel ſhould forge a periurie, belie truth, condemne innocency, broke corruption: Command iuſt things, wee are ready to die in the zeale of our obedience, wee dare not imbrue our hands in the blood of an innocent.

But ſhe knew whom ſhe had engaged, whom ſhe had marred by making conſcious. It were ſtrange if they who can countenance euill with greatneſſe, ſhould want factors for the vniuſteſt deſignes. Miſerable is that people whoſe Rulers (in ſtead of puniſhing) plot, and incourage wickedneſſe; when a diſtillation of euill fals from the head, vpon the lungs of any State, there muſt needes follow a deadly conſumption.

Yet, perhaps there wanted not ſome colour of pretence for this proceeding; They could not but heare, that ſome words had paſſed betwixt the King and Naboth; Haply is was ſuggeſted, that Naboth had ſecretly ouer-laſhed into ſaucy and contemptuous termes to his Soueraigne, ſuch as neither might be well borne, nor yet (by reaſon of their priuacy) legally conuinced; the bench of Iezreel ſhould but ſupply a forme to the iuſt matter, and deſert of condemnation; What was it for them to giue their hand to this obſcure midwifery of Iuſtice? Is it enough that their King is an accuſer and witneſſe of that wrong, which onely their ſentence can formally reuenge. All this cannot waſh their hands from the guilt of blood; If iuſtice be blinde, in reſpect of partiality, ſhe may not be blinde in reſpect of the grounds of execution; Had Naboth beene a blaſphemer, or a traitor, yet theſe men were no better then murtherers; What difference is there betwixt the ſtroke of Magiſtracie, and of man-ſlaughter, but due conuiction?

Wickedneſſe neuer ſpake out of a Throne, and complained of the defect of inſtruments; Naboth was (it ſeemes) ſtrictly conſcionable, his fellow Citizens looſe, & lawleſſe; they are glad to haue gotten ſuch an opportunite of his diſpatch: No clauſe of Ahabs letter is not obſerued; A faſt is warned, the city is aſſembled, Naboth is conuented, accuſed, confronted, ſentenced, ſtoned. His vineyard is eſcheated to the Crowne; Ahab takes ſpeedy and quiet poſſeſſion; How ſtill doth God ſit in heauen, and looke vpon the complots of treachery and villanies, as if they did not concerne him: The ſucceſſe ſo anſwers their deſires, as if both heauen and earth were their friends. It is the plague, which ſeemes the felicity of ſinners, to ſpeed well in their lewd enterpriſes; No reckoning is brought in the midſt of the meale, the end payes for all: Whiles Ahab is reioycing in his new garden-plot, and promiſing himſelfe contentment in this commodious enlargement, in comes Elijah, ſent from God with an errand of vengeance. Me thinkes, I ſee how the Kings countenance changed; with what agaſt eyes, and pale cheekes, he lookt vpon that vnwelcome Prophet: Little pleaſure tooke he in his proſpect, whiles it was clogged with ſuch a gueſt: yet his tongue begins firſt; Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy? Great is the power of conſcience: vpon the laſt meeting (for ought we know) Ahab and Elijah parted friends: The Prophet had lacquayed his coach, and tooke a peaceable leaue at this Townes end; now Ahabs heart told him (neither needed any other meſſenger) that God, and his Prophet were falne out with him; His continuing Idolatry, now ſeconded with blood, bids him look for nothing but frownes from heauen: A guilty heart can neuer be at peace: Had not Ahab knowne how ill he had deſerued of God, he had neuer ſaluted his Prophet by the name of an enemy: Hee had neuer beene troubled to bee found by Elijah, if his owne breſt had not found him out for an enemy to God: Much good may thy vineyard doe thee, O thou King of Iſrael, many faire flowers, and ſauoury herbes may thy new Garden yeeld thee; pleaſe thy ſelfe with thy Iezebel, in the triumph ouer the carkaſſe of a ſcrupulous ſubiect; let me rather die with Naboth, then reioyce with thee: His turne is ouer, thine is to come: The ſtones that ouerwhelmed innocent Naboth, were nothing to thoſe that ſmite thee; Haſt thou killed, & alſo taken poſſeſſion? thus ſaith the Lord, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, ſhall dogs lick thy blood, euen thine. What meaneſt thou, O Elijah, to charge this murther vpon Ahab: Hee kept his Chamber, Iezebel wrote, the Elders condemned, the people ſtoned; yet thou ſayeſt, Haſt thou killed? Well did Ahab know that Iezebel could not giue this vineyard with drie hands; yet was he content to winke at what ſhe would doe: Hee but ſits ſtill whiles Iezebel workes: Onely his Signet is ſuffered to walke for the ſealing of this vnknowne purchaſe: Thoſe that are truſted with authority, may offend no leſſe in conniuency, or neglect, then others in act, in participation: Not onely command, conſent, countenance, but very permiſſion feoffes publike perſons in thoſe ſinnes, which they might, and will not preuent. God loues to puniſh by retaliation: Naboth and Ahab ſhall both bleed; Naboth by the ſtones of the Iezreelites, Ahab by the ſhafts of the Aramites; The dogs ſhall taſt of the blood of both: What Ahab hath done in cruelty, he ſhall ſuffer in iuſtice: The caſe and the end make the difference happy on Naboths ſide, on Ahabs wofull; Naboth bleeds as a Martyr; Ahab as a murtherer: What euer is Ahabs condition, Naboth changes a vineyard on earth, for a Kingdome in heauen. Neuer any wicked man gained by the perſecution of an innocent: Neuer any innocent man was a loſer by ſuffering from the Wicked.

Neither was this iudgement perſonall but hereditarie: I will take away thy poſterity, and will make thine houſe like the houſe of Ieroboam: Him that dyeth of Ahab in the City, the Dogs ſhall eat; and him that dieth in the field, ſhall the fowles of the ayre eat: Ahab ſhall not need to take thought for the traducing of this ill gotten inheritance; God hath taken order for his heyres; whom his ſin hath made no leſſe the heyres of his curſe, then of his body: Their fathers cruelty to Naboth hath made them, together with their mother Iezebel, dogs-meat. The reuenge of God doth at laſt make amends for the delay; Whether now is Naboths vineyard payd for?

The man that had ſold himſelfe to worke wickedneſſe, yet rues the bargaine. I doe not heare Ahab (as bad as he was) reuile or threaten the Prophet, but hee rends his cloathes, and wears and lies in ſack-cloth, and faſts, and walks ſoftly: Who that had ſeen Ahab would not haue deemed him a true penitent: All this was the viſor of ſorrow, not the face; or if the face, not the heart; or if the ſorrow of the heart, yet not the repentance: A ſorrow for the iudgement, not a repentance for the ſinne: The very deuils howle to be tormented: Griefe is not euer a ſigne of grace: Ahab rends his cloathes, he did not rend his heart; he puts on ſack-choth, not amendment; he lies in ſack-cloth, but he lies in his Idolatry; he walkes ſoftly, he walks not ſincerely; worldly ſorrow cauſeth death: Happy is that griefe for which the ſoule is the holier.

Yet what is this I ſee? This very ſhadow of repentance caries away mercy: It is no ſmall mercy to defer an euill: Euen Ahabs humiliation ſhall prorogue the iudgement;

ſuch as the penitence was,ſuch ſhall be the reward; a temporary reward of a temporary penitence: As Ahab might be thus ſorrowfull, and neuer the better; ſo, hee may be thus fauoured, and neuer the happier: Oh God, how graciouſly art thou ready to reward a ſound, and holy repentance, who art thus indulgent to a carnall and ſeruile deiection.

Ahab and Michaiah: OR, The death of Ahab.

WHo would haue look't to haue heard any more of the wars of the Syrians with Iſrael;after ſo great a ſlaughter,after ſo firme a league; a league not of peace onely, but of Brotherhood: The haltars, the ſack-cloth of Benhadads followers were worn out, as of vſe, ſo of memory, and now they are changed for Iron and ſteele. It is but three yeares that this peace laſts; and now that warre begins which ſhall make an end of Ahab: The King of Iſrael rues his vniuſt mercy; according to the word of the Prophet, that gift of a life, was but an exchange: Becauſe Ahab gaue Benhadad his life; Benhadad ſhall take Ahabs; He muſt forfeit in himſelfe what he hath giuen to another: There can bee no better fruit of too much kindneſſe to Infidels: It was one Article of the league betwixt Ahab and his brother Benhadad, that there ſhould bee a ſpeedy reſtitution of all the Iſraelitiſh Cities: The reſt are yeelded, onely Ramoth Gilead is held backe, vnthankfully, iniuriouſly: He that begged but his life, receiues his Kingdome, and now reſts not content with his owne bounds: Iuſtly doth Ahab challenge his owne, iuſtly doth he moue a war to recouer his owne from a perfidious tributary; the lawfulneſſe of actions may not be iudged by the euents, but by the grounds; the wiſe and holy arbiter of the world knowes why many times the better cauſe hath the worſe ſucceſſe: Many a iuſt buſineſſe is croſſed, for a puniſhment to the agent.

Yet Iſrael and Iudah were now peeced in friendſhip; Iehoſaphat the good King of Iudah had made affinitie with Ahab the Idolatrous King of Iſrael: and, beſides a perſonall viſitation, ioynes his forces with his new Kinſman, againſt an old confederate: Iudah had called in Syria againſt Iſrael; and now Iſrael cals in Iuda againſt Syria: Thus rather ſhould it be: It is fit that the more pure Church ſhould ioyne with the more corrupt, againſt a common Paganiſh enemy.

Iehoſaphat hath match't with Ahab; not with a diuorce of his deuotion. Hee will fight, not without God; Inquire I pray thee at the Word of the Lord, to day: Had hee done thus ſooner; I feare Athaliah had neuer called him father: This motion was newes in Iſrael: It was wont to be ſaid, Inquire of Baal: The good King of Iudah will bring Religion into faſhion in the Court of Iſrael; Ahab had inquired of his counſellors, What needed he be ſo deuout, as to inquire of his Prophets? Onely Iehoſaphats preſence made him thus godly: It is an happy thing to conuerſe with the vertuous; their counſell and example cannot but leaue ſome tincture behind them of a good profeſſion, if not of piety: Thoſe that are truely religious dare not but take God with them in all their affaires; with him they can be as valiant as timorous without him.

Ahab had Clergy enough, ſuch as it was: Foure hundred Prophets of the groues were reſerued from appearing to Elijahs challenge; theſe are now conſulted by Ahab: they liue to betray the life of him who ſaued theirs. Theſe care not ſo much to inquire what God would ſay, as what Ahab would haue them ſay; they ſaw which way the Kings heart was bent, that way they bent their tongues: Goe vp, for the Lord ſhall de- liuer it into the hands of the King : Falſe Prophets care onely to pleaſe; a plauſible falſhood paſſes with them aboue an harſh truth. Had they ſeene Ahab fearefull, they had ſaid, Peace, Peace; now they ſee him reſolute, war and victory: It is a fearefull preſage of ruine when the Prophets conſpire in aſſentation.

Their number, conſent, confidence hath eaſily won credit with Ahab : Wee doe all willingly beleeue what we wiſh: Iehoſhaphat is not ſo ſoone ſatisfied : Theſe Prophets were (it is like) obtruded to him (a ſtranger) for the true Prophets of the true God : The iudicious King ſees cauſe to ſuſpect them, and now perceiuing at what altars they ſerued, hates to reſt in their teſtimony : Is there not here a Prophet of the Lord beſides, that we might inquire of him? One ſingle Prophet ſpeaking from the Oracles of GOD, is more worth then foure hundred Baalites : Truth may not euer be meaſured by the poll. It is not number but weight that muſt cary it in a Councell of Prophets : A ſolid Verity in one mouth is worthy to preponderate light faſhood in a thouſand.

Euen King Ahab (as bad as hee was) kept tale of his Prophets; and could giue account of one that was miſſing : There is yet one man (Michaiah the ſonne of Imlah) by whom we may inquire of the Lord, but I hate him, for hee doth not prophecy good concerning me, but euill. It is very probable that Michaiah was that diſguiſed Prophet, who brought to Ahab the fearefull meſſage of diſpleaſure, and death, for diſmiſſing Benhadad, for which he was euer ſince faſt in priſon, deepe in diſgrace : Oh corrupt heart of ſelfe condemned Ahab : If Michaiah ſpake true to thee, how was it euill? If others ſaid falſe, how was it good? and if Michaiah ſpake from the Lord, why doſt thou hate him? This hath wont to be the ancient lot of Truth, cenſure and hatred: Cenſure of the meſſage, hatred of the bearer. To carnall eares the meſſage is euill, if vnpleaſing; and if plauſible, good : If it be ſweet, it cannot be poiſon: if bitter, it cannot be wholeſome: The diſtemper of the receiuer is guilty of this miſ-conceit : In it ſelfe euery truth as it is good, ſo amiable; euery faſhood loathſome, as euill : A ſicke palate cryes out of the taſt of thoſe liquors, which are well allowed of the healthfull. It is a ſigne of a good ſtate of the ſoule, when euery vendure can receiue his proper iudgement.

Wiſe and good Iehoſaphat diſſwades Ahab from ſo hard an opinion, and ſees cauſe ſo much more to vrge the conſultation of Michaiah, by how much he findes him more vnpleaſing : The King of Iſrael to ſatisfie the importunitie of ſo great, and deare an allie, ſends an Officer for Michaiah : He knew well (belike) where to finde him; within thoſe foure walls, where vniuſt cruelty had diſpoſed of that innocent Seer : Out of the obſcurity of the priſon, is the poore Prophet fetcht in the light of ſo glorious a Confeſſion of two Kings, who thought this Conuocation of Prophets not vnworthy of their greateſt repreſentation of State and Maieſtie : There hee finde Zedekiah, the leader of that falſe crue, not ſpeaking only, but acting his prediction : Signes were no leſſe vſed by the Prophets, then words; this arch-flatterer hath made him hornes of iron; the horne is forceable, the iron irreſiſtible; by an irreſiſtible force ſhall Ahab puſh the Syrians; as there were more certainty in this mans hands then in his tongue: If his ſon Chenaanah had not had a fore-head of braſſe for impudency, and a heart of Lead for flexibleneſſe to humours, and times, he had neuer deuiſed theſe horns of iron; wherewith his King was goared vnto blood : Howſoeuer it is enough for him that he is beleeued, that he is ſeconded : All the great inqueſt of theſe Prophets gaue vp their verdict by this foreman: not one of foure hundred diſſented : Vnanimitie of opinion in the greateſt Eccleſiaſticall aſſemblies is not euer an argument of truth: There may be as common, and as firme agreement in error.

The meſſenger that came for Michaiah, like a carnall friend, ſets him in a way of fauour : tels him what the reſt ſaid, how they pleaſed : how vnſafe it would bee for him to varie, how beneficiall to aſſent : Thoſe that adore earthly greatneſſe, thinke euery man ſhould dote vpon their Idols: and hold no tearmes too high for their ambitious purchaſes. Faithfull Michaiah ſcornes the motion, hee knowes the price of the word, and contemns it, As the Lord liueth, what the Lord ſaith vnto mee that will I ſpeake : Neither feares, nor fauours, can tempt the holily reſolute : They can trample vpon dangers, or honors, with a careleſſe foot; and whether they be ſmiled or frowned on by the great, dare not either alter, or conceale their errand.

The queſtion is moued to Michaiah; He at firſt ſo yeelds, that he contradicts; yeelds in words, contradicts in pronunciation; The ſyllables are for them, the ſound againſt them: Ironies deny ſtrongeſt in affirming; and now being preſſed home, hee tels them that God had ſhewed him thoſe ſheepe of Iſrael ſhould ere long, by this meanes, want their Shepheard; The very reſemblance, to a good Prince, had beene affectiue; The ſheepe is an helpeleſſe creature, not able either to guard or guide it ſelfe; all the ſafety, all the direction of it, is from the keeper; without whom, euery curre chaſes and werries it, euery tracke ſeduceth it; Such ſhall Iſrael ſoone bee, if Ahab bee ruled by his Prophets; The King of Iſrael doth not beleeue, but quarrell; not at himſelfe, who had deſerued euill, but at the Prophet, who foreſignified it, and is more carefull that the King of Iuda ſhould marke how true hee had fore-told concerning the Prophet, then how the prophet had fore-told concerning him.

Bold Michaiah (as no whit diſcouraged with the vniuſt checks of greatneſſe) doubles his prediction, and by a ſecond viſion particularizeth the meanes of this dangerous errour: Whiles the two Kings ſate maieſtically in their Thrones, hee tels them of a more glorious Throne, then theirs, whereon he ſaw the King of Gods ſitting: Whiles they were compaſſed with ſome hundreds of Prophets, and thouſands of Subiects, and Souldiers, he tels them of all the hoſt of heauen, attending that other Throne, Whiles they were deliberating of a war, he tels them of a God of heauen iuſtly decreeing the iudgement of a deadly deception to Ahab: The decree of the higheſt is not more plainely reuealed, then expreſſed parabolically. The wiſe and holy God is repreſented, after the manner of men, conſulting of that ruine, which hee intended to the wicked King of Iſrael; That increated, and infinite wiſedome, needs not the aduice of any finite, and created powers, to direct him, needs not the aſſent, and aid of any ſpirit for his execution; much leſſe of an euill one: yet here an euill ſpirit is brought in (by way of viſion mixt with parable) profering the ſeruice of his lie, accepted, imployed, ſucceſſefull: Theſe figures are not voyd of truth: The action and euent is reduced to a decree; the decree is ſhadowed out by the reſemblance of humane proceedings: All euill motions, and counſels are originally from the malignant Spirit: The euill ſpirit could haue no power ouer then, but by the permiſſion, by the decree of the Almighty: That Almighty, as he is no Author of ſin, ſo he ordinates all euill to good: It is good that is iuſt: it is iuſt that one ſinne ſhould be puniſhed by another: Satan is herein no other then the executioner of that God, who is as farre from infuſing euill, as from not reuenging it. Now Ahab ſees the ground of that applauſed conſent of his rabble of Prophets: one euil ſpirit hath no leſſe deceiued them, then they their maſter: he is one, therefore he agrees with himſelfe, he is euill, therefore both he & they agree in deceit.

Oh the noble & vndaunted ſpirit of Michaiah neither the Thrones of the Kings, nor the number of the Prophets could abate one word of his true (though diſpleaſing) meſſage: The King of Iſrael ſhall heare, that he is miſ-led by lyers, they by a deuill: Surely Iehoſhaphat cannot but wonder at ſo vnequall a contention: to ſee one ſilly Prophet affronting foure hundred: with whom leſt confidence ſhould carie it, behold Zedekiah more bold, more zealous: If Michaiah haue giuen him (with his fellowes) the lye, he giues Michaiah the fiſt: Before theſe two great Guardians of peace, and iuſtice, ſwaggering Zedekiah ſmites Michaiah on the face: and with the blow expoſtulates: Which way went the Spirit of Lord from mee, to ſpeake vnto thee? For a Prophet to ſmite a Prophet, in the face two Kings, was intolerably inſolent: the act was much vnbeſeeming the perſon, more the preſence: Prophets may reproue, they may not ſtrike: It was enough for Ahab to puniſh with the hand; no weapon was for Zedekiah, but his tongue; neither could this rude preſumption haue beene well taken, if malice had not made magiſtracie inſenſible of this vſurpation: Ahab was well content to ſee that hated mouth beaten by any hand. It is no new condition of Gods faithfull meſſengers to ſmart for ſaiyng truth. Falſhood doth not more bewray it ſelfe in any thing then in blowes; Truth ſuffers, whiles errour perſecutes: None are more ready to boaſt of the Spirit of God, then thoſe that haue the leaſt; As in veſſels the full are ſilent.

Innocent Michaiah, neither defends, nor complaines; It would haue well beſeemed the religious King of Iudah, to haue ſpoken in the cauſe of the dumbe, to haue checked inſolent Zedekiah: Hee is content to giue way to this tide of peremptory, and generall oppoſition: The helpleſſe Prophet ſtands alone, yet layes about him with his tongue, Behold, thou ſhalt ſee in that day, when thou ſhalt goe into an inner chamber, and hide thy ſelfe. Now the proud Baaliſte ſhewed himſelfe too much; ere long he ſhall bee glad to lurke vnſeene; his hornes of iron cannot beare off this danger. The ſonne of Ahab cannot chuſe, but in the zeale of reuenging his fathers deadly ſeducement, call for that falſe head of Zedekiah: In vaine ſhall that Impoſtor ſeeke to hide himſelfe from iuſtice: But, in the meane while, he goes away with honour: Michaiah with cenſure. Take Michaiah, and carie him backe to Amon, the Gouernour of the Citie, and to Ioaſh the Kings ſonne; and ſay, Thus ſayth the King, Put this fellow in priſon, and feed him with bread of affliction, and with water of affliction, vntill I come in peace.

An hard doome of Truth; The Iayle for his lodging; coorſe bread and water for his food, ſhall but reſerue Michaiah for a further reuenge. The returne of Ahab ſhall bee the bane of the Prophet: Was not this hee that aduiſed Benhadab, not to boaſt in putting on his Armour, as in the vngirding it; and doth hee now promiſe himſelfe peace and victory, before hee buckle it on? No warning will diſſwade the wilfull; So aſſured doth Ahab make himſelfe of ſucceſſe, that hee threats ere hee goe, what he will doe when he returnes in peace: How iuſtly doth God deride the miſreckonings of proud and fooliſh men; If Ahab had no other ſinnes, his very confidence ſhall defeat him; yet the Prophet cannot be ouercome in his reſolution; hee knowes his grounds cannot deceiue him, and dare therefore caſt the credit of his function vpon this iſſue: If thou returne at all in peace, the Lord hath not ſpoken by mee: And hee ſayd, Hearken, O people, euery one of you; Let him neuer bee called a Prophet, that dare not truſt his GOD: This was no aduenture therefore of reputation, or life; ſince hee knew whom hee beleeued, the euent was no leſſe ſure, then if it had beene paſt: Hee is no God that is not conſtant to himſelfe: Hath hee ſpoken, and ſhall he not performe? What hold haue wee for our ſoules, but his eternall Word? The being of God is not more ſure, then his promiſes, then his ſentences of iudgement. Well may we appeale the teſtimonie of the world in both: if there bee not plagues for the wicked; if there be not rewards for the righteous; God hath not ſpoken by vs.

Not Ahab onely, but good IEHOSHAPHAT is caried with the multitude; Their forces are ioyned againſt Ramoth: The King of Iſrael doth not ſo truſt his Prophets, that he dares truſt himſelfe in his owne cloathes: Thus ſhall hee elude Michaiahs threat; Iwis the iudgement of God, the Syrian ſhafts cannot finde him out in this vnſuſpected diſguiſe: How fondly doe vaine men imagine to ſhift off the iuſt reuenges of the Almighty.

The King of Syria giues charge to his Captaines to fight againſt none, but the King of Iſrael: Thus doth the vnthankefull Infidell repay the mercy of his late victor: Ill was the Snake ſaued, that requites the fauour of his life, with a ſting: Thus ſtill the greateſt are the faireſt marke to enuious eyes. By how much more eminent any man is in the Iſrael of God, ſo many more, and more dangerous enemies muſt hee expect: Both earth and hell conſpire in their oppoſition to the worthieſt. Thoſe who are aduanced aboue others, haue ſo much more need of the guard, both of their owne vigilancy, and others prayers. Iehoſhaphat had like to haue payd deare for his loue: He is purſued, for him, in whoſe amitie he offended: His cryes deliuer him, his cries, not to his purſuers, but to his God; whoſe mercy takes not aduantage of our infirmitie, but reſcues vs from thoſe euils, which wee wilfully prouoke: It is Ahab againſt whom, not the Syrians onely, but God himſelfe intends this quarrell: The enemy is taken off from Iehoſhaphat: Oh the iuſt and mighty hand of that diuine prouidence, which directeth all our actions to his owne ends; which takes order where euery ſhaft ſhall light; and guides the arrow of the ſtrong Archer, into the ioynts of Ahabs harneſſe: It was ſhot at a venture, fals by a deſtiny; and there fals where it may carie death to an hidden debtor: In all actions both voluntary and caſuall, thy will, O God, ſhall bee done by vs, with what euer intentions. Little did the Syrian know whom he had ſtriken, no more then the arrow wherewith hee ſtroke: An inuiſible hand diſpoſed of both, to the puniſhment of Ahab, to the vindication of Michaiah: How worthily, O God, art thou to bee adored in thy iuſtice, and wiſedome, to bee feared in thy iudgements. Too late doth Ahab now thinke of the faire warnings of Michaiah, which he vnwiſely contemned; of the painfull flatteries of Zedekiah, which hee ſtubbornly beleeued; That guilty blood of his runs downe out of his wound, into the midſt of his charet, and payes Naboth his arrerages: O Ahab, what art thou the better for thine Iuory houſe, whiles thou haſt a blacke ſoule? What comfort haſt thou now, in thoſe flattering prophets, which tickled thine eares, and ſecured thee of victories? What ioy is it to thee now, that thou waſt great? Who had not rather be a Michaiah in the Iayle, then Ahab in the Charet? Wicked men haue the aduantage of the way, godly men of the end: The Charet is waſhed in the poole of Samaria, the dogges come to claime their due: they licke vp the blood of the King of Iſrael: The tongues of thoſe brute creatures ſhall make good the tongue of Gods Prophet: Michaiah is iuſtified, Naboth is reuenged, the Baalites confounded, Ahab iudged: Righteous art thou O God in all thy wayes, and holy in all thy workes.

AHAZIAH ſicke, and ELIJAH reuenged.

Ahaziah ſucceeds his father Ahab, both in his throne, and in his ſinne: Who could looke for better iſſue of thoſe loynes, of thoſe examples? God followes him with a double iudgement; of the reuolt of Moab, and of his owne ſickneſſe: All the reigne of Ahab, had Moab beene a quiet Tributarie; and furniſhed Iſrael with rich flockes, and fleeces; now their ſubiection dies with that warlike King, and will not be inherited: This rebellion tooke aduantage, as from the weaker ſpirits, ſo from the ſickly body of Ahaziah, whoſe diſeaſe was not naturall, but caſuall: walking in his Palace of Samaria, ſome grate in the floore of his Chamber, breakes vnder him, and giues way to that fall, whereby hee is bruiſed, and languiſheth: The ſame hand that guided Ahabs ſhaft, cracks Ahaziahs latteſſe: How infinite varietie of plagues hath the iuſt GOD for obſtinate ſinners? whether in the field or in the chamber, he knowes to finde them out: How fearleſly did Ahaziah walke on his wonted pauement? The Lord hath layd a trapp for him, whereinto, whiles he thinkes leaſt, he fals irrecouerably: No place is ſafe for the man that is at varience with God.

The body of Ahaziah was not more ſicke, then his ſoule was graceleſſe: None but chance was his enemy, none but the God of Ekron muſt bee his friend: He lookes not vp to the Omnipotent hand of diuine iuſtice for the diſeaſe, or of mercy for the remedy: An Idol is his refuge, whether for cure or intelligence: We heare not till now of Baal-zebub: this new God of flies is (perhaps) of his making, who now is a ſuter to his owne erection: All theſe heathen Deities were but a deuill, with change of appellations; the influence of that euill ſpirit deluded thoſe miſerable clients; elſe, there was no fly ſo impotent as that out ſide of the god of Ekron: Who would thinke that any Iſraelite could ſo farre dote vpon a ſtocke, a Fiend? Time gathered much credit to this Idol; in ſo much as the Iewes afterwards ſtiled Beel-zebub, the Prince of all the regions of darkneſſe: Abaziah is the firſt that brings his Oracle in requeſt, and payes him the tribute of his deuotion: Hee ſends meſſengers, and ſayes, Goe inquire of Baal-Zebub the god of Ekron, whether I ſhall recouer of this diſeaſe: The meſſage was either idle, or wicked: idle, if he ſent it to a ſtock; if to a deuill, both idle and wicked. What can the moſt intelligent ſpirits know of future things, but what they ſee either in their cauſes, or in the light of participation: What a madneſſe was it in Ahaziah to ſeeke to the poſterne, whiles the fore-gate ſtood open? Could thoſe euill ſpirits truely foretell euents no way pre-exiſtent, yet they might not, without ſinne, bee conſulted; the euill of their nature debarres all the benefit of their information: If not as intelligencers, much leſſe may they be ſought to, as gods: who cannot bluſh to heare and ſee, that euen the very Euangelicall Iſrael ſhould yeeld Pilgrims to the ſhrines of darkneſſe? How many, after this cleere light of the Goſpell in their loſſes, in their ſickneſſes, ſend to theſe infernall Oracles, and damne themſelues wilfully, in a vaine curioſitie: The meſſage of the iealous God intercepts them, with a iuſt diſdaine, as here by Elijah, Is it not becauſe there is not a God in Iſrael, that yee goe to enquire of Baal Zebub the god of Ekron? What can be a greater diſparagement to the True God, then to be neglected, then to ſtand aſide, and ſee vs make loue to an helliſh riuall: were there no God in Iſrael, in heauen, what could wee doe other? what worſe? This affront of what euer Ahaziah cannot eſcape without a reuenge: Therefore thus ſaith the Lord; Thou ſhalt not come downe from that bed, on which thou art gone vp, but ſhalt ſurely die. It is an high indignitie to the True God, not to be ſought to, in our neceſſities, but ſo to bee caſhiered from our deuotions, as to haue a falſe god thruſt in his roome, is ſuch a ſcorne, as it is well if it can eſcape with one death: Let now the famons god of Ekron take off that brand of feared mortalitie, which the liuing God hath ſet vpon Ahaziah: Let Baal-zebub make good ſome better newes to his diſtreſſed ſuppliant: Rather the King of Iſrael is himſelfe (without his repentance) haſting to Beel-zebub. This errand is ſoone done; The meſſengers are returned, ere they goe: Not a little were they amazed to heare their ſecret meſſage from anothers mouth; neither could chuſe but thinke, Hee that can tell what Ahaziah ſaid, what hee thought, can foretell how hee ſhall ſpeed: Wee haue met with a greater God then wee went to ſeeke; what need wee inquire for another anſwer? With this conceit, with this report, they returne to their ſicke Lord, and aſtoniſh him with ſo ſhort, ſo ſad a relation: No maruell if the King inquired curiouſly of the habit, and faſhion of the man, that could know this, that durſt ſay this: They deſcribe him a man whether of an hairy skin, or of rough, courſe, careleſſe attire; thus dreſt, thus girded: Ahaziah readily apprehends it to be Elijah, the old friend of his father Ahab, of his mother Iezebel: More then once had he ſeene him (an vnwelcome gueſt) in the Court of Iſrael: The times had beene ſuch, that the Prophet could not at once ſpeake true, and pleaſe: Nothing but reproofes and menaces ſounded from the mouth of Elijah; Michaiah and hee were ſtill as welcome to the eyes of that guilty Prince, as the Syrian arrow was into his fleſh: Too well therefore had Ahaziah noted that querulous Seer, and now is not a little troubled to ſee himſelfe (in ſucceſſion) haunted with that bold, and ill-boding ſpirit.

Behold the true ſonne of Iezebel; the anguiſh of his diſeaſe, the expectation of death cannot take off the edge of his perſecution of Elijah: It is againſt his will that his death-bed is not bloody: Had Ahaziah meant any other then a cruell violence to Elijah, he had ſent a peaceable meſſenger, to call him to the Court, hee had not ſent a Captaine, with a band of Souldiers, to fetch him: the inſtruments which hee vſeth, cary reuenge in their face: If he had not thought Elijah more then a man, what needed a band of fifty to apprehend one? and if he did thinke him ſuch, why would hee ſend to apprehend him by fifty? Surely Ahaziah knew of old how miraculous a Prophet

Elijah was : what power that man had ouer all their baſe Deities : what command of the Elements, of the heauens : and yet hee ſends to attache him. It is a ſtrange thing to ſee how wilfully godleſſe men ſtriue againſt the ſtreame of their owne hearts: hating that which they know good, fighting againſt that which they know diuine. What a groſſe diſagreement is in the meſſage of this Iſraelitiſh Captaine? Thou man of God, the King hath ſaid, Come downe; If hee were a man of God, how hath hee offended? and if he haue iuſtly offended the anointed of God, how is hee a man of God? And if he be a man of God, and haue not offended, why ſhould he come downe to puniſhment? Here is a kinde confeſſion, with a falſe heart, with bloody hands : The world is full of theſe windy courteſies, reall cruelties: Deadly malice lurkes vnder faire complements, and whiles it flatters, killeth. The Prophet hides not himſelfe from the purſuit of Ahaziah; rather hee ſits where hee may bee moſt conſpicuous, on the top of an Hill: this band knowes well where to finde him; and climbes vp, in the ſight of Elijah, for his arreſt : The ſteepneſſe of the aſcent (when they drew neere to the higheſt reach) yeelded a conuenience both of reſpiration and parle: thence doth the Captaine imperiouſly call downe the Prophet. Who would not tremble at the dreadfull anſwer of Elijah, If I be a man of God, then let fire come downe from heauen and conſume thee, and thy fifty : What ſhall we ſay? That a Prophet is reuengefull, that Souldiers ſuffer whiles a Prophet ſtrikes; that a Princes command is anſwered with imprecation, words with fire, that an vnarmed Seer ſhould kill one and fiftie at a blow? There are few trackes of Elijah that are ordinarie, and fit for common feet : His actions are more for wonder, then for precedent : Not in his owne defence would the Prophet haue beene the death of ſo many, if God had not by a peculiar inſtinct made him an inſtrument of this iuſt vengeance. The diuine iuſtice finds it meet to doe this for the terrour of Iſrael, that hee might teach them, what it was to contemne, to perſecute a Prophet; that they might learne to feare him whom they had forſaken, and confeſſe that heauen was ſenſible of their inſolencies, and impieties: If not as viſibly, yet as certainly doth God puniſh the violations of his ordinances, the affronts offered to his meſſengers, ſtill and euer : Not euer with the ſame ſpeed : ſometimes, the puniſhment ouer takes the act : ſometimes dogs it afarre off, and ſeizeth vpon the offender, when his crime is forgotten: Here, no ſooner is the word out of Elijahs mouth, then the fire is out of Heauen. Oh the wonderfull power of a Prophet! There ſits Elijah in his coorſe Mantle, on the top of the Hill, and commands the heauens, and they obey him, Let fire fall downe from heauen; Hee needs no more but ſay what hee would haue done: The fire fals down, as before, vpon the ſacrifice in Carmel, ſo now vpon the Souldiers of Ahaziah: What is man in the hands of his Maker? One flaſh of lightning hath conſumed theſe one and fifty. And if all the hoſts of Iſrael, yea of the world, had beene in their roomes, there had needed no other force. What madneſſe is it for him whoſe breath is in his noſthrils to contend with the Almightie? The time was, when two zealous Diſciples would faine have imitated this fierie reuenge of Elijah, and were repelled with a checke: The very place puts them in minde of the iudgement : Not farre from Samaria was this done by Elijah, and wiſht to bee done by the Diſciples : So churliſh a reiection of a Sauiour ſeemed no leſſe hainous,, then the endeuour of apprehending a Prophet : Lord, wilt thou that wee command fire to come downe from heauen, and conſume them, as Elias did. The world yeelded but one Elias : That which was zeale in him, might be fury in another, the leaſt variation of circumſtance may make an example dangerous; preſently therefore doe they heare, Ye know not of what ſpirit yee are : It is the calling that varies the ſpirit; Elijah was Gods Miniſter for the execution of ſo ſeuere a iudgement; they were but the Seruants of their owne impotent anger; there was fire in their breſts, which God neuer kindled : farre was it from the Sauiour of men, to ſecond their earthly fire, with his heauenly: Hee came indeed to ſend fire vpon earth; but to warme, not to burne; and if to burne, not the perſons of men, but their corruptions: How much more ſafe is it for vs to follow the meeke Prophet of the New Teſtament, then that feruent Prophet of the Old: Let the matter of our prayers be the ſweet dewes of mercy, not the fires of vengeance.

Would not any man haue thought Ahaziah ſufficiently warned by ſo terrible a iudgement? Could he chuſe but ſay, It is no medling with a man that can ſpeake lightening and death: what he hath ſaid concerning mee, is too well approued by what hee hath done to my Meſſengers; Gods hand is with him, mine ſhall not bee againſt him: Yet, now, behold, the rage of Ahaziah is ſo much the more kindled by this fire from heauen, and a more reſolute Captaine, with a ſecond band, is ſent to fetch Elijah to death; This man is in haſte, and commands not onely his deſcent, but his ſpeed; Come downe quickly: The charge implyes a threat; Elijah muſt looke for force, if hee yeeld not: There needs no other weapon for defence, for offence, then the ſame tongue, the ſame breath: God hath fire enough for all the troopes of Ahaziah: Immediately, doth a ſudden flame breakes out of heauen, and conſume this forward Leader, and his bold followers: It is a iuſt preſage and deſert of ruine, not to be warned: Worthily are they made examples, that will not take them.

What Marble, or Flint is harder then a wicked heart? As if Ahaziah would deſpightfully ſpit in the face of heauen, and wreſtle a foll with the Almighty, hee will needs yet againe ſet a third Captaine, vpon ſo deſperate an imploiment: How hot a ſeruice muſt this Commander needs thinke himſelfe put vpon? Who can but pity his ſtraits? There is death before him, death behinde him: If he goe not, the Kings wrath is the meſſenger of death: if he goe, the Prophets tongue is the executioner of death; Many an hard taske will follow the ſeruice of a Prince wedded to his paſſion, diuorced from God: Vnwillingly, doubtleſſe, and fearfully doth this Captaine climbe vp the Hill, to ſcale that impregnable Fort; but now, when hee comes neere to the aſſault, the battery that hee layes to it, is his prayers; his ſureſt fight is vpon his knees: Hee went vp, and came, and fell vpon his knees, before Elijah, and beſought him, and ſaid vnto him; O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of theſe fifty thy ſeruants, bee precious in thy ſight: he confeſſes the iudgement that befell his Predeceſſors; the monuments of their deſtruction were in his eye, and the terrour of it, in his heart; of an enemy therefore he is become a ſuppliant, and ſues not ſo much for the Prophets yeeldance, as for his owne life: This was the way to offer violence to the Prophet of God, to the God of that Prophet, euen humble ſupplications; Wee muſt deprecate that euill, which wee would auoid: if we would force bleſſings, we muſt intreat them: There is nothing to be gotten from God by ſtrong hand, any thing by ſuit. The life of the Captaine is preſerued: Elijah is by the Angell commanded to goe downe with him, ſpeedily, fearleſly. The Prophet caſts not with himſelfe: What ſafety can there be in this iourney? I ſhall put my ſelfe into the hands of rude Souldiers, and by them, into the hands of an inraged King; if he did not eagerly thirſt after my blood, hee had neuer ſought it, with ſo much loſſe: But, ſo ſoone as hee had a charge from the Angell, hee walkes downe reſolutely, and (as it were) dares the dangers of ſo great an hoſtilitie: Hee knew that the ſame God, who had fought for him, vpon the hill, would not leaue him in the Valley; hee knew that the Angell which bade him goe, was guard enough againſt a world of enemies. Faith knowes not how to feare; and can as eaſily contemne the ſuggeſtion of perils, as infidelitie can raiſe them.

The Prophet lookes boldly vpon the Court; which doubtleſſe was not a little diſaffected to him, and comes confidently into the bed-chamber of Ahaziah; and ſticks not to ſpeake ouer the ſame words to his head, which hee had ſent him not long ſince by his firſt meſſengers: Not one ſyllable will the Prophet abate of his errand: It is not for an Herald of heauen to be out of countenance; or to mince ought of the moſt killing meſſages of his God.

Whether the inexpected confidence both of the man, and of the ſpeech amazed the ſicke King of Iſrael, or whether the feare of ſome preſent iudgement (wherewith hee might ſuſpect Elijah to come armed vpon any act of violence that ſhould bee offered) ouer-awed him; or whether now at the laſt, vpon the ſight and hearing of this man of God, the Kings heart began to relent, and checke it ſelfe for that ſinne, for which hee was iuſtly reproued, I know not; but ſure I am, the Prophet goes away vntouched; neither the furious purpoſes of Ahaziah, nor the exaſperations of a Iezebel can hurt that Prophet, whom God hath intended to a fiery Chariot : The hearts of Kings are not their owne : Subiects are not ſo much in their hands, as they are in their Makers : How eaſily can God tame the fierceneſſe of any creature, and in the midſt of their moſt heady careere, ſtop them on the ſudden, and fetcht them vpon the knees of their humble ſubmiſſion : It is good truſting God with the euents of his owne commands; who can at pleaſure either auert euils, or improue them to good.

According to the word of the Prophet, Ahaziah dies : not two whole yeares doth hee ſit in the Throne of Iſrael : which hee now muſt yeeld (in the want of children) to his brother. Wickedneſſe ſhortens his reigne; he had too much of Ahab, and Iezebel, to expect the bleſſing, either of length, or proſperitie of gouernment : As alwaies in the other, ſo oft-times in this world doth God teſtifie his anger to wicked men : Some liue long, that they may aggrauate their iudgement; others die ſoon, that they may haſten it.

The Rapture of ELIJAH.

LOng and happily hath Elijah fought the wars of his God; and now after his noble, and glorious victories, God will ſend him a chariot of Triumph : Not ſuddenly would God ſnatch away his Prophet without warning, without expectation; but acquaints him before-hand with the determination of his glory. How full of heauenly ioy was the ſoule of Elijah, whiles hee fore-knew, and lookt for this inſtant happineſſe : With what contempt did he caſt his eyes vpon that earth which he was now preſently to leaue ? With what rauiſhment of an inward pleaſure did he looke vpon that heauen which he was to enioy ? For a meet farewell to the earth, Elijah will goe viſit the Schooles of the Prophets before his departure : Theſe were in his way : Of any part of the earth they were neareſt vnto heauen : In an holy progreſſe therefore he walks his laſt round, from Gilgal (neare Iordan) to Bethel, from Bethel to Iericho, from Iericho to Iordan againe. In all theſe ſacred Colleges of Diuines, he meant to leaue the legacie of his loue, counſell, confirmation, bleſſing. How happy a thing it is, whiles wee are vpon earth to improue our time and gifts to the beſt behoofe of Gods Church ? And after the aſſurance of our owne bleſſedneſſe, to helpe others to the ſame heauen ? But, O God, who can but wonder at the courſe of thy wiſe and powerfull adminiſtrations ? Euen in the midſt of the degeneration, and Idolatries of Iſrael haſt thou reſerued to thy ſelfe whole ſocieties of holy Prophets; and out of thoſe ſinfull and reuolted Tribes, haſt raiſed the two great miracles of Prophets, Elijah and Eliſha, in an immediate ſucceſſion : Iudah it ſelfe vnder a religious Iehoſhaphat, yeelded not ſo eminent, and cleerely illuminated ſpirits : The mercy of our prouident God will neither be confined, nor excluded : neither confined to the places of publike profeſſion, nor excluded from the depraued Congregations of his owne people; where hee hath loued, he cannot eaſily be eſtranged : Rather, where ſinne abounds, his grace aboundeth much more; and raiſeth ſo much ſtronger helps, as he ſees the dangers greater.

Happy was Eliſha in the attendance of ſo gracious a Maſter, and the more happy that he knows it : Faine would Elijah ſhake him off at Gilgal; if not there, at Bethel; if not yet there; at Iericho. A priuate meſſage (on which Elijah muſt goe alone) is pretended, from the Lord: whether ſhall we ſay the Prophet did this for the tryall of the conſtant affection of his carefull and diligent ſeruant; or, that it was concealed from Elijah that his departure was reuealed to Eliſha: Perhaps hee that knew of his owne reception into heauen, did not know what witneſſes would bee allowed to that miraculous act: and now his humble modeſty affected a ſilent and vn-noted paſſage; Euen Eliſha knew ſomething that was hid from his Maſter, now vpon the threſhold of heauen: No meere creature was euer made of the whole counſell of the Higheſt: Some things haue been diſcloſed to babes and nouices, that haue been cloſed vp to the moſt wiſe and iudicious: In naturall ſpeculations the greater wit, and deeper iudgement ſtill caries it; but in the reuelations of God, the fauour of his choice ſwayes all, not the power of our apprehenſion: The maſter may both command and increaſe his ſeruants ſtay, in vaine: Eliſha muſt bee pardoned this holy and zealous diſobedience, As the Lord liueth, and as thy ſoule liueth, I will not leaue thee: His Maſter may be withdrawne from him, he will not be withdrawne from his Maſter. He knew that the bleſſing was at the parting; and if he had diligently attended all his life, and now ſlacked in the laſt act, he had loſt the reward of his ſeruice. The euening praiſes the day, and the chiefe grace of the theater is in the laſt Scene: Be faithful to the death, and I will giue thee a Crowne of life.

That Elijah ſhould be tranſlated, and what day he ſhould be tranſlated, God would haue no ſecret: The ſonnes of the Prophets at Bethel, at Iericho, both know it, and aske Eliſha if he knew it not: Knoweſt thou that the Lord will take away thy Maſter from thy head this day? and hee anſwered, Yea, I know it, hold yee your peace. How familiarly do theſe Prophets inter-know one another? How kindly do they communicate their viſions? Seldome euer was any knowledge giuen to keep, but to impart: The grace of this rich Iewell is loſt in concealement. The remouall of an Elijah is ſo important a buſineſſe, that it is not fit to be done without noiſe: Many ſhall haue their ſhare in his loſſe: he muſt be miſſed on the ſudden: it was meet therefore that the world ſhould know his rapture ſhould be diuine and glorious. I doe not finde where the day of any naturall death is notified to ſo many: by how much more wonder there was in this Aſſumption, by ſo much more ſhall it bee fore-reuealed. It is enough for ordinarie occurrents to bee knowne in their euent: ſupernaturall things haue need of premonition, that mens hearts may bee both prepared for their receit, and confirmed in their certainty. Thrice was Eliſha intreated, thrice hath he denied, to ſtay behinde his now-departing Maſter; on whom both his eyes and his thoughts are ſo fixed, that hee cannot giue allowance ſo much as to the interpellation of a queſtion of his fellow-Prophets: Together therefore are this wonderfull paire come to the laſt ſtage of their ſeparation, the bankes of Iordan. Thoſe that were not admitted to bee attendants of the iourney, yet will not bee debarred from being ſpectators of ſo maruellous an iſſue. Fifty men of the ſonnes of the Prophets, went and ſtood to view afarre off; I maruell there were no more: How could any ſonne of the Prophets ſtay within the Colledge walls that day: when hee knew what was meant to Elijah? Perhaps, though they knew that to be the Prophets laſt day; yet they might thinke his diſparition ſhould bee ſudden, and inſenſible; beſides, they found how much hee affected ſecrecie in this intended departure: yet the fifty Prophets of Iericho will make proofe of their eyes, and with much intention aſſay who ſhall haue the laſt ſight of Elijah: Miracles are not purpoſed to ſilence and obſcuritie: God will not worke wonders without witneſſes; ſince hee doth them on purpoſe to winne glory to his name, his end were fruſtrate without their notice. Euen ſo, O Sauiour, when thou hadſt raiſed thy ſelfe from the dead, thou wouldeſt bee ſeene of more then fiue hundred brethren at once; and when thou wouldeſt raiſe vp thy glorified bodie from earth into Heauen, thou didſt not aſcend from ſome cloſe valley, but from the Mount of Oliues; not in the night, not alone, but in the cleare day, in the view of many eyes; which were ſo fixed vpon that point of thine heauen, that they could ſcarce bee remoued by the checke of Angels.

Iordan muſt be croſſed be Elijah in his way to heauen: There muſt be a meet parallel betwixt the two great Prophets, that ſhall meet Chriſt vpon Tabor; Moſes and Elias; Both receiued viſions on Horeb, to both God appeared there in fire, and other formes of terrour; both were ſent to Kings, one to Pharaoh, the other to Ahab: Both prepared miraculous Tables, the one of Qualles and Manna in the Deſert, the other of meale and Oyle in Sarepta: Both opened heauen, the one for that nouriſhing dew, the other for thoſe refreſhing ſhowers: Both reuenged Idolatries with the ſword, the one vpon the worſhippers of the golden Calfe, the other vpon the foure hundred Baalites: Both quenched the drought of Iſrael, the one out of the Rocke, the other out of the Cloud: Both diuided the waters, the one of the Red Sea, the other of Iordan: Both of them are forewarned of their departure: Both muſt be fetcht away beyond Iordan; The body of Elijah is tranſlated, the body of Moſes is hid: What Moſes doth by his Rod, Elijah doth by his Mantle; with that hee ſmites the Waters, and they (as fearing the diuine power which wrought with the Prophet) runne away from him, and ſtand on heapes, leauing their dry channell for the paſſage of thoſe awfull feet: It is not long ſince he mulcted them with a generall exſiccation: now hee onely bids them ſtand aſide, and giue way to his laſt walke; that he might with dry feet mount vp into the celeſtiall chariot.

The waters doe not now firſt obey him: they know that Mantle of old; which hath oft giuen lawes to their falling, riſing, ſtanding: they are paſt ouer; and now when Elijah finds himſelfe treading on his laſt earth, hee profers a munificent boone to his faithfull ſeruant, Aske what I ſhall doe for thee before I am taken from thee. I doe not heare him ſay, Aske of me when I am gone; In my glorified condition, I ſhall bee more able to beſtead thee; but, aske before I goe. Wee haue a communion with the Saints departed, not a commerce: when they are inabled to doe more for vs, they are leſſe apt to be ſollicited by vs. It is ſafe ſuing where we are ſure that we are heard. Had not Elijah receiued a peculiar inſtinct for this profer, he had not been thus liberall: It were preſumption to be bountifull on anothers coſt, without leaue of the owner: The mercy of our good God allowes his fauourites not onely to receiue, but to giue: not onely to receiue for themſelues, but to conuey bleſſings to others: What can that man want that is befriended of the faithfull?

Eliſha needs not goe farre to ſeeke for a ſuit; It was in his heart, in his mouth: Let a double portion of thy ſpirit be vpon me. Euery Prophet muſt be a ſonne to Elijah; but Eliſha would be his heire, and craues the happy right of his primogeniture, the double ſhare to his brethren: It was not wealth, nor ſafety, nor eaſe, nor honour, that Eliſha cares for, the world lies open before him, hee may take his choice: the reſt he contemneth: nothing will ſerue him but a large meaſure of his maſters ſpirit: No carnall thought was guilty of this ſacred ambition: Affectation of eminence was too baſe a conceit to fall into that man of God: He ſaw that the times needed ſtrong conuictions, he ſaw that he could not otherwiſe weild the ſucceſſion to ſuch a Maſter, therefore he ſues for a double portion of ſpirit; the ſpirit of propheſie to fore-know, the ſpirit of power to worke: We cannot bee too couetous, too ambitious of ſpirituall gifts; ſuch eſpecially as may inable vs to win moſt aduantage to God in our vocations. Our wiſhes are the true touch-ſtone of our eſtate; ſuch as we wiſh to be, we are: worldly hearts affect earthly things; ſpirituall, diuine: wee cannot better know what we are indeed; then by what we would be.

Elijah acknowledges the difficultie, and promiſes the grant of ſo great a requeſt: ſuſpended yet vpon the condition of Eliſhes eye-ſight. If thou ſee me when I am taken from thee, it ſhall be ſo vnto thee; but if not, it ſhall not be: What are the eyes to the furniture of the ſoule? What power is there in thoſe viſiue beames to draw downe a double portion of Elijahs Spirit? God doth not alwaies look at efficacy & merit in the conditions of our actions, but at the freedome of his own appointments: The eye was onely to be imployed as the ſeruant of the heart; that the deſires might bee ſo much more intended with the ſight: Vehemence is the way to ſpeed both in earth and in Heauen: If but the eye-lids of Eliſha fall, if his thoughts ſlacken, his hopes are daſhed: There muſt bee fixedneſſe and vigilance, in thoſe that deſire double graces.

Elijah was going on, and talking, when the Charet of heauen came to fetch him: Surely, had not that conference been needfull and diuine, it had giuen way to meditation: and Elijah had beene taken vp rather from his knees, then from his feet. There can be no better poſture, or ſtate, for the meſſenger of our diſſolution to finde vs in, then in a diligent proſecution of our calling. The buſie attendance of our holy vocation is no leſſe pleaſing to God, then an immediate deuotion: Happy is the ſeruant whom the maſter (when he comes) ſhall finde ſo doing.

Oh the ſingular glory of Elijah! What mortall creature euer had this honour to bee viſibly fetched by the Angels of God to his heauen? Euery ſoule of the elect is attended and caried to bleſſedneſſe by thoſe inuiſible meſſengers, but, what fleſh and blood was euer graced with ſuch a conuoy? There are three bodily Inhabitants of Heauen; Henoch, Elijah, our Sauiour Chriſt. The firſt before the law, the ſecond vnder the Law, the third vnder the Goſpell; All three in a ſeuerall forme of tranſlation: Our bleſſed Sauiour raiſed himſelſe to and aboue the heauens, by his own immediate power: he aſcended as the Sonne, they as ſeruants: hee as God, they as creatures: Elijah aſcended by the viſible miniſterie of Angels; Henoch inſenſibly: Wherefore, O God haſt thou done thus, but to giue vs a taſte of what ſhall be? to let vs ſee that heauen was neuer ſhut to the faithfull: to giue vs aſſurance of the future glorification of this mortall and corruptible part?

Euen thus, O Sauiour, when thou ſhalt deſcend from heauen with a ſhout, with the voice of an Archangell, and with the trumpet of God, we that are aliue & remaine, ſhall be caught vp together with the raiſed bodies of thy Saints, into the clouds, to meet thee in the ayre, to dwell with thee in glory.

Many formes haue thoſe celeſtiall ſpirits taken to themſelues in their apparitions to men: but of all other, moſt often hath the Almighty made his meſſengers a flame of fire: neuer more properly then here: How had the ſpirit of GOD kindled the hot fires of zeale in the breſt of E*lijah*? How had this Prophet thrice commanded fire from heauen to earth? How fitly now at laſt doe theſe Seraphicall fires carie him from earth to heauen?

What doe wee ſee in this rapture of E*lijah*, but violence and terrour, whirlewinde and fire? two of thoſe fearfull repreſentations which the Prophet had in the Rocke of Horeb: Neuer any man entred into glory with eaſe: Euen the moſt fauourable change hath ſome equiualency to a naturall diſſolution. Although doubtleſſe to E*lijah* this fire had a lightſomneſſe and reſplendance, not terrour: this whirlewinde had ſpeed, not violence: Thus haſt thou, O Sauiour, bidden vs when the Elements ſhall be diſſolued, and the heauens ſhall be flaming about our eares, to lift vp our heads with ioy, becauſe our redemption draweth nigh. Come death, come fire, come whirlewinde, they are worthy to be welcome that ſhall carie vs to immortalitie.

This arreption was ſudden, yet Eliſha ſees both the Charet, and the horſes, and the aſcent; and cries to his now-changed Maſter, betweene heauen and earth, My father, my father, the charet of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof. Shaphat of Abel-meholah, hath yeelded this title to E*lijah*, the naturall father of Eliſha, to the ſpirituall; neither of them may bee neglected, but, after the yoake of oxen killed at the farewell, wee heare of no more greetings, no more bewaylings of his bodily parent; and now that E*lijah* is taken from him, hee cries out like a diſtreſſed Orphane, My father, my father; and when hee hath loſt the ſight of him, he rends his cloathes in peeces according to the faſhion of the moſt paſſionate mourners: That Eliſha ſees his maſter halfe-way in heauen, cannot take away the ſorrow of his loſſe: The departure of a faithfull Prophet of God is worthy of our lamentation : Neither is it priuate affection that muſt ſway our griefe, but reſpects to the publike : Eliſha ſayes not onely, My father, but the charet and horſemen of Iſrael. That we haue forgone a father, ſhould not ſo much trouble vs as that Iſrael hath loſt his guard. Certainely, the view of this heauenly charet and horſes that came for Elijah, puts Eliſha in minde of that charet and horſemen, which Elijah was to Iſrael. Theſe were Gods charets, Elijah was theirs: Gods charet and theirs are vpon the ſame wheeles mounted into heauen : No forces are ſo ſtrong as the ſpirituall; the prayers of an Elijah are more powerfull, then all the Armies of fleſh : The firſt thing that this Seer diſcernes, after the ſeparation of his Maſter, is, the nakedneſſe of Iſrael in his loſſe. If we muſter Souldiers, and leeſe zealous Prophets, it is but a wofull exchange.

Elijahs Mantle fals from him in the riſing; there was no vſe of that, whither hee was going, there was, whence he was taken : Eliſha iuſtly takes vp this deare monument of his glorified maſter : A good ſupply for his rent garments : This was it which (in preſage of his future right) Elijah inueſted him withall, vpon the firſt ſight, when he was ploughing with the twelue yoke of oxen; now it fals from heauen to his poſſeſſion : I doe not ſee him adore ſo precious a relique, I ſee him take it vp, and caſt it about him : Penſiue and maſterleſſe doth hee now come backe to the bankes of Iordan, whoſe ſtreame hee muſt paſſe in his returne to the Schooles of the Prophets. Ere while hee ſaw what way that riuer gaue to the Mantle of Elijah; hee knew that power was not in the cloth, but in the ſpirit of him that wore it : to try therefore whether hee were no leſſe the heire of that ſpirit, then of that garment, he tooke the mantle of Elijah and ſmote the waters, and ſaid, Where is the Lord God of Elijah ? Eliſha doth not expoſtulate, and challenge, but pray; As if hee ſayd, Lord God, it was thy promiſe to mee by my departed maſter, that if I ſhould ſee him in his laſt paſſage, a double portion of his Spirit ſhould be vpon mee : I followed him with my eyes in that fire, and whirlewinde; now therefore, O God, make good thy gracious Word to thy ſeruant; ſhew ſome token vpon mee for good; make this the firſt proofe of the miraculous power wherewith thou ſhalt indue mee : Let Iordan giue the ſame way to mee as it gaue to my maſter. Immediately the ſtreame (as acknowledging the ſame Mantle, though in another hand) diuides it ſelfe, and yeelds paſſage to the ſucceſſor of Elijah.

The fifty ſonnes of the Prophets hauing bin a farre off witneſſes of theſe admirable euents, doe well ſee that Elijah (though tranſlated in body) hath yet left his Spirit behinde him; they meete Eliſha, and bow themſelues to the ground before him : It was not the outſide of Elijah which they had wont to ſtoope vnto, with ſo much veneration, it was his Spirit; which ſince they now finde in another ſubiect, they entertaine with equall reuerence : No enuy, no emulation raiſeth vp their ſtomacks againſt Elijahs ſeruant, but where they ſee eminent graces, they are willingly proſtrate. Thoſe that are truly gracious, doe no leſſe reioyce in the riches of others gifts, then humbly vnder-value their own. Theſe men were trained vp in the ſchooles of the Prophets, Eliſha at the plough and cart, yet now they ſtand not vpon tearmes of their worth, and his meanneſſe, but meekely fall downe before him whom God will honour : It is not to be regarded who the man is, but whom God would make him. The more vnlikely the meanes is, the more is the glory of the workman: It is the prayſe of an holy ingenuity to magnifie the graces of God where euer it findes them.

Theſe young Prophets are no leſſe full of zeale, then reuerence; zeale to Elijah, reuerence to Eliſha : They ſee Elijah caried vp in the ayre; they knew this was not the firſt time of his ſupernaturall remouall; Imagining it therefore poſſible that the Spirit of God had caſt him vpon ſome remote mountaine, or valley, they proferre the labour of their ſeruants to ſeeke him : In ſome things euen profeſſed Seers are blinde : Could they thinke God would ſend ſuch a Charet and horſes for a leſſe voyage then heauen.

Eliſha (knowing his maſter beyond all the ſphere of mortalitie) forbids them : Good will makes them vnmannerly; their importunitie vrges him till he is aſhamed; not his approbation but their vehemence caries at laſt a condeſcent: Elſe hee might perhaps haue ſeemed enuiouſly vnwilling to fetch backe ſo admired a Maſter: and loth to forgoe that mantle. Some things may be yeelded for the redeeming of our owne vexation, and auoidance of others miſ-conſtruction, which out of true iudgement we ſee no cauſe to affect.

The meſſengers tyred with three dayes ſearch, turne backe as wiſe as they went: ſome men are beſt ſatisfied, when they haue wearied themſelues in their owne wayes: nothing will teach them wit, but diſappointments. Their painfull errour leades them to a right conceit of Elijahs happier tranſportation: Thoſe that would find Elijah, let them aſpire to the heauenly Paradiſe; Let them follow the high ſteps of his ſincere faithfulneſſe, ſtrong patience, vndaunted courage, feruent zeale; ſhortly, let them walke in the wayes of his holy and conſtant obedience; at laſt God ſhall ſend the fiery charet of death to fetch them vp to that heauen of heauens, where they ſhall triumph in euerlaſting ioyes.

ELISHA { Healing the Waters. / Curſing the Children. / Releeuing the Kings.

IT is good making vſe of a Prophet whiles we haue him. Eliſha ſtayed ſome-while at Ierichô; The Citizens reſort to him with a common ſuit: Their ſtructure was not more pleaſant, then their waters vnwholeſome, and their ſoile by thoſe corrupt waters: They ſue to Eliſha for the remedie: Why had they not all this while, made their mone to Elijah? Was it that they were more awed with his greater auſterity? Or was it that they met not with ſo fit an opportunity of his commoration amongſt them? It was told them what power Eliſha had exerciſed vpon the waters of Iordan, and now they ply him for theirs: Examples of beneficence eaſily moue vs to a requeſt, and expectation of fauours.

What ailed the waters of Iericho? Surely, originally they were not ill affected: No men could be ſo fooliſh as to build a city, where neither earth nor water were vſefull: Meere proſpect could not cary men to the neglect of health, and profit. Hiel the Bethelite would neuer haue reedified it with the danger of a curſe, ſo lately as in the dayes of Ahab, if it had beene of old notorious for ſo foule an annoyance: Not therefore the ancient malediction of Ioſhua, not the neighbourhood of that noyſome lake of Sodome, was guilty of this diſeaſe of the ſoyle, and waters, but the late ſinnes of the inhabitants. He turneth the riuers into a wilderneſſe, and water-ſprings into a dry ground; a fruitfull land into barrenneſſe, for the wickedneſſe of them that dwell therein: How oft haue wee ſeene the ſame field both full and famiſhing? How oft the ſame waters both ſafe, and by ſome irruption or new tincture hurtfull? Howſoeuer naturall cauſes may concurre, heauen and earth, and ayre, and waters follow the temper of our ſoules, of our liues, and are therefore indiſpoſed becauſe we are ſo: Iericho began now to make it ſelfe capable of a better ſtate, ſince it was now become a receptacle of Prophets: Eliſha is willing to gratifie his hoſts; it is reaſon that any place ſhould fare the better for the preſence of Diuines. The medicine is more ſtrange then the diſeaſe. Bring mee a new Cruſe, and put ſalt therein: Why a Cruſe? why new? why Salt in that new Cruſe? How ſhould Salt make water potable? Or, if there were any ſuch vertue in it, what could a Cruſe-full doe to a whole current? Or, if that meaſure were ſufficient, what was the age of the Cruſe to the force of the Salt? Yet Eliſha cals for Salt in a new Cruſe. God (who wrought this by his Prophet) is a free agent; as hee will not binde his power to meanes; ſo will he by his power binde vnlikely meanes to performe his will.

Naturall proprieties haue no place in miraculous works: No leſſe eaſie is it for God to worke by contrary, then ſubordinate powers.

The Prophet doth not caſt the Salt into the channel, but into the ſpring of the waters: If the fountaine bee redreſſed, the ſtreames cannot bee faulty; as contrarily, the purity and ſoundneſſe of the ſtreame auayles nothing to the redreſſe of the fountaine: Reformation muſt begin at the well-head of the abuſe: The order of being is a good guide to the method of amending. Vertue doth not runne backward: Had Eliſha caſt the Salt into the brookes and ditches, the remedy muſt haue ſtriuen againſt the ſtreame, to reach vp to the ſpring: now it is but one labour to cure the fountaine: Our heart is a Well of bitter and venomous water, our actions are the ſtreames: In vaine ſhall we cleanſe our hands, whiles our hearts are euill.

The Cruſe and the Salt muſt bee their owne: The act muſt bee his; the power, Gods: He caſt the Salt into the ſpring, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the Lord, I haue healed theſe waters; there ſhall not bee from thence any more death, or barrenneſſe. Farre was it from Eliſha to challenge ought to himſelfe: Before, when hee ſhould diuide the waters of Iordan, he did not ſay, Where is the power of Eliſha, but, Where is the Lord God of Elijah? and now, when he ſhould cure the waters of Iericho, hee ſaies not, Thus ſayes Eliſha, but thus ſaith the Lord, I haue healed theſe waters. How carefull is the man of God that no part of Gods glory ſhould ſticke to his owne fingers. Iericho ſhall know to whom they owe the bleſſing, that they may duely returne the thankes. Eliſha profeſſes he can doe no more of himſelfe then that Salt, then that Cruſe; onely God ſhall worke by him, by it: and what euer that Almighty hand vndertakes, cannot faile, yea is already done: neither doth he ſay, I will heale, but I haue healed: Euen ſo, O God, if thou caſt into the fountaine of our hearts, but one Cruſe-full of the Salt of thy Spirit, we are whole, no thought can paſſe betweene the receit and the remedy.

As the generall viſitor of the Schooles of the Prophets, Eliſha paſſeth from Iericho to that other Colledge at Bethel. Bethel was a place of ſtrange compoſition: there was at once the golden Calfe of Ieroboam; and the Schoole of GOD: True religion and Idolatry found a free harbour within thoſe wals: I doe not maruell that Gods Prophets would plant there; there was the moſt need of their preſence, where they found the ſpring head of corruption: Phyſitians are of moſt vſe where diſeaſes abound: As he was going vp by the way, there came forth little children out of the City, and mocked him, and ſaid to him, Goe vp thou bald-head; Goe vp thou bald-head. Euen the very boyes of Bethel haue learned to ſcoffe at a Prophet; The ſpight of their Idolatrous parents is eaſily propagated; Children are ſuch as their inſtitution; Infancy is led altogether by imitation, it hath neither words nor actions, but infuſed by others; If it haue good or ill language, it is but borrowed; and the ſhame or thanke is due to thoſe that lent it them.

What was it that theſe ill-taught children vpbraided to the Prophet, but a ſleight naturall defect, not worthy the name of a blemiſh, the want of a little haire; at the beſt, a comely excrement, no part of the body; Had there beene deformity in that ſmoothneſſe of the head, which ſome great wits haue honoured with prayſes, a faultleſſe and remedileſſe eye-ſore had beene no fit matter for a taunt: How ſmall occaſions will be taken to diſgrace a Prophet? If they could haue ſayd ought worſe, Eliſha had not heard of this; God had crowned that head with honor, which the Bethelitiſh children loaded with ſcorne: Who would haue thought the rude termes of waggiſh boyes worthy of any thing but neglect? Eliſha lookes at them with ſeuere browes, and (like the heire of him that cald downe fire vpon the two Captaines and their fifties) curſes them in the name of the Lord; Two ſhee-beares out of the Wood haſten to bee his executioners, and teare two and forty of them in peeces. O fearefull example of diuine Iuſtice! This was not the reuenge of an angry Prophet, it was the puniſhment of a righteous Iudge: God and his Seer lookt through theſe children, at the parents, at all Iſrael; he would puniſh the parents miſ-nurturing their children (to the contemptuous vſage of a Prophet) with the death of thoſe children, which they had miſ-taught: Hee would teach Iſrael what it was to miſ-uſe a Prophet: And if hee would not endure theſe contumelies vnreuenged in the mouthes of children, what vengeance was enough for aged perſecutors?

Doubtleſſe ſome of the children eſcaped to tell the newes of their fellowes; what lamentation doe wee thinke there was in the ſtreets of Bethel? how did the diſtreſſed mothers wring their hands for this woefull orbation? And now when they came forth to fetch the remnants of their own fleſh, what a ſad ſpectacle it was to finde the fields ſtrawed with thoſe mangled carkaſſes? It is an vnprofitable ſorrow that followes a iudgement; Had theſe Parents beene as carefull to traine vp their children in good diſcipline, and to correct their diſorders, as they are now paſſionate in bemoaning their loſſe, this ſlaughter had neuer beene: In vaine doe wee looke for good of thoſe children, whoſe education we haue neglected: In vaine do we grieue for thoſe miſcariages, which our care might haue preuented.

Eliſha knew the ſucceſſe, yet doth he not balke the City of Bethel: Doe wee not wonder that the furious impatience of thoſe parents, whom the curſe of Eliſha robbed of their children, did not breake forth to ſome malicious practice againſt the Prophet? Would we not thinke the Prophet might miſdoubt ſome hard meaſure from thoſe exaſperated Citizens? There lay this way; hee followes God, without feare of men; as well knowing that either they durſt not, or they could not act violence. They knew there were Beares in the wood, and fires in heauen, and if their malice would haue ventured aboue their courage, they could haue no more power ouer Eliſha in the ſtreets, then thoſe hungry beaſts had in the way. Whither dare not a Prophet goe when God cals him? Hauing viſited the ſchooles of the Prophets, Eliſha retires to mount Carmel, and after ſome holy ſolitarineſſe, returnes to the City of Samaria: He can neuer be a profitable Seer, that is either alwayes, or neuer alone: Carmel ſhall fit him for Samaria; contemplation for action: That mother City of Iſrael muſt needs afford him moſt worke: Yet is the Throne of Ahaziah ſucceeded by a brother leſſe ill then himſelfe, then the parents of both: Ahabs impiety hath not a perfect heire of Iehoram: That ſon of his hates his Baal, though hee keepes his calues. Euen into the moſt wicked families it pleaſeth God to caſt his moſt powerfull reſtraints, that all are not equally vicious: It is no newes to ſee lewd men make ſcruple of ſome ſins: The world were not to liue in, if all ſinnes were affected by all. It is no thanke to Ahab and Iezebel that their ſonne is no Baalite: As no good is traduced from parents, ſo not all euill; there is an Almighty hand that ſtops the foule current of nature, at his pleaſure: No Idolater can ſay, that his child ſhall not be a conuert.

The affinitie betwixt the houſes of Iſrael & Iudah, holds good in ſucceſſion; Iehoram inherits the friendſhip, the aid of Iehoſhaphat: whoſe counſell (as is moſt likely) had cured him of that Baaliſme. It was a good warre whereto hee ſolicits the good King of Iudah. The King of Moab (who had beene an ancient Tributary from the dayes of Dauid) falls now from his homage, and refuſes to pay his hundred thouſand Lambes, and hundred thouſand Rammes with fleeces, to the King of Iſrael; The backes of Iſrael can ill miſſe the wooll of Moab, they will put on iron to recouer their cloth. Iehoſhaphat had beene once well chid, well frighted for ioyning with Ahab againſt Aram; yet doth he not ſticke now againe to come into the field with Iehoram againſt Moab: The caſe is more fauourable, leſſe dangerous; Baal is caſt downe: The Images of the falſe gods are gone, though the falſe Images of the true God ſtand ſtill; Beſide, this rebellious Moab had ioyned with the Syrians formerly againſt Iudah, ſo as Iehoſhaphat is intereſſed in the reuenge.

After reſolution of the end, wiſely doe theſe Kings deliberate of the way. It is agreed to paſſe through Edom; that Kingdome was annexed to the Crowne of Iudah: well might Iehoſhaphat make bold with his owne: It was (it ſeemes) a march farre about about in the meaſure of the way, but neereſt to their purpoſe: the aſſault would bee thus more eaſie if the paſſage were more tedious: The three Kings of Iſrael, Iudah, Edom, together with their Armies, are vpon foot. They are no ſooner comne into the parching wildes of Edom, then they are ready to die for thirſt; If the channels were farre off, yet the waters were further; the ſcorching beames of the Sun haue dried them vp; and haue left thoſe riuers more fit for walke, then entertainment: What are the greateſt Monarchs of the world, if they want but water to their mouthes? What can their Crownes, and Plumes, and rich Armes auaile them, when they are abridged but of that which is the drinke of beaſts? With drie tongues and lippes, doe they now conferre of their common miſery: Ieboram deplores the calamity, into which they were falne; but Iehoſhaphat askes for a Prophet: Euery man can bewayle a miſery; euery man cannot finde the way out of it: ſtill yet I heare good Iehoſhaphat ſpeake too late: He ſhould haue inquired for a Prophet, ere he had gone forth; ſo had hee auoyded theſe ſtraits: Not to conſult at all with God, is Iehorams ſinne; to conſult late, is Iehoſhaphats; the former is atheous careleſneſſe; the latter, forgetfull ouerſight: The beſt man may ſlacken good duties, the worſt contemnes them.

Not without ſome ſpecialty from God doth Eliſha follow the campe: Elſe, that had beene no Element for a Prophet: Little did the good King of Iudah thinke that God was ſo neere him: Purpoſely, was this holy Seer ſent for the ſuccour of Iehoſhaphat, and his faithfull followers, when they were ſo farre from dreaming of their deliuerie, that they knew not of a danger: It would bee wide with the beſt men, if the eye of diuine prouidence were not open vpon them, when the eye of their care is ſhut towards it: How well did Eliſha in the warres? The ſtrongeſt ſquadron of Iſrael was within that breſt: All their Armour of proofe had not ſo much ſafety and protection, as his Mantle: Though the King of Iſrael would take no notice of the Prophet, yet one of his Courtiers did, Here is Eliſha the ſonne of Shaphat, which powred water on the hands of Elijah; This follower of Iehoram knowes Eliſha by his owne name, by his fathers, by his maſters: The Court of Iſrael was profane, and Idolatrous enough, yet, euen there Gods Prophet had both knowledge, and honour: His very ſeruice to Elijah was enough to win him reuerence: It is better to be an attendant of ſome man, then to be attended by many: That he had powred water on Elijahs hands was inſinuation enough, that hee could powre out water for thoſe three Kings: The three Kings walke downe (by the motion of Iehoſhaphat) to the man of God: It was newes to ſee three Kings going downe to the ſeruant of him, who ranne before the charet of Ahab: Religion and neceſſitie haue both of them much power of humiliation, I know not whether more: Either zeale or need will make a Prophet honored.

How ſharpely dares the man of God to chide his Soueraigne, the King of Iſrael? The libertie of the Prophets was no leſſe ſingular, then their calling: He that would borrow their tongue, muſt ſhew their Commiſſion: As God reproued Kings for their ſakes, ſo did not they ſticke to reproue Kings for his ſake: Thus much freedome they muſt leaue to their ſucceſſors, that wee may not ſpare the vices of them, whoſe perſons we muſt ſpare.

Iuſtly is Iehoram turned off to the Prophets of his father, and the Prophets of his mother: It is but right and equall, that thoſe which wee haue made the comfort, and ſtay of our peace, ſhould be the refuge of our extremity: If our proſperity haue made the world our God, how worthily ſhall our death bed bee choaked with this exprobration? Neither would the caſe beare an Apology, nor the time an expoſtulation: Iehoram cannot excuſe, he can complaine; he findes that now three Kings, three Kingdomes are at the mercy of one Prophet; it was time for him to ſpeake faire; nothing ſounds from him but lamentations, and intreaties: Nay, for the Lord hath called theſe three Kings together to deliuer them into the hand of Moab: Iehoram hath ſo much grace is to confeſſe the impotency of thoſe, hee had truſted; and the power of that God whom hee had neglected; Euery ſinner cannot ſee, and acknowledge the hand of God in his ſufferings; Already hath the diſtreſſed Prince gained ſomething by this miſery; None complaines ſo much as he, none feeles ſo much as hee; All the reſt ſuffer for him, and therefore he ſuffers in them all.

The man of God, who well ſees the inſufficiency of Iehorams humiliation, layes on yet more load; As the Lord liueth before whom I ſtand, Surely, were it not that I regard the preſence of Iehoſhaphat the King of Iudah, I would not looke toward thee, nor ſee thee; Behold the double Spirit of Elijah; the maſter was not more bold with the father, then the ſeruant was with the ſonne: Eliſha was a ſubiect, and a Prophet; Hee muſt ſay that as a Prophet, which hee might not as a ſubiect; As a Prophet hee would not haue lookt at him, whom as a ſubiect he would haue bowed to: It is one thing when God ſpeaks by him, another, when he ſpeakes of himſelfe; That it might well appeare his diſlike of ſinne ſtood with his honour of Soueraignty, Iehoſhaphat goes away with that reſpect which Iehoram miſſed; No leſſe doth God and his Prophet regard religious ſincerity, then they abhorre Idolatry, and profaneneſſe: What ſhall not be done for a Iehoſhaphat? For his ſake ſhall thoſe two other Princes, and their vaſt Armies liue, and preuaile; Edom and Iſrael, whether ſingle or conioyned, had periſhed by the drought of the deſert, by the ſword of Moab; One Iehoſhaphat giues them both, life, and victory: It is in the power of one good man to oblige a world; wee receiue true (though inſenſible) fauours from the preſence of the righteous; Next to being good, it is happy to conuerſe with them that are ſo: if wee bee not bettered by their example, we are bleſt by their protection.

Who wonders not to heare a Prophet call for a Minſtrell, in the middeſt of that mournfull diſtreſſe of Iſrael and Iudah? Who would not haue expected his charge of teares and prayers, rather then of Muſicke? How vnſeaſonable are ſongs to an heauy heart? It was not for their eares, it was for his owne boſome, that Eliſha called for Muſicke: that his ſpirits after their zealous agitation, might bee ſweetly compoſed, and put into a meet temper, for receiuing the calme viſions of God: Perhaps it was ſome holy Leuite, that followed the Campe of Iehoſhaphat, whoſe minſtrelſie was required for ſo ſacred a purpoſe: None but a quiet breſt is capable of diuine Reuelations; Nothing is more powerfull to ſettle a troubled heart then a melodious harmony; The Spirit of Propheſie was not the more inuited, the Prophets Spirit was the better diſpoſed, by pleaſing ſounds: The ſame God that will reueale his will to the Prophet, ſuggeſts this demand, Bring me a Minſtrell; How many ſay thus when they would put God from them? Profane mirth, wanton muſicke debauches the ſoule; and makes no leſſe roome for the vncleane ſpirit, then ſpirituall melody doth for the Diuine.

No Prophet had euer the Spirit at command; The hand of the Minſtrell can doe nothing without the hand of the Lord; Whiles the Muſicke ſounds in the eare, God ſpeakes to the heart of Eliſha, Thus ſaith the Lord, Make this valley full of ditches; Yee ſhall not ſee wind, neither ſhall ye ſee raine, yet that valley ſhall be full of water, &c. To ſee wind, and raine in the height of that drought, would haue ſeemed as wonderfull, as pleaſing; but, to ſee abundance of water, without wind or raine, was yet more miraculous; I know not how the ſight of the meanes abates our admiration of the effect; Where no cauſes can be found out, wee are forced to confeſſe omnipotency; Elijah releeued Iſrael with water, but it was out of the cloudes, and thoſe cloudes roſe from the ſea; but whence Eliſha ſhall fetch it, is not more maruellous then ſecret.

All that euening, all that night muſt the faith of Iſrael and Iudah bee exerciſed with expectation; At the houre of the morning ſacrifice no ſooner did the blood of that Oblation guſh forth, then the ſtreames of waters guſhed forth into their new channells, and filled the Countrey with a refreſhing moiſture: Elijah fetcht downe his fire, at the houre of the euening ſacrifice: Eliſha fetcht vp his water, at the houre of the morning ſacrifice: God giues reſpect to his owne houres, for the encouragement of our obſeruation: If his wiſdome hath ſet vs any peculiar times wee cannot keepe them without a bleſſing: The deuotions of all true Iewes (all the world ouer) were in that houre combined; How ſeaſonably doth the wiſdome of God picke out that inſtant, wherein hee might at once anſwer both Eliſhaes propheſie, and his peoples prayers.

The Prophet hath aſſured the Kings, not of water onely, but of victory; Moab heares of enemies, and is addreſſed to warre; Their owne error ſhall cut their throats; they riſe ſoone enough to beguile themſelues; the beames of the riſing Sunne gliſtering vpon thoſe vaporous. and vnexpected waters, caried in the eyes of ſome Moabites a ſemblance of blood; a few eyes were enough to fill all eares with a falſe noiſe; the deceiued ſenſe miſcaries the imagination; This is blood, the Kings are ſurely ſlaine, and they haue ſmitten one another; now therefore, Moab to the ſpoile: Ciuill broyles giue iuſt aduantage to a common enemy; Therefore muſt the Camps be ſpoiled, becauſe the Kings haue ſmitten each other. Thoſe that ſhall bee deceiued, are giuen ouer to credulity; The Moabites doe not examine either the conceit, or the report; but flie in, confuſedly, vpon the Campe of Iſrael; whom they finde, too late, to haue no enemies but themſelues; As if death would not haue haſtened enough to them, they come to fetch it, they come to challenge it; It ſeizeth vpon them vnauoidably; they are ſmitten, their Cities razed, their Lands marred, their Wells ſtopped, their trees felled; as if God meant to waſte them but once.

No onſets are ſo furious as the laſt aſſaults of the deſperate: The King of Moab now hopeleſſe of recouery, would bee glad to ſhut vp with a pleaſing reuenge, with ſeuen hundred reſolute followers; he ruſhes into the battaile, towards the King of Edom; as if he would bid death welcome, might he but carie with him that deſpighted neighbour; and now, mad with the repulſe, he returnes: and whether as angry with his deſtiny, or as barbarouſly affecting to win his cruell gods with ſo deare a ſacrifice, he offers them with his owne hand the blood of his eldeſt ſonne in the ſight of Iſrael, and ſends him vp in ſmoake to thoſe helliſh Deities. O prodigious act, whether of rage, or of deuotion! What an hand hath Satan ouer his miſerable vaſſals? What maruell is it to ſee men ſacrifice their ſoules, in an vnfelt oblation, to theſe plauſible tempters, when their owne fleſh and blood hath not beene ſpared? There is no Tyrant to the Prince of darkneſſe.

ELISHA with the Shunamite.

THE holy Prophets vnder the old Teſtament, did not abhorre the mariage bed; they did not thinke themſelues too pure for an inſtitution of their Maker; The diſtreſſed widow of one of the ſonnes of the Prophets comes to Elijah to bemoane her condition; Her husband is dead, and dead in debt. Death hath no ſooner ſeized on him, then her two ſonnes (the remaining comfort of her life) are to be ſeized on, by his creditors, for bond-men: How thicke did the miſeries of this poore afflicted woman light vpon her; Her husband is loſt, her eſtate clogged with debts, her children ready to be taken for ſlaues: Her husband was a religious, and worthy man; hee paid his debts to Nature, he could not to his Creditors; they are cruell, and rake in the ſcarce-cloſed wound of her ſorrow; paſſing an arreſt, worſe then death, vpon her ſonnes: Widow-hood, pouertie, ſeruitude haue conſpired to make her perfitly miſerable. Vertue and goodneſſe can pay no debts; The holieſt man may be deepe in arearges; and breake the banke: Not through lauiſhneſſe, and riot of expence: (Religion teaches vs to moderate our hands, to ſpend within the proportion of our eſtate) but through either iniquitie of times, or euill caſualties. Ahab and Iezebel were lately in the Throne, who can maruell that a Prophet was in debt? It was well that any good man might haue his breath free, though his eſtate were not: wilfully to ouer-laſh our ability cannot ſtand with wiſedome, and good gouernment; but no prouidence can guard vs from croſſes; Holineſſe is no more defence againſt debt, then againſt death: Grace can keepe vs from vnthriftineſſe, not from want. Whither doth the Prophets widow come to bewaile her caſe, but to E*liſha*: Euery one would not be ſenſible of her affliction, or if they would pity, yet could not releeue her; Eliſha could doe both; Into his eare doth ſhee vnload her griefes. It is no ſmall point of wiſdome to know where to plant our Lamentation; otherwiſe, in ſtead of comfort, we may meet with ſcorne and inſultation.

None can ſo feelingly compaſſionate the hard tearmes of a Prophet as an E*liſha*; He finds that ſhe is not querulouſly impatient, expreſſing her ſorrow without murmuring, and diſcontentment; making a louing, and honorable mention of that husband, who had left her diſtreſſed; readily therefore doth he incline to her ſuccour: What ſhall I doe for thee? Tell me what haſt thou in thine houſe? Eliſha, when he heares of her debt, askes of her ſubſtance; Had her houſe beene furniſhed with any valuable commoditie, the Prophet implies the neceſſity of ſelling it for ſatisfaction; Our owne abundance can ill ſtand with our ingagement to others; It is great iniuſtice for vs to be full of others purſes: It is not our owne which wee owe to another. What is it other then a plauſible ſtealth to feede our riot with the want of the owner? Hee that could multiply her ſubſtance, could know it; God and his Prophet loues to heare our neceſſities out of our owne mouthes (Thine hand-maid hath not any thing in the houſe ſaue a pot of oyle.) It is neither newes nor ſhame for a Prophet to be poore; Griefe and want perhaps haſtned his end; both of them are left for the dowry of his carefull widow; Shee had complained, if there had beene any poſſibility of remedy, at home; baſhfulneſſe had ſtopt her mouth thus long, and ſhould haue done yet longer, if the exigence of her childrens ſeruitude had not opened it; No want is ſo worthy of releefe, as that which is loatheſt to come forth. Then he ſayd, Goe borrow thee veſſels abroad of all thy neighbours, euen emptie veſſels, borrow not a few; and when thou art come in, thou ſhalt ſhut the doore vpon thee, and vpon thy ſons, and ſhalt powre out into all thoſe veſſels, and thou ſhalt ſet aſide that which is full.

She that owed much, and had nothing, yet muſt borrow more, that ſhee may pay all: Pouerty had not ſo diſcredited her with her neighbours, that they ſhould doubt to lend her thoſe veſſels empty, which they had grudged full: Her want was too well knowne; it could not but ſeeme ſtrange to the neighbours, to ſee this poore widow ſo buſily peſtring her houſe with emptie tubs; which they knew ſhee had nothing to fill; they knew well enough ſhee had neither field nor vineyard, nor orchard, and therefore muſt needs maruell at ſuch vnprofitable diligence: If their curioſity would be inquiring after their intentions, ſhee is commanded ſecrecy. The doores muſt be ſhut vpon her ſelfe, and her ſonnes; whiles the oyle is increaſing; No eie ſhall ſee the miracle in working, enow ſhall ſee it once wrought; This act was no leſſe a proofe of her faith, then an improuement of her eſtate; it was an exerciſe of her deuotion, as well as of her diligence; it was fit her doores ſhould be ſhut, whiles her heart and lips were opened in an holy inuocation; Out of one ſmall Iarre was powred out ſo much oyle, as by miraculous multiplication filled all that empty caske: Scarce had that pot any bottome: At leaſt the bottome that it had, was to bee meaſured by the brims of all thoſe veſſels; this was ſo deepe, as they were high; Could they haue held more, this pot had not beene emptie: Euen ſo the bounty of our God giues grace, & glory, according to the capacitie of the receiuer; when he ceaſeth to infuſe, it is for want of roome in the heart that takes it in; Could we hold more, O God, thou wouldeſt giue more; If there be any defect, it is in our veſſels, not in thy beneficence; How did the heart of this poore widow runne ouer, as with wonder, ſo, with ioy and thankfulneſſe, to ſee ſuch a riuer of oyle riſe out of ſo ſmall a ſpring; to ſee all her veſſels ſwimming full with ſo beneficiall a liquor; Iuſtly is ſhee affected with this ſight, ſhee is not tranſported from her dutie; I doe not ſee her run forth into the ſtreet, and proclaime her ſtore, nor calling in her neighbours, whether to admire or bargaine; I ſee her running to the Prophets doore, and gratefully acknowledging the fauour, and humbly depending on his directions, as not daring to diſpoſe of that, which was ſo wondrouſly giuen her, without the aduice of him, by whoſe powerfull meanes ſhee had receiued it; Her owne reaſon might haue ſufficiently ſuggeſted what to doe, ſhee dares not truſt it, but conſults with the Oracle of God; If wee would walke ſurely, wee muſt doe nothing without a word; Euery action, euery motion muſt haue a warrant; We can no more erre with this guide, then not erre without him.

The Prophet ſets her in a right way; Goe ſell the oyle, and pay the debt, and liue, thou, and thy children, on the reſt; The firſt care is of her debts, the next, of her maintenance; It ſhould be groſſe iniuſtice to raiſe meanes for her ſelfe, and her charge, ere ſhe haue diſcharged the arerages of her husband; None of the oyle was hers, till her creditors were ſatisfied; all was hers that remained; It is but ſtealth to inioy a borrowed ſubſtance; Whiles ſhee had nothing, it was no ſinne to owe; but when once her veſſells were full, ſhee could not haue beene guiltleſſe, if ſhee had not paid, before ſhee ſtored. God and his Prophets were bountifull; after the debts paid, they prouide not onely againſt the thraldome of her charge, but againſt the want. It is the iuſt care of a religious heart to defend the widow and children of a Prophet from diſtreſſe and penurie.

Behold the true ſeruant, and ſucceſſour of Elijah; What hee did to the Sareptan widow, this did to the widow of a Prophet; That increaſe of oyle was by degrees, this at once; both equally miraculous; this, ſo much more charitable, as it leſſe concerned himſelfe.

Hee that giues kindneſſes, doth by turnes receiue them; Eliſha hath releeued a poore woman, is releeued by a rich. The Shunamite, a religious and wealthy matron, inuites him to her houſe, and now after the firſt entertainment, finding his occaſions to call him to a frequent paſſage, that way, moues her husband to ſet vp, and furniſh a lodging for the man of God; It was his holineſſe that made her deſirous of ſuch a gueſt; Well might ſhee hope that ſuch an Inmate would pay a bleſſing for his houſe-rent: Oh happy Shunamite that might make her ſelfe the Hoſteſſe of Eliſha! As no leſſe dutifull then godly, ſhee imparts her deſire to her husband; whom her ſute hath drawne to a partnerſhip in this holy hoſpitality; Bleſſed of God is that man, whoſe bed yeelds him an help to heauen. The good Shunamite deſires not to harbour Eliſha in one of her wonted lodgings, ſhee ſolicites her husband to build him a chamber on the wall apart: ſhee knew the tumult of a large family vnfit for the quiet meditations of a Prophet: retiredneſſe is moſt meet for the thoughts of a Seer: Neither would ſhee bring the Prophet to bare wals, but ſets ready for him, a bed, a table, a ſtoole, and a Candleſticke, and what euer neceſſary vtenſils for his entertainment: The Prophet doth not affect delicacy, ſhee takes care to prouide for his couenience; Thoſe that are truly pious, and deuout, thinke their houſes and their hands cannot bee too open to the meſſengers of God; and are moſt glad to exchange their earthly commodities for the others ſpirituall. Superfluity ſhould not fall within the care of a Prophet, neceſſitie muſt: hee that could prouide oyle for the widow, could haue prouided all needfull helpes for himſelfe: What roome had there beene for the charity and beneficence of others, if the Prophet ſhould haue alwayes maintained himſelfe out of power?

The holy man is ſo farre ſociable as not to neglect the friendly offer of ſo kinde a benefactor: Gladly doth hee take vp his new lodging: and, as well pleaſed with ſo quiet a repoſe, and carefull attendance, hee ſends his ſeruant Gehezi, with the meſſage of his thankes, with a treaty of retribution: Behold, thou haſt beene carefull for vs, with all this care: What is to be done for thee? Wouldſt thou bee ſpoken for to the King, or to the Captaine of the Hoſt? An ingenuous diſpoſition cannot receiue fauours without thoughts of returne: A wiſe debtor is deſirous to retribute in ſuch kinde, as may bee moſt acceptable to his obligers: without this diſcretion, wee may offer ſuch requitals, as may ſeeme goodly to vs, to our friends, worthleſſe : Euery one can chooſe beſt for himſelfe; Eliſha therefore (who had neuer been wanting in ſpirituall duties to ſo hoſpitall a friend) giues the Shunamite the election of her ſuit, for temporall recompence alſo; No man can be a loſer by his fauour to a Prophet. It is a good hearing that an Eliſha is in ſuch grace at the Court, that he can promiſe himſelfe acceſſe to the King, in a friends ſuit : It was not euer thus; the time was, when his maſter heard, Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy : Now the late miracle which Eliſha wrought in gratifying the three Kings, with water, and victorie, hath endeared him to the King of Iſrael; and now, Who but Eliſha*?* Euen that rough mantle finds reſpect amongſt thoſe ſilkes and tiſſues : As bad as Ieboram was, yet he honored the man of God; He that could not preuaile with an Idolatrous King, in a ſpirituall reformation, yet can cary a ciuill ſuit; Neither doth the Prophet in a ſullen diſcontentment, fly off from the Court, becauſe he found his labours vnprofitable, but ſtill holds good termes with that Prince, whom he cannot reclaime, and will make vſe notwithſtanding of his countenance in matters, whether of courteſie, or iuſtice; Wee may not caſt off our due reſpects euen to faulty authority; but muſt ſtill ſubmit & perſiſt, where wee are repelled : Not to his owne aduancement doth Eliſha deſire to improue the Kings fauour, but to the behooſe, to the releefe of others; If the Shunamite haue buſineſſe at the Court, ſhe ſhall need no other Solicitor; There cannot be a better office, nor more beſeeming a Prophet, then to ſpeake in the cauſe of the dumbe, to befriend the oppreſſed, to win greatneſſe vnto the protection of innocence.

The good matron needes no ſhelter of the great; I dwell among mine owne people; as if ſhe ſaid; The courteſie is not ſmall in it ſelfe, but not vſefull to mee; I liue here quietly in a contented obſcurity, out of the reach either of the glories, or cares of a Court; free from wrongs, free from enuies: Not ſo high as to prouoke an euill eye, not ſo low as to be trodden on; I haue neither feares, nor ambitions; my neighbours are my friends; my friends are my protectors, and (if I ſhould be ſo vnhappy, as to be the ſubiect of maine iniuries) would not ſticke to be mine Aduocates; This fauour is for thoſe that either affect greatneſſe, or groane vnder oppreſſions; I doe neither, for I liue among my owne people. O Shunamite, thou ſhalt not eſcape enuy ! Who can heare of thine happy condition, and not ſay, Why am not I thus ? If the world affoord any perfect contentment, it is in a middle eſtate, equally diſtant frō penury, from exceſſe; it is in a calme freedome, a ſecure tranquility, a ſweet fruition of our ſelues, of ours; But what hold is there of theſe earthly things ? How long is the Shunamite thus bleſſed with peace ? ſtay but a while, you ſhall ſee her come on her knees to the King of Iſrael, pitifully complaining that ſhe was ſtripped of houſe, and land : and now Gehezi is faine to doe that good office for her, which was not accepted from his maſter: Thoſe that ſtand faſteſt vpon earth haue but ſlippery footing : no man can ſay that hee ſhall not need friends.

Modeſty ſealed vp the lips of the good Shunamite : ſhee was aſhamed to confeſſe her longing : Gehezi eaſily gueſſed that her barrenneſſe could not but be her affliction, ſhee was childleſſe, her husband old : Eliſha gratifies her with the newes of a ſonne : About this ſeaſon according to the time of life, thou ſhalt embrace a ſonne : How liberall is God, by his Prophet, in giuing beyond her requeſts : not ſeldome doth his bounty ouer-reach our thoughts, and meet vs with thoſe benefits, which we thought too good for vs to aske. Greatneſſe and inexpectation makes the bleſſing ſeeme incredible, Nay, my Lord, thou man of God, doe not lie to thine hand-maid : Wee are neuer ſure enough of what we deſire : We are not more hard to beleeue, then loth to diſtruſt beneficiall euents : She well knew the Prophets holineſſe could not ſtand with wilfull falſhood; perhaps, ſhe might thinke it ſpoken by way of tryall, not of ſerious affirmation; as vnwilling therefore that it ſhould not be, and willing to heare that pleaſing word ſeconded, ſhe ſayes, Doe not lie to thine hand-maid. Promiſes are made good, not by iteration, but by the effect; The Shunamite conceiues, and beares a ſonne, at the ſet ſeaſon : How glad a mother ſhe was, thoſe know beſt, that haue mourned vnder the diſcomfort of a ſad ſterilitie. The childe growes vp, and is now able to finde out his father in the field, amongſt his Reapers: His father now grew young againe with the pleaſure of his ſight; and more ioyed in this ſpring of his hopes, then in all the crops of his harueſt; But what ſtability is there in theſe earthly delights? The hot beames of the Sunne beat vpon that head which too much care had made tender, and delicate; The child complaines to his father, of his paine; Oh that grace could teach vs, what nature teaches Infants, in all our troubles to bemoane our ſelues to our heauenly father! He ſends him to his mother; vpon her lap, about noone, the child dies; as if he would returne his ſoule into that boſome, from which it was deriued, to his; The good Shunamite hath loſt her ſonne, her faith ſhe had not loſt; Paſſion hath not robbed her of her wiſdome; As not diſtracted with an accident ſo ſudden, ſo ſorrowfull; ſhe layes her dead childe vpon the Prophets bed, ſhee lockes the doore; ſhee hides her griefe, leſt that conſternation might hinder her deſigne; ſhe haſtens to her husband, and (as not daring to bee other then officious in ſo diſtreſſe-full an occaſion) acquaints him with her iourney, (though not with the cauſe) requires of him both attendance, and conueyance; ſhee poſts to mount Carmel; ſhee cannot ſo ſoone finde out the man of God, as hee hath found her; He ſees her afarre off; and like a thankfull gueſt, ſends his ſeruant haſtily to meet her, to inquire of the health of her ſelfe, her husband, her childe; Her errand was not to Gehezi, it was to Eliſha; no meſſenger ſhall interrupt her; no eare ſhall receiue her complaint but the Prophets; Downe ſhee fals paſſionately at his feet, and, forgetting the faſhion of her baſhfull ſtrangeneſſe, layes hold of them, whether in an humble veneration of his perſon, or in a feruent deſire of ſatisfaction. Gehezi, who well knew how vncouth, how vnfit this geſture of ſalutation was, for his maſter, offers to remoue her, and admoniſheth her of her diſtance; The mercifull Prophet eaſily apprehends that no ordinary occaſion could ſo tranſport a graue, and well-gouerned matrone; as therefore pittying her vnknowne paſſion, hee bids, Let her alone, for her ſoule is vexed within her, and the Lord hath hid it from mee, and hath not told mee. If extremitie of griefe haue made her vnmannerly, wiſe and holy Eliſha knowes how to pardon it; Hee dares not adde ſorrow to the afflicted; hee can better beare an vnſeemelineſſe in her greeting, then cruelty in her moleſtation. Great was the familiaritie that the Prophet had with his God; and as friends are wont mutually to impart their counſells to each other, ſo had the Lord done to him; Eliſha was not idle on mount Carmel; What was it that he ſaw not from thence? Not heauen onely, but the world was before him, yet the Shunamites loſſe is concealed from him: neither doth he ſhame to confeſſe it; Oft-times thoſe that know greater matters may yet bee ignorant of the leſſe: It is no diſparagement to any finite creature not to know ſomething. By her mouth will God tell the Prophet, what by viſion hee had not; Then ſhe ſaid, Did I deſire a ſonne of my Lord? Did I not ſay, doe not deceiue me? Deepe ſorrow is ſparing of words; The expoſtulation could not be more ſhort, more quicke, more pithy: Had I begged a ſon, perhaps my importunity might haue been yeelded to, in anger; Too much deſire is iuſtly puniſhed with loſſe. It is no maruell if what we wring from God, proſper not; This fauour to mee was of thine owne motion; Thy ſuit, O Eliſha made me a mother: Couldſt thou intend to torment me with a bleſſing? How much more eaſie had the want of a ſonne beene, then the miſ-cariage? Barrenneſſe then orbation? Was there no other end of my hauing a ſon, then that I might loſe him? O man of God, let mee not complaine of a cruel kindneſſe; thy prayers gaue me a ſon, let thy prayers reſtore him; let not my dutifull reſpects to thee be repaid with an aggrauation of miſery; giue not thine handmaid cauſe to wiſh that I were but ſo vnhapy as thou foundeſt me; Oh wofull fruitfulneſſe, if I muſt now ſay, that I had a ſonne.

I know not whether the mother, or the Prophet were more afflicted, the Prophet for the mothers ſake, or the mother for her owne; Not a word of reply doe wee heare from the mouth of Eliſha, his breath is onely ſpent in the remedy; Hee ſends his ſeruant with all ſpeed, to lay his ſtaffe vpon the face of the child; charging him to auoyd all the delayes of the way: Had not the Prophet ſuppoſed that ſtaffe of his able to beate away death, why did hee ſend it? and if vpon that ſuppoſition hee ſent it, how was it that it failed of effect? was this act done out of humane conceit; not out of inſtinct from God? Or did the want of the mothers faith hinder the ſucceſſe of that cure? She, not regarding the ſtaffe, or the man, holds faſt to Eliſha; No hopes of his meſſage can looſe her fingers: As the Lord liueth, and as thy ſoule liueth, I will not leaue thee: She imagined that the ſeruant, the ſtaffe might bee ſeuered from Eliſha, ſhe knew that where euer the Prophet was, there was power; It is good relying vpon thoſe helpes that cannot faile vs.

Merit and importunitie haue drawne Eliſha from Carmel to Shunem: Hee findes his lodging taken vp by that pale carkeiſe, hee ſhuts his doore, and fals to his prayers; this ſtaffe of his (what euer became of the other) was long enough (hee knew) to reach vp to Heauen to knocke at thoſe gates, yea to wrench them open; Hee applies his body to thoſe cold and ſenſeleſſe limbs; By the feruour of his ſoule hee reduces that ſoule, by the heat of his body he educeth warmth out of that corps: The child neeſeth ſeuen times; and as if his ſpirit had beene but hid for the time, not departed, it fals to worke afreſh; the eyes looke vp, the lippes and hands moue; The mother is called in to receiue a new life, in her twice-giuen ſonne: ſhe comes in, full of ioy, full of wonder, and bowes her ſelfe to the ground, and fals downe before thoſe feet, which ſhee had ſo boldly layd hold of in Carmel. Oh ſtrong faith of the Shunamite, that could not be diſcouraged with the ſeizure, and continuance of death; raiſing vp her heart ſtill to an expectation of that life, which to the eyes of nature had beene impoſſible, irreuocable; Oh infinite goodneſſe of the Almightie, that would not ſuffer ſuch faith to be fruſtrate, that would rather reuerſe the lawes of nature, in returning a gueſt from heauen, and raiſing a corps from death, then the confidence of a beleeuing heart ſhould be diſappointed.

How true an heire is Eliſha of his maſter, not in his grades onely, but in his actions? Both of them diuided the waters of Iordan, the one as his laſt act, the other as his firſt; Elijahs curſe was the death of the Captaines, and their troupes; Eliſhaes curſe was the death of the children; Elijah rebuked Ahab to his face; Eliſha Iehoram; Elijah ſupplied the drought of Iſrael by raine from heauen; Eliſha ſupplied the drought of the three Kings by waters guſhing out of the earth; Elijah increaſed the oyle of the Sareptan; Eliſha increaſed the oyle of the Prophets widow; Elijah rayſed from death the Sareptans ſon; Eliſha the Shunamites: Both of them had one mantle, one ſpirit; both of them climbed vp one Carmel, one heauen.

ELISHA with NAAMAN.

OF the full ſhowers of grace which fell vpon Iſrael and Iudah, yet ſome drops did light vpon their neighbours: If Iſrael bee the worſe for her neereneſſe to Syria, Syria is the better for the vicinity of Iſrael. Amongſt the worſt of Gods enemies ſome are ſingled out for mercy. Naaman was a great Warriour, an honourable Courtier, yet a Leper; no diſeaſe incident to the body is ſo naſty, ſo loathſome, as Leproſie. Greatnes can ſecure no man from the moſt odious and weariſome condition; how little pleaſure did this Syrian Peere take, to be ſtooped to by others, whiles he hated to ſee himſelfe: Euen thoſe that honored him, auoyded him; neither was he other then abhorred of thoſe that flattred him; yea his hand could not moue to his mouth without his owne deteſtation; the baſeſt ſlaue of Syria would not change skins with him, if hee might haue his honour to boot: Thus hath the wiſe God thought meet to ſauce the valour, dignitie, renowne, victories of the famous Generall of the Syrians; Seldome euer was any man ſerued with ſimple fauours; Theſe compoſitions make both our croſſes tolerable, and our bleſſings wholeſome.

The body of Naaman was not more tainted with his lepry, then his ſoule was tainted with Rimmon, and beſides his Idolatry, he was a profeſſed enemy to Iſrael, and ſucceſſfull in his enmity: How farre doth God fetch about his purpoſes? The leproſie, the hoſtility of Naaman ſhall bee the occaſions of his ſaluation; That leproſie ſhall make his ſoule ſound; That hoſtilitie ſhall adopt him a ſonne of God; In ſome proſperous in-rodes, that the Syrians vnder Naamans conduct haue made into the land of Iſrael, a little maid is taken captiue; ſhee ſhall attend on Naamans wife; and ſhall ſuggeſt to her miſtreſſe the miraculous cures of Eliſha. A ſmall chinke may ſerue to let in much light; Her report findes credit in the Court, and begets both a letter from the King and a iourney of his Peere; whiles the Syrians thought of nothing but their booty, they bring happineſſe to the houſe of Naaman; The captiuity of a poore Hebrew girle is a meanes to make the greateſt Lord of Syria, a ſubiect to God; It is good to acquaint our children with the workes of God, with the prayſes of his Prophets. Little doe we know how they may improue this knowledge, and whither they may carie it; perhaps the remoteſt Nations may light their candle at their coale: Euen the weakeſt intimations may not bee neglected: A childe, a ſeruant, a ſtranger may ſay that, which we may bleſſe God to haue heard: How well did it become the mouth of an Iſraelite to extoll a Prophet; to wiſh the cure of her maſter, though an Aramite; to aduiſe that iourney, vnto the man of God, by whom both body and ſoule might be cured: True Religion reacheth vs pious and charitable reſpects to our Gouernours, though Aliens from the Common-wealth of God.

No man that I heare blames the credulity of Naaman; vpon no other ground doth the King of Syria ſend his chiefe Peere, with his letters to the King of Iſrael; from his hands requiring the Cure: The Syrian ſuppoſed, that what euer a ſubiect could doe, a Soueraigne might command; that ſuch a Prophet could neither bee out of the knowledge, nor out of the obedience to his Prince; neuer did he dreame of any exemption, but imagining Iehoram to be no leſſe a King of Prophets, then of people, and Eliſha no leſſe a ſubiect, then a Seer, he writes, Now when this letter is comne to thee, behold, I haue herewith ſent Naaman my ſeruant to thee, that thou mayeſt recouer him of his leproſie. Great is the power of Princes; euery mans hand is theirs, whether for skill, or for ſtrength: Beſides the eminency of their owne gifts, all the ſubordinate excellencies of their ſubiects, are no leſſe at their ſeruice, then if they were inherent in their perſons: Great men are wanting to their owne perfections, if they doe not both know, and exerciſe the graces of their inferiors.

The King of Iſrael cannot read the letter without amazement of heart, without rending of garments, & ſaies; Am I God, to kill & to make aliue, that this man ſends to me, to recouer a man of his leproſie? Wherefore conſider, and ſee, I pray you, how he ſeeketh a quarrell againſt me? If God haue vouchſafed to call Kings, Gods; it well becomes Kings to call themſelues, men; and to confeſſe the diſtance wherein they ſtand to their Maker: Man may kill, man cannot kill and make aliue; yea of himſelfe he can doe neither: with God, a Worme, or a fly may kill a man; without God no Potentate can doe it: much leſſe can any created power both kill, and reuiue: ſince to reſtore life is more then to bereaue it, more then to continue it, more then to giue it: And if leproſie bee a death, what humane power can either inflict, or cure it: It is a trouble to a well-affected heart to receiue impoſſible commands: To require that of an inferiour which is proper to the higheſt, is a derogation from that ſupreame power whoſe property it is: Had Iehoram beene truely religious, the iniury done to his Maker in this motion, (as hee tooke it) had more afflicted him, then the danger of his owne quarrell. Belike, Eliſha was not in the thoughts of the King of Iſrael,: Hee might haue heard that this Prophet had made aliue, one, whom hee killed not: Himſelfe with the two other Kings had beene eye-witneſſes of what Eliſha could doe: yet, now the Calues of Dan and Bethel haue ſo often taken vp his heart, that there is no roome for the memorie of Eliſha; whom hee ſued to in his extremitie, now his proſperity hath forgotten: Carnall hearts (when need driues them) can thinke of GOD, and his Prophet; when their turne is ſerued, can as vtterly neglect them, as if they were not.

Yet cannot good Eliſha repay neglect, and forgetfulneſſe: He liſtens what is done at the Court, and finding the diſtreſſe of his Soueraigne, profers that ſeruice, which ſhould haue beene required; Wherefore haſt thou rent thy cloathes; Let him come now to mee, and hee ſhall know that there is a Prophet in Iſrael. It was no ſmall fright, from which Eliſha deliuers his King: Ieboram was in awe of the Syrians, euer ſince their late victorie, wherein his Father Ahab was ſlaine, Iſrael and Iudah diſcomfited: nothing was more dreadfull to him, then the frownes of theſe ARAMITES: the quarrell which hee ſuſpected to bee hatched by them, is cleared by Eliſha: their Leper ſhall bee healed; both they, and Iſrael ſhall know they haue neglected a GOD, whoſe Prophet can doe wonders: Many eyes, doubtleſſe, are faſtened vpon the iſſue of this meſſage. But what ſtate is this that Eliſha takes vpon him; hee doth not ſay, I will come to him; but, Let him come now to mee: The three Kings came downe once to his Tent, it is no maruell, if hee preuent not the iourney of a Syrian Courtier: It well beſeemes him that will bee a ſuiter for fauour, to bee obſequious: Wee may not ſtand vpon termes of our labour, or dignitie, where wee expect a benefit: Naaman comes richly attended with his troopes of ſeruants and horſes, and waits in his Charet at the doore of a Prophet: I doe not heare ELISHA call him in; for though he were great, yet he was leprous: neither doe I ſee Eliſha come forth to him, and receiue him with ſuch outward courteſies, as might be fit for an honourable ſtranger; for in thoſe rich cloathes the Prophet ſaw an Aramite, and perhaps ſome tincture of the late-ſhed blood of Iſrael: Rather, that he might make a perfect triall of the humility of that man, whom he meanes to gratifie, and honour, after ſome ſhort attendance at his doore, hee ſends his ſeruant with a meſſage to that Peere, who could not but thinke the meaneſt of his retinue, a better man then Gehezies Maſter.

WHAT could the Prophet haue done other to the Lacquy of Naamans man? Hee that would bee a meet ſubiect of mercy, muſt bee thoroughly abaſed in his owne conceit: and muſt be willingly pliable to all the conditions of his humiliation: Yet, had the meſſage caried in it either reſpect to the perſon, or probabilitie of effect, it could not haue beene vnwelcome: but now it ſounded of nothing, but ſullenneſſe, and vnlikelihood: Goe, and waſh in Iordan ſeuen times, and thy fleſh ſhall come againe to thee, and thou ſhalt bee cleane: What wiſe man could take this for any other then a meere ſcorne, and mockery? Goe, waſh? Alas, what can water doe? It can cleanſe from filthineſſe, not from leproſie: And why in Iordan? What differs that from other ſtreames? and why iuſt ſeuen times? What vertue is either in that channell, or in that number? Naaman can no more put off nature then leproſie: In what a chafe did he fling away from the Prophets doore; and ſayes, Am I comne thus farre to fetch a flout from an Iſraelite? Is this the iſſue both of my iourney, and the Letters of my King? Could this Prophet find no man to play vpon, but Naaman? Had he meant ſeriouſly, why did he thinke himſelfe too good to come forth vnto me? Why did he not touch me with his hand, and bleſſe me with his prayers, and cure me with his bleſſing? Is my miſery fit for his deriſion? If water could doe it, what needed I to come ſo farre for this remedy? Haue I not oft done thus in vaine? Haue we not better ſtreames at home, then any Iſrael can afford? Are not Abana and Pharphar, Riuers of Damaſcus, better then all the waters of Iſrael? Folly and pride ſtriue for place in a naturall heart, and it is hard to ſay whether is more predominant. Folly in meaſuring the power of GODS ordinances by the rule of humane diſcourſe, and ordinary euent: pride, in a ſcornefull valuation of the inſtitutions of GOD, in compariſon of our owne deuices. ABANA and PHARPHAR, two for one: Riuers, not waters; of Damaſcus, a ſtately City, and incomparable: Are they not? Who dares deny it? Better, not as good; then the waters, not the riuers, all the waters, Iordan, and all the reſt; of Iſrael, a beggarly region to Damaſcus. No where ſhall wee find a truer patterne of the diſpoſition of Nature; how ſhe is altogether led by ſenſe, and reaſon; how ſhee fondly iudges of all obiects by the appearance, how ſhee acquaints her ſelfe onely with the common rode of Gods proceedings; how ſhe ſtickes to her owne principles, how ſhe miſconſtrues the intentions of God, how ſhee ouer-conceits her owne, how ſhe diſdaines the meane conditions of others, how ſhe vpbraids her oppoſites with the proud compariſon of her owne priuiledges.

Nature is neuer but like her ſelfe: No maruell if carnall mindes deſpiſe the fooliſhneſſe of preaching, the ſimplicity of Sacraments, the homelineſſe of ceremonies, the ſeeming inefficacy of cenſures: Theſe men looke vpon Iordan with Syrian eyes; One drop of whoſe water ſet apart by diuine ordination, hath more vertue, then all the ſtreames of Abana, and Pharphar.

It is a good matter for a man to bee attended with wiſe and faithfull followers: Many a one hath had better counſell from his heeles, then from his elbowes: Naamans ſeruants were his beſt friends: they came to him, and ſpake to him, and ſaid, My Father, If the Prophet had bid thee doe ſome great thing, wouldſt thou not haue done it? How much rather then, when hee ſaith to thee, Waſh, and bee cleane. Theſe men were ſeruants, not of the humour, but of the profit of their maſter: Some ſeruile ſpirits would haue cared onely to ſooth vp, not to benefit their Gouernour, and would haue encouraged his rage, by their owne: Sir, will you take this at the hand of a baſe fellow? was euer man thus flouted? Will you let him carie it away thus? Is any harmeleſſe anger ſufficient reuenge for ſuch an inſolence? Giue vs leaue at leaſt to pull him out by the eares, and force him to doe that by violence, which hee would not doe out of good manners. Let our fingers teach this ſaucy Prophet what it is to offer an affront to a Prince of Syria: But theſe men loued more their maſters health, then his paſſion; and had rather therefore to aduiſe, then flatter; to draw him to good, then follow him to euill: Since it was a Prophet from whom he receiued this preſcription, they perſwade him not to deſpiſe it; intimating there could be no fault in the ſleightneſſe of the receit, ſo long as there was no defect of power in the commander; that the vertue of the cure ſhould be in his obedience, not in the nature of the remedy: They perſwade, and preuaile. Next to the Prophet, Naaman may thanke his ſeruants that he is not a Leper: He goes downe (vpon their intreaty) and dips ſeuen times in Iordan, his fleſh riſeth, his Leproſie vaniſheth: Not the vniuſt fury and techineſſe of the patient ſhall croſſe the cure: leſt whiles God is ſeuere, the Prophet ſhould be diſcredited. Long enough might Naaman haue waſhed there in vaine, if Eliſha had not ſent him: Many a Leper hath bathed in that ſtreame, and hath come forth no leſſe impure: It is the word, the ordinance of the Almighty which puts efficacie into thoſe meanes, which of themſelues are both impotent and improbable: What can our Font doe to the waſhing away of ſinne? If Gods inſtitution ſhall put vertue into our Iordan, it ſhall ſcoure off the ſpirituall leproſies of our hearts; and ſhall more cure the ſoule, then clenſe the face.

How ioyfull is Naaman to ſee this change of his ſkinne, this renouation of his fleſh, of his life: Neuer did his heart finde ſuch warmth of inward gladneſſe, as in this ſtreame.

Vpon the ſight of his recouery, he doth not poſte home to the Court, or to his family, to call for witneſſes, for partners of his ioy; but thankfully returnes to the Prophet, by whoſe meanes he receiued this mercy: He comes backe with more contentment then he departed with rage: Now will the man of God bee ſeene of that recouered Syrian, whom he would not ſee leprous: His preſence ſhall be yeelded to the gratulation which was not yeelded to the ſuit: Purpoſely did Eliſha forbeare before, that he might ſhare no part of the prayſe of this worke with his Maker; that God might be ſo much more magnified, as the meanes were more weake and deſpicable.

The miracle hath his due worke. Firſt, doth Naaman acknowledge the GOD that wrought it; then the Prophet, by whom hee wrought it: Behold, now I know there is no God in all the earth, but in Iſrael. Oh happy Syrian, that was at once cured of his leproſie, and his miſ-priſon of God: Naaman was too wiſe, to thinke that either the water had cured him, or the man: hee ſaw a diuine power working in both: ſuch as hee vainely ſought from his Heathen Deities: with the heart therefore he beleeues, with the mouth he confeſſes.

Whiles he is thus thankfull to the author of his cure, hee is not vnmindfull of the inſtrument. Now therefore, I pray thee, take a bleſſing of thy ſeruant. Naaman came richly furniſhed with ten talents of ſiluer, ſixe thouſand peeces of gold, ten changes of raiment: All theſe and many more would the Syrian Peere haue gladly giuen to bee deliuered from ſo noiſome a diſeaſe: no maruell if he importunately offer ſome part of them to the Prophet, now that hee is deliuered; ſome teſtimony of thankfulneſſe did well, where all earthly recompence was too ſhort: The hands of this man were no leſſe full of thankes, then his mouth. Dry and barren profeſſions of our obligations, where is power to requite, are vnfit for noble and ingenuous ſpirits.

Naaman is not more franke in offering his gratuity, then Eliſha vehement in refuſing it, As the Lord liueth, before whom I ſtand, I will receiue none. Not that he thought the Syrian gold impure: Not that hee thought it vnlawfull to take vp a gift, where he hath laid downe a benefit: But the Prophet will remit of Naamans purſe, that hee may win of his ſoule: The man of God would haue his new conuert ſee cauſe to bee more enamoured of true piety; which teacheth her Clients to contemne thoſe worldly riches and glories, which baſe worldlings adore: and would haue him thinke, that theſe miraculous powers are ſo far tranſcending the valuation of all earthly pelfe, that thoſe glittering treaſures are worthy of nothing, but contempt, in reſpect thereof: Hence is it, that he who refuſed not the Shunamites table, and ſtoole, and candleſticke, will not take Naamans preſent: there is much vſe of godly diſcretion in directing vs when to open, when to ſhut our hands.

Hee that will not bee allowed to giue, deſires yet to take: Shall there not, I pray thee, be giuen to thy ſeruant two mules load of earth? For thy ſeruant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering, nor ſacrifice to other Gods, but vnto the Lord. Iſraelitiſh mold lay open to his cariage, without leaue of Eliſha: but Naaman regards not to take it, vnleſſe it may bee giuen him, and giuen him by the Prophets hand: Well did this Syrian find that the man of God had giuen a ſupernaturall vertue to the water of Iſrael, and therefore ſuppoſed he might giue the like to his earth: Neither would any earth ſerue him but Eliſhaes; elſe the mold of Iſrael had beene more properly craued of the King then the Prophet of Iſrael.

Doubtleſſe it was deuotion that moued this ſuit: The Syrian ſaw GOD had a proprietie in Iſrael, and imagines that he will bee beſt pleaſed with his owne; On the ſudden was Naaman halfe a Proſelyte, ſtill here was a weake knowledge with ſtrong intentions: Hee will ſacrifice to the Lord; but where? in Syria, not in Hieruſalem: Not the mold, but the Altar is that God reſpects; which he hath allowed no where but in his choſen Sion. This honeſt Syrian will be remouing God home to his Country; he ſhould haue reſolued to remoue his home, to God: And though he vowes to offer no ſacrifice to any other God, yet he craues leaue to offer an outward courteſie to Rimmon; though not for the Idols ſake, yet for his maſters: In this thing the Lord pardon thy ſeruant, that when my maſter goeth into the houſe of Rimmon, to worſhip there, and hee leaneth on my hand, and I bow my ſelfe in the houſe of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy ſeruant in this thing. Naaman goes away reſolute to profeſſe himſelfe an Iſraelite for Religion; all the Syrian Court ſhall know that he ſacrifices vpon Iſraelitiſh earth, to the God of Iſrael: they ſhall heare him proteſt to haue neither heart, nor knee for Rimmon: If hee muſt goe into the houſe of that Idoll, it ſhall be as a ſeruant, not as a ſuppliant; his duty to his Maſter ſhall cary him, not this deuotion to his Maſters God: If his maſter goe to worſhip there, not he; neither doth hee ſay, When I bow my ſelfe to the Image of Rimmon; but, in the houſe: hee ſhall bow, to bee leaned vpon, not to adore: yet had not Naaman thought this a fault, hee had not craued a pardon; his heart told him that a perfect conuert ſhould not haue abid the roofe, the ſight, the ayre of Rimmon; that his obſeruance of an earthly maſter ſhould not draw him to the ſemblance of an act of outward obſeruance to the riuall of his maſter in Heauen, that a ſincere deteſtation of Idolatry could not ſtand with ſo vnſeaſonable a courteſie.

Farre therefore is Naaman from being a patterne, ſaue of weakneſſe: ſince hee is yet more then halfe a Syrian; ſince he willingly accuſes himſelfe; and in ſtead of defending, deprecates his offence: It is not for vs to expect a full ſtature in the cradle of conuerſion. As nature, ſo grace riſes by many degrees, to perfection: Leproſie was in Naaman cured at once, not corruption.

The Prophet, as glad to ſee him but thus forward, diſmiſſes him with a ciuill valediction: Had an Iſraelite made this ſuit, he had been anſwered, with a checke: thus much from a Syrian was worthy a kind farewell; They are parted.

Gehezi cannot thus take his leaue; his heart is maled vp in the rich cheſts of Naaman, and now hee goes to fetch it: The Prophet and his man had not looked with the ſame eyes vpon the Syrian treaſure; the one with the eye of contempt, the other with the eye of admiration, and couetous deſire. : The diſpoſition of the maſter may not be meaſured by the minde, by the act of his ſeruant: Holy Eliſha may be attended by a falſe Gehezi: No examples, no counſels will preuaile with ſome hearts: who would not haue thought that the follower of Eliſha could bee no other then a Saint? yet, after the view of all thoſe miracles, this man is a mirrour of worldlineſſe. Hee thinkes his maſter either too ſimple, or too kinde, to refuſe ſo iuſt a preſent from a Syrian; himſelfe will be more wiſe, more frugall: Deſire haſtens his pace, he doth not goe, but runne after his booty: Naaman ſees him, and, as true nobleneſſe is euer courteous, alights from his Charet, to meet him: The great Lord of Syria comes forth of his Coach to ſalute a Prophets ſeruant: not fearing that hee can humble himſelfe ouermuch to one of Eliſha's family: Hee greets Gehezi with the ſame word wherewith hee lately was dimitted by his maſter: Is it peace? So ſudden a meſſenger might ſeeme to argue ſome change. Hee ſoone receiues from the breathleſſe bearer newes of his maſters health, and requeſt: All is well, My Maſter, hath ſent mee, ſaying, Behold, euen now there be come to mee from mount Ephraim, two young men of the ſonnes of the Prophets: Giue mee, I pray thee, a talent of ſiluer, and two changes of garments. Had Gehezi craued a reward in his owne name, calling for the fee of the Prophets ſeruant, as the gaine, ſo the offence had beene the leſſe; now, reaching at a greater ſumme, he belies his Maſter, robs Naaman, burdens his owne ſoule. What a ſound tale hath the craft of Gehezi deuiſed? Of the number, the place, the quality, the age of his Maſters gueſts? That hee might ſet a faire colour vpon that pretended requeſt: ſo proportioning the value of his demand, as might both inrich himſelfe, and yet well ſtand with the moderation of his maſter. Loue of money can neuer keepe good quarter with honeſtie, with innocence: Couetouſneſſe neuer lodged in the heart alone; If it finde not, it will breed wickedneſſe. What a mint of fraud there is in a worldly breſt? How readily can it coyne ſubtle falſhood for an aduantage?

How thankfully liberall was this noble Syrian; Gehezi could not be more eager in taking, then he was in giuing; As glad of ſo happy an occaſion of leauing any peece of his treaſure behinde him, hee forces two Talents vpon the ſeruant of Eliſha: and binds them in two bags, and layes them vpon two of his owne ſeruants; his owne trayne ſhall yeeld Porters to Gehezi: Cheerefulneſſe is the iuſt prayſe of our beneficence: Bountifull minds are as zealous in ouer-paying good turnes, as the niggardly are in ſcanting retributions.

What proiects doe we thinke Gehezi had all the way? How did hee pleaſe himſelfe with the waking dreames of purchaſes, of traffique, of iollity? and now, when they are comne to the tower, he gladly diſburdens, and diſmiſſes his two Syrian attendants, and hides their load, and wipes his mouth, and ſtands boldly before that Maſter, whom hee had ſo foully abuſed. Oh Gehezi! where didſt thou thinke God was this while? Couldeſt thou thus long powre water vpon the hands of Eliſha, and be eyther ignorant, or regardleſſe of that vndeceiueable eye of prouidence, which was euer fixed vpon thy hands, thy tongue, thy heart? Couldeſt thou thus hope to blinde the eyes of a Seer? Heare then thy inditement, thy ſentence, from him, whom thou thoughteſt to haue mocked with thy concealment; Whence commeſt thou Gehezi? Thy ſeruant went no whither. He that had begunne a lye to Naaman, ends it to his Maſter: who ſo lets his tongue once looſe to a wilfull vntruth, ſoone growes impudent in multiplying falſehoods. Of what metall is the forehead of that man, that dares lye to a Prophet? What is this, but to out-face the ſenſes? Went not my heart with thee, when the man turned againe from his charet to meet thee? Didſt thou not till now know, O Gehezi, that Prophets haue ſpirituall eyes, which are not confined to bodily proſpects?

Didſt thou not know, that their hearts were often, where they were not? Didſt thou not know that thy ſecreteſt wayes were ouer-looked by inuiſible witneſſes? Heare then and be conuinced: Hither thou wenteſt, thus thou ſaidſt, thus thou didſt, thus thou ſpedſt. What anſwer was now here but confuſion? Miſerable Gehezi, how didſt thou ſtand pale and trembling before the dreadfull tribunall of thy ſeuere Maſter, looking for the wofull ſentence of ſome grieuous iudgement for ſo haynous an offence? Is this a time to receiue money, and to receiue garments, and (which thou hadſt already purchaſed in thy conceit) Oliue-yards, and Vineyards, and Sheepe, and Oxen, and Men-ſeruants, and Maid-ſeruants? Did my mouth refuſe, that thy hands might take? Was I ſo carefull to win honour to my God, and credit to my profeſſion, by denying theſe Syrian preſents, that thou mighteſt daſh both in receiuing them? Was there no way to inrich thy ſelfe, but by belying thy Maſter; by diſparaging this holy function in the eyes of a new conuert? Since thou wouldeſt needs therefore take part of Naamans treaſure, take part with him in his Leproſie, The leproſie of Naaman, ſhall cleaue vnto thee, and vnto thy ſeed for euer. Oh heauy talents of Gehezi! Oh the horror of this one vnchangeable ſuit, which ſhall neuer be but loathſomely white, noyſomely vncleane! How much better had beene a light purſe, and an homely coat, with a ſound body, a cleare ſoule? Too late doth that wretched man now finde, that he hath loaded himſelfe with a curſe, that he hath clad himſelfe with ſhame: His ſinne ſhall bee read euer in his face, in his ſeed; All paſſengers, all poſterities ſhall now ſay, Behold the characters of Gehezies couetouſneſſe, fraud, ſacriledge! The act ouer-takes the word, Hee went out of his preſence a Leper as white as ſnow. It is a wofull exchange that Gehezi hath made with Naaman; Naaman came a Leper, returned a Diſciple; Gehezi came a Diſciple, returned a Leper: Naaman left behinde both his diſeaſe and money; Gehezi takes vp both his money and his diſeaſe. Now ſhall Gehezi neuer looke vpon himſelfe, but he ſhall thinke of Naaman whoſe skinne is transferred vpon him with thoſe Talents; and ſhall weare out the reſt of his dayes in ſhame, and paine, and ſorrow: His teares may waſh off the guilt of his ſinne, ſhall not (like another Iordan) waſh off his Leproſie, that ſhall euer remaine as an hereditary monument of diuine ſeuerity. This ſonne of the Prophets ſhall more loud and liuely preach the Iuſtice of God by his face, than others by their tongue. Happy was it for him, if whiles his skinne was ſnow-white with Leproſie, his humbled ſoule were waſhed white as ſnow with the water of true repentance.

ELISHA raiſing the Iron, blinding the Aſſyrians.

THere was no loſſe of Gehezi; when he was gone, the Prophets increaſed: an ill man in the Church, is but like ſome ſhrubbie tree in a Garden, whoſe ſhade keeps better plants from growing: A blanke doth better in a roome, than an ill filling: The view of Gods iuſt iudgements doth rather draw clients vnto him, then alienate them. The Kings of Iſrael had ſucceeded in Idolatry, and hate of ſincere Religion; Yet the Prophets multiply: Perſecution enlargeth the bounds of the Church. Theſe very tempeſtuous ſhowers bring vp flowers and herbs in abundance. There would haue beene neyther ſo many, nor ſo zealous Prophets in the languiſhments of peace: Beſides, What maruell is it, if the immediate ſucceſſion of two ſuch noble Leaders, as Elijah and Eliſha, eſtabliſhed, and augmented Religion, and bred multitudes of Prophets. Rather who cannot maruell, vpon the knowledge of all their miracles, that all Iſrael did not propheſie? It is a good hearing, that the Prophets want elbow-roome; out of their ſtore, not out of the enuy of neighbours, or incompetency of prouiſion: Where viſion failes, the people periſh; they are bleſſed, where it abounds.

When they found themſelues ſtraitned, they did not preſume to carue for themſelues, but they craued the leaue, the counſell of Eliſha: Let vs goe, we pray thee, vnto Iordan, and take thence euery man a beame, and let vs make vs a place where wee may dwell. And he ſaid, Goe ye. It well becomes the Sonnes of the Prophets, to enterpriſe nothing without the allowance of their Superiours. Here was a building towards, none of the curiouſeſt: I doe not ſee them making meanes for the procurement of ſome cunning artificers, nor for the conquiſition of ſome coſtly marbles, and Cedars, but euery man ſhall hew, and ſquare, and frame his owne beame. No nice termes were ſtood vpon by theſe ſonnes of the Prophets. Their thoughts were fixed vpon the perfection of a ſpirituall building: As an homely roofe may ſerue them, ſo their owne hands ſhall raiſe it. The fingers of theſe contemplatiue men did not ſcorne the Axe, and Mallet, and Cheſell: It was better being there then in Obadiahs Caue; and they that dwell now contentedly vnder rude ſtickes, will not refuſe the ſquared ſtones, and poliſhed contignations of better times. They ſhall be ill teachers of others, that haue not learned both to want, and to abound.

The Maſter of this ſacred Societie, Eliſha, is not ſtately, not auſtere: he giues not onely paſſage to this motion of his Collegiates, but aſſiſtance. It was fit the ſonnes of the Prophets ſhould haue conuenience of dwelling, though not pompe, not coſtlineſſe. They fall to their worke; No man goes ſlackly about the building of his owne houſe: One of them more regarding the tree then the toole, lets fall the head of the Axe into the riuer: Poore men are ſenſible of ſmall loſſes: Hee makes his mone to Eliſha, Alas, Maſter, for it was borrowed; Had the Axe beene his owne, the trouble had beene the leſſe to forgoe it; therfore doth the miſcariage afflict him, becauſe it was of a borrowed Axe. Honeſt mindes are more carefull of what they haue by loane then by proprietie: In lending there is a truſt, which a good heart cannot diſappoint without vexation. Alas poore nouices of the Prophet, they would bee building, and were not worth their axes: if they would giue their labour, they muſt borrow their inſtruments.

Their wealth was ſpirituall: Outward pouertie may well ſtand with inward riches: He is rich, not that hath the world, but that can contemne it.

Eliſha loues and cheriſhes this iuſt ſimplicitie; rather will hee worke a miracle, then a borrowed axe ſhall not be reſtored: It might eaſily be imagined, hee that could raiſe vp the iron out of the bottome of the water, could tell where it fell in; yet euen that powerfull hand calls for direction: In this one point, the ſonne of the Prophet knowes more then Eliſha: The notice of particularities is neyther fit for a creature, nor communicable: a meane man may beſt know his owne caſe: This Nouice better knowes where his axe fell, then his maſter: his maſter knowes better how to get it out, then he. There is no reaſon to be giuen of ſupernaturall actions. The Prophet borrowes an axe to cut an helue for the loſt axe: Why did he not make vſe of that handle which had caſt the head? Did hee hold it vnworthy of reſpect, for that it had abandoned the metall wherewith it was truſted? Or did he make choice of a new ſtick, that the miracle might be the more cleare and vnqueſtionable? Diuine power goes a contrary way to Art: Wee firſt would haue procured the head of the axe, and then would haue fitted it with an helue: Eliſha fits the head to the helue, and cauſeth the wood, which was light and knew not how to ſinke, to fetch vp the iron, which was heauy, and naturally vncapable of ſupernatation. Whether the metall were ſtripped of the naturall waight, by the ſame power which gaue it being; or whether retaining the wonted poiſe, it was raiſed vp by ſome ſpirituall operation, I enquire not: Onely I ſee it ſwimme like corke vpon the ſtreame of Iordan, and moue towards the hand that loſt it. What creature is not willing to put off the properties of nature at the command of the God of nature? O God, how eaſie is it for thee, when this hard and heauy heart of mine is ſunke downe into the mud of the world, to fetch it vp againe by thy mighty Word, and cauſe it to float vpon the ſtreames of life, and to ſee the face of heauen againe?

Yet ſtill doe the ſides of Iſrael complaine of the thornes of Aram; The children of Ahab rue their fathers vniuſt mercy: From an enemie, it is no making queſtion whether of ſtrength or wyle: The King of Syria conſults with his Seruants, where to encampe for his greateſt aduantage; their opinion is not more required, then their ſecreſie. Eliſha is a thouſand ſcouts: he ſends word to the King of Iſrael of the proiects, of the remoues of his enemie. More than once had Iehoram ſaued both his life, and his Hoaſt, by theſe cloſe admonitions. It is well that in ſomething yet a Prophet may bee obeyed. What ſtrange State-ſeruice was this which Eliſha did, beſides the ſpirituall? The King, the people of Iſrael owe themſelues, and their ſafety to a deſpiſed Prophet. The man of God knew, and felt them Idolaters, yet how carefull and vigilant is he for their reſcue. If they were bad, yet they were his owne: If they were bad, yet not all; God had his number amongſt their worſt: If they were bad, yet the Syrians were worſe. The Iſraelites miſ-worſhipped the true God, the Syrians worſhipped a falſe. That (if it were poſſible) he might winne them, hee will preſerue them; and if they will needs be wanting to God, yet Eliſha will not be wanting to them; their impietie ſhall not make him vndutifull.

There cannot bee a iuſter cauſe of diſpleaſure, then the diſcloſing of thoſe ſecret counſels, which are laid vp in our eare, in our breſt. The King of Syria, not without reaſon, ſtomackes this ſuppoſed treachery. What Prince can beare, that an aduerſe power ſhould haue a party, a Penſionary in his owne Court? How famous was Eliſha euen in forraine Regions? Beſides Naaman, others of the Syrian Nobilitie take notice of the miraculous faculties of this Prophet of Iſrael; He is accuſed for this ſecret intelligence: No words can eſcape him, though ſpoken in the bed-chamber. O Syrian, whoſoeuer thou wert, thou ſaidſt not enough: If thy maſter doe but whiſper in thine eare, if he ſmother his words within his owne lips; if he doe but ſpeake within his owne boſome, Eliſha knowes it from an infallible information. What counſell is it, O God, that can be hid from thee? What counſell is it that thou wilt hide from thy Seer? Euen this very word that accuſeth the Prophet, is knowne to the accuſed. He heares this tale whiles it is in telling; he heares the plot for his apprehenſion. How ill doe the proiects of wicked men hang together? They that confeſſe Eliſha knowes their ſecreteſt words, doe yet conferre to take him. There are ſpies vpon him, whoſe eſpials haue moued their anger, and admiration. He is deſcryed to be in Dothan, a ſmall towne of Manaſſes; A whole Armie is ſent thither to ſurpriſe him: The opportunitie of the night is choſen for the exploit. There ſhall be no want eyther in the number, or valour, or ſecrecie of theſe conſpired troupes: and now when they haue fully girt in the village with a ſtrong and exquiſite ſiege, they make themſelues ſure of Eliſha, and pleaſe themſelues to think how they haue incaged the miſerable Prophet, how they ſhould take him at vnawares in his bed, in the midſt of a ſecure dreame; how they ſhould carry him fettered to their King; what thankes they ſhould haue for ſo welcome a priſoner.

The ſucceſſor of Gehezi riſeth early in the morning, and ſees all the Citie encompaſſed with a fearfull hoaſt, of foot, horſe, charets. His eye could meet with nothing but woods of pikes, and walls of harneſſe, and luſtre of metalls; and now he runs in afrighted to his Maſter: Alas, my maſter, what ſhall we doe? He had day enough to ſee they were enemies that enuironed them, to ſee himſelfe helpleſſe, and deſperate; and hath onely ſo much life left in him, as to lament himſelfe to the partner of his miſery. Hee cannot flee from his new Maſter, if he would; he runnes to him with a wofull clamour Alas, my Maſter, what ſhall we doe?

Oh the vndaunted courage of faith! Eliſha ſees all this, and ſits in his chamber ſo ſecure, as if theſe had onely beene the guard of Iſrael, for his ſafe protection. It is an hard precept that he giues his ſeruant, Feare not: As well might he haue bid him, not to ſee, when he ſaw, as not to feare, when he ſaw ſo dreadfull a ſpectacle: The operations of the ſenſes are no leſſe certaine, then thoſe of the affections, where the obiects are no leſſe proper: But the taſke is eaſie if the next word may finde beleefe, [For there are moe with vs, then with them.] Multitude, and other outward probabilities doe both lead the confidence of naturall hearts, and fixe it. It is for none but a Dauid to ſay, I will not be afraid of ten thouſands of people, that haue ſet themſelues againſt me round about. Fleſh and blood riſeth, and falleth, according to the proportion of the ſtrength, or weakneſſe of apparent meanes.

Eliſhaes man lookt about him, yet his Maſter prayes, Lord open his eyes that they may ſee. Naturally wee ſee not, whiles we doe ſee: Euery thing is ſo ſeene, as it is. Bodily eyes diſcerne bodily obiects, only ſpirituall can ſee the things of God. Some men want both eyes and light. Eliſhaes ſeruant had eyes, wanted illumination: No ſooner were his eyes open, then he ſaw the mountaine full of horſes, and charets of fire round about Eliſha. They were there before, (neyther doth Eliſha pray that thoſe troups may be gathered, but that they may be ſeene) not till now were they deſcryed. Inviſible armies guard the ſeruants of God, whiles they ſeeme moſt forſaken of earthly aide, moſt expoſed to certaine dangers: If the eyes of our faith be as open as thoſe of our ſenſe, to ſee Angels as well as Syrians, wee cannot be appalled with the moſt vnequall termes of hoſtilitie. Thoſe bleſſed Spirits are ready eyther to reſcue our bodies, or to carry vp our ſoules to bleſſedneſſe, whether euer ſhall be enioyned by their Maker: there is iuſt comfort in both, in eyther.

Both thoſe Charets that came to fetch Elijah, and thoſe that came to defend Eliſha, were fiery: God is not leſſe louely to his owne, in the midſt of his iudgements, then he is terrible to his enemies, in the demonſtration of his mercies. Thus guarded, it is no maruell if Eliſha dare walke forth into the midſt of the Syrians. Not one of thoſe heauenly Preſidiaries ſtrucke a ſtroke for the Prophet; neither doth hee require their blowes, onely he turnes his prayer to his God, and ſayes, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindneſſe. With no other then deadly intentions did theſe Aramites come downe to Eliſha, yet doth not he ſay, Smite them with the Sword, but, Smite them with blindneſſe: All the euill he wiſheth to them, is their repentance; There was no way to ſee their errour, but by blindneſſe. He that prayed for the opening of his Seruants eyes, to ſee his ſafe-guard, prayes for the blinding of the eyes of his enemies, that they might not ſee to doe hurt.

As the eyes of Eliſhaes Seruant were ſo ſhut, that they ſaw not the Angels, when they ſaw the Syrians: ſo the eyes of the Syrians ſhall be likewiſe ſhut, that when they ſee the man, they ſhall not ſee the Prophet. To all other obiects their eyes are cleare, onely to Eliſha they ſhall be blinde, blinde not through darkneſſe, but through miſknowledge: They ſhall ſee, and miſtake both the perſon and the place. He that made the ſenſes, can either hold, or delude them at pleaſure: how eaſily can hee offer to the ſight other repreſentations, then thoſe which ariſe from the viſible matter, and make the heart to beleeue them?

Iuſtly now might Eliſha ſay, This is not the way, neither is this the Citie, wherein Eliſha ſhall bee deſcried. He was in Dothan, but not as Eliſha; hee ſhall not be found but in Samaria; neither can they haue any guide to him, but himſelfe. No ſooner are they come into the ſtreets of Samaria, then their eyes haue leaue to know both the place and the Prophet. The firſt ſight they haue of themſelues, is in the trap of Iſrael, in the iawes of death: thoſe ſtately Palaces, which they now wonder at vnwillingly, carie no reſemblance to them, but of their graues: Euery Iſraelite ſeemes an executioner; euery houſe a Iayle; euery beame a Gibbet; and now, they looke vpon Eliſha tranſformed from their guide, to their common murderer, with horror and paleneſſe: It is moſt iuſt with God to intangle the plotters of wickedneſſe, in their owne ſnare.

How glad is a mortall enemy to ſnatch at all aduantages of reuenge? Neuer did the King of Iſrael ſee a more pleaſing ſight, then ſo many Syrian throats at his mercy: and, as loth to loſe ſo faire a day, (as if his fingers itched to bee dip't in blood) hee ſaies, My father, ſhall I ſmite, ſhall I ſmite them? The repetition argued deſire, the compellation, reuerence: Not without allowance of a Prophet, would the King of Iſrael lay his hand vpon an enemy, ſo miraculouſly trained home: His heart was ſtill foule with idolatry, yet would he not taint his hand with forbidden blood: Hypocriſie will bee ſtill ſcrupulous in ſomething, and in ſome awfull reſtraints is a perfect counterfeit of conſcience.

The charitable Prophet ſoone giues an angry prohibition of ſlaughter, Thou ſhalt not ſmite them: Wouldeſt thou ſmite thoſe whom thou haſt taken captiue, with thy ſword, and with thy bow? As if he ſaid, Theſe are Gods captiues, not thine; and if they were thine owne, their blood could not bee ſhed without cruelty: though in the hot chaſes ſo warre, executions may be iuſtifiable; yet in the cooleneſſe of deliberation, it can bee no other then inhumane, to take thoſe liues which haue beene yeelded to mercy: But here, thy bow and thy ſword are guiltleſſe of the ſucceſſe; onely a ſtrange prouidence of the Almighty hath caſt them into thine hands, whom neither thy force, nor thy fraud could haue compaſſed: If it bee victory thou aimeſt at, ouercome them with kindneſſe: Set bread and water before them, that they may eate and drinke: Oh noble reuenge of Eliſha, to feaſt his perſecutors! To prouide a Table for thoſe, who had prouided a graue for him: Theſe Syrians came to Dothan full of bloody purpoſes to Eliſha: he ſends them from Samaria full of good cheare, and iollity. Thus, thus ſhould a Prophet puniſh his purſuers: No vengeance but this is heroicall, and fit for Chriſtian imitation: If thine enemy hunger, giue him bread to eate; if hee thirſt, giue him water to drinke: For thou ſhalt heape coales of fire vpon his head; and the Lord ſhall reward thee: Be not ouercome with euill, but ouercome euill with good.

The King of Iſrael hath done that by his feaſt, which hee could not haue done by his ſword: The bands of Syria will no more come by way of ambuſh, or incurſion, into the bounds of Iſrael. Neuer did a charitable act goe away without the retribution of a bleſſing: In doing ſome good to our enemies, wee doe moſt good to our ſelues; God cannot but loue in vs this imitation of his mercy, who bids his Sunne ſhine, and his raine fall where he is moſt prouoked; and that loue is neuer fruitleſſe.

The Famine of Samaria releeued.

NOt many good turnes are written in Marble: ſoone haue theſe Syrians forgotten the mercifull beneficence of Iſrael: After the forbearance of ſome hoſtile inroade, all the forces of Syria are muſtered againſt Ieboram: That very Samaria which had releeued the diſtreſſed Aramites, is by the Aramites beſieged, and is affamiſhed by thoſe, whom it had fed. The famine within the walles was more terrible then the ſword without. Their worſt enemy was ſhut within; and could not be diſlodged of their owne bowels: Whither hath the Idolatry of Iſrael brought them? Before, they had beene ſcourged with warre, with drought, with dearth, as with ſingle cords; they remaine incorrigible, and now God twiſts two of theſe bloody laſhes together, and galls them euen to death: there needs no other executioners then their owne mawes. Thoſe things which in their nature were not edible, (at leaſt, to an Iſraelite) were now both deare, and dainty. The Aſſe was (beſides the vntoothſomneſſe) an impure creature: that which the law of Ceremonies had made vncleane, the law of neceſſity had made delicate and precious: the bones of ſo carrion an head could not bee picked for leſſe then foure hundred peeces of ſiluer: neyther was this ſcarcitie of victualls only, but of all other neceſſaries for humane vſe; that the belly might not complaine alone, the whole man was equally pinched.

The King of Iſrael is neyther exempted from the iudgement, nor yet yeelds vnder it: Hee walkes vpon the walls of his Samaria, to ouer-ſee the Watches ſet, the Engines ready, the Guards changed, together with the poſture of the enemy; when a woman cryes to him out of the Citie, Help my Lord, O King: Next to God what refuge haue wee in all our neceſſities, but his Anointed? Earthly Soueraignty can aide vs in the caſe of the iniuſtice of men, but what can it doe againſt the iudgements of God? If the Lord doe not help thee, whence ſhall I help thee? out of the barne floore, or out of the wine-preſſe? Euen the greateſt powers muſt ſtoope to afflictions in themſelues, how ſhould they be able to preuent them in others? To ſue for aide where is an vtter impotence of redreſſe, is but to vpbraid the weakneſſe, and aggrauate the miſery of thoſe whom wee implore. Ieboram miſtakes the ſuit: The ſuppliant calls to him for a wofull peece of iuſtice: Two mothers haue agreed to eate their ſonnes; the one hath yeelded hers to be boyled and eaten; the other, after ſhee hath taken her part of ſo prodigious a banquet, with-drawes her childe, and hides him from the knife; Hunger and enuy make the Plaintiffe importunate; and now ſhee craues the benefit of Royall Iuſtice. Shee that made the firſt motion, with-holds her part of the bargaine, and flyes from that promiſe, whoſe truſt had made this mother childleſſe. Oh the direfull effects of famine, that turnes off all reſpects of nature, and giues no place to horror, cauſing the tender mother to lay her hands, yea, her teeth vpon the fruit of her owne body; and to receiue that into her ſtomacke, which ſhee hath brought forth of her wombe: What ſhould Ieboram doe? The match was monſtrous: The challenge was iuſt, yet vnnaturall: This complainant had purchaſed one halfe of the liuing childe, by the one halfe of hers, dead. The mother of the ſuruiuing Infant is preſſed by couenant, by hunger; reſtrained by nature. To force a mother to deliuer vp her childe to voluntary ſlaughter, had beene cruell: To force a debtor to pay a confeſſed arerage, ſeemed but equall: If the remaining childe be not dreſſed for food, this mother of the deuoured childe is both robbed, and affamiſhed: If he be, innocent blood is ſhed by authoritie. It is no maruell if the queſtion aſtoniſhed the Iudge; not ſo much for the difficultie of the demand, as the horror of the occaſion: to what lamentable diſtreſſe did Ieboram find his people driuen?

Not without cauſe did the King of Iſrael rend his garments, and ſhew his ſackcloth; well might he ſee his people branded with that ancient curſe which God had denounced againſt the rebellious: The Lord ſhall bring a Nation againſt thee of a fierce countenance, which ſhall not regard the perſon of the old, nor ſhew fauour to the young; And he ſhall beſiege thee in all thy gates; And thou ſhalt eate the fruit of thine owne body, the fleſh of thy ſonnes, and of thy daughters: The tender and delicate woman, her eyes ſhall be euill towards her young one that commeth out from betweene her feet, and toward the children which ſhee ſhall beare, for ſhe ſhall eate them for want of all things ſecretly in the ſiege and ſtraitneſſe. He mournes for the plague, he mournes not for the cauſe of this plague, his ſinne, and theirs: I finde his ſorrow, I find not his repentance. The worſt man may grieue for his ſmart, onely the good heart grieues for his offence: In ſtead of being penitent, Iehoram is furious, and turnes his rage from his ſinnes, againſt the Prophet: God doe ſo to me, and more alſo, if the head of Eliſha, the ſon of Shaphat, ſhall ſtand on him this day: Alas, what hath the righteous done? Perhaps Eliſha (that wee may imagine ſome colours of this diſpleaſure) fore-threatned this iudgement; but they deſerued it; perhaps hee might haue auerted it by his prayers; their vnrepentance diſabled him: Perhaps he perſwaded Iehoram to hold out the ſiege; though through much hardneſſe, he fore-ſaw the deliuerance. In all this how hath Eliſha forfeited his head? All Iſrael did not afford an head ſo guiltleſſe, as this that was deſtined to ſlaughter. This is the faſhion of the world; the lewd blames the innocent, and will reuenge their owne ſins vpon others vprightneſſe.

In the midſt of all this ſad eſtate of Samaria, and theſe ſtormes of Iehoram, the Prophet ſits quietly in his owne houſe, amongſt his holy Conſorts; bewailing no doubt both the ſinnes, and miſery of their people; and prophetically conferring of the iſſue; when ſuddenly God reueales to him the bloody intent, and meſſage of Iehoram, and he at once reueales it to his fellowes. See yee how this ſonne of a murderer hath ſent to take away mine head. Oh the vnimitable libertie of a Prophet! The ſame God that ſhewed him his danger, ſuggeſted his words; He may be bold, where we muſt be awfull: Still is Naboths blood layd in Iehorams diſh: The foule fact of Ahab blemiſheth his Poſterity; and now when the ſonne threats violence to the innocent, murder is obiected to him as hereditary.

He that fore-ſaw his owne perill, prouides for his ſafety; [Shut the doore and hold him faſt at the doore.] No man is bound to tender his throat to an vniuſt ſtroke: This bloody commiſſion was preuented by a propheticall fore-ſight: The ſame eye that ſaw the executioner comming to ſmite him, ſaw alſo the King haſting after him, to ſtay the blow: The Prophet had beene no other then guilty of his owne blood, if hee had not reſerued himſelfe a while, for the reſcue of authority: Oh the inconſtancy of carnall hearts! It was not long ſince Iehoram could ſay to Eliſha, My father, ſhall I ſmite them? now he is ready to ſmite him as an enemy, whom he honoured as a father: Yet againe, his lippes had no ſooner giuen ſentence of death againſt the Prophet, then his feet ſtirre to recall it: It ſhould ſeeme that Eliſha, vpon the challenges & expoſtulations of Iehorams meſſenger, had ſent a perſwaſiue meſſage to the King of Iſrael, yet a while to wait patiently vpon God for his deliuerance: The diſcontented Prince flies off in an impotent anger, Behold, this euill is of the Lord, what ſhould I wait for the Lord any longer? Oh the deſperate reſolutions of impatient mindes! They haue ſtinted God both for his time and his meaſure; if he exceed either, they either turne their backs vpon him, or fly in his face: The poſition was true, the inference deadly: All that euill was of the Lord; they deſerued it, he ſent it: What then? It ſhould haue beene therefore argued, Hee that ſent it, can remoue it: I will wait vpon his mercy, vnder whoſe iuſtice I ſuffer: Impatience and diſtruſt ſhall but aggrauate my iudgement: It is the Lord, let him doe what he will: But now to deſpaire becauſe God is iuſt, to defie mercy becauſe it lingers, to reiect God for correction, it is a preſumptuous madneſſe, an impious pettiſhneſſe.

Yet in ſpight of all theſe prouocations both of King, and people, Eliſha hath good newes for Iehoram: Thus ſaith the Lord, To morrow about this time ſhall a meaſure of fine flowre be ſold for a Shekel, and two meaſures of Barly for a Shekel in the gate of Samaria: Miſerable Iſrael now ſees an end of this hard triall; One dayes patience ſhall free them both of ſiege, and famine. Gods deliuerances may ouer-ſtay our expectation, not the due period of his owne counſels. Oh infinite mercy, when man ſayes, No longer, God ſayes, To morrow: As if he would condeſcend where hee might iudge; and would pleaſe them who deſerued nothing but puniſhment. The word ſeemed not more comfortable, then incredible: A Lord, on whoſe hand the King leaned, anſwered the man of God, and ſaid, Behold, if the Lord would make windowes in heauen, might this thing be? Propheſies, before they be fulfilled, are riddles; no ſpirit can areed them, but that by which they are deliuered. It is a fooliſh and iniurious infidelity to queſtion a poſſibility, where wee know the meſſage is Gods: How eaſie is it for that omnipotent hand to effect thoſe things, which ſurpaſſe all the reach of humane conceit? Had God intended a miraculous multiplication, was it not as eaſie for him to increaſe the corne or meale of Samaria, as the widowes oyle? was it not as eaſie for him to giue plenty of victuals without opening the windowes of heauen, as to giue plenty of water without wind or raine? The Almighty hates to be diſtruſted: This Peere of Iſrael ſhould rue his vnbeleefe: Behold, thou ſhalt ſee it with thine eyes, but ſhalt not eate thereof: The ſight ſhall be yeelded for conuiction, the fruition ſhall bee denied for puniſhment: Well is that man worthy to want the benefit which hee would not beleeue: Who can pity to ſee Infidelity excluded from the bleſſings of earth, from the glory of heauen?

How ſtrange a choyce doth God make of the intelligencers of ſo happy a change: Foure Lepers ſit at the entring of the Gate, they ſee nothing but death before them, famine within the wals, the enemy, without: The election is wofull, at laſt they reſolue vpon the leſſer euill: Famine is worſe then the Syrian; In the famine there is certaintie of periſhing; amongſt the Syrians, hazzard: Perhaps the enemy may haue ſome pity, hunger hath none: and, were the death equally certaine, it were more eaſie to dye by the ſword, then by famine: vpon this deliberation they come downe into the Syrian campe, to finde either ſpeed of mercy, or diſpatch. Their hunger would not giue them reſpight till morning: By twi-light are they falne vpon the vttermoſt tents: Behold, there was no man; They maruell at the ſilence, and ſolitude; they looke, and liſten; the noyſe of their owne feet affrighted them; their guilty hearts ſupplied the Syrians; and expected fearefully thoſe which were as fearfully fled: How eaſily can the Almighty confound the power of the ſtrong, the policie of the wiſe? God puts a Pannick terror into the hearts of the proud Syrians; he makes them heare a noiſe of charets, and a noyſe of horſes, euen the noyſe of a great hoaſt; They ſay one to other, Loe the King of Iſrael hath hired againſt vs the Kings of the Hittites, and the Kings of the Egyptians, to come vpon vs: they ariſe therefore in a confuſed rout, and leauing all their ſubſtance behinde them, flee for their liues. Not long before, Eliſhaes ſeruant ſaw charets and horſes, but heard none; Now, theſe Syrians heare charets and horſes, but ſee none; That ſight comforted his heart, this ſound diſmaied theirs: The Iſraelites heard no noyſe within the wals, the Lepers heard no noiſe without the gates; Onely the Syrians heard this noiſe in their campe: What a ſcorne doth God put vpon theſe preſumptuous Aramites? He will not vouchſafe to vſe any ſubſtantiall ſtratagem againſt them; nothing but an empty ſound ſhall ſcatter them, and ſend them home empty of ſubſtance, laded with ſhame, halfe-dead with feare; the very horſes that might haue haſtened their flight, are left tyed in their Tents; their very garments are a burden: all is left behind, ſaue their very bodies, and thoſe breathleſſe for ſpeed.

Doubtleſſe theſe Syrians knew well to what miſerable exigents the incloſed Iſraelites were brought by their ſiege; and now made full account to ſacke, and ranſacke their Samaria; already had they diuided, and ſwallowed the prey: when ſuddenly God puts them into a ridiculous confuſion; and ſends them to ſeeke ſafety in their heeles; no booty is now in price with them but their life, and happy is hee that can runne faſteſt.

Thus the Almighty laughs at the deſignes of inſolent men, and ſhuts vp their counſels in ſhame.

The feare of the foure Lepers began now to giue way to ſecuritie; they fill their bellies, and hide their treaſures, and paſſe from one Tent to another, in a faſtidious choice of the beſt commodities; they who ere-while would haue held it happineſſe enough to haue beene bleſſed with a cruſt, now wantonly roue for dainties, and from neceſſitie leape into exceſſe.

How farre ſelfe-loue carries vs in all our actions, euen to the neglect of the publike? Not till their owne bellies, and hands, and eyes were filled, did theſe Lepers thinke of imparting this newes to Iſrael: at laſt, when themſelues are glutted, they begin to remember the hunger of their brethren, and now they finde roome for remorſe, We doe not well, this day is a day of good tydings, and we hold our peace. Nature teaches vs that it is an iniury to ingroſſe bleſſings: and ſo to minde the priuate, as if we had no relation to a communitie; we are worthy to be ſhut out of the Citie-gates for Lepers, if the reſpects to the publique good doe not ouer-ſway vs in all our deſires, in all our demeanure; and well may we with theſe couetous Lepers feare a miſchiefe vpon our ſelues, if we ſhall wilfully conceale bleſſings from others.

The conſcience of this wrong and danger ſends backe the Lepers into the Citie; they call to the Porters, & ſoone tranſmit the newes to the Kings houſhold; The King of Iſrael complaines not to haue his ſleepe broken with ſuch intelligence; He ariſeth in the night, and not contemning good newes, though brought by Lepers, conſults with his ſeruants of the buſineſſe.

Wee cannot be too iealous of the intentions of an enemie; Iehoram wiſely ſuſpects this flight of the Syrians to be but ſimulatory, and politicke, onely to draw Iſrael out of their Citie, for the ſpoile of both. There may be more perill in the backe of an enemy, then in his face: the cruelleſt ſlaughters haue beene in retiring; eaſily therefore is the King perſwaded to adventure ſome few for-lorne Scouts for further aſſurance. The word of Eliſha is out of his head, out of his heart, elſe there had beene no place for this doubt: Timorous hearts neuer thinke themſelues ſure, thoſe that haue no faith, had need of much ſenſe.

Thoſe few horſes that remaine, are ſent forth for diſcouery, they finde nothing but monuments of frightfulneſſe, pledges of ſecuritie. Now Iſrael dares iſſue forth to the prey; There (as if the Syrians had comne thither to inrich them) they finde granaries, wardrobes, treaſures, and what euer may ſerue either for vſe or oſtentation: Euery Iſraelite goes away filled, laden, wearyed with the wealthy ſpoile.

As ſcarcitie breeds dearth, ſo plentie cheapneſſe. To day a meaſure of fine flower is lower rated, then yeſterday of dung.

The diſtruſtfull Peere of Iſrael ſees this abundance, according to the word of the Prophet, but enioyes it not: hee ſees this plenty can come in at the gate, though the windowes of heauen be not open. The gate is his charge: the affamiſhed Iſraelites preſſe in vpon him, and beare him downe in the throng: Extreame hunger hath no reſpect to greatneſſe. Not their rudeneſſe, but his owne vnbeleefe hath trampled him vnder feet. Hee that abaſed the power of God by his diſtruſt, is abaſed worthily to the heeles of the multitude: Faith exalts a man aboue his ſphere, Infidelitie depreſſes him into the duſt, into Hell: He that beleeues not is condemned already.

TO THE HIGH AND MIGHTIE MONARCH, CHARLES,

By the Grace of God King of Great Britaine, France and Ireland, Defender of the FAITH, &c.

My dread Soueraigne Lord
And Maſter.

May it pleaſe your MAIESTIE:

NOw at laſt (thankes be to my good God) I haue finiſhed the long Taſke of my Meditations vpon the Hiſtoricall part of the Old Teſtament; A Worke that I foreſaw muſt be the iſſue both of time, and thoughts; It preſumed to intitle it ſelfe at firſt, to your Gracious name, in ſucceſsion to your immortall Brothers; and now, it brings to your Royall hands, a due account of an happie diſpatch.

Beſides my owne publique ingagement, the incouragements of many worthie Diuines, both at home, and abroad, drew me on, in this pleaſing, though buſie, labour; and made me beleeue the ſeruice would not bee of more paine, then vſe.

I humbly preſent it to your Maieſtie; not fearing to ſay, that in regard of the ſubiect, it is not ſo fit for any eyes as Princely; For what doth it elſe but comment vpon that, which God hath thought good to ſay of Kings; what they haue done, what they ſhould haue done; how they ſped in good, in euill? Certainely there can be none ſuch miroir of Princes vnder heauen, as this, which God hath made for the faces of his Deputies of on earth. Neither can the eyes of Soueraigne Greatneſſe be better taken vp then with this ſacred reflection. If my defects haue not beene notorious, the matter ſhall enough commend the worke; which together with the vnworthie Authour, humbly caſts it ſelfe at the feete of your Maieſtie; with the beſt vowes of fidelitie and obſeruance, from him, that prides himſelfe in nothing more, then in the ſtyle of

Your Maieſtes
most faithfully
deuoted ſeruant,

IOS: HALL.

The SHUNAMITE ſuing to IEHORAM; ELISHA conferring with HAZAEL.

HOw royally hath Eliſha paid the Shunamite for his lodging! To him alreadie ſhe owes the life of her ſonne, both giuen, and reſtored; and now againe (after ſo many yeares, as might well haue worne out the memorie of ſo ſmall a courteſie) her ſelfe, her ſonne, her family owe their liues to ſo thankfull a gueſt. That table, and bed, and ſtoole, and candleſticke was well beſtowed: That candleſticke repaid her the light of her future life and condition, that table the meanes of maintenance, that ſtoole a ſeat of ſafe abode, that bed a quiet reſt from the common calamities of her nation: He is a niggard to himſelfe, that ſcants his beneficence to a Prophet, whoſe very cold water ſhall not go vnrewarded. Elijah preſerued the Sareptan from famine; Eliſha the Shunamite; he, by prouiſion of oyle and meale; this, by premonition: Ariſe, and go, thou and thine houſhold, and ſoiourne whereſoeuer thou canſt ſoiourne. The Sareptan was poore, and driuen to extremes, therefore the Prophet prouides for her, from hand to mouth: The Shunamite was wealthy, and therefore the Prophet ſends her to prouide for her ſelfe: The ſame goodneſſe that relieues our neceſſitie, leaues our competencie to the hand of our owne counſell; in the one, he will make vſe of his owne power, in the other, of our prouidence.

The very Prophet aduiſes this holy Client to leaue the bounds of the Church and to ſeeke life, where ſhe ſhould not find Religion: Extremitie is for the time a iuſt diſpenſation with ſome common rules of our outward demeanure, and motions, euen from better to worſe. All Iſrael and Iudah ſhall be affamiſhed; The bodie can be preſerued no where, but where the ſoule ſhall want; Sometimes the conueniences of the ſoule muſt yeeld to bodily neceſſities. Wantonneſſe and curioſitie can finde no aduantage from that which is done out of the power of need.

It is a long famine that ſhall afflict Iſrael; He vpon whom the ſpirit of Elijah was doubled, doubled the iudgement inflicted by his Maſter; Three yeares and an halfe did Iſrael gaſpe vnder the drought of Elijah; ſeauen yeares dearth ſhall it ſuffer vnder Eliſha: The tryals of God are many times not more grieuous for their ſharpeneſſe, then for their continuance.

This ſcarcitie ſhall not come alone; God ſhall call for it: what euer be the ſecond cauſe, he is the firſt. The executioners of the Almightie (ſuch are his iudgements) ſtand readie waiting vpon his iuſt Throne; and do no ſooner receiue the watch-word, then they flie vpon the world, and plague it for ſinne; Onely the cry of our ſinnes moues God to call for vengeance: And if God once call, it muſt come; How oft, how earneſtly are we called to repentance, and ſtirre not? The meſſengers of Gods wrath flie forth at the leaſt becke; and fulfill the will of his reuenge vpon thoſe, whoſe obedience would not fulfill the will of his command.

After ſo many proofes of fidelitie the Shunamite cannot diſtruſt the Prophet; not ſtaying therefore to be conuicted by the euent, ſhee remoues her family into the Land of the Philiſtins: No nation was more oppoſite to Iſrael, none more worthily odious; yet, there doth the Shunamite ſeeke and find ſhelter; Euen the ſhade of thoſe trees that are vnwholſome, may keepe vs from a ſtorme; Euery where will God finde roome for his owne. The fields of Philiſtins flouriſh, whiles the ſoyle of Iſrael yeelds nothing but weeds and barrenneſſe: Not that Iſrael was more ſinfull, but that the ſinne of Iſrael is more intolerable. The offers of grace are ſo many aggrauations of wickedneſſe: In equall offences thoſe doe iuſtly ſmart more, who are more obliged. No peſtilence is ſo contagious as that which hath taken the pureſt aire.

These Philiſtine neighbours would neuer haue endured themſelues to be peſtered with forrainers; eſpecially Iſraelites, whom they hated (beſides Religion) for their vſurpation: neither were they in all likelihood preſſed with multitude: The reſt of Iſrael were led on with hopes; preſuming vpon the amends of the next harueſt, till their want grew deſperate, and irremediable; onely the forwarned Shunamite preuents the miſchiefe; now ſhe finds what it is to haue a Prophet her friend: Happie are thoſe ſoules that vpon all occaſions conſult with Gods Seers; they ſhall be freed from the plagues, wherein the ſecure blindneſſe of others is heedleſly ouertaken.

Seuen yeares had this Shunamite ſoiourned in Paleſtine, now ſhe returnes to her owne; and is excluded: She that found harbour among Philiſtines, findes oppreſſion and violence among Iſraelites: Thoſe of her kinred, taking aduantage of her abſence, had ſhared her poſſeſſions. How oft doth it fall out that the worſt enemies of a man are thoſe of his owne houſe? All went by contraries with this Shunamite; In the famine ſhe had enough, in the common plentie ſhe was ſcanted; Philiſtines were kinde vnto her, Iſraelites cruell: Both our feares, and our hopes do not ſeldome diſappoint vs; It is ſafe truſting to that ſtay which can neuer faile vs; who can eaſily prouide vs both of friendſhip in Paleſtine, and of iuſtice in Iſrael. We may not iudge of the Religion by particular actions; A verie Philiſtine may be mercifull, when an Iſraelite is vniuſt; The perſon may be faultie, when the profeſſion is holy.

It was not long ſince the Prophet made that friendly offer to the Shunamite, out of the deſire of a thankfull requitall; What is to be done for thee? wouldeſt thou be ſpoken for to the King, or to the Captaine of the Hoſt? and ſhe anſwered, I dwell among my brethren. Little did ſhe then thinke of this iniurious meaſure; elſe ſhe might haue ſaid, I dwell among mine enemies, I dwell among robbers. It is like they were then friendly, who were now cruell, and oppreſſiue; There is no truſt to be repoſed in fleſh and bloud: How ſhould their fauors be conſtant, who are in their nature, and diſpoſition, variable? It is the ſureſt way to relie on him, who is euer like himſelfe; the meaſure of whoſe loue is eternitie.

Whither ſhould the Shunamite goe to complaine of her wrong, but to the Court? There is no other refuge of the oppreſſed, but publike authoritie: All Iuſtice is deriued from Soueraignitie: Kings are not called Gods for nothing; They doe both ſentence and execute for the Almightie.

Doubtleſſe, now the poore Shunamite, thought of the courteous proffer of Eliſha; and miſſing a friend at the Court, is glad to be the preſenter of her owne petition.

How happily doth God contriue all euents for the good of his! This ſuppliant ſhall fall vpon that inſtant for her ſuit, when the King ſhall be talking with Gehezi; when Gehezi ſhall be talking of her to the King; the words of Gehezi, the thoughts of the King, the deſires of the Shunamite ſhall be all drawne together by the wiſe prouidence of God into the center of one moment, that his oppreſſed ſeruant might receiue a ſpedie iuſtice. Oh the infinite wiſedome, power, mercy of our God, that inſenſibly orders all our wayes, as to his owne holy purpoſes, ſo to our beſt aduantage.

What doth Iehoram the King talking with Gehezi the Leaper? That very preſence was an eyeſore.

But if the cohabitation with the infectious were forbidden, yet not the conference. Certainely, I begin to thinke of ſome goodneſſe in both theſe: Had there not beene ſome goodneſſe in Iehoram, he had not taken pleaſure to heare, euen from a leprous mouth, the miraculous acts and praiſes of Gods Prophet; Had there not beene ſome goodneſſe in Gehezi, he had not after ſo fearefull an infliction of iudgement, thus ingenuouſly recounted the praiſes of his ſeuere Maſter; He that told that deare-bought lye to the Prophet, tells now all truths of the Prophet, to the King: Perhaps his leproſie had made him cleane; If ſo: Happie was it for him that his forehead was white with the diſeaſe, if his ſoule became hereupon white with repentance. But we may well know that the deſire, or report of hiſtoricall Truths, doth not alwayes argue grace. Still Iehoram, after the iniquitie of the Prophets miracles, continues his Idolatry. He that was curious to hearken after the wonders of Eliſha, is not carefull to follow his doctrine; Therefore are Gehezi and the Shunamite met before him, that he may be conuicted, who will not be reformed: Why was it elſe that the preſence of the perſons ſhould thus inexpectedly make good the relation, if God had not meant the inexcuſableneſſe of Iehoram, whiles he muſt needs ſay within himſelfe; Thus potent is the Prophet of that God, whom I obey not, Were not Eliſhaes, the true God, how could he worke ſuch wonders? And if he be the true God, why is he not mine? But what? Shall I change Ahabs God for Iehoſaphats? No; I cannot denie the miracles, I will not admit of the Author: Let Eliſha be powerfull, I will be conſtant. O wretched Iehoram; how much better had it beene for thee neuer to haue ſeene the face of Gehezi, and the ſonne of the Shunamite; then to go away vnmoued with the vengeance of leproſie in the one, with the mercifull reſuſcitation of the other? Therefore is thy iudgement fearefully aggrauated, becauſe thou wouldeſt not yeeld to what thou couldſt not oppoſe. Had not Ahabs obduratenes bin propagated to his ſon, ſo powerfull demonſtrations of diuine power could not haue bin vneffectuall. Wicked hearts are ſo much worſe by how much God is better; This anuile is the harder by being continually beaten vpon, whether with iudgements or mercie.

Yet this good vſe will God haue made of this report, and this preſence, that the poore Shunamite ſhall haue iuſtice; That ſonne, whoſe life was reſtored, ſhall haue his inheritance reuiued; His eſtate ſhall fare the better for Eliſhaes miracles: How much more will our mercifull God ſecond his owne bleſſings, when the fauors of vniuſt men are therefore drawne to vs, becauſe we haue beene the ſubiects of diuine beneficence.

It was a large, and full award, that this occurrence drew from the King; Reſtore all that was hers, and all the fruits of the field, ſince the day that ſhe left the land, euen vntill now. Not the preſent poſſeſſion onely is giuen her, but the arerages.

Nothing hinders, but that outward iuſtice may ſtand with groſſe Idolatry. The Widdow may thanke Eliſha for this; His miracle wrought ſtill; and puts this new life in her dead eſtate; his abſence did that for the preſeruation of life, which his preſence did for the reſtoring it from death. She that was ſo readie to expoſtulate with the man of God, vpon the loſſe of her ſonne, might perhaps haue beene as readie to impute the loſſe of her eſtate to his aduice; Now, that for his ſake ſhe is inriched with her owne; how doth ſhe bleſſe God for ſo happy a gueſt? When we haue forgotten our owne good turnes, God remembers and crownes them: Let vs doe good to all whiles we haue time, but eſpecially to the houſhold of faith.

Could Iſrael haue beene ſenſible of their owne condition, it was no ſmall vnhappineſſe to loſe the preſence of Eliſha: Whether, for the Idolatries, or for the famine of Iſrael, the Prophet is gone into Syria; No doubt Naaman welcomd him thither; and now would force vpon him thankes for his cure, which the man of God would not receiue at home.

How famous is he now growne that was taken from the Teame? His name is not confined to his owne Nation; forraine countries take notice of it; and Kings are glad to liſten after him, and wooe him with preſents: Benhadad the King of Syria, whoſe counſells he had detected, reioyceth to heare of his preſence; and now, as hauing forgotten that he had ſent a whole hoſt, to beſiege the Prophet in Dothan, ſends an honorable meſſenger to him, laden with the burden of fortie Camels, to conſult with this Oracle, concerning his ſickneſſe, and recouery.

This Syrian belike in his diſtreſſe dares not truſt to his owne gods; but hauing had good proofe of the power of the God of Iſrael, both in Naamans cure, and in the miraculous defeats of his greateſt forces, is glad to ſend to that ſeruant of God, whom he had perſecuted. Wicked men are not the ſame in health and in ſickneſſe: their affliction is worthy of the thankes, if they be well minded; not themſelues.

Doubtleſſe the errand of Benhadad was not onely to inquire of the iſſue of his diſeaſe, but to require the prayers of the Prophet for a good iſſue: Euen the worſt man doth ſo loue himſelfe, that he can be content to make a beneficiall vſe of thoſe inſtruments, whoſe goodneſſe he hateth.

Hazael the chiefe Peere of Syria is deſigned to this meſſage; The wealth of his preſent ſtriues with the humilitie of his carriage, and ſpeech: Thy ſonne Benhadad King of Syria hath ſent me to thee, ſaying, Shall I recouer of this diſeaſe? Not long ſince, Ichoram King of Iſrael had ſaid to Eliſha, My father, ſhall I ſmite them; aud now Benhadad King of Syria, ſayes, My father ſhall I recouer: Loe how this poore Meholathite hath Kings to his ſonnes: How great is the honour of Gods Prophets with Pagans, with Princes? Who can be but confounded to ſee Euangelicall Prophets deſpiſed by the meaneſt Chriſtians.

It is more then a ſingle anſwer that the Prophet returnes to this meſſage: One anſwer he giues to Benhadab, that ſent it; another he giues to Hazael, that brings it: That to Benhadad, is, Thou maiſt ſurely recouer; That to Hazael, The Lord hath ſhewed me that he ſhall ſurely die: What ſhall we ſay then? Is there a lye, or an equiuocation in the holy mouth of the Prophet? God forbid: It is one thing what ſhall be the nature and iſſue of the diſeaſe; Another thing what may outwardly befall the perſon of Benhadad: The queſtion is moued of the former; whereto the anſwer is direct; The diſeaſe is not mortall; But withall an intimation is giuen to the bearer, of an euent beyond the reach of his demand; which he may know, but either needs not, or may not returne: The Lord hath ſhowed me that I ſhall ſurely dye; by another meanes, though not by the diſeaſe.

The Seer of God deſcries more in Hazael, then he could ſee in himſelfe; he fixes his eyes therefore ſtedfaſtly in the Syrians face, as one that in thoſe lines read the bloudy ſtory of his life.

Hazael bluſhes, Eliſha weepes, The intention of thoſe eyes did not ſo much amaze Hazael, as the teares; As yet he was not guiltie to himſelfe of any wrong that might ſtraine out this iuyce of ſorrow; Why weepeth my Lord.

The Prophet feares not to foretell Hazael all the villanies which he ſhould once do to Iſrael; How he ſhould fire their forts, and kill their yong men, and rip the mothers, and daſh their children. I maruell not now at the teares of thoſe eyes which foreſaw this miſerable vaſtation of the inheritance of God; The verie mention whereof is abhorred of the future author: What is thy ſeruant a dog, that I ſhould do this great thing? They are ſauage cruelties whereof thou ſpeakeſt; It were more fit for me to weepe that thou ſhouldeſt repute me ſo brutiſh; I ſhould no leſſe condemne my ſelfe for a beaſt, if I could ſuſpect my owne degeneration ſo farre. Wicked men are caried into thoſe heights of impietie, which they could not in their good mood haue poſſibly beleeued; Nature is ſubiect to fauorable opinions of it ſelfe; and will rather miſtruſt a Prophet of God, then her owne good diſpoſition: How many from honeſt beginnings, haue riſen to incredible licentiouſneſſe, whoſe liues are now ſuch, that it were as hard for a man to beleeue they had euer beene good, as to haue perſwaded them once they ſhould proue ſo deſperately ill.

To giue ſome ouertute vnto Hazael of the oportunitie of this enſuing miſchiefe; the Prophet foretells him from God, that he ſhall be the King of Syria.

He that ſhewes the euent, doth not appoint the meanes; Farre was it from the ſpirit of Gods Prophet to ſet, or encourage a treaſon: whiles he ſaid therefore, Thou ſhalt be King of Syria; he ſaid not, Goe home, and kill thy Maſter: The wicked ambition of Hazael drawes this damnable concluſion out of holy premiſes; and now hauing fed the hopes of his Soueraigne with the expectation of recouery; the next day he ſmothers his Maſter. The impotent deſire of rule brookes no delay: Had not Hazael beene graceleſly cruell, after he had receiued this prediction of the Seer, he ſhould haue patiently awaited for the crowne of Syria, till lawfull meanes had ſet it vpon his head; now, he will by a cloſe execution make way to the throne; A wet cloth hath ſtopt the mouth of his ſicke Soueraigne; No noyſe is heard; the carcaſſe is faire; who can complaine of any thing but the diſeaſe?

O Hazael, thou ſhalt not thus eaſily ſtop the mouth of thine owne conſcience; that ſhall call thee Traytor, euen in thy chaire of ſtate; and ſhall checke all thy royall triumphes, with, Thou haſt founded thy throne in bloud. I am deceiued if this wet cloth ſhall not wipe thy lips in thy iollieſt feaſts, and make thy beſt morſells vnſauorie: Soueraignitie is painefull vpon the faireſt termes; but vpon treacherie, and murder, tormenting: Wofull is the caſe of that man whoſe publike cares are aggrauated with priuate guiltineſſe; and happie is he, that can inioy a little with the peace of an honeſt heart.

IEHV with IEHORAM and IEZEBEL.

YEt Hazael began his crueltie with loſſe: Ramoth Gilead is won from him; Iehoram the ſonne hath recouered that, which Ahab his father attempted in vaine; That Citie was dear-bought of Iſrael; it coſt the life of Ahab, the bloud of Iehoram; Thoſe wounds were healed with victorie; The King tends his health at Iezreel, whiles the Captaines were enioying, and ſeconding their ſucceſſe at Ramoth. 2. Kings 9.

Old Eliſha hath neither cottage nor foote of land, yet ſitting in an obſcure corner he giues order for Kingdomes; Nor by way of authoritie (this vſurpation had beene no leſſe proud, then vniuſt) but by way of meſſage, from the God of kings; Euen a meane Herald may go on a great errand: The Prophets of the Goſpell haue nothing to do but with ſpirituall Kingdomes; To beate downe the kingdomes of ſinne and Satan; to tranſlate ſoules to the Kingdome of heauen.

He that renewed the life of the Shunamites ſonne, muſt ſtoope to age; That blocke lies in his way to Iehu; The aged Prophet imployes a ſpeedier meſſenger, who muſt alſo gird vp his loynes, for haſte: No common pace will ſerue vs when we go on Gods meſſage; The very loſſe of minutes may be vnrecouerable. This great Seer of God well ſaw a preſent concurrence of all oportunities: The Captaines of the Hoſt were then readily combined for this exploit: the Armie was on foote; Iehoram abſent; a ſmall delay might haue troubled the worke; the diſperſion of the Captaines, and Hoſt, or the preſence of the King, might either haue defeated, or ſlacked the diſpatch: He is prodigall of his ſucceſſe, that is ſlow in his execution.

The directions of Eliſha to the yong Prophet, are full, and punctuall. whether to go; what to carrie; what to do; where to do it; what to ſay, what ſpeede to make, in his act, in his returne: In the buſineſſes of God it matters not how little is left to our diſcretion; There is no important buſineſſe of the Almightie, wherein his precepts are not ſtrict, and expreſſe; Looke how much more ſpecialtie there is in the charge of God, ſo much more danger is in the violation,

The young Prophet is curiouſly obedient; in his haſte; in his obſeruation and carriage: and finding Iehu, according to Eliſhaes prediction, ſet amongſt the Captaines of the Hoſt, he ſingles him forth, by a reuerent compellation; I haue an errand to thee, O Captaine; Might not the Prophet haue ſtayed till the table had riſen, and then haue followed Iehu to his lodging? Surely, the wiſedome of God hath purpoſely pitcht vpon this ſeaſon, that the publique view of a ſacred meſſenger, and the haſtie euocation of ſo noted a perſon, to ſuch a ſecrecie, mightpredare the hearts of thoſe Commanders of Iſrael, to the expectation of ſome great deſigne.

The inmoſt-roome is but cloſe enough for this act; Ere many houres, all Iſrael ſhall know that, which yet may not be truſted with one eye; The goodneſſe of God makes wiſe prouiſion for the ſafetie of his meſſengers, and whiles he employes their ſeruice, preuents their dangers.

But how is it that of all the Kings of the Ten tribes, none was euer anointed but Iehu? Is it for that the God, who would not countenance the erection of that vſurped throne, would countenance the alteration? Or is it, that by this viſible teſtimonie of diuine ordination, the courage of the Iſraelitiſh Captaines might be raiſed vp to ſecond the high and bold attempt of him, whom they ſaw deſtin'd from heauen to rule?

Together with the oyle of this vnction, here was a charge of reuenge; A reuenge of the bloud of the Prophets, vpon Iezebel; of wickedneſſe and Idolatry, vpon Ahab: neither was the extirpation of this lewd family fore-propheſied onely to Iehu, but inioyned.

Elija foretold, and the world expected ſome feareful account of the abhominable crueltie, and impietie of that accurſed houſe; Now it is called for, when it ſeemed forgotten: Ahab ſhall haue no poſteritie, Iezebel ſhall haue no toomb, but the doggs. This wofull doome is committed to Iehues execution.

Oh the ſure, though patient, iuſtice of the Almightie: not onely Ahab and Iezebel had beene bloudie, and idolatrous, but Iſrael was drawne into the partnerſhip of their crimes; All theſe ſhall ſhare in the iudgement: Elijahs complaint in the caue now receiues this late anſwer Hazael ſhall plague Iſrael; Iehu ſhall plague the houſe of Ahab and Iezebel; Eliſhaes ſeruant thus ſeconds Eliſhaes Maſter: When wickedneſſe is ripe in the field, God will not let it ſheed to grow againe, but cuts it vp by a iuſt, and ſeaſonable vengeance: Ahabs drouping vnder the threat hath put off the iudgement from his owne dayes; now it comes, and ſweepes away his wife, his iſſue; and falls heauie vpon his ſubiects. Pleaſe your ſelues, O ye vaine ſinners, in the ſlow pace of vengeance; it will be neither leſſe certaine, nor more eaſie for the delay; rather it were to pay for that leaſure in the extremitie.

The Prophet hath done his errand, and is gone. Iehu returnes to his fellowes, with his head not more wet with oyle, then buſied with thoughts: no doubt, his face bewrayed ſome inward tumults, and diſtractions of imagination; neither ſeem'd hee to returne the ſame he went out. They aske therefore, Is all well? Wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? The Prophets of God were to theſe idolatrous Iſraelites, like comets; who were neuer ſeene without the portendement of a miſchiefe: When the prieſt of their Baal were quietly ſacrificing, all was well; but now when a Prophet of God comes in ſight, their guiltineſſe askes, Is all well? All would bee well but for their ſinnes; they feare not theſe, they feare their reprouer.

Iſrael was come to a good paſſe, when the Prophets of God went with them for mad men: Oh ye Baalitiſh Ruffians, whither hath your impietie and profaneneſſe caried you, that ye ſhould thus blaſpheme the ſeruants of the liuing God? Ye that run on madding after vaine Idols, taxe the the ſober guides of true worſhip, for madneſſe. Thus it becomes the godleſſe enemies of truth, the heralds of our patience, to miſ-call our innocence, to reuile our moſt holy profeſſion: What wonder is it that Gods meſſengers are mad men vnto thoſe, to whom the wiſedome of God is fooliſhneſſe?

The meſſage was not deliuered to Iehu for a concealement, but for publication: Silence could not effect the word that was told him; common notice muſt; Yee know the man, and his communication: The habit ſhowes you the man; the calling ſhowes you his errand: Euen Prophets were diſtinguiſhed by their clothes; Their mantle was not the common weare; why ſhould not this ſacred vocation be knowne by a peculiar attyre? Theſe Captaines had not calld him a mad-man, if they had not knowne him a Prophet: By the man therefore they might gueſſe at his meſſage; Prophets do not vſe to appeare, but vpon ſerious errands; whether of reproofe, or of prediction.

Nice ciuilities of denialls were not then knowne to the world; They ſaid, It is falſe, tell vs now: Amongſt theſe Captaines no combat, no vnkindneſſe followes vpon a word ſo rudely familiar.

Iehu needs not tell them, that the man was a Prophet; he tels them the propheſie of the man; what he had ſaid, whet he had done.

Their eyes had no ſooner ſeene the oyle; their eares had no ſooner heard, Thus ſaith the Lord, I haue anointed thee King ouer Iſrael, then they riſe from their ſeates, as rapt with a tempeſt, and are hurled into armes; So do they haſte to proclaime Iehu, that they ſcarce ſtay to ſnatch vp their garments, which they had perhaps left behind them for ſpeed, had they not meant with theſe rich abiliments to garniſh a ſtate for their new Soueraigne; To whom hauing now erected an extemporall Throne, they do by the ſound of Trumpets giue the ſtile of Royaltie, Iehu is King.

So much credit hath that mad fellow with theſe gallants of Iſrael, that vpon his word they will preſently aduenture their liues, and change the Crowne. God giues a ſecret authoritie to his deſpiſed ſeruants; ſo as they which hate their perſon, yet reuerence their truth: Euen very ſcorners cannot but beleeue them; If when the Prophets of the Goſpell tell vs of a ſpirituall Kingdome, they be diſtruſted of thoſe which profeſſe to obſerue them, how ſhamefull is the diſproportion? how iuſt ſhall their iudgement be?

Yet I cannot ſay whether meere obedience to the Prophet, or perſonall diſlikes of Iehoram, or partiall reſpects to Iehu, drew the Captaines of Iſrael; The will of God may be done thankeleſly, when fulfilling the ſubſtance, we faile of the intention, and erre in circumſtance.

Onely Ramoth is conſcious of this ſudden Inauguration; This new princedome yet reaches no further then the ſound of the trumpet: Iehu is no leſſe ſubtile, then valiant; he knew that the notice of this inexpected change might worke a buſie, and dangerous reſiſtance; he therefore giues order that no meſſenger of the newes may preuent his perſonall execution, that ſo he might ſurpriſe Iehoram in his palace of Izreel, whether tending his late wounds, or ſecurely feaſting his friends, and dreaming of nothing leſſe then danger; and might be ſeene, and felt at once. Secreſie is the ſafeſt gard of any deſigne; diſcloſed proiects are either fruſtrated, or made needleſly difficult.

Neither is Iehu more cloſe, then ſwift; That verie trumpet with the ſame wind ſounds his march; from the toppe of the ſtaires, he ſteps downe into his charet; That man meanes to ſpeed, who can be at once reſerued in his counſels, and reſolute and quicke in his performances.

Who could but pity the vnhappy and vnſeaſonable viſitation of the grand-child of Iehoſaphat, were it not that he was degenerate into the family of Ahab? Ahaziah King of Iudah is comne to viſite Iehoram King of Iſrael; the knowledge of his late receiued wounds hath drawne thither this kind ill-matched allie: Hee who was partner of the warre, cannot but be a viſitor of the wounds.

The two Kings are in the height of their complement, and entertainements, when the watch-man of the Tower of Izreel eſpies a troupe, a farre off. For ought was knowne, there was nothing but peace in all the Land of Iſrael; and Iudah was now ſo combined with it, that both their Kings were feaſting vnder one roofe; yet, in the midſt of this ſuppoſed ſafetie, the watch-tower is not vnfurniſhed with heedie eyes: No ſecuritie of peace can free wiſe Gouernors from a carefull ſuſpition of what may come, and a prouidence againſt the worſt. Euen whiles we know of no enemies, the watch-tower of due intelligence may not be emptie.

In vaine are dangers fore-ſeene, if they bee not premoniſhed; It is all one to haue a blind and a mute watch-man; This ſpeakes what he ſees; I ſee a companie.

Doubtleſſe Iehorams head was, now full of thoughts; neither knew he what conſtruction to put vpon this approching troupe; Perhaps, the Syrians (hee thinkes) may haue recouered Ramoth; and chaſed the gariſon of Iſrael; neither can he imagine whether theſe ſhould be hoſtile victors, or vanquiſhed ſubiects, or conſpiring rebells. Euery way this rout was dreadfull. Oh Iehoram, thou beginſt thy feares too late; Hadſt thou beene afraid to prouoke the God of Iſrael, thine innocencie had yeelded no roome to theſe terrors.

An horſeman is diſpatcht to diſcouer the meaning of this deſcried concourſe: He meets them, and inquires of peace; but receiues a ſhort anſwer. What haſt thou to do with peace? turne thee behind me? A ſecond is addreſſed; with the ſame ſucceſſe: Both attend the traine of Iehu in ſtead of returning; Indeed, it is not for priuate perſons to hope to rectifie the publike affaires, when they are growne to an height of diſorder, and from thence to a ripeneſſe of miſ-carriage: Sooner may a well-meaning man hurt himſelfe, then redreſſe the common danger.

Theſe meſſengers were now within the mercy of a multitude, had they but indeuored to retire, they had periſhed as wilfully, as vainely: Whoſoeuer will bee ſtriuing againſt the torrent of a iuſt iudgement, muſt needs be carried downe in the ſtreame: Sometimes there is as much wiſedome in yeelding, as courage in reſiſtance.

Had this troupe beene farre off, the watchman could not haue deſcried the arriuall of the meſſengers, their turning behind, the manner of the march; Iehu was a noted Captaine, his carriage and motion was obſerued more full of fire, then his fellowes; The driuing is like Iehues, for he driueth furiouſly: God makes choyce of fit inſtruments, as of mercie, ſo of reuenge; Theſe ſpirits were needfull for ſo tragicall a ſcene, as was now preparing in Iſrael.

Iehoram and Ahaziah, as netled with this forced patience of expectation, can no longer keepe their ſeates, but will needs haſten their charets; and fetch that coſtly ſatisfaction, which would not be ſent, but giuen.

They are infatuated, which ſhall periſh; otherwiſe Iehoram had beene warned enough by the forceable retention of his meſſengers, to expect none but an enemie. A friend, or a ſubiect could not haue beene vnwilling to be knowne, to be lookt for; Now, forgetting his wounds, he will go to fetch death.

Yet when he ſees Iehu, whom hee left a ſubiect, hopes ſtriue with his doubts, Is it peace, Iehu? what may be the reaſon of this ſudden iourney? Is the army foyled by the Syrians? Is Ramoth recouered? or hath the flight of the enemie left thee no further worke? or is ſome other ill newes guiltie of thy haſte? What meanes this vnwiſhed preſence, and returne?

There needs no ſtay for an anſwer; the verie face of Iehu, and thoſe ſparkling eyes of his ſpake furie, and death to Iehoram; which yet his tongue angerly ſeconds: What peace, ſo long as the whordomes of thy mother Iezebel, and her witchcrafts are ſo many?

Wicked Tyrant, what ſpeak'ſt thou of peace with men, when thou haſt thus long waged warre with the Almightie? That curſed mother of thine hath nurſed thee with bloud, and trained thee vp in abominable Idolatries.

Thou art not more hers, then her ſinne is thine; thou art polluted with her ſpirituall whoredomes, and inchanted with her helliſh witchcrafts: Now that juſt God whom thou, and thy parents haue ſo hainouſly deſpited, ſends thee by me this laſt meſſage of his vengeance; which whiles he ſpake, his hand is drawing vp that deadly arrow, which ſhall cure the former wounds with a worſe.

Too late now doth wretched Iehoram turne his charet, & flee; and crie Treaſon, O Ahaziah; There was treaſon before, O Iehoram; thy treaſon againſt the Maieſtie of God, is now reuenged by the treaſon of Iehu againſt thee.

That fatall ſhaft, notwithſtanding the ſwift pace of both the charets, is directed to the heart of Iehoram; there is no erring of thoſe feathers which are guided by the hand of deſtinie.

How iuſt are the iudgements of God! It was in the field of Naboth, wherein Iehoram met with Iehu; That very ground called to him for bloud; And now this new auenger remembers that propheſie which he heard from the mouth of Elijah, in that very place, following the heeles of Ahab; and is carefull to performe it. Little did Iehu thinke, when he heard that meſſage of Elijah, that his hands ſhould act it; now, as zealous of accompliſhing the word of a Prophet; he giues charge to Bidkar his Captaine, that the bleeding carkaſſe of Iehoram ſhould bee caſt vpon that verie plat of Naboth: Oh Naboths bloud well paid for! Ahabs bloud is licked by dogs, in the very place where thoſe dogs lickt Naboths; Iehorams bloud ſhall manure that ground, which was wrung from Naboth; and Iezebel ſhall adde to this compoſt. Oh garden of hearbes dearely bought, royally dunged.

What a reſemblance there is betwixt the death of the father, and the ſonne; Ahab and Iehoram? Both are ſlaine in their charet; Both with an arrow; Both repay their bloud to Naboth; and how perfit is this retaliation? Not onely Naboth miſcaried in that cruell iniuſtice, but his ſonnes alſo; elſe the inheritance of the vineyard had deſcended to his heires, notwithſtanding his pretended offence; and now not onely Ahab forfeits his bloud to this field, but his ſonne Iehoram alſo: Face doth not more anſwet to face, then puniſhment to ſinne.

It was time for Ahaziah King of Iuda, to flee: Nay it had beene time long before to haue fled from the ſinnes, yea from the houſe of Ahab; That brand is fearefull which God ſets vpon him; He did euill in the ſight of the Lord as did the houſe of Ahab; for he was the ſonn in law of the houſe of Ahab; Affinitie is too often guilty of corruption; The ſonne of good Iehoſaphat is loſt in Ahabs daughter.

2. Kings 27.

Now he payes for his kind alliance; accompanying the ſonne of Ahab in his death, whom he conſorted with in his Idolatrie: Yong Ahaziah was ſcarce warme in his throne, when the miſ-matched bloud of Athaliah is required from him; Nothing is more daugerous then to be imped in a wicked family; this relation too often drawes in a ſhare both of ſinne and puniſhment.

Who would not haue lookt that Iezebel hearing of this bloudie end of her ſon; and purſuit of her allie; and the fearefull proceedings of this proſperous conſpiracie, ſhould haue put her ſelfe into ſack-cloth and aſhes; and now finding no meanes either of defence, or eſcape, ſhould haue caſt her ſelfe into ſuch a poſture of humiliation, as might haue moued the compaſſion of Iehu; Her proud heart could not ſuddenly learne to ſtoope: rather ſhe recollects her high ſpirits, and in ſtead of humbling her ſoule by repentance, and addreſſing her ſelfe for an imminent death; ſhe prankes vp her old carkaſſe, and paints her wrinkled face, and as one that vainely hopes to daunt the courage of an vſurper, by the ſudden beames of Maieſtie, ſhe lookes out, and thinkes to fright him with the challenge of a traitor, whoſe either mercie, or iuſtice could not be auoided: Extremitie findes vs ſuch as our peace leaues vs; Our laſt thoughts are ſpent vpon that we care moſt for; thoſe that haue regarded their face more then their ſoule, in their latter end are more taken vp with deſire of ſeeming faire, then being happie: It is no maruell if an heart obdured with the cuſtome of ſinne ſhut vp graceleſly. Counterfeit beautie agrees well with inward vncleanneſſe.

Iehues reſolution was too ſtrongly ſetled to be remoued with a painted face, or an opprobrious tongue; He lookes vp to the window, and ſayes, Who is on my ſide, who? There want not thoſe euery where, which will be readie to obſerue preuailing greatneſſe: Two or three Eunuchs looke out; he bids them, Throw her downe: They inſtantly lay hold on their lately-adored Miſtris, and notwithſtanding all her ſhricks and prayers, caſt her downe headlong into the ſtreet.

What heed is to be taken of the deepe profeſſed ſeruices of hollow-hearted followers; Al this while they haue humble with ſmiles, & officious deuotions fawned vpon their great Queene; now vpon the call of a proſperous enemie they forget their reſpects, her royaltie; and caſt her downe, as willing executioners, into the iawes of a fearefull death: It is hard for greatneſſe to know them whom it may truſt: Perhaps the faireſt ſemblance is from the falſeſt heart; It was a iuſt plague of God vpon wicked Iezebel, that ſhe was inwardly hated of her owne; He whoſe ſeruants ſhe perſecuted, raiſed vp enemies to her from her owne elbow.

Thus muſt pride fall; Inſolent, idolatrous, cruell Iezebel beſprinkles the walls, and pauement with her bloud; and now thoſe braines that deuiſed miſchiefe againſt the ſeruants of God, are ſtrawed vpon the ſtones; and ſhe that inſulted vpon the Prophets, is trampled vpon by the horſes heeles: The wicked is kept for the day deſtruction, and ſhall be brought forth to the day of wrath. Iobe 21.

Death puts an end commonly to the higheſt diſpleaſure. He that was ſeuere in the execution of the liuing, is mercifull in the ſepulture of the dead; Goe ſee now this curſed woman, and burie her, for ſhe is a Kings daughter; She that vpbraided Iehu with the name of Zimri, ſhall be interred by Iehu as Omries daughter in law, as a Sydonian Princeſſe; Somewhat muſt be yeelded to humanitie; ſomewhat to State.

The dogs haue preuented Iehu in this purpoſe, and haue giuen her a liuing toomb more ignoble, then the worſt of the earth; Onely the ſcull, hands, and feete of that vaniſhed carkaſſe yet remaine; The ſcull which was the roofe 2. Kings 9.
of all her wicked deuices, the hands and feete which were the executioners; theſe ſhall remaine as the monuments of thoſe ſhamefull exequies: that future times ſeeing theſe fragments of a body, might ſay, the dogges were worthy of the reſt; Thus Iezebel is turned to dung, and dogges meat;
Elijah is verified, Naboth is reuen-ged! Izreel is purged, Iehu is zealous, and in all,
God is iuſt.

IEHV

IEHV killing the ſonnes of AHAB, and the Prieſts of BAAL.

2. Kings 10.

THere were two prime Cities of the Ten Tribes, which were the ſet Courts of the Kingdome of Iſrael; Samaria and Iezreel; The chiefe palace of the kingdome was Iezreel; the mother Citie of the Kingdome, was Samaria; Iehu is poſſeſſed of the one, without any ſword drawne againſt him; Iezreel willingly changes the maſter, yeelding it ſelfe to the victor of two Kings, to the auenger of Iezebel; the next care is Samaria; Eiher pollcie, or force ſhall fetch in that head of the Tribes.

The plentifull iſſue of Princes is no ſmall aſſurance to the people; Ahab had ſonnes enough to furniſh the Thrones of all the neighbour nations, to maintaine the hopes of ſucceſſion, to all times; How ſecure did he thinke the perpetuation of his poſteritie, when he ſaw ſeuentie ſons from his owne loynes? Neither was this Royall iſſue truſted, either to weake walls, or to one roofe; but to the ſtrong bulwarkes of Samaria, and therein to the ſeuerall guards of the chiefe Peeres; It was the wiſe care of their parents not to haue them obnoxious to the danger of a common miſ-cariage, or, of thoſe emulations which wait vpon the cloyedneſſe of an vndiuided conuerſation; but to order their ſeperation ſo, as one may reſcue others from the perill of aſſault, as one may reſpect other out of a familiar ſtrangeneſſe: Had Ahab and Iezebel beene as wiſe for their ſoules, as they were for their ſeed, both had proſpered.

Iehu is yet but in his firſt act; If all the ſonnes of Ahab bleed not, the propheſie is vnanſwered; There ſhall be no need of his ſword, his penne ſhall worke all this ſlaughter. He writes a Challenge to Samaria, and therein to the guardians of the ſons of Ahab; daring them, out of the confidence in their defenced Citie, in their charets, and horſes, in their aſſociats and armes, to ſet vp the beſt of their maſters ſonnes, on his fathers throne, and to fight for his ſucceſſion.

All the Gouernours of Ahabs children conſpire in one common feare; no doubt there wanted not in that numerous brood of Kings, ſome great ſpirits that if, at leaſt they attained to the notice of this deſigne, longed for a reuenge, and ſuggeſted counſels of reſolution to their cowardly guardians; Shall an audacious vſurper runne thus away with the Crowne of Iſrael? Shall the bloud of Iezebel bee thus traitrouſly ſpilt, thus willfully forgotten? O Iſraelites, can you be ſo baſe, as to be ruled by my fathers ſeruant? Where are the merits of Ahab, and Ieboram? What is become of the loyall courage of Iſrael? Doubtleſſe, ye ſhall not want able ſeconds to your valour; Do ye thinke the royall and potent alliances of our mother Iezebel, and the remaining heyres of Iudah, can draw backe their hands from your aide? Will they indure to ſwallow ſo cruell an indignitie? Stir vp your aſtoniſhed fortitude, O ye Nobles of Iſrael; redeeme your bleeding honour, reuenge this trecherous conſpirator, and eſtabliſh the right of the vndoubted heires of your Soueraignes; But as warme clothes to a dead man, ſo are the motions of valour to a fearefull heart: Behold two Kings ſtood not before him, how then ſhall we ſtand.

Feare affrights it ſelfe rather then it will want bugs of terror: It is true: Two Kings fell before Iehu; but, two Kings vnarmed, vnguarded; Had not the ſurprizall of Iehu taken aduantage of the vnſuſpitious nakedneſſe of theſe two Princes, his victorie had not beene thus ſucceſſefull, thus eaſie. Halfe one of thoſe two Kings, vpon aduertiſement and preparation, had abated the furie of that hot Leader. It is the faſhion of feare to repreſent vnto vs alwayes the worſt, in euery euent: not looking at the inequalitie of the aduantages, but the miſerie of the ſucceſſe: as contrarily, it is the guiſe of faith, and valour, by the good iſſue of one enterpriſe to raiſe vp the heart to an expectation and aſſurance of more.

Theſe mens hearts are dead with their Kings, neither dare entertaine the hope of a ſafe and proſperous reſiſtance, but baſely returne, We are thy ſeruants, and will do all that thou ſhalt bid vs, he will not make any King; doe thou that which is good in thine eyes.

Well may Iehu thinke, theſe men which are thus diſloyall to their charge, cannot be faithfull to me; It is their feare that drawes them to this obſeruation: Were they not cowards, they would not be traitors to their Princes, ſubiects to me: I may vſe their hands, but I will not truſt them: It is a thankleſſe obedience that is grounded vpon feare; there can be no true fidelitie without loue, and reuerence. Neither is it other betwixt God and vs; if out of a dread of hell we be officious, who ſhall thanke vs for theſe reſpects to our ſelues?

As one that had taſted alreadie the ſweetneſſe of a reſolute expedition, Iehu writes backe inſtantly, If ye be mine, and if ye will hearken vnto my voyce; take ye the heads of the men your Maſters ſonnes, and come to me to Iezreel to morrow this time. Valiant Iehu was ſo well acquainted with the nature of feare, that he well knew this paſſion once growne deſperate, would be readie to ſwallow all conditions: ſo farre therefore doth his wiſedome improue it, as to make theſe Peeres his executioners; who preſently vpon the receit of his charge turne cruell, and by a ioynt conſent fetch off the ſeuentie heads of thoſe Princes, whom they vndertooke to guard, whom they had flattered with the hopes of greater honour.

No doubt, but amongſt ſo many ſonnes of Ahab, ſome had ſo demeaned themſelues, that they had won zealous profeſſions of loue from their guardians: Except perhaps death ſtole vpon them in ſleepe, what teares, what intreaties, what coniurations muſt here needs haue beene?

What haue wee done, O ye Peeres of Iſrael, that might deſerue this bloudie meaſure? We are the ſonnes of Ahab, therefore haue ye hitherto profeſſed to obſerue vs; what change is this? why ſhould that which hath hitherto kept you loyall, now make you cruell? Iſ this the reward of the long peaceable gouernement of of our father? are theſe the Trophees of Ahabs victories againſt Benhadad, Iehorams againſt Hazael? If wee may not raigne, yet at leaſt, let vs liue: Or if wee muſt die; why will your hands be imbrued in that bloud, which ye had wont to terme royall, and ſacred? Why will ye of Tutors turne murtherers? All pleas are in vaine to them that are deafned with their owne feares. Perhaps theſe expoſtulations might haue fetched ſome dewes of pitie from the eyes, and kiſſes from the lips of theſe vnfaithfull Tutors, but cannot preuent the ſtroke of death; Theſe Crocodiles weepe vpon thoſe, whom they muſt kill: and if their owne ſonnes had beene in the place of Ahabs, doubtleſſe they had beene ſacrificed to the will of an vſurper, to the parents ſafetie: It is ill relying vpon timorous natures; vpon euery occaſion thoſe crazie reeds will breake, and runne into our hands. How worthy were Ahab and Iezebel of ſuch friends? They had beene euer falſe to God, how ſhould men be true to them? They had ſould themſelues to worke wickedneſſe, and now they are requited with a mercenarie fidelitie: for a few lines haue theſe men ſold all the heads of Ahabs poſteritie: could euer the policy of Iezebel haue reacht ſo farre, as to ſuſpect the poſſibilitie of the extirpation of ſo ample an iſſue in one night, by the hands of her truſtieſt ſubiects?

Now ſhe that by her letter ſent to the Elders of Iezreel, ſhed the bloud of Naboth and his ſonnes, hath the bloud of all her ſonnes ſhed by a letter ſent from Iezerel to the Elders of Samaria. At laſt, God will be ſure to come out of the debt of wicked ſinners, and will pay them with that coyne, which is both moſt proper, and leaſt lookt for.

Early in the morning, in that gate of Iezreel where Ahab had paſſed many an vniuſt ſentence, is preſented vnto Iehu, the fearefull pledge of his ſoueraigntie, ſeuentie gaſtly heads of the ſonnes of Ahab.

Some carnall eye that had ſeene ſo many young and ſmooth faces beſmeared with bloud, would haue melted into compaſſion, bemoning their harmeleſſe age, their vntimely end: It is not for the iuſtice of God to ſtand at the barre of our corrupted iudgement. Except we include ſome grandchildren of Ahab within this number, none of theſe died before they were ſeaſoned with horrible Idolatrie; or if they had, they were in the loynes of Ahab when he ſold himſelfe to worke wickedneſſe; and now it is iuſt with God to puniſh Ahabs wickedneſſe in this fruit of his loynes. The holy ſeueritie of God in the reuenge of ſinne ſometimes goes ſo farre that our ignorance is readie to miſtake it for crueltie.

The wonder and horror of thoſe two heapes hath eaſily drawne together the people of Iezreel: Iehu meets them in that ſeat of publique iudgement; and finding much amazedneſſe and paſſionate confuſion in their faces; he cleares them, and ſends them to the true originall of theſe ſudden and aſtoniſhing maſſacres.

Howeuer his owne conſpiracie, and the cowardly treacherie of the Princes of Iſrael had beene (not without their hainous ſinne) the viſible meanes of this iudgement, yet he directs their eyes to an higher authoritie; the iuſt decree of the Almightie, manifeſted by his ſeruant Eliiah; who euen by the willing ſinnes of men can moſt wiſely, moſt hoſtilely fetch about his moſt righteous and bleſſed purpoſes.

If the Peeres of Samaria out of a baſe feare, if Iehu out of an ambition of raigning ſhed the foule bloud of Ahabs poſteritie; the ſinne is their owne, but in the meane time the act is no other then what the infinite iuſtice of God would iuſtly worke by their miſ-intentions. Let theſe Iſraelites but looke vp from earth to heauen, theſe tragicall changes cannot trouble them; thither Iehu ſends them; wiping off the enuie of all this bloud, by the warrant of the diuine preordination: In obedience whereunto he ſends after theſe heires of Ahab, all his kinsfolkes, fauorites, prieſts that remained in Iezreel: and now hauing cleared theſe coaſts, he haſts to Samaria: whom ſhould he meet with, in the way, but the brethren of Ahaziah, King of Iudah; they are going to viſit their cozens the ſonnes of Ahab: This young troupe was thinking of nothing but iollitie, and courtly entertainement, when they meet with death: So ſuddenly, ſo ſecretly had Iehu diſpatched theſe bold executions, that theſe Princes could imagine no cauſe of ſuſpition: How could they thinke it might be dangerous to be knowne for the brethren of Ahaziah, or friends to the brethren of Ieboram? The iuſt prouidence of the Almightie hath brought all this couie vnder one net; Iehu thinkes it not ſafe to let go ſo many auengers of Ahaziahs bloud; ſo many corriuals of his Soueraigntie. The vnhappie affinitie of Iehoſophat with Ahab is no leſſe guiltie of this ſlaughter, then Iehues ambition; This match by the inoculation of one bud, hath tainted all the ſap of the houſe of Iudah. The two and fortie brethren of Ahaziah are therefore ſent after the ſeuentie ſonnes of Ahab; that they may ouertake them in death, whom they came to viſit; God will much leſſe brooke Idolatrie from the loines of a Iehoſophat: Our entireneſſe with wicked men feoffes vs both in their ſinnes and iudgements.

Doubtleſſe, many Iſraelites that were deuoted to the family and allies of Ahab, lookt (what they durſt) awry at this common effuſion of royall bloud; yet in the worſt of the deprauedneſſe of Iſrael, there were ſome which both drouped vnder the deplored Idolatry of the times, and congratulated to Iehu this ſeuere vindication of Gods inheritance: Amongſt the reſt, Ionadab the ſonne of Rechab was moſt eminent. That man was by deſcent deriued from Iethro; a Midianite by nation, but incorporated into Iſrael; a man, whoſe pietie, and ſtrict conuerſation did both teach, and ſhame thoſe twelue Tribes to which he was ioyned; Hee was the author of an auſtere rule of ciuilitie to his proſteritie; to whom he debarred the vſe of wine, cities, poſſeſſions: This old and rough friend of Iehu, (out of his mouing habitations) meets him, and applauds his ſucceſſe; He that allowed not wine to his ſeed, allowes the bloud of Ahabs ſeed poured out, by the hand of Iehu; He that ſhun'd the citie, is carried in Iehues charet, to the palace of Samaria.

How eaſily might Iehu haue beene deceiued? Many a one profeſſes vprightneſſe, who yet is all guile: Ionadabs carriage hath beene ſuch, that his word merits truſt: It is a bleſſing vpon the plaine-hearted, that they can be beleeued. Honeſt Ionadab is admitted to the honor of Iehues ſeat; and called (in ſtead of manie) to witneſſe the zeale of the new annointed King of Iſrael.

Whiles Iehu had to do with Kings, his cunning and his courage held equall pace together; but now that he is to deale with idolatrous prieſts, his wile goes alone, and preuailes: He calls the people together, and diſſembling his intentions, ſayes, Ahab ſerued Baal a little, but Iehu ſhall ſerue him much: Now therefore call vnto me all the Prophets of Baal, all his ſeruants, and all his prieſts, let none bee wanting: for I haue a great ſacrifice to doe to Baal: whoſoeuer ſhall be wanting, hee ſhall not liue.

What a dead paleneſſe was there now in the faces of thoſe few true-hearted Iſraelites, that looked for an happie reſtauration of the Religion of God? How could they chooſe but thinke; Alas, how are we fallen from our hopes? Is this the change we lookt for? was it onely ambition that hath ſet this edge vpon the ſword of Iehu? It was not the perſon of Ahab that we diſliked but the ſinnes: If thoſe muſt ſtill ſucceed; what haue we gained? Woe be to vs, if onely the author of our miſerie be changed, not the condition, not the cauſe of our miſery.

On the other ſide, what inſultations and triumphs ſounded euery where of the ioyfull Baalites? what glorying of the truth of their profeſſion, becauſe of the ſucceſſe? what ſcornes of their deiected oppoſites? what exprobrations of the diſappointed hopes, and predictions of their aduerſe Prophets? what promiſes to themſelues of a perpetuitie of Baaliſme? How did the diſperſed prieſts of Baal now flocke together, and applaud each others happineſſe, and magnifie the deuotions of their new Soueraigne? Neuer had that Idoll ſo glorious a day as this for the pompe of his ſeruice; Before, hee was adored ſinglely in corners, now ſolemne ſacrifices ſhall be offered to him by all his clients, in the great Temple of the mother Citie of Iſrael. I can commend the zeale of Iehu, I cannot commend the fraud of Iehu; We may come to our end euen by crooked wayes: He that bad him to ſmite for him, did not bid him to lie for him: Falſehood, though it bee but tentatiue, is neither needed, nor approued by the God of truth: If policy haue allowed officious vntruths, Religion neuer.

By this deuice, the houſe of Baal is well furniſhed, well filled; not one of his Chemarim either might, or would be abſent: not one of thoſe which were preſent, might be vnrobed: Falſe Gods haue euer affected to imitate the true. Euen Baal hath Temples, Alters, Prieſts, veſtments: All religions haue allotted peculiar habits to their higheſt douotions. Thoſe Veſtments which they miſ-called ſacred are brought forth, and put on for the glorie of this ſeruice.

Iehu and Ionadab are firſt carefull that this ſeparation be exact; they ſearch, and ſee that no ſeruant of the Lord be crept in to that throng: What ſhould a religious Iſraelite do in the Temple of Baal? Were any ſuch there, hee had deſerued their ſmart, who would partake with their worſhip; but if curioſity ſhould haue drawne any thither, the mercy of Iehu ſeekes his reſcue: How much more fauorable is the God of mercies in not taking aduantage of our infirmities.

Well might this ſearch haue bred ſuſpition, were it not that in all thoſe Idolatrous ſacrifices, the firſt care was to auoid the profane: Euen Baal would admit no mixture, how ſhould the true God abide it.

Nothing wanted now, but the ſacrifice: No doubt whole heards and flockes were readie for a pretence of ſome royall hecatombs; whereof ſome had now alreadie ſmoked on their Altars. O Iehu what meanes this dilation? If thou abhorreſt Baal, why didſt thou giue way to this laſt ſacrifice? why didſt thou not cut off theſe Idolaters before this vpſhot of their wickedneſſe? Was it that thou mightſt be ſure of their guiltineſſe? Was it that thier number, together with their ſinne, might be compleate? What acclamations were here to Baal, what ioy in the freedome of their reuiued worſhip: When all on the ſudden, thoſe that had ſacrificed, are ſacrificed; The Souldiers of Iehu by his appointment ruſh in with their ſwords drawne, and turne the temple into a ſlaughter-houſe. How is the tune now changed? What ſhricking was here? what out-cries? what running from one ſword, to the edge of another? what ſcrambling vp the walls and pillars? what climbing into the windowes? what vaine indeuors to eſcape that death which would not be ſhunned? whether running, or kneeling' or proſtrate, they muſt die.

The firſt part of the ſacrifice was Baals, the latter is Gods: The bloud of beaſts was offered in the one, of men in the other; the ſhedding of this was ſo much more acceptable to God, by how much theſe men were more beaſts, then thoſe they ſacrificed. Oh happie obedience; God was pleaſed with a ſacrifice from the houſe of Baal; The Idolaters are ſlaine, the Idols burnt, the houſe of Baal turn'd to a draught (tho euen thus leſſe vncleane, leſſe noyſome, then in the former perfumes;) and in one word, Baal is deſtroyed out of Iſrael.

Who that had ſeene all this zeale for God, would not haue ſaid; Iehu is a true Iſraelite. Yet, hee that rooted out Ahab, would not be rid of Ieroboam: He that deſtroyed Baal, maintained the two Calues of Dan and Bethel. That Idolatrie was of a lower ranke; as being a miſ-worſhip of the true God, whereas the other was a worſhip of the falſe: Euen the eaſier of both is hainous; and ſhall rob Iehu of the praiſe of his vprightneſſe.

A falſe heart may laudably quit it ſelfe of ſome one groſſe ſinne, and in the meane time hugge ſome leſſer euill, that may condemne it: As a man recouerd of a Feuer,, may die of a Iaundis, or a Dropſie. Wee looſe the thanke of all, if we wilfully fault in one.

It is an entire goodneſſe that God cares for: Perhaps (ſuch is the bountie of our God) a partiall obedience may be rewarded with a temporall bleſſing; (as Iehues ſeueritie to Ahab ſhall carrie the crowne to his ſeed for foure generations) but we can neuer haue any comfortable aſſurance of an eternall retribution, if our hearts and wayes be not perfit with God. Woe be to vs, O God, if we be not all thine: we cannot but euerlaſtingly depart from thee, if wee depart not from euery ſinne: Thou haſt purged our hearts from the Baal of our groſſe Idolatries, oh cleare vs from the golden Calues of our pettie-corruptions alſo; that thou maiſt take pleaſure in our vprightneſſe; and may reape the ſwete comforts of thy glorious remuneration.

ATHALIAH.

Athaliah and Ioash.

2. Kings 11., & 12, And 2. Chron. 23, & 24.

OH the wofull ruines of the houſe of good Iehoſaphat: Iehu hath ſlaine two and fortie of his iſſue; Athaliah hopes to root out the reſt: This daughter of Ahab was not like to be other then fatall to that holy Line; One drop of that wicked bloud was enough both to impure, and ſpill all the reſt which affinitie had mixed with it.

It is not vnlike that Abaziah betaking himſelfe to the ſocietie of Iehorams warres, committed the ſway of his Scepter to his mother Athaliah. The daughter of Iezebel cannot but be plotting: when ſhe heares of the death of Abeziah, and his brethren, inflicted by the heauie hand of Iehu, ſhe ſtraight caſts for the Kingdome of Iudah: The true heires are infants, their minoritie giues her both colour of rule, and oportunitie of an eaſie extirpation. Perhaps, her ambition was not more guiltie then her zeale of Baaliſme: ſhe ſaw Iehu out of a deteſtation of Idolatrie, trampling on the bloud of Iehoram, Iezebel, Ataziah, the ſonnes of Ahab, the brethren of Abaziab, the prieſts and prophets of Baal; and in one word, triumphing in the deſtruction both of Ahab, and his Gods out of Iſrael: and now ſhe thinkes, Why ſhould not I deſtroy Iehoſaphat, and his God out of Iudah?

Who euer ſaw an Idolater that was not cruell? Athaliah muſt needs let out ſome of her owne bloud, out of the throat of Abaziahs ſonnes; yet ſhee ſpares not to ſhed it out of a thirſt of ſoueraigntie. O God how worthy of wonder are thy iuſt and mercifull diſpenſations? In that thou ſuffereſt the ſeed of good Iehoſaphat to be deſtroyed by her hand, in whoſe affinitie he offended, and yet saueſt one branch of this ſtocke of Iehoſaphat, for the ſake of ſo faithfull a progenitor.

Wicked Athaliah, couldſt thou thinke God would ſo farre forget his Seruant Dauid (though no other of thoſe loynes had ſeconded his vertues) as to ſuffer all his ſeed to be rooted out of the earth? This vengeance was for thy father Ahab; The man according to Gods owne heart ſhall haue a lineall heire to ſucceed in his Throne, when thou and thy fathers houſe ſhall haue vaniſhed into forgetfulneſſe.

For this purpoſe hath the wiſe prouidence of God ordained a Iehoſheba, and matcht her in the prieſtly Tribe: Such reuerence did Iehoram, King of Iudah (though degenerated into the Idolatry of his father in law Ahab) beare to this ſacred function, that he marries his daughter to Iehoiada the Prieſt. Euen Princeſſes did not then ſcorne the bed of thoſe that ſerued at Gods Altar: Why ſhould the Goſpel poure contempt vpon that which the Law honoured?

That good Lady had too much of Iehoſaphat in her, to ſuffer the vtter extirpation of that royall ſeed; She could not doubtleſſe, without the extreme danger of her owne life, ſaue the life of her nephew Ioaſh; With what a louing boldneſſe doth ſhe aduenture to ſteale him from amongſt thoſe bleeding carkaſſes, in the chamber of death? Her match gaue her oportunitie to effect that, which both nature, and Religion moued her to attempt: neither know I, whether more to wonder at the cunning of the deuice, or the courage of the enterpriſe, or the ſecreſie of the concealement, or the happineſſe of the ſucceſſe: Certainly, Athaliah was too cruelly-carefull to forget this ſo late borne ſonne of Ahaziah; of all the reſt, his age would not ſuffer him to be out of her eye: In all likelihood therefore, ſhee muſt needs haue miſſed ſo noted a corps, had there not beene a ſubſtitution of ſome other dead child in his roome: In that age, the fauour is not ſo diſtinguiſhable; eſpecially of a dead face. Without ſome pious deceit this worke could neuer haue beene effected; Elſe, had the child beene ſecretly ſubduced, and miſſed by his bloudie grand-mother, her perpetuall iealouſie had both expected a ſuruiuing heire, and continued a curious, and vnauoidable ſearch: both which were now ſhunned at once, whilſt Athaliah reckons him for dead, whom Iehoſheba hath preſerued. Miſchiefe ſometimes failes of thoſe appointments, wherein it thinkes to haue made the ſureſt worke; God laughes in heauen at the plots of Tyrants; and befooles them in their deepeſt proiects. He had ſaid to Dauid, Of the fruit of thy body will I ſet vpon thy ſeate; In vaine ſhall earth and hell conſpire to fruſtrate it.

Sixe yeares hath Ioaſh, and his nurſe beene hid in a cloſe cell of the Temple: Thoſe roomes were deſtin'd onely to the holy Tribe; yet now reioyce to harbour ſuch a gueſt; The rigour of the ordinary Law muſt yeeld to caſes of ſo important neceſſitie.

All this could not poſſibly be done and continued without the priuitie of manie faithfull Prieſts and Leuites; who were as carefull to keepe this counſell, as hopefull of the iſſue of it: It is not hard for many honeſt hearts to agree in a religious ſecreſie; Needs muſt thoſe lips be ſhut, which God hath ſealed vp.

Iudah had not beene vſed to ſuch a yoke; long had it groned vnder the tyrannie not of a woman onely, but an Idolatrous Sydonian: If any of that ſex e might haue claimed that Scepter, none had ſo much right to it, as Iehoſheba her ſelfe; But good Iehoiada the Prieſt, who had rather to be a loyall guardian to the King, then an husband to a Queene, now findes time to ſet on foot the iuſt title of Ioaſh; and to put him into the miſ-vſurped throne of his father Ahaziah.

In the ſeuenth yeare, therefore, he ſends for the Captaines, and the Guard; and hauing ſworne them ſecrecie; by vndoubted witneſſes makes faith vnto them of the truth of their natiue Prince, thus happily reſcued from the bloudie kniſe of his mercileſſe Grandmother; marſhals the great buſineſſe of his Inauguration; giues euery one his charge; ſets euery one his ſtation; and ſo diſpoſes of his holy forces, as was moſt needfull for the ſafetie of the King, the reuenge of the Vſurper, the preuention of tumults, the eſtabliſhment of the Crowne vpon the owners head in Peace and Ioy.

There was none of all theſe agents who did not hold the buſineſſe to be his owne; Euery true ſubiect of Iudah was feelingly intereſſed in this ſeruice; neither was there any of them, who was not ſecretly heart-burned all this while, with the hateſull gouernement of this Idolatrous Tyranneſſe: And now this inward fire is glad to find a vent; How gladly do they addreſſe themſelues to this welcome imploiment? The greateſt part of this ſecret band were Leuites, who might therefore both meet together with leaſt ſuſpition, and be more ſecurely truſted by Iehoiada, vnder whom they ſerued; Euen that holy Prieſt of God in ſtead of teaching the Law, ſets the guard, orders the Captaines, ranges the troupes of Iudah; and in ſtead of a Cenſer, brings forth the Speares and Shields of Dauid; the Temple is for the preſent, a Field, or an Artillery-yard; and the Ephods are turned into harneſſe. That houſe, in the rearing whereof not the noyſe of an hammer might be heard, now admits of the claſhing of armour, and the ſecret murmurs of ſome militarie atchieuement. No circumſtances either of place, or calling, are ſo punctuall, as that publique neceſſitie may not diſpenſe with their alteration.

All things are now ready for this ſolemnitie: Each man reioyces to fixe vpon his owne footing; and longs to ſee the face of their long-concealed Soueraigne; and vowes his bloud to the vindication of the common libertie, to the puniſhment of a cruell intruder: Now Iehoiada brings forth vnto them the Kings Sonne, and preſents him to the Peeres, and people; Hardly can the multitude containe it ſelfe from ſhouting out too ſoone: one ſees in his countenance the features of his father, Ahaziah; another of his Grand-father, Iehoram; a third profeſſes to diſcerne in him ſome lines, and faſhion of his great grand-father Iehoſaphat; all find in his face the naturall impreſſions of Maieſtie; and reade in it the hopes, yea the propheſies of their future happineſſe. Not with more ioy, then ſpeed, doth Iehoiada accompliſh all the rites of the Coronation. Before that young King could know what was done to him, he is anointed, crowned, preſented with the booke of the Law: Thoſe ceremonies were inſtructiue; and no doubt, Iehoiada failed not to comment vpon them in due time, to that royall Pupill.

The Oyle, wherewith he was anointed, ſignified his deſignation to that high ſeruice; and thoſe indowments from heauen that might inable him to ſo great a function.

The Crowne, wherewith he was adorned, ſignified that glorie and maieſtie which ſhould both incourage, and attend his Princely cares.

The booke of the Teſtimonie ſignified the diuine rules and directions, whereto he muſt frame his heart and actions, in the weilding of that Crowne, in the improuement of that oyle.

Theſe three, the Oyle, the Crowne, the Teſtimonie, that is, inward powers, outward magnificence, true pietie and iuſtice make vp a perfect Prince; None of theſe may be wanting; If there be not a due calling of God; and abilities meet for that greatneſſe, the Oyle faileth: If there be not a Maieſticke grace and royaltie, that may command reuerence, the Crowne is miſſing; If there bee not a carefull reſpect to the Law of God, as the abſolute guide of all counſels, and determinations, the Teſtimonie is neglected; all of them concurring, make both King and people happy.

Now, it is time for the people to clap their hands, and by their lowd acclamations to witneſſe their ioy; which muſt needs breake forth with ſo much more force, by how much it was longer, vpon feares and policie, ſuppreſſed.

The Court and Temple were neere together; Howeuer it was with Athaliah, and the late reuolted Princes of Iudah, according to the common word, the neerer to the Church, the further from God; their religious predeceſſors held it the greateſt commoditie of their houſe, that it neighboured vpon the houſe of God; From her palace might Athaliah eaſily heare the ioyfull ſhouts of the multitude, the lowd noiſe of the Trumpets; and as aſtoniſhed with this new tumult of publike gratulations, ſhe comes running into the Temple: Neuer had her foot trod vpon that holy pauement, till now that ſhe came to fetch a iuſt reuenge from that God whoſe worſhip ſhe had contemned.

It fell out well, that her ſudden amazedneſſe called her forth, without the attendance of any ſtrong guard; whoſe ſide-taking might haue made that quarrell mutually bloudie: She ſoone heares and ſees what ſhe likes not; her eare meets with, God ſaue the King; her eye meets with the vnlooked for heire of the Kingdome, ſitting on his throne, crowned, and robed, in the royall faſhion; guarded with the Captaines and ſouldiers, proclaimed by the Trumpeters, acclamed and applauded by the people.

Who can ſay whether this ſight draue her more neere to frenzie, or death? How could it be otherwiſe, when thoſe great ſpirits of hers, that had beene long vſed to an vncontrolled ſoueraigntie, find themſelues ſo inexpectedly ſuppreſſed.

She now rends her cloathes, and cryes, Treaſon, treaſon, as if that voyce of hers could ſtill command all hearts, all hands; as if one breath of hers were powerfull enough to blow away all theſe new deſignes: Oh Athaliah, to whom doſt thou complaine thy ſelfe? they are thy iuſt executioners wherewith thou art incompaſſed; If it be treaſon to ſet vp the true heire of Ahaziah, thou appealeſt to thy Traitors. The treaſon was thine, theirs is iuſtice; The time is now come of thy reckonings for all thy royall bloud of Iudah, which thine ambition ſhed; wonder rather at thy patience of this long ſorbearance, then the rigor of this execution.

There needs no formall ſeat of Iuſtice in ſo apparent offence, Iehoiada paſſes the ſentence of death vpon her; Haue her forth of the ranges; Let her not be ſlaine in the houſe of the Lord; and him that followeth her, kill with the ſword.

Had not this vſurpation beene palpable, Iehoiada would not haue preſumed to intermedle; Now being both the Prieſt of God, and Vnckle and Protector to the lawfull King, he doth that, out of the neceſſitie of the ſtate, which his infant Soueraigne (if he could haue beene capable of thoſe thoughts) would haue deſired.

Violent hands are laid vpon Athaliah, whom no doubt a proud and furious diſdaine of ſo quicke a charge, and of ſo rough an vſage made miſerably impatient; Now ſhe frownes, and cals, and ſhrieks and commands, and threatens, and reuiles, and intreats in vaine; and dies with as much ill will from her ſelfe, as ſhe liued with the ill will of her repining ſubiects.

I ſee not any one man of all her late flatterers, that followes her, either for pittie, or reſcue; Euery man willingly giues her vp to iuſtice; Not one ſword is drawne in her defence; Not one eye laments her. Such is the iſſue of a tyrannicall miſ gouernment; that which is obeyed not without ſecret hate, is loſt not without publique ioy.

How like is Athaliah to her mother Iezebel, as in conditions and carriage, ſo euen in death: Both killed violently both killed vnder their owne walles; both ſlaine with Treaſon in their mouthes; both ſlaine in the entrance of a changed gouernment: One trod on by the horſes, the other ſlaine in the horſe-gate. Both paid their owne bloud for the innocent bloud of others.

How ſuddenly, how eaſily is Iudah reſtored to it ſelfe, after ſo long, and ſo fearefull a deprauation; The people ſcarce beleeue their owne eyes, for the wonder of this happie change; neither know I whether they be more ioyed in the ſight of their new King, thus ſtrangely preſerued, or in the ſight of Iehoiada, that had preſerued him.

No man can enuie the protection of the young King vnto him, by whoſe meanes he liues and raignes: That holy man cares onely to improue his authoritie, to the common good: He makes a couenant betweene the Lord, and the King; and the people: and after ſo long and dangerous a disjunction, reunites them to each other. Their reuiued zeale beſtirs it ſelfe, and breakes downe the Temples, and Altars, and Images of Baal, and ſacrifices his idolatrous Prieſt; Shortly, both Ahab, and Baal is deſtroyed out of Iudah.

The Scepter of Iudah is changed from a woman, to a child; but, a Child trained vp, and tutored by Iehoiada; This minoritie ſo guided was not inferior to the mature age of many predeceſſors. Happie is that land, the non-age of whoſe Princes falls into holy and iuſt hands. Yet euen theſe holy and iuſt hands came ſhort of what they might haue done; The high places remained ſtill: Thoſe altars were erected to the true God, but in a wrong place: It is maruell if there be not ſome blemiſhes found in the beſt gouernment: I doubt Iehoiada ſhall once abuy it deare that he did not his vtmoſt.

But for the maine, all was well with Iudah, in all the dayes of Iehoiada; euen after that Ioaſh was growne paſt his pupillage: He that was the Tutor to his infancie, was the councellor of his ripe age; and was equally happie in both: How pleaſing was it to that good High Prieſt, to be commanded by that charge of his in the buſines of God? The yong King giues order to the Prieſts, for the collection of large ſummes, to the repayring of the breaches of Gods houſe. It becomes him well to take care of that, which was the nurſerie of his infancie. And now, after three and twentie yeares hee expoſtulates with his late Guardian, Iehoiada, and the reſt of his coate, Why repaire yee not the breaches?

Oh gracious and happie viciſſitude; Iehoiada the Prieſt had ruled the infancie of King Ioaſh in matters of ſtate; and now Ioaſh the king commands aged Iehoiada the Prieſt in matter of deuotion. In the affaires of God, the action is the Prieſts, the ouer-ſight and coaction is the Princes: By the carefull indeuor of both, Gods houſe is repaired, his ſeruice flouriſheth.

But alas, that it may too well appeare, that the ground of this motion was not altogether inward, no ſooner doth the life of Iehoiada ceaſe, then the deuotion of Ioaſh begins to languiſh: and after ſome languour, dyes.

The benefit of a truly religious Prelate, or Statſ-man, is not knowne till his loſſe.

Now ſome idolatrous Peeres of Iudah haue ſoone miſ-carried the King from the Houſe of the Lord God of their Fathers, to ſerue Groues and Idols. Yea, whether goe we wretched men, if we be left by our Maker? King Ioaſh is turned, not idolater onely, but perſecutor; yea, (which is yet more horrible to conſider) perſecutor of the ſonne of that Iehoiada to whom he owes his owne life, Zechariah his Coſen german, his foſter-brother, the holy iſſue of thoſe parents, by whom Ioaſh liues, and raignes, for the conſcionable rebuke of the idolatry of Prince and people, is vniuſtly, and cruelly murthered by that vnthankfull hand: How poſſible is it for faire and Saint-like beginnings to ſhut vp in monſtrous impieties? Let him that thinkes he ſtands, take heed leſt he fall. When did God euer put vp ſo foule ingratitude to himſelfe, to his ſeruants? O Ioaſh, what eyes can pittie the fearefull deſtruction of thee and thy Iudah?

If ye haue forgotten the kindneſſe of Iehoiada, your vnkindneſſe to Iehoiada ſhall not be forgotten: A ſmall armie of Syrians came vp againſt Iudah and Ieruſalem, and deſtroyed all the Princes of the people, and ſent all the ſpoyle of them to Damaſcus. Now Hazael reuenges this quarrell of God, and his anointed; and plagues that people which made themſelues vnworthy to be the Lords inheritance.

And what becomes of Ioaſh? He is left in great diſeaſes, when his owne ſeruants conſpired againſt him for the bloud of the ſonnes of Iehoiada, and ſlew him on his bed, and hee died; and they buried him not in the Sepulcher of the Kings. Dying Zechariah had ſaid in the bitterneſſe of his departing ſoule, The Lord looke vpon it, and require it: I confeſſe I had rather to haue heard him ſay, The Lord paſſe it ouer and remit it; ſo ſaid Steuen, ſuch difference there is betweene a Martyre of the Law, and of the Goſpell: although I will hope the zeale of iuſtice, not the vncharitable heate of reuenge drew forth this word: God heares it, and now giues an account of his notice; Thus doth the Lord require the bloud of Iehoiadaes ſonne; euen by the like vnthankfull hand of the obliged ſeruants of Ioaſh. He that was guiltie of abhominable Idolatry, yet (as if God meant to waue that challenge) is called to reckoning for his cruell vnthankfulneſſe to Iehoiada; This crime ſhall make him odious aliue, and ſhall abandon him dead from the ſepulcher of his fathers; as if this laſt royaltie were too good for him who had forgotten the law of humanitie. Some vices are ſuch, as Nature ſmiles vpon, though frowned at by diuine Iuſtice: Others are ſuch, as euen Nature it ſelfe abhorres; ſuch is this of ingratitude, which therefore carries ſo much more deteſtation from God, as it is more odious euen to them that haue blotted out the image of God.

IOASH with ELISHA dying.

2.Kings 13.

THe two Kingdomes of Iudah and Iſrael how euer diuided both in gouernement, and affection, yet loued to interchange the names of their Kings; Euen Iſrael alſo had their Ioaſh, no better then that of Iudah; he was not more the father of a later Ieroboam, then (in reſpect of miſ-worſhip) he was the ſonne of the firſt Ieroboam, who made Iſrael to ſinne; Thoſe Calues of Dan and Bethel, out of a politicke miſ-deuotion, beſotted all the ſucceſſion of the ten vſurped Tribes: yet euen this Idolatrous King of Iſrael comes downe to viſit the ſicke bed of Eliſha, and weepes vpon his face.

That holy Prophet was neuer any flatterer of Princes, neither ſpared he inuectiues againſt their moſt plauſible ſinnes: yet King Ioaſh, that was beaten by his reproofes, waſhes that face with the teares of loue, and ſorrow, which had often frowned vpon his wickedneſſe.

How much difference there was betwixt the Ioaſh of Iſrael, and the Ioaſh of Iudah? That of Iudah hauing beene preſerued and nurtured by Iehoiada the Prieſt, after all profeſſions of deareneſſe ſhuts vp in the vnkinde murther of his ſonne; and that meerely for the iuſt reproofe of his owne Idolatry: This of Iſrael hauing beene eſtranged from the Prophet Eliſha, and ſharply rebuked for the like offence, makes loue to his dying reprouer, and be-dewes his pale face with his teares: Both were bad enough, but this of Iſrael was, how euer vicious, yet good-natur'd: That of Iudah added to his wickedneſſe, an ill diſpoſition, a dogged humor, There are varieties euen of euill men; ſome are worſe at the root, others at the branch; ſome more ciuilly harmeleſſe, others fouler in moralitie, According to the exerciſe of the reſtraining grace, naturall men doe either riſe, or fall in their ill.

The longeſt day muſt haue his euening: Good Eliſha, that had liued ſome nintie yeares, a wonder of Prophets, and had out-worne many ſucceſſions in the thrones of Iſrael, and Iudah, is now caſt vpon the bed of his ſickneſſe, yea, of his death: That very age might ſeeme a diſeaſe; which yet is ſeconded with a languiſhing diſtemper: It is not in the power of any holineſſe to priuiledge vs from infirmitie of bodie, from finall diſſolution: He that ſtretched himſelfe vpon his bed, ouer the dead carkaſſe of the Shunamites ſonne, and reuiued it; muſt now ſtretch out his owne limbes vpon his ſicke bed, and die: He ſaw his Maſter Elijah rapt vp ſuddenly from the earth, and fetcht by a fiery chariot from this vale of mortalitie; himſelfe muſt leaſurely wait for his laſt pangs, in a lingering paſſage to the ſame glory. There is not one way appointed to vs, by the diuine prouidence, vnto one common bleſſedneſſe: One hath more paine, another hath more ſpeed: Violence ſnatcheth away one, another by an inſenſible pace drawes euery day neerer to his terme: The wiſedome and goodneſſe of God magnifies it ſelfe in both: Happie is he that after due preparation, is paſt through the gates of death, ere he be aware; Happie is he that by the holy vſe of long ſickneſſe is taught to ſee the gates of death a farre off, and addreſſed for a reſolute paſſage: The one dies like Elijah, the other like Eliſha, both bleſſedly,

The time was, when a great King ſent to Eliſha to know if he ſhould recouer; now the King of Iſrael, as knowing that Eliſha ſhall not recouer (ſo had his conſumption ſpent him) comes to viſit the dying Prophet; and when his teares would giue him leaue; breakes forth into a paſſionate exclamation, O my father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael and the horſemen thereof. Yet the Calues of Dan and Bethel haue left ſome goodneſſe in Ioaſh; As the beſt man hath ſomething in him worthy of reproofe; ſo the faultieſt hath ſomething commendable. Had not the Spirit of God himſelfe told vs, that Ioaſh did that which was euill in the ſight of the Lord, we had admired this pietie, this reuerent reſpect to the Prophet. The holieſt man could not haue ſaid more: It is poſſible for the cliants of a falſe worſhip, to honour (out of another regard) the profeſſors of Truth; From the hand of Eliſha had Iehu the grand-father of Ioaſh receiued his vnction to the Kingdome: this fauour might not be forgotten.

Viſitation of the ſick is a dutie required both by the law of humanitie, and of Religion; Bodily infirmitie is ſad; and comfortleſſe; and therefore needs the preſence, and counſell of friends to relieue it; Although, when wee draw the curtaines of thoſe that are eminently gracious, we do rather fetch (with Ioaſh) then bring a bleſſing.

How ſenſible ſhould we be of the loſſe of holy men, when a Ioaſh ſpends his teares vpon Eliſha? If we be more affected with the foregoing of a naturall friend, or kinſman, then of a noted and vſefull Prophet, it argues more loue to our ſelues, then to the Church of God, then to God himſelfe.

What vſe there was of chariots and horſemen in thoſe warres of the Ancient, all Hiſtories can tell vs: All the ſtrength of the battell ſtood in theſe: There could be neither defence, nor offence, but by them: ſuch was Eliſha vnto Iſrael; The greateſt ſafegard to any nation is the ſanctitie, and faithfulneſſe of their Prophets; without which the Church and State lyes open to vtter deſolation.

The ſame words that Eliſha ſaid of his maſter Elijah, when hee ſaw him taken vp from the earth, doth Ioaſh now ſpeake of Eliſha, neere his diſſolution: O my father, my father, the charets of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof. The words were good; the teares were pious; but where are the actions? O Ioaſh, if the Prophet were thy father, where was thy filiall obedience? he cri'd downe thy Calues, thou vpheldſt them; he counſell'd thee to good, thou didſt euill in the ſight of the Lord.

If the Prophet were the charets and horſemen of Iſrael, why didſt thou fight againſt his holy doctrine? If thou weepeſt for his loſſe, why didſt thou not weepe for thoſe ſinnes of thine, that procured it?

Had thine hand anſwered thy tongue, Iſrael had beene happie in Eliſha; Eliſha had beene happie in Iſrael, and thee; Words are no good triall of profeſſion: The worſt men may ſpeake well: Actions haue onely the power to deſcry hypocrites.

Yet euen a Ioaſh thus complying, ſhall not goe away vnbleſſed: This outward kindneſſe ſhall receiue an outward retribution; Theſe few drops of warme water ſhed vpon the face of a Prophet, ſhall not loſe their reward; The ſpirit of propheſie forſakes not the death-bed of Eliſha; He calls for bow, and arrowes, and puts them into the hand of Ioaſh, and putting his hands vpon the Kings hand, he bids to ſhoot Eaſtward: and whiles the ſhaft flyes, and lights, he ſayes, The arrow of the Lords deliuerance from Syria; for thou ſhalt ſmite the Syrians in Aphek, till thou haue conſumed them: If the weake and withered hand of the Prophet had not beene vpon the youthfull, and vigorous hand of the King, this bow had beene drawne in vaine; the ſtrength was from the hand of the King, the bleſſing from the hand of the Prophet: He whoſe reall parable hath made the earth to be Syria, the arrow, reuenge, the archer, Ioaſh, hath obtained for his laſt boone from God to Iſrael, that this archer ſhall ſhoot this arrow of reuenge, into the heart of Syria, and wound it to death. When then the hand of the King, and of the Prophet drawes together, there cannot chooſe but ſucceſſe muſt follow.

How readily doth Eliſha now make good the words of Ioaſh? How truly is hee the Charets, and Horſemen of Iſrael? Iſrael had not fought without him, much leſſe had beene victorious; If theirs be the indeauour, the ſucceſſe is his: Euen the dying Prophet puts life, and ſpeed into the Forces of Iſrael, and whiles he is digging his owne graue, is raiſing Trophees to Gods people.

He had receiued kindneſſe from the Syrians; amongſt them was he harbour'd in the dearth; and from ſome of their Nobles, was preſented with rich gifts; but their enmitie to Iſrael drownes all his priuate reſpects; hee cannot but profeſſe hoſtilitie to the publique enemies of the Church: Neither can he content himſelfe with a ſingle prediction of their ruine. Hee bids Ioaſh to take the arrowes, and ſmite vpon the ground; he ſets no number of thoſe ſtrokes; as ſuppoſing the frequence of thoſe blowes, which Ioaſh might well (vpon his former parabolicall act) vnderſtand to be ſignificant. The ſlacke hand of the King ſmites but thriſe. So apt we are to be wanting to our ſelues; ſo coldly do wee execute the commands of God: The ſicke Prophet is not more greeued, then angry at this dull negligence; Doubtleſſe God had reuealed to him (for his laſt gratification) that vpon his feruent prayers, ſo oft as Ioaſh ſhould voluntarily (after his generall charge) ſmite the earth, ſo oft ſhould Iſrael ſmite Syria. Eliſhaes zeale doth not languiſh with his body: with a fatherly authoritie he chides him, who had ſtiled him father; not fearing to ſpend ſome of his laſt winde in a milde reproofe, Thou ſhouldeſt haue ſmitten fiue or ſixe times, then thou hadſt ſmitten Syria till thou hadſt conſumed it, whereas now thou ſhalt ſmite Syria but thriſe. Not that the vnchangeable decree of the Almightie meant to ſuſpend it ſelfe vpon the vncertaine iſſue of Ioaſhes will; but, hee that puts this word into the mouth of his Prophet, puts this motion into the hand of the King, which did not more willingly ſtay, then neceſſarily obey that prouidence whereby it was ſtirred. Euen whiles we haue our freeſt choyce, we fall vpon thoſe actions and circumſtances, whereby the iuſt and holy will of our God is brought about. Our verie neglects, our ignorances ſhall fulfill his eternall councells.

Eliſha dies, and is buried; his miracles doe not ceaſe with his life: Who can maruell that his liuing prayers raiſed the ſonne of the Shunamite, when his dead bones raiſe the carkaſſe that touched them. God will be free in his workes; hee that muſt die himſelfe, yet ſhall reuiue another; the ſame power might haue continued life to him, that gaue it by his bones. Iſrael ſhall well ſee that hee liues, by whoſe vertue, Eliſha was both in life, and death, miraculous: Whiles the Prophet was aliue, the impetration might ſeeme to be his, though the power were Gods; now that he is dead, the bones can challenge nothing, but ſend the wandring Iſraelites to that almightie Agent, to whom it is all one to worke by the quicke, or dead. Were not the men of Iſrael more dead then the carkaſſe thus buried, how could they chooſe but ſee in this reuiued corps, an embleme of their owne condition? How could they chooſe but thinke, If we adhere to the God of Eliſha, he ſhall raiſe our decaied eſtates, and reſtore our nation to the former glory.

The Sadduces had as yet no being in Iſrael, with what face could that hereſie euer after looke into the world, when before the birth of it, it was ſo palpably conuinced, with an example of the reſurrection? Intermiſſion of time, and degrees of corruption adde nothing to the impoſſibilitie of our riſing: The bodie that is once cold in death, hath no more aptitude to a reanimation, then that which is moldred into duſt; Onely the diuine power of the Maker muſt reſtore either, can reſtore both: When we are dead, and buried in the graue of our ſinne; it is onely the touch of Gods Prophets, applying vnto vs the death and reſurrection of the Sonne of God, that can put new life into vs; No leſſe true, though ſpirituall, is the miracle of our raiſing vp from an eſtate of inward corruption, to a life of grace.

Yet all this preuailes not with Iſrael: No bones of Eliſha could raiſe them from their wicked Idolatry: and, notwithſtanding their groſſe ſinnes, Ioaſh their King proſpers: Whether it were for the ſake of Iehu, whoſe grand-child he was; or for the ſake of Eliſha, whoſe face he wept vpon, his hand is notably ſucceſſefull: not onely againſt the ſonne of Hazael, King of Syria, whom he beates out of the Cities of Iſrael; but, againſt Amaziah King of Iudah, whom hee tooke Priſoner, beating downe the verie walls of Ieruſalem, and returning laden with the ſacred, and rich ſpoyle both of the Temple, and Court, to his Samaria.

Oh the depth of the diuine Iuſtice, and wiſedome in theſe outward adminiſtrations! The beſt cauſe, the beſt man doth not euer fare beſt: Amaziah did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord; Ioaſh, euill: Amaziah followes Dauid (though not with equall paces) Ioaſh followes Ieroboam, yet is Amaziah ſhamefully foyled by Ioaſh; Whether God yet meant to viſit vpon this King of Iudah, the ſtill-odious vnthankefulneſſe of his father to Iehoiada; or, to plague Iudah for their ſhare in the bloud of Zechariah, and their late reuolt to Idolatry; or, whether Amaziahs too much confidence in his owne ſtrength (which moued his bold challenge to Ioaſh) were thought fit to be thus taken downe; or what euer other ſecret ground of Gods iudgement there might be, it is not for our preſumption to inquire: Who ſo by the euent ſhall iudge of loue, or hatred, ſhall be ſure to runne vpon that woe, which belongs to them that call good euill, and euill good.

What a ſauage peece of Iuſtice it is to put the right, whether of inheritance, or honour, to the deciſion of the ſword, when it is no newes for the better to miſcarrie by the hand of the worſe?

The race is not to the ſwift; the battell is not to the ſtrong; no, not to the good: Perhaps, God will correct his owne by a foyle; perhaps, he will plague his enemy by a victorie. They are onely our ſpirituall combats wherein our faithfull courage is ſure of a crowne.

VZZIAH Leprous.

2.Chron.26.
And
2.Kings 15.

EVen the Throne of Dauid paſſed many changes of good, and euill: Good Iehoſaphat was followed with three ſucceſſions of wicked Princes; and thoſe three, were againe ſucceded with three others godly, and vertuous; Amaziah for a long time ſhone faire, but at the laſt, ſhut vp in a cloud; The gods of the Edomites marred him; his rebellion againſt God, ſtirr'd vp his peoples rebellion againſt him: The ſame hands that ſlew him, crowned his ſonne VZZiah; ſo as the yong King might imagine it was not their ſpight, that drew violence vpon his father, but his owne wickedneſſe; Both early did this Prince raigne, and late; he began at ſixteene; and ſat fiftie two yeares in the Throne of Iudah: They that mutined in the declining age of Amaziah, the father; are obſequious to the child-hood of the ſonne, as if they profeſſed to adore ſoueraintie, whiles they hated lewdneſſe: The vnchanged gouernment of good Princes is the happineſſe, no leſſe of the ſubiects then of themſelues: The hand knowes beſt to guide thoſe reines to which it hath beene inured; and euen meane hackneyes goe on cheerefully in their wonted rode;

A rode; Cuſtome, as it makes euils more ſupportable, ſo where it meets with conſtant minds, makes good things more pleaſing and beneficiall.

The wiſe and holy Prophet Zechariah, was an happie Tutor to the minoritie of King Vzziah; That veſſell can hardly miſ-carrie where a skilfull ſteres-man ſits at the helme: The firſt praiſe of a good Prince is to be iudicious, and iuſt, and pious, in himſelfe; the next is, to giue eare, and way, to them that are ſuch: Whiles Zechariah hath the viſions of God, and Vzziah takes the counſels of Zechariah, it is hard to ſay whether the Prophet, or the King, or the State be happier.

God will be in no mans debt; ſo long as Vzziah ſought the Lord, God made him to proſper. Euen what we do out of dutie cannot want a reward: Godlineſſe neuer diſappointed any mans hopes, oft hath exceeded them. If Vzziah fight againſt the Philiſtims, If againſt the Arabians, and Mehunims; according to his names, the ſtrength, the helpe of the Almightie is with him: The Ammonites come in with preſents, and all the neighbour nations ring of the greatneſſe, B of the happineſſe of Vzziah; his bountie and care makes Ieruſalem both ſtrong, and proud of her new Towers; yea the verie Deſart muſt taſte of his munificence.

Vzziah,
Azariah,

The outward magnificence of Princes cannot ſtand firme, vnleſſe it bee built vpon the foundations of prouidence and frugalitie; Vzziah had not been ſo great a King, if he had not beene ſo great an husband; he had his flockes in the deſerts, and his heards in the plaines; his ploughes in the fields, his vinedreſſers vpon the mountaines, and in Carmel: neither was this more out of profit, then delight, for he loued husbandrie. Who can contemne thoſe callings for meanneſſe, which haue beene the pleaſures of Princes?

Hence was Vzziah ſo potent at home, ſo dreadfull to his neighbours; his warres had better ſinewes then theirs; which of his predeceſſors was able to maintaine ſo ſetled an armie, of more then of three hundred and tenne thouſand trained ſouldiers, well furniſhed, well fitted for the ſuddeneſt occaſion? Thrift is the ſtrongeſt prop of power.

C The greatneſſe of Vzziah, and the rare deuices of his artificiall Engines for war, haue not more raiſed his fame, then his heart: ſo is he ſwolne vp with the admiration of his owne ſtrength, and glory, that he breakes againe; How eaſie it is for the beſt man to dote vpon himſelfe; and to be lifted vp ſo high, as to loſe the ſight both of the ground, whence he riſes, and of the hand that aduanced him: How hard it is for him that hath inuented ſtrange Engines for the battering of his enemies, to find out any meanes to beate downe his owne proud thoughts? Wiſe Salomon knew what he did, when he prayed to be deliuered from too much: Leſt, ſaid he I be full, and denie thee, and ſay, Who is the Lord? Vpon this Rocke did the ſonne of Salomon runne and ſplit himſelfe; His full ſayles of proſperitie carrried him into preſumption and ruine: what may he not doe? what may he not be? Becauſe hee found his power otherwiſe vnlimited; ouer-ruling in the Court, the Cities, the Fields, the Deſerts, the armes, and Magazins, therefore he thinkes he may doe ſo in the Temple too: as things royall, ciuill, husbandly, militarie paſſed his hands, ſo why D ſhould not (thinkes he) ſacred alſo? It is a dangerous indiſcretion for a man not to know the bounds of his owne calling: What confuſion doth not follow vpon this breaking of the rankes?

Vpon a ſolemne day, King Vzziah clothes himſelfe in Pontificall robes, and in the view of that populous aſſembly, walkes vp in ſtate, into the Temple of God, and boldly approaching to the Altar of Incenſe, offers to burne ſweet odours vpon it to the God of heauen: Azariah the Prieſt is ſenſible of ſo perillous an incroch ment; he therefore attended with fourescore valiant aſſiſtants, of that holy Tribe, haſtens after the King, and finding him with the

A cenſer in his hand, readie addreſſed to that ſinfull deuotion, ſtayes him with a free, and graue expoſtulation: There is no place wherein I could bee ſorrie to ſee thee, O King, but this, where thou art; neither is there any act, that we ſhould grudge thee ſo much, as this, which is the moſt ſacred; Is it poſſible that ſo great an overſight ſhould fall into ſuch wiſedome? Can a religious Prince trained vp vnder an holy Zechariah, after ſo many yeares zealous profeſſion of pietie, be either ignorant, or regardleſſe of thoſe limits, which God hath ſet to his owne ſeruices?

Oh, what meanes this vncouth attempt? Conſider O deare Soueraigne, for Gods ſake, for thy ſoules ſake, conſider where thou art, what thou doeſt; it is Gods houſe wherein thou ſtandeſt, not thine owne; Looke about thee, and ſee, whether theſe vailes, theſe Tables, theſe Pillars, theſe Walls, theſe Pauements, haue any reſemblance of earth: There is no place in all the world whence thy God hath excluded thee, but onely this; this he hath reſerued for his owne vſe: And canſt thou thinke much to allow one roome as proper to him, who hath not grudged all the reſt to thee? But if it be thy zeale of a perſonall ſeruice to God, that hath carried thee hither; alas, how canſt thou hope B to pleaſe the Almightie with a forbidden ſacrifice? Which of thine holy Progenitors euer dared to tread, where thy foot now ſtandeth? which of them euer put forth their hand to touch this ſacred Altar? Thou knoweſt that God hath ſet apart, and ſanctified his owne attendants; Wherefore ſerues the Prieſthood, if this bee the right of Kings? were it not for the ſtrict prohibition of our God, it could ſeeme no other then an honour to our profeſſion, that a King ſhould thinke to dignifie himſelfe by our employment; but now, knowing the ſeuere charge of the great King of heauen, we cannot but tremble to ſee that cenſer in thine hand; who euer, out of the holy Tribe, hath weilded it vnreuenged? This affront is not to vs, it is to the God whom we ſerue; In awe of that terrible Maieſtie, as thou wouldeſt auoid ſome exemplarie iudgement, O King withdraw thy ſelfe, not without humble deprecations, from this preſence; and lay downe that interdicted handfull, with feare and trembling; Bee thou euer a King, let vs bee Prieſts; The Scepter is thine, let Cenſers bee ours. C

What religious heart could do other then relent at ſo faithfull and iuſt an admonition? But how hard it is for great perſons to yeeld they haue offended? Vzziah muſt not be faultie; what is done raſhly ſhall be borne out with power; He was wroth; and thus expreſſeth it: What meanes this ſaucie expoſtulation, O ye ſons of Leui? how dare ye thus malapertly controll the well meant actions of your Soueraigne? If ye be Prieſts, remember that ye are ſubiects; or if ye will needs forget it, how eaſie is it for this hand to awake your memorie? What ſuch offence can it be for me to come into that houſe, and to touch that Altar, which my royall Progenitors haue made, beautified, conſecrated? Is the God of this place onely yours? Why do ye thus ambitiouſly ingroſſe Religion? If Princes haue not intermedled with theſe holy affaires, it was becauſe they would not, not becauſe they might not; When thoſe lawes were made for the Sanctuarie, there were no Kings to grace theſe diuine ceremonies; yet euen then, Moſes was priuiledged. The perſons of Princes (if ye know not) are no leſſe ſacred then your owne. It is your preſumption to account the Lords D anointed, prophane: Conteſt with thoſe, whoſe drie and vnhallowed heads are ſubiect to your power; For me, I will not aske your leaue to be deuout; Looke ye to your owne Cenſers, preſume not to meddle with mine; in the meane time, can ye thinke this inſolence of yours ſhall eſcape vnreuenged? Can it ſtand with the honour of my ſoueraigntie, to bee thus proudly checked by ſubiects? God doe ſo to me and more alſo, if. Whiles Vzziah yet ſpeakes, God ſtrikes: Ere the words of furie can come forth of his mouth, the leproſie appeares in his

A his forehead: Leproſie was a moſt loathſome diſeaſe; the forehead is the moſt conſpicuous part: Had this ſhamefull ſcurfe broken forth vpon his hand, or foot, or breſt, it might haue beene hid from the eyes of men; now the forhead is ſmitten with this iudgement, that God may proclaime to all beholders, Thus ſhall it bee done to the man whoſe arrogance hath thruſt him vpon a ſacred charge. Publique offences muſt haue open ſhame.

It is a dangerous thing to put our ſelues into the affaires, into the preſence of God, vnwarranted; There cannot be a more fooliſh meſpriſion, then, becauſe we are great on earth, to thinke we may be bold with heauen: When Gods meſſengers cannot preuaile by counſels, intreaties, threats, it is time for God to ſhow his immediate iudgements. Wilfull offenders can expect nothing but a fearefull reuenge.

Now begins Vzziah to be confounded in himſelfe; and ſhame ſtriues with leproſie, for a place in his forehead; The hand of God hath done that in an inſtant which all the tongues of men had attempted in vaine: There needs no
B further ſolicitor of his egreſſe, the ſenſe of his plague ſends him forth alone:
And now he thinkes; Wretched man that I am, how haue I angred God; and vndone my ſelfe? I would needs come in like a Prieſt, and now go forth a Leper:
the pride of my heart made me thinke my ſelfe worthy the preſence of a God;
Gods iuſt diſpleaſure hath now made me vnworthy of the preſence of men:
whiles I affected the altar, I haue loſt my throne; whiles I ſcornefully reiected the aduice and cenſures of Gods Miniſters, I am now become a ſpectacle of horror, and deformitie, to my owne ſeruants; I that would be ſending vp perfumes to heauen, haue made my naſtineſſe hatefull to my owne ſenſes. What do I vnder this ſacred roofe? Neither is Gods houſe now, for me, nor mine owne; what cell, what dungeon is cloſe enough for me, wherein to weare out the reſidue of mine vnhappie and vncomfortable dayes? O God thou art iuſt, and I am miſerable.

Thus with a deiected countenance, and ſad heart, doth Vzziah haſte to retire himſelfe; and wiſhes, that he could be no leſſe hid from himſelfe, then from C others: how eaſie is it for the God of heauen to bring downe the higheſt pitch of earthly greatneſſe, and to humble the ſtubborneſt pride?

Vpon the leaſure of ſecond thoughts, Vzziah cannot but acknowledge much fauour in this correction, and confeſſe to haue eſcaped well; Others, hee knew, had beene ſtrucke dead, or ſwallow'd vp quicke for ſo preſumptuous an intruſion: It is happie for him if his forehead may excuſe his ſoule.

Vzziah ceaſed not to be a King, when he began to be a leper; the diſeaſe of his forehead did not remoue his Crowne: his ſonne Iotham raigned for him, vnder him; and whiles he was not ſeene, yet he was obeyed. The character of ſoueraigntie is indeleble, whether by bodily infirmitie, or by ſpirituall cenſure: Neither is it otherwiſe, O God, betwixt thee, and vs, if we be once a royall generation vnto thee, our leproſies may deforme vs, they ſhall not dethrone vs: ſtill ſhall we haue the right, ſtill the poſſeſſion of that glorious kingdome, where-D in wee are inueſted from eternitie.

A

AHAZ with his new Altar.

2. Kings 26,

AFter many vnhappie changes of the two thrones; Ahaz ſucceedes Iotham in the Kingdome of Iudah: an ill ſonne of a good father; not more the heire of Dauids ſeate, then of Ieroboams ſinne: Though Iſrael play the harlot, yet who can abide that Iudah ſhould ſinne? It is hard not to be infected with a contagious neighbour-hood: who euer read that the Kingdome of Iſrael was ſeaſoned with the vicinitie of the true Religion of Iudah? Goodneſſe (ſuch as our nature is) is not ſo apt to ſpread: A tainted ayre doth more eaſily affect a ſound body, then an wholeſome ayre B can cleare the ſicke: Superſtition hath euer beene more ſucceſſefull, then truth; The yong yeares of Ahaz are ſoone miſ-led to a plauſible miſ-deuotion.

A man that is once falne from truth, knowes not where he ſhall ſtay: From the Calues of Ieroboam is Ahaz drawne to the gods of the heathen; yea, now, Buls and Goates are too little for thoſe new deities, his owne fleſh and blood is but deare enough; He made his ſonne to paſſe through their fire. Where doe we find any religious Iſraelite thus zealous for God? Neither doth the holineſſe and mercie of our God require ſo cruell a ſacrifice: neither is our dull, and niggardly hand ready to gratifie him with more eaſie obediences; O God how gladly ſhould we offer vnto thee our ſoules, and bodies, which we may enioy ſo much the more, when they are thine; ſince zealous Pagans ſticke not to leeſe their owne fleſh, and blood in an Idols fire?

He that hath thus ſhamefully caſt-off the God of his fathers, cannot bee long without a fearefull reuenge. The King of Iſrael galls him on the one ſide; the King of Syria on the other: To auoide the ſhocke of both, Ahaz doth not C betake himſelfe to the God whom he had offended; who was able to make his enemies at peace with him, but to Tiglath Pileſer King of Aſhur: Him doth he wooe with ſuites, with gifts; and robs God of thoſe preſents, which may indeare ſo ſtrong an helper. He that thought not his ſonne too deare for an Idol, thinkes not Gods ſiluer and gold too deare for an Idolatrous abettor.

Oh the infinite patience of the Almightie! God giues ſucceſſe a while to ſo offenſiue a riualitie: This Aſſyrian King preuailes againſt the King of Syria; kills him, and takes his chiefe Citie, Damaſcus; The quarrell of the King of Iudah hath inlarged the Territories of his aſſiſtant, beyond hope; And now, whiles this Aſſyrian victor is inioying the poſſeſſion of his new-won Damaſcus: Ahaz goes vp thither to meete him, to congratulate the victorie, to adde vnto thoſe triumphs, which were drawne on by his ſolicitation. There he ſees a new faſhioned Altar, that pleaſes his eye; That old forme of Salomons, which was made by the patterne ſhowed to Moſes in the Mount, is now growne ſtale, and deſpicable; A modell of this more exquiſite frame is ſent to Vrijah, the D Prieſt; and muſt be ſampled in Ieruſalem.

It is a dangerous preſumption to make innouations, if but in the circumſtances of Gods worſhip. Thoſe humane additions which would ſeeme to grace the inſtitution of God, depraue it; That infinite wiſedome knowes beſt what will pleaſe it ſelfe, and preſcribes accordingly; The fooliſhneſſe of God is wiſer then the wiſedome of men; Idolatrie and falſhood is commonly more gawdie and plauſible, then truth; That heart which can for the outward homelineſſe

deſpiſe

A deſpiſe the ordinances of God, is alreadie aliened from true Religion, and lies open to the groſſeſt ſuperſtition.

Neuer any Prince was ſo foulely idolatrous, at that he wanted a Prieſt to ſecond him: An Vrijah is fit to humor an Ahaz. Greatneſſe could neuer command any thing, which ſome ſeruile wits were not readie both to applaud, and iuſtifie.

Ere the King can be returned from Damaſcus, the alter is finiſhed; It were happie if true godlineſſe could be ſo forward in the proſecutions of good: Neither is this ſtrange pile reared onely, but thruſt vp betwixt Gods Altar, and the Temple; in an apparent predecencie, as if he had ſaid, Let the God of Iudah come behind the Deities of Syria.

And now, to make vp the full meaſure of his impietie, this idolatrous King will himſelfe bee ſacrificing vpon his new alter, to his new gods; the gods of Damaſcus: An vſurped prieſthood well becomes a falſe Deitie. Becauſe (ſaith he) the gods of the Kings of Syria helpe them, therefore will I ſacrifice to them, that they may helpe me.

B Oh blind ſuperſtition! how did the gods of Syria helpe their Kings, when both thoſe Kings, and their gods were vanquiſhed, and taken by the King of Aſſyria? Euen this Damaſcus, and this altar were the ſpoyle of a forraigne enemie; How then did the gods of Syria helpe their Kings, any other, then to their ruine? what dotage is this to make choice of a foyled protection? But had the Syrians proſpered, muſt their gods haue the thankes? Are there no authors of good but blockes or Deuils? Or is an outward proſperitie the onely argument of truth, the onely motiue of deuotion? O fooliſh Ahaz, it is the God thou haſt forſaken, that plagues thee, vnder whoſe onely arme thou might'ſt haue preuailed. His power beats thoſe Pagan ſtockes, one againſt another, ſo, as one while, one ſeemes victorious, another vanquiſht; and at laſt he confounds both, together with their proudeſt clients: Thy ſelfe ſhall bee the beſt inſtance.

Of all the Kings of Iudah hitherto, there is none ſo dreadfull an example either of ſinne, or iudgement, as this ſonne of good Iotham. I abhorre to thinke C that ſuch a monſter ſhould deſcend from the loynes of Dauid; where ſhould be the period of this wickedneſſe? He began with the high places, thence hee deſcends to the Calues of Dan and Bethel; from thence he falls to a Syrian altar, to the Syrian god; then from a partnerſhip he falls to an vtter excluſion of the true God, and blocking vp his Temple; and then to the ſacrifice of his owne ſonne; and at laſt, as if hell were broken looſe vpon Gods inheritance, euery ſeuerall Citie, euery hie place of Iudah hath a new God: No maruell if hee bee branded by the Spirit of God, with, This is that King Ahaz.

What a fearefull plague did this noyſome deluge of ſinne leaue behind it, in the land of Iudah? who can expreſſe the horror of Gods reuenge vpon a people that ſhould haue beene his? Pekah the King of Iſrael, ſlew an hundred and twentie thouſand of them in one day: amongſt whom was Maſeiah the ſonne of Ahaz: O iuſt iudgement of the Almightie! Ahaz ſheds the bloud of one ſonne to an Idoll: The true God ſheds the bloud of another of his ſonnes, in reuenge.

D Yet, the hand of the Lord is ſtretched out ſtill:

Two hundred thouſand of them were carried away by the Iſraelites captiue, to Samaria.

The Edomites came, and carried away another part of them for bondſlaues, to their countrie:

The Philiſtims came vp and ſhared the Cities of the South of Iudah, and the villages thereof; Shortly, what other is miſerable Iudah, then the prey, and ſpoile of all the neighbouring Nations? For the Lord brought Iudah low becauſe 2.Chro.28.19.

of Iſrael, for he made Iudah naked, and tranſgreſſed ſore againſt the Lord: As for A the great King of Aſhur, whom Ahaz purchaſed with the ſacrilegious pillage of the houſe of God, in ſtead of an ayde, he proues a burden; How euer he ſped in his firſt on-ſets; now, he diſtreſſed Iudah, but ſtrengthned it not: The charge was as great, as the benefit ſmall: ſooner ſhall he eate them out, then reſcue them. No arme of fleſh can ſhelter Ahaz from a vengeance.

Be wiſe, O yee Kings, bee inſtructed O yee Iudges of the earth; ſerue the Lord with feare, and reioyce with trembling: Kiſſe the Sonne leſt he be angrie, and yee periſh from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little.

His ſubiects complaine, that he died ſo late, and, as repenting that hee euer was, denie him a roome in the ſepulchers of Kings: as if they ſaid; the common earth of Ieruſalem is too good for him that degenerated from his Progenitors, marr'd his Kingdome, depraued his people, forſooke his God.

B

The vtter deſtruction of the Kingdome of ISRAEL.

2.King. 17.

IVdah was at a ſore heaue; yet Iſrael ſhall miſ-carie before it; ſuch are the ſinnes of both, that they ſtriue whether ſhall fall firſt; but this lot muſt light vpon the ten Tribes; though the late King of Iudah were perſonally worſe then the moſt of Ieroboams ſucceſſors, yet the people were generally leſſe euill: vpon whom the incroachments of Idolatrie were more by obtruſion, then by conſent; beſides that the thrones of Iudah had ſome interchanges of good Princes, Iſrael none at all: The ſame Iuſtice therefore that made Iſrael a ſcourge to Iudah, made Aſſyria a ſcorpion to Iſrael. C

It was the quarrell of Iudah that firſt ingaged the King of Aſhur in this warre againſt Iſrael; now hee is not ſo eaſily fetcht off; So we haue ſeene ſome eager Maſtiue, that hath beene ſet on by the leaſt clap of the hand, but could not bee looſned by the force of ſtaues.

Salmaneſer King of Aſſyria comes vp againſt Hoſhea King of Iſrael, and ſubdues him; and puts him to his Tribute: This yoke was vncouth and vnpleaſing; The vanquiſht Prince was neither able to reſiſt, nor willing to yeeld; ſecretly therefore he treates with the King of Egypt for aſſiſtance, as deſiring rather to hazard his libertie by the hand of an equall, then to inioy a quiet ſubiection vnder the hand of an ouer-ruling power; we cannot blame Princes to bee iealous of their ſoueraignties; The detaining of his yearely Tribute, and the whiſperings with new confederates, haue drawne vp the King of Aſhur to perfect his owne victories: He returnes therefore with a ſtrong power, and after three yeares ſiege, takes Samaria, impriſons Hoſhea, and in the exchange of a woſull captiuitie, he peoples Iſrael with Aſſyrians, and Aſſyria with Iſraelites. D Now that abuſed ſoyle hath vpon a ſurfet of wickedneſſe, caſt out her perfidious owners, and will trie how it can fare with heatheniſh ſtrangers: Now the Aſſyrian gallants triumph in the Palaces of Samaria & Iezreel; whiles the Peeres and Captaines of Iſrael are driuen manicled through the Aſſyrian ſtreets, and billeted to the ſeuerall places of their perpetuall ſeruitude: Shortly, now the flouriſhing Kingdome of the tenne Tribes is come to a finall and ſhamefull end; and ſo vaniſhed in this laſt diſſipation, that, ſince that day, no man could euer ſay, This was Iſrael.

A Oh terrible example of vengeance, vpon that peculiar people, whom God hath choſen for himſelfe, out of all the world: All the world were witneſſes of the fauours of their miraculous deliuerances, and protections; All the world ſhall be witneſſes of their iuſt confuſion.

It is not in the power of ſleight errors to ſet off that infinite mercie: What was it, O God, what was it, that cauſed thee to caſt off thine owne inheritance? What but the ſame that made thee to caſt the Angels out of heauen? Euen their rebellious ſinnes. Thoſe ſinnes dared to emulate the greatneſſe of thy mercies, no leſſe, then they forced the ſeueritie of thy iudgements: They left all the commandements of the Lord their God; and made them molten Images, euen two Calues; and made a groue and worſhipped all the hoſt of heauen; and ſerued Baal; and cauſed their ſonnes and daughters to paſſe through the fire, and vſed diuination, and enchantments, and ſold themſelues to doe euill in the ſight of the Lord to prouoke him to anger.

Neither were theſe ſlips of frailtie, or ignorant miſ-takings, but wilfull crimes, obſtinate impieties, in ſpight of the doctrines, reprooſes, menaces, miraculous
B conuictions of the holy Prophets, which God ſent amongſt them: Thy deſtruction is of thy ſelfe, O Iſrael; what could the iuſt hand of the Almightie doe leſſe then conſume a nation ſo incorrigibly flagitious? A nation ſo vnthankfull for mercies, ſo impatient of remedies, ſo vncapable of repentance: ſo obliged, ſo warned, ſo ſhameleſſely, ſo lawleſſely wicked?

What nation vnder heauen can now challenge an vndefaiſible intereſt in God; when Iſrael it ſelfe is caſt off? What Church in the world can ſhow ſuch deare loue-tokens from the Almightie as this, now-abhorred, and adulterous ſpouſe? He that ſpared not the naturall Oliue, ſhall he ſpare the wild? It is not for vs ſinners of the Gentiles to be highminded, but awfull.

The Iſraelites are caried captiue into Aſſyria; thoſe goodly Cities of the tenne Tribes may not lie waſt, and vnpeopled: The wiſedome of the victor finds it fit to tranſplant his owne Colonies thither; that ſo he may raiſe profit thence, with ſecuritie: From Babylon therefore, and Cuthah, and Aua, and Hamath, and Sepharuaim, doth he ſend of his owne ſubiects to poſſeſſe, and inhabit the Cities
C of Samaria. The land doth not brooke her new Tenants: They feared not the Lord; (how ſhould they, they knew him not?) Therefore the Lord ſent Lyons amongſt them which ſlew ſome of them: Not the verieſt Pagan can be excuſed for his ignorance of God; Euen the deprauedſt nature might teach vs to tremble at a Deitie; It is iuſt with the Almightie not to put vp neglect, where hee hath beſtowed reaſon.

The brute creatures are ſent to reuenge the quarrell of their Maker, vpon worſe beaſts, then themſelues. Still hath God left himſelfe Champions in Iſrael: Lyons teare the Aſſyrians in pieces; and put them in mind, that, had it not beene for wickedneſſe, that land needed not to haue changed maſters. The great Lord of the world cannot want meanes to plague offenders: If the men be gone, yet the beaſts are there; And if the beaſts had beene gone, yet ſo long as there were ſtones in the wals, in the quarries, God would be ſure of auengers: There is no ſecuritie but in being at peace with God.

The King of Aſſyria is ſued to, for remedie: Euen theſe Pagans haue learned D to know that theſe Lyons were ſent from a God; that this puniſhment is for ſinne; They know not the manner of the God of the land, therefore he hath ſent Lyons among them: Theſe blind Heathen that thinke euery land hath a ſeuerall God, yet, hold that God, worthy of his owne worſhip; yet, hold that worſhip muſt be grounded vpon knowledge; the want of that knowledge, puniſhable, the puniſhment of that want, iuſt and diuine: How much worſe then Aſſyrians are they that are readie to aſcribe all calamities to nature, to chance? That acknowledging but one God of all the world, are yet careleſſe to know him, to ſerue him?

One of the Prieſts of Iſrael is appointed to be carried backe to Samaria, to teach the Aſſyrian Colonie the faſhions of the God of the land; not for deuotion, but for impunitie: vaine Politicians thinke to ſatisfie God by patching vp religions; any formes are good enough for an vnknowne deitie: The Aſſyrian Prieſts teach, and practiſe the worſhip of their owne Gods; The Iſraelitiſh Prieſt preſcribes the worſhip of the true God; The people will follow both; the one out of liking, the other out of feare: What a prodigious mixture was here of religions? true with falſe, Iewiſh with Paganiſh, diuine with diuelliſh; Euery diuiſion of theſe tranſplanted Aſſyrians had their ſeuerall dieties, high places, ſacrifices; This high Prieſt of Iſrael intercommons with euery of them: So as now theſe fathers of Samaritaniſme, are in at all; They feare the Lord and ſerue their idols: No beggers cloake is more peeced then the Religion of theſe new inhabitants of Iſrael. I know not how their bodies ſped for the Lyons, I am ſure their ſoules fared the worſe for this medlie: Aboue all things God hates a mungrell deuotion; If we be not all Iſrael, it were better to be all Aſhur; It cannot ſo much diſpleaſe God to be vnknowne or neglected, as to be conſorted with Idols.

HEZEKIAH and SENACHERIB.

2.Kings 18. and 19.

ISrael is gone, Iudah is left ſtanding; or rather ſome few ſprigs of thoſe two Tribes: ſo we haue ſeene in the ſhredding of ſome large Timber-tree, one or two boughes left at the top to hold vp the ſap. Who can but lament the poore remainders of that languiſhing kingdome of Dauid.

Take out of the two Tribes of Iudah, and Beniamin, one hundred and twentie thouſand, whom Pekah the King of Iſrael ſlew in one day. Take out two hundred thouſand that were carried away captiue to Samaria; Take out thoſe that were tranſported into the bondage of the Edomites; and thoſe that were ſubdued in the South parts, by the Philiſtims; alas what an handfull was left to the King of Iudah; ſcarce worth the name of a dominion: Yet, euen now, out of the gleeds of Iudah, doth God raiſe vp a glorious light to his forlorne Church; yea, from the wretched loynes of Ahaz, doth God fetch an holy Hezekiah. It had bin hard to conceiue the ſtate of Iudah worſe then it was; neither was it more miſerable, then ſinfull, and in regard of both, deſperate; when beyond hope, God reuiues this dying ſtocke of Dauid, and out of very ruines builds vp his owne houſe. Ahaz was not more the ill ſonne of a good father, then he was the ill father of a good ſonne. Hee was the ill ſonne of good Iotham, the ill father of good Hezekiah, Good Hezekiah makes amends for his fathers impietie; and puts a new life into the heartleſſe remnant of Gods people.

The wiſedome of our good God knowes when his aid will bee moſt ſeaſonable, moſt welcome; which he then loues to giue, when he finds vs left of all our hopes: That mercifull hand is reſerued for a dead lift; then, he failes vs not.

Now, you might haue ſeene this pious Prince buſily beſtirring himſelfe, in ſo late and needfull a reformation, remouing the high places, battering and burning the Idols, demoliſhing their Temples, cutting downe their groues, A opening the Temple, purging the altars, and veſſels, ſanctifying the Prieſts, rekindling the Lampes, renuing the incenſe, reinſtituting the ſacrifices, eſtabliſhing the order of Gods ſeruice, appointing the courſes, ſetling the maintenance of the Miniſters, publiſhing the decrees for the long-neglected Paſſe-ouer; celebrating it, and the other feaſts, with due ſolemnitie, incouraging the people, contributing bountifully to the offerings, and, in one word, ſo ordering all the affaires of God, as if he had beene ſent downe from heauen to reſtore Religion; as if Dauid himſelfe had beene aliue againe in this bleſſed heyre, not ſo much of his Crowne, as of his pietie. Oh Iudah, happie in thy Ezekiah, Oh Ezekiah happie in the gratious reſtauration of thy Iudah: Ahaz ſhall haue no thanke for ſuch a ſonne; The God that is able of the very ſtones to raiſe children to Abraham, raiſes a true ſeed of Dauid out of the corrupt loynes of an Idolater: That infinit mercie is not tied to the termes of an immediate propagation: For the ſpace of three hundred yeares, the man after Gods owne heart had no perfect heire till now; Till now did the high places ſtand: the deuotions of the beſt B Princes of Iudah were blemiſhed with ſome weake omiſſions; Now the zeale of good Ezekiah cleares all thoſe defects, and workes an intire change.

How ſeaſonably hath the prouidence of God kept the beſt man for the worſt times? When God hath a great worke to doe, he knowes to fit himſelfe with inſtruments.

No maruell if the Paganiſh Idols goe to wracke, when euen the brazen Serpent that Moſes had made by Gods owne appointment, is broken in peeces: The Iſraelites were ſtung with fiery Serpents, this brazen Serpent healed them, which they did no ſooner ſee, then they recouered: But now, ſuch was the venome of the Iſraelitiſh Idolatry, that this Serpent of braſſe, ſtung worſe then the fierie; That, which firſt cured by the eye, now by the eye poyſoned the ſoule; That which was at firſt, the type of a Sauiour, is now, the deadly Engine of the Enemie. Whiles it helped, it ſtood; it ſtood whiles it hurt not; but when once wicked abuſe hath turned it into an Idoll; what was it but Nehuſhtan?

C The holineſſe of the firſt inſtitution cannot priuiledge ought from the danger of a future profanation; nor, as the caſe may ſtand, from an vtter abolition: What antiquitie, what authoritie, what primarie ſeruice might this Serpent haue pleaded? All that cannot keepe it out of the duſt. Thoſe things which are neceſſarie in their being, beneficiall in their continuance, may ſtill remaine when their abuſe is purged; but thoſe things whoſe vſe is but temporarie, or whoſe duration is needleſſe and vnprofitable, may ceaſe with the occaſion, and much more periſh with an inſeparable abuſe. Ezekiah willingly forgets who made the Serpent, when he ſees the Iſraelites make it an Idoll: It is no leſſe intolerable for God, to haue a riuall of his owne making.

Since Hezekiah was thus, aboue all his Anceſtors, vpright with the Lord; it is no maruell if the Lord were with him; if he proſpered, whitherſoeuer he went; The ſame God that would haue his iuſtice magnified in the confuſion of the wicked Princes of Iſrael, and Iudah, would haue his mercie no leſſe acknowledged, in the bleſſings of faithfull Hezekiah.

D The great King of Aſſyria had in a ſort ſwallowed vp both the Kingdomes of Iudah, and Iſrael; yet not with an equall crueltie; He made Iſrael captiue, Iudah (vpon a willing compoſition) tributarie. Iſrael is vaniſhed in a tranſportation; Iudah continues vnder the homage wherein Ahaz left it: Hezekiah had raigned but ſixe yeares when he ſaw his neighbours of Iſrael packing into a miſerable captiuitie; and the proud Aſſyrians Lording in their Cities; yet, euen then, when he ſtood alone, in a corner of Iudah, durſt Hezekiah draw his necke out of the yoke of the great, and victorious Monarch of Aſſyria; and, as if one enemie had not beene enough, at the ſame time, he falls vpon the incroaching Philiſtims, and preuailes. It is not to be asked, what powers a man can make, A but in what termes he ſtands with heauen. The vnworthy father of Hezekiah had clogged Iudah with this ſeruile fealtie to the Aſſyrian; what the conditions of that ſubiection were, it is too late, and needleſſe for vs to inquire; If this payment were limited to a period of time, the expiration acquitted him; If vpon couenants of ayde, the ceſſation thereof acquitted him; If the reforming of Religion, and baniſhment of Idolatrie ranne vnder the cenſure of rebellion, the quarrell on Hezekiahs part, was holy, on Senacheribs vniuſt: but if the reſtipulation were abſolute, and the withdrawing of this homage vpon none but ciuill grounds, I cannot excuſe the good King from a iuſt offence: It was an humane frailtie in an obliged Prince by force to affect a free and independant Soueraigntie.

What doe we mince that fact, which holy Ezekiah himſelfe cenſures? I haue offended, returne from me; what thou putſt on me will I beare? The comfort of libertie may not be had with an vnwarranted violence. Holineſſe cannot free vs from infirmitie: It was a weakneſſe to doe that act, which muſt be ſoone vndone with much repentance, and more loſſe; This reuolt ſhall coſt Ezekiah B (beſides much humiliation) three hundred yearely Talents of ſiluer, thirtie Talents of gold: How much better had it beene for the Cities of Iudah to haue purchaſed their peace with an eaſie Tribute, then warre with intolerable taxation?

Fourteene yeares had good Hezekiah fed vpon a ſweete peace, ſauced onely with a ſet penſion; now hee muſt prepare his Pallat for the bitter morſels of warre. The King of Aſſyria is comne vp againſt all the defenced Cities of Iudah; and hath taken them: Ezekiah is faine to buy him out with too many Talents; The poore Kingdome of Iudah is exhauſt, with ſo deepe a payment; in ſo much as the King is forced to borrow of God himſelf, for Hezekiah gaue him all the ſiluer that was found in the houſe of the Lord; yea, at that time did Hezekiah cut off the gold from the doores of the Temple of the Lord, and from the Pillars which he had ouer-laide, and gaue it to the King of Aſſyria. How hard was good Hezekiah driuen, ere he would be thus bold with his God? Surely if the mines, or Coffers of Iudah could haue yeelded any ſupplie, this ſhift had beene hate- C full; to fetch backe for an enemie, that which he had giuen to his Maker: Onely neceſſitie excuſes that from ſacriledge in the ſonne, which will, made ſacriledge in the father: That which is once deuoted to a ſacred vſe, may not bee called backe to a prophane: But he whoſe the earth is, and the fulneſſe of it, is not ſo taken with our metals, that he ſhould more regard our gold, then our welfare: His goodneſſe cannot grudge any outward thing for the price of our peace: To rob God out of couetouſneſſe, or wantonneſſe, or neglect is iuſtly damnable; we cannot robbe him out of our neede; for then he giues vs all wee take; and bids vs ranſome our liues, our liberties; The treaſures of Gods houſe were precious, for his ſake, to whom they were conſecrated, but more precious in the ſight of the Lord was the life of any one of his Saints.

Euerie true Iſraelite was the ſpirituall houſe of God; why ſhould not the doore of the materiall Temple be willingly ſtripped, to ſaue the whole frame of the ſpirituall Temple. Take therefore, O Hezekiah what thou haſt giuen, no D gold is too holy to redeeme thy vexation: It matters not ſo much how bare the doores of the Temple be, in a caſe of neceſſitie, as how well the inſides be furniſhed with ſincere deuotion. O the cruell hard heartedneſſe of thoſe men which will rather ſuffer the liuing Temples of God to be ruined; then they will ranſome their life, with farthings.

It could not be, but that the ſtore of needy Iudah muſt ſoone be drawne drie with ſo deepe an exaction; that ſumme cannot be ſent, becauſe it cannot be raiſed: The cruell Tyrant calls for his Brickes whiles he allowes no ſtraw; His anger

A anger is kindled becauſe Ezekiahs Coffers haue a bottome; with a mightie hoſt doth he come vp againſt Ieruſalem, therefore ſhall that City be deſtroyed by him, becauſe by him it hath bin impoueriſhed; the inhabitants muſt bee ſlaues, becauſe they are beggers.

Oh lamentable, and, in ſight, deſperate condition of diſtreſſed Ieruſalem: wealth it had none; ſtrength it had, but a little; all the Countrey round about was ſubdued to the Aſſyrian; that proud victor hath begirt the wals of it, with an innumerable army, ſcorning that ſuch a ſhouell-full of earth ſhould ſtand out but one day; Poore Ieruſalem ſtands alone, block't vp with a world of enemies, helpleſſe, friendleſſe, comfortleſſe; looking for the worſt of an hoſtilefurie; when Tartan and Rabſaris, and Rabſhakeh, the great Captaines of the Aſſyrians call to a parlee. Hezekiah ſends to them three of his prime officers, his Steward, his Secretarie, his Recorder. Lord; what inſolent blaſphemies doth that foule mouth of Rabſhakeh belch out againſt the liuing God, againſt his anointed ſeruant?

How pauſibly doth he diſcourage the ſubiects of Ezekiah, how proudly B doth he inſult vpon their impotencie, how doth he braue them with baſe offers of aduantage; and laſtly, how cunningly doth he fore-lay their confidence (which was onely left them) in the Almightie, proteſting not to be come vp hither without the Lord; The Lord ſaid to me, Go vp to this land, and deſtroy it; How fearefull a word was this? The reſt were but vaine crackes, this was a thunderbolt to ſtrike dead the heart of Ezekiah; If Rabſhakeh could haue beene beleeued, Ieruſalem could not but haue flowne open; How could it thinke to ſtand out no leſſe againſt God, then men? Euen thus doth the great enemie of of man-kind; if he can diſ-hearten the ſoule from a dependance vpon the God of mercies, the day is his: Lewd miſcreants care not how they be-lie God for their owne purpoſes.

Eliakim the Steward of Hezekiah well knew, how much the people muſt needs be affected with this pernicious ſuggeſtion; and faine would therefore, if not ſtop with wicked mouth, yet diuert theſe blaſphemies into a foraigne expreſſion. I wonder that any wiſe man ſhould looke for fauour from an enemie: C Speake I pray thee, to thy ſeruants in the Syrian language: What was this but to teach an aduerſarie how to doe miſchiefe? Wherefore came Rabſhakeh thither but to gall Ezekiah, to with-draw his ſubiects? That tongue is propereſt for him which may hurt moſt; Deprecations of euill to a malicious man are no better then aduices. An vnknowne idiome is fit to keepe counſell; they are familiar words that muſt conuey ought to the vnderſtanding. Lewd men are the worſe for admonitions.

Rabſhakeh had not ſo ſtrained his throat, to corrupt the citizens of Ieruſalem, had it not beene for the humble obteſtation of Eliakim; Now he reares vp his voyce, and holds his ſides, and roares out his double blaſphemies; one while affrighting the people with the great power of the mightie King of Aſſyria; another while debaſing the contemptible force of Hezekiah; now ſmoothly alluring them, with the aſſurances of a ſafe and ſucceſſefull yeeldance; then, diſcouraging them with the impoſſibilitie of their deliuerance; laying before them the fearefull examples of greater nations vanquiſhed, by that ſword, D which was now ſhaken ouer them; triumphing in the impotencie, and miſcarriage of their gods: Who are they among all the gods if the Countries, that haue deliuered their Countrie out of mine hand, That the Lord ſhould deliuer Ieruſalem out of mine hand? Where are the gods of Arpad, and of Hamath? Where? but in that helliſh darkeneſſe, that is ordained both for them, and for thee, barbarous Aſſyrian, that dareſt thus open thy mouth againſt thy Maker: And can thoſe Atheous eyes of thine ſee no difference of gods? Is there no diſtance betwixt a ſtocke, or ſtone, and that infinite Deitie that made heauen & earth? It is enough that thou now feeleſt it; thy torments haue taught thee to late, that thou affronteſt a liuing God.

How did the fingers and tongues of theſe Iewiſh Peeres & people itch to be at A Rabſhakeh; in a reuengefull anſwer to thoſe impieties: All is whuſht; not a word ſounds from thoſe walls: I doe not more wonder at Hezekiahs wiſedome, in commanding ſilence, then at the ſubiects obedience in keeping it; This rayler could not be more ſpighted, then with no anſwer; and if he might be exaſperated, he could not be reformed; beſides, the rebounding of thoſe multiplied blaſphemies, might leaue ſome ill impreſſions in the multitude; This ſulphurous flaske, therefore, dyes in his owne ſmoke: onely leauing an hatefull ſtench behind it.

Good Hezekiah cannot eaſily paſſe ouer this deuilliſh oratorie; no ſooner doth he heare of it, then he rends his clothes, and couers himſelfe with ſack-cloth, and betakes himſelfe to the houſe of the Lord; and ſends his officers, and the graueſt of the Prieſts, clad in ſack-cloth, to Eſay the Prophet of God, with a dolefull and querelous meſſage.

Oh the noble pietie of Hezekiah; notwithſtanding all the ſtraits of the ſiege, and the danger of ſo powerfull an enemie; I find not the garments of this good King, any otherwiſe then whole, and vnchanged; but now ſo ſoone as B euer a blaſphemie is vttered againſt the Maieſtie of his God, (though by a Pagan dog) his clothes are torne, and turned into ſack-cloth: There can be no better argument of an vpright heart, then to be more ſenſible of the indignities offered to God, then of our owne dangers. Euen theſe deſperate reproches ſend Ezekiah to the Temple: The more we ſee Gods name prophaned, the more ſhall we, if we be truely religious, loue and honour it.

Whither ſhould Hezekiah runne but to the Temple, to the Prophet? There, there is the refuge of all faithfull ones; where they may ſpeake with God, where they may be ſpoken to from God, and fetch comfort from both: It is not poſſible that a beleeuing heart ſhould be diſappointed: Iſaiah ſends that meſſage to the good King, that may drie vp his teares, and cheere his countenance, and change his ſuit; Thus ſaith the Lord Be not afraid of the words which thou haſt heard, with which the ſeruants of the King of Syria haue blaſphemed me; Behold I will ſend a blaſt vpon him, and he ſhall heare a rumor, and ſhall returne to his owne Land; and I will cauſe him to fall by the ſword in his owne Land. C

Loe; euen whiles Senacherib was in the height of his iollitie and aſſurance; Gods Prophet fore-ſees his ruine; and giues him for dead, whiles that Tyrant thought of nothing but life and victorie. Proud and ſecure worldlings little dreame of the neere approach of their iudgements: whiles they are plotting their deepeſt deſignes, the ouer-ruling iuſtice of the Almightie hath contriued their ſudden confuſion, and ſees, and ſets them their day.

Rabſhakeh returnes, and finding the King of Aſſyria warring againſt Libnah, reports to him the ſilent, (and therein) contemptuous anſwer, and firme reſolutions of Hezekiah; In the meane time God pulls Senacherib by the eare, with the newes of the approching armie of Tirhakah King of Ethiopia, which was comming vp to raiſe the ſiege; and to ſuccour his confederats: That dreadfull power will not allow the Aſſyrian King, in perſon to lead his other forces vp againſt Ieruſalem, nor to continue his former Leaguer long before thoſe walls. But now, he writes big words to Hezekiah, and thinkes with his thundering menaces to beat open the gates, and leuell the bulwarks of Ieruſalem: Like D the true maſter of Rabſhakeh, he reuiles the God of Heauen; and baſely parallels him with the dunghill deities of the heathen.

Good Ezekiah gets him into his ſanctuarie; there he ſpreds the letters before the Lord; and calls to the God that dwels betweene the Cherubims, to reuenge the blaſphemies of Senacherib, to protect and reſcue himſelfe, and his people, Euery one of thoſe words pierced heauen; which was no leſſe open to mercie vnto Hezekiah, then, vengeance to Senacherib; Now is Iſaiah addreſſed with

A ſecond meſſage of comfort to him, who doubtleſſe diſtruſted not the firſt: only the reiteration of that furious blaſphemie made him take faſter hold, by his faithfull deuotion. Now, the iealous God in a diſdaine of ſo blaſphemous a conteſtation, riſes vp in a ſtile of Maieſtie, and gloriouſly tramples vpon this ſaucie inſolencie, Becauſe thy rage againſt me, and thy tumult is come vp into mine eares, therefore I will put my hooke into thy noſe, and my bridle into thy lips: and will turne thee backe by the way thou cameſt. Loe, Senacherib, the God of heauen makes a beaſt of thee, who haſt ſo brutiſhly ſpurned at his name; If thou be a rauenous Beare, he hath an hooke for thy noſthrils: If thou be a reſtie horſe, he hath a bridle for thy mouth; In ſpight of thee, thou ſhalt follow his hooke, or his bridle; and ſhalt be led to thy iuſt ſhame by either.

It is not for vs to be the Lords of our owne actions; Thus ſaith the Lord concerning the King of Aſſyria; He ſhall not come into this Citie, nor ſhoote an arrow there, nor come before it with ſhield, nor caſt a banke againſt it, by the way that hee came ſhall be returne, &c. Impotent men, what are we in the hands of the Almightie? we purpoſe, he ouer-rules; we talke of great matters, and thinke to B doe wonders; he blowes vpon our proiects, and they vaniſh with our ſelues: He that hath ſet bounds to the Sea, hath appointed limits to the rage of the proudeſt enemies; yea, euen the Deuils themſelues are confined; Why boaſt yee your ſelues, O yee Tyrants, that yee can doe miſchiefe; yee are ſtinted: and euen within thoſe liſts, is confuſion.

O the Trophees of diuine Iuſtice, That very night the Angell of the Lord went out, and ſmote in the campe of the Aſſyrians an hundred foureſcore and fiue thouſand, and when they aroſe earely in the morning, behold they were all dead corps.

How ſpeedy an execution was this, how miraculous? No humane arme ſhall haue the glory of this victory; It was God that was defied by that preſumptuous Aſſyrian; It is God that ſhall right his owne wrongs; Had the Egyptian, or Ethyopian forces beene come vp, though the ſame God had done this worke by them yet ſome praiſe of this ſlaughter had perhaps cleau'd to their fingers. Now an inuiſible hand ſheds all this blood; that his very enemies may cleare him from all partnerſhip of reuenge. Go now wicked Senacherib, and tell of C the gods of Hamath and Arpad. and Sepharuaim, and Hena, and Iuah, which thou haſt deſtroyed, and ſay, that Hezekiahs God is but as one of theſe: Goe, and adde this Deity to the number of thy conqueſts: Now, ſay that Ezekiahs God in whom he truſted hath deceiued him, and graced thy Tryumphs.

With ſhame and griefe enough is that ſheaped Tyran returned to his Niniuie, hauing left behinde him, all the pride and ſtrength of Aſſyria, for compoſt to the Iewiſh fields. Well were it for thee O Senacherib, if thou couldeſt eſcape thus; vengeance waits for thee at home, and welcomes thee into thy place; whiles thou art worſhipping in the houſe of Niſroch thy god, two of thine owne ſons ſhall be thine executioners. See now if that falſe Deity of thine can preſerue thee from that ſtroke which the true God ſends thee by the hand of thine owne fleſh; Hee that ſlew thine hoaſt by his Angels, ſlayes thee by thy ſonnes: The ſame Angel that killed all thoſe thouſands, could as eaſily haue ſmitten thee; but he rather reſerues thee for the further torment of an vnnaturall ſtroke, that thou mayeſt ſee too late, how eaſie is it for him in ſpight of thy God, to arme thine D owne loynes againſt thee.

Thou art auenged, O God, thou art auenged plentifully of thine enemies. Whoſoeuer ſtriues with thee, is ſure to gaine nothing but loſſe, but ſhame, but death, but hell. The Aſſyrians are ſlaine, Senacherib is rewarded for his blaſphemy: Ieruſalem is reſcued, Hezekiah reioyces, the nations wonder and tremble. O loue the Lord all ye Saints, for the Lord preſerueth the faithfull, and plenteouſly rewardeth the proud doer.

Hezekiah ſicke, recouered, viſited.

H*Ezekiah* was freed from the ſiege of the Aſſyrians, but he is ſurpriſed with a diſeaſe: he that deliuered him from the hand of his enemies, ſmites him with ſickneſſe: God doth not let vs looſe from all afflictions, when he redeemes vs from one.

To thinke that Ezekiah was either not thankefull enough for his deliuerance, or too much lifted vp with glorie of ſo miraculous a fauour; were an iniurious miſ-conſtruction of the hand of God; and an vncharitable cenſure of an holy Prince: For, though no fleſh and bloud can auoid the iuſt deſert of bodily puniſhment, yet God doth not alwayes ſtrike with an intuition of ſinne; ſometimes he regards the benefit of our triall; ſometimes the glorie of his mercy in our cure. B

2. Kings 20.

It was no ſleight diſtemper, that ſeized vpon Ezekiah, but a diſeaſe both painfull, and fierce, and in nature deadly. O God, how thou laſheſt euen thoſe whom thou loueſt: Hadſt thou euer any ſuch dearling in the throne of Iudah, as Hezeki- Yet he no ſooner breatheth from a miſerable ſiege, then hee panteth vnder a ah? mortall ſicknes: when as yet he had not ſo much, as the comfort of a child, to ſucceed him, thy Prophet is ſent to him with the heauie meſſage of his death, Set thine houſe in order, for thou ſhalt die and not liue. It is no ſmall mercie of God that he giues vs warning of our end; we ſhall make an ill vſe of ſo gratious a premonition, if we make not a meet preparation for our paſſage. Euen thoſe that haue not an houſe, yet haue a ſoule; no ſoule can want important affaires C to be ordered for a finall diſſolution; the neglect of this beſt thrift is deſperate. Set thy ſoule in order, O man, for thou ſhalt die and not liue.

If God had giuen Ezekiah a ſon, nature bad bequeathed his eſtate; now, hee muſt ſtudie to find heyres: Euen theſe outward things, (though in themſelues worthleſſe) require our carefull diſpoſition, to thoſe we leaue behind vs; and if we haue delayed theſe thoughts, till then, our ſicke beds may not complaine of their importunitie; We cannot leaue to our families a better legacie, then Peace.

Neuer was the Prophet Eſay vnwelcome to this good King, vntill now: Euen ſad tidings muſt be carried by thoſe meſſengers, which would be faithfull: neither may we regard ſo much how they will be taken, as by whom they are ſent.

It was a bold and harſh word to ſay to a King, Thou ſhalt die, and not liue: I doe not heare Hezekiah rage, and fret at the meſſage; or threat the bearer, but he meekely turnes his face to the wall, and weepes, and prayes: Why to the D wall? Was it for the greater ſecrecie of his deuotion? was it for the more freedome from all diſtraction? was it that the paſſion which accompanied his prayer, might haue no witneſſes? Or, was it for that this wall lookt towards the Temple, which his heart and eyes ſtill moued vnto, though his feet could not?

Howſoeuer, the patient ſoule of good Ezekiah turnes it ſelfe to that holy God, from whom he ſmarts, and bleeds; and poures out it ſelfe into a feruent deprecation, I beſeech thee, O Lord, remember now how I haue walked before thee in

A in truth, and with a perfect heart; and haue done that which is good in thy ſight.

Couldſt thou feare, O Ezekiah, that God had forgotten thine integritie? The grace that was in thee, was his owne worke; could he in thee neglect himſelfe? Or doſt thou therefore doubt of his remembrance of thy faithfulneſſe, becauſe he ſummons thee to receiue the crowne of thy faithfulneſſe, glorie, and immortalitie? wherein canſt thou be remembred, if this be to forget thee? What challenge is this? Is God a debter to thy perfection? Hath thine holy carriage merited any thing from that infinite Iuſtice? Farre, farre where theſe preſumptuous conceits from that humble and mortified ſoule: Thou hadſt hated thine own breſt, if it could once haue harboured ſo proud a thought. This perfection of thine was no other, then an honeſt ſoundneſſe of heart, and life, which thou knoweſt God had promiſed to reward: It was the mercie of the couenant that thou pleadedſt, not the merit of thine obedience.

Euerie one of theſe words were ſteeped in teares: But what meant theſe words, theſe teares? I heare not of any ſuit moued by Hezekiah; onely he wiſhes B to be remembred, in that which could neuer be forgotten, though hee ſhould haue intreated for an obliuion.

Speake out Hezekiah, what is it that thy teares craue, whiles thy lips expreſſe not? O let me liue, and I ſhall praiſe thee O God.

In a naturall man none could wonder at this paſſionate requeſt; who can but wonder at it, in a Saint? whoſe happineſſe doth but then begin, when his life ceaſeth: whoſe miſerie doth but then end, when his death enters: the word of faith, is, Oh let me die, that I may inioy thee. How then doth the good King crie at the newes of that death, which ſome reſolute Pagans haue intertained with ſmiles? Certainely, the beſt man cannot ſtrip himſelfe of ſome fleſh; and whiles nature hath an vndeniable ſhare in him, he can not but retaine ſome ſmatch of the ſweetneſſe of life, of the horror of diſſolution; Both theſe were in Hezekiah, neither of thē could tranſport him into this paſſion: they were higher reſpects that ſwayed with ſo holy a Prince; a tender care of the glorie of God, a carefull pittie of the Church of God; His very teares ſaid; O God, thou C knoweſt that the eyes of the world are bent vpon me, as one that hath abandoned their idolatrie, and reſtored thy ſincere worſhip; I ſtand alone in the midſt of a wicked and idolatrous generation, that lookes thorough all my actions, all my euents; If now they ſhall ſee me ſnatcht away in the midſt of my dayes, what will theſe Heathen ſay; how can thy great name but ſuffer in this mine vntimely extinction?

Beſides, what will become of thy poore Church, Which I ſhall leaue feebly religious, and as yet ſcarce warme, in the courſe of a pious reformation? how ſoone ſhall it be miſerably ouer-growne with ſuperſtition, and heatheniſme; how ſoone ſhall the wild Boare of Aſſyria root vp this little vineyard of thine? What need I beſeech thee, O Lord, to regard thy name, to regard thine inheritance?

What one teare of Hezekiah can runne waſt? What can that good King pray for, vnheard, vnanſwered? Senacherib came in a proud confidence to ſwallow vp his citie, and people: prayers and teares ſend him away confounded: Death D comes to ſwallow vp his perſon, (and that not without authoritie) prayers and teares ſend him away diſappointed. Before Iſaiah was gone out into the middle Court, the word of the Lord came to him, ſaying, Turne againe, and tell Hezekiah the Captaine of my people; Thus ſaith the Lord, the God of Dauid thy father; I haue heard thy prayer, I haue ſeene thy teares; behold I will heale thee; On the third day thou ſhalt goe vp to the houſe of the Lord, and I will adde to thy dayes fifteene yeares.

What ſhall we ſay then, O God, haſt thou thus ſoone changed thy purpoſe?

Was

A Was it not thy true meſſage which thy Prophet, euen now, deliuered to Ezekiah? Is ſome-what falne out that thou fore-ſaweſt not? or doeſt thou now decree ſomewhat thou meaneſt not? The very thought of any of theſe were no better then blaſphemous impietie. Certainely, Hezekiah could not liue one day longer, then was eternally decreed; The decree of Gods eternall counſell had from euerlaſting determined him fifteene yeares yet longer: Why then doth God ſay, by his Prophet, Thou ſhalt die, and not liue? He is not as man that he ſhould repent; the meſſage is changed, the will is not changed; yea rather the meſſage is explicated, not changed; For the ſignified will of God, though it ſound abſolutely, yet muſt be vnderſtood with condition; that tells Hezekiah what he muſt expect from the nature of his diſeaſe, what would befall him, without his deprecations: There was nothing but death in the ſecond cauſes; what euer ſecret purpoſe there was in the firſt; and that purpoſe ſhall lie hid for a time, vnder a reſerued condition: The ſame decree that ſayes, Niniue ſhall be deſtroyed, meanes, if Niniue repent, it ſhall not be deſtroyed; he that finds good reaſon to ſay. Hezekiah ſhall die, yet ſtill meanes, if the quickned deuotion of Hezekiah ſhall importune me for life, it ſhall be protracted. B And the ſame God that hath decreed this addition of fifteene yeares, had decreed to ſtirre vp the ſpirit of Hezekiah, to that vehement and weeping importunitie, which ſhould obtaine it. O God, thou workeſt thy good pleaſure in vs, and with vs; and by thy reuealed will moueſt vs in thoſe wayes, whereby thou effecteſt thy ſecret will.

How wonderfull is this mercie? Hezekiahs teares are not drie vpon his cheekes, yea his breath is not paſſed his lips, when God ſends him a comfortable anſwer. How carefull is the God of compaſſions, that his holy ſeruant ſhould not languiſh one houre, in the expectation of his denounced death? What ſpeed was here, as in the errand, ſo in the act of recouerie? within three dayes ſhall Hezekiah be vpon his feet; yea his feet ſhall ſtand in the Courts of Gods houſe; he that now in his bed ſighes, and grones, and weeps out a petition, ſhall then ſing out a thankſgiuing in the Temple. Oh thou that heareſt the prayer, vnto thee ſhall all fleſh come: With what cheerefull aſſurance ſhould we approach to the throne of that grace, which neuer failed any ſuppliant. C

Neither was this grant more ſpeedie, then bountifull; we are wont to reckon ſeuen yeares for the life of a man; and now, behold, more then two liues hath God added to the age of Hezekiah. How vnexampled a fauour is this? who euer but Hezekiah knew his period ſo long before? the fixedneſſe of his terme, is no leſſe mercie, then the protraction; we muſt be content to liue or die at vncertainties; we are not worthy to calculate the date of our owne times: Teach vs, O Lord, ſo to number our dayes, that we may apply our hearts to wiſedome.

There is little ioy in many dayes, if they be euill; Ezekiah ſhall not be bleſſed onely with life, but with peace; The proud Aſſyrian threatens an inuaſion; his late foyle ſtill ſtickes in his ſtomacke, and ſtirs him to a reuenge; the hooke is in his noſtrils, he cannot moue whither he liſt; The God of heauen will maintaine his owne quarrell: I will defend this Citie for mine owne ſake, and for my ſeruant Dauids ſake. Loe; for his life, Ezekiah is beholden (next vnder the infinite goodneſſe of God) to his prayers; for his protection, to the deare memory of D his father Dauid; ſurely for ought we find, Ezekiah was no leſſe vpright, and leſſe offenſiue then Dauid; yet both Ezekiah and Ieruſalem ſhall fare the better for Dauids ſake, aboue three hundred yeares after.

To that man after his owne heart, had God ingaged himſelfe, by his gracious promiſe, to preſerue his throne, his ſeed: God loues to remember his ancient mercies: How happie a thing is it to be faithfull with God; this is the way to oblige thoſe which are yet vnborne; and to intayle bleſſings vpon the ſucceſſions of future generations.

A It ſeemes it was ſome peſtilent vlcer that thus indangered the life of Hezekiah. Iſaiah is not a Prophet onely, but a Phyſitian. And Iſaiah ſaid, Take a lump of figs: He that gaue an aſſurance of recouerie, giues a receit for the recouerie. The decree of God includes the meanes: neither can the medicine worke without a word; neither will the word worke without the medicine; both of them muſt meet in the cure: If we ſo truſt the promiſe, that we neglect the preſcript, wee preſume to no purpoſe. Happie is that ſoule, that ſo regards the promiſe of Gods Prophets, as that withall he receiues their counſels.

Nothing could be more proper for the ripening of hard and purulent tumors, then drying figs; Herein Iſaiahs direction was according to nature; Wherefore ſhould wee balke the ordinarie road, where it is both faire and neere?

The ſudden contradiction of the meſſage cauſes a iuſt difficultie in the aſſent. Hezekiah therefore craues a ſigne; not for that he diſtruſted, but that he might truſt the more; we can neuer take too faſt hold of thoſe promiſes of God, which haue not more comfort in the application, then naturall impoſſibilitie in the B performance. We beleeue, Lord, helpe our vnbeleefe.

The ſicke King hath his option; His father was offerd a ſigne and refuſed it; he ſues for one, and obtaines it: Shall the ſhadow goe forward ten degrees, or backe ten degrees? As if heauen it ſelfe lay open to his choyce; and were readie either to mend this pace, or retire for his confirmation; What creature is not cheerefully forward to obey the faith of Gods ſeruants?

Hezekiah faſtens rather vpon that ſigne which is more hard, more diſagreeing from the courſe of nature; not without good reaſon; Euerie proofe muſt be clearer then the thing to be proued, neither may there want a meet proportion betwixt both; now the going forward of the ſhadow was a motion, no other then naturall, the recouerie of that peſtilent diſeaſe was againſt the ſtreame of nature; the more difficult ſigne therefore, the ſurer euidence.

Whether ſhall we more wonder at the meaſure of the loue of God to Hezekiah, or at the power of Iſaiahs faith in God? Out of both, either the Sunne goes backe in heauen that his ſhadow may goe backe on earth, or the ſhadow no leſſe
C miraculouſly goes backe on earth, whiles the Sun goes forward in heauen. It is true that the Prophet ſpeakes of the ſhadow, not of the Sunne; except perhaps becauſe the motion of the Sunne is beſt diſcerned by the ſhadow; and the motion of the ſhadow is led by the courſe of the Sunne: beſides, that the demonſtration of this miracle is reported to be locall in the Diall of Ahaz, not vniuerſall, in the ſenſible length of the day; withall, the retrait of the Sunne had made a publike and noted change in the frame of nature, this particular alteration of the ſhadow in places limited, might ſatiſfie no leſſe without a confuſiue mutation in the face of the world; Whetherſoeuer; to draw the Sunne backe together with the ſhadow; or to draw the ſhadow backe without the Sunne was the proofe of a diuine omnipotencie; able therfore to draw backe the life of Hezekiah, fifteene degrees, from the night of death; towards which it was haſting.

O God, thou wilt rather alter the courſe of heauen and earth, then the faith of thy children ſhall ſincke for want of ſupportation.

D It ſhould ſeeme the Babylonians finding the Aſſyrian power abated by the reuengefull hand of Gods Angell, and their owne diſcord, tooke this aduantage of a reuolt; and now to ſtrengthen their part, fall in with Hezekiah King of Iudah, whom they found the old enemie to the Aſſyrians, and the great fauourite of heauen: Him they wooe with gifts; him they congratulate with Ambaſſages: The fame of Hezekiahs ſickneſſe, recouerie, forme, and aſſurance of cure, haue drawne thither meſſengers, and preſents from Berodach Baladan King of Babylon.

A The Caldees were curious ſearchers into the ſecrets of nature, eſpecially into the motions of the celeſtiall bodies; Though there had beene no politicke relations, this very Aſtronomicall miracle had beene enough to fetch them to Ieruſalem, that they might ſee the man, for whoſe ſake the Sunne forſooke his place, or the ſhadow forſooke the Sunne.

How eaſily haue we ſeene thoſe holy men miſ-carried by proſperitie, againſt whom no miſeries could preuaile? He that ſtood out ſtoutly againſt all the Aſſyrian onſets, clinging the faſter to his God, by how much he was harder aſſaulted by Senacherib, melteth now with theſe Babylonian fauours, and runnes abroad into offenſiue weakeneſſes.

The Babylonian Ambaſſadors are too welcome to Ezekiah; As a man tranſported with the honor of their reſpectiue, and coſtly viſitations, he forgets his teares, and his turning to the wall; hee forgets their incompatible Idolatrie; ſo hugging them in his boſome, as if there had beene no cauſe of ſtrangeneſſe: All his doores flie open to them; and in a vaineglorious oſtentation all his new-gathered treaſures, all his ſtrong armories entertaine their eyes; nothing in his houſe, nothing in his Dominion is hid from them. B

Oh Ezekiah, what meanes this impotent ambition? It is not long ſince thou tareſt off the very plates of the Temple doores, to giue vnto Senacherib; and can thy treaſures be ſuddenly ſo multiplied, that they can be worthy to aſtoniſh forraine beholders? Or, if thy ſtorehouſe, were as rich as the earth, can thy heart be ſo vaine as to be lifted vp with theſe heauie metals? Didſt thou not ſee that heauen it ſelfe was at thy becke, whileſt thou wert humbled? and ſhall a little earthly droſſe haue power ouer thy ſoule? Can the flattering applauſe of ſtrangers let thee looſe into a proud ioy, whom the late meſſage of Gods Prophet reſolued into teares? Oh God, if thou do not keepe vs, as well in our ſunſhine, as in our ſtorme, we are ſure to periſh: As in all time of our tribulation, ſo in all time of our wealth, good Lord deliuer vs.

Alas, how ſleight doth this weakeneſſe ſeeme in our eyes, to reioyce in the abundance of Gods bleſſings? to call in forraine friends to be witneſſes of our plentie? to raiſe our conceits, ſome little, vpon the acclamations of others, vpon the value of our owne abilities? C Lay thy hand vpon thy mouth, O fooliſh fleſh and bloud when thou ſeeſt the cenſure of thy Maker.

Iſaiah the Prophet is ſent ſpeedily to Hezekiah, with a ſharpe and heart-breaking meſſage: Behold the dayes come that all that is in thine houſe, and that which thy fathers haue laid vp in ſtore vnto this day, ſhall be carried into Babylon; nothing ſhall be left, ſaith the Lord; And of thy ſons that ſhall iſſue from thee, which thou ſhalt be get, ſhall they take away, and they ſhall be Eunuches in the Palace of the King of Babylon.

No ſinne can be light in Hezekiah: the holineſſe of the perſon addes to the vnholineſſe of the act; Eminencie of profeſſion doubles both the offence, and the iudgement. This glorie ſhall end in an ignominious loſſe.

D The great and holy God will not digeſt pride in any, much leſſe in his owne. That which was the ſubiect of Hezekiahs ſinne, ſhall bee the matter of his puniſhment; thoſe with whom hee ſinned, ſhall be his auengers; It was his treaſure and munition, wherein he prides himſelfe to theſe men of Babylon: The men of Babylon ſhall carrie away his treaſure and munition; What now doth Hezekiah but tempt them with a glorious bootie; as ſome fond traueler that would ſhow his gold to a Theeſe?

Theſe worldly things are furtheſt off from the heart; Perhaps Hezekiah might not be much troubled with their loſſe: Loe, God comes cloſer to him, yet.

As yet was Ezekiah childleſſe; how much better had it bin to continue ſo ſtill, then to be plagued in his iſſue? He ſhall now beget children to ſeruitude; his

A loynes ſhall yeeld Pages to the Court of Babylon: whiles he ſees them borne Princes, he ſhall foreſee them made Eunuches in a forraigne Palace: What comfort can he take in the wiſhes and hopes of ſonnes, when ere they bee borne, he heares them deſtin'd to captiuitie and bondage?

This rod was ſmart, yet good Hezekiah kiſſes it; his heart ſtrucke him no leſſe, then the mouth of the Prophet; meekely therefore doth he yeeld to this diuine correction; Good is the Word of the Lord which thou haſt ſpoken. Thou haſt ſpoken this word, but from the Lord; it is not thine, but his; and being his, it muſt needs be, like himſelfe, good: Good becauſe it is iuſt, for I haue deſerued more, and worſe; Good, becauſe mercifull; for I ſuffer not according to my deſerts. It is not good, if there be peace and truth in my dayes? I haue deſerued a preſent paiment, O God thou deferreſt it; I haue deſerued it in perſon, thou reſerueſt it for thoſe whom I cannot yet ſo feele, becauſe they are not; I haue deſerued war and tumult, thou fauoureſt me with peace; I haue deſeru'd to be ouer-run with ſuperſtition, and Idolatry, thou bleſſeſt me with truth; ſhouldſt thou continue truth vnto me, (though vpon the moſt vnquiet termes) B the bleſſing were too good for me; but now thou haſt promiſed, and wilt not reuerſe it, that both truth and peace ſhall be in my dayes; Lord I adore thy iuſtice, I bleſſe thy mercie.

Gods children are neither waſpiſh nor ſullen when they are chid or beaten, but patiently hold their backes to the ſtripes of a diſpleaſed mercie; knowing how much more God is to be magnified, for what he might haue done, then repined at, for what he hath done; reſigning themſelues ouer into the hand of that gracious iuſtice, which in their ſmart ſeekes their reformation and glory.

MANASSEH.

C AT laſt, ſome three yeares after his recouerie, Hezekiah hath a ſonne; but ſuch a one, as if he could haue fore ſeene, orbitie had beene a bleſſing.

2.King 21.
And
1.Chron.33.

Still in the throne of Iudah there is a ſucceſſion, and interchange of good and euill: Good Iotham is ſucceeded by wicked Ahaz; wicked Ahaz is ſucceeded by good Ezekiah; Good Ezekiah is ſucceded by wicked Manaſſeh: Euill Princes ſucceed to good, for the exerciſe of the Church, and good ſucceed to euill, for the comfort of the Church.

The young yeares of Manaſſah giue aduantage to his miſcarriage; Euen, whiles he might haue beene vnder the Ferule, he ſwayed the Scepter: Whether may not a child be drawne, eſpecially to a gariſh, and puppet-like ſuperſtition? As infancie is capable of all impreſſions, ſo moſt of the worſt.

Neither did Manaſſeh beginne more earely then he held out long; He raig-
D ned more yeares then his good father liu'd: notwithſtanding the miraculous addition to his age; More then euer any King of Iudah, beſides, could reach: Length of dayes is no true rule of Gods fauour; As plants laſt longer then ſenſitiue creatures, and brute creatures out-liue the reaſonable; ſo, amongſt the reaſonable, it is no newes for the wickedly great, to inherit theſe earthly glories, longer then the beſt.

There wants not apparent reaſon for this difference; Good Princes are fetcht away to a better Crowne; They cannot be loſers, that exchange a weake and fading honor, for a perfection and eternitie of bleſſedneſſe: Wicked men liue A long to their owne diſaduantage; they do but carrie ſo many more brands to their hell: If therefore there be a iuſt man that periſheth in his righteouſneſſe; and there be a wicked man that prolongs his life in his wickedneſſe, farre be it from vs, either to pittie the remouall of the iuſt, or to enuie the continuance of the wicked; This continues to his loſſe, that departs to an happie aduancement.

It is verie like that Ezekiah marrying ſo late, in the vigour both of his age, and holineſſe, made a carefull choyce of a wife ſutable to his owne pietie; Neither had his delight beene ſo much in her (according to her name) if her delight had not beene, as his, in God; Their iſſue ſwarues from both, ſo fully inheriting the vices of his grand-father Ahaz, as if there had beene no interuention of an Ezekiah: So we haue ſeene the kernell of a well fruited plant degenerate into that crab, or willow, which gaue the originall to his ſtocke; yet can I not ſay that Ezekiah was as free from traducing euill to his ſonne Manaſſeh, as Ahaz was free from traducing good to his ſonne Hezekiah: Euill is incorporated into the beſt nature, whereas euen the leaſt good deſcends from aboue. B

We may not meaſure grace by meanes: Was it poſſible that Manaſſeh hauing beene trained vp in the religious Court of his father Hezekiah, vnder the eye of ſo holy Prophets and Prieſts, vnder the ſhadow of the Temple of God, after a childhood ſeaſoned with ſo gracious precepts, with ſo frequent exerciſe of deuotion, ſhould runne thus wild into all heatheniſh abominations; as if there had beene nothing but Idolatry in the ſeed of his conception, in the milke of his nouriſhment, in the rules of his inſtitution, in the practice of his examples? How vaine are all outward helps without the influence of Gods Spirit? and that Spirit breathes where he liſteth: good education raiſeth great hopes, but the proofe of them is in the diuine benediction.

I feare to looke at the out-rages of this wicked ſonne of Hezekiah: What hauocke doth he make in the Church of God? as if he had beene borne to ruine Religion, as if his onely felicitie had beene to vntwiſt, or teare, in one day, that holy web which his father had beene weauing, nine and twentie yeares? and contrarily, to ſet vp in one houre that offenſiue pile, which had beene aboue C three hundred yeares in pulling downe: ſo long had the high places ſtood; the zeale of Ezekiah in demoliſhing them honoured him, aboue all his predeceſſors; and now the firſt act of this greene head was their reedifying: That miſchiefe may be done in a day, which many ages cannot redreſſe.

Fearefull were the preſages of theſe bold beginnings; From the miſ-building of theſe Chappels of the Hils to the true God, Manaſſeh proceeds to erecting of alters to a falſe: euen to Baal, the God of Ahab, the ſtale Idoll of the heathen; yet further, not content with ſo few Deities, he worſhips all the hoaſt of heauen; and, that he might deſpight God yet more, he ſets vp altars to theſe abuſed riuals of their Maker, in the verie houſe of the Lord; that holy place doth he not feare to defile with the grauen Image of the groue, that he had made: Neuer Amorite did ſo wickedly as Manaſſeh; and, which was yet worſe, it ſufficed not to be thus wicked himſelfe, but he ſeduced Gods people to theſe abominations; and that his example might moue the more, he ſpares not his owne ſonne from the fire of the Idol-ſacrifice. Neither were his witcheries leſſe enormious, D then his Idolatrie; he obſerued times, he vſed inchantments, he dealt with familiar ſpirits, and with wizards: Neither were either of theſe worſe then his crueltie; He ſhed innocent bloud till he had filled Ieruſalem from one end to another.

O Manaſſeh, how no leſſe cruell wert thou to thine owne ſoule, then to thy Iudah: What an hideous liſt of monſtrous impietie is here; Any one of which were enough to draw iudgement vpon a world; but what hell is ſufficient for all together?

A What browes are not now lifted vp to an attentiue expectation of ſome preſent, and fearefull vengeance from God, vpon ſuch flagitious wickedneſſe? Therefore thus ſaith the Lord, Behold I am bringing ſuch euill vpon Ieruſalem, and Iudah, that whoſoeuer heareth of it, both his eares ſhall tingle: The perſon of Manaſſeh is not capable of reuenge enough; as his ſinne dilated it ſelfe by an infectious diffuſion to his people, ſo ſhall the puniſhment. We are ſenſible of the leaſt touch of our owne miſeries, how rarely are we affected with other mens calamities? yet this euill ſhall be ſuch, as that the rumor of it ſhall beat no eare that ſhall not glow with an aſtoniſhing commiſeration: What then O God, what ſhall that plague be, which thou threatneſt with ſo much preface of horror? I will ſtretch ouer Ieruſalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the houſe of Ahab; and I will wipe Ieruſalem as a man wipeth a diſh, wiping it and turning it vpſide downe: And I will forſake the remnant of mine inheritance; and I will deliuer them into the hand of their enemies, and they ſhall become a prey and a ſpoyle vnto all their enemies.

It is enough O God, it is enough: What eare can but tingle? what eye can
B but weepe? what haire can but ſtart vp? what heart can be but confounded at the mention of ſo dreadfull a reuenge? Can there be a worſe iudgement then deſolation, captiuitie, deſertion, ſpoyle, and torture of preuailing enemies? but howeuer, other Cities and Nations haue vndergone theſe diſaſters, without wonder, that all this ſhould befall to thy Ieruſalem, the place which thou haſt choſen to thy ſelfe, out of the whoſe earth, the lot of thine inheritance, the ſeat of thine abode, whereof thou haſt ſaid, Here ſhall be my reſt for euer, it is able to amaze all eyes, all eares.

No Citie could fare worſe then Samaria, whoſe inhabitants after a wofull ſiege, were driuen, like cattle, into a wretched ſeruitude; Ieruſalem ſhall fare no better from Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon: Ieruſalem, the glorie of the earth, the dearling of heauen; See, O ye vaine men, that boaſt of the priuiledges of Chaires and Churches, ſee, and tremble. There is no place vnder heauen to which the preſence of God is ſo wedded as that the ſinnes thereof ſhall not procure a diſdainefull, and finall diuorce; The height of former fa-
C uors ſhall be but an aggrauation of vengeance.

This totall vaſtation of Ieruſalem ſhall take time: onwards, God beginnes with the perſon of wicked Manaſſeh, againſt whom he ſtirres vp the Captaines of the hoaſt of the late friend, and old enemie of Iudah: Thoſe thornes amongſt which he had ſhrouded his guiltie head, cannot ſhelter him from their violence; they take him and binde him with fetters of iron, and carrie him to Babylon; There he lies loaded with chaines, in an vncomfortable dungeon, exerciſed with varietie of tortures, fed with ſuch courſe pittances of bread, and ſips of water, as might maintaine an vnwilling life, to the puniſhment of the owner. What eye can now pittie the deepeſt miſeries of Manaſſeh? What but bondage can befit him, that hath ſo lawleſly abuſed his libertie? What but an vtter abdication can befit him that hath caſt off his God, and doted vpon Deuils? What but a dying life, and a tormenting death can bee fit for a man of bloud?

Who now would not haue giuen this man for loſt; and haue lookt when hell
D ſhould claime her owne? But oh the height, oh the depth of diuine mercie! After all theſe prodigies of ſinne, Manaſſeh is a conuert; When he was in affliction he beſought the Lord his God: and humbled himſelfe greatly before the God of his fathers. How true is that word of the Prophet, Vexation giues vnderſtanding; The viper when he is laſhed, caſts vp his poyſon: The traitor when he is racked, tells that truth which he had elſe neuer vttered; If the croſſe beare vs not to heauen, nothing can: What vſe were there of the graine, but for the edge of the ſickle, wherewith it is cut downe; the ſtroake of the flayle, wherewith it is beaten;

A beaten; the weight and attrition of the mill, wherewith it is cruſhed; the fire of the ouen wherewith it is baken? Say now, Manaſſeh, with that grandfather of thine (who was, till now, too good for thee) It was good for me that I was afflicted: Euen thine iron was more precious to thee, then thy gold; thy Goale was a more happie lodging to thee, then thy palace; Babylon was a better Schoole to thee, then Ieruſalem: what fooles are we to frowne vpon our afflictions? Theſe, how crabbed ſoeuer, are our beſt friends. They are not, indeed, for our pleaſure, they are for our profit: their iſſue makes them worthy of a welcome. What doe we care how bitter that potion be which brings health?

How farre a man may goe, and yet turne? Could there be fouler ſinnes then theſe? Lo, here was Idolatrie in the height, violation of Gods houſe, ſorceries of all kinds, bloudie crueltie to his owne fleſh, to the Saints of God; and all theſe againſt the ſtreame of a religious inſtitution, of the zealous counſels of Gods Prophets, of the checks of his owne heart.

B Who can complaine that the way of heauen is blocked vp againſt him, when he ſees ſuch a ſinner enter? Say the worſt againſt thy ſelfe, O thou clamorous ſoule; Here is one that murthered men, defied God, worſhipt diuels; and yet finds the way to repentance; if thou be worſe then he, denie (if thou canſt) that to thy ſelfe, which God hath not denied to thee, capacitie of grace: In the meane time, know that it is not thy ſinne, but thine impenitence that barres heauen againſt thee.

Preſume not yet, O man, whoſoeuer thou art, of the libertie of thy conuerſion; as if thou couldeſt run on lawleſly in a courſe of ſinning, till thou come to the brimme of hell; and then couldſt ſuddenly ſtop, and returne at leaſure: the mercie of God neuer ſet period to a wilfull ſinner; neither yet did his owne corrupt deſires, ſo as when he is gone the furtheſt, he could yet ſtay himſelfe from another ſtep: No man that truely repents is refuſed: but many a one ſinnes ſo long, that he cannot repent. His cuſtome of wickedneſſe hath obdur'd his heart, and made it flint to all good impreſſions. There were Ieroboams, and Abijams, and Ahabs, and Ioaſhes, and Ahazes, in theſe ſacred thrones, there C was but one Manaſſeh: God hath not left in any mans hand the raines of his owne heart, to pace, and turne, and ſtop as he liſts; This priuiledge is reſerued to him that made it; It is not of him that wils, nor of him that runs, but of God that ſhowes mercie: and that mercie neglected, iuſtly binds ouer to iudgement.

I wonder not at Manaſſeh, either ſinning, or repenting, I wonder at thy goodnes, O Lord; who after thy iuſt permiſſion of his ſinne, calleſt him thus graciouſly to repent, and ſo receiueſt him repenting: So as Manaſſeh was not a more loathſome and monſtrous ſpectacle of wickedneſſe, then he is now a pleaſing and vſefull patterne of conuerſion; Who can now deſpaire of thy mercie, O God, that ſees the teares of a Manaſſeh accepted? when we haue debauched our worſt, our euill cannot match with thy goodneſſe; rather it is the praiſe of thine infinite ſtore, that where ſinne abounds, grace abounds much more; O keepe vs from a preſumption of grace, that we may repent; and raiſe vs from a diſtruſt of grace when we haue repented.

D No ſooner is Manaſſeh penitent, then he is free; his prayers haue at once looſed him from his ſinnes, and from his chaines; and of a captiue haue made him a King; and from the dungeon of Babylon haue reſtored him to the Palace of Ieruſalem: How eaſie is it for the ſame hand that wounds to cure: What cannot feruent prayers doe, either for our reſcuing from euill, or for our inueſting with good.

Then Manaſſeh knew that the Lord he was God. Then? and not before? Could his younger yeares eſcape the knowledge of Gods miraculous deliuerance of Ieruſalem from the Aſſyrians? Could he but know the ſlaughter that Gods

Angell

A Angell made in one night, of an hundred fourescore and fiue thouſand? Could hee but haue heard the iuſt reuenge vpon Senacherib? Could he be ignorant of his fathers ſupernaturall recouerie? Could he but ſee that euerlaſting monument of the noted degrees in the Diall of Ahaz? Could he auoid the ſenſe of thoſe fifteene yeares, which were ſuper-added to his fathers age? What one of theſe proofes doth not euince a Deitie? Yet, till his owne ſmart, and cure, Manaſſeh knew not that the Lord was God.

Fooliſh ſinners pay deare for their knowledge; neither will indure to bee taught good, cheape: ſo we haue ſeene reſtie horſes that will not moue till they bleed with the ſpur: So we haue ſeene dull and carelesſe children, that will learne nothing but what is put into them with the rod.

The Almightie will be ſure to be knowne for what he is, if not by faire meanes, yet by foule; If our proſperitie, and peace, and ſweet experience of his mercy can win vs to acknowledge him, it is more for our eaſe, but, if wee will needes be taught by ſtripes, it is no leſſe for his glorie.

Manaſſeh now returnes another man to Ieruſalem: With what indignation B doth he looke vpon his old follies? and now, all the amends he can make, is to vndoe what he did; to doe that which he vndid: He tooke away the ſtrange Gods, and the Idoll out of the houſe of the Lord, and all the alters that he had built in the mount of the houſe of the Lord, and in Ieruſalem, and caſt them out of the Citie. True repentance begins to decline at the ablatiue, deſtroying thoſe monuments of ſhame which former errour had reared; The thornes muſt firſt be ſtubbed vp, ere the ground can be capable of ſeed; The true method of grace, is firſt, Ceaſe to doe euill; then, Learne to doe good.

In vaine had Manaſſeh profeſſed a repentance, if the ſtrange gods had ſtill held poſſeſſion of Ieruſalem, if the Idoll had ſtill harboured in Gods Temple, if forraine altars had ſtill ſmoked vpon the holy mountaine; Away with all this traſh, when once Manaſſeh comes to a true ſenſe of pietie.

There is nothing but hypocriſie in that penitent, who after all vowes, and teares, retaines his old abhominations; It is that poore peece of ſatisfaction which we can giue to the diuine inſtice, in a heartie indignation, to fling downe C that cup of wickedneſſe wherewith we haue beene bewitched, and to trample vpon the ſheards: without which, confeſſion is but winde, and the droppes of contrition, water.

The liuiug God loues to dwell cleane, hee will not come vnder the roofe of Idols, nor admit Idols to come vnder his: Firſt therefore, Manaſſeh caſts out the ſtrange Gods and Idols, and altars; and then He repaires the Alter of the Lord, and ſacrifices thereon peace-offerings, and thanke-offerings. Not, till he had pull'd downe, might he build; and when he had pull'd downe, he muſt build: True repentance is no leſſe actiue of good. What is it the better, if when the Idolatrous alters are defaced, the true God hath not an Altar erected to his Name? In many Altars was ſuperſtition, in no altars, Atheiſme.

Neither doth penitent Manaſſeh build God a new Altar, but he repaires the old, which by long diſ-vſe lay waſt, and was moſſie and mouldred with age and neglect.

God loues well his owne inſtitutions; neither can he abide innouations, ſo D much as in the out-ſides of his ſeruices. It is an happie worke to vindicate any ordinance of God from the iniuries of times, and to reſtore it to the originall glorie.

What haue our pious gouernors done other in Religion? had we gone about to lay a new foundation, the worke had bin accurſed; now we haue only, ſcraped off ſome ſuperfluous moſſe, that was growne vpon theſe holy ſtones we haue cemented ſome broken peeces, we haue pointed ſome crazie corners with wholſome morter, in ſtead of baſe clay, wherewith it was diſgracefully patched vp: The altar is old, it is Gods Altar: It is not new, not ours: If wee A haue laid one new ſtone in this ſacred building, let it flye in our faces, and beat out our eyes.

On this repaired altar doth Manaſſeh ſend vp the ſacrifices of his peace, of his thankefulneſſe; and doubtleſſe the God of heauen ſmells a ſweet ſauour of reſt; No perfume is ſo pleaſing to God, as that which is caſt in by a penitent hand.

It had not ſerued the turne that Manaſſeh had aproached alone to this renued altar; As his lewd example had withdrawne the people from their God; ſo now he commands Iudah to ſerue the Lord God of Iſrael; Had he beene ſilent, hee could not haue beene vnfollowed: Euerie act of greatneſſe is preceptiue; but now that Religion is made Law, what Iſraelite will not be deuout?

The true God hath now no competitour in Iudah; All the Idolls are pull'd downe, the high places will not be pull'd downe; an ill guiſe is eaſily taken vp, it is not ſo eaſily left: After a common deprauation of Religion, it is hard to returne vnto the firſt puritie: as when a garment is deepely ſoiled, it cannot B without many lauers recouer the former cleaneſſe.

IOSIAH'S Reformation.

2. Kings 22. And 23.

YEt, if we muſt alter from our ſelues, it is better to be a Manaſſeh, then a Ioaſh: Ioaſh beganne well, and ended ill: Manaſſeh beganne ill, and ended well; his age varied from his youth, no leſſe, then one mans condition can varie from another; His poſteritie ſucceeded in both; Ammon his ſonne ſucceeded in the ſinnes of Manaſſehs youth; Ioſiah his C grand-child ſucceeded in the vertues of his age. What a vaſt difference doth grace make in the ſame age? Manaſſeh beganne his raigne at twelue yeares; Ioſiah at eight; Manaſſeh was religiouſly bred vnder Hezekiah; Ioſiah was miſ-nurtured vnder Ammon, and yet Manaſſeh runnes into abſurd Idolatries, Ioſiah is holy and deuout. The Spirit of God breathes freely; not confining it ſelfe to times, or meanes.

No rules can bind the hands of the Almightie; It is in ordinarie prooſe too true a word, that was ſaid of old, Woe be to thee O Land, whoſe King is a child: the goodneſſe of God makes his owne exceptions; Iudah neuer fared better, then in the greene yeares of a Ioſiah: If we may not rather meaſure youth, and age by gouernment, and diſpoſition, then by yeares: Surely thus, Ioſiah was older with ſmooth cheekes, then Manaſſeh with gray haires. Happie is the infancie of Princes, when it falles into the hands of faithfull Councellors.

A good patterne is no ſmall helpe for young beginners; Ioſiah ſets his father Dauid before him, not Ammon, not Manaſſeh: Examples are the beſt rules for D the inexperienced; where their choice is good, the directions are eaſieſt: The Lawes of God are the wayes of Dauid; Thoſe Lawes were the rule, theſe wayes were the practice; Good Ioſiah walkes in all the wayes of his Father Dauid.

Euen the minoritie of Ioſiah was not idle; we cannot be good too early: At eight yeares it was enough to haue his eare open to heare good counſaile; to haue his eyes and heart open to ſeeke after God: At twelue, he begins to act and ſhowes well that he hath found the God he ſought: Then he addreſſes

A himſelfe to purge Iudah, and Ieruſalem, from the high places, groues, image altars; wherewith it was defiled; burning the bones of the idolatrous Prieſts vpon their altars; ſtrawing the aſhes of the idols vpon the graues of them that had ſacrificed to them, ſtriuing by thoſe fires, and mattocks to teſtifie his zealous deteſtation of all idolatrie.

2.Chron. 34.3.

The houſe muſt firſt be cleanſed, ere it can be garniſhed; no man will caſt away his coſt vpon vncleane heaps; ſo ſoone as the Temple was purged, Ioſiah bends his thoughts vpon the repayring and beautifying of this houſe of the Lord.

What ſtir was there in Iudah, wherein Gods Temple ſuffered not? Sixe ſeuerall times was it pillaged, whether out of force, or will: Firſt, Iehoaſh King of Iudah is faine by the ſpoile of it to ſtop the mouth of Hazael; Then, Ioaſh King of Iſrael fils his owne hands with that ſacred ſpoile, in the dayes of Ama- ziah; after this, Ahaz rifles it for Tiglath Pileſer, King of Aſſyria; then Heze- kiah is forced to ranſacke the treaſures of it for Senacherib; yet after, the ſacriledge of Manaſſeh makes that bootie of it, which his later times indeuoured to B reſtore; and now laſtly, Ammon his ſonne neglects the frame, embeazels the furniture of this holy place: The verie pile began to complaine of age and vnreſpect. Now comes good Ioſiah, and in his eighteenth yeare (when other young Gallants would haue thought of nothing but pleaſure, and iollitie) takes vp the lateſt care of his father Dauid, and giues order for the repayring of the Temple.

The keepers of the doore haue receiued the contribution of all faithfull Iewes, for this pious vſe; the King ſends Shaphan the ſcribe to Helkijah the Prieſt to ſumme it vp, and to deliuer it vnto Carpenters, and Maſons, for ſo holy a worke.

How well doth it beſeeme the care of a religious Prince, to ſet the Prieſts and Scribes in hand with reedifying the Temple? The command is the Kings, the charge is the high-Prieſts, the execution is the workemens; when the labourers are faithfull in doing the worke, and the high-Prieſt in the directing it, and the King in inioyning it, Gods Houſe cannot faile of an happie perfection; but when any of theſe ſlackens, the buſineſſe muſt needs languiſh.

C How God bleſſes the deuout indeauours of his ſeruants? Whiles Helkijah was diligently ſuruaying the breaches and the reparation of the Temple, hee lights vpon the booke of the Law: The authenticke and originall Booke of Gods Law was by a ſpeciall charge appointed to be carefully kept within a ſafe ſhrine, in the Sanctuarie: In the depraued times of Idolatrie, ſome faithfull Prieſt (to make ſure worke) had locked it faſt vp, in ſome corner of the Temple, from the reach of all hands, of all eyes: as knowing how impoſſible it was,
that diuine monument could otherwiſe eſcape the furie of prophane guiltineſſe:
Some few tranſcripts there were doubtleſſe, (parcels of this ſacred Booke) in other hands; neither doubt I, but as Helkijah had beene formerly well acquainted with this holy volume) now of long time hid) ſo the eares of good Ioſiah had beene inured to ſome paſſages thereof; but the whole body of theſe awfull Records, ſince the late night of Idolatrous confuſion, and perſecution ſaw no light, till now; this precious treaſure doth Helkijah find, whiles he digs for the Temple: Neuer man laboured to the reparation of Gods Church, but he met D with a bleſſing more then he looked for.

Deut.31.26.

Helkijah the Prieſt, and Shaphan the ſcribe do not ingroſſe this inualuable wealth into their owne hands, nor ſuppreſſe theſe more then ſacred roles, for their owne aduantage; but tranſ-mit them, firſt to the eares of the King, then by him, to the people: It is not the praiſe of a good ſcribe, to lay vp, but to bring forth, both old and new: And if the Prieſts lips ſhall keepe knowledge, they keepe it to impart, not to ſmoother, The people ſhall ſeeke the Law at his mouth; for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of Hoſts.

So ſoone as the good King heares the words of the booke of the Law, and in ſpeciall, thoſe dreadfull threats of iudgement, denounced againſt the Idolatries of his Iudah, he rends his clothes, to ſhow his heart rent with ſorrow, and fearefull expectation of thoſe plagues; and waſhes his boſome with teares. Oh gracious tenderneſſe of Ioſiah: he doth but once heare the Law read, and is thus humbled; humbled for his fathers ſinnes, for the ſinnes of his people: how manie of vs, after a thouſand hammerings of the menaces of Gods Law, vpon our guiltie ſoules, continue yet inſenſible of our danger? The verie reading of this Law doth thus affect him; the preaching of it ſtirs not vs; The ſinnes of others ſtrucke thus deepe with him; our owne are ſleighted by vs: A ſoft heart is the beſt tempered for God: So Phyſitians are wont to like thoſe bodies beſt, which are eaſieſt to worke vpon: O God make our clay, waxe, and our waxe pliable to thine hand; ſo ſhall we be ſure to be free either from ſinne, or from the hurt of ſinne.

It is no holy ſorrow that ſends vs not to God; Ioſiah is not moaped with a diſtractiue griefe, or an aſtoniſhing feare, but in the height of his paſſion, ſends fiue choiſe meſſengers to Huldah the Propheteſſe, to enquire of the Lord, for himſelfe, for Iudah: It is an happie trouble that driues vs to this refuge. I doe not heare any of theſe Courtiers reply to this godly motion of their young King: Alas, Sir, what meanes this deepe perplexitie? What needs all this buſie inquiſition? If your father were idolatrous, what is that to you, who haue abandoned his ſinnes? If your people were once idolatrous, what is that to you, yea to them, who haue expiated theſe crimes by their repentance? Haue you not carefully reformed all thoſe abuſes? hath not your happie reformation made an abundant amends for thoſe wrongs? Spare your teares, and ſaue the labour of your meſſengers; All is well, all ſhall be well; theſe iudgements are for the obſtinate; had we beene ſtill guiltie, theſe feares had beene iuſt: were we ſtill in danger, what had we gained by our conuerſion? Rather, as glad to ſecond the religious cares of their young King, they feed his holy anxieties with a iuſt aggrauation of perill; and by their good counſell, whet theſe his zealous deſires of a ſpeedie reſolution: That ſtate cannot but be happie, whoſe Prieſts and Peeres are readie as to ſuggeſt, ſo to cheriſh, and execute the deuout proiects of their Soueraignes.

The graue Prieſt, the learned ſcribe, the honourable Courtiers doe not diſdaine to knocke at the doore of a Propheteſſe: Neither doth any of them ſay; It were hard if we ſhould not haue as much acquaintance with God, as a woman; but in an humble acknowledgement of her Graces, they come to learne the will of God, from her mouth: True pietie is modeſt, and ſtands not vpon termes of reputation, in the buſineſſes of God; but willingly honors his gifts in any ſubiect, leaſt of all in it ſelfe.

The ſexe is not more noted in Huldah, then the condition; As ſhe was a woman, ſo a wife; the wife of Shallum: Holy matrimonie was no hinderance to her diuine reuelations; ſhe was at once a Propheteſſe in her colledge, an huſwife in her family; It was neuer the practice of God to confine his graces to virginitie: At this verie time the famous Prophet Ieremie flouriſhed, ſome yeares had hee alreadie ſpent in this publike ſeruice; why was not he rather conſulted by Ioſiah? It is not vnlike that ſome propheticall imployments called him away, at this time from Ieruſalem: His preſence could not haue beene balked: purpoſely, doubtleſſe doth God caſt his meſſage vpon the point of that abſence, that he might honour the weaker veſſell with his diuine oracle; and exerciſe the humilitie of ſo great clients: in the anſwers of God, it is not to be regarded, who ſpeakes, but from whom: The iniurie redounds to God, if the weakeneſſes of the perſon cauſe vs to vnder-value the authoritie of the function.

A As Ioſiah and his meſſengers doe not deſpiſe Huldah, becauſe ſhe was a woman; ſo Huldah doth not flatter Ioſiah, becauſe a King: Go tell the man that ſent you; Thus ſaith the Lord: Behold I will bring euill vpon this place, Loe, he that was as God to his ſubiects, is but as man to the Propheteſſe: neither is the meſſage euer the ſweeter, becauſe it is required by a Prince: No circumſtance may varie the forme of diuine truth.

Euill muſt befall Ieruſalem and Iudah, yea, all the words of that booke, muſt allight vpon the inhabitants of both: In how bad a caſe wee may be, and yet thinke our ſelues not ſafe onely, but happie? Theſe Iewes had forgotten their old reuolts; and now hauing framed themſelues to holy courſes; promiſed themſelues nothing but peace, when the Propheteſſe foreſees, and foretels their approching ruine: Euen their old ſcore muſt be paid, after the opinion of a cleere agreement. In vaine ſhall we hope to quit our arrerages by prorogation This Propheteſſe had immediate viſions from God, yet ſhe muſt ſpeake out of the Booke; There was neuer any reuelation from the Lord, that croſſed his writings: His hand, and his tongue agree eternally: If that booke haue curſed
B Iudah, ſhe may not abſolue it.

Yet, what a gracious mixture was here of mercie, with ſeueritie; ſeueritie to Iudah, mercie to Ioſiah; Iudah ſhall be plagued, and ſhall become a deſolation, and a curſe; Ioſiah ſhall be quietly houſed in his graue, before this ſtorme fall vpon Iudah: His eye ſhall not ſee, what his people ſhall feele: It is enough that the expectation of theſe euills afflicts him, the ſenſe ſhall not.

Whence is this indulgence? Becauſe thine heart was tender, and thou haſt humbled thy ſelfe before the Lord. How happie a thing it is to be a reed vnto Gods iudgements, rather then an oake, the meeke and gentle reed ſtoops and therefore ſtands, the oake ſtands ſtiffely out againſt the ſtrongeſt guſt, and therefore is turned vp by the roots: At leaſt, let vs lament thoſe ſinnes we haue not auoided; and mourne for the ſinnes of others, whiles we hate our owne.

He that found himſelfe exempted from this vengeance, by his repentance and deepe humiliation, would faine find the ſame way for the deliuerance of his people: The ſame words of the Law therefore, that had wrought vpon his
C heart, are by him cauſed to be publikely read in the eares of Iudah, and Ieruſalem; The aſſembly is vniuerſall, of Prieſts, Prophets, people, both ſmall and great; becauſe the ſinne was ſuch, the danger was ſuch: that no man may complaine to want information, the Law of God ſounds in euery eare. If our eare be ſhut to the Law, the ſinne is ours; but if the Law be ſhut to our eares, the ſinne is of our gouernors: Woe be to them that hide Gods Booke from the people, as they would doe rats-bane from the eyes of children: Ignorant ſoules cannot periſh without their murder: There is no feare of knowing too much, there is too much feare of practizing too little: Now, if the people doe not imitate their King in relenting, they are not worthy to partake with them in his impunitie. Howſoeuer, they ſhall not want a great example; as of ſorrow, ſo of amendment. Good Ioſiah ſtands by the pillar, and ſolemnly renewes his Couenant with his God; the people cannot for ſhame refuſe to ſecond him: Euen they that lookt for a deſtruction, yet doe not with-draw their obedience; Gods Children may not be ſullen vnder his corrections, but whether they ex-
D pect or feele ſmart, are no other then dutifull to his awfull hand. As a man that finds he hath done ſomething that might indanger the forfait of his fauour, puts himſelfe into ſome deſeruing action, whereby he may hope to re-indeare himſelfe, ſo doth Ioſiah here; No indeauor is enough to teſtifie his zeale to that name of God which was ſo profaned by his peoples Idolatrie; what euer monuments were yet remaining of wicked Paganiſme, he defaces with indignation; he burnes the veſſels of Baal, and puts downe his Chemarim, deſtroyes the houſes of the Sodomites, ſtrawes the powder of their Idols in the brooke Kedron, defiles

Topheth, takes away the horſes, of the Sunne, burnes the charets of the Sunne A with fire, and omits nothing that might reconcile God, cleare Iudah, perfect a reformation.

Neither is this care confined to Ieruſalem, and the neighbouring Townes, but ſtretches it ſelfe to the vtmoſt coaſts of Ioſiahs Kingdome; Bethel was the infamous ſeat of the pollution of Iſrael; it ſeemes the heyres of Ieroboam (who ſet vp his golden Calfe there) inioyed it not long; the Kings of Iudah recouered it to their crowne, but, it had not yet recouered it ſelfe from that ancient infection: Thither doth good Ioſiah ſends the vnhallowed aſhes of Baals Reliques, to ſtaine that altar firſt, which he will ſoone after deface.

The time was, and it was no leſſe then three hundred and fiftie yeares ſince, that the man of God, out of Iudah, cried againſt Ieroboams altar.

O Altar, Altar; Thus ſaith the Lord; Behold a Child ſhall be borne, vnto the Houſe of Dauid, Ioſiah by name, and vpon thee ſhall he offer the Prieſts of the high-places, that burne incenſe vpon thee, and mens bones ſhall be burnt vpon thee.

And now is the houre come, wherein euerie of thoſe words ſhall be accompliſhed: It could not but be a great confirmation to Ioſiah, to ſee that God ſo B long agoe fore-markt him for his owne; and fore-nam'd him to ſo zealous a ſeruice.

All our names are equally foreknowne of that diuine prouidence, though not fore-ſpoken: neither can any act paſſe from vs, which was not pre-determined in that eternal Counſel of the Almightie: neither can any act that is pre-determined be vnfulfilled vpon earth: Interuention of time breakes no ſquare in the diuine decrees: our pur-blind eyes ſee nothing, but that which toucheth their lids; the quicke ſight of Gods preſcience ſees that, as preſent, which is a world off: According to the prediction, the ſtench of dead mens bones is a fit perfume to ſend vp from this altar to heauen; whoſe beſt ſacrifices ſauoured worſe in the noſtrils of God. And the bloud of the idolatrous ſacrificers was a meet oblation to that God, who had beene diſhonoured by their burnt-offerings to his baſe corriuals.

Euen that Prophet who foretold this, had his toomb in Bethel, and that toomb had his inſcription; His weakeneſſe might not rob him of the honour C of his ſepulture: How palpably do theſe Iſraelites condemne themſelues, whiles they reſerue ſo famous a monument of their owne conuiction. It was no preiudice to this holy Prophet, that his bones lay amonſt the ſepulchers of idolaters. His Epitaph preſerued thoſe bones from burning, vpon that altar, which he had accurſed; As the Lyon might not teare his carcaſſe, when he died, ſo now, the furie of the multitude may not violate his verie bones, in the graue.

I do not ſee Ioſiah ſaue them for reliques; I heare him command they ſhall reſt in peace; it is fit the dead bodies of Gods Saints ſhould be as free from contempt, as from ſuperſtition.

After the remouall of theſe rites of falſe worſhip, it is time to bring in the true: Now a ſolemne Paſſeouer ſhall be kept vnto the Lord, by the charge of Ioſiah: That booke of the Law ſets him, the time, place, circumſtances, of this Sacrament, his zeale ſo carefully followes it, that ſince the dayes of Samuel, this feaſt was neuer ſo glorioully, ſo punctually celebrated. Ieruſalem is the place, the fourteenth day of the firſt moneth is the time, the Leuites are the actors, a yearling & D ſpotleſſe Lambe is the prouiſion; no bone of it is broken, the bloud is ſprinkled vpon the doore-poſtes, it is roaſted whole, eaten with ſowre herbs, with bread vnleauened; the remainder is conſumed by fire. The law, the ſacrifices, had beene in vaine, If the Paſſeouer had beene neglected: No true Iſraelite might want, whether this monument of their deliuerance paſt, or this Type of the Meſſiah to come. Rather then faile. Ioſiah s bountie ſhall ſupply to Iudah Lambs for their paſchall deuotion: No almes is ſo acceptable, as that whereby the ſoule is furthered.

A

IOSIAHS Death; with the deſolation of the Temple, and Ieruſalem.

2 Kings 23. verſe 29. And 2.Chron.35. verſe 20. 2,Chron.36.

IOſiah hath now happily ſetled the affaires both of God, and the ſtate: and now hath ſweet leiſure to inioy himſelfe, and his people: his conſcience doth not more cheare him at home, then his ſubiects abroad; Neuer King raigned with more officious pietie to God, with more loue, and applauſe of men: But what ſtabilitie is there in theſe earthly things? B how ſeldome is excellencie in any kind long-liu'd? In the very ſtrength of his age, in the height of his ſtrength, is Ioſiah withdrawne from the earth; as not without a mercifull intention of his glorie, on Gods behalfe, ſo, not without ſome weakeneſſe, on his owne. Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt comes vp to fight againſt the King of Aſſyria: What is that to Ioſiah? Perhaps the Egyptians attempted to paſſe thorow the land of Iudah, towards Carchemiſh the ſeat of his warre; but, as a neighbour, not as an enemie: Ioſiah reſiſts him; as neither holding it ſafe to admit a forraine power into the boſome of his Countrey, nor daring to giue ſo faire an occaſion of prouoking the Aſſyrian hoſtilitie againſt him.

The King of Egypt mildly deprecates this enmitie, he ſends Ambaſſadors to Ioſiah, ſaying, What haue I to doe with thee thou King of Iudah, I come not againſt thee, this day, but againſt the houſe wherewith I haue warre; for God commanded me to make haſte; forbeare thee from medling with God, who is with me, that hee deſtroy thee not.

C What friend could haue ſaid more? what Prophet could haue aduiſed more holily? why doth not good Ioſiah ſay with himſelfe; There may bee truth in this ſuggeſtion; God may haue ſent this man, to be a ſcourge of mine old enemie, of Aſhur: If the hand of the Almightie be in this deſigne, why doe I oppoſe it? The quarrell is not mine, why doe I thruſt my finger into this flame, vnbidden; Wherefore ſhould I hazard the effuſion of bloud, vpon an harmeleſſe paſſage? Can I heare him plead a command from God, and not inquire into it? How eaſie is it for me to know the certaintie of this pretended commiſſion? Haue not I the Prieſts, and Prophets of God about me? Let me firſt goe and conſult his oracle; If God haue ſent him, and forbidden me, why ſhould my courage carrie me againſt my pietie?

It is ſtrange that the good heart of Ioſiah could eſcape theſe thoughts, theſe reſolutions: Yet, he that vpon the generall threats of Gods Law againſt Iudah, ſends meſſengers to inquire of a Propheteſſe; now vpon theſe particular threats of danger to himſelfe; ſpeakes not, ſtirs not: The famous Prophet Ieremie D was then liuing, and Zephaniah; beſides a whole Colledge of Seers, Ioſiah doth not ſo much as ſend out of doores, to aske, Shall I goe vp againſt the King of Egypt? Sometimes, both grace and wit are aſleepe in the holieſt and warieſt breſts: the beſt of all Gods Saints may be ſometimes miſcarried by their paſſions to their coſt.

The wiſe prouidence of God hath mercifully determined to leaue Ioſiah to his owne counſels, that by the weakeneſſe of his ſeruant, he might take occaſion to perfit his glorie: Euen that wherein Ioſiah was wanting vnto God, ſhall concurre to the making vp of Gods promiſe to Ioſiah: when we are the moſt blind-folded, A we run on the wayes of Gods hidden decrees; and, what euer our intents be, cannot, if we would, goe out of that vnknowne path.

Needs will Ioſiah put himſelfe into armes againſt an vnwilling enemie; and, to be leſſe noted, diſguiſes himſelfe. The fatall arrow of an Egyptian archer findes him out, in the throng, and giues him his deathes-wound; Now, too late he calls to a retrait: his changed Charet is turned to a Biere, to carrie his bleeding corps to his graue, in Ieruſalem.

What eye doth not now pitty and lament the vntimely end of a Ioſiah? Whom can it chooſe but affect, to ſee a religious, iuſt, vertuous Prince ſnatcht away in the vigour of his age? After all our fooliſh moane, the prouidence that directed that ſhaft to his lighting place, intends that wound for a ſtroke of mercie: The God whom Ioſiah ſerues, lookes through his death, at his glorie: and by this ſudden violence will deliuer him from the view, and participation of the miſeries of Iudah, which had beene many deaths; and fetches him to the participation of that happineſſe, which could counteruaile more deathes, then could B be incident into a Ioſiah. Oh the wonderfull goodneſſe of the Almightie, whoſe verie iudgements are mercifull; Oh the ſafe condition of Gods children, whom verie paine eaſeth, whom death reuiues, whom diſſolution vnites, whom laſtly their verie ſinne and temptation glorifies.

How happily hath Ioſiah gained by this change? In ſtead of a froward people, he now is ſorted with Saints and Angels; in ſtead of a fading, and corruptible crowne, he now inioyes an eternall. The orphane ſubiects are readie to weepe out their eyes, for ſorrow; their loſſe cannot be ſo great, as his gaine: he is glorious, they, as their ſinnes had deſerued, miſerable. If the ſeparated ſoule could be capable of paſſion, could Ioſiah haue ſeene, after his departure, the calamities of his ſons, of his people, it could not but haue laid ſiege to his peace.

The ſad ſubiects proclaime his ſonne Iohoahaz, King in ſtead of ſo lamented a father; He both doth ill, and fares ill: By that time he hath ſat but three monehts in the throne, Pharaoh Nechoh King of Egypt ſeconds the fathers C death, with the ſonnes captiuitie: This victorious enemie puts downe the wicked ſonne of Ioſiah, and lades him with chaines at Riblath, in the land at Hamath; and lades his people with the tribute of an hundred talents of ſiluer, and a talent of gold: Yet, as if he that was vnwiling to fight with Ioſiah, were no leſſe vnwilling to root out his poſteritie, this Egyptian ſets Eliakim, the ſecond ſonne of Ioſiah, vpon the ſeat of his father; and, that he might be all his, changes his name to Iehoiakim: oh the wofull and vnworthy ſucceſſion of Ioſiah; one ſonne is a priſoner, the other is a tributarie; both are wicked. After that Iehoiakim hath beene ſome yeares Pharoahs Bayliue, to gather, and racke the deare rents of Iudah; Nebuchadnezzar the great King of Babylon comes vp, and ſweepes away both the Lord, and his Feodarie, Pharaoh, and Iehoiakim.

So farre was the ambitious Egyptian from maintaining his incroachment vpon the territories of Iudah, that he could not now hold his owne: From Nilus to Euphrates, all is loſt: So ſubiect are the leſſer powers ſtill to be ſwallowed D vp of the greater; ſo iuſt it is with God, that they which will be affecting vndue inlargement of their eſtates, ſhould fall ſhort of what they had.

Iehoiakim is caired in fetters to Babylon: and now in that dungeon of his captiuitie, hath more leaſure, then grace, to bethinke himſelfe of all his abominations; and whiles he inherits the ſad lodging of his great grandfather, Manaſſeh, inherits not his ſucceſſe.

While he is rotting in this Goale, his young ſonne Iehoiachin ſtarts vp in his throne; like to a muſhrom that riſes vp in a night, and withers in a day: Within three

A three moneths, and ten dayes is that young Prince (the meet ſonne of ſuch a father) fetcht vp in irons to his fathers priſon; Neither ſhall he goe alone; his attendance ſhall adde to his miſerie; His mother, his wiues, his officers, his peeres, his craftſmen, his warriours accompanie him, manicled, and chained, to their perpetuall bondage.

Now, according to Iſaiahs word, it would haue beene great preferment for the fruit of Hezekiahs loynes to be Pages in the Court of Babylon.

One onely branch yet remaines of the vnhappie ſtocke of holy Ioſiah, Mattaniah, the brother of Iehoiakim, whom Nebuchadnezzar (changing his name to Zedekiah) ſets vp in that forlorne, and tributarie throne; There might he haue liued (though an vnderling) yet peaceable; This man (to make vp the meaſure of Gods iuſt iudgements) as he was euer a rebell to God, ſo proues rebellious to his Soueraigne maſter, the King of Babylon: The Prophet Ieremie hath forewarn'd him in vaine; nothing could teach this man, but ſmart.

Who can looke for other then furie from Nebuchadnezzar, againſt Ieruſalem, which now had affronted him with three ſeuerall ſucceſſions of reuolts, and B conſpiracies againſt his gouernement; and thrice abuſed his bountie, and indulgence? with a mightie army doth he therefore come vp againſt his ſeditious deputie; and beſieges Ieruſalem, and blockes it vp with forts round about. After two yeares ſiege, the Caldees without and the famine within, haue preuailed; King Zedekiah and his ſouldiers are fled away by night, as thinking themſelues happie, if they might abandon their walls, and ſaue their liues.

The Chaldees (as caring more for the birdes, then for the neſt) purſue them, and ouertake Zedekiah, forſaken of all his forces, in the plaine of Iericho, and bring him to Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon. What can ſo vnthankefull and perfidious a vaſſall expect, but the worſt of reuenge? The ſentence is fearefull: Firſt, the ſonnes of Zedekiah are ſlaine before his eyes; then thoſe eyes of his (as if they had ſeene enough, when they had ſeene him childleſſe) are put out: His eyes are onely lent him ſo long, as to torment him with the ſight of his owne vtmoſt diſcomfort; Had his ſonnes but ouer-liued his eyes, the griefe had beene ſo much the leſſe, as the apprehenſion of it had beene leſſe liuely, and C piercing; Now, this wofull obiect ſhall ſhut vp his ſight, that euen when his bodily eyes are gone, yet the eyes of his minde might euer ſee what he laſt ſaw; That thus his ſonnes might bee euer dying before him, and himſelfe in their death euer miſerable.

Who doth not now wiſh that the bloud of Hezekiah and Ioſiah could haue beene ſeuered from theſe impure dregs of their lewd iſſue? no man could pittie the offenders, were it not for the mixture of the intereſt of ſo holy progenitors.

No more ſorrow can come in at the windowes of Zedekiah, more ſhall come in at his doores; his eare ſhall receiue what more to rue for his Ieruſalem: Nebuzaradan the great Marſhall of the King of Babylon comes vp againſt that deplored Citie, and breakes downe the walls of it, round about, and burnes the Temple of the Lord, and the Kings houſe, and euery faire Pallace of Ieruſalem, with fire; driues away the remainder of her inhabitants, into Captiuitie, carries away the laſt ſpoyles of the glorious Temple. Oh Ieruſalem, Ieruſalem, the wonder D of all times, the paragon of nations, the glorie of the earth, the fauorite of heauen, how art thou now becomes heapes of aſhes, hilles of rubbiſh, a ſpectacle of deſolation, a monument of ruine? If later, yet no leſſe deepe haſt thou now pledged that bitter cup of Gods vengeance, to thy ſiſter Samaria; How carefully had thy God forwarned thee? Though Iſrael play the harlot, yet, let not Iudah ſinne: Loe now, as thine iniquities, ſo thy iudgements haue ouertaken her: Both lie together in the duſt, both are made a curſe to all poſterities: O God, what place ſhall thy iuſtice ſpare, if Ieruſalem haue periſhed? If that delight of thine were cut off for her wickedneſſe, Let vs not bee high minded but A feare.

What pittie it was to ſee thoſe goodly Cedars of the Temple flaming vp higher then they ſtood in Lebanon? to ſee thoſe curious marbles, which neuer felt the dint of the pick-axe, or hammer, in the laying, wounded with mattockes, and wounding the earth in their fall? to ſee the holy of holies, whereinto none might enter but the high-prieſt, once a yeare, thronged with Pagans; the vailes rent, the ſacred Arke of God violated, and defaced, the Tables ouer-turned, the Altars broken downe, the pillars demoliſhed, the pauements digged vp, yea, the verie ground, where that ſamous pile ſtood, deformed. O God, thou wouldeſt rather haue no viſible houſe vpon earth, then indure it defiled with Idolatries.

Foure hundred thirtie and ſixe yeares had that Temple ſtood, and beautified the earth, and honoured heauen, now it is turned into rude heapes; There is no preſcription to be pleaded for the ſauour of the Almightie: Onely that Temple, not made with B hands, is eternall in the heauens. Thither he graciouſly brings vs, that hath ordain'd vs thither, for the ſake of that glorious high-Prieſt, that hath once for all entred into that holy of holies,

Amen.

ZERVBBABEL and EZRA.

THE firſt tranſportation into Babylon, vnder Iehoiakim, (wherein Daniel, Ezekiel, and many B other of the beſt note, were driuen into captiuitie;) was (ſome eleuen yeares after) followed with a ſecond, vnder Zedekiah; wherein the remnant of the, now ruined, Ieruſalem, and Iudah, were ſwept away. Seuentie yeares was the period of their longeſt ſeruitude; whiles Babylon was a Queene, Iudah was her vaſſall: when that proud
Tyranneſſe fell, Gods people began to riſe againe:
The Babylonian Monarchie was no ſooner ſwallowed vp of the Perſian, then the Iewes felt the comfort of libertie.

For Cyrus conquering Babylon, and finding the Iewes groaning vnder that miſerable captiuitie, ſtraight releaſes them, and ſends them, vnder the conduct of their Captaine Zorobabel, backe to their almoſt-forgotten countrie.

The world ſtands vpon viciſſitudes; Euery Nation hath her turne, and muſt make vp her meaſure: Threeſcore and tenne yeares agoe, it was the courſe of Iudah, the iniquitie of that rebellious people was full. Some hundred and thirtie C yeares before that, was the turne of Samaria, and her Iſraelites: Now the ſtaffe is come to the doores of Babylon, euen that wherewith Iudah was beaten: and thoſe Perſians which are now victorious, muſt haue their terme alſo. It is in vaine for any earthly ſtate to promiſe to it ſelfe an immutable condition. At laſt, the rod that ſcourged Gods Children, is caſt into the fire: Thou haſt remembred, O Lord, the Children of Edom in the day of Ieruſalem, how they ſaid, Downe with it, downe with it, euen to the ground: O daughter of Babylon waſted with miſerie, how happie is he that rewardeth thee as thou haſt ſerued them: It is Cyrus that hath wrought this reuenge, this reſcue.

Doubtleſſe, it did not a little moue Cyrus to this fauour, that he found himſelfe honorably forenamed in theſe Iewiſh propheſies, and fore-appointed to this glorious ſeruice, no leſſe then an hundred and ſeuentie yeares, before hee Eſay 44. vlt.
was: Who would not be glad to make good ſo noble and happie a deſtinie? O
God, if we heare that thou haſt ordained vs to life, how gladly, how carefully ſhould wee worke out our ſaluation? if to good workes, how ſhould wee D abound?

In the firſt yeare of his Monarchie, doth Cyrus both make proclamations, and publiſh them in writing, thorow all his Kingdome; wherein he both profeſſeth his zealous reſolutions, and deſires to build vp Gods houſe in Ieruſalem, and inioynes, and incourages all the Iewes, thorow his dominions, to addreſſe themſelues to that ſacred worke; and incites all his ſubiects to aide them with ſiluer, and gold, and goods, and beaſts. How gracious was the command of that, whereof the verie allowance was a fauour?

Was it Cyrus that did this? was it not thou, O God, in whoſe hands are the hearts of Kings, that ſtirredſt vp the ſpirit of this Perſian; as if hee had beene more then a ſonne of thy Church, a father? How eaſie is it for thee to make verie Pagans protectors to thy Church; enemies, benefactors?

Not with an emptie grace doth this great King diſmiſſe the Iewes, but with a royall bountie; He brings forth the veſſels of the houſe of the Lord, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Ieruſalem, and had put them in the houſe of his gods; and cauſes them to be numbred by his Treaſurer to the hands of Sheſhbazzar the Prince of Iudah, for the vſe of the Temple; no fewer then fiue thouſand and foure hundred veſſels of gold and ſiluer.

Certainely, this great Monarch wanted not wit to thinke; It is a rich booty that I find in the Temples of Babylon; by the law of conqueſt it is mine; hauing vanquiſht their gods, I may well challenge their ſpoile; how ſeaſonably doth it now fall into my hands, vpon this victorie, to reward my ſouldiers, to ſettle my new Empire: what if this treaſure came from Ieruſalem? the proprietie is now altered; the very place (according to the conceit of Iewes) hath profaned it; The true God, I haue heard; is curious; neither will abide thoſe veſſels, which haue beene polluted with idolatrous vſes: It ſhall be enough if I looſe the bonds of this miſerable people: If I giue libertie, let the next giue wealth: they will thinke themſelues happie in bare walls, in their natiue earth: To what purpoſe ſhould I pamper their penurie with a ſudden ſtore? But the Princely heart of Cyrus would admit of no ſuch baſe ſacrilegious thoughts; Thoſe veſſels that he finds ſtampt with Gods marke, he will returne to their owner; neither his owne occaſions, nor their abuſe ſhall be any colour of their detention. O Cyrus, how many cloſe-handed, gripple-minded Chriſtians ſhall once be choked in iudgement with the example of thy iuſt munificence? thou reſtoredſt that which we purloine: woe be to thoſe houſes that are ſtored with the ſpoiles of Gods Temple: woe bee to thoſe fingers that are tainted with holy treaſures.

Kings can hardly doe good alone, their lawes are not more followed, then their examples: No ſooner do the chiefe of the fathers of Iudah and Beniamin, and the Prieſts, and Leuites ſet their faces towards Ieruſalem for the building of the Temple, then the liberall hands of their Pagan neighbours furniſh them with gold, and ſiluer, and precious things. Euery Perſian is glad to be at the charge of laying a ſtone, in Gods houſe. The ſame God that had giuen them theſe mettals, out of his coffers of the earth, giues it out of their coffers to his Temple. He that tooke away by the Chaldees, giues by the Perſians: Where the Almightie intends a worke, here cannot be any want of meanes.

Beſides ſeruants. 7337.

Thus hartened, thus laded, doe the ioyfull families of Iudah returne to their old home; How many thouſands of them were worne out, and loſt in that ſeuentie yeares ſeruitude? How few of them yet ſuruiued, that could know the place of their birth, and habitation, or ſay, Here ſtood the Temple, here the Palace? Amongſt thoſe fortie and two thouſand, three hundred and threeſcore Iewes, that returned in this firſt expedition; there were whom the confuſion of their long captiuitie had robbed of their pedegree; They knew themſelues Iewes, but could not deriue their line: theſe were yet admitted, without difficultie; But thoſe of the Prieſtly tribe, which could not deduce their genealogie from the regiſter, are caſhiered as vncleane. Then, God would be ſerued in a bloud, now in a due ſucceſſion: If we could not fetch the line of our pedigree from Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, we were not fit for the Euangelicall altars. Their calling was by nature, ours by grace; The grace of inward abilities, of outward ordination; if we cannot approue both theſe, we are iuſtly abandoned; now had the children of Iſrael taken downe their Harpes from the Willowes which grew by the waters of Babylon, and could, vnbidden, ſing the true ſongs of their

recouered

A recouered Zion: They are newly ſetled in their old manſions, when vpon the firſt publike feaſt, in the Autumne, immediatly following their returne, they flocke vp to Ieruſalem: their firſt care is their publike ſacrifice; That Schoole of their Captiuitie, wherein they haue beene long trained, hath taught them to begin with God: A forced diſcontinuance, makes deuotion more ſauourie, more ſweet to religious hearts; whereas in an open freedome, pittie doth too often languiſh.

Ioſhua the Prieſt, and Zorobabel the Prince are fitly ioyned in the building of the Altar: neither of their hands may be out of that ſacred worke: no ſooner is that ſet vpon the baſes, then it is imployed to the daily burnt-offerings: The Altar may not ſtay the leiſure of the Temple; Gods Church may not want her oblations; He can be none of the ſonnes of Iſrael, that doth not euery day renue his acknowledgements of God.

How feelingly doe theſe Iewes keepe their feaſt of Tabernacles, whiles their ſoiourning in Babylon was ſtill in their thoughts; whiles as yet their Tents muſt ſupply their ruined houſes? The firſt motions of zeale are commonly ſtrong, B and feruent; How carefully doe theſe Gouernours and Prieſts make preparation for Gods Temple? Carpenters and Maſons are hyred; Tyrian workemen are againe called for, and Lebanon is now anew ſolicited for Cedar trees. The materials are readie; Euerie Iſraelite, with ſuch courage addreſſes himſelfe to this ſeruice, as if his life lay in thoſe ſtones: And now, whiles the foundation of the Temple was laying, the Prieſt ſtand in their habits, with Trumpets, the Leuites with Cymbals, interchanging their holy Muſicke, and melodiouſly ſinging praiſes to the God of Iſrael, who had turned their captiuitie as the ſtreames in the South, and honoured their eyes and hands with the firſt ſtones of his houſe: The people ſeconds their ſongs with ſhouts; the earth ſounds, and heauen rings with the ioyfull acclamations of the multitude; It is no ſmall comfort, in a good action, to haue begun well; The entrance of any holy enter-priſe is commonly encountred with many diſcouragements, which if we haue once ouercome, the paſſage is ſmooth.

How would theſe men haue ſhouted at the laying on of the laſt ſtone of the C battlements, who are thus ioyed with laying the firſt ſtones of the foundation?
The end of any thing is better then the beginning: that hath certainetie, this danger; this labour, that reſt: little did theſe men thinke that, for all this, few of them ſhould liue to ſee the roofe.

What different affections ſhall we ſee produced in men by the ſame occaſion? The younger Iewes ſhouted at this ſight, the elder wept: The younger ſhouted to ſee a new foundation; The elder wept to remember the old: They who had ſeene no better, thought this goodly; They who had ſeene the former, thought this meane, and homely; more ſorrowing for what they had loſt, then reioycing in ſo vnequall a reparation.

As it may fall out, it is ſome peece of miſerie to haue beene happier; euery abatement of the degrees of our former height laies ſiege to our thankefulneſſe, for leſſer mercies. Sometimes, it proues an aduantage to haue knowne no better; he ſhall more comfortably enioy preſent benefits, who takes them as they are, without any other compariſons, then of the weakeneſſe of his owne deſer-
D uings. It is nothing to me what my ſelfe or others haue beene, ſo I be now well:
Neither is it otherwiſe in particular Churches, if one be more glorioſly built then another, yet if the foundation be rightly laid in both; one may not inſult, the other may not repine: Each muſt congratulate the truth to other, each muſt thankfully inioy it ſelfe.

The noiſe was not more loud, then confuſed; here was a diſcordant mixture of lamentation, and ſhouting; it was hard to ſay whether drowned the other.

This aſſembly of Iewes was a true image of Gods Church on earth; one ſings, A another cries; neuer doth it all either laugh or mourne at once. It ſhall bee in our triumph that all teares ſhall be wipt from our eyes; till then, our paſſions muſt be mixed, according to the occaſions.

The Iewes are buſie at worke, not more full of ioy, then hopes; and now that the wals begin to ouer-looke the earth; their thoughts ſeeme to ouer-looke the walls. But what great entepriſe was euer ſet on foot for God, which found not ſome croſſes?

There was a mungrell broode of Samarit-Aſſyrians, which euer ſince the dayes of Senacherib dwelt in the land of Iſrael; whoſe Religion was a patched coate of ſeuerall ſhreds; ſome little part Iewiſh, the reſt Pagan, not without much varietie of idolatrie. Theſe hollow neighbours profer their aſſiſtance to the children of the captiuitie; Let vs build with you, for we ſeeke your God, as ye do: and doe ſacrifice to him. Might men be their owne iudges, there would bee no hereſie in the world, no miſ-worſhip. It is true; theſe men did ſacrifice to the true God; The lyons taught them to ſeeke, and the Iſraelitiſh Prieſt taught B them to find the faſhions of the God of the land: Some of theſe Iewes knew their deuotion of old; They ſerued Iſraels God; but with their owne: As good no God, as too many. In a iuſt indignation therefore do theſe Iewiſh gouernours repell the partnerſhip of ſuch helpers: You haue nothing to do with vs, to build an houſe to our God; but we our ſelues together will build vnto the Lord God of Iſrael. The hand of an idolater is contagious. Yet, had it beene to the building of ſome fortreſſe, or common-hall, perhaps their ayd had not beene refuſed, but when the wals of Gods houſe are to be raiſed, this ſocietie had beene piacular.

Thoſe that may not be allowed to helpe the worke, will aske no leaue to hinder it: their malicious ſuggeſtions weaken the hands of the people of Iudah, and ſtirre vp authoritie to ſuppreſſe them.

Cyrus was farre off; neither liued he long after that gracious commiſſion; and beſides was ſo taken vp the while with his wars, that he could not haue leiſure to ſift thoſe querulous accuſations. Now therefore, during the laſt yeares of Cyrus, and the raigne of his ſonne Cambyſes, and the long gouernment C of Darius Hiſtaſpides, and of his ſonne Xerxes, or Ahaſuerus, and laſtly of his ſonne Artaxerxes, vntill the dayes of Darius Nothus, (which was no leſſe then fiue ſucceſſions of Kings, (beſides Cyrus) doe the walls of the Temple ſtand ſtill, yea lie waſte; ſubiect to the wrongs of time, and wether: the fit matter of ſorrow to the Iewes, inſultation to the enemies, deriſion to paſſengers.

What a wide gap of time was here betwixt the foundation of Gods Houſe, and the battlements? How large a triall doth God now ſecondly take of the faith, of the patience of his people? How large a proofe doth he giue of his owne long-ſuffering? Oh God, when thou hadſt but one Houſe vpon earth, thou wert content to put vp delayes, yea affronts in the building of it; now thou haſt many, it is no maruell if thy longanimitie and iuſtice, abide ſome of them to lie deſolate: They are not ſtones, or mettals, or men that can make thee more glorious; thou beſt knoweſt when to ſerue thy ſelfe of all theſe, when to honour theſe with thy ſeruice.

A ſmall matter hinders the worthieſt action; as a little fiſh (they ſay) ſtayes D the greateſt ſhip: Before, the Iewes were diſcouraged with words, but now they are ſtopped by commands.

Theſe enuious Samaritans haue corrupted the gouernours which the Perſian Kings ſet ouer thoſe parts; and from their hands haue obtained letters of deepe calumniation, to Ahaſuerus the King; and after him, to his ſonne Artaxerxes; wherein Ieruſalem is charged with old rebellion to Kings; and for proofe appellation is made to the records; from which euidence, is ſpitefully inferred, that if theſe walls be once built, the King ſhall receiue no tribute on this ſide

A the riuer. Neuer was Gods Church but ſubiect to reproaches.

Princes haue reaſon to be iealous of their rights. The records are ſearcht; It ſoone appeares that within one Centurie of yeares, Ieruſalem had rebelled againſt Nebuchadnezzar, and held out two yeares ſiege of that great Babylonian. The ſcandall of diſloyaltie is perpetuall: although indeed they held him rather a preuailing enemie, then a lawfull Soueraigne; One act diſparages either place, or perſon, to all poſterities. Therefore ſhall the walls of Ieruſalem lie waſte, becauſe it had once beene trecherous; After an hundred yeares doth that Citie rue one perfidious act of Zedekiah. Fidelitie to our gouernours is euer both ſafe, and honourable.

Command is now ſent out from * Artaxerxes, (euen the ſonne of Queene Eſther) to reſtraine the worke: All reſpects muſt ceaſe with carnall minds, when their honours and profits are in queſtion. Rehum the Chancellor, and Shimſhai the Scribe, come now armed with authoritie: The ſword hath eaſily preuailed againſt the trowell. Still doe the Iewes find themſelues as it were, captiues at home, and in ſilence, and ſorrow, ceaſe from their labours, vntill the B dayes of the next ſucceſſour, Darius Nothus.

* Surnamed Long-hand.

As thoſe that had learn'd to ſow after a bad crop; theſe Iewes, vpon the change of the Prince, by the incouragement of the Prophets of God, Haggai, and Zechariah, take new heart to build againe: If others power hinder vs in the worke of God, our will may not be guiltie.

Their new gouernours come, as before; to expoſtulate; Who hath commanded you to build this houſe, and to make vp this wall? and what are your names? They wiſely and modeſtly plead the ſeruice of the God of heauen, the decree of Cyrus; ſtill perſiſting to build, as if the prohibition of Artaxerexes had died with the author. The vnpartiall Gouernours do neither claw, nor exaſperate; but relating the humble and iuſt anſwer of the Iewes, moue the King that ſearch may be made in the rolles of Babylon, whether ſuch an Edict were made by Cyrus; and require his royall pleaſure, concerning the validitie of ſuch a pretended decree. Darius ſearches, findes, ratifies, inlargeth it, not onely charging his officers not to hinder the worke, but commanding to leuie ſummes of his owne Tribute, beyond
C the riuer, for the expences of the building, for the furniſhing of ſacrifices; threatning vtter ruine to the houſe of that man, and death to his perſon, who ſhould offer to impeach this bountie: and ſhutting vp with a zealous imprecation; The God of heauen that hath cauſed his Name to dwell there, deſtroy all Kings and people that ſhall put to their hand to alter, and to deſtroy this Houſe of God which is at Ieruſalem: I Darius hath made a decree, let it be done with ſpeed.

Who would haue lookt for ſuch an Edict from a Perſian? No Solomon, no Dauid could haue ſaid more.

The ruler of all hearts makes choyce of his owne inſtruments, and when he pleaſeth, can glorifie himſelfe by thoſe meanes, which are leaſt expected: That ſacred worke which the husband, and ſonne of an Eſther croſſed, ſhall be happily accompliſhed by a Darius: In the ſixt yeare of his raigne, is the Temple of God fully finiſhed; and now the Dedication of it, is celebrated, by a ioyfull feaſt: An hundred bullockes, two hundred rams, foure hundred lambes, in a meet proportion, ſmoke vpon their altars: And now the children of the capti-
D uitie thinke this day a ſufficient payment for all their ſorrowes: We haue reaſon to thinke it the faireſt day that euer ſhone forth to vs, wherein the ſpirituall building of Gods houſe is raiſed vp in our ſoules. How ſhould we ſhout at the laying of this foundation, and feaſt at the laying on of the roofe? What other, what better ſacrifice can we offer vp to God in the ſenſe of our ioy, then our ſelues? Let our hearts be at once, the Temple, the Altar, the Sacrifice; Oh God, be thou glorified in all theſe, who haſt graciouſly honoured all theſe with thy ſelfe.

Euery holy feaſt is now duely kept, the Prieſts know their diuiſions, the A Leuites their courſes; and the whole ſeruice of God is put into a ſetled order; But, as there can be no new beginnings without imperfection nor long continuance, without corruption; reformation is no leſſe neceſſarie then good inſtitutions; *Artaxerxes Mnemon hath learn'd of his father Darius to befriend Gods people; and ſtriues to inherit his beneficence: vnder his gouernment, is Ezra the Prieſt, and learned ſcribe, ſent with a large commiſſion from Babylon, to Ieruſalem, to inquire into the wants, and redreſſe the diſorders of the Iewes; with full power not onely to carrie with him all the voluntaries of his nation; and the treaſures contributed in all the prouince of Babylon; but to raiſe ſuch ſummes, out of the Kings reuenues, as ſhould be found requiſite; and withall to ordaine Magiſtrates, & Iudges, and to crowne the Lawes with due execution, whether to death or baniſhment, or confiſcation; and laſtly, with a large exemption of the Prieſts and Leuites, and all the inferiour officers of the Temple, from all toles, tributes, cuſtomes. Nothing wanted here, whether for direction, or incouragement. It is a ſigne of Gods great fauour to any nation, when the hearts of Soueraigne gouernours are raiſed vp, both to the choiſe of worthy agents, and to the commanding of pious, and reſtoratiue actions.

* The mindfull.

Holy and carefull Ezra gathers a new colony of Iewes, takes view of them, at the riuer of Ahaua; and finding a miſſe of the ſonnes of Leui (without whom B no company, no plantation can be compleat) ſends for their ſupply; And now fully furniſhed, he proclaimes a faſt in the way.

I do not heare him ſay, The iourney is long and dangerous; the people haue neede of all their ſtrength. I could well wiſh vs all afflicted with a religious faſt, were it not that the abatement of the courage, and vigour of the multitude may indanger our ſucceſſe; But without all theſe carnall conſultations, he begins with this ſolemne act of humiliation; It is better to haue God ſtrong in our weakeneſſe, then to haue fleſh and blood ſtrong in his neglect.

Artaxerxes was a Patron of the Iewes, yet a Pagan by profeſſion; wiſe Ezra was afraid of quenching thoſe ſparkes of pietie which he deſcried in this ſemiproſelite. Rather therefore then he will ſeeme to imply a diſtruſt in the prouidence of that God, in whoſe ſeruice he went by ſeeking a conuoy of ſouldiers C from the King; Ezra chooſes to put himſelfe vpon the hazard of the way, and the immediate protection of the Almightie. Any death were better then to heare Artaxerxes ſay, Is this the man that ſo confidently told me, The hand of our God is vpon all them for good that ſeeke him; but his power and his wrath is againſt all them that forſake him? Doth he beleeue himſelfe that he thus doubts ere he begin? Dare he not truſt his God with his owne buſineſſes?

The reſolutions of faithfull hearts are heroicall: No heathen man ſhall ſtumble at Ezraes feare: He can find more aſſurance in his faſt, then in a Perſian band: with a couragious reliance vpon the hand of his God he puts himſelfe into the iourney; and finds nothing but ſafetie and ſucceſſe: The fidelitie of the Almightie neuer diſappointed the confidence of his ſeruants. All the armie of Artaxerxes could not haue beene ſo ſtrong a guard to the Iewes, as their inuiſible protection.

In the ſpace of foure moneths is Ezra and his company happily arriued at Ieruſalem: where hee ioyes to ſee the new Temple, and his old Colleagues: D and now hauing deliuered vp the charge of his treaſure, by waight, in the chambers of the houſe of the Lord, he applyes himſelfe to his worke, and deliuers the Kings Commiſſions to the Lieu-tenants and Gouernors, for their vtmoſt aſſiſtance.

The Princes of Iudah doe not (for ought I heare) repine at the large Patent granted to this Prieſt, nor ſay, What doth a man of this robe meddle with placing, or diſplacing Magiſtrates? with execution of iudgements to death, bonds, baniſhment?

A baniſhment? but rather as congratulating this power to ſacred hands, gladly preſent vnto him all their grieuances. Truly religious hearts cannot grudge any honour to their ſpirituall guides.

This holy Commiſſioner is ſoone welcomed with a ſad Bill of complaint, from ſome good Peeres of Iſrael; wherein they charge diuers of the Prieſts, Leuites, people, not to haue ſeparated themſelues from the idolatrous inhabitants of the lands, nor (therefore) from their abominations, euen from Canaanites, Hittites, Perizzites, and the reſt of thoſe branded nations; that they haue taken of their daughters for themſelues, and for their ſonnes: So that the holy ſeed haue mingled themſelues of thoſe forbidden people; and, (which made the matter ſo much more hainous, leſſe remediable) that the hand of the Princes, and Rulers, hath beene chiefe in this treſpaſſe.

Oh hypocriticall Iewes, did ye refuſe to ſuffer your Samaritan neighbours to ioyne with you in building a liueleſſe houſe vnto God, and doe ye now ioyne affinitie with with a more accurſed generation for the building of liuing houſes vnto poſteritie? for the pulling downe of the liuely Houſe of God.

B How could Ezra heare this with his clothes, his haire, his beard vntorne? What griefe, what aſtoniſhment muſt this newes needs bring to a zealous heart? And, were it not that the conſcience of his ſincere reſpect to Gods glory relieued him, how could Ezra chooſe but repent him of his iourney; and ſay; Am I come from Babylon to find Paganiſme in Iudah? Did I leaue Perſians, to meet with Canaanites? what doe I heare, if Ieruſalem be remoued? How much better were a cleare captiuitie, then an idolatrous freedome? Wo is me, that hauing left many Iewiſh hearts in Babylon, I now am forced to find heathen bloud in Ieruſalem.

As a man diſtracted with ſorrow, Ezra ſits downe vpon the earth with his garments rent, with the haire of his head, and beard pluckt off, wringing his hands, knocking his breſt, not mouing from his place vntill the euening ſacrifice. It is hard to be too much affected with the publike ſinnes of Gods people. Thoſe who find themſelues in the ſhip of Gods Church, cannot but bee much troubled with euery dangerous leake that it takes: Common caſes are C not more neglected by the careleſſe, then taken to heart by the wiſe and godly.

There, and thus, Ezra ſits aſtonied vntill the euening ſacrifice: others reſorted to him the while; euen all that trembled at the words of the God of Iſrael; but to helpe on his ſorrow, not to relie; neither doth any man wiſh a mitigation of his owne, or others griefe. At laſt, he riſes vp from his heauineſſe, and caſts himſelfe vpon his knees and ſpreads out his hands vnto the Lord his God: Wherefore was all that penſiueneſſe, faſting, ſilence, tearing of haire and clothes, but to ſerue as a meete preface to his prayers? wherein hee ſo freely powres out his heart, as if it had beene all diſſolued into deuotion; profeſſing his ſhame to lift vp his face towards the Throne of God; confeſſing the iniquities of his people, which were increaſed ouer their heads, and growne vp vnto heauen; fetching their treſpaſſe farre, and charging them deepe; feelingly acknowledging the iuſt hand that had followed them, in all their iudgements, and the iuſt confuſion wherein they now ſtand before the face of their God.

D Teares, and ſighes, and grouelings accompanied his prayers; the example and noiſe whereof drew Iſrael into a participation of this publike mourning, For the people wept very ſore: How can they chuſe but thinke, if he thus lament for vs, how ſhould we grieue for our ſelues.

All Iudah went away merrily with their ſinne, till this checke of Ezra, now they are afflicted: Had not the hands of the Peeres beene in this treſpaſſe, the people had not beene guiltie; had not the cheekes of Ezra beene firſt drenched with teares, the people had not beene penitent. It cannot bee ſpoken, what power there is in a great example, whether to euill or good. A

hall, J.

Prayers and teares are nothing without indeauors. Shecaniah, the ſonne of Iehiel puts the firſt life into this buſineſſe. Hauing ſeconded the complaint of Ezra, he now addes, Yet there is hope in Iſrael concerning this thing. Now therefore let vs make a couenant with our God to put away all the wiues, and ſuch as are borne of them. Ariſe, for this matter belongeth to thee, wee alſo will be with thee, Be of good courage, and doe it.

When miſchiefe is once done, the chiefe care is how to redreſſe it. The beſt way of redreſſe is the deliberate vndoing of that which we haue raſhly committed; The ſureſt obligation to the vndoing of an euill act, is an oath or couenant made with God for the performance.

There is no man ſo wiſe, but he may make vſe of good counſell; there is no man ſo forward, but he may abide incitation. It is no ſmall incouragement to ſee an heartie aſſiſtance in an enuious and difficult ſeruice. Then aroſe Ezra, and made the chiefe Prieſts, the Leuites and all Iſrael to ſweare that they ſhould doe according to this word. B

It is halfe done that is thus aſſured. There was need of a ſtrong power to diſſolue a matrimoniall, though inordinate loue: Doubtleſſe, theſe men had married out of affection; their hearts were no leſſe ſet vpon theſe wiues (though heatheniſh) then if they had beene of their owne Tribes; neither were their children, thus begotten leſſe deare vnto them, then if they had laine in Iewiſh wombes: Nothing leſſe then an oath of God, therefore could quit theſe paſſions; That is both required and taken.

Now begins Ezra to conceiue ſome hope of preſent redreſſe; the comfort whereof, yet, cannot turne off his ſorrow for the offence paſſed; He neither eates bread, nor drinkes water; willingly puniſhing himſelfe, becauſe Iſrael had ſinned: Now ſhall his Countrie-men eaſily reade in his face their owne penance, and iuſt humiliation; and ſay; This man takes no ioy in our ſufferings; he would not ſmart thus for vs, if he did not deſcrie more danger towards vs then we can apprehend.

Proclamation is made thorow Iudah and Ieruſalem, vnder paine of forfaiture of ſubſtance, and excommunication from Gods people; that all the children of the captiuitie ſhould gather themſelues together vnto Ieruſalem. C They are met accordingly; The Courts of Gods Houſe are thronged with penitents; and now, as if the heauen would teach them what to doe, the clouds raine downe abundance of teares. What with thoſe ſad ſhowres, what with their inward remorſe, the people ſit trembling in the open Courts; and humbly wait for the reproofe, for the ſentence of Ezra. He riſes vp; and with a ſeuere countenance, layes before them their ſinne, their amends: The ſinne of their ſtrange wiues; the amends of their confeſſion, of their ſeparation: not ſparing to ſearch their wound; not neglecting the meet plaiſter for their cure.

The people, as willing to be healed, yeeld themſelues patiently to that rough hand; not ſhrinking at the paine, not fauouring the ſore; As thou haſt ſaid, ſo muſt we doe; Onely crauing a fit proportion of time, and a due aſſiſtance for the diſpatch of ſo long and important a worke. Ezra gladly harkens to this, not ſo much requeſt, as counſell of Iſrael; The charge is deuided to men, and dayes; D For two moneths ſpace the commiſſioners ſit cloſe; and within that compaſſe, finiſh this buſineſſe, not more thankeſſe then neceſſarie: Doubtleſſe much varietie of paſſion met with them in this buſie ſeruice; Here you ſhould haue ſeene an affectionate huſband bitterly weeping at the diſmiſſion of a louing wife, and drowning his laſt farewell in ſobs: there you might haue ſeene a paſſionate wife, hanging vpon the armes of her beloued husband, and on her knees, coniuring him by his former vowes, and the deare pledges of their loues; and profering with many teares, to redeeme the loſſe of her husband with the change of her

Religion:

A Religion : Here , you might haue ſeene , the kindred and parents of the diſmiſſed, ſhutting vp their denied ſuites with rage and threats. There , the abandoned children kneeling to their ſeemingly-cruell father , beſeeching him not to caſt off the fruit of his owne loynes; and expoſtulating , what they haue offended in being his : The reſolued Iſraelites muſt be deafe, or blind to theſe mouing obiects; and ſo farre forget nature, as to put off part of themſelues. Perſonall inconueniences haue reaſon to yeeld to publike miſchiefes : Long intertainement makes that ſinne hard to be eiected ; whoſe firſt motions might haue beene repelled with eaſe.

Had not the prohibition of theſe mariages beene expreſſe, and their danger and miſchiefe palpable, the care of their ſeparation had not bred ſo much tumult in Iſrael. He that ordained matrimonie, had vpon fearefull curſes forbidden an equall yoke with infidels. Beſides the marring of the Church by the mixture of an vnholy ſeed, Religion ſuffered for the preſent, and all good B hearts with it, Many teares, many ſacrifices need to expiate ſo foule an offence, and to ſet Iſrael ſtraight againe.

All this while euen theſe meſline Iewes were yet forward to build the Temple; The worſt ſinners may yeeld an outward conformitie to actions of pietie: Ezra hath done more ſeruice in pulling downe, then the Iewes in building ; without this act, the Temple might haue ſtood, Religion muſt needs haue falne. Babel had beene tranſlated to Ieruſalem; Iewes had turned Gentiles. Oh happie indeauors of deuout and holy Ezra that hath at once reſtored Iudah to God , and to it ſelfe.

NEHEMIAH building the walls of Ieruſalem.

Nehe. 1, 2, 3, 4. Chapt.

C THirteene yeares were now paſſed, ſince Ezraes going vp to Ieruſalem; when Nehemiah the religious Courtier of Artaxerxes , inquires of the eſtate of his Countrie, and brethren of Iudæa : He might well finde that holy ſcribe had not beene idle : The comiſſion of Artaxerxes had beene improued by him to the vtmoſt; Diſorders were reformed, but the walls lay waſt ; The Temple was built , but the Citie was ruinous ; and if ſome ſtreets were repaired, yet they ſtood vnguarded; open to the mercie of an enemie, to the infeſtation of ill neighbourhood, Great bodies muſt haue ſlow motions; As Ieruſalem, ſo the Church of God whoſe type it was muſt be finiſht by leaſure.

Nehemiah ſate warme in the Court at Shuſhan, fauored by the great King Artaxerxes; nothing could be wanting to him, whether for pleaſure or ſtate; D what needed he to trouble his head with thoughts for Ieruſalem? what if thoſe remote walls lay on heapes whiles himſelfe dwelt faire ? what if his far-diſtant countrie-men be deſpiſed, whiles himſelfe is honoured , by the great Monarch of the world.

It is not ſo eaſie for gracious diſpoſitions to turne off the publike calamities of Gods Church: neither can they doe other then leeſe their priuate felicities in the common diſtreſſes of the vniuerſall bodie. If I forget thee, O Ieruſalem , let my right hand forget her cunning; If I doe not remember thee , let my tongue cleaue to the roofe of my mouth.

A Many Iewes went vp from Babylon, and Shuſhan, to Ieruſalem, few euer returned voluntarily from their natiue home to the region of their captiuitie: Some occaſion drew Hanani with certaine others of Iudah, to this voyage. Of them doth Nehemiah carefully inquire the preſent condition of Ieruſalem: It was no newes that the people were afflicted, and reproached, the walls broken downe, the gates burnt with fire. Euer ſince the furious vaſtation of Nebuzaradan, that Citie knew not better termes: ſeldome when doth the ſpirituall Ieruſalem fare otherwiſe in reſpect of outward eſtate: Eternall glorie and magnificence is an vnſure note of the Church.

Well had Nehemiah hoped that the gracious Edict, and beneficence of Darius, and the ſucceſſiue patronage of his Lord Artaxerxes had by the continuance of twentie yeares fauour aduanced the ſtrength and glorie of Ieruſalem, but now, finding the holy Citie to lie ſtill in the duſt of her confuſion, neglected of God, deſpiſed of men, he ſits downe and weepes, and mournes, and faſts, and prayes to the God of heauen. How many ſaw thoſe ruines, and were little affected? he heares of them a farre off, and is thus paſſionate? How many were B vpon this ſight affected with a fruitleſſe ſorrow, his mourning is ioyned with the indeuors of redreſſe. In vaine is that griefe which hath no other end then it ſelfe.

Nehemiah is reſolued to kneele to the King, his maſter, for the repaire of his Ieruſalem; he dares not attempt the ſuit till he haue begun with God; This good Courtier knew well that the hearts of theſe earthly Kings are in the ouer-ruling hand of the King of heauen to incline whither he pleaſeth: Our prayers are the onely true meanes to make way for our ſucceſſe; If in all our occaſions we doe not begin with the firſt mouer, the courſe is prepoſterous and commonly ſpeeds thereafter.

Who dares cenſure the pietie of Courtiers, when he finds Nehemiah ſtanding before Artaxerxes? Euen the Perſian Pallace is not vncapable of a Saint: No man that waites on the Altar at Ieruſalem can compare for zeale, with him, that waits on the cup of a Pagan Monarch: The mercies of God are vnlimited to places, to callings.

Thus armed with deuotions, doth Nehemiah put himſelfe into the preſence of his maſter Artaxerxes. His face was ouerclouded with a deepe ſadneſſe, C neither was he willing to cleare it. The King eaſily notes the diſparitie of the countenance of the bearer, and the wine that he beares: and in a gracious familiaritie askes the reaſon of ſuch vnwonted change; How well it becomes the great to ſtoope vnto a curteous affabilitie, and to exchange words of reſpect, euen with their humble vaſſalls.

Nehemiah had not beene ſo long in the Court but he knew that Princes like no other then cheerefull attendants; neither was he wont to bring any other face into that preſence, then ſmooth, and ſmiling.

Greatneſſe vſes to be full of ſuſpition, and where it ſees a deiection, and ſowerneſſe of the browes, is readie to apprehend ſome ſullen thoughts of diſcontentment, or, at the leaſt, conſtrues it for a diſreſpect to that ſoueraigntie, whoſe beames ſhould be of power to diſperſe all our inward miſts: Euen good manners forbid a man to preſſe into the preſence of a Prince, except he can either D lay by theſe vnpleaſing paſſions, or hide them: So had Nehemiah hitherto done: Now, he purpoſely ſuffers his ſorrow to looke through his eyes, that it may worke both inquirie, and compaſſion from his maſter; neither doth hee faile of his hopes in either; Why is thy countenance ſad, ſeeing thou art not ſicke. How ſenſible doe we thinke the father of mercies is of all our penſiue thoughts, when an heathen maſter is ſo tender of a ſeruants griefe? How readie ſhould our tongues be to lay open our cares to the God of all comfort, when we ſee Nehemiah ſo quicke in the expreſſions of his ſorrow to an vncertaine eare?

A Let the King liue for euer: Why ſhould not my countenance, be ſad when the Citie the place of my fathers ſepulchres lieth waſte, and the gates thereof burnt with fire. Not without an humble preface doth Nehemiah lay forth his grieuance; Complaints haue euer an vnpleaſing harſhneſſe in them, which muſt be taken off by ſome diſcreet inſinuation: Although it could not but ſound well in the generous eare of Axtaxerxes, that his ſeruant was ſo carefull for the honour of his Countrey; As nature hath made vs all members of a communitie and hath giuen vs common intereſts, ſo, it is moſt pleaſing to vs, to ſee theſe publike cares diuide vs from our owne.

The King eaſily deſcries a ſecret ſupplication wrapt vp in this moanefull anſwer, which the modeſt ſuiter was afraid to diſcloſe, and therefore he helps that baſhfull motion into the light; For what doeſt thou make requeſt? It is the praiſe of bountie to draw on the iuſt petitions of fearefull ſuppliants.

Nehemiah dares not open his mouth of the King, till his heart hath opened it ſelfe by a ſudden eiaculation to his God; No buſineſſe can be ſo haſtie, but B our prayer may preuent it; the wings whereof are ſo nimble, that it can flie vp to heauen, and ſolicit God, and bring downe an anſwer, before euer our words need to come forth of our lips. In vaine ſhall we hope that any deſigne of ours can proſper, if we haue not firſt ſent this meſſenger on our errand.

After this ſilent, and inſenſible preparation; Nehemiah moues his ſuit to the King; not yet at once; but by meet degrees; firſt he craues leaue for his iourney, and for the building: then he craues aide for both; Both are granted; Nehemiah departs furniſhed with letters to the gouernours, for a conuoy; with letters to the keeper of the Kings forreſt for timber. Not more full of deſire then hope.

Who euer put his hand to any great worke for the behooſe of Gods Church, without oppoſition? As the walls of the Temple found buſie enemies, ſo ſhall the walls of the Citie; and theſe ſo much more, as they promiſe more ſecuritie and ſtrength to Ieruſalem: Sanballat the Deputie-Lieutenant of the Moabites, and Tobiah, the like officer to the Ammonites, and Geſhem, to the Arabians, are galled with enuie at the arriuall of a man authorized to ſeeke the welfare of the children of Iſrael: C There cannot bee a greater vexation to wicked hearts, then to ſee the ſpirituall Ieruſalem in any likelihood of proſperitie. Euill ſpirits and men need no other torment, then their owne deſpight,

This wiſe Courtier hath learnt that ſecreſie is the ſureſt way of any important diſpatch. His errand could not but be knowne to the gouernors; their furtherance was inioyned for the prouiſion of materialls; elſe the walles of Ieruſalem had ouer-lookt the firſt notice of their heathen-neighbours. Without any noiſe doth Nehemiah ariſe in the dead of night, and taking ſome few into his companie, none into his counſaile, he ſecretly rounds the decaied walles of Ieruſalem, and viewes the breaches, and obſerues the gates; and returnes home in ſilence, ioying in himſelfe to fore-ſee thoſe reparations, which none of the inhabitants did once dreame of: At laſt, when he had fully digeſted this great worke in his owne breſt, he cals the Rulers and Citizens together, and hauing condoled with them, the common diſtreſſe, and reproach, he tells them of the hand of his God, which was good vpon him; he ſhewes them the gracious D commiſſion of the King, his maſter, for that good worke. They anſwer him with a zealous incouragement of each other, Let vs riſe vp and build. Such an heartie inuitation countenanced by authoritie hath eaſily ſtrengthened the hands of the multitude; with what obſeruance and deareneſſe doe they now looke vpon their vnexſpected Patron? How do they honour him as a man ſent from heauen, for the welfare of Ieruſalem? Euerie man flyes to his hodde, and trowell, and reioyces to ſecond ſo noble a leader, in laying a ſtone in that wall of their common defence.

Thoſe emulous neighbours of theirs, Sanballat, Tobiah, Geſhem, the chiefe commanders of Moab, Ammon, Arabia, haue ſoone eſpied the firſt morter, that is laid vpon that old foundation. Enuie is vſually more quicke-ſighted then loue: And now they ſcornfully apply themſelues to theſe deſpiſed Iewes, and thinke to ſcoffe them out of their worke: The fauourableſt perſecution of any good cauſe is the laſh of lewd tongues; whether by bitter taunts or by ſcurrilous inuectiues: which it is as impoſſible to auoid, as neceſſarie to contemne. The barking of theſe dogs doth not hinder Nehemiah from walking on his way; profeſſing his confidence in the God of heauen, whoſe worke that was; hee ſhakes off their impotent malice, and goes on cheerefully to build: Euerie Iſraelite knowes his ſtation. Eliaſhib the high Prieſt, and the reſt of that ſacred tribe put the firſt hand to this worke; they build the ſheep-gate, and ſanctifie it; and in it, all the reſt. As the firſt fruits of the field, ſo the firſt ſtones of the wall, are hallowed to God, by the conſecration of thoſe deuout agents: That buſineſſe is like to proſper which beginnes with God. A

No man was idle, no part was intermitted; All Ieruſalem was at once encompaſſed with buſie labourers. It cannot bee, but the ioynt-indeauors of faithfull hearts muſt raiſe the walles of the Church. B

Now Sanballat, and his brethren, finde ſome matter to ſpend their ſcoffes vpon; What do theſe feeble Iewes? will they fortifie themſelues? will they ſacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they reuiue the ſtones out of the heaps of rubbiſh which are burnt.

How baſely do carnall minds thinke of the proiects, and actions of Gods children; therefore vilifying them, becauſe they meaſure them by no other line, then outward probabilitie. Oh fooliſh Moabites, this worke is Gods, and therefore in deſpight of all your tongues and hands, it ſhall proſper: He heares you whom ye haue blaſphemed, and ſhall turne your reproach vpon your owne heads.

And thou proud Ammonite, that couldſt ſay, If a Foxe go vpon their ſtone-wall, he ſhall breake it downe; ſhalt well find, that all the woluiſh troopes of your confederates ſhall not be able to remoue one ſtone of this ſure fortification; Whiles Moab and Ammon repine and bluſter in vaine this wall ſhall riſe, and when Moab and Ammon ſhall lie in the duſt, this wall ſhall ſtand. The morter that hath beene tempered with ſo many prayers, cannot but out-laſt all the flints, and marbels of humane confidence. C

Now the growth of this wall hath turned the mirth of the aduerſaries into rage: Theſe Moabites, Ammonites, Arabians, Aſhdadites conſpire all together, to fight againſt Ieruſalem; and whiles the morter is yet greene, to demoliſh thoſe enuied heapes.

What hath this Citie offended in deſiring to be defenced? what wrong could it bee to wiſh a freedome from wrongs? Were this people ſo mightie, that there could be danger in ouer-powering their neighbours, or in reſiſting a common Soueraigne, there might haue appeared ſome colour for this hoſtile oppoſition; but, alas; what could a deſpiſed handfull doe to the preiudice of either? It is quarrell enough to Ieruſalem that it would not be miſerable.

Neither is it otherwiſe with the head of theſe helliſh complices; there needs no other cauſe of his vtmoſt furie, then to ſee a poore ſoule ſtrugling to get out of the reach of his tyrannie. So do ſauage beaſts briſtle vp themſelues, and make the moſt fierce aſſaults when they are in danger of looſing the prey, which they had once ſeized on. D

In the meane while, what doth Nehemiah with his Iewes for their common ſafetie? They pray, and watch; they pray vnto God, they watch againſt the enemie.

Thus, thus ſhall we happily preuaile againſt thoſe ſpirituall wickedneſſes, which

A warre againſt our ſoules: No euill can ſurprize vs if we watch; no euill can hurt vs, if we pray; This is the victorie that ouercomes the world, euen our faith.

There was need of a continued vigilancie; the enemy was not more malicious, then ſubtile, and had ſaid; They ſhall not know, neither ſee, till we come in the midſt amongſt them, and ſlay them. Open force is not ſo dangerous, as cloſe diſſimulation; They meant to ſeeme Iewes, whiles they were Moabites and Ammonites; and in the clothes of brethren purpoſed to hide murderers. Neuer is Satan ſo preuailent, as when he comes transformed into an Angell of light.

It was a mercifull prouidence of God, that made theſe mens tongues the blabs of their owne counſell. Many a fearefull deſigne had proſpered, if wickedneſſe could haue beene ſilent. Warning is a lawfull guard to a wiſe aduerſarie: Now doth Nehemiah arme his people; and for the time, changes their trowels into ſwords, and ſpeares, and bowes; raiſing vp their courage with a B vehement exhortation, to remember the Lord, which is great, and terrible, and to fight for their brethren, their ſonnes, their daughters, their wiues, and their houſes. Nothing can ſo hearten vs to the encountring of any euill, as the remembrance of that infinite power and wiſedome which can either auert, or mitigate, or ſanctifie it: we could not faint if we did not forget God.

Neceſſitie vrges a man to fight for himſelfe, loue inables his hand to fight for thoſe which challenge a part in him; where loue meets with neceſſitie, there can want no indeuor of victorie; Neceſſitie can make euen cowards, valiant; loue makes the valiant, vnreſiſtable: Nehemiah doth not therefore perſwade theſe Iewes to fight for themſelues, but for theirs: The iudgement of the intereſt, and danger, cannot but quicken the dulleſt ſpirits.

Diſcouered counſels are alreadie preuented: Theſe ſerpents die by being firſt ſeene; When the enemies heard that it was knowne vnto vs, they let fall their plot. Could we deſcrie the enterpriſes of Satan, that tempter would returne aſhamed.

It is a ſafe point of wiſedome to carrie a iealous eye ouer thoſe, whom we haue once found hollow, and hoſtile: From that time forth Nehemiah diuided the taske, betwixt the trowell, and the ſword; ſo diſpoſing of euerie Iſraelite, that whiles one hand was a Maſon, the other was a ſouldier: one is for work, the other C for defence. Oh liuely image of the Church militant, wherein euery one labours, weaponed; wherein there is neither an idle ſouldier, nor a ſecure workeman: euery one ſo builds, as that he is readie to ward temptations; euerie one ſo wildes the ſword of the Spirit, for defence, that withall, he builds vp himſelfe in his moſt holy faith; here is neither a fruitleſſe valour, nor an vnſafe diligence.

But what can our weapons auaile vs, if there bee not meanes to warne vs of an enemie? Without a Trumpet we are armed in vaine. The worke is great and large, and we are ſeperated vpon the wall, one farre from another: Yea, ſo farre as the vtmoſt bounds of the earth, are we ſeparated one from another, vpon the walles of the ſpirituall Ieruſalem; onely the ſacred Trumpets of God, call vs, who are diſtant in place, to a combination in poſeſſion. And who are thoſe Trumpets, but the publike meſſengers of God, of whom God hath ſaid; If the Watchmen ſee the ſword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned, D if the ſword come, and take any perſon from among them, he is taken away in his iniquitie, but his bloud will I require at the Watchmans hand. Woe be to vs if we ſound not; if the ſound we giue be vncertaine: woe be to our people, if when we premoniſh them of enemies, of iudgements, they ſit ſtill vnmoued, not buckling themſelues to a reſiſtance, to a preuention.

Ezec. 33. 6.

It is a mutuall aide, to which theſe Trumpets inuite vs; we might fight apart, without the ſignals of warre; In what place yee heare the ſound of the Trumpet, reſort ye thither vnto vs. There can be no ſafetie to the Church, but where euery man thinkes his life, and welfare conſiſts in his fellowes; Conioyned forces may proſper, ſingle oppoſitions are deſperate: All hearts and hands muſt A meet in the common quarrell.

NEHEMIAH redreſſing the extortion of the Iewes.

WIth what difficultie do theſe miſerable Iewes ſettle in their Ieruſalem? The feare of forraine enemies doth not more afflict them then the extortion of their owne: Dearth is added vnto warre: Miſeries do not ſtay for a mannerly ſucceſſion to each other, but in a rude importunitie throng in, at once. Babel may be built with eaſe, but whoſoeuer goes about to raiſe the walls of Gods Citie, ſhall haue his hands full: The incurſion of publike enemies may bee preuented with vigilancie and power; but there is B no defence againſt the ſecret gripes of oppreſſion.

There is no remedie, the Iewes are ſo taken vp with their trowel. and ſword, for the time, that they cannot attend their trades; ſo as, whiles the wall did riſe, their eſtates muſt needs impaire: Euen in the cheapeſt ſeaſon they muſt needs be poore, that earned nothing but the publike ſafetie, how much more in a common ſcarcitie? Their houſes, lands, vineyards are therefore morgaged, yea their verie ſkins are ſold for corne, to their brethren: Neceſſitie forces them to ſell that, which it was crueltie to buy; What will we not, what muſt we not part with for life? The couetous rulers did not conſider the occaſions of this want, but the aduantage. Sometimes, a bargaine may be as vnmercifull as a robberie: Charitie muſt bee the rule in all contracts; the violation whereof, whether in the matter, or the price, cannot but be ſinfull.

There could not be a iuſter ground of expoſtulation then this of the oppreſſed C Iewes; Our fleſh is as the fleſh of our brethren, our children as their children; and loe, we bring into bondage our ſonnes and our daughters: whiles there is no difference in nature, why ſhould there be ſuch an iniurious diſproportion in condition. Euen the ſame fleſh may beare a iuſt inequalitie; ſome may be rulers, whiles others are ſubiect; Some wealthy, others poore; but why thoſe wealthy rulers ſhould tyrannize ouer thoſe poore inferiours, and turne brotherhood into bondage no reaſon can be giuen but lawleſſe ambition; If there were one fleſh of Peeres, another of Peaſants, there ſhould be ſome colour for the proud impoſitions of the great, as becauſe the fleſh of beaſts is in a lower ranke then ours, we kill, we deuoure it at pleaſure; but now ſince the large bodie of mankinde conſiſts of the ſame fleſh, why ſhould the hand ſtrike the foot? And if one fleſh may challenge meet reſpects from vs, how much more one ſpirit; The ſpirit is more noble, then the fleſh is baſe; the fleſh is dead without the ſpirit; the ſpirit without the fleſh, actiue and immortall, Our ſoule, though ſhapeleſſe, D and immateriall, is more apparently one, then the fleſh; And if the vnitie of our humane ſpirit call vs to a mutuall care, and tenderneſſe in our carriage, each to other, how much more of the diuine? by that wee are men, by this we are Chriſtians: As the ſoule animates vs to a naturall life, ſo doth Gods Spirit animate the ſoule to an heauenly; which is ſo one; that it cannot be deuided. How ſhould that one ſpirit cauſe vs ſo farre to forget all naturall, and ciuill differences, as not to contemne, not to oppreſſe any whom it informeth?

A They are not Chriſtians, not men, that can inioy the miſeries of their brethren, whether in the fleſh or ſpirit.

Good Nehemiah cannot chooſe but be much moued at the barbarous extortion of the people; and now, like an vnpartiall gouernour, he rebukes the Rulers and Nobles, whoſe hand was thus bloudie with oppreſſion. As of fiſhes, ſo of men, the leſſer are a prey to the great: It is an ill vſe made of power, when the weight of it ſerues onely to cruſh the weake. There were no liuing amongſt men, had not God ordained heigher then the higheſt; and yet heigher then they. Eminencie of place cannot be better improued, then by taking downe mightie offenders.

If Nobilitie doe embaſe it ſelfe to any foule ſinne, it is ſo much more worthy of coertion, by how much the perſon is of greater marke.

The iuſtice of this reproofe conld not but ſhame impudence it ſelfe; We after our abilitie haue redeemed our brethren the Iewes which were ſold to the heathen, and will you ſell your brethren, or ſhall they be ſould to vs? Shall they find at home that yoke of bondage which they had put off abroad? whiles they are ſtill B Iewes, ſhall we turne Aſſyrians? If they muſt bee ſlaues, why not rather to enemies, then to brethren? How much more tollerable were a foraine ſeruitude, then a domeſticall: Be aſhamed, O ye Nobles of Iſrael, to renue Babylon in Ieruſalem. I maruell not if the offenders be ſtricken dumbe with ſo vnanſwerable an expoſtulation; Guiltineſſe, and confuſion haue ſtopt their mouthes.

Many of thoſe who haue not had grace enough to refraine ſinne, yet are not ſo vtterly voide of grace as to maintaine ſinne; Our after-wits are able to diſcerne a kinde of vnreaſonableneſſe in thoſe wicked actions, which the firſt appearance repreſents vnto vs plauſible. Gaine leads in ſinne, but ſhame followes it out. There are thoſe that are bold and wittie to beare out commodious, or pleaſant euills; neither could theſe Iewiſh enormities, haue wanted ſome colours of defence; Their ſtocke was their owne, which might haue beene otherwiſe improued, to no leſſe profit; The offer, the ſuit of theſe bargaines was from the ſellers; Theſe eſcheates fell into their hands, vnſought; neither did their contract cauſe the neede of their brethren, but relieue it: But their conC ſcience will not beare this plea. I know not whether the maintenance of the leaſt euill be not worſe, then the commiſſion of the greateſt; This may bee of frailtie, that argues obſtinacie: There is hope of that man that can bluſh and be ſilent.

After conuiction of the fact, it is ſeaſonable for Nehemiah, to perſwade reformation: No oratorie is ſo powerfull, as that of mildneſſe: eſpecially when we haue to doe with thoſe, who either through ſtomach, or greatneſſe, may not indure a rough reproofe: The drops that fall eaſily vpon the corne, ripen, and fill the eare, but the ſtormie ſhowers that fall with violence, beate downe the the ſtalkes flat to the earth, and lay whole fields, without hope of recouerie. Who can reſiſt this ſweete and ſoueraigne reprehenſion; Ought yee not to walke in the feare of our God, becauſe of the reproach of the heathen, our enemies? Did we dwell alone in the midſt of the earth, yet the feare of our God ſhould ouer-awe our wayes; but now that we dwell in the midſt of our enemies, whoſe eyes are bent vpon all our actions, whoſe tongues are as readie to blaſpheme God, as D we to offend him, how carefully ſhould we auoid thoſe ſinnes, which may draw ſhame vpon our profeſſion?

Now the ſcandall is worſe then the fact; Thus, ſhall Religion ſuffer more from the heathen, then our brethren doe from vs: If iuſtice, if charitie cannot ſway with vs, yet let the ſcornefull inſultations of the prophane Gentiles, affright vs from theſe preſſures. No ingenuous diſpoſition can be ſo tender of his owne diſgrace, as the true Iſraelite is of the reproch of his God: What is it that he will not rather refraine, doe, ſuffer, then that glorious Name ſhall hazard a blemiſh? They cannot want outward retentiues from ſinne, that liue A either among friends, or enemies; if friends, they may not be grieued, if enemies, they may not be prouoked: Thoſe that would liue well, muſt ſtand in awe of all eyes; Euen thoſe that are without the Church yet may not be without our regard: No perſon can be ſo contemptible, as that his cenſure ſhould be contemned.

In diſſwading from ſinne, reaſon it ſelfe cannot preuaiue more then example. I likewiſe, and my brethren, and my ſeruants might exact of them money, and corne. But from the time that I was appointed to the charge of Iudah, I, and my brethren haue not eaten the bread of the gouernour. He ſhall neuer rule well, that doth all that he may: It is not ſafe for either part, that a Prince ſhould liue at the height of his power: and if the greateſt abate of their right, is it for inferiors to extort? Had Nehemiah aimed at his owne greatneſſe, no man could haue had fairer pretences for his gaine.

The former gouernors that were before him were chargeable vnto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, beſides fortie ſhekels of ſiluer. His foot had not B firſt trod in this commodious path; it was beaten by the ſteps of his predeceſſors; neither did any of them walke beſides it: How euer it might be enuious to raiſe new taxations yet to continue thoſe he found vnrepined at, had beene out of the reach of exception: A good Gouernour lookes not ſo much what hath beene done, as what ſhould be; Precedents are not the rule, whereby hee rules, but iuſtice, but pietie. So did not I, becauſe of the feare of the Lord: Lawes are not a ſtraighter curbe to ſubiects, then conſcience is to good Princes.

They dare not doe what they cannot doe charitably: what aduantage can they thinke it to be from vnder the controllment of men, when the God of heauen notes, and puniſhes their offences. Who ſo walketh by this rule, can neither erre, nor miſ-carrie; It is not truſting to the externall remedies of ſinne, either they are not alwayes preſent; or if preſent, not pourefull enough; but if the feare of God haue once taken vp the heart, it goes euer with vs, and is ſtrong enough to ouer-maſter the forceableſt temptation.

Therefore muſt theſe Iewes follow this example of Nehemiah, becauſe he followed not the example of his predeceſſors; becauſe hee left their euill, they muſt imitate his good. In vaine ſhall Rulers aduiſe againſt their owne practice; C when they lead the way, they may well challenge to be followed: Seldome hath it beene euer ſeene that great perſons haue not beene ſeconded in euill; why ſhould not their power ſerue to make patternes of their vertues?

Thus well did it ſpeed with Nehemiah; his mercifull carriage, and zealous ſuit haue drawne the Rulers to a promiſe of reſtitution; We will reſtore them, and will require nothing of them, ſo will we doe as thou ſaieſt.

It is no ſmall aduantage that theſe Nobles muſt forgoe, in their releaſes: there cannot be a better ſigne of a ſound amendment, then that wee can bee content to be looſers by our repentance; many formall penitents haue yeelded to part with ſo much of their ſinne, as may abate nothing of their profit; as if theſe Rulers ſhould haue beene willing to reſtore the perſons, but withall D ſhould haue ſtood ſtifely to require their ſummes: This whining and partiall ſatisfaction had beene thankeleſſe. True remorſe inlargeth the heart, and openeth the hand to a bountifull redemption of our errors.

Good purpoſed doe too often coole in time, and vaniſh into a careleſſe forgetfulneſſe; Nehemiah feared this iſſue of theſe holy reſolutions; and therefore he proſecutes them in their firſt heat; not leauing theſe promiſes, till hee had ſecured them, with an oath; The Prieſts are called for, that in their mouthes, the adiuration may be more ſolemne, and ſacred; It is the beſt point of wiſedome to take the firſt opportunitie of fixing good motions which otherwiſe are of themſelues light, and ſlightie. To make all yet more ſure, their oathes

A are croſſe-barred with his execration. Alſo I ſhooke my lap, and ſaid, ſo God ſhake out euerie man from his houſe, and from his labour that performeth not this promiſe, euen thus be he ſhaken out, and emptied, and all the Congregation ſaid, Amen. A promiſe, an oath, a curſe, are paſſed vpon this act; now, no Iſraelite dares falter in the execution: When we haue a ſinne in chaſe, it is good to follow it home, not ſlackning our purſuit till wee haue fully preuailed; and when it is once falne vnder our hands, we cannot kill it too much.

Now Nehemiah hauing thus happily deliuered his people from a domeſticall captiuitie, commends his ſeruice to the gracious remuneration of the Almightie; Thinke vpon me my God, for good, according to all that I haue done for this people; Therefore doth he refuſe the bread of the Gouernour, that he may receiue the reward of the Gouernour of heauen: Had he taken a temporarie recompence, both he, and it had beene forgotten, now he hath made an happie change for eternitie. Not that he pleades his merit, but ſues for mercie; neither doth hee pray to be remembred for his worke, but according to his worke.

Our good deedes as they are well accepted of God, ſo they ſhall not goe vnrewarded;
B and what God will giue, why may not we craue. Doubtleſſe, as wee may offer vp our honeſt obediences vnto God, ſo wee may expect and beg his promiſed retributions; not out of a proud conceit of the worth of our earnings, who at the beſt are no other then vnprofitable ſeruants, but out of a faithfull dependance vpon his pact of bountie, who cannot bee leſſe then his word: O God, if we doe ought that is good, it is thine act, and not ours; crowne thine owne worke in vs, and take thou the glorie of thine owne mercies.

Whiles Nehemiah is buſie in the reforming abuſes, at home; the enemie is plotting againſt him, abroad; Sanballat, and Tobiah, and Geſhem the Arabian conſpire againſt his life, and in him, againſt the peace of Ieruſalem: What open hoſtilitie could not doe; they hope to effect by pretence of treaties: Foure ſeuerall meſſages call Nehemiah to a friendly meeting. Diſtruſt is a ſure guard. The wiſe gouernor hath learn'd to ſuſpect the hollow fauours of an enemie and to returne them, with ſafe and iuſt excuſes. I cannot come downe, why ſhould the
C worke ceaſe whiles I leaue it, and come downe to you? I do not heare him ſay, You intend miſchiefe to me; I will not come forth to you; though this were the proper cauſe of his forbearance, but he turnes them off with an anſwer, that had as much truth, as reſeruedneſſe. Fraud is the fitlieſt anſwered with ſubtletie Euen innocencie is allowed a lawfull craft; That man is in an ill caſe, that conceales no truth from an aduerſarie.

What intreaties cannot doe, ſhall be attempted by threats; Sanballats ſeruant comes now the fifth time, with an opend letter, importing dangerous intimation, wherein is written, It is reported among the heathen, and Gaſhmu ſaith it, that the Iewes thinke to rebell; for which cauſe thou buildeſt the wall that thou maieſt be their King. It is reported: and what falſhood may not plead this warrant? What can be more lying then report? Among the heathen: and who is more Ethnicke then Sanballat? what Pagan can be worſe then a mungrel Idolater? And Gaſhmu ſaith it, Aske my fellow elſe; This Arabian was one of thoſe three heads of all the hoſtile combination, againſt Ieruſalem, againſt Nehemiah;
D It would be wide with innocence if enemies might be allow'd to accuſe.

That the Iewes thinke to rebell: A ſtale ſuggeſtion, but once, powerfull; Malice hath learn'd to miſcall all actions; where the hands cannot bee taxed, verie thoughts are preiudged: For which cauſe thou buildeſt the wall, that thou mayeſt be their King; He was neuer true Iſraelite that hath not paſſed ſpightfull ſlanders, and miſconſtructions: Artaxerexes knew his ſeruant too well, to beleeue any rumour, that ſhould haue beene ſo ſhameleſſe; The ambition of Nehemiah was well knowne to reach onely to the cup, not to the Scepter of his Soueraigne; And yet, to make vp a ſound tale, Prophets are ſuborned to preach, There is a King in Iudah: as if that loyall gouernour had corrupted the pulpits alſo; and had taught them the language of treaſon.

But what of all this? what if ſome falſe tongue haue whiſpered ſuch idle tales? It is not ſafe for thee, O Nehemiah, to contemne report: Perhaps this newes ſhall fly to the Court, and worke thee a deadly diſpleaſure ere thou canſt know thy ſelfe traduced; Come therefore, and let vs take counſell together: Surely that man cannot be ſparing of any thing, that is prodigall of his reputation. If ought vnder heauen can fetch Nehemiah out of his hold, it is the care of his fame. But that warie gouernour ſees a net ſpred neere vnto this ſtall; and therefore keeps aloofe, not without contempt of thoſe ſlie deuiſes. There are no ſuch things done as thou ſayeſt, but thou faineſt them out of thine owne heart: Some imputations are beſt anſwered with a neglectiue deniall: It falls out often that plaine dealing puts craft out of countenance.

Since neither force nor fraud can kill Nehemiah, they will now trie to draw him into a ſinne, and thereby into a reproach; O God, that any Prophets tongue ſhould be mercenarie! Shemaiah the Seer, is hired by Tobiah, and Sanbalat, to affright the Gouernour, with the noiſe of his intended murder; and to aduiſe him for ſhelter, to flie to the forbidden refuge of the Temple. The colour was faire. Violence is meant to thy perſon, no place but one can promiſe thee ſafetie; The Citie hath as yet no gates; come therefore, and ſhut thy ſelfe vp in the Temple, there onely ſhalt thou be free from all aſſaults.

And what if Nehemiah had harkened to this counſell? Sinne, and ſhame had followed; That holy place was for none but perſons ſacred; ſuch as were priuiledged by bloud, and function; others ſhould preſume, and offend in entring; and now, what would the people ſay? What ſhall become of vs whiles our Gouernour hides his head for feare? Where ſhall wee finde a Temple to ſecure vs? What do we depending vpon a cowardly leader?

Well did Nehemiah fore-caſt theſe circumſtances, both of act, and euent, and therefore reſoluing to diſtruſt a Prophet that perſwaded him to the violation of a Law, he reiects the motion with ſcorne; Should ſuch a man as I flee? Should I goe into the Temple to ſaue my life? I will not goe: It is fit for great perſons to ſtand vpon the honour of their places; Their verie ſtations ſhould put thoſe ſpirits into them, That ſhould make them hate to ſtoope vnto baſe conditions.

Had God ſent this meſſage, wee know hee hath power to diſpence with his owne Lawes; but well might the contradiction of a Law argue the meſſage not ſent of God. God as hee is one, ſo doth hee perfitly agree with himſelfe. If any priuate ſpirit croſſe a written word let him bee accurſed.

AHASVERVS Feaſting, VASTI caſt off, ESTHER choſen.

Eſter, 1.2.

WHat bounds can be ſet to humane ambition? Ahaſuerus, that is, Xerxes the ſonne of Darius is alreadie the King of an hundred, and ſeauen and twentie Prouinces, and now is readie to fight for more. He hath newly ſubdued Egypt, and is now addreſſing himſelfe for the conqueſt of Greece. He cannot hope euer to ſee all the land that he poſſeſſeth, and yet he cannot be quiet, whiles he heares of more. Leſſe then two ells of earth ſhall ere long ſerue him, whom, for the time, a whole world ſhall ſcarce ſatisfie; in vaine ſhall a man ſtriue to haue that which he cannot inioy, and to inioy ought by meere relation; It is a windie happineſſe that is ſought in the exaggeration of theſe titles, which are taken vpon others credit, without the ſenſe of the owner: Nothing can fill the heart of man, but he that made it.

This great Monarch, partly in triumph of the great victories, that hee hath lately wonne in Egypt, and partly, for the animation of his Princes, and ſouldiers to his future exploits, makes a feaſt, like himſelfe, royall and magnificent.

What is greatneſſe if it be not ſhowed? And wherein can greatneſſe be better ſhowne, then in the atchieuments of warre, and the entertainment of peace?

All other feaſts were but hunger to this of Ahaſuerus, whether we regard the number of gueſts, or the largeneſſe of preparation, or continuance of time: During the ſpace of a whole halfe yeare, all the tables were ſumptuouſly furniſhed for all commers from India, to Ethyopia; A world of meat; Euerie meale was ſo ſet on, as if it ſhould haue beene the laſt: Yet all this long feaſt hath an end; and all this glorie is ſhut vp in forgetfulneſſe; What is Ahaſuerus the better, that his Peeres then ſaid, he was in comparably great? What are his Peeres the better, that they were feaſted? Happie is hee that eates bread, and drinkes new wine in the Kingdome of God; this banquet is for eternitie, without intermiſſion, without ſatietie.

What varietie of habites, of languages, of manners, met at the boards of Ahaſuerus? What confluence of ſtrange gueſts was there now to Shuſhan? And, leaſt the glorie of this great King might ſeeme, like ſome courſe picture, onely faire a farre off; after the Princes and Nobles of the remote Prouinces, all the people of Shuſhan are intertained, for ſeuen dayes with equall pompe and ſtate; The ſpacious Court of the Palace is turned into a Royall Hall, the walls are rich hangings, the pillars of marble, the beds of ſiluer and gold, the pauement of porphirie curiouſly checkered; The wine and the veſſels ſtroue whether ſhould be the richer; no men drunke in worſe then gold; and whiles the mettall was the ſame, the forme of each cup was diuerſe; the attendance was anſwerable to the cheare; and the freedome matched both: Here was no compulſion, either to the meaſure, or qualitie of the draught; euerie mans rule was his owne choiſe. Who can but bluſh to ſee forced healths in Chriſtian banquets, when the ciuilitie of verie Pagans commands libertie.

I cannot but enuie the modeſtie of heathen Dames; Vaſhti the Queene, and her Ladies, with all the ſeuerall rankes of that ſexe, feaſt apart; intertaining each A other, with a baſhfull courteſie, without wantonneſſe, without that wilde ſcurrilitie, which vſeth to haunt promiſcuous meetings: Oh ſhameſull vnchaſtitie of thoſe looſe Chriſtians, who muſt feed their luſt, whiles they fill their bellies; and thinke the feaſt vnperfit, where they may not ſate their eye no leſſe then their palate.

The laſt day of this pompous feaſt is now come: King Ahaſuerus is ſo much more cheerefull, by how much his gueſts are neerer to their diſmiſſion. Euerie one is wont to cloſe vp his curteſie with ſo much more paſſion, as the laſt acts vſe to make the deeper impreſſion; And now, that he might at once amaze, and indeare the beholders, Vaſhti the Queene in all her royaltie, is called for; Her ſight ſhall ſhut vp the feaſt, that the Princes and people may ſay, How happie is King Ahaſuerus, not ſo much in this greatneſſe, as in that beautie.

Seuen officers of the chamber are ſent to carrie the meſſage, to attend her entrance, and are returned with a deniall: Perhaps Vaſhi thought; What meanes this vncouth motion? More then ſixe moneths hath this feaſt continued; and, all this while we haue inioyed the wanted libertie of our ſexe; Were the King ſtill himſelfe, this command could not be ſent; it is the wine, and not he, that is guiltie of this errand; Is it for me to humour him in ſo vaine a deſire? Will it agree with our modeſt reſeruedneſſe, to offer our ſelues to bee gazed at by millions B of eyes? Who knowes what wanton attempts may follow vpon this vngouerned exceſſe? This verie meſſage argues that wit, and reaſon haue yeelded their places to that beſotting liquor. Nothing but abſence can ſecure vs from ſome vnbeſeeming profer; neither doubt I, but the King when he returnes to himſelfe, will giue me thankes for ſo wiſe a forbearance.

Thus vpon the conceit (as is likely) that her pretence would be either needleſſe, or vnſafe. Vaſhi refuſeth to come. Although perhaps her great ſpirits thought much to receiue a command from the hand of officers.

The bloud that is once inflamed with wine, is apt to boyle with rage: Ahaſuerus is verie wroth with this indigne repulſe: It was the oſtentation of his glorie, and might, that he affected, before theſe Princes, Peeres, people; and now that ſeemes eclipſed, in the ſhutting vp of all his magnificence, with the diſgracefull affront of a woman. It vexes him to thinke that thoſe Nobles, C whom he meant to ſend away aſtoniſhed with the admiration of his power, and maieſtie, ſhould now ſay: What boots it Ahaſuerus to rule a farre off, when hee cannot command at home? In vaine doth he boaſt to gouerne Kings, whiles he is checked by a woman.

What euer were the intentions of Vaſhti, ſurely her diſobedience was inexcuſable; it is not for a good wife to iudge of her husbands will, but to execute it: neither wit, nor ſtomacke may carrie her into a curious inquiſition into the reaſons of an inioyned charge, much leſſe to a reſiſtance: but in a hood-winkt ſimplicitie ſhe muſt follow, whither ſhe is led; as one that holds her chiefe praiſe to conſiſt in ſubiection.

Where ſhould the perfection of wiſedome dwell, if not in the Courts of great Princes? or what can the treaſures of Monarchs purchaſe more inualuably precious, then learned and iudicious attendance? Or who can be ſo fit for honour as the wiſeſt. D

I doubt how Ahaſuerus could haue beene ſo great, if his throne had not beene ſtill compaſſed with them that knew the times, and vnderſtood the law, and iudgement. Theſe were his Oracles in all his doubts. Theſe are now conſulted in this difficultie; neither muſt their aduice be ſecretly whiſpered, in the Kings eare, but publikely deliuered in the audiences of all the Princes. It is a perilous way that theſe ſages are called to goe, betwixt an husband and wife; eſpecially of ſuch power, and eminencie; yet Memucan feares not to paſſe a heauie ſentence againſt

A againſt Queene Vaſhti. Vaſhti, the Queene hath not done wrong to the King onely, but alſo to all the Princes, and all the people, that are in all the Prouinces of the King Ahaſuerus. A deepe and ſore crimination; iniuries are ſo much more intolerable, as they are dilated vnto more; thoſe offences which are of narrow extent, may receiue an eaſie ſatisfaction; the amends are not poſſible, where the wrong is vniuerſall: For this deede of the Qeeue ſhall come abroad to all woman, ſo that they ſhall deſpiſe their husbands in their eyes: Indeed ſo publiqte a fact muſt needs flie; That concourſe gaue fit opportunitie to diffuſe it all the world ouer; The examples of the great are eaſily drawne into rules. Bad leſſons are apt to be taken out; as honour, ſo contempt fals downe from the head to the skirts; neuer aſcends from the skirts to the head.

Theſe wiſe men are ſo much the more ſenſible of this danger, as they ſaw it more likely, the caſe might proue their owne. Likewiſe ſhall the Ladies of Perſia B and Media ſay this day vnto all Kings Princes. The firſt precedentes of euill muſt be carefully auoided, if we care to keepe a conſtant order in good. Prudence cannot better beſtirre it ſelfe, then in keeping miſchiefe, from home.

The foundation of this doome of Memucan is not laid ſo deepe for nothing; If it pleaſe the King let there goe a royall commandement from him, and let it bee written among the lawes of Perſians, and Medians, that it be not altered, that Vaſhti come no more before Ahaſuerus; and let the King giue her royall eſtate to another that is better then ſhe, How bold a word was this, and how hazardous? Had Ahaſuerus more loued the beautie of Vaſhti, then his honor, Memucan had ſpoken againſt his owne life: Howſoeuer, a Queene of ſo great ſpirit, could not want ſtrength of fauour, and faction, in the Perſian Court; which could not but take fire at ſo deſperate a motion. Faithfull Stateſmen, ouerlooking priuate reſpects, muſt bend their eyes vpon publique dangers, labouring to preuent a common miſchiefe, though with the aduenture of their owne. Nature had taught theſe Pagans the neceſſitie of a female ſubiection; and the hate and ſcorne of a proud diſobedience. They haue vnlearned the verie dictates of Nature, that can abide the head to be ſet below the ribbe.

I cannor ſay but Vaſhti was worthy of a ſharp cenſure; I cannot ſay ſhe was wor- C thy a repudiatiō. This plaiſter drew too hard; It was but heathen iuſtice to puniſh the wiues diſobedience in one indifferent act, with a diuorce: Nothing but the violation of the marriage-bed, can either breake, or vntie the knot of marriage. Had ſhe not beene a Queene, had not that contemptuous act beene publique, the ſentence had not beene ſo hard; now the puniſhment mnſt be exemplarie, leſt the ſinne ſhould be ſo. Manie a one had ſmarted leſſe, if their perſons, if their places had beene meaner.

The King, the Princes approue this heauie iudgement of Memucan; It is not in the power of the faire face of Vaſhti, to warrant her ſtomacke: No doubt many meſſages paſſed ere the rigour of this execution: That great heart knowes not to relent, but will rather breake, then yeeld to an humble deprecation. When the ſtone, and the ſteele mete, fire it ſtricken; it is a ſoft anſwer that appeaſeth wrath. Vaſhti is caſt off, Letters are ſent from the King, into all his Prouinces, to command that euerie man ſhould rule at home; The Court affords them an D awfull patterne of authoritie: Had not Ahaſuerus doted much vpon Vaſhties beautie, he had not called her forth at the feaſt, to bee woundred at, by his Peeres and people, yet now he ſo feeles the wound of his reputation, that hee forgets he euer felt any wound of his affection. Euen the greateſt loue may bee ouer-ſtrained; It is not ſafe preſuming vpon the deepeſt aſſurances of deareneſſe: There is no heart that may not be eſtranged. It is not poſſible that great Princes ſhould want ſoothing vp in all their inclinations, in all their actions: Whiles Ahaſuerus is folluwing the chace of his ambition, in the warres of Greece, his followers are prouiding for his luſt at home; Nothing could ſound more pleaſing

A to a carnall care, then that all the faire young virgins, thorowout all his dominions, ſhould bee gathered into his palace at Shuſhan, for his aſſay, and choice: The decree is ſoone publiſhed; The charge is committed to Hege, the Kings Chamberlaine, both of their purification, and ornaments.

What ſtrife, what emulation was now, amongſt all the Perſian damoſells, that either were, or thought themſelues faire? Euerie one hopes to be a Queene, and ſees no reaſon why any other ſhould bee thought more excellent; How happie were we, if we could be ſo ambitious of our eſpouſalls to the King of heauen?

Amongſt all this throng of Virgins, God hath prouided a wife for Ahaſuerus; hauing determined his choice, where moſt aduantage ſhall riſe to his forlorne people.

The Iewes were miſerably ſcattered ouer the world, in that wofull deportation vnder Ieconiah; ſcarce an handfull of them returned to Ieruſalem; the reſt remaine ſtill diſperſed where they may but haue leaue to liue. There are many thouſands of them turned ouer with the Babylonian Monarchy, to the Perſian; amongſt the reſt, was Mordecai, the ſoone of Iair, of the tribe of Beniamin; a man of no meane note, or abilitie; who, liuing in Shuſhan, had brought vp Hadaſſah, or Eſther, his vnkles daughter, in a liberall faſhion; It was happie for this Orphane, that in a region of captiuitie, ſhe light into ſuch good hands; Her wiſe kinſman B finds it fit, that her breeding, and habite ſhould be Perſian like; In outward and ciuill formes, there was no need to varrie from the heathen; her Religion muſt be her owne; the reſt was ſo altogether theirs, that her verie Nation was not diſcerned.

The ſame God that had giuen incomparable beautie to this Iewеſſe, gaue her alſo fauour in the eyes of Hegai; the keeper of the women; Shee is not onely taken into the Perſian Court, as one of the ſelected virgins, but obſerued with more then ordinarie reſpect; all neceſſaries for her ſpeedie purification are brought to her; Seuen maides are allowed for her attendance, and the beſt and moſt honourable place in that Seraglio is allotted to her; As if this great officer had deſigned her for a Queene, before the choiſe of his maſter.

What ſtrange preparation was here for the impure bed of an heathen? Euery C Virgin muſt be ſixe moneths purified with oyle of myrrhe, and ſixe other moneths perfumed with ſweet odors, beſides thoſe ſpeciall receits, that were allowed to each, vpon their owne election: O God, what care, what coſt is requiſite to that ſoule which ſhould be addreſſed a fit Bride for thine holy and glorious Maieſtie?

When we haue ſcoured our ſelues with the moſt cleanſing oyle of our repentance, and haue perfumed our ſelues with thy beſt graces, and our perfecteſt obedience, it is the onely praiſe of thy mercie, that we may bee accepted.

The other Virgins paſſed their probation, vnregarded; when Eſthers turne came, though ſhe required nothing; but tooke what was giuen her; though ſhe affected nothing; but brought that face, that demeanure, which nature had caſt vpon her, no eye ſees her without admiration; the King takes ſuch pleaſure in her beautie, that, contemning all the other vulger formes, his choyce is fully fixed vpon her; All things muſt proſper, wher God hath intended the ſucceſſe: the moſt D wiſe prouidence of the Almightie fetches his proiects from farre; The preſeruation and aduantage of his owne people is in hand; for the contriuing of this, Vaſhti ſhall be abandoned; the Virgins ſhall be choſen; Eſther onely ſhall pleaſe Ahaſuerus; Mordecai ſhall diſpleaſe Haman; Hamans ruine ſhall raiſe Mordecai: The purpoſes of God cannot be iudged by his remote actions; onely the accompliſhment ſhowes his deſignes; In the meane time, it pleaſeth him to looke another way, then he moues; and to worke his owne ends, by arbitrarie and vnlikely accidents.

None

A None but Eſther ſhall ſucceed Vaſhti; ſhe onely carries the heart of Ahaſuerus from all her ſexe; The royall Crowne is ſet vpon her head; And, as Vaſhti was caſt off at a feaſt, ſo, with a ſolemne feaſt ſhall Eſther bee eſpouſed; Here wanted no triumph, to expreſſe the ioy of this great Bridegroome; and that the world might witneſſe he could be no leſſe louing, then ſeuere, all his Prouinces ſhall feele the pleaſure of this happie match, in their immunities, in their rich gifts.

With what enuious eyes doe we thinke Vaſhti lookt vpon her glorious riuall? How doth ſhe now (though too late) ſecretly chide her peeuiſh will, that had thus ſtript her of her royall crowne, and made way for a more happie ſucceſſor? Little did ſhee thinke her refuſall could haue had ſo hainous a conſtruction: Little did ſhee feare, that one word (perhaps not ill meant) ſhould haue forfeited her husband, her crowne, and all that ſhe was. Who ſo is not wiſe enough to forecaſt the danger of an offence, or indiſcretion, may haue leaſure enough of an vnſeaſonable repentance.

B That minde is truly great and noble, that is not changed with the hieſt proſperitie; Queene Eſther cannot forget her cozen Mordecai; No pompe can make her ſleight the charge of ſo deare a kinſman: In all her royaltie, ſhe caſts her eye vpon him, amongſt the throng of beholders, but ſhe muſt not know him; her obedience keepes her in awe, and will not ſuffer her to draw him vp with her, to the participation of her honor; it troubles her not a little, to forbeare this dutie; but ſhee muſt; It is enough for her, that Mordecai hath commanded her not to be acknowne, who, or whoſe ſhe was.

Perhaps the wiſe Iew feared, that whiles her honour was yet greene, and vnſetled, the notice of her nation, and the name of a deſpiſed captiue might bee ſome blemiſh to her in that proud Court; when as afterwards, vpon the merit of her carriage, and the full poſſeſſion of all hearts, her name might dignifie her nation, and countermand all reproches.

Mordecai was an officer in the Court of Ahaſuerus; his ſeruice called him daily to attend in the Kings gate; Much better might he, being a Iew, ſerue a Pagan Maſter, then his foſter-daughter might aſcend to a Pagans bed.

If the neceſſitie or conuenience of his occaſions called him to ſerue; C his pietie and Religion called him to faithfulneſſe in his ſeruice: Two of the Kings Chamberlaines, Bigthana, and Teriſh, conſpire againſt the life of their Soueraine. No greatneſſe can ſecure from trecherie, or violence: He that ruled ouer millions of men, through an hundred and ſeuen and twentie Prouinces, cannot aſſure himſelfe from the hand of a vilaine; He that had the power of other mens liues, is in danger of his owne. Happie is that man, that is once poſſeſſed of a crowne incorruptible, vnfadable, reſerued for him in heauen: no force, no treaſon can reach thither, there can be no perill of either violence, or forfaiture.

The likelieſt defence of the perſon of any Prince, is the fidelitie of his attendants: Mordecai ouer-heares the whiſpering of theſe wicked conſpirators; and reueales it to Eſther; ſhe (as glad of ſuch an opportunitie to commend vnto D Ahaſuerus the loyaltie of him whom ſhe durſt but ſecretly honour) reueales it to the King; The circumſtances are examined, the plot is diſcouered, the traytors executed, the ſeruice recorded, in the Perſian Annalls. A good foundation is thus laid for Mordecaies aduancement, which yet is not ouer-haſtened, on either part; Worthy diſpoſitions labour onely to deſerue well, leauing the care of their remuneration, to them, whom it concernes; It is fit that Gods leaſure ſhould be attended in all his deſignements; The houre is ſet, when Mordecai ſhall be raiſed: If in the meane time there bee an interuention, not onely of neglect, but of feares, and dangers, all theſe ſhall make his honour ſo much more ſweet, more precious.

A

HAMAN diſreſpected by MORDECAI. MORDECAIES meſſage to ESTHER.

Eſther 3.4.

BEſides the charge of his office, the care of Eſthers proſperitie calls Mordecai to the Kings gate; and fixes him there: With what inward contentment did hee thinke of his ſo royall pupill? Here I ſit among my fellowes; little doth the world thinke, that mine adopted child ſits in the Throne of Perſia: that the great Empreſſe of the world owes her ſelfe to me; I might haue more honour, I could not haue ſo much ſecret comfort, if all Shuſhan knew what intereſt I haue in Queene Eſther.

Whiles his heart is taken vp with theſe thoughts, who ſhould come ruffling by him, but the new-raiſed ſauorite of King Ahaſuerus, Haman the ſonne of Ammedatha the Agagite? Him hath the great King inexpectedly aduanced, B and ſet his ſeat aboue all the Princes that were with him: The gracious reſpects of Princes are not alwaies led by merit, but by their owne will; which is euer affected to be ſo much the freer, as themſelues would be held more great.

When the Sunne ſhines vpon the Diall, euerie paſſenger will be looking at it; There needed no command of reuerence, where Ahaſuerus was pleaſed to countenance; All knees will bow alone euen to forbidden Idols of honor; how much more where royall authoritie inioynes obeyſance? All the ſeruants, all the ſubiects of King Ahaſuerus are willingly proſtrate before this great mignon of their Soueraine; onely Mordecai ſtands ſtiffe, as if hee ſaw nothing more then a man in that proud Agagite.

They are not obſerued that doe as the moſt; but if any one man ſhall varie from the multitude, all eyes are turned vpon him: Mordecaies fellow-officers C note this palpable irreuerence, and expoſtulate it; Why tranſgreſſeſt thou the Kings commandements?

Conſidereſt thou not how farre this affront reacheth? It is not the perſon of Haman, whom thou refuſeſt to adore, but the King in him: Neither doe we regard ſo much the man, as the command; Let him bee neuer ſo vile whom the King bids to be honoured, with what ſafetie can a ſubiect examine the charge, or reſiſt it? his vnworthineſſe cannot diſpence with our loyaltie.

What a dangerous wilfulneſſe ſhould it bee to incurre the forfeiture of thy place, of thy life for a curteſie? If thou wilt not bow with others, expect to ſuffer alone; perhaps (they thought) this omſſiion was vnheedie, In a caſe of ignorance, or incogitancie, it was a friendly office to admoniſh the ſight of the errour had beene the remedie.

Mordecai heares their challenge, their aduice; and thinkes good to anſwer both, with ſilence; as willing they ſhould imagine, his inflexibleneſſe proceeded from a reſolution; and that reſolution from ſome ſecret grounds, which hee D needed not impart: at laſt yet he imparts thus much: Let it ſuffice, that I am a Iew, and Haman an Amalekite.

After a priuate expoſtulation, the continuance of that open neglect is conſtrued for a ſullen obſtinacie; and now, the monitors themſelues grow ſenſible of the contempt: Men are commonly impatient to loſe the thanke of their indeuours, and are prone to hate whom they cannot reforme. Partly therefore

A to picke a thanke, and partly to reuenge this contumacie, theſe officers turne informers againſt Mordecai, neither meant to make the matter fairer then it was; they tell Haman how proud, and ſtubborne a Iew ſate amongſt them, how ill they could brooke ſo ſaucie an affront to bee offered to his greatneſſe; how ſeriouſly they had expoſtulated, how ſtomackefully the offender perſiſted; and beſeech him, that he would be pleaſed in his next paſſage, to caſt ſome glances that way, and but obſerue the faſhion of that intolerable inſolencie.

The proud Agagite cannot long indure the verie expectation of ſuch an indignitie; On purpoſe doth he ſtalke thither; with higher then his ordinarie ſteps; ſnuffing vp the aire; as he goes, and would ſee the man, that durſt denie reuerence to the greateſt Prince of Perſia.

Mordecai holds his old poſture; onely he is ſo much more careleſſe, as he ſees Haman more diſdainefull, and imperious; neither of them goes about to hide his paſſion; one lookt, as if he ſaid, I hate the pride of Haman; the other lookt, as if he ſaid, I will plague the contempt of Mordecai: how did the eyes B of Haman ſparkle with furie, and as it were dart out deadly beames in the face of that deſpightfull Iew? How did he ſwell with indignation; and then againe waxe pale with anger? ſhortly, his verie brow and his motion bad Mordecai looke for the vtmoſt of reuenge.

Mordecai foreſees his danger, and comtemes it; no frownes, no threats can ſouple thoſe ioynts: he may breake, he will not bow.

What ſhall we ſay then to this obfirmed reſolution of Mordecai? What is it, what can it be, that ſo ſtiffens the knees of Mordecai, that death is more eaſie to him, then their incuruation? Certainely, if meere ciuilitie were in queſtion, this wilfull irreuerence to ſo great a Peere, could not paſſe without the iuſt cenſure of a rude peruerſneſſe; It is Religion that forbids this obeiſance, and tels him, that ſuch curteſie could not be free from ſinne; Whether it were, that more then humane honor was required to this new-erected image of the great King, as the Perſians were euer wont to be noted for too much lauiſhneſſe in theſe courtly deuotions: Or whether it were, that the ancient curſe wherewith God had branded the bloud, and ſtocke of Haman, made it vnlawfull for an Iſraelite to giue him any obſeruance: For the Amalekites (of whoſe royall line Haman C was deſcended) were the nation, with which God hath ſworne perpetuall hoſtilitie; and whoſe memorie he had ſtraitly charged his people to root out, from vnder heauen; How may I (thinks he) adore, where God commands mee to deteſt? How may I profeſſe reſpect, where God profeſſeth enmitie? How may I contribute to the eſtabliſhment of that ſeed vpon earth, which God hath charged to be pull'd vp from vnder heauen? Outward actions of indefferencie, when once they are felt to trench vpon the conſcience, lay deepe obligations vpon the ſoule; euen whiles they are moſt ſleighted by careleſſe hearts.

Ex. 17.16.
Deu. 25.19.

In what a flame of wrath doth Haman liue this while? wherewith he could not but haue conſumed his owne heart, had he not giuen vent to that rage in his aſſured purpoſes of reuenge: Great mens anger is like to themſelues, ſtrong, D fierce, ambitious of an exceſſiue ſatisfaction. Haman ſcornes to take vp with the bloud of Mordecai; This were but a vulgar amends; Poore men can kill where they hate, and expiate their owne wrong, with the life of a ſingle enemie: Hamans furie ſhall flie an higher pitch; Millons of threates are few enow to bleed for this offence: It is a Iew that hath deſpighted him; all the whole nation of the Iewes ſhall periſh for the ſtomach of this one: The Monarchie of the world was now in the hand of the Perſian, as Iudæa was within this compaſſe, ſo there was ſcarce a Iew vpon earth, without the verge of the Perſian dominions: The generation, the name ſhall now die at once; Neither ſhall there be any memorie of them, but this; There was a people, which hauing beene famous through the world, for three thouſand, foure hundred and foureſcore yeares, were in a moment, extinct by the power of Haman for default of a curteſie. A

Perhaps, that hereditarie grudge, and old antipathie, that was betwixt Iſrael, and Amalek, ſtucke ſtill in the heart of this Agagite; he might know that God had comanded Iſrael to root out Amalek from vnder heauen; and now therefore an Amalekite ſhall be readie to take this aduantage againſt Iſrael. It is extreame iniuſtice to dilate the puniſhment, beyond the offence; and to enwrap thouſands of innocents within the treſpaſſe of one: How many that were yet vnborne when Haman was vnſaluted, muſt rue the fact they liued not to know? How many millions of Iewes were then liuing, that knew not there was a Mordecai? all of them are fetcht into one condition, and muſt ſuffer, ere they can know their offence. Oh the infinite diſtance betwixt the vniuſt crueltie of men, and the iuſt mercies of the Almightie; Euen Caiphas himſelfe could ſay, It is better that one man die, then that all the people ſhould periſh; and here Haman can ſay, It is better that all the people ſhould periſh then that one man ſhould die. Thy mercie, O God, by the willing death of one that had not ſinned, hath defraied the iuſt death of a world of ſinners: Whiles the iniurious rigour of a man, for the ſuppoſed fault of one, would deſtroy a whole nation, that had not offended: It is true, that by the ſinne of one, death raigned ouer all; but it was, becauſe all ſinned in that one, had not all men beene in Adam, all had not falne in him, all had not died in him; B It was not the man, but mankind that fell into ſinne, and by ſinne, into death: No man can complaine of puniſhment, whiles no man can exempt himſelfe from the tranſgreſſion: Vnmercifull Haman would haue imbrued his hands in that bloud, which he could not but confeſſe innocent.

It is a rare thing, if the height of fauour cauſe not preſumption; Such is Hamans greatneſſe, that he takes his deſigne for granted, ere it can receiue a motion; The fitteſt dayes for this great maſſacre, are determined by the lots of their common diuination; according whereunto, Haman chooſeth the houre of this bloudie ſuit; and now, waited on by opportunitie, he addreſſeth himſelfe to King Ahaſuerus. There is a certaine people ſcattered abroad, and diſperſed among the people, in all the Prouinces of the Kingdome, and their lawes are diuers from all people; neither keepe they the Kings lawes, therefore it is not for the Kings profit C to ſuffer them; If it pleaſe the King, let it be written that they may bee deſtroyed, and I will pay tenne thouſand talents of ſiluer to the hands of the officers. With what cunning hath this man couched his malice? He doth not ſay, There is a Iew that hath affronted me, let me bee auenged of his nation; this rancour was to monſtrous to be confeſſed; perhaps this ſuggeſtion might haue bred in the mind of Ahaſuerus a conceit of Hamans ill nature, and intolerable immanitie; but his pretences are plauſible, and ſuch as driue at no other, then the publique good; Euery word hath his inſinuation: It is a ſcattered people; were the nation intire, their maintenance could not but ſtand with the Kings honour; but now ſince they are but ſtraglers, as their loſſe would be inſenſible, ſo their continuance, and mixture cannot but be preiudiciall; It was not the fault, it was the miſerie of theſe poore Iewes, that they were diſperſed; and now their diſperſion is made an argument of their extirpation; therefore muſt they be deſtroyed, from the earth, becauſe they were ſcattered ouer the earth. As good, ſo euills D draw on each other; That which ſhould plead for pittie in the well affected, is a motiue to crueltie in ſauage minds. Seldome euer hath extremitie of miſchiefe ſeized, where eaſier afflictions haue not beene billeted before.

All faithfull Iewes had wont to ſay vnto God, Haue mercie vpon vs, O God, and ſaue vs, for our ſoule is full of contempt, and we are ſcattered amongſt the heathen; and here this enemie can ſay of them, to Ahaſuerus, Deſtroy them for they are ſcattered; Root them out, for they are contemned; How much better

A is it to fall into the hands of God, then of men; ſince that which whets the ſword of men, workes commiſeration in the Almightie: Beſides the diſſipation of the the perſons, Their lawes are diuers from all people: All other people liue by thy lawes, they onely by their owne: and how can this ſingularitie of their faſhions, but breed diſorder, and inconuenience? Did they liue in ſome corner of the earth apart, their difference in Religion and gouernement could not import much; now, that they are diſperſed amongſt all thy ſubiects, what doe theſe vncouth formes of theirs, but teach all the world to bee irregular? Why ſhould they liue vnder thy protection, that will not be gouerned by thy lawes?

Wicked Haman! what were the lawes of Iſrael, but the lawes of God? if this be a quarrell, what ſhall the death of the Iewes be other, then martyrdome?

The diuerſitie of iudgement, and practice from the reſt of the world hath beene an old, and enuious imputation caſt vpon Gods Church: What if wee be ſingled from others, whiles wee walke with God? In matters lawfull, arbitrarie, indifferent, wiſedome teacheth vs to conforme our ſelues to all others; B but where God hath laid a ſpeciall impoſition vpon vs, we muſt either varie, or ſinne: The greateſt glorie of Iſrael was their lawes, wherein they as farre exceeded all other nations, as heauen is aboue earth; yet, here their lawes are quarrelled, and are made the inducements of their deſtruction; It is not poſſible the Church of God ſhould eſcape perſecution, whiles that which it hath good is maligned; whiles that offends which makes it happie.

Yet, that they haue lawes of their owne, were not ſo vnſufferable, if withall, they did obſerue thine, O King, but theſe Iewes, as they are vncomformable; ſo they are ſeditious: They keepe not the Kings lawes: Thou ſlandereſt Haman; they could not keepe their owne lawes, if they kept not the Kings; for their lawes call them to obedience vnto their ſoueraignes; and adiudge hell to the rebellious: In all thoſe hundred and ſeuen and twentie Prouinces, King Ahaſuerus hath no ſubiects, but them; They obey out of conſcience, others out of feare: why are they charged with that, which they doe moſt abhorre? What can be the ground of this crimination? Ahaſuerus commanded all knees to bow C to Haman, A Iew onely refuſes; Malicious Haman; He that refuſed to bow vnto thee, had ſufficiently approued his loyaltie to Ahaſuerus; Ahaſuerus had not beene, if Mordecai had not beene a good ſubiect; Hath the King no lawes, but what concerne thine adoration? Set aſide Religion (wherein the Iew is readie to preſent if not actiue, yet paſſiue obedience) and name that Perſian law, which a Iew dares breake.

As I neuer yet read, or heard of a conſcionable Iſraelite, that hath not paſſed vnder this calumniation, ſo I cannot yeeld him a true Iſraelite, that deſerues it.

In vaine doth he profeſſe to acknowledge a God, in heauen, that denies homage to his deputie on earth.

It is not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them. Worldly hearts are not led by good, or euill, but by profit, or loſſe, neither haue they grace to know that nothing is profitable but what is honeſt, nothing ſo deſperately incommodious, as wickedneſſe; They muſt needs offend by rule that meaſure all things by profit, and meaſure profit by their imagination. How eaſie is it to ſuggeſt D ſtrange vntruths, when there is no bodie to giue an anſwer? Falſe Haman, how is it not for the Kings profit to ſuffer the Iewes? If thou conſtrue this profit, for honour, the Kings honour is in the multitude of ſubiects, and what people more numerous then they? If for gaine, The Kings profit is in the largeneſſe of his Tributes; and what people are more deepe in their payments? If for ſeruices? what people are more officious? How can it ſtand with the Kings profit to bereaue himſelfe of ſubiects, his ſubiects of their liues, his Exchequer of their tributes, his ſtate of their defence? He is a weake politician that knowes not to guild ouer the worſt proiect, with a pretence of publike vtilitie. No name A vnder heauen hath made ſo many fooles, ſo many vilaines, as this of profit.

Laſtly, as Ahaſuerus reapes nothing but diſprofit by the liues of the Iewes, ſo he ſhall reape no ſmall profit by their deaths: I will pay tenne thouſand talents of ſiluer to the Kings treaſurie for this execution. If reuenge were not verie ſweet to the malicious man, he could not be content to purchaſe it at ſo high a rate; How doe we ſee daily that the thirſt hereof caries men to a riotous prodigalitie of eſtate, bodie, ſoule?

Cruell Haman, if thou couldſt haue ſwim'd in a whole Sea of Iewiſh bloud, if thou couldſt haue raiſed mountaines of their carcaſſes; if thou couldſt haue made all Perſia thy ſhambles; who would haue giuen thee one farthing for all thoſe piles of fleſh, for all thoſe ſtreames of bloud? yea who would not rather haue beene at charge for the auoiding of the annoyances of thoſe ſlaughtered bodies, which thou offereſt to buy at ten thouſand talents? It were an happie B thing, if charitie could inlarge it ſelfe, but ſo much as malice; if the preſeruation of mankinde could be ſo much beholden to our bountie, as the deſtruction.

Now when all theſe are laid together, the baſeneſſe and diſperſedneſſe of the people, the diuerſitie of the lawes, the irregularitie of their gouernment, the rebellion of their practice, the inconuenience of their toleration, the gaine of their extirpation; what could the wit or art of man deuiſe more inſinuatiue, more likely to perſwade? How could it bee but Ahaſuerus muſt needs thinke (ſince he could not ſuſpect the ground of this ſuit;) What a zealous patriot haue I raiſed that can be content to buy off the incommoditie of the ſtate, at his owne charge? How worthy is he rather of the aide both of my power, and purſe? why ſhould I be fee'd to eaſe my Kingdomes of rebels: The ſiluer is giuen to thee, the people alſo, to doe with them as ſeemeth good to thee: Without all delay, the ſecretaries are call'd to write the warrants, the Kings ring is giuen to ſeale them, the poſts are ſent out to carrie them into all Prouinces; The day is ſet wherein all Iewes, of all ages, of both ſexes, thorow the hundred and ſeuen and twentie Prouinces of the King, ſhall be ſacrificed to the wrath of Haman.

In all the carriage of Ahaſuerus, who ſees not too much headdineſſe of paſſion? C Vaſhti is caſt off for a trifle; the Iewes are giuen to the ſlaughter for nothing, his rage in the one, his fauour in the other is too impotent: He is not a worſe huſband then a King; the bare word of Haman is enough to kill ſo manie ſubiects: No diſpoſition can be more dangerous in great perſons, then violence of affection mixed with credulitie. Oh the ſeeming inequalitie of humane conditions: The King and Haman ſate downe to drinke, but the Citie of Shuſhan was perplexed: It is a wofull thing to ſee great ones quaffe the teares of the oppreſſed; and to heare them make muſicke of ſhriekes.

With what lamentation doe we thinke all the Synagogues of Iewes thorow the world receiued this fatall meſſage of their proclaimed deſtruction? How doe they bemone themſelues, each to other? How doe their conioyned cries fill heauen, and earth? But aboue all, what ſack-cloth and aſhes could ſuffiſe wofull Mordecai, that found in himſelfe the occaſion of all this ſlaughter? What D ſoule could be capable of more bitterneſſe, then he felt? Whiles he could not but thinke, Wretched man that I am; It is I, that haue brought all this calamitie vpon my nation; It is I, that haue been the ruine of my people: woe is me that euer I put my ſelfe into the Court, into the ſeruice of a Pagan; how vnhappie was I to caſt my ſelfe into theſe ſtraits, that I muſt either honour an Agagite, or draw a vengeance vpon Iſrael? Yet how could I imagine, that, the flame of Hamans rage would haue broken out ſo farre? might that reuenge haue determined in my bloud, how happie ſhould I haue beene? now, I haue brought death vpon many thouſands of innocents, that cannot know wherefore they die;

A die; Why did I not hide my ſelfe rather from the place of that proud Amalekite?
Why did I ſtand out in conteſtation with ſo ouer-powerfull an enemie?
Alas, no man of Iſrael ſhall ſo much as liue to curſe me, only mine enemies ſhall record my name, with ignominie, and ſay, Mordecai was the bane of his nation.
Oh, that my zeale ſhould haue reſerued me for ſo heauie a ſeruice! Where now are thoſe vaine ambitions, wherewith I pleaſed my ſelfe in this great match of Eſther? How fondly did I hope by this vndue meanes to raiſe my ſelfe and my people? Yea, is not this carnall preſumption the quarrell that God hath againſt me? Doe I not therefore ſmart from theſe Pagans, for that I ſecretly affected this vncircumciſed alliance? Howſoeuer it be, yet, O God, what haue thy people done? Oh let it be thy iuſt mercie that I may periſh alone!

In theſe ſad thoughts did Mordecai ſpend his heart, whiles he walked mournfully in ſackcloth, before that gate, wherein hee was wont to ſit; now his habit bars his approch; no ſackcloth might come within the Court: Loe, that which is welcomeſt in the court of heauen, is here excluded from the preſence of this
B earthly royaltie: A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe.

Neither did it a little adde to the ſorrow of Mordecai, to here the bitter inſultations of his former monitors: Did we not aduiſe thee better? Did wee not fore-admoniſh thee of thy danger? ſee now the iſſue of thine obſtinacie: now ſee, what it is for thine earthen pitcher to knocke with braſſe? now, where is the man that would needs conteſt with Haman? haſt thou not now brought thy matters to a faire paſſe? Thy ſtomacke had long owed thee a ſpight, and now it hath paid thee; who can pittie thy wilfulneſſe? ſince thou wouldeſt needs deride our counſell, we will take leaue to laugh at thy ſackcloth. Nothing but ſcornes and griefes, and terrors preſent themſelues to miſerable Mordecai. All the externall buffets of aduerſaries were ſleight to the wounds that hee hath made, and felt in his owne heart.

The perpetuall intelligences that were cloſely held betwixt Eſther and Mordecai, could not ſuffer his publique ſorrow to be long concealed from her; The newes of his ſackcloth afflicts her ere ſhe can ſuſpect the cauſe; her crowne doth but clog her head, whiles ſhe heares of his aſhes; True friendſhip transformes
C vs into the condition of thoſe we loue; and if it cannot raiſe them to our cheerefulneſſe, drawes vs downe to their deiection: Faine would ſhee vncaſe her foſter-father of theſe mournfull weeds; and change his ſackcloth for tiſſue; that yet, at leaſt, his cloathes might not hinder his acceſſe to her preſence, for the free opening of his griefes.

It is but a ſleight ſorrow that abides to take in outward comforts; Mordecai refuſes that kinde offer; and would haue Eſther ſee that his affliction was ſuch, as that he might well reſolue to put off his ſackcloth and his skin at once; that he muſt mourne to death rather then ſee her face to liue.

The good Queene is aſtoniſht with this conſtant humiliation of ſo deare a friend; and now ſhe ſends Hatach, a truſtie (though a Pagan) attendant, to inquire into the occaſion of this ſo irremediable heauineſſe: It ſhould ſeeme Eſther inquired not greatly into matters of ſtate; that which perplexed all Shuſhan, was not yet knowne to her; her followers, not knowing her to be a Ieweſſe, conceiued not how the newes might concerne her, and therefore had D forborne the relation: Mordecai firſt informes her, by her meſſenger, of the decree that was gone out againſt all her nation, of the day wherein they muſt all prepare to bleed, of the ſumme which Haman had profered for their heads, and deliuers the copie of that bloudie Edict; charging her, now, if euer, to beſtirre her ſelfe; and to improue all her loue, all her power with King Ahaſuerus, in a ſpeedie and humble ſupplication for the ſauing of the life (not of himſelfe ſo much, as) of her people.

It was tydings able to confound a weake heart; and hers, ſo much the more, as ſhe could apprehend nothing but impoſſibilitie of redreſſe: ſhe needs but to A put Mordecai in mind of that, which all the Kings ſeruants and ſubiects knew well enough, that the Perſian law made it no leſſe then death for whomſoeuer, man, or woman, that ſhould preſſe into the inner court of the King, vncalled. Nothing but the royall ſcepter extented, could keepe that preſumptuous offender from the graue. For her, thirtie dayes were now paſſed ſince ſhe was called in to the King; an intermiſſion, that might bee iuſtly ſuſpicious; Whether the heate of his firſt affection were thus ſoone (of it ſelfe) allayed towards her; or whether ſome ſuggeſtions of a ſecret enemie (perhaps his Agagite) may haue ſet him off; or whether ſome more pleaſing obiect may haue laid hold on his eyes; what euer it might bee, this abſence could not but argue ſome ſtrangeneſſe, and this ſtrangeneſſe muſt needs imploy a danger in her bold intruſion: She could bewaile therefore, ſhe could not hope to remedie this diſmall day of her people. This anſwer in the eares of Mordecai ſounded truth, but weakeneſſe; B neither can he take vp with ſo feeble a rerurne; Theſe occaſions require other ſpirits, other reſolutions, which muſt be quickened by a more ſtirring replie: Thinke not with thy ſelfe that thou ſhalt eſcape in the Kings houſe, more then all the Iewes. For if thou altogether holdeſt thy peace at this time, then ſhall there inlargement, and deliuerance ariſe to the Iewes from another place, but thou and thy fathers houſe ſhall be deſtroyed. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdome for ſuch a time as this.

The expectation of death had not quailed the ſtrong heart of faithfull Mordecai; euen, whiles he mournes, his zeale droupes not; there could haue beene no life in that breſt, which this meſſage could not haue rouzed.

What then? is it death that thou feareſt in this attempt of thy ſupplication; what other then death awaits thee in thee neglect of it? there is but this difference, ſue, and thou maiſt die, ſue not, and thou muſt die: what bloud haſt thou but Iewiſh? and if theſe vnalterable Edicts exempt no liuing ſoule, what ſhall become of thine? and canſt thou be ſo vainely timerous, as to die for feare of death? to preferre certaintie of danger, before a poſſibilitie of hopes? Away with this weake cowardiſe vnworthy of an Iſraelite, vnworthy of a Queene: But if faint-heartedneſſe or priuate reſpects ſhall ſeale vp thy lips, or with- C hold thine hand from the aide of thy people; if thou canſt ſo farre neglect Gods Church, know thou that God will not neglect it; it ſhall not be in the power of Tyrants to root out his choſen ſeed; that holy one of Iſrael ſhall rather worke miracles from heauen, then his inheritance ſhall periſh vpon earth? and how iuſt ſhall it then be for that iealous God, to take vengeance vpon thee, and thy fathers houſe for this cold vnhelpfulneſſe to his diſtrſſed Church? Suffer me therefore to adiure thee by all that tenderneſſe of loue, wherewith I haue trained vp thine orphane infancie; by all thoſe deare and thankfull reſpects which thou haſt vowed to me againe; by the Name of the God of Iſrael whom we ſerue, that thou awaken and ſtirre vp thine holy courage, and dare to adventure thy life, for the ſauing of many; It hath pleaſed the Almightie to raiſe thee vp to that height of honor, which our progenitors could little expect; why ſhouldſt thou be wanting to him, that hath beene ſo bountifull to thee? yea, why ſhould I not thinke that God hath put this verie act into the intendement of D thine exaltation? hauing on purpoſe thus ſeaſonably hoyſed thee vp to the throne, that thou maiſt reſcue his poore Church from an vtter ruine.

Oh the admirable faith of Mordecai, that ſhines thorow all theſe cloudes, and in the thickeſt of theſe fogges, deſcries a chearefull glimpſe of deliuerance; Hee ſaw the day of their common deſtruction enacted, he knew the Perſian decrees to bee vnalterable; but, withall, hee knew there was a Meſſias to come; he was ſo well acquainted with Gods couenanted aſſurances to his Church, that he can thorow the midſt of thoſe bloudie reſolutions foreſee

A indemnitie to Iſrael; rather truſting the promiſes of God, then the threats of men. This is the victorie that ouercomes all the feares, and furie of the world, euen our faith.

It is quarrell enough againſt any perſon, or communitie not to haue beene aidfull to the diſtreſſes of Gods people. Not to ward the blow, if we may, is conſtrued for little better then ſtriking. Till we haue tried our vtmoſt, wee know not whether we haue done that we came for.

Mordecai hath ſaid enough; Theſe words haue ſo put a new life into Eſther, that ſhe is reſolute to hazard the old; Goe gather together all the Iewes that are preſent in Shuſhan, and faſt ye for me, and neither eate nor drink three dayes, night or day; I alſo and my maidens will faſt likewiſe, and ſo will I go in vnto the King, (which is not according to the law) and if I periſh, I periſh. Heroicall thoughts doe well befit great actions. Life can neuer be better aduentured, then where it ſhall bee gaine to leeſe it.

B There can be no law againſt the humble deprecation of euils; where the neceſſitie of Gods Church calls to vs, no danger ſhould with-hold vs from all honeſt meanes of reliefe. Deepe humiliations muſt make way for the ſucceſſe of great enterpriſes, we are moſt capable of mercie, when we are throughly emptie: A ſhort hunger doth but whet the appetite, but ſo long an abſtinence meets death halfe way, to preuent it; Well may they inioyne ſharpe penances vnto others, who practiſe it vpon themſelues.

It was the face of Eſther that muſt hope to win Ahaſuerus, yet that ſhall bee macerated with faſting, that ſhe may preuaile. A carnall heart would haue pampered the fleſh, that it might allure thoſe wanton eyes; ſhe pines it, that ſhe may pleaſe.

God, and not ſhe, muſt worke the heart of the King; Faith teaches her rather to truſt her deuotions, then her beautie.

C

ESTHER ſuing to AHASVERVS.

Eſther 5.

THE Iewes are eaſily intreated to faſt, who had receiued in themſelues the ſentence of death; what pleaſure could they take in meat, that know what day they muſt eate their laſt? The three dayes of abſtinence are expired; now Eſter changes her ſpirits, no leſſe then her clothes; Who that ſees that face, & that habit, can ſay ſhee had mourned, ſhe had faſted? Neuer did her royall apparell become her ſo well. That God before whom ſhe had humbled her ſelfe, made her ſo much more beautifull, as ſhee D had beene more deiected; And now, with a winning confidence, ſhee walkes into the inner court of the King, and puts her ſelfe into that forbidden preſence: as if ſhe ſaid; Here I am with my life in my hand, if it pleaſe the King to take it, it is readie for him; Vaſhti, my predeceſſor, forfaited her place for not comming when ſhe was called; Eſther ſhall now hazard the forfaiture of her life, for comming when ſhe is not called: It is neceſſitie, not diſobedience that hath put me vpon this bold approch; according to thy conſtruction, O King, I doe either liue or die, either ſhall be welcome. The inexpectedneſſe of pleaſing obiects makes them many times the more acceptable: The beautifull countenance, the gracefull demeanour, and goodly preſence of Eſter, haue no ſooner taken the eyes, then they haue rauiſhed the heart of King Ahaſuerus: Loue hath ſoone A baniſhed all dreadfulneſſe; And the King held out to Eſther the golden ſcepter that was in his hand: Moderate intermiſſion is ſo farre from cooling the affection, that it inflames it: had Eſther beene ſeene euerie day, perhaps that ſatietie had abated of the height of her welcome; now, three and thirtie dayes retiredneſſe hath indeared her more to the ſurfeted eyes of Ahaſuerus.

Had not the golden Scepter beene held out, where had Queene Eſther beene? The Perſian Kings affected a ſterne awfulneſſe to their ſubiects; It was death to ſolicit them, vncalled; How ſafe, how eaſie, how happie a thing it is to haue to doe with the King of heauen, who is ſo pleaſed with our acceſſe, that hee ſolicits ſutors; who, as hee is vnweariable with our requeſts, ſo is infinit in his beneficences!

How gladly doth Eſther touch the top of that Scepter, by which ſhee holds her life? and now, whiles ſhe thinkes it well that ſhe may liue, ſhe receiues beſides pardon, fauour: What wilt thou Queene Eſther, and what is thy requeſt? it ſhall be giuen thee, euen to the halfe of the Kingdome. Commonly, when wee feare moſt, we ſpeed beſt; God then moſt of all magnifies his bountie to vs, when we haue moſt afflicted our ſelues. Ouer-confident expectations are ſeldome but diſappointed; whiles humble ſuſpitions goe laughing away: It was the benefit and ſafetie of but one peece of the Kingdome that Eſther comes to ſue for, and behold Ahaſuerus offers her the free power of the halfe: B Hee that gaue Haman, at the firſt word, the liues of all his Iewiſh ſubiects, is readie to giue Eſther halfe his Kingdome, ere ſhe aske: Now ſhe is no leſſe amazed at the louing munificence of Ahaſuerus, then ſhe was before afraid of his auſteritie; The Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the riuers of water; hee turneth it whitherſoeuer he will.

It is not good to ſwollow fauours too greedily, leſt they either choke vs in the paſſage, or proue hard of digeſtion. The wiſe Queene, howeuer ſhe might ſeeme to haue a faire opportunitie offered to her ſuit, finds it not good to apprehend it too ſuddenly; as deſiring by this ſmall dilation, to prepare the eare and heart of the King for ſo important a requeſt.

Now, all her petition ends in a banquet; If it ſeeme good vnto the King, let the King and Haman come this day vnto the banquet, that I haue prepared for him. C It is an eaſie fauour to receiue a ſmall courteſie, where we offer to giue great. Haman is called, the King comes to Eſthers table; and now highly pleaſed with his entertainment, he himſelfe ſolicites her to propound that ſuit, for which her modeſtie would, but durſt not ſolicit him: Baſhfulneſſe ſhall leeſe nothing at the hand of wel-gouerned greatneſſe.

Yet ſtill Eſthers ſuit ſtickes in her teeth, and dares not come forth without a further preface of time, and expectation; Another banquet muſt paſſe, ere this reckoning can be giuen in. Other ſuitors wait long for the deliuerie of their petition; longer for the receit of their anſwer: Here the King is faine to wait for his ſuit: Whether Eſthers heart would not yet ſerue her to conteſt with ſo ſtrong an aduerſarie, as Haman, without further recollection; or whether ſhe deſired to get better hold of the King, by indearing him with ſo pleaſing entertainments; or whether ſhe would thus ripen her hopes, by working in the mind of King Ahaſuerus a fore-conceit of the greatneſſe, and difficultie of that ſuit, which was ſo loath to come forth; D or, whether ſhe meant thus to giue ſcope to the pride, and malice of Haman, for his more certaine ruine: Howſoeuer it were, to morrow is a new day, ſet for Eſthers ſecond banquet, and third petition.

The King is not inuited without Haman; Fauours are ſometimes done to men, with a purpoſe of diſpleaſure; Doubtleſſe Haman taſteth of the ſame cates with his maſter; neither could he in the forehead of Eſther reade any other characters, A characters, then of reſpect, and kind applauſe, yet had ſhe then, in her hopes, deſigned him to a iuſt reuenge. Little doe we know, by outward cariages, in what termes we ſtand with either God or men.

Euerie little winde raiſeth vp a bubble; How is Haman now exalted in himſelfe with the ſingular graces of Queene Eſther; and begins to value himſelfe ſo much more, as he ſees himſelfe higher in the rate of others opinion.

Onely ſurly, and ſullen Mordecai is an allay to his happineſſe; No Edict of death can bow the knees of that ſtout Iew: yea the notice of that bloudie crueltie of this Agagite, hath ſtiffned them ſo much the more: Before, he lookt at Haman as an Amalekite, now, as a perſecutor. Diſdaine and anger looke out at thoſe eyes; and bid that proud enemie doe his worſt. No doubt, Mordecai had beene liſtening after the ſpeed of Queene Eſther; how ſhe came in to the King, how ſhe was welcom'd with the golden ſcepter, and with the more precious words of Ahaſuerus; how ſhe had intertained the King, how ſhe pleaſed; the newes had quit his ſackcloth, and raiſed his courage to a more ſcornefull B neglect of his profeſſed aduerſarie.

Haman comes home, I know not whether more full of pride, or of rage; calls an inward counſell of his choiſe friends, together with his wife; makes a glorious report of all his wealth, magnificence, height of fauour, both with the King and Queene; and at laſt, after all his ſun-ſhine, ſets in this cloudie epilogue, Yet all this auaileth me nothing, ſo long as I ſee Mordecai the Iew ſitting at the Kings gate. It is ſeldome ſeene that God allowes euen to the greateſt dearelings of the world, a perfect contentment; ſomething they muſt haue to complaine of, that ſhall giue an vnſauorie verdure to their ſweeteſt morſels; and make their verie felicitie, miſerable.

The wit of women hath wont to bee noted for more ſudden and more ſharpe. Zereſh the wife of Haman ſets on foot that motion of ſpeedie reuenge, which is applauded by the reſt. Let a gallowes be made of fiftie cubits high, and to morrow, ſpeake thou to the King, that Mordecai may be hanged thereon; then goe thou in merily with the King, vnto the banquet. I doe not heare them ſay; Be patient a while, thou haſt alreadie ſet Mordecai his laſt day; the moneth Adar will not be long in comming; the determination of his death hath made him deſperate, C let him in the meane time eate his owne heart in enuie at thy greatneſſe; but they reather aduiſe of a quicke diſpatch. Malice is a thing full of impacience, and hates delay of execution, next vnto mercie. Whiles any grudge lies at the heart, it cannot bee freely cheerefull. Forced ſmiles are but the hypocriſie of mirth. How happie were it for vs, if we could be ſo zealouſly carefull to remoue the hindrances of our true ſpirituall ioy, thoſe ſtubborne corruptions, that will not ſtoope to the D power of grace.

MORDECAI honoured by HAMAN.

Eſther 6.

THe wit of Zereſh had like to haue gone beyond the wit of Eſther; had not the working prouidence of the Almightie contriued theſe euents, beyond all hopes, all conceits, Mordecai had beene diſpatched, ere Eſthers ſecond banquet. To morrow was the day pitched for both their deſignes; had not the ſtreame beene inexpectedly turned, in vaine had the Queene blamed her delayes; Mordecaies breakefaſt had preuented Eſthers dinner: for certainely he that had giuen to Haman ſo many thouſand liues, would neuer haue made daintie, vpon the ſame ſuit, to anticipate one of thoſe, whom he had condemned to the ſlaughter: But, God meant better things to his Church, and fetches about all his holy purpoſes, after a B wonderfull faſhion, in the verie inſtant of oportunitie: He that keepeth Iſrael, and neither ſlumbreth, nor ſleepeth, cauſeth ſleepe to depart that night from him that had decreed to root out Iſrael. Great Ahaſuerus, that commanded an hundred and ſeuen and twentie Prouinces, cannot command an houres ſleepe. Pouertie is rather bleſſed with the freedome of reſt, then wealth, and power: Cares and ſurfet with-hold that from the great, which preſſeth vpon the ſpare diet, and labour of the meaneſt. Nothing is more tedious then an eager purſuit of denied ſleepe: which (like to a ſhadow) flyes away ſo much faſter, as it is more followed: Experience tels vs, that this benefit is beſt ſolicited by neglect; and ſooneſt found when we haue forgotten to ſeeke it.

Whether to deceiue the time, or to beſtow it well; Ahaſuerus ſhall ſpend his reſtleſſe houres in the Chronicles of his time. Nothing is more requiſite for C Princes, then to looke backe vpon their owne actions, and euents, and thoſe of their predeceſſors; The examination of fore-paſt actions makes them wiſe, of euents, thankfull, and cautelous.

Amongſt thoſe voluminous regiſters of Acts and Monuments, which ſo many ſcores of Prouinces muſt needs yeeld, the book ſhall open vpon Mordecais diſcouerie of the late treaſon of the two Eunuches: the reader is turned thither, by an inſenſible ſway of Prouidence: Our moſt arbitrarie or caſuall actions are ouer-ruled by a hand in heauen.

The King now feeles afreſh the danger of that conſpiracie; and (as great ſpirits a bide not to ſmother or burie good offices) inquires into the recompence of ſo loyall a ſeruice, What honour and dignitie hath beene done to Mordecai for this? Surely Mordecai did but his dutie; he had hainouſly ſinned, if he had not reuealed this wicked treacherie; yet Ahaſuerus takes thought for his remuneration: How much more carefull art thou, O God of all mercies, to reward D the weake obedience of thine (at the beſt) vnprofitable ſeruants?

That which was intended to procure reſt, ſets it off; King Ahaſuerus is vnquiet in himſelfe, to thinke that ſo great a merit ſhould lye, but ſo long, neglected; neither can he find any peace in himſelfe, till he haue giuen order for a ſpeedie retribution: hearing therefore by his ſeruants, that Haman was below in the Court, he ſends for him vp, to conſult with him, What ſhould be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honour: O maruellous concurrence of circumſtances,

A circumſtances, drawne together by the infinit wiſedome, and power of the Al-mightie: Who but Haman ſhould be the man? And when ſhould Haman bee called to aduiſe of Mordecaies honour, but in the verie inſtant, when he came to ſue for Mordecaies hanging? Had Ahaſuerus but ſlept that night, Mordecai had beene that morning aduanced fiftie cubits higher then the earth, ere the King could haue remembred to whom he was beholden.

What ſhall we ſay then to reconcile theſe croſſe-paſſions in Ahaſuerus? Before he ſigned that decree of killing all the Iewes, he could not but know that a Iew had ſaued his life; and now, after that he hath enacted the ſlaughter of all Iewes, as rebels, he is giuing order to honour a Iew, as his preſeruer. It were ſtrange if great perſons in the multitude of their diſtractions ſhould not let fall ſome incongruities.

Yet, who can but thinke that King Ahaſuerus meant vpon ſome ſecond thoughts to make amends to Mordecai? neither can he chooſe but put theſe two together; The Iewes are appointed to death, at the ſuit of Haman; This Mordecai
B is a Iew; how then can I doe more grace to him, that hath ſaued my life, then to command him to be honoured by that man who would ſpill his?

When Haman heard himſelfe called vp to the bed-chamber of his maſter, he thinkes himſelfe too happie in ſo early an oportunitie of preſenting his ſuit; but yet more in the pleaſing queſtion of Ahaſuerus; wherein he could not but imagine, that fauour forced it ſelfe vpon him with ſtrange importunitie; For how could he conceiue that any intention of more then ordinarie honour could fall beſides himſelfe? Selfe-loue, like to a good ſtomach, drawes to it ſelfe what nuriſhment it likes, and caſts off that which offends it. Haman will bee ſure to be no niggard in aduiſing thoſe ceremonies of honour, which he thinkes meant to his owne perſon. Could he haue once dreamed that this grace had beene purpoſed to any vnder heauen, beſides himſelfe, he had not beene ſo lauiſh in counſelling, ſo pompous a ſhew of exceſſiue magnificence. Now the Kings owne royall apparell, and his owne Steed is not ſufficient, except the royall Crowne alſo make vp the glorie of him, who ſhall thus triumph in the Kings fauour. Yet all this were nothing in baſe hands! The actor ſhall be the C beſt part of this great Pageant. Let this apparell, and this horſe, be deliuered to one of the Kings moſt noble Princes, that they may aray the man withall, whom the King delighteth to honour, and bring him on horſe-backe thorow the ſtreets of the Citie, and proclaime before him, thus ſhall it be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honour. Honour is more in him that giues, then him that receiues it:
To be honoured by the vnworthy is little better then diſgrace; No meaner perſon will ſerue to attend this Agagite, in his ſuppoſed greatneſſe, then one of the nobleſt Princes. The ambition is too high flowne that ſeekes glorie in the ſeruilitie of equals.

The place adds much to the act; There is ſmall heart in a concealed honour;
It is nothing vnleſſe the ſtreets of the citie Shuſhan be witneſſes of this pompe, and ring with that gracious acclamation.

The vaine hearts of proud men can eaſily deuiſe thoſe meanes, whereby they may beſt ſet out themſelues. Oh that we would equally affect the meanes of true and immortall glorie. The heart of man is neuer ſo cold within him, as D when from the height of the expectation of good, it falles into a ſudden ſenſe of euill: So did this Agagite. Then the King ſaid to Haman, make haſte, and take the apparell, and the horſe, as thou haſt ſaid, and doe euen ſo to Mordecai the Iew, that ſitteth at the Kings gate; Let nothing faile of all that thou haſt ſaid. How was Haman thunder-ſtricken with this killing word? Do thou ſo to Mordecai. I dare ſay all the honors that Ahaſuerus had heaped vpon Haman, cannot coũteruaile this one vexation: Doubtleſſe, at firſt, he diſtruſts his eare, and then muſes whether the King be in earneſt; at laſt; when he heares the charge ſo ſeriouſly doubled, and finds himſelfe forced to beleeue it, he beginnes to thinke, What meanes A this vnconceiueable alteration? Is there no man in all the Court of Perſia to be pickt out for extraordinarie honour, but Mordecai? Is there no man to bee pickt out for the performance of this honour to him, but Haman? haue I but one proud enemie in all the world, and am I ſingled out to grace him? Did it gall me to the heart, and make all my happineſſe tedious to me, to ſee that this Iew would not bow to me, and muſt I now bow to him? That which hee would rather die, and forfait the life of all his nation, then doe to me, notwithſtanding the Kings command; ſhall I be forced by the Kings command to doe vnto him? Yea did he refuſe to giue but a cap and a knee to my greatneſſe; and muſt I lacquay ſo baſe a fellow thorow the ſtreets, muſt I be his herald to proclaine his honour thorow all Shuſhan? Why doe I not let the King know the inſolent affronts that he hath offered me? Why doe I not ſignifie to my Soueraigne, that my errand now was for another kinde of aduancement to Mordecai? B

If I obtaine not my deſired reuenge, yet at leaſt, I ſhall preuaile ſo farre, as to exempt my ſelfe from this officious attendance vpon ſo vnequall an enemie.
And yet, that motion cannot be now ſafe; I ſee the Kings heart is (vpon what ground ſoeuer) bent vpon this action; ſhould I flye off neuer ſo little (after my word ſo directly paſſed) perhaps my coldneſſe, or oppoſition might bee conſtrued as ſome wayward conteſtation with my maſter: Eſpecially, ſince the ſeruice that Mordecai hath done to the King, is of an higher nature, then the deſpight which he hath done to me. I will, I muſt giue way for the time; mine humble yeeldance, (when all the carriage of this buſineſſe ſhall be vnderſtood) ſhall (I doubt not) make way for mine intended reuenge: Mordecai, I will honour thee now, that by theſe ſteps I may ere long raiſe thee many cubits higher.
I will obey the command of my Soueraigne in obſeruing thee, that he may reward the merit of my loyaltie, in thine execution,

Thus reſolued, Haman goes forth with a face and heart full of diſtraction, full of confuſion; and addreſſes himſelfe to the attyring, to the attending of his old aduerſarie, and new maſter, Mordecai; What lookes doe we now thinke were caſt vpon each other, at their firſt greeting? their eyes had not forgotten their old language; Certainly, When Mordecai ſaw Haman come into the roome C where hee was, he could not but thinke; This man hath long thirſted for my bloud, and now he comes to fetch it; I ſhall not liue to ſee the ſucceſſe of Eſther, or the fatall day of my nation: It was knowne that morning in the Court, what a loftie gibbet Haman had prouided for Mordecai; and why might it not haue come to Mordecaies eare? What could he therefore now imagine other, then that he was called out to that execution?? But, when he ſaw the royall robe that Haman brought to him; he thinkes, is it not enough for this man to kill me, but he muſt mocke me too, What an addition is this to the former crueltie? thus to inſult, and play vpon my laſt diſtreſſe? But, when he yet ſaw the royall crowne readie to be ſet on his head, and the Kings owne horſe richly furniſhed, at his gate, and found himſelfe raiſed by Princely hands, into that royall ſeat, he thinkes; what may all this meane? Is it the purpoſe of mine aduerſarie that I ſhall die in ſtate? Would he haue me hang'd in triumph? At laſt, when he ſees D ſuch a traine of Perſian Peeres attending him, with a graue reuerence; and heares Haman proclaime before him, Thus ſhall it be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honour; finding this pompe to be ſerious, and well meant, hee imagines (in all likelihood) that this inexpected change proceeds from the ſuit of his Eſther; now he begins to lift vp his head, and to hope well of himſelfe, and his people, and could not but ſay within himſelfe, that he had not faſted for nothing. O the wonderous alteration that one morning hath made in the court of Perſia; he that was yeſternight deſpiſed by Hamans footemen, is now waited on by Haman, and all his fellow-Princes; he that yeſter-night had the homage

A homage of all knees but one, and was readie to burſt for the lacke of that, now doth obeyſance to that one, by whom he was wilfully neglected; It was not Ahaſuerus that wrought this ſtrange mutation, it was the ouer-ruling power of the Almightie, whoſe immediate hand would thus preuent Eſthers ſuit, that he might challenge all the thanke to himſelfe. Whiles Princes haue their owne wills, they muſt doe his; and ſhall either exalt, or depreſſe according to diuine appointment.

I ſhould commend Hamans obedience in his humble condiſcent to ſo vnpleaſing, and harſh a command of his maſter, Were it not, that either he durſt doe no other, or that he thus ſtoopt for an aduantage. It is a thankeleſſe reſpect that is either forced, or for ends: True ſubiection is free and abſolute; out of the conſcience of dutie, not out of feares, or hopes.

All Shuſhan is in an amaze at this ſudden glorie of Mordecai, and ſtudies how to reconcile this day with the thirteenth of Adar; Mordecai had reaſon to hope well; It could not ſtand with the honour of the King, to kill him whom hee
B ſaw cauſe to aduance; neither could this be any other, then the beginning of a durable promotion; otherwiſe, what recompence had an houres riding beene to ſo great a ſeruice?

On the other ſide, Haman droupes, and hath changed paſſions with Mordecai; Neither was that Iew euer more deepely afflicted with the decree of his owne death, then this Agagite was with that Iewes honour. How heauie doth it lie at Hamans heart, that no tongue, but his, might ſerue to proclaime Mordecai happie: Euen the greateſt mignons of the world muſt haue their turnes of ſorrow.

With a couered head, and a deiected countenance, doth he haſten home, and longs to impart his griefe, where he had receiued his aduice: It was but cold comfort that he finds from his wife Zeriſh, and his friends. If Mordecai bee of the ſeed of the Iewes, before whom thou haſt begunne to fall, thou ſhalt not preuaile againſt him, but ſhalt ſurely fall before him: Out of the mouth of Pagans, O God, haſt thou ordained ſtrength, that thou maiſt ſtill the enemie, and the auenger.
What credit hath thy great name won with theſe barbarous nations, that they C can out of all experience make maximes of thine vndoubted protection of thy people, and the certaine ruine of their aduerſaries? Men find no difference in themſelues; the face of a Iew lookes ſo like other mens, that Eſther and Mordecai were not (of long) taken for what they were: He that made them, makes the diſtinction betwixt them; ſo as a Iew may fall before a Perſian, and get vp and preuaile; but if a Perſian (or whoſoeuer of the Gentiles) beginne to fall before a Iew, he can neither ſtay, nor riſe: There is an inuiſible hand of omnipotencie that ſtrikes in for his owne, and confounds their oppoſites.
O God, neither is thine hand ſhortned, nor thy bowels ſtraitned in thee; thou art ſtill and euer thy ſelfe;
If wee be thy true ſpirituall Iſrael, neither earth nor hell ſhall preuaile againſt vs; we ſhall either ſtand ſure, or ſurely riſe, whiles our enemies ſhall licke
D the duſt.

HAMAN hanged, MORDECAI aduanced.

Eſther 7.8. Hamans day is now come; That vengeance which hath hitherto ſlept, is now awake, and rouzeth vp it ſelfe to a iuſt execution; That heauie morning was but the preface to his laſt ſorrow, and the ſad preſage of friends is verified in the ſpeaking; While the word was in their mouthes, the meſſengers were at the doore to fetch Haman to his funerall-banquet. B

Eccleſ.9.12. How little doe we know what is towards vs? As the fiſhes that are taken in an euill net, and as the birds that are caught in the ſnare, ſo are the ſonnes of men ſnared in an euill time, when it falleth ſuddenly vpon them.

It was (as Haman conceiued) the onely priuiledge of his deareneſſe, and the comfort of his preſent heauineſſe, that hee onely was called with the King, to Eſthers banquet, when this onely was meant for his bane: The face of this inuitation was faire, and promiſeth much; and now the ingenuous man begins to ſet good conſtructions vpon all euents. Surely (thinkes he) the King was tyed in his honour to giue ſome publique gratification to Mordecai; ſo good an office could deſerue no leſſe, then an houres glorie; But little doth my maſter know what termes there are betwixt me, and Mordecai; had he fully vnderſtood the inſolencies of this Iew, and ſhould notwithſtanding haue inioyned mee to honour him, I might haue had iuſt cauſe to complaine of diſgrace, and diſparagement; but now, ſince all this buſineſſe hath beene carried in ignorance, and caſualtie, why doe I wrong my ſelfe in being too much affected with that which was not ill meant? Had either the King, or Queene, abated ought of their fauour to me, I might haue dined at home; C now this renued inuitation argues me to ſtand right in the grace of both: And why may not I hope, this day, to meet with a good occaſion of my deſired reuenge? How iuſt will it ſeeme to the King, that the ſame man whom he hath publikely rewarded for his loyaltie, ſhould now be publikely puniſhed for his diſobedience?

With ſuch like thoughts Haman cheares vp himſelfe; and addreſſeth himſelfe to the royall banquet, with a countenance that would faine ſeeme to forget his mornings taske: Eſther workes her face to an vnwilling ſmile vpon that hateful gueſt; and the king (as not inguiltie of any dignitie that he hath put vpon his fauorite) frames himſelfe to as much cheerefulneſſe, as his want of reſt would permit. The table is royally furniſhed with all delicate confections, with all pleaſing liquors; King Ahaſuerus ſo eates, as one that both knew he was, and meant to make himſelfe welcome: Haman ſo poures in, as one that meant to drowne his cares; D And now, in this fulneſſe of cheere, The King hungers for that long-delayed ſuit of Queene Eſther; Thrice, hath he graciouſly call'd for it; and (as a man conſtant to his owne fauours) thrice hath he, in the ſame words vowed the performance of it, though to the halfe of his Kingdome: It falls out oftentimes, that when large promiſes fall ſuddenly from great perſons, they abate by leiſure; and ſhrinke vpon cold thoughts; here King Ahaſuerus is not more liberall in his offer, then firme in his reſolutions; as if his firſt word had beene, like his law, vnalterable. I am aſhamed to miſſe that ſteddineſſe in Chriſtians, which I finde in a Pagan. It was a great word that hee had

A had ſayd, yet he eates it not, as ouer-lauiſhly ſpoken: but doubles, and trebbles it with hartie aſſurances of a reall proſecution; whiles thoſe tongues which profeſſe the name of the true God, ſay, and vnſay at pleaſure; recanting their good purpoſes, contradicting their owne iuſt ingagements vpon no cauſe, but their owne changeableneſſe.

It is not for Queene Eſter to driue off any longer, the ſame wiſedome that taught her to deferre her ſuit, now teaches her to propound it; A well choſen ſeaſon is the greateſt aduantage of any action; which as it is ſeldome found in haſt, ſo is too often loſt in delay: Now therefore with an humble and gracefull obeyſance, and with a countenance full of modeſt feare, and ſad grauity, ſhe ſo deliueres her petition, that the King might ſee, it was neceſſitie that both forc't it vpon her, & wrung it from her. If I haue found fauour in thy ſight O King, & if pleaſe the King, let my life be giuen me at my petition, and my people at my requeſt: Expectation is either a friend or an enemy, according to the occaſion: Ahaſuerus lookt for ſome high and difficult boone; now that he heares his Queene begge B for her life, it could not be, but that the ſurpluſage of his loue to her muſt bee turned into fury againſt her aduerſary; and his zeale muſt bee ſo much more to her, as her ſuit was more meeke and humble. For we are ſould, I and my people. to be deſtroyed, to be ſlayne, and to periſh; but if we had beene ſould for bondmen, and bondwomen, I had held my tongue, although the enemie could not counteruaile the Kings damage. Crafty men are ſometimes choaked with their owne plots. It was the profer of ten thouſand talents wherewith Haman hoped both to purchaſe his intended reuenge, and the reputation of a worthy patriot; that ſumme is now layd in his diſh, for a iuſt argument of malicious corruption; for, well might Eſther pleade; If wee Iewes deſerued death, what needed our ſlaughter to be bought ought? and if wee deſerued it not, what horrible cruelty was it to ſet a price vpon innocent blood? It is not any offence of ours, it is only the deſpight of an enemy that hath wrought our deſtruction.

Beſides, now it appeares the King was abuſed by miſ-information; the aduerſary ſuggeſted that the life of the Iewes could not ſtand with the Kings profit; whereas their very bondage ſhould be more damage to the ſtate, then all Hamans worth could counteruaile. Truth may be ſmothered, but it cannot dye; C it may bee diſguiſed, but it will be knowne; it may be ſuppreſſed, but it will triumph.

But what ſhall we ſay to ſo harſh an aggrauation? Could Eſther haue beene ſilent in a caſe of decreed bondage; who is now ſo vehement in a caſe of death? Certainely, to a generous nature, death is farre more eaſie then bondage; why would ſhe haue endured the greater, and yet ſo abhorres the leſſe? Was it for that the Iewes were already too well inured to captiuity; and thoſe euils are more tollerable wherewith we are acquainted: Or, was it, for that there may be hopes in bondage, none in death? Surely, either of them were lamentable, and ſuch as might deſerue her humbleſt deprecation.

The Queene was going on, to haue ſayd, But, alas, nothing will ſatisfie our D bloody enemie, ſaue the vtter extirpation of mee, and my nation; when the impatient rage of the King interrupts her ſentence in the midſt, &(as if hee had heard too much already, and could too eaſily ſupply the reſidue of her complaint) ſnatches the word out of her mouth, with a furious demaund; Who is he, & where is he that durſt preſume in his heart to do ſo? It was the intereſt of Queene Eſthers perſon that raiſed this ſtorme in Ahaſuerus; ſet that aſide, how quietly, how merily was the determined maſſacre of the Iewes formerly digeſted? Actions haue not the ſame face when we looke vpon them with contrary affections.

Now Qeene Eſther muſters vp her inward forces, and with an vndaunted courage, fixing her angry eyes vpon that hatred Agagite, ſhee ſaies, The aduerſarie, and enemy is this wicked Haman. The word was loath to come forth, but it ſtrikes home at the laſt. Neuer till now did Haman here his true title; Be- A fore ſome had ſtiled him, noble; others great; ſome, magnificent, and ſome perhaps, vertuous; onely Eſther giues him his owne, wicked Haman; Ill-deſeruing greatneſſe doth in vaine promiſe to it ſelfe a perpetuitie of applauſe: If our waies be foule, the time ſhall come, when after all vaine flattery, after all our momentaine glory, our ſinnes ſhall be ript vp; and our iniquities laid before vs to our vtter confuſſion. With what conſternation did Haman now ſtand?

How doe wee thinke hee lookt to heare himſelfe thus enſtyled, thus accuſed, yea, thus condemned? Certainely, death was in his face, and horror in euery of his yonts; no ſenſe, no limme knowes his office: Faine would he ſpeake, but his tongue falters and his lips tremble; faine would hee make apologies vp-on his knees, but his heart failes him; and tells him the euidence is too great, and the offence aboue all pardon: Onely guiltineſſe, and feare looke through his eyes vpon the enraged countenance of his maſter; which now bodes nothing to him but reuenge, and death.

In what a paſſionate diſtemper doth this banquet ſhut vp? King Ahaſuerus flyes from the table, as if he had beene hurried away with a tempeſt. His wrath is too great to come forth at his mouth; onely his eyes tels Haman that he hates to ſee him, and vowes to ſee his diſpatch: For ſolitarineſſe, and not for plea-ſure, doth he now walke into his garden; and thinkes with himſelfe; What a monſter haue I fauoured? Is it poſſible that ſo much cruelty and preſūption B ſhould harbour in a breſt that I thought ingenuous? Could I be ſo bewitched as paſſe ſo bloody a decree? Is my credulity thus abuſed by the trecherous ſubtilty of a miſcreant whom I truſted? I confeſſe it was my weake raſhneſſe to yeeld vnto ſo prodigious a motion, but it was the villany of this Agagite, to circumuent me by falſe ſuggeſtions; Hee ſhall pay for my error; the world ſhall ſee, that as I exceeded in grace, ſo I will not come ſhort in iuſtice. Haman, thy guilty blood ſhall expiate that innocent blood, which thy malice might haue ſhed.

In the meane time, Haman, ſo ſoone as euer he could recouer the qualme of his aſtoniſhment, finding himſelfe left alone with Queene Eſther, looſeth no time, ſpareth no breath to mitigate her anger, which had made way to his de-ſtruction. Doubtleſſe, with many vowes, and teares, and deierations, he labours C to cleare his intentions to her perſon; bewailing his danger, imploring her mercy, confeſſing the vniuſt extent of his malice, profering indeauours of ſatiſfaction: Wretched man that I am, I am condemned before I ſpeake and when I haue ſpoken, I am condemned: Vpon thy ſentence, O Queene, I ſee death awaits for me, in vaine ſhall I ſeeke to auoyd it; It is thy will that I ſhould periſh;
but let that little breath I haue lefte, acquit me ſo farre with thee, as to cal heauen and earth to record, that in regard of thee, I dye innocent: It is true that mine impetuous malice miſcarried me againſt the nation of the Iewes, for the ſake of one ſtubborne offender; but did I know there was the leaſt drop of Iſraelitiſh blood in thy ſacred perſon? could I ſuſpect that Mordecai, or that people, did ought concerne thee? Let not one death be enough for me if I would euer haue entertained any thought of euill againſt nation, or man, that ſhould haue coſt but a frowne from thee: All the court of Perſia can ſufficiently witneſſe how I haue magnified and adored thee, euer ſince the royall crowne was ſet on thy head; neither did I euer faile to doe thee all good offices vnto that my Soue- D raigne Maiſter, whom thou haſt now mortally incenſed againſt me. O Queene, no hand can ſaue my life, but thine, that hath as good as bereaued it: ſhow mercy to him, that neuer meant but loyalty to thee: As euer thou wouldeſt oblige an humble and faithfull vaſſall to thee, as euer thou wouldeſt honour thy name, and ſexe, with the prayſe of tender compaſſion, take pitty vpon me, and ſpare that life which ſhall bee vowed to thy ſeruice: and whereas thy diſplea-

A ſure may iuſtly alleage againſt mee that rancorous plot for the extirpation of that people, whom I, too late know to be thine; let it ſuffice that I hate, I curſe mine owne cruelty; and onely vpon that condition ſhall beg the repriuall of my life, that I ſhall worke, and procure by thy gracious ayd, a full defeazance of that vniuſt execution. O let fall vpon thy deſpairing ſeruant one word of fauour to my diſpleaſed Maſter, that I may yet liue.

Whiles he was ſpeaking to this purpoſe, hauing proſtrate himſelfe (for the more humilitie) before the Queene, and ſpread his armes in a vehement imploration vp to her bed; the King comes in, and, as not vnwilling to miſconſter the poſture of him, whom he now hated, ſaies, what, will he force the Queene alſo before me in the houſe? That which Haman meant as an humble ſuppliant, is interpreted as from a preſumptuous offender; How oft might he haue done ſo, and more, whiles he was in fauour, vncenſured? Actions are not the ſame when the man alters. As charity makes a good ſenſe of doubtfull occurrents, ſo preiudice and diſpleaſure takes all things (though well-meant) at the worſt. B It is an eaſie thing to picke a quarrell, where we intend a miſchiefe.

The wrath of the King is as a meſſenger of death: Whiles theſe words were yet in the mouth of Ahaſuerus, Haman, in turning his head towards the King, is ſuddenly muffled for his execution; he ſhall no more ſee either face, or Sun: he ſhall be ſeene no more but as a ſpectacle of ſhame, and horror: and now he thinkes, Wo is mee whoſe eyes ſerue mee onely to foreſee the approach of a diſhonorable, and painefull death! what am I the better to haue beene great? O that I had neuer beene, Oh that I could not be: How too truly haue Zereſh and my friends foretold mee of this heauie deſtiny? Now am I ready to feele what it is that I meant to thouſands of innocents; I ſhall dye with paine and ignominie: Oh that the conſcience of mine intended murder could dye with me. It is no maruell if wicked men finde nothing but vtter diſcomforts in their end: rather then faile, their former happineſſe ſhall ioyne with their imminent miſeries, to torment them. It is the iuſt iudgement of God that preſumptuous ſinners ſhould bee ſwallowed vp of thoſe euils, which they would not feare; Happy is that man, who hath grace to fore-ſee, and auoyd thoſe waies, which C will leade him to a perfect confuſion. Happy is he that hath ſo liued that he can either welcome death as a friend, or defie it as an enemy.

Who was euer the better for fauour paſt? thoſe that had before kiſſed the feet, and ſmiled in the face of Haman, are now as ready to couer his head, and helpe him to the gallowes. Harbonah one of the Chamberlines, ſeaſonably tells the King how ſtately a gibbet Haman had newly ſet vp for well-deſeruing Mordecai, within his owne pallace.

I heare not one man open his mouth to intercede for the offender, to pacifie the King, to excuſe or leſſen the fact; euery one is ready to pull him downe that is falling, to trample on him that is downe; yet no doubt, there were ſome of theſe Courtiers whom Hamon had obliged; Had the cauſe beene better, thus it would haue beene. Euery curre is ready to fall vpon the dog that he ſees worried; But here, it was the iuſt hand of God to ſet off all hearts from a man that had beene ſo vnreaſonably mercileſſe; and to raiſe vp enemies (euen among friends) to him, that had profeſſed enmity to Gods Church: So let thine D enemies periſh O Lord, vnſuccoured, vnpitied. Then the King ſaid hang him thereon: There can bee no truer iuſtice then in retaliation; who can complaine of his owne meaſure: Behold the wicked trauaileth with iniquitie, and hath conceiued miſchiefe, and brought forth falſhood. Hee made a pit and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch that he made, His miſchiefe ſhall returne vpon his owne head, and his violent dealing ſhall come downe vpon his owne pate.

There hangs Hamon, in more reproch, then euer he ſtood in honor; and Mordecai (who is now firſt knowne for what he was) ſucceeds his fauour, and changes

A ges inheritances with his enemie; for whiles Haman inherits the gibbet of Mordecai, Mordecai inherits the houſe and honour of Haman. O Lord, let the malice of the wicked come to an end, but eſtabliſh thou the iuſt.

One hower hath changed the face of the Perſian Court; what ſtabilitie is there in earthly greatneſſe? Hee who in the morning all knees bowed vnto, as more then a man, now hangs vp like a deſpiſed vermin, for a prey to the rauens: He, who this morning was deſtin'd to the gallowes, now rules ouer Princes; neither was it for nothing, that hee this day rode in triumph: The Kings ring that was taken from Haman, is now giuen to Mordecai, as the pledge of his authority; and hee that euen now ſate in the the gate, is called vp next to the throne. Wickedneſſe, and honeſt innocence haue now payd their debts to both their clients.

Little ioy would it yet haue been to Eſter, that her enemy was dead, her kinſman aduanced, if ſtill her people muſt for all this expect their fatall day: Her next B ſuit therefore is for the ſafety of her nation, in the countermand of that bloody decree, which Haman had obtayned againſt them: That which was ſurrepticiouſly gotten, and raſhly giuen, is ſo much more gladly reuerſed; by how much mercy is more pleaſing to a good nature, then cruell iniuſtice. Mordecai hath power to endite, ſeale, ſend out letters of fauour to the Iewes, which were cauſleſly ſentenced to the ſlaughter. If a Perſian law might not be reuerſed, yet it might be countercharged: Mordecai may not write, Let no Iew be ſlaine, he may write, Let the Iewes meet, and ſtand for their liues againſt thoſe that would ſlay them. This command flyes after the former, ſo faſt, as if it would ouer-take that, which it cannot recall; The Iewes are reuiued with this happy tydings, that they may haue protection as well as enmity; that authority will not be their executioner; that their owne hands are allowed to be their auengers.

Who would imagine that after publike notice of this alteration at the Court; whē the world could not chooſe but know the malicious ground of that wrongful edict, the ſhameful death of the procurer, the power of the party oppoſite; any one ſhould be found, throughout all the prouinces, that would once lift vp his hand againſt a Iew? that, with his own dāger, wold indeuour to execute a controlled decree? The Church of God ſhould ceaſe to be it ſelfe, if it wanted malicious C perſecution; there needs no other quarrell then the name, the religion of Iſrael.

Notwithſtanding the knowne fauour of the King, and the patronage of Mordecai, the thirteenth of Adar is meant to be a bloody day; Haman hath too many abettors in the Perſian dominions; theſe ioyne together to performe that ſentence, wherof the author repented: The Iewes take hart to defend themſelues, to kill their murtherers. All the prouinces are turn'd into a field of ciuill war; wherein innocence vanquiſheth malice. The Iewes are victors, and not onely are aliue, but are feared; the moſt reſiſt them not, many aſſiſt them, and ſome become theirs: The countenance of the great leads the world at pleaſure; feare of authority ſwayes thouſands that are not guilty of a conſcience.

Yea, beſides the liberty of defence, the Iewes are now made their owne Iuſtices; That their may be none left from the loynes of that accurſed Agagite, (who would haue left none of the Iewiſh ſeed) they ſlay the ten ſons of Haman; D and obtaine new dayes of further executions; Neither can death ſatisfie their reuenge; thoſe ten ſonnes of Haman ſhall in their very carcaſſes beare the reproach of their father, and hang aloft vpon his gallowes.

Finally, no man doth, no man dares frowne vpon a Iew; they are now become Lords in the midſt of their captiuity; no maruell if they ordaine, and celebrate their ioyfull Purim, for a perpetuall memory, to all poſterities, of their happy deliuerance. It were pity that the Church of God ſhould not haue ſun-ſhines, as well as ſtormes, and ſhould not meete with interchanges of ioy in their warfare, before they enter vpon the vnchangeable ioy of their endleſſe triumph.

FINIS.

An aduiſe to the Reader, concerning the Eighth Contemplation now added.

Courteous Reader, here you haue the eighth Contemplation added to the reſt of this reuerend Biſhops workes, with a large and profitable Table, which that it may proue as it is intended, giue him leaue that made the ſame, to giue you an Aduertiſement or two, concerning the reading this eighth Contemplation; Firſt, where you find any one ſentence in the table, you muſt for the more full ſatisfaction caſt your eye ſome few lines before, whereby you ſhall get this commodity; euen an example on that ſentence or a ſingular exemplification thereof, for the helpe of your inuention. Secondly, we haue added foure letters, to wit, A. B. C. D to euery page, that you may the more quickly find out what you ſeeke for. Thirdly, where it may bee obiected by thoſe which formerly bought the workes, that we haue not kept our promiſe in making more additions to this firſt volume; we anſwer, when we promiſed that, we had no ſuch intention, but the worke comming to the Preſſe againe, and thinking it a diſmembring of the ſame to ſeuer this laſt from the former, being a full concluſion of the Hiſtoricall pert of the old Teſtament, haue added the ſame. Fiftly, to giue any man content concerning the perfecting of theſe bookes, we haue cauſed an ouer-pluſſe of the addition to be printed which they may buy alone at a reaſonable price; ſo that you may now aſſure your ſelfe, no more ſhall euer be added to this Tombe, wherefore we haue no more to requeſt at your hands at this preſent, but to pardon the Printers ouer ſight, and your harty prayers for the Authors health and life, that he may write many more volumes, and then you ſhall ſee our honeſt intent in the whole buſineſſe; ſo I reſt

Your friend, and the Authors moſt humble ſeruant.
